WITH OVER 9,000 RECORDINGS REVIEWED

THE PENGUIN GUIDE
to RECORDED Classical Music
2010

The Key Classical Recordings on CD, DVD and SACD

BY

IVAN MARCH,
EDWARD GREENFIELD,
ROBERT LAYTON and
PAUL CZAJKOWSKI

'The best, the biggest and the most comprehensive'
Independent

Penguin Books

THE PENGUIN GUIDE TO RECORDED CLASSICAL MUSIC

Edward Greenfield, until his retirement in 1993, was for forty years on the staff of the Guardian, succeeding Neville Cardus as Music Critic in 1975. He still contributes regularly to the record column he founded in 1954. At the end of 1960 he joined the reviewing panel of Gramophone, specializing in operatic and orchestral issues. He was a regular broadcaster on music and records for the BBC, not just on Radios 3 and 4 but also on the BBC World Service, latterly with his weekly programme, The Greenfield Collection. In 1958 he published a monograph on the operas of Puccini. More recently he has written studies on the recorded work of Joan Sutherland and André Previn. He has been a regular juror on International Record awards and has appeared with such artists as Dame Elisabeth Schwarzkopf, Dame Joan Sutherland and Sir Georg Solti in public interviews. In October 1993 he was given a Gramophone Award for Special Achievement and in June 1994 he received the OBE for services to music and journalism.

Robert Layton studied at Oxford with Edmund Rubbra for composition and with Egon Wellesz for the history of music. He spent two years in Sweden at the universities of Uppsala and Stockholm. He joined the BBC Music Division in 1959 and was responsible for Music Talks, including such programmes as Interpretations on Record. He contributed 'A Quarterly Retrospect' to Gramophone magazine for thirty-four years and writes for the BBC Music Magazine, International Record Review and other journals. His books include studies of the Swedish composer Berwald and of the Finnish Sibelius, as well as a monograph on the Dvořák symphonies and concertos for the BBC Music Guides, of which he was General Editor for many years. His prize-winning translation of Erik Tawaststjerna's definitive five-volume study of Sibelius was completed in 1998. In 1987 he was awarded the Sibelius Medal and in the following year he was made a Knight of the Order of the White Rose of Finland for his services to Finnish Music. His other books include Grieg: An Illustrated Life, and he has edited the Guide to the Symphony and the Guide to the Concerto (OUP). In 2001, at a ceremony to mark the Swedish presidency of the European Union, he was made a Knight of the Royal Order of the Polar Star.

Ivan March is a former professional musician. He studied at Trinity College of Music, London, and at the Royal Manchester College. After service in the Central Band of the RAF, he played the horn professionally for the BBC and travelled with the Carl Rosa and D'Oyly Carte opera companies. He is a well-known lecturer, journalist and personality in the world of recorded music, and acts as a consultant to Squires Gate Music Ltd, a UK mail-order source for classical CDs (www.lprl.demon.co.uk). As a journalist he has contributed to a number of record-reviewing magazines, but now he reviews solely for Gramophone.

PENGUIN BOOKS
Published by the Penguin Group
Penguin Books Ltd, 80 Strand, London WC2R 0RL, England
Penguin Group (USA) Inc., 375 Hudson Street, New York, New York 10014, USA
Penguin Group (Canada), 90 Eglinton Avenue East, Suite 700, Toronto, Ontario, Canada M4P 2Y3
(a division of Pearson Penguin Canada Inc.)
Penguin Ireland, 25 St Stephen's Green, Dublin 2, Ireland
(a division of Penguin Books Ltd)
Penguin Group (Australia), 250 Camberwell Road, Camberwell, Victoria 3124, Australia
(a division of Pearson Australia Group Pty Ltd)
Penguin Books India Pvt Ltd, 11 Community Centre, Panchsheel Park, New Delhi – 110 017, India
Penguin Group (NZ), 67 Apollo Drive, Rosedale, North Shore 0632, New Zealand
(a division of Pearson New Zealand Ltd)
Penguin Books (South Africa) (Pty) Ltd, 24 Sturdee Avenue, Rosebank, Johannesburg 2196, South Africa

Penguin Books Ltd, Registered Offices: 80 Strand, London WC2R 0RL, England

www.penguin.com

First published 2009
1

Copyright © Ivan March Publications, 2009
All rights reserved

The moral right of the author has been asserted

Set in 7.6/9.6 FF Nexus Serif and FF Nexus Sans
Typeset by IDM, France and Andrew Barker Information Design
Printed in Finland by WS Bookwell

Except in the United States of America, this book is sold subject to the condition that it shall not, by way of trade or otherwise, be lent, re-sold, hired out, or otherwise circulated without the publisher's prior consent in any form of binding or cover other than that in which it is published and without a similar condition including this condition being imposed on the subsequent purchaser

ISBN: 978-0-141-04162-9

CONTENTS

The History of the Penguin Guide vii

The Penguin Guide Recordings of the Year vii

Preface to the 2010 Edition viii

Foreword to the 2010 Edition ix

Downloading xiii

Introduction xv

The American Scene xviii

Price Differences in the UK and USA xviii

The Australian Scene xix

An International Mail-Order Source for Recordings in the UK xix

Abbreviations xx

Composers 1

PENGUIN BOOKS
Published by the Penguin Group
[illegible]
Penguin Group (USA) Inc., 375 Hudson Street, New York, New York [illegible]
Penguin Group (Canada), 90 Eglinton Avenue East, [illegible]
(a division of Pearson Penguin Canada Inc.)
Penguin Ireland, 25 St Stephen's Green, Dublin 2, Ireland
(a division of Penguin Books Ltd)
Penguin Group (Australia), 250 Camberwell Road, Camberwell, Victoria [illegible]
(a division of Pearson Australia Group Pty Ltd)
Penguin Books India Pvt Ltd, 11 Community Centre, [illegible]
Penguin Group (NZ), 67 Apollo Drive, Rosedale, [illegible]
(a division of Pearson New Zealand Ltd)
Penguin Books (South Africa) (Pty) Ltd, 24 Sturdee Avenue, Rosebank, Johannesburg [illegible], South Africa

Penguin Books Ltd, Registered Offices: 80 Strand, London [illegible], England

www.penguin.com

First published 2009
1

Copyright © Ivan March Publications, 2009
All rights reserved

The moral right of the author has been asserted

Set in 9.5/13 pt FF Nexus Serif and FF Nexus Sans [illegible]
Typeset by [illegible]
Printed in Finland by WS Bookwell

Except in the United States of America, this book is sold subject to the condition that it shall not, by way of trade or otherwise, be lent, re-sold, hired out, or otherwise circulated without the publisher's prior consent in any form of binding or cover other than that in which it is published and without a similar condition including this condition being imposed on the subsequent purchaser

ISBN: 978-0-141-[illegible]

THE HISTORY OF THE PENGUIN GUIDE

The Penguin Guide was a direct descendant of the hardback Stereo Record Guide. This first appeared in 1960, compiled and edited by Ivan March, with contributors Edward Greenfield and Denis Stevens offering enthusiastic collaboration. It was published as a hardback by the Long Playing Record Library Ltd, and eight more volumes appeared in the following decade. During this period Denis Stevens moved to the USA, and Robert Layton joined the reviewing team in his place.

In the mid-1970s the whole project was taken over by Penguin Books, and the contents of the hardback series was amalgamated and updated in 1975 to become the first Penguin Stereo Record Guide of 1,114 pages, covering stereo LPs, a few short-lived quadraphonic issues (some of which are now reappearing as surround sound SACDs), and surveying between four and five thousand recordings. The book was so successful that it was immediately reprinted, and was soon appearing in revised form on an annual basis. But it was the appearance of the compact disc in the 1980s that was to create a profound expansion of the recorded repertoire. The superiority of the CD as a music carrier was quickly established, and in 1990 our survey was retitled the Penguin Guide to Compact Discs. Surround sound SACDs and video DVDs were added in 2003/4; the latter becoming of increasing importance, so our title has now changed to an all-embracing Penguin Guide to Recorded Classical Music.

Since then, CD manufacturing costs have dropped and so have the prices of the discs in the shops, with most manufacturers now offering reissues at the budget price pioneered by that most enterprising of bargain labels, Naxos. Indeed the larger, super-budget collections now being published by the major labels bring some of the best value in recorded music ever offered to the collector.

IVAN MARCH

THE PENGUIN GUIDE RECORDINGS OF THE YEAR

PIZZETTI

Assassinio nella cattedrale* (complete; DVD version)

✿ * Decca DVD 0743253. Raimundi, Cordella, Valleggi, De Gobbi, Fabbian, Marrocu, Zarmella, Soloists & Ch. of the Conservatorio Piccinni di Bari, O Sinf. della Provincia di Bari, Morandi

The discovery of the year. This opera has nobility, dramatic coherence and great inventiveness. ROBERT LAYTON

PUCCINI

La Bohème* (complete; CD version)

✿ * DG 477 6600 (2). Netrebko, Villazón, Cabell, Daniel, Children's Ch. & Bavarian R. Ch. & SO, Bertrand De Billy

Starring Netrebko and Villazón in the key roles of Mimi and Rodolfo, with a splendid supporting cast and a fine contribution from the chorus, admirably conducted by Bertrand De Billy, this new DG recording is surely the La Bohème for our time. IVAN MARCH

TCHAIKOVSKY

The Nutcracker* (ballet: complete; CD version); *Suites Nos. 3 in G; 4 in G (Mozartiana)

✿ * Australian Decca Eloquence 480 0557 (2). SRO, Ansermet

Ansermet's classic 1950s complete stereo Nutcracker glows with magic as well as character. My 'disc of the year' accolade is for this recording in particular, and Australian Decca in general, who have been indefatigable in their quest to restore so much of this company's legacy into circulation.

PAUL CZAJKOWSKI

WAGNER

The Mastersingers of Nuremberg* (complete; CD version; in English)

✿ * Chan. 3148 (4). Remedos, Curphy, Hammond-Stroud, Bainley, Dempsey, Mangin, Sadler's Wells Ch & Orch, Goodall

This recording of The Mastersingers in English, made by the BBC at Sadler's Wells in February 1968, marks an iconic moment in the history of opera in England. The recording captures the atmosphere of the performance thrillingly, a credit to the original engineers, as well as to those making this transfer. EDWARD GREENFIELD

PREFACE TO THE 2010 EDITION

With the continued and continuing expansion of repertoire in our current compact edition, even though over 9,400 CD reviews are included, our coverage concentrates primarily on the cream of currently available recordings. So we have expanded our evaluations in two ways. First to include a four-star category of exceptional issues (or reissues); and also to indicate the key primary choices by using a key symbol 🔑 in listing the very finest versions of each work in such a way as to catch the eye. As a new feature this year, each of the four contributors has chosen a personal Recording of the Year.

SURROUND SOUND SACDS

Genuine surround sound SACDs require a proper SACD playing deck, a second stereo amplifier, and a pair of rear speakers. These need not be large and intrusive as they are intended to supply just the hall ambience and the sense of being in the hall itself. There is no doubt that the three-dimensional effect that surround sound SACD reproduction can bring is uncannily realistic, and feeling of 'being there' enhances the musical communication between the performers and listeners. However, it takes a little time and skill to balance the rear speakers so that while the ear is subtly aware of the ambient effect, the sound image itself essentially comes from the front.

DVDS

The medium of DVD is in many ways proving most exciting of all, and the number available is expanding fast. There are already 825 DVDs listed and reviewed in the present volume.

While in the world of ballet the visual gain is obvious, in the field of opera the swift expansion of repertoire now available is proving every bit as exciting. Filmed opera CDs (with excellent stereo sound), dating back over several decades, are now flooding out and there are plenty of outstanding examples to choose from, many of them with fine traditional productions and starry casts. These DVDs can be enormously enjoyable for domestic viewing, with the stereo speakers placed either side of the TV set giving splendidly vivid reproduction, and with the choice left to the viewer of whether or not to follow the action with subtitles. We hope that this new market place for filmed opera may in the future help to prevent the worst idiosyncrasies of self-regarding producers in the opera house, who can totally ruin a superb performance with outrageous sets and costumes, and by trying to impose in the production their own subjective interpretative realization, quite foreign to the composer's original intentions.

HISTORICAL REISSUES

Many historical recordings, deriving from LPs as well as 78s, are now out of copyright in the UK, although not in the USA. These are usually reissued by enterprising smaller labels like Testament, Dutton and Regis, while on Naxos there is a whole series of Mark Obert-Thorn's superb transfers of early (mostly EMI) recordings which often seem as technically impressive as the mono originals. In the case of reissued opera sets, sometimes bonus items are included. These can either offer miscellaneous historical recordings by the same artists in the opera cast; or alternatively, celebrated earlier performances of excerpts from the same opera, by other famous singers from the past.

PORTRAIT COLLECTIONS

One of the features of reissues from the major companies during the past two years has been the emergence of a series of 'Portrait' collections (on CD or DVD) of major recording artists, usually in boxed form with accompanying biographical booklets, while there are also some smaller collections on just a single CD or pair of CDs. They are often remarkably comprehensive, and in consequence take up a great deal of space to list and review. We included a small collection in our 2009 edition, but they are being held back from our current volume to be included much more comprehensively in our 2011 edition.

FOREWORD TO THE 2010 EDITION

In most respects our 2010 Edition is a watershed for recorded music in its two main formats, covering approximately 9,400 CDs and a very impressive number of DVDs. Mike Dutton, a key figure in the transfer to CD of older 78rpm recordings, tells us that the interest of the younger generation of collectors in historical recordings has recently waned, but the expanding Dutton and Chandos catalogues of newly recorded twentieth-century British music (for instance) demonstrates the continuing keen interest in the first modern recordings of hitherto unavailable repertoire.

As it stands, our coverage of the broad range of classical music written over the last six centuries is remarkable, introducing very many outstanding great works that are never, or very rarely, heard in the concert hall, recital room or opera house. Some artists, hitherto very famous, have all but fallen by the wayside (one thinks of Toscanini and Klemperer, who no longer dominate the catalogues as they once did). But the reputations of others are secure, and in the field of instrumental and vocal music new performers of distinction are appearing all the time, and the standard is often very high indeed. Undoubtedly certain names in all fields stand out, but considering the sheer number and variety of our reviews, we feel it is useful to draw readers' attention to some that hold their places firmly in the pantheon of recorded performances.

CONDUCTORS

Ernest Ansermet

The key figure in Decca's orchestral recording in the 1950s – the earliest days of the LP – was undoubtedly Ernest Ansermet (1883–1969), who in 1915 established his reputation as principal conductor of Diaghilev's Ballets Russes and consequently made friends with Ravel, Debussy and, most importantly, Stravinsky. In 1918 Ansermet formed L'Orchestre de la Suisse Romande in Geneva, primarily for recording purposes, and he conducted it continuously until his retirement in 1966. His 1949 record of Petrushka for Decca did more than any other LP to establish the new medium as the natural successor to the 78rpm shellac disc.

The Swiss conductor went on to embrace stereo in the 1960s, and although in later years his orchestra lost some of the refinement of ensemble and intonation which had originally made its playing so sharply succinct, he continued to enrich the recorded repertory throughout his career. Most of Ansermet's records have been absent from the catalogue for some years, but now, through the enterprise of Australian Decca, many of them are available again and can be readily obtained through the website listed below. Those so far not reissued will reappear in due course.

Ansermet's approach to the German classics was alive but scrupulously straightforward. He warmed to Bach, and his vigorously direct approach to the four symphonies of Brahms had a clear-sighted overall grip. He was sympathetic to the flamboyant Liszt of the Tone poems and Faust Symphony, and equally impressive in the symphonies of Prokofiev, especially the First and Fifth. But it is in exotic, oriental-influenced Russian music and French repertoire that Ansermet was at his finest, revelling in the orchestral colour and detail.

Balakirev's Tamara; Borodin's In the Steppes of Central Asia; Symphonies 2 and 3, and Prince Igor Overture; Glazunov's The Seasons ballet, Stenka Razin and the Concert Waltzes; Glinka's Jota Argonesa, Kamarinskaya, A Life for the Tsar Overture and the Valse-Fantaisie; and Liadov's Russian orchestral miniatures all emerge freshly. More memorable still is the Rimsky-Korsakov repertory, Capriccio espagnole, the engaging Christmas Eve Suite, May Night Overture, the Snow Maiden and Tale of Tsar Saltan Suites, while in Scheherazade (heard in a rare 1955 Paris Conservatoire recording) he and his orchestra are at their most vivid.

The extensive Ravel discography centres on the earlier mono recordings that offer more refined orchestral playing than the later stereo versions. Besides the usual orchestral works (including the Alborada, Piano concertos, Ma Mère l'Oye, Le Tombeau de Couperin and Daphnis et Chloé) the pioneering recordings of L'enfant et les Sortileges, L'Heure Espagnole and the song cycles are also featured

But it is in the ballet music of Tchaikovsky that Ansermet is outstanding. His complete 1958 Nutcracker Ballet was an early Decca stereo demonstration recording, and even today the performance is one of the very best in the catalogue. It comes coupled with the comparatively rare Third and Fourth (Mozartiana) Suites. The complete Sleeping Beauty, recorded in the following year, is not quite as fine, but still very impressive – dramatic and sparkling. Swan Lake is abridged but still brilliantly played, and the two-disc set makes room for an enjoyable Rococo Variations and a Pathétique Symphony which has an emotional austerity like no other version!

Herbert von Karajan

In 1989 Herbert von Karajan, undoubtedly the greatest conductor of our era – perhaps of any era – made his exodus, having created in the Berlin Philharmonic an unforgettably great orchestra, and recorded swathes of the classical repertoire with unique distinction. Much of it is listed in our pages but in the present volume we have a number of fine, newly issued DVDs to show just how Karajan recreated music. In particular an electrifying rehearsal and performance (with a lesser orchestra, the VPO) of Schumann's Fourth Symphony is a real collector's item.

Other DVD examples of his supreme interpretative skills include Berlin Philharmonic performances of a complete set of the Beethoven Symphonies (1982/4), the First and Second Symphonies of Brahms (1986/7 – all on Sony), and Dvorák's Symphonies 8 and 9 (the New World) at concerts recorded with the VPO in the Grossesaal of the Musikverein in 1985. Karajan's most celebrated BPO Strauss recordings are also available in sight and sound, An Alpine Symphony, Also sprach Zarathustra, Death and transfiguration, Don Quixote, Ein Heldenleben, Metamorphosen and the Sinfonia domestica, and Tchaikovsky's Fourth and Fifth Symphonies (1984), of which he was a special master. Two years before his death he re-recorded his famous coupling of Debussy's Prélude à l'après-midi d'un faune and La Mer, plus Ravel's Second Daphnis et Chloé Suite (again on Sony).

Leonard Bernstein

Across the Atlantic the answer to Karajan was the supreme American musician and composer Leonard Bernstein, a genius who dominated not only the concert hall but also musical theatre with his unique stage works, Candide and West Side Story. As a recording artist he often suffered from the sometimes poorly balanced, too forward, top-heavy sound provided by CBS, but later he recorded his mainline repertoire for DG with enhanced results. Fortunately, towards the end of his life he chose to re-record some of his key repertoire on DVD and at last the sound became worthy of his music-making. Moreover the thrilling effect of watching him conduct from the front – the way he communicates with his players conveying his sheer joy in the music – is unforgettable. The video recordings currently available which demonstrate this again and again are among the most memorable of all orchestral DVDs. Bernstein is uniquely idiomatic in American music, and his DG coupling of Gershwin's American in Paris and Rhapsody in Blue (in which he takes the solo role brilliantly) and Ives's folksy Second Symphony and The Unanswered Question, is unforgettable. Bernstein also had a special feeling for the four Schumann Symphonies (especially the Second) and to have all four of them gloriously played by the Vienna Philharmonic is a treasure indeed. His rehearsal and performance of Shostakovich's First Symphony is almost as revealing as Karajan's similar DVD of Schumann's Fourth. But it is in his Tchaikovsky collection that he is at his most inspirational, with a thrillingly direct account of the Fourth Symphony from the New York Philharmonic and an even freer, more passionate account of the Fifth in Boston, where the string playing climax is almost overwhelming, while the DVD closes with a glorious account of the Andante cantabile returning to New York.

Vernon Handley and Richard Hickox

In 1980 we lost two great British conductors, first Vernon Handley, then, suddenly and unexpectedly, Richard Hickox. Handley had inherited the mantle of English music directly from his mentor, Sir Adrian Boult, and left us almost unsurpassed recordings of the symphonies of Elgar, Bax, E. J. Moeran and Vaughan Williams. Other British composers he covered in depth were Stanford and Granville Bantock, including, not too long before he left us, Omar Khayyám. His last recording for Chandos was appropriately of Bax tone poems, including The Garden of Fand, In the Faery Hills, plus the Sinfonietta.

Hickox's repertoire also included the symphonies of Elgar, also Tippett, and he was perhaps even more searching in performing those of Vaughan Williams. Among his other achievements in English music was to record the complete orchestral music of Frank Bridge, a great deal of Britten, the symphonies of Rubbra, the orchestral works of Kenneth Leighton plus a comprehensive discography of the music of Lennox and Michael Berkeley, and a representative collection of Dyson. Turning to German repertoire, he also recorded the complete Masses of Haydn and Hummel.

Much of this was for Chandos, so he will be sadly missed by that company and indeed sadly missed by us all. His last recording was of Holst ballet music including The Perfect Fool, The Lure and two choral ballets, The Golden Goose and The Morning of the Year, with the appropriately named Joyful Company of Singers and BBC National Orchestra of Wales (CHSA 5069). The CD arrived too late to be included among our reviews, so can be welcomed here with doubled enthusiasm.

Vasily Petrenko and Gianandrea Noseda

Looking to the future, one cannot miss the name of Vasily Petrenko, who was recently appointed musical director of the Royal Liverpool Philharmonic Orchestra, and is already creating an extraordinary transformation in the quality of their playing. He can be heard at his finest in his new Naxos recording of Tchaikovsky's Manfred Symphony, a true masterpiece in which any flaws seem to evaporate under his exciting baton.

The Italian conductor Gianandrea Noseda is based not far away in Manchester, as conductor of the BBC Philharmonic Orchestra. He has already begun to record for Chandos, with the symphonic poems of Liszt, beautifully played and full of atmosphere, while his latest disc is a sparkling collection of the overtures and intermezzi of Wolf-Ferrari. This is another name to watch out for.

NEW KEYBOARD RECORDINGS OF SPECIAL INTEREST

The stimulating pioneering DVD of Bach's Goldberg Variations is introduced and expertly played by a young and sensitive Italian keyboard player new to our pages, Andrea Bacchetti. He specializes in baroque repertoire and made his debut at the age of eleven with Scimone's I Solisiti Veneti. He has made freshly appealing recordings of Bach's English Suites, and Sonatas by Cherubini and Galuppi all well worth investigating.

Bach's lautenwerk (lute-harpsichords) have not survived, and the instrument is now obsolete. So the single manual copy, ingeniously built by Keith Hill in Manchester, Michigan, had to be reconstructed from drawings. Elizabeth Farr shows just how individual and effective it is in a contrasting collection of pieces. The range of Bach keyboard music played on the piano is also expanding, highlighted now by Perahia's recordings of three of the Partitas, and two new complete sets of the Well-Tempered Clavier by Jill Crossland and Angela Hewitt, which are equally stimulating. (A feminine touch in Bach is rather special, as Dame Myra Hess once showed us).

Also standing out is Paul Lewis's complete coverage of the Beethoven Piano Sonatas, issued in four separate groupings on Harmonia Mundi. Together with Kovacevich's re-recording of the Diabelli Variations (on Onyx) these CDs dominate the new Beethoven piano repertoire.

More than any other pianist, John Browning has been associated with the piano music of Samuel Barber, and Nimbus have now reissued his complete survey, including the celebrated Sonata written for Horowitz. Similarly Philips have restored to the catalogue Zoltan Kocsis's eight-disc survey of Bartók's piano music, which remains the classic set for the foreseeable future. On Nimbus, Martin Jones demonstrates the considerable interest of Czerny's piano sonatas, with their strong Beethovenian influence, and BIS have reissued all Haydn's piano sonatas and much else besides, admirably played and recorded by Ronald Brautigan, with the fifteen CDs offered for the price of three.

Also worth exploring is Hyperion's two-disc survey of Nielsen's complete piano music by Martin Roscoe, while on Naxos Victor Sangiorgio covers all Stravinsky piano repertoire on a single CD.

Turning to the harpsichord, Martha Folts provides an admirable survey of the keyboard music of the highly influential Frescobaldi, whose music demands a free, improvisatory style of which she is obviously a master. And Glen Wilson provides an equally diverting companion collection of the harpsichord music of Sweelinck

A surprising new technology from BIS enables Jacob Lindberg, a superb lutenist, to play the complete solo and orpharion music of John Dowland on a single SACD (four-and-a-quarter hours of music!); and yet one can pick out any one of the 92 items instantaneously. Another interesting new recording process is the BluRay system, for which you need a special playing deck. However BluRay recordings reproduced through a normal SACD/DVD system are still enhanced. An example, discussed in our pages, combines music for piano duo by Grieg and Mozart where the piano quality is strikingly crisp and clean.

CHAMBER AND INSTRUMENTAL MUSIC

Pride of place in this category must go the collected edition of all Beethoven's music for Piano Trio by the Haydn Trio Eisenstadt, from the Phoenix Edition, while on Warner Classics, the Endellion Quartet celebrate their 30th anniversary with a collected edition of the complete Beethoven String Quartets and Quintets played with great inner depth and imagination.

As part of the Haydn bicentenary, Naxos have re-issued their excellent Kodály recordings of Haydn's String Quartets absolutely complete, including the six Op. 2 Cassations, the six Op. 3 Quartets (almost certainly written by Hoffstetter), and the Seven Last Words in its string quartet transcription by the composer. The set is excellent value, with first class documentation and comes in a handsome box.

The celebration of the centenary of Messiaen's birth has brought major boxed sets of reissues from all the major labels of (mostly) chamber instrumental and vocal music, among which the fourteen-disc budget set from EMI stands out as the most comprehensive. However the new BIS recording of all the complete organ music by Hans-Ola Ericsson is especially enticing, when the seven discs are offered for the price of three.

VOCAL MUSIC

Masaaki Suzuki's distinguished complete coverage of the Bach cantatas with the Japanese Bach Collegium has now reached well over forty volumes. Gardener's competing series with the Monteverdi Choir is about halfway through. Both have very considerable merits, but we are inclined to prefer the Japanese series, not least for its soloists, but also because of the remarkable quality of the BIS recordings.

Sir Colin Davis's inspired Philips version of the Berlioz Requiem, made in Westminster Cathedral, dates from the beginning of the 1970s, but only now is its potential being fully realized. Originally recorded in quadraphony it has now been reissued in Pentatone SACD in four-speaker surround sound. The spectacular results in the Dies irae – especially the Tuba mirum – outshines all subsequent recordings.

Mark Elder's new Hallé recording of Elgar's Dream of Gerontius, recorded in the splendid acoustics of the Bridgewater Hall, is also given demonstration sound, and offers magnificent singing from soloists and chorus alike. This is now a first choice for Elgar's masterpiece, alongside Andrew Davis's outstanding DVD version.

Harry Christophers directs The Sixteeen in a lively new set of Handel's Coronation Anthems on the Coro label (supported by a neat programme of Handelian lollipops), while on Decca Christopher Hogwood directs the New College Oxford Choir – with Emma Kirkby leading the excellent soloists – in a memorable DVD of Haydn's Creation sung in English.

Also not to be missed is an exhilarating collection of the choral music of William Mathias, including the Te Deum and Missa brevis, gloriously sung by the Choir of Wells Cathedral under Matthew Owens, while Naxos offers Tavener's inspired Christmas Sequence: Ex Maria Virgine from the Choir of Clare College, Cambridge under their new conductor, Timothy Brown. Finally Sir Colin Davis's new LSO Live recording of Tippett's A Child of our Time is totally compelling, especially for the superb choral contribution.

OPERA ON DVD

The expansion of DVD opera over the last two years has been one of the great bonuses of the recording scene, with key filmed recordings from the past vying with the latest issues One of the earliest, Zeffirelli's 1978 live performance of Carmen (on TDK) brings Eleana Obraztsova and Domingo ideally cast as Carmen and Don José, but this performance is also highlighted by a ravishing performance by Isobel Buchanan as Michaela.

Decca have finally reissued the 1969 BBC recording of Peter Grimes, filmed at the Maltings under the composer's auspices, with Peter Pears unsurpassed in the name role, supported by a first-rate cast which eclipses all later versions.

It is Natalie Dessay who vivaciously dominates the Covent Garden Fille du régiment alongside the opera's hero, Tonio, superbly sung by Juan Diego Flórez, with his nine top Cs thrown off with great panache. He also collaborates with Anna Netrebko in an equally memorable DG account of Massenet's Manon.

The San Carlo Cavalleria rusticana on DK is a true verismo performance, dominated by Ildikó Komlósi's rich-voiced Santuzza and filmed against a spectacular castellated open-air backdrop near Naples. The Easter Hymn is thrilling.

Turning to Mozart, one expresses much pleasure in the splendidly directed, beautifully set and costumed Medici Arts 1996 Vienna State Opera Così fan tutte with Barbara Frittoli, Angelika Kirchschlager (a delightful pair of sisters), and Monica Bacelli and Alessandro Corbelli a suitably conniving Despina and Don Alfonso. This is well matched by David McVicar's elegantly sparkling new-style Le nozze di Figaro, admirably conducted by Pappano with Erwin Schrott (a handsome Figaro), Miah Perssom (a delightful Susanna), Gerald Finlay (a disgruntled Count) and Dorothea Röschmann a dignified, rich-voiced Countess.

At last we see on DVD the extraordinary realistic sets built for Zeffirelli's Metropolitan Opera La Bohème, which have already been used for over 300 performances. Visitors walking in the 'Paris' street in Act II have felt they were in Paris itself! With Gheorghiu as Mimi and Ramón Vargas an equally ardent Rodolfo this is one of the most satisfying of all video Bohèmes (and the same pair of singers are hardly less successful starring in the Arthaus La Traviata).

The Warner NVC Arts Madama Butterfly from Verona brings an unforgettably moving portrayal of its tragic heroine from Raima Raibaivanska, while the companion Turandot brings breathtaking spectacle in the big scenes, with the title role taken commandingly by the Bulgarian soprano Ghena Dimitrova. Nicola Martinucci's Nessun dorma doesn't disappoint either.

A Warner DVD bargain box offers a sparkling triptych of early Glyndebourne productions of Rossini's La Cenerentola, Le Comte d'Ory and Il Barbiere di Seviglia, the latter standing out in its humour and splendidly unsurpassed singing.

Moving on to Richard Strauss, one meets an ideal Arabella in Renée Fleming, beautiful, with a natural freshness of characterization, and this Decca DVD is most attractively cast, including her 'Mr Right' (Morten Frank Larsen). Similarly the Warner NVC Intermezzo, also from Glyndebourne, is near perfection, especially as it is performed in Andrew Porter's brilliant English translation, and uses John Cox's 1920s sets and costumes. Felicity Lott is a ravishing Christine and John Pringle perfectly chosen as her husband.

Turning to Verdi one also finds Sherrill Milnes's Simon Boccanegra totally memorable, and this well-cast Met production conducted by James Levine is another good demonstration of what 'Live from the Met' usually brings.

Sir Colin Davis's 1978 Tannhäuser was the first time a production had been filmed complete at Bayreuth, and the performers are obviously aware that the performance is special. Spas Wemkoff is very fine in the title role, Gwyneth Jones is a rich-voiced Elisabeth, and Bernd Weild a first class Wolfram. Barenboim's 1995 Tristan is even more successful, even though the performance isn't live. Siegfried Jerusalem and Waltraus Meier are both at their finest, and Matthias Hölle's King Mark is memorably resonant. The Bayreuth Festival Orchestra again provide a powerful backcloth under Barenboim's intensely committed baton.

DOWNLOADING

For some classical CD collectors, the word 'download' may provoke a blank stare or even a feeling of queasiness which new technology often generates. Both these responses are understandable but two things are certain about downloads: (i) they are here to stay and (ii) there is nothing to fear from them.

First of all, what is a 'download'? It is simply a way of 'downloading' music directly from the internet onto your computer where it can then either be transferred to a CD, played on an iPod (or other various MP3 players), or simply played on your computer. And you don't have to download the entire contents of a CD, only the tracks you want. But more of this below.

Will downloads take over from CDs? While there has been an explosion of growth in this new way of acquiring music (especially in the pop-music world), it has not yet resulted in a comparable reduction of CD sales. Collectors regard the CD, as they did the LP, as more than just a medium to play music. The artwork, sleeve notes, presentation, etc., are all part of the CD 'experience'.

Whether or not the teenagers of today, who download music as a matter of course, will regard these things with the same importance remains to be seen, but the basic urge to buy something which you can physically hold, touch and feel is unlikely to go away. On a practical level, opera libretti, texts and translations, etc., are a key area where CDs can score over downloads: the idea of following texts on a computer is impractical and undesirable. And, just like book lovers, record collectors like to have their recorded music on shelves around them.

The sound quality is another area where hi-fi enthusiasts are suspicious of downloads. While it is true that the sound quality of most downloads is not quite of the same quality as the equivalent CD, the difference is relatively minimal, and when played through computers, MP3 players, iPods, headphones or car stereos, this is perhaps not of the greatest importance.

On top quality hi-fi equipment sound is very important and this is being addressed by the record industry. High-quality downloads are becoming available with full CD sound quality. For the technically minded, CDs are coded to play back at 16-bit/96 kHz and this will be the standard of these new downloads.

Even more impressive will be the availability of an 'ultra' hi-fi audio quality download – in theory better than CD sound – which may well be available from some companies during the lifetime of this book. These downloads will be using impressive 24-bit technology, which is the level at which many new recordings are made. This will be the format to convert and excite the hi-fi enthusiasts to this new medium.

One great advantage downloads offer is the sheer quantity of music which is being made available. Chandos Records, an independent label, has fully embraced this technology and offers a range of features. They have made their entire catalogue of deleted recordings available to download in their website, TheClassicalShop.net, so never again will the dreaded word 'deleted' strike the same horror as it once did. Most of Chandos's new recordings are being released as both a download and CD, with much of their current CD catalogue also available to download – a huge bonus in an age where shops can only offer a fraction of what is available.

Cost is a key factor of downloads compared with CDs, where a download is usually only about a third of the price of the equivalent CD. Chandos charges from around 40p per five minutes of music, and around £5 per for a download of a complete full-price CD (their new releases cost only a little more). Chandos's CD-quality downloads (using the 'lossless' system) are charged at a slightly higher prices, but capped at around £10 per CD.

One joy of downloads is the ability to pick and choose which track you want to buy: the times when one only wants to buy the rare fill-up or coupling on a CD is a frequent area of annoyance to collectors. Often on a compilation CD, one may only really want one or two tracks, and these can be bought independently from the rest of the CD. The cheapness of downloads may encourage one to explore, as well as duplicating favourite repertoire without adding to storage problems. Most sites offer a free one-minute sample of each track – a terrific encouragement to expand one's repertoire knowledge. In this way downloads offer the chance to experiment with new music.

Computers often – and justifiably – rate as one of the top causes of frustration in modern life. But they are getting more reliable and easier to use. As long as you have a broadband connection, downloading is a relatively easy procedure as the on-screen instructions are pretty obvious. The download time can be a bit time-consuming but this is getting a faster procedure as time goes on with broadband connections getting better all the time. Almost certainly within in a comparatively short space of time it will be a matter of seconds to download a complete opera, through we are not quite there yet.

While downloads have not been reviewed as a separate entity in the Guide, many of the recordings discussed will be available to download (a quick check on the relevant company's website will tell you if it is or not). Dedicated download sites, such as iTunes, are an obvious place to start, but many record companies offer their own download facility. Chandos Records download site, TheClassicalShop.net, one of the best and easiest sites to use, offers not only their own recordings, but a host of other labels, including LSO Live, Pristine, Avie, CRD, Nimbus, STG, Coro, Signum, Toccata and many others. TheClassicalShop.net now also offers flac files (free lossless audio codes) which are, in effect, lossless files (i.e. as good as the original) but have the advantage in that they can be compressed without loss of quality; therefore they take up far less room and speed up file transfer. The EMI catalogue also offers extensive download facilities.

To sum up, downloads are worth exploring and they are a complimentary and often very useful medium for recorded music. Many collectors remain loyal to the CD yet also happily explore the world of downloads. It will be interesting to see what effect they have on current teenagers, but one optimistic view is that it will encourage them to explore an ever greater range of music. Chandos claims that many of their download customers are exploring classical music for the first time. As for the effect downloads will have on the Penguin Guide, the view of the authors is that the performances remain the same on whatever format they are presented (noting the above remarks on the sound quality).

IVAN MARCH

INTRODUCTION

As in previous editions, the object of The Penguin Guide to Recorded Classical Music is to give the serious collector a continuing survey of the finest recordings of classical music on CD, irrespective of price, but also to evaluate the quality of the compatible SACDs, and video DVDs. As most recordings are issued almost simultaneously on both sides of the Atlantic and use identical international catalogue numbers, the Guide should be found to be equally useful in the UK and the USA, as it will in Australia, Canada and New Zealand, India, South Africa and Japan. The internationalization of repertoire and numbers now applies to almost all CDs issued by the major international companies and also by the smaller ones. Many European labels are imported in their original formats, both into Britain and the USA. Those CDs that are only available in England can be easily obtained by overseas collectors via the web address given on page xv

We feel that it is a strength of our basic style to let our own conveyed pleasure and admiration (or otherwise) for the merits of an individual recording come over directly to the reader, even if this produces a certain ambivalence in the matter of such a final choice. Where there is disagreement between us (and this rarely happens), readers will find an indication of our different reactions in the text.

We have considered (and rejected) the use of initials against individual reviews, since this is essentially a team project. The occasions for disagreement generally concern matters of aesthetics – in the manner of recording balance for instance, where a contrived effect may trouble some ears more than others, or in the matter of style, where the difference between robustness and refinement of approach appeals differently to listening sensibilities rather than involving a question of artistic integrity. But over the years our views seem to have grown closer together rather than having diverged; perhaps we are getting mellower, but we are seldom ready to offer strong disagreement following the enthusiastic reception by one of the team of a controversial recording, providing the results are creatively stimulating.

As playing standards have advanced, our perceptions of the advantages and disadvantages of performances of early music on original (as against modern) instruments seem almost irrelevant. It is the quality of the performance itself which counts, and so expert is the performer's control of period instruments today, while modern instrument performances have often been so influenced by period instrument styles, that sometimes one is hardly aware of the difference, especially in orchestral music.

EVALUATION

Most major recordings issued today are of a high technical standard and offer performances of a quality at least as high as is experienced in the concert hall. In adopting a star system for the evaluation of records, we have decided to make use of from one to four stars. Brackets around one or more of the stars indicate some reservations about a recording's rating, and readers are advised to refer to the text. Brackets around all the stars usually indicate a basic qualification: for instance, a mono recording of a performance of artistic interest, where some allowances may have to be made for the sound quality even though the recording may have been digitally remastered.

Our evaluation system may be summarized as follows:

* A really exceptional issue on every count

 An outstanding performance and recording of the calibre we now take for granted

 A good performance and recording of today's normal high standard

* A fair or somewhat routine performance, reasonably well performed or recorded

Ⓝ A recording new to the present volume

🔑 Key recordings – top recommendations – are indicated by a key symbol next to the star rating

Our evaluation is normally applied to the record as a whole, unless there are two main works or groups of works, and by different composers. In this case, each is dealt with separately in its appropriate place.

ROSETTES

To certain special records we have awarded a Rosette: ✿.

Unlike our general evaluations, in which we have tried to be consistent, a Rosette is a quite arbitrary compliment by a member of the reviewing team to a recorded performance which, he finds, shows special illumination, magic, a spiritual quality, or even outstanding production values, that place it in a very special class. Occasionally a Rosette has been awarded for an issue that seems to us to offer extraordinary value for money, but that presupposes that the performance or performances are outstanding too. The choice is essentially a personal one (although often it represents a shared view) and in some cases it is applied to an issue where certain reservations must also be mentioned in the text of the review. The Rosette symbol is placed before the usual evaluation and the record number. It is quite small – we do not mean to imply an Academy Award, but a personal token of appreciation for something uniquely valuable. We hope that, once the reader has discovered and perhaps acquired a 'Rosetted' CD, its special qualities will soon become apparent. There are, of course, more of them now, for our survey has become a distillation of the excellence of CDs issued and reissued over a considerable time span.

DIGITAL RECORDINGS

Nearly all new compact discs are recorded digitally, but many digitally remastered, reissued analogue recordings are now available, and we think it important to include a clear indication of the difference:

All listed CDs are digital unless the inclusion of (ADD) in the titling indicates Analogue-to-Digital remastering, while of course the term mono is self-explanatory.

The indication ADD/DDD or DDD/ADD applies to a compilation where recordings come from mixed sources.

LISTINGS AND PRICE RANGES

Our listing of each recording assumes that it is in the premium-price category, unless it indicates otherwise, as follows:

Ⓜ Medium-priced label

Ⓑ Bargain-priced label

(BB) Super-bargain-priced label

See below for differences in price structures in the UK and the USA.

LAYOUT OF TEXT

We have aimed to make our style as simple as possible. So, immediately after the evaluation and before the catalogue number, the record make is given, sometimes in abbreviated form. In the case of a set of two or more CDs, the number of units involved is given in brackets after the catalogue number.

Ⓝ placed before the catalogue number means that the recording is new to the present volume.

EMI and Virgin have now abandoned the use of alphabetical prefixes, and it is no longer possible to determine the price range from the catalogue listing itself, although budget Encore CDs are often marked, as are the two-for-the-price-of-one Gemini reissues.

We have taken care to check catalogue information as far as is possible, but as all the editorial work has been done in England there is always the possibility of error; American readers are therefore invited, when ordering records locally, to take the precaution of giving their dealer the fullest information about the music and recordings they want.

The indications Ⓜ, Ⓑ and (BB) immediately before the starring of a disc refer primarily to the British CD, as pricing systems are not always identical on both sides of the Atlantic. When CDs are imported by specialist distributors into the USA, this again usually involves a price difference. When mid-priced CDs on the smaller labels are imported into the USA, they often move up to the premium-price range.

ABBREVIATIONS

To save space we have adopted a number of standard abbreviations in listing record companies, orchestras and performing groups (a list is provided below), and the titles of works are often shortened, especially where they are listed several times. Artists' forenames are often omitted if they are not absolutely necessary for identification purposes. Also, we have not usually listed the contents of operatic highlights and collections.

We have followed common practice in the use of the original language for titles where it seems sensible. In most cases, English is used for orchestral and instrumental music, and the original language for vocal music and opera. There are exceptions, however; for instance, the Johann Strauss discography uses the German language in the interests of consistency.

ORDER OF MUSIC

The order of music under each composer's name broadly follows the following system: orchestral music, including concertos and symphonies; chamber music; solo instrumental music (in some cases with keyboard and organ music separated); vocal and choral music; opera; vocal collections; miscellaneous collections. Within each group our listing follows an alphabetical sequence, and couplings within a single composer's output are usually discussed together instead of separately with cross-references. Occasionally (and inevitably because of this alphabetical approach), different recordings of a given work can become separated when a record is listed and discussed under the first work of its alphabetical sequence. The editor feels that alphabetical consistency is essential if the reader is to learn to find his or her way about.

CATALOGUE NUMBERS

Enormous care has gone into the checking of CD catalogue numbers and contents to ensure that all details are correct, but the major companies are at present totally reorganizing their catalogues to make them more attractive and more competitive. EMI have brought out a huge number of reissues (usually at lower prices), There are many reissues too from Universal – Decca, DG and Philips – while the new catalogues from the UK and USA of the combined labels of Sony and RCA have caused us insoluble problems in determining which CDs are currently available and which catalogue numbers now are correct each side of the Atlantic. So the editor and publishers cannot be held responsible for any mistakes that may have crept in despite all our zealous checking. When ordering CDs, readers are urged to provide their source with full details of the music and performers, as well as the catalogue number.

DELETIONS

Compact discs regularly succumb to the deletion axe, and many highly praised CDs are likely to disappear during the lifetime of this book. But most really important and desirable recordings are eventually reissued, usually costing less! As for the others, we can only suggest to readers that if a recording we have enthused about appears to be deleted, keep your eyes on the lists of reissues for it will surely reappear before too long, unless it contains repertoire which has little public support.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Our thanks are due to our Penguin copy-editor Ruth Stimson, who has proved invaluable; also to Roger Wells for his help copy-editing part of the new material during the final assembly of all the listings and reviews for this book. Grateful thanks must also go to Kathleen March, who frequently discovers musical errors, and Alan Livesey, who as Assisant Editor proofreads the copy meticulously throughout at great speed, and manages to uncover still existing mistakes that occurred earlier in the assembly of the book's text! Grateful thanks also go to all those readers who write to us to point out factual errors and to remind us of important recordings which have escaped our notice.

THE AMERICAN SCENE

CDs are much less expensive in the USA than they are in Great Britain and because of this (so we are told), many bargain recordings available in England are not brought into the USA by their manufacturers. What this means is that while almost any recording mentioned in these pages will be available in the USA, sometimes it will cost more than the buyer might reasonably expect.

Two-CD sets, where available, are often priced at two discs for the cost of one premium-priced CD in both countries. However many excellent lower-priced discs are not issued in the USA. Where a recording is of extra special interest American collectors can obtain it readily by mail order from England, through the website address given. However it will inevitably cost more than it would domestically.

PRICE DIFFERENCES IN THE UK AND USA

Retail prices are not fixed in either country, and various stores may offer even better deals at times, so our price structure must be taken as a guideline only. This particularly applies to the line between bargain and super-bargain CDs. Premium-priced CDs cost on average approximately the same number of dollars in the USA as they do pounds in the UK.

OTHER COMPARABLE PRICES IN THE UK AND USA

Here are comparative details of the other price-ranges (note that sets are multiples of the prices quoted, and Naxos CDs are now in the lower mid-price range):

MID-PRICED SERIES (as indicated by Ⓜ in text)
UK: £10.99; often £9–£10
USA: Under $10; usually under $12

BARGAIN-PRICED SERIES (as indicated by Ⓑ in text)
UK: £5.50–£7
USA: Under $8

SUPER-BARGAIN-PRICED BUDGET SERIES (as indicated by (BB) in text)
UK: CDs: £5–£6
USA: CDs: $5–$6

THE AUSTRALIAN SCENE

We have fortunate in obtaining for review many recordings from the Australian branch of Universal Classics (responsible for the three key labels, Decca, DG and Philips), which have been making a series of local issues of Decca, DG and Philips repertoire of considerable interest, mostly not otherwise available. These are bargain issues in Australia, but because of import costs may prove more expensive in the UK and USA. All these Universal Australian CDs can easily be purchased via the Australian website: www.buywell.com.

AN INTERNATIONAL MAIL-ORDER SOURCE FOR RECORDINGS IN THE UK

Readers are urged to support a local dealer if he is prepared and able to give a proper service, and to remember that obtaining many CDs involves expertise and perseverance. However, in recent years many specialist sources have disappeared and for that reason, if any difficulty is experienced in obtaining the CDs you want, we suggest the following mail-order alternative, which offers competitive discounts in the UK but also operates worldwide. Through this service, advice on a choice of recordings from the Editor of The Penguin Guide to Recorded Classical Music is always readily available to mail-order customers:

Squires Gate Music Centre Ltd (PG Dept)
615 Lytham Road
Squires Gate
Blackpool
Lancashire FY4 1RG
UK

Tel/Fax: (+44) (0)1253 405599 website address: www.lprl.demon.co.uk
email address: sales@lprl.demon.co.uk

This organization can supply any recording available in Britain and patiently extends compact disc orders until they finally come to hand. A full guarantee of safe delivery is made on any order undertaken. Please write or fax for further details, or make a trial credit-card order by fax, email or telephone.

Squires Gate also offers a try-before-you-buy weekly loan service (within the UK only) so that customers can try out recordings at home for a small charge, without any obligation to purchase. If a recording is subsequently purchased, it will be discounted and the trial charge waived. Full details sent on request.

Squires Gate Music Centre also offers a simple bi-monthly or three-monthly mailing, listing a hand-picked selection of current new and reissued CDs, chosen by the Editor of the Penguin Guide, Ivan March. Customers of Squires Gate Music Centre Ltd, both domestic and overseas, can receive the bulletin as available, and it is sent automatically with their purchases.

ABBREVIATIONS

AAM Academy of Ancient Music
Ac. Academy, Academic
Amb. S. Ambrosian Singers
Ara. Arabesque
arr. arranged, arrangement
ASMF Academy of St Martin-in-the-Fields
Ⓑ bargain-priced CD
ⒷⒷ super-bargain-priced CD
Bar. Baroque
Bav. Bavarian
BBC British Broadcasting Corporation
BPO Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra
BRT Belgian Radio & Television (Brussels)
Cal. Calliope
Cap. Capriccio
CBSO City of Birmingham Symphony Orchestra
CfP Classics for Pleasure
Ch. Choir; Chorale; Chorus
Chan. Chandos
CO Chamber Orchestra
COE Chamber Orchestra of Europe
Col. Mus. Ant. Musica Antiqua, Cologne
Coll. Collegium
Coll. Aur. Collegium Aureum
Coll. Voc. Collegium Vocale
Concg. O Royal Concertgebouw Orchestra of Amsterdam cond. conductor, conducted
Cons. Consort
DG Deutsche Grammophon
DHM Deutsche Harmonia Mundi
Dig. digital recording
E. England, English
E. Bar. Sol. English Baroque Soloists
ECCO European Community Chamber Orchestra
ECO English Chamber Orchestra
ENO English National Opera Company
Ens. Ensemble
ESO English Symphony Orchestra
Fr. French
GO Gewandhaus Orchestra
Häns. Hänssler
HM Harmonia Mundi
Hung. Hungaroton
Hyp. Hyperion
IMS Import Music Service (Polygram – UK only)
🔑 key recording
L. London
LA Los Angeles
LCO London Chamber Orchestra
LCP London Classical Players
LMP London Mozart Players
LOP Lamoureux Orchestra of Paris
LPO London Philharmonic Orchestra
LSO London Symphony Orchestra
Ⓜ mid-priced CD
Mer. Meridian
Met. Metropolitan
min. minor
MoC Ministry of Culture
movt movement
Ⓝ new review for this Edition
N. North, Northern
nar. narrated
Nat. National
Nim. Nimbus
NY New York
O Orchestra, Orchestre
OAE Orchestra of the Age of Enlightenment
O-L Oiseau-Lyre
Op. Opera (in performance listings); opus (in music titles)
orch. orchestrated
ORR Orchestre Révolutionnaire et Romantique
ORTF L'Orchestre de la radio et télévision française
Ph. Philips
Phd. Philadelphia
Philh. Philharmonia
PO Philharmonic Orchestra
Qt Quartet
R. Radio
Ref. Référence
RLPO Royal Liverpool Philharmonic Orchestra
ROHCG Royal Opera House, Covent Garden
✿ Rosette
RPO Royal Philharmonic Orchestra
RSNO Royal Scottish National Orchestra
RSO Radio Symphony Orchestra
RTE Radio Television Eireann
S. South
SCO Scottish Chamber Orchestra
Sinf. Sinfonietta
SIS Special Import Service (EMI – UK only)
SNO Scottish National Orchestra
SO Symphony Orchestra
Soc. Society
Sol. Ven. I Solisti Veneti
SRO Suisse Romande Orchestra
Sup. Supraphon
trans. transcription, transcribed
V. Vienna
V/D Video Director
Van. Vanguard
VCM Vienna Concentus Musicus
VPO Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra
VSO Vienna Symphony Orchestra
W. West
WNO Welsh National Opera Company

ADAM, Adolphe (1803–56)

Giselle (ballet; complete. Choreography: Jean Coralli & Jules Perrot, revised Marius Petipa; DVD versions)

🔑  Warner DVD 0630 19397-2. Mezentseva, Zaklinsky, Selyutsky, Terekhova, Kirov Ballet, Leningrad Op. & Ballet Theatre O, Fedotov (Producer: Oleg Vinogradov, V/D: Preben Montell)

Ⓝ * Opus Arte DVD OA 0993 D. Cojocaru, Kobborg, Harvey, Nuñez, Soloists and Corps of the Royal Ballet, ROHCG, Gruzin, (Prod and additional choreography, Sir Peter Wright)

Ⓝ * TDK DVD DVWWW-BLGISP. Pujol, Le Riche, Gillet, Romoli. Paris Nat Opéra Ballet, Connelly (Producer: Toni Hajal, V/D: François Roussillion)

The Kirov casting has no weakness. Galina Mezentseva is the epitome of balletic grace in the title-role – and brings more ravishing dancing from Myrtha, Queen of the Wilis (Tatyana Terekhova), and the dazzling corps de ballet. Konstantin Zaklinsky as Albrecht and Gennadi Selyutsky as Hilarion are hardly less impressive, and the solo dances and pas de deux in Act II are memorable. The orchestra plays with warmth, finesse and robust vitality under Viktor Fedotov and is richly and vibrantly recorded. The camera is almost always where you want it to be. Costumes and scenery are gloriously traditional.

Giselle has been extraordinarily successful on DVD and it is virtually impossible to make a first choice: any of the three versions will give great pleasure and satisfaction. The most recent of the recordings comes from a BBC transmission of January 2006. It is marvellously danced with the Romanian ballerina Alina Cojocaru in the title role and the Danish virtuoso Johan Kobborg as Albrecht. They are a touching pair and the remaining roles are no less brilliant and as strongly characterised. A compelling performance on all counts with excellent playing from the Covent Garden Orchestra under Boris Gruzin and expert camera work from the BBC team.

The performance recorded live in Paris is also magnificent in every way, with attractively traditional sets and costumes. All three principals are superb, Laetitia Pujol an infinitely touching Giselle, perfectly matched by Nicola Le Riche's Albrecht, particularly in the powerful climax of Act II where Marie-Agnes Gillet is an admirable imperious Myrtha. But what makes the performance so visually captivating is the grace and extraordinary precision of the Corps de Ballet whose movements flow perfectly with the music, so vividly played by the Opéra National Orchestra under Paul Connelly bringing a visual and musical spectacle of a high order.

Giselle (ballet; complete; CD versions)

Ⓑ  Double Decca 452 185-2 (2). ROHCG O, Bonynge

(BB)  Naxos 8.550755/6. Slovak RSO, Mogrelia

Andrew Mogrelia's complete recording uses the normal performing edition. The orchestral playing has grace, elegance and plenty of life: the brass are not ashamed of the melodrama. The recording is resonantly full and warm in ambience, yet well detailed.

Bonynge's performance on Decca restores Adam's original, but is that bit more strongly characterized, while the Decca sound has a slightly sharper and brighter profile. That remains first choice (at Double Decca price) but the Naxos set costs slightly less.

Karajan's Vienna recording is lovingly played, with the suave blandishments of the Karajan baton guiding the famous orchestra to produce a reading of beauty and elegance. The glowing Decca recording is first rate. (Decca 475 7507)

ADAMS, John (born 1947)

Berceuse élégiaque; Shaker Loops; Short Ride in a Fast Machine; (i)The Wound Dresser

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.559031. Bournemouth SO, Marin Alsop; (i) with N. Gunn

If you are seeking an introduction to the music of John Adams, you cannot better this splendidly played anthology from Marin Alsop and the Bournemouth Symphony Orchestra, vividly recorded within an ideal acoustic. The whizzing Short Ride in a Fast Machine immediately has hit potential while the moving lament of the Walt Whitman civil war Wound Dresser shows just how naturally Adams writes for the voice. It is finely sung by Nathan Gunn against the simplest orchestral backcloth, with strings dominating. But the highlight of the disc is Adams's early (1978) masterpiece, heard here in a 1983 revision, Shaker Loops. This is now by far its finest performance on disc, with the climax of the third-movement 'Loops and Verses' quite riveting.

(i) The Chairman Dances; (ii) Grand Pianola Music; (iii) Shaker Loops; (i) Short Ride in a Fast Machine

Ⓝ 🔑 Ⓑ * EMI 2 06627-2 (i) CBSO, Rattle; (ii) Ransom Wilson, NY Soloists; (iii) LCO, Warren-Green

Another excellent anthology which will be hard to beat. Rattle ensures that The Chairman Dances his foxtrot with unabated energy, matched by the Short Ride in a Fast Machine. The Grand Pianola Music has exhilarating hit potential and Shaker Loops was the work which first alerted us to the originality and intensity of Adams's earlier music. Splendid performances and excellent recording throughout.

(i) The Chairman Dances; (ii; iii) Chamber Symphony; (i) Christian Zeal and Activity; Common Tones in Simple Time; (iv; v; vi) Violin Concerto; (vii; vi) El Dorado; (viii; iii; ix) Eros Piano; (viii; iii) Fearful Symmetries; (i) 2 Fanfares for Orchestra: Tromba lontana; Short Ride in a Fast Machine; (ii; iii; x) Gnarly Buttons; (ii; iii) Grand Pianola Music; (i) Harmonielehre; (xi) Hoodoo Zephyr; (vii; vi) Lollapalooza; (viii; iii) Shaker Loops; (vii; vi) Slonimsky's Earbox. Instrumental music: (xii) John's Book of Alleged Dances. Vocal music: (xiii)

Harmonium; (xiv; viii; iii) The Wound Dresser; (xv; viii; iii) arr. of 5 Songs by Charles Ives. Opera: (xvi; vi) The Death of Klinghoffer: highlights. (xvii; iii) I Was Looking at the Ceiling and Then I Saw the Sky; (xviii) Nixon in China: excerpts

Ⓜ  None. 7559 79453-2 (10). (i) San Francisco SO, De Waart; (ii) L. Sinf.; (iii) composer; (iv) Kremer; (v) LSO; (vi) Nagano; (vii) Hallé O; (viii) O of St Luke's; (ix) with Crossley; (x) with Collins; (xi) composer (synthesizer); (xii) Kronos Qt; (xiii) San Francisco Ch. & SO; (xiv) with Sylvan; (xv) with Upshaw; (xvi) Lyon Opéra Ch. & O; (xvii) instrumental ens.; (xviii) Ch. & O of St Luke's, De Waart

This impressive 10-CD box, with many of the performances directed by the composer himself (who is an excellent and persuasive advocate), gives an impressive survey.

The set is extensively documented and handsomely packaged, but the lack of track information with each individual disc and the complicated layout of the booklet mean that they are not easy to use together.

Violin Concerto

(BB)  Naxos 8.559302. Hanslip, RPO, Slatkin (with WAXMAN: Tristan Fantasia, etc.) – CORIGLIANO: Red Violin: Chaconne ***

The Violin Concerto is an enigmatic work, with a not too easily penetrable opening movement, in which Chloë Hanslip is much more successful than Kremer in his Nonesuch version. She also catches the calm serenity which informs much of the Chaconne slow movement and is superb in the dazzling finale which has made the work popular. The Corigliano coupling is appropriate, but the Waxman transcriptions of Wagner (turned into a film-style piano concerto, with soloist Charles Owen) and the much abbreviated First Romanian Rhapsody of Enescu are curious, if enjoyable, encores. Vivid Abbey Road recording,

Harmonielehre; The Chairman Dances; (i) Two Fanfares: Tromba lontana; Short Ride in a Fast Machine

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI 5 03403-2. CBSO, Rattle; (i) with Warren

Harmonielehre is an extraordinary, large-scale (39-minute) work in three parts. The Chairman Dances his foxtrot for a full 13 minutes, with unabated energy. The Two Fanfares pay their respects to Ives as well as to Copland, while the Short (exhilarating) Ride in a Fast Machine having an agreeably unstoppable momentum. The performances bring the most persuasive advocacy, and the excellent recording is clear, vivid and spacious.

Naive and Sentimental Music; Mother of Man; Chain to the Rhythm

 None. 7550 79636-2. LAPO, Salonen

John Adams suggested that Naive and Sentimental Music (1998–9) is the most ambitious of his works outside his operas, although at that time El Niño had not yet been written. The music's peregrinations have infinite variety, and the closing section is very powerful. In Chain to the Rhythm Adams returns to his familiar hypnotic dallying with 'small fragments of rhythmic cells' to form a toccata-like moto perpetuo, finally producing a great surge of energy. A considerable array of percussion is used to enhance the delicacy of texture en route to the thundering climax, where the bass drum underlines the coda. Performance and recording are first rate.

Shaker Loops

🔑 Ⓑ  Virgin 3 63308-2. LCO, Warren-Green – GLASS: Company, etc.; REICH: 8 Lines; HEATH: Frontier ***

The outstanding performance by Christopher Warren-Green and his London Concert Orchestra is full of imaginative intensity and it received the composer's imprimatur. Outstandingly vivid recording.

CHAMBER & PIANO MUSIC

(i) Road Movies (for Violin & Piano); (ii; iii) Hallelujah Junction (for 2 pianos). Solo Piano Music: (ii) American Berserk; China Gates; (iii) Phrygian Gates

 None. 7559 79699-2. (i) Josefowicz & Novacek; (ii) Hodges; (iii) Hind

Hallelujah Junction was inspired by a small truck stop in the High Sierras on the border of California, an isolated place where Adams keeps a cabin. He described it as an '18-minute tableau', and in its variety and colour it represents his minimalist style at its most imaginative. It is only in the three movements of Road Movies that his lyrical vein, so important in his later music, begins to emerge.

Apart from including an extra work, the very well-recorded Nonesuch collection is a clear first choice. The performance of Road Movies is more vibrant and colloquial in the hands of Leila Josefowicz and John Novacek, with the final 40% Swing really taking off. Moreover, both the pianists on the Nonesuch disc have a real feeling for the Adams rhythmic patterns and syncopated percussive accents. The composer himself provides indispensable back-up notes about all the music.

CHORAL MUSIC

On the Transmigration of Souls

 None. 7559 79816-2. NY Choral Artists, Brooklyn Youth Ch., P. Smith (trumpet), soloists, NYPO, Maazel

In remembering 9/11, Adams has described the piece as 'a memory space'. Against a shimmering orchestral and choral backcloth is heard a second textural layer of street sounds, muttered phrases from missing persons, their relatives and loved ones, the reading of victims' names by friends and family members. The great 'Why' is created by the quotation of haunting fragments of Ives's Unanswered Question, but the choral climax is on the words 'Love' and 'Light'. The recording laminates the music and sounds with complete success – a remarkable achievement from all concerned.

OPERA

Doctor Atomic (DVD Version)

Ⓝ  Opus Arte DVD OA0998D Finley, Rivera, Owens, Fink, Netherlands Op. Ch., & PO, Renes.

John Adams appears to be the one single composer alive today who can write operas (usually based on current events) that audiences want to attend. He can write modern yet singable vocal lines, even if passages of his vocal dialogue are not always very melodic. Even so, with spectacular orchestral and choral writing, the result is very compelling. The problem about this DVD was that is was made too soon. We saw the London production which followed this, and cuts were made, and more will be needed, especially in the second Act, for at well over three hours the opera is too long. Gerald Finley dominates the action as J. Robert Oppenheimer, who "invented" the atomic bomb, (and Jessica Rivera is sympathetic as his wife), but Eric Owens as General Groves (representing the military) makes a perfect foil for him in the second act, when great tension is created as everyone on the stage is waiting as the world's very first atomic explosion is about to happen. When it does, the curtain falls.

El Niño (complete)

 Arthaus DVD 100 220 (CD version on None. 79634-2 (2)). Hunt Lieberson, Upshaw, White, Theatre of Voices, L. Voices, Berlin Deutsches SO, Nagano (Director: Peter Sellars, V/D: Peter Sellars)

El Niño is essentially a staged oratorio telling the story of the Annunciation and birth of Christ, the journey to Bethlehem, the visit of the Three Kings, Herod's slaughter of the first-born and the prudent departure of Joseph, Mary and Jesus. The opera staging places the principal singers, chorus and semi-chorus (comprising three counter-tenors) on a plinth below a huge screen on which is projected a two-hour film (made by Peter Sellars and Yreina Cervántez).

It has to be said that much of the visual imagery (apart from the main events of the story) is confusing, even superfluous, and does not bear repeated viewing; but the three principals all sing with moving eloquence and are always worth watching. So there is a good case for the audio version, which includes full texts, as against the video's surtitles. Whether on CD or DVD, the recording is impressively spacious and clear.

The Death of Klinghoffer (complete; DVD version)

 Decca DVD 074 189-9. Sylvan, Maltman, Howard, Randle, Boutros, Melrose, Marwa, Bickley, Blaze, L. Symphony Ch., LSO, composer (V/D: Penny Woolcock)

John Adams's second opera graphically tells the story of the hijacking of the Italian cruise liner, Achille Lauro, by Palestinian terrorists in 1985. The orchestral commentary underpins the narrative throughout and creates a powerfully sustained tension, which leads to a great climax at the actual death scene, followed by the poignant 'Gymnopédie', when the body is thrown overboard and sinks into the ocean. The opera closes with a choral epilogue and the tragic final scene when the Captain (Christopher Maltman) has to tell Marilyn Klinghoffer (Yvonne Howard) of her husband's death, and she recalls their life together. The performance is in every way outstanding, and even though not all the solo singing is of the highest calibre, the dramatic commitment of the cast, the fine choral singing and superb playing of the LSO are unforgettable when so vividly recorded.

I was looking at the ceiling and then I saw the sky (Song Play)

✿ (BB)  Naxos 8.669003/4. Mühlpointner, Trotman, Neisser, Friedrich, De Haas, Gardell, Jonas Holst, Freiburg Young Op. Co., Band of Holst Sinf., Simon

This Naxos recording of John Adams's 'song play', set to a remarkably imaginative libretto by June Jordan, is a complete revelation, showing it to be an undoubted masterpiece, an intriguing amalgam of opera and musical, drawing on all kinds of sources, but in the main extending the style of musical pioneered by Bernstein. It is a true crossover work, and its basic parlando style, laced with set pieces, is all Adams's own. The work is inspired by the 1994 Californian earthquake. The piece centres on seven everyday characters, all young people from Los Angeles, of varying social and ethnic backgrounds and Adams's set numbers bring outstanding lyrical inspirations.

Nixon in China (complete)

Ⓜ  None. 7559 79177-2 (3). Sylvan, Craney, Maddalena, St Luke's Ch. & O, De Waart

It seemed an extraordinary idea to create an opera out of President Richard Nixon's greatest political gamble (which actually paid off): his 1972 visit to China to establish a friendly relationship with the Communist regime and its leader, Chou En-lai; but those who saw the ENO production will have discovered how grippingly it works in the theatre. Adams's special brand of minimalism works magnetically, and the music itself has a lyrical melodic flow absent from most post-Britten operas. The choral music is especially telling, and Chou's banquet speech/aria is memorable, as is his wife's stirring soliloquy. The singing is generally excellent, as is the recording. A full translation is included.

ADÈS, Thomas (born 1971)

Asyla (complete)

 EMI DVD 4 90326-9 (2). BPO, Rattle (V/D: Bob Coles) – MAHLER: Symphony 5 ***

Thomas Adès's brilliant orchestral piece, with its exotic use of a vast range of percussion instruments, was Simon Rattle's choice of work to complete his inaugural programme as the new music director of the Berlin Philharmonic in November 2002.

(i–ii) Asyla, Op. 17; (i; iii) ... But All Shall be Well, Op. 10; (iii–iv) Chamber Symphony for 15 Players, Op. 2; (iii–v) Concerto conciso for Piano & Chamber Orchestra, Op. 18; (i; iii) These Premises are Alarmed, Op. 18

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI 5 03403-2. (i) CBSO; (ii) cond. Rattle; (iii) cond. composer; (iv) Birmingham Contemporary Music Group; (v) with composer (piano)

The Chamber Symphony is extraordinarily intricate in its rhythmic ideas, developing ear-tickling colouristic patterns. The Concerto conciso has the solo piano well integrated into the instrumental group, where rhythms are free and jazzy, but it brings a calm central chaconne before the closing 'Brawl'. These Premises are Alarmed is a brief, witty apoplexy, designed as a brilliant orchestral showpiece for the Hallé Orchestra. Balance is restored in ... But All Shall be Well, the title coming from 'Little Gidding', the last of T. S. Eliot's Four Quartets. Remarkable music, splendidly played and most vividly and atmospherically recorded.

Piano Quintet

Ⓜ  EMI 5 03404-2. Composer, Arditti Qt – SCHUBERT: Trout Quintet ***

Adès's work, while still cast in a sonata-form structure, presses it to the limits of avant-garde extravagance. The Arditti performance with the composer at the piano was made at The Maltings and has splendid definition and atmosphere.

AHO, Kalevi (born 1949)

Clarinet Concerto

 BIS SACD 1463 Fröst, Lahti SO, Vänskä – NIELSEN: Clarinet Concerto ***

Aho's Clarinet Concerto is an ambitious five-movement work covering the widest range of mood, from the unpredictable opening Tempestuo (with a lyrical middle section) through a virtuoso solo cadenza, to an even wilder central Vivace, where the time-signature changes with almost every bar. Then comes a haunting Adagio mesto, followed by an Epilogue marked Misterioso, with the soloist finally making a slow diminuendo into silence. Fröst's performance is both dazzling and sensitive and Osmo Vänskä and his orchestra provide spectacular support. The BIS recording is very fine.

(i) Violin Concerto; Hiljaisuus (Silence). Symphony 1

 BIS CD 396. (i) Gräsbeck; Lahti SO, Vänskä

Aho's First Symphony betokens an impressive musical personality at work. Silence is an imaginative piece. It is related to (and was conceived as an introduction to) the post-expressionist and more 'radical' and trendy Violin Concerto; it is a work of considerable resource and imaginative intensity. Good performances and recording.

Symphonies 2; 7 (Insect Symphony)

 BIS CD 936. Lahti SO, Vänskä

The Second Symphony is a powerfully conceived and cogently argued work in one movement, predominantly fugal in texture, indebted to the world of Shostakovich and Bartók. The Seventh Symphony derives its material from an opera, Insect Life (based on a play by Karel Čapek). Aho decided to refashion its ideas in symphonic form. Each of the six movements is programmatic, with titles like Fox-Trot and Tango of the Butterflies, The Dung Beetles and so on. It is more of a symphonic suite than a symphony but is scored imaginatively and with flair. Impeccable performances and extremely fine recording.

(i) Symphony 11 (for 6 Percussionists & Orchestra). Symphonic Dances (Hommage à Uuno Klami)

🔑  BIS CD 1336. Lahti SO, Vänskä, (i) with Kroumata Percussion Ens.

The Symphonic Dances derive from a completion Aho made of the ballet Whirls by Uuno Klami, whose inspiration, like so much Finnish music, derives from the Kalevala, the last act of which the composer left unfinished. Like many of its predecessors, the Eleventh Symphony includes an important role for a solo instrument or instruments – in this case a battery of percussion performed expertly by the six members of the Kroumata Ensemble. This is a vital work, which is given state-of-the-art recording by the BIS team and some pretty state-of-the-art playing by Osmo Vänskä and his Lahti musicians.

ALAIN, Jehan (1911–40)

ORGAN MUSIC

Aria; Chorales; 3 Danses; Danses; Deuxième fantaisie; Intermezzo; Le Jardin suspendu; Litanies; Petite pièce; Préludes; Prélude et fugue; Suite; Variations sur un thème de Jannequin; Variations sur l'hymne Lucis Creator

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553632/3. Lebrun (Cavaillé-Coll organ of the Church of Saint-Antoine des Quinze-Vingts, Paris)

Aria; 3 Danses; 2 Danses à Agni Yavishta; Le Jardin suspendu; Litanies

🔑  Chan. 10315. Whitehead (organ of Saint-Étienne Cathedral, Auxerre, France) – DURUFLÉ: Prélude et fugue, etc. ***

Eric Lebrun is completely attuned to Alain's sound-world and his Cavaillé-Coll organ is ideal. These Naxos performances are thoroughly recommendable and at the price make a real bargain.

Alternatively, this splendidly played Chandos recital can serve as an introduction to this highly original composer, alongside the excellent Naxos discs.

Sarabande for Organ, String Quintet & Timpani (adapted from Deuils by M.-C. Alain)

(BB)  Warner Apex 2564 61912-2. Marie-Claire Alain, Bamberg SO (members), Kantorow – DURUFLÉ: 3 Dances etc.; POULENC: Organ Concerto ***

Deuils is the second of the 3 Danses, and is scored for a five-part string texture, organ and timpani. Calling it Sarabande,

Marie-Claire Alain has 'restituted and adapted' the sketch for performance. It sounds remarkably different from the organ version, the effect noble and graceful, radiantly translucent and certainly beautiful. The performance here could hardly be bettered, and this collection as a whole is very rewarding and excellently recorded.

Prière pour nous autres charnels

 Chan. 9504. Hill, Davies, BBC PO, Y.-P. Tortelier – DUTILLEUX: Violin Concerto, etc. ***

Jehan Alain composed this short but beautiful setting of a prayer by Péguy for two soloists and organ; it is a moving piece, modal yet rich in its musical language, and it makes an admirable makeweight to the Dutilleux works.

ALBÉNIZ, Isaac (1860–1909)

Concierto fantástico; Rapsodia española (both for piano & orchestra)

(BB)  Warner Apex 8573 89223-2. Heisser, Lausanne CO, López-Cobos – FALLA: Nights in the Gardens of Spain; TURINA: Rapsodia sinfónica ***

Both the Concierto fantástico and the Rapsodia española (the latter colourfully orchestrated by Georges Enescu) are given sparkling, idiomatic performances by Jean-François Heisser and the excellent Lausanne Chamber Orchestra under López-Cobos. The Rapsodia swaggers along at its close, not unlike Chabrier's España. The recording is excellent, and so are the couplings. Thoroughly recommended.

(i; ii) Piano Concerto 1 (Concierto fantástico), Op. 78; (iii) Catalonia; (iv) Iberia Suite (orch. Arbós); Navarra

(N) (BB)  Regis RRC 1298. Bátiz with (i) RPO; (ii) Ciccolini; (iii) Mexico City PO; (iv) LSO.

Albéniz's Piano Concerto is an early work dating from 1887 and, though neither very characteristic nor very Spanish, it possesses a certain charm. The performance here is persuasive and it is well recorded. The other works offer more red-blooded Spanishry, with plenty of colourful tunes, all brightly played and well recorded. The short but frothy Catalonia is especially vivid and lively.

Iberia (suite; orch. Arbós)

 Chan. 8904. Philh. O, Y.-P. Tortelier – FALLA: Three-cornered Hat ***

In Arbós's brilliant scoring of Albéniz's piano pieces the Philharmonia's response brings glowing woodwind colours and seductive string-phrasing, well projected by the warmly resonant recording. A clear first choice.

Rapsodia española (arr. Halffter)

(B)  Decca 448 243-2. De Larrocha, LPO, Frühbeck de Burgos – RODRIGO: Concierto de Aranjuez, etc.; TURINA: Rapsodia sinfónica ***

 Australian Decca Eloquence 476 2971. De Larrocha, LPO, Frühbeck de Burgos – MONTSALVATGE: Concerto breve; SURINACH: Piano Concerto; TURINA: Rapsodia sinfónica ***

Alicia de Larrocha's performance is both evocative and dazzling, and she is given splendid support by Frühbeck de Burgos and brilliant Decca sound. This comes either coupled with Rodrigo and Turina or as part of an enterprising collection of Spanishry from Australian Decca, including two rare concertos.

GUITAR MUSIC

Cantos de España: Córdoba, Op. 232/4; Mallorca (Barcarola), Op. 202. Suite española: Cataluña; Granada; Sevilla; Cádiz, Op. 47/1–4

🔑 ✿ (BB) * RCA 74321 68016-2. Bream – GRANADOS: Collection (with MALATS: Serenata; PUJOL: Tango español; Guajira) *** ✿

Julian Bream is in superb form in this splendid recital, vividly recorded in the pleasingly warm acoustic of Wardour Chapel, near his home in Wiltshire. The playing itself has wonderfully communicative rhythmic feeling and great subtlety of colour, and its spontaneity increases the impression that one is experiencing a 'live' recital. The performance of the haunting Córdoba, which ends the group, is unforgettable.

Suite española 1, Op. 47, excerpts: Granada; Sevilla; Astorias

(BB)  CFP 5 75140-2. Byzantine (with GRANADOS: Andaluza (Playera), Op. 37/5; TÁRREGA: Memories of the Alhambra (Ghiglia); MYERS: The Deer Hunter: Cavatina; (Manuel Barrueco & Steve Morse)) – RODRIGO: Concierto de Aranjuez etc. ***

Julian Byzantine plays magnetically in the three evocations of famous Spanish cities, and he is especially seductive in his sultry portrayal of Granada. Oscar Ghiglia is rather less enticing in the famous Tárrega Recuerdos.

PIANO MUSIC

Azulejos; Espagne; Navarra; Recuerdos de viaje; La Vega

(N) (BB)  Naxos 8.570553 González

6 Danzas españolas, Op. 37; 6 Mazurkas de salón, Op.66; 6 Pequeños valses

(N) (BB)  Naxos 8.572196 González

Guillermo González, besides being a fine pianist, is a leading authority on the composer and his performances of these genre pieces are attractively stylish and spontaneous. He is well recorded too, and he shows here that the Mazurkas and Valses are every bit as characterful as the Danzas españolas.

Cantos de España; Suite española

(B)  Double Decca ADD/DDD 433 923-2 (2). De Larrocha – GRANADOS: Allegro de concierto, etc. ***

This makes a most rewarding bonus for the coupled Granados collection, and Alicia de Larrocha's playing is imbued with many subtle changes of colour and has a refreshing vitality.

Iberia (complete); Alhambra (Suite) excerpts: Navarra; 6 Hojas de Album, Op. 165; Tango; Suite española, Op. 47

(BB)  Nim. NI 5595/8. Martin Jones – GRANADOS: Allegro de concierto; Goyescas, etc. ***

Iberia (complete); Azulejos; Navarra

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 3 61514-2 (2). De Larrocha – GRANADOS: Goyescas ***

Iberia (complete); España (Souvenirs); Navarra; La vega; Yvonne en visite!

🔑  Hyp. CDA 67476/7. Hamelin

Iberia (complete); Navarra; Suite española

🔑 Ⓝ ✿ Ⓜ  Decca 478 6388-2 (2). De Larrocha

Iberia (complete); Navarra

Ⓑ  Double Decca (ADD) 448 191-2 (2). De Larrocha – GRANADOS: Goyescas *** ✿

Marc-André Hamelin is highly sensitive to the subtle nuances of Albéniz's evocative piano-writing and his gentle, sensuous inflexions are consistently seductive, from the opening Evocación of Book I onwards. Among modern versions this Hyperion set must now take pride of place alongside de Larrocha, who has special insights of her own to offer.

On her digital Decca version, Alicia de Larrocha brings an altogether beguiling charm and character to these rewarding miniature tone-poems and makes light of their sometimes fiendish technical difficulties. The recording is among the most successful of piano sounds Decca has achieved.

Martin Jones penetrates the ethos of these pieces with a natural feeling for their Spanish atmosphere, and he has sufficient and justified confidence in his own special insights to offer an individual reading with pianism that is brilliantly coloured, rhythmically charismatic and often quite magical in its gentle evocation. The recording is wholly natural, the ambience warm but not too resonant.

Alicia de Larrocha's earliest (1962) stereo recording of Albéniz's great piano suite now is far tougher, more daring, more fiery and, if anything, even more warmly expressive than she was later. The sound is not as fine as on her Decca recordings, but this is a worthy inclusion for EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century'.

Alicia de Larrocha's second analogue set of Iberia was made in 1972. The piano recording is excellent in its realism, and the Double Decca reissue coupled with Granados's Goyescas makes a formidable bargain, for – on both artistic and technical merits – Iberia loses little ground to her later, digital set, which has rather more subtlety.

OPERA

Henry Clifford (complete)

(*) Decca 473 937-2 (2). Machado, Marc, Alvarez, Henschel, Martinez, Madrid Ch. & SO, Eusebio

Albéniz's first large-scale opera was premièred in 1895 at the Gran Teatro del Liceo in Barcelona. The performance overall is more than acceptable, although with one major flaw in that the eponymous hero, sung by Aquiles Machado, is distinctly underpowered, producing some quite disagreeable top notes. Alessandra Marc as his mother, Lady Clifford, is far more commanding and secure, with just the right timbre for the part. Carlos Alvarez's dark baritone is ideally suited to Sir John St John, and Jane Henschel as his wife is in good voice throughout. Ana Maria Martinez is excellent, producing a rich, warm voice for the heroine, Ann. The choruses are especially lively and invigorating. José de Eusebio proves a highly sympathetic conductor, and his excellent Madrid orchestra brings out all the colour of the score and Decca's sound is flattering too, warmly atmospheric, well balanced and vivid.

Merlin (complete, DVD version)

(*) BBC Opus Arte DVD OA0888D (2). Wilson-Johnson, Marton, Skelton, Vaness, Odena, Sierra, Madrid Ch. and SO, José de Eusebio

The BBC version is very rewarding, thanks to a passionate performance under José de Eusebio, spectacularly well recorded.

ALBINONI, Tomaso (1671–1751)

Adagio in G min. for Organ & Strings (arr. Giazotto)

Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 449 724-2. BPO, Karajan – RESPIGHI: Ancient Airs, etc. ***

Karajan's view is stately and measured, and the Berlin Philharmonic strings respond with dignity and sumptuous tone. The anachronism of Giazotto's arrangement is obviously relished.

12 Concerti a cinque, Op. 7; 12 Concerti a cinque, Op. 9; Sinfonia

🔑  Chan. 0602; 0579; 0610. Robson, Latham, Coll. Mus. 90, Standage

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553002; 8.553035; 8.550739. Camden, Girdwood, Alty, L. Virtuosi, Georgiadis

(BB)  Regis RRC 1095. Op. 7/3, 6, 9 & 12; Op. 9/2, 5, 8 & 11 Francis, L. Harpsichord Ens.

Anthony Robson plays all eight solo concertos from Opp. 7 and 9 using a period oboe. His tone is most appealing and his phrasing and musicianship are second to none. Simon Standage provides alert accompaniments, also using original instruments, and creates bright, athletic string-timbres. Catherine Latham joins him to complete the Collegium Musicum sets of Opp. 7 and 9, including the works for strings. The artistic results are very lively and refreshing, although the balance is rather close.

The London Virtuosi use modern instruments, but their playing is fresh and refined and the digital recording is natural and beautifully balanced. On the first disc Camden's excellent colleague is Julia Girdwood, but for the two other collections Alison Alty takes over, and the partnership seems even more felicitous, with the two instruments blended quite perfectly. Also included is a Sinfonia, arranged by Camden as a Sinfonia concertante. This series can be strongly recommended on all counts.

Those looking for a selection of Oboe Concertos from both Op. 7 and Op. 9 will find that Sarah Francis is an immensely stylish and gifted soloist. She is accompanied with warmth and grace, and the recording is first class. As a budget-priced Regis reissue this is very attractive indeed.

12 Concerti, Op. 10

🔑 (BB)  Warner Apex 2564 61136-2 (1–6); 2564 61256-2 (7–12). Carmignola, Toso, Sol. Ven., Scimone

Four of the Op. 10 set are violin concertos (Nos. 6, 8, 10 and 12) and three are concerti grossi with a small concertino group (Nos. 2, 3 and 4), while the remainder are without soloists and have non-fugal last movements. They radiate simple vitality, a love of life and a youthful exuberance that belies the composer's age. The playing is warm and musical, and the recording is made in an ample acoustic.

CHAMBER MUSIC

6 Sonate da chiesa, Op. 4; Trattenimenti armonici per camera, Op. 6

Ⓑ  Hyp. 2x1 Dyad CDD 22048 (2). Locatelli Trio

Albinoni's lyrically appealing 'Church' Sonatas are here contrasted with the plainer and more secular (but no less rewarding) Trattenimenti, which translates as 'Entertainments'. The performances on original instruments are of high quality, as is the recording, and this set is even more attractive at its new lower price.

Trio Sonatas, Op. 1/1–12

 CPO 999 770-2. Parnassi Musici

Albinoni's Trio Sonatas, Op. 1, are important not only musically – they make delightful listening – but also historically. For although the four-movement sonata da chiesa format (slow–fast–slow–fast) was established by Corelli in the 1680s, it appeared exclusively in Albinoni's Op. 1, with six of these Trio Sonatas in the major and six in the minor keys. But Albinoni's variety of invention is inexhaustible, with the opening movements of the last two Sonatas especially striking. The period-instrument performances here are first class in every way and they are excellently recorded.

ALFANO, Franco (1875–1954)

Cyrano de Bergerac (opera; complete)

 DG DVD 476 739-6. Alagna, Manfrino, Troxell, Rivenq, Barrard, O Nat. de Montpellier, Guidarini (Producers: David and Frédérico Alagna)

Alfano, best known for completing Puccini's unfinished opera, Turandot, was also a successful opera composer in his own right, and this adaptation of Edmond Rostand's play is here presented by the Opéra National de Montpellier in a lavish, realistic production by David and Frédérico Alagna, with sets designed by themselves. With Roberto Alagna impressively taking the title-role, acting convincingly, the performance under Marco Guidarini works well. Natalie Manfrino is a bright-toned Roxane, casually dismissing the love-lorn Christian when he proves an incoherent rather than a poetic lover. The handsome Richard Troxell is well cast in that second tenor role, lighter and well contrasted with Alagna; and the others make an excellent team. The one notable shortcoming is that Alfano, unlike Puccini, is not a natural melodist, and in such a romantic piece one craves the sort of impact that Puccini was able to achieve by launching a great melody.

ALFVÉN, Hugo (1872–1960)

A Country Tale (En Bygdesaga): Suite, Op. 53; Elégie; Synnove of Solbakken, Op. 50: Suite

(BB)  Naxos 8.557828. Norrköping SO, Willén

The two film-score suites date from the 1930s and '40s and are full of charm and easy melodic invention. Both are imbued with folk-like tunes which add bucolic piquancy. Elégie is the longest piece here; it is Alfvén's homage to the Swedish composer Johan Gustav Emil Sjögren. Sympathetic performances and decent recording.

A Legend of the Skerries, Op. 20; Swedish Rhapsodies 1 (Midsummer Vigil), Op. 19; 2 (Uppsala Rhapsody), Op. 24; 3 (Dala Rhapsody), Op. 47; King Gustav II Adolf, Op. 49: Adagio

🔑  Chan. 9313. Iceland SO, Sakari

Midsummer Vigil, Alfvén's masterpiece, is quintessential Sweden, and so too is the affecting Elegy from the incidental music to Ludwig Nordström's play about Gustav II Adolf. Petri Sakari produces musically satisfying results, and this useful anthology can be warmly recommended. The Chandos sound is excellent.

Symphonies: 1 in F min., Op. 7; Revelation Cantata: Andante religioso; Drapa; Uppsala Rhapsody (BIS CD 395). 2 in D, Op. 11; Swedish Rhapsody 1 (BIS CD 385). 3 in E, Op. 23; The Prodigal Son: Suite; Swedish Rhapsody 3 (BIS CD 455). (i) 4 in C min., Op. 39; Legend of the Skerries, Op. 20 (BIS CD 505). 5 in A min., Op. 54; The Mountain King (Suite), Op. 37; King Gustav II Adolf, Op. 49: Adagio (BIS CD 585)

🔑 Ⓜ  BIS CD 1478/80 (5). Stockholm PO, Järvi; (i) with Högman, Ahnsjö

The five symphonies are all individually available at full price (with fill-ups) or economically in a mid-priced box (five discs for the price of three).

Järvi's versions are superior both artistically and technically and leave the listener persuaded as to their merits. The Uppsala Rhapsody is based on student songs, but it is pretty thin stuff and the Andante religioso is rather let down by its sugary closing pages. Drapa opens with some fanfares, full of sequential clichés and with a certain naïve pomp and splendour that verges on bombast. Järvi gives a delightful performance of the popular Midsummer Vigil. The Mountain King is an inventive and attractive score; and both works, as well as the touching Elegy from the music to Gustav II Adolf, could hardly be presented more persuasively. The engineering is absolutely first class.

Symphony 2; The Prodigal Son (ballet)

(BB)  Naxos 8.555072. Nat. SO of Ireland, Willén

Symphony 3; Legend of the Skerries, Op. 20; Swedish Rhapsody 3 (Dala Rhapsody), Op. 47

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.553729. RSNO, Willén

Symphony 4 (From the Outermost Skerries), Op. 39; Festival Overture

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.557284. Halla, Valdimarsson, Iceland SO, Willén

The sensitive, well-prepared performances under Niklas Willén also serve these symphonies well.

The Fourth is perhaps Alfvén's most ambitious and in many ways most imaginative symphony, and Alfvén takes a leaf out of Nielsen's book by incorporating two wordless voices into the score in the manner of the Sinfonia espansiva. The Naxos version from Iceland is well played and is highly competitive, without necessarily being a first choice, unless the Naxos coupling is preferred.

Choral music: Collection of Part-songs

 BIS CD 633. Ahnsjö, Alin, Orphei Drängar Ch., Sund

Some of the part-songs Alfvén composed for the Orphei Drängar (Sons of Orpheus) are collected here and are sung to the highest standards of tonal virtuosity. Recommended with enthusiasm.

ALKAN, Charles-Valentin
(1813–88)

Cello Sonata in E, Op. 47

Ⓝ  Hyp. CDA 67624. Gerhardt, Osborne – CHOPIN: Cello Sonata ***

Alkan's Cello Sonata is an instantly appealing work, both for its spontaneity and melodic freshness. There are enough quirky moments in the score to make us realize that this is the work of Alkan. The Adagio is irony-free and is a movement of much beauty and the finale is a dashing Saltarella. It is all most enjoyable, with superlative performances from Alban Gerhardt and Steven Osborne, who surmount the work's hair-raising technical problems with seeming ease. Excellent sound.

PIANO MUSIC

Concerto for Solo Piano, Op. 39/8–10; Troisième Recueil de chants, Op. 65

🔑 * Hyp. CDA 67569. Hamelin

12 Etudes in the Minor Keys: Symphony for Piano, Op. 39/4–7; Alleluia, Op. 25; Salut, cendre du pauvre! Op. 45; Super flumina Babylonis, Op. 52; Souvenirs: 3 Morceaux dans le genre pathétique, Op. 15

🔑  Hyp. CDA 67218. Hamelin

Grande sonate (Les Quatre Ages); Barcarolle; Le Festin d'Esope; Sonatine, Op. 61

🔑  Hyp. CDA 66794. Hamelin

Marc-André Hamelin continues his remarkable traversal of Alkan's work with the Concerto for Solo Piano, a gigantic score, the first movement of which alone takes just under half an hour.

The Symphony for Piano comprises four movements (Nos. 4–7) from the Douze études. The Symphony and the other pieces on Hyperion must sound effortless, just as a great dancer must seem weightless, and Marc-André Hamelin makes light of their many difficulties. Superb playing and very good recording – and noteworthy not only for its virtuosity but for its refined music-making.

Alkan's Grande sonate over its four massive movements represents the hero at various ages, with the second, Quasi-Faust, the key one. The Sonatine, the most approachable of Alkan's major works, is done just as dazzlingly, with the hauntingly poetic Barcarolle and the swaggering Festin d'Esope as valuable makeweights.

Esquisses, Op. 63

(BB)  Naxos 8.555496. Martin

Alkan's Esquisses, 49 little miniatures are expertly crafted, and full of imaginative and original touches. Laurent Martin is an excellent player who understands this music inside out and is generally well served by the recorded sound.

12 Etudes in the Minor Keys, Op. 39; Le Festin d'Esope, Op. 39/12; Scherzo diabolico, Op. 39/3

(BB)  Naxos 8.555495. Ringeissen

Bernard Ringeissen gives a very brilliant account of the Etudes. The 1990 Naxos recording is very faithful, and at this bargain-basement price the attractions of the set are further enhanced by Le Festin d'Esope, also very impressive here.

Etudes in the Minor Keys, Op. 39/4–11; Esquisses, Op. 63; Gigue, Op. 24; March, Op. 37/1; Nocturne 1, Op. 22; Petit conte; 3 Petites fantaisies, Op. 41; Préludes, Op. 31/11–13, 15 & 16; Le Tambour bat aux champs, Op. 50/2; Toccatina, Op. 75

(BB)  EMI Gemini (ADD/DDD) 5 85484-2 (2). Ronald Smith

A fine collection from Ronald Smith's impressive and distinguished survey of Alkan's often quite astonishing piano music.

ALLEGRI, Gregorio (1582–1652)

Miserere

🔑 Ⓜ  Gimell (ADD) GIMSE 401. Tallis Scholars, Phillips – MUNDY: Vox patris caelestis; PALESTRINA: Missa Papae Marcelli ***

🔑 Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 466 373-2. King's College Ch., Willcocks – PALESTRINA: Collection ***

Mozart was so impressed by Allegri's Miserere when he heard it in the Sistine Chapel (which originally claimed exclusive rights to its performance) he wrote the music out from memory so that it could be performed elsewhere. With its soaring treble solo celestially sung by Alison Stamp, this performance by the Tallis Scholars holds its place at the top of the list and is now most welcome as a mid-priced celebration of the group's 25th anniversary. The famous 1963 King's performance, with its equally arresting treble solo so beautifully and securely sung by Roy Goodman, is also reissued, coupled with Palestrina at mid-price.

ALWYN, William (1905–85)

Aphrodite in Aulis (Eclogue for small orchestra after George Moore); (i) Concerto for Oboe, Harp & Strings; Elizabethan Dances; Festival March; The Innumerable Dance: An English Overture; The Magic Island (Symphonic Prelude)

(BB)  Naxos 8.570144. (i) Small, Hudson; RLPO, Lloyd-Jones

The novelty here is Aphrodite in Aulis, an exquisite miniature creating a delicate vision of its mythological Greek namesake. But there are equally dainty textures in the engaging flimsy Waltz (languidamente) of the Elizabethan Suite. Jonathan Small also finds intricate delicacy and charm in the pastorale filigree of the Oboe Concerto, improvisational in feeling, with a wide variety of mood and tempo in its two movements. Eleanor Hudson's contribution on the harp is much lower in profile. In short, these are all highly responsive performances, beautifully played by the Liverpool orchestra, and very well recorded.

Concerto for Flute & 8 Winds; Divertimento; Flute Sonata; French Suite; Naiades, fantasy (Sonata for flute & harp); Trio for Flute, Cello & Piano

🔑 Ⓜ  Dutton CDLX 7176. Davies, Nash Ens.

The rare French Suite is an especially delightful novelty, delicate and piquant and utterly captivating. Written in 1980, the Flute Concerto, with its lively inner movement and shifting textures, is consistently entertaining, raising a smile or two along the way. Both Naiades and the Trio offer much beauty, and the Divertimento for solo flute – a real tour de force – does a good job of entertaining the listener for almost 14 minutes. The performances and recording cannot be faulted and the soloist, Philippa Davies, deserves special praise.

Piano Concertos 1–2

Ⓝ  Chan. 9935 Shelley, LSO Hickox

The two piano concertos now come coupled together with the Elizabethan Dances and Overture to a Masque to fill out the disc generously. Howard Shelley is a splendid soloist.

4 Elizabethan Dances (from the set of 6); Derby Day Overture; Festival March; The Magic Island (symphonic prelude); Sinfonietta for Strings

🔑 * Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 229 [id.]. LPO, composer

An exceptionally attractive compilation and one of the composer's most successful records. Alwyn's Elizabethan Dances are extrovert and tuneful in the Malcolm Arnold tradition (if not quite so ebullient in orchestration). Alwyn is no less successful in Derby Day with its pithily rhythmic main theme, and he is both poetic and romantically expansive in the Shakespearean evocation of The Magic Island. But the most important work here is the Sinfonietta for Strings. The Lyrita recordings were made between 1972 and 1979 and show the usual engineering flair which distinguishes all issues on this label.

Film scores, Vol. 1

 Chan. 9243. LSO, Hickox

Film Scores, Vol. 2

 Chan. 9959. BBC PO, Gamba; (i) with Bullock, Canzonetta

Film Scores, Vol. 3

 Chan. 10349. BBC PO, Gamba

Unfortunately, all Alwyn's major film-scores were inadvertently destroyed at Pinewood Studios, and Christopher Palmer has had to return to the composer's sketches for these recordings. The result in Vol. 1 is impressive. Odd Man Out (about the IRA) has the most compellingly poignant music, but the lightweight History of Mr Polly is charming and The Fallen Idol sophisticated in its delineation of action and character.

Philip Lane's reconstructions from the original soundtracks in Vol. 2 are also most welcome. In Take My Life Alwyn composed a pastiche aria for the operatic heroine and wrote a second for Svengali, both impressively sung by Susan Bullock. But the highlight here is the delightful suite compiled from the film of Arnold Bennett's The Card, with Alec Guinness as the whimsical hero. Both In Search of the Castaways and (especially) Desert Victory inspired Alwyn to some of his most atmospheric writing.

Vol. 3 of Chandos's Alwyn film music series brings some particularly delicate writing (and playing) in The Magic Box, and the jolly and robust numbers, such as the March from The Way Ahead, or the Waltz from The Cure for Love, come off well too. There is plenty of colour and variety on this CD, with the music from The Penn of Pennsylvania and The Running Man forming entertaining suites. Excellent sound and performances throughout this series.

(i) Lyra Angelica (Harp Concerto). Symphonies 2; 5 (Hydriotaphia)

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.557647. RLPO, Lloyd-Jones; (i) with Suzanne Willison

The Lyra Angelica is a haunting and lyrical piece to which collectors will want to return. The Second Symphony (1953) is in two movements and is a well-argued piece with a real sense of the symphonic. The powerful single-movement Fifth (1973) takes its inspiration from Sir Thomas Browne's 'Urn Burial' or Hydriotaphia – a Discourse of the Sepulchral Urns lately found in Norfolk! A strong piece, which is well served by David Lloyd-Jones and his orchestra, as well as by the Naxos recording team. This is a good record to start with for those beginning to explore the music of this highly rewarding composer.

Symphonies 1–5; Sinfonietta for Strings

 Chan. 9429 (3). LSO, Hickox

William Alwyn's five symphonies plus the expansive Sinfonietta for Strings are given outstanding performances from the LSO under Hickox to match the composer's own in natural understanding. The Chandos recordings are consistently up to the high standard of the house, and this set can be commended without reservation.

Symphonies 1 & 2

Ⓜ () Dutton mono CDSJB 1029. BBC SO, Barbirolli

The First Symphony was premièred by Barbirolli and the Hallé Orchestra at the 1950 Cheltenham Festival, and Sir John also gave the première of the Second, in Manchester in 1953. Even if you have Alwyn's own recordings on Lyrita or either of the modern versions, this disc is an invaluable and authoritative document, and Dutton Laboratories get very good mono sound.

Symphonies 1 & 3

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8.557648. RLPO, Lloyd-Jones

Alwyn's own recordings have a natural authority and possess vivid sound. But the 2004 Naxos recording made by the Andrew Walton – Mike Clements team is hardly less competitive and serves to bring these splendid performances under David Lloyd-Jones wonderfully alive. No one investing in these rewarding performances will be disappointed.

Symphonies 1; 4

 Lyrita SRCD 227. LPO, composer

Symphonies 2–3; 5 (Hydriotaphia)

🔑  Lyrita SRCD 228. LPO, composer

The first of Alwyn's symphonies dates from 1950 and is a work of considerable power and maturity. The Second Symphony is a powerfully inventive work that also shows an original cast of mind. The Third Symphony is a well-argued and imaginative score, richly coloured and at times even reminiscent of Bax. All these works reward the listener, and the composer's performances could hardly be more authoritative. The sound is full and naturally balanced, with fine presence and clarity.

Symphony 4; Sinfonietta for strings

(BB)  Naxos 8.557649. RLPO, Lloyd-Jones

On Naxos a worthy addition to David Lloyd-Jones's survey of the Alwyn symphonies, and those who have collected the companion issues need not hesitate. The Sinfonietta is a particularly fine work.

CHAMBER MUSIC

(i) Ballade for Viola & Piano; (ii) Chaconne for Tom, for Treble Recorder & Piano; (iii) Rhapsody for Piano Quartet; (iv) Sonata Impromptu for Violin & Viola; (v) 3 Winter Poems for String Quartet; (vi) 2 Songs for Voice, Violin & Piano; (vii) Three Blakemore Songs

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.570340. (i; iii; iv) Chase; (i; iii, vi) Ball; (ii, vii) Turner; (ii) Burnside; (iii; iv; vi–vii) Mitchell; (iii) Wilding; (v) Bridge Qt; (vi–vii) Huw Williams

The works here span Alwyn's composing career from the Two Songs of 1931 (in which Huw Williams sings sympathetically but with a rather intrusive vibrato) to the engaging little Chaconne variations on 'Happy Birthday' for Tom (Pitfield), written in 1982. However, the duet works here are the most appealing – for viola and piano and for violin and viola (both beautifully played). The Rhapsody (1939) is a most effectively constructed miniature and the atmospheric Winter Poems are certainly bleakly wintry. Performances are most sympathetic and the recording is well balanced.

Concerto for Flute & Wind; Music for 3 Players; Naiades Fantasy; Suite for Oboe & Harp; Trio for Flute, Cello & Piano

 Chan. 9152. Haffner Wind Ens. of L., Daniel, with Jones, Drake

Alwyn's Concerto for Flute and Eight Wind Instruments is richly textured, yet the consistent inner movement fascinates the ear. The charmingly pastoral Suite for Oboe and Harp is most delectably played by Nicholas Daniel (oboe) and Ieuan Jones (harp). The Naiades Fantasy for Flute and Harp is a chimerical piece in six movements. The final work is an equally attractive two-movement Trio. The Haffner Wind Ensemble are very impressive, both individually as solo personalities and as a team. The recording is admirably balanced and very realistic.

Crépuscule for Harp; Divertimento for Flute; Clarinet Sonata; Flute Sonata; Oboe Sonata; Sonata Impromptu for Violin & Viola

 Chan. 9197. Haffner Wind Ens. of L. (members), Daniel; Drake

The Oboe Sonata is an inspired work; the Clarinet Sonata is a fantasy piece. By contrast the solo Divertimento for flute (the responsive Kate Hill) is neoclassical. The Crépuscule for solo harp (Ieuan Jones) is a quiet evocation of a cold, clear and frosty Christmas Eve. The Sonata for Flute and Piano and the Sonata Impromptu for Violin and Viola are no less striking. The recording is very real.

String Quartets 1; 2 (Spring Waters); 3; Novelette

(N) (BB)  Naxos 8.570560. Maggini Qt

The First Quartet comes from the 1950s, a vintage period for the composer which saw the appearance of the Second and Third symphonies. Its two successors, the darker Second Quartet of 1975 which takes inspiration from Turgenev, and the richly inventive two-movement Third from the last year of his life, reward study. The Maggini play all three with total commitment and mastery, and as a bonne bouche offer the appealing Novelette written just before the Second World War.

The excellent Chandos alternative recordings by the Quartet of London involve two separate CDs (Chan. 8219 and 8440) but also include the Rhapsody for Piano Quartet and String Trio.

PIANO MUSIC

April Morn; Cricketty Mill; Fancy Free; Fantasy Waltzes; Green Hills; Harvest Home; Haze of Noon; Prelude and Fugue formed on an Indian Scale; Sonata alla toccata

(BB)  Naxos 8.570359. Wass

Ashley Wass proves no less persuasive an advocate of Alwyn's piano music than he has been of Arnold Bax. The recording, made at Potton Hall in Sussex, is exemplary in every way.

Fantasy-Waltzes; Green Hills; Movements; Night Thoughts; Sonata alla toccata

 Chan. 9825. Milford

Julian Milford plays the engaging Fantasy-Waltzes quite persuasively, his rubato particularly felicitous. He is given state-of-the-art recording. The Sonata alla toccata, too, is a most attractive work, with a single theme permeating all three movements, while the Devil's Reel of the finale is in essence another formidable toccata laced with angular syncopations. After this the nostalgic Night Thoughts and the memorably tranquil Green Hills come as balm.

OPERA

Miss Julie (complete)

 Lyrita SRCD 2218 (2). Gomez, Luxon, D. Jones, Mitchinson, Philh. O, Tausky

Alwyn's operatic gestures are big and, though the melodies hardly match Puccini's, the score is rich and confident, passionately performed by the Philharmonia under Tausky's direction. Jill Gomez sings ravishingly as Miss Julie and Benjamin Luxon gives a most convincing characterization of the manservant lover, with roughness a part of the mixture. Della Jones's mezzo is not contrasted enough with the heroine's soprano, but she sings warmly, and it is good to have as powerful a tenor as John Mitchinson in the incidental role of Ulrik. The 1983 Lyrita recording is well up to standard, beautifully clear as well as full, and it projects the narrative evocatively and involvingly.

ANDERSON, Leroy (1908–75)

Belle of the Ball; The Bluebells of Scotland; Blue Tango; Chicken Reel; China Doll; Fiddle-Faddle; The First Day of Spring; The Girl in Satin; Horse and Buggy; Jazz Legato; Jazz Pizzicato; Phantom Regiment; Plink Plank Plunk; Promenade; Saraband; Serenata; Sleigh Ride; Song of the Bells; Song of Jupiter; The Syncopated Clock; Summer Skies; The Typewriter; The Waltzing Cat

🔑 (M) * Mercury SACD (ADD) 475 6942. Eastman-Rochester Pops O, Fennell

The bulk of these classic recordings were made in two sessions, in 1958 and 1964 respectively, with a couple of items dating from 1956, yet the sound is full and vivid throughout. The performances are superb, with a witty precision which is very attractive and, of course, an endless succession of rollickingly good tunes. In every way this CD is thoroughly recommendable.

(i) Piano Concerto in C. Arietta; Balladette; Belle of the Ball; Blue Tango; Bugler's Holiday; Chicken Reel; China Doll; Clarinet Candy; The Classical Jukebox; The Captains and the Kings; Fiddle-Faddle; The First Day of Spring; The Golden Years; Governor of Bradford March

(BB)  Naxos 8.559313. BBC Concert O, Slatkin, (i) with Biegel

The Piano Concerto dates from 1953 and is a thoroughly tuneful and entertaining work, not much more 'serious' than the pieces which make up the rest of this CD. Beginning with the vivacious Bugler's Holiday, this collection includes many of his popular hits, such as Blue Tango, as well as some lesser-known pieces, like the nostalgic The Golden Years. The Classical Jukebox simulates a 'stuck groove' in the middle of the piece, which raises a smile. The performances are excellent, as is the sound, though it lacks the sharp vividness of the classic Mercury recording.

ANTILL, John (1904–86)

An Outback Overture; Corroboree (complete ballet)

(N) (BB)  Naxos 8.570241 New Zealand SO, Judd

The Outback Overture is exuberant, brilliantly scored and just the right length to act as a sparkling concert prelude. The 41-minute ballet, Corroboree draws on music the composer absorbed while attending an Aboriginal ritual ceremony in 1913. The music is exotically and sometimes daringly orchestrated, and ebulliently full of primitive energy. Its strongly rhythmic character brings passages which have much in common with The Rite of Spring (of which Antill has denied any previous knowledge). Both performances here certainly do the music full justice and the Naxos recording is spectacular.

ARENSKY, Anton (1861–1906)

Piano Concerto in F min., Op. 2; Fantasia on Russian Folksongs

 Hyp. CDA 66624. Coombs, BBC Scottish SO, Maksymiuk – BORTKIEWICZ: Concerto ***

Arensky's Piano Concerto in F minor is an endearing piece, highly Chopinesque in feeling and with some very appealing ideas. Stephen Coombs is an artist of great sensitivity and effortless virtuosity, and he makes out the best possible case for both the Concerto and the much shorter Fantasia on Russian Folksongs. Good orchestral support and recording.

(i) Piano Concerto in F min., Op. 2; Fantasia on Russian Folksongs. To the Memory of Suvorov; Symphonic Scherzo

(N) (BB)  Naxos 8.570 528 (i) Scherbakov; Russian PO, Yablonsky

Not surprisingly the performances on Naxos are very Russian in feeling, and after a bold opening, both orchestra and the excellent soloist make the very most of the concerto's memorable secondary theme. The Fantasia on Russian Folksongs is hardly less idiomatic, and again shows the pianist, Konstantin Scherbakov, in brilliant form. There are attractive couplings too, the commemorative march celebrates General Suvorov with plenty of fanfare, yet has a contrasting, folksy centrepiece, and the lively Orchestral Scherzo shows the composer's orchestral palette vividly. A most enjoyable collection.

Violin Concerto in A min., Op. 54

 Chan. 9528. Trostiansky, I Musici de Montréal, Turovsky – GLAZUNOV: Concerto ballata, etc. ***

(N)  Hyp. CDA 67642. Gringolts, BBC Scottish SO, Volkov – TANEYEV: Suite de concert, Op. 28 ***

The Violin Concerto in A minor is a delightful piece that deserves to be every bit as popular as, say, the Glazunov. On Chandos the concerto is beautifully played by Alexander Trostiansky. He has refinement, musicianship and impeccable taste. He is perhaps balanced rather too reticently, but the case for this concerto is made very persuasively by orchestra and engineers alike.

The concerto's second theme is an adorable idea that is both touching and difficult to dislodge from one's memory. Ilya Gringolts plays it with disarming elegance and warmth, yet elsewhere he offers effortless brilliance and is expertly and sensitively partnered by Ilan Volkov and the BBC Scottish Orchestra. The balance between soloist and orchestra is truthful and most musically judged. If you fancy the attractive Taneyev coupling this can be strongly recommended.

Suites: 1 in G min., Op. 7; 2 (Silhouettes), Op. 23; 3 (Variations in C), Op. 33

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.553768. Moscow SO, Yablonsky.

What a good idea to put Arensky's attractive orchestral Suites on a single CD. Suite 1 in G minor opens with a Russian theme with variations, and Suite 2, Silhouettes, the best known, is a suite of character studies. Suite 3 is another set of brightly coloured variations. The performances are good and enthusiastic, if not always refined, and while it all emerges quite vividly the (1995) sound lacks the richness and depth of the best recordings. A highly enjoyable disc, nevertheless.

Symphony 1 in B min., Op. 4; (i) Fantasia on Themes by I. T. Ryabinin, Op. 48 (for piano & orchestra); Variations on a Theme by Tchaikovsky, Op. 35a; (i; ii) Cantata on the 10th Anniversary of the Coronation, Op. 26; 3 Vocal Quartets with Cello Accompaniment. Op. 57

 Chan. 10086. Russian State SO, Polyansky; with (i) Tatiana Polyanskaya; (ii) Sharova, Baturkin, Russian State Symphonic Cappella

Symphony 2 in A, Op. 22; Intermezzo, Op. 13; Overture: A Dream on the Volga, Op. 16; Suite 3; Nal and Damayanti (opera): Introduction, Op. 47

 Chan. 10024. BBC PO, Sinaisky

The fluent and inventive First Symphony comes from 1883, when Arensky was in his early twenties, and it is a work of not only astonishing promise but very considerable fulfilment. The Second Symphony of 1889 is harmonically the more adventurous of the two as well as being tauter: the four movements are rolled into one. None of the above rarities is of much musical substance, though the Three Vocal Quartets with cello, which came late in his creative career, could well be the only music ever written for four-part choir and cello! All the performances are very persuasive and very well recorded.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Piano Trio 1 in D min., Op. 32

(M)  CRD (ADD) 3409. Brown, Nash Ens. – RIMSKY-KORSAKOV: Quintet ***

 Chan. 8477. Borodin Trio – GLINKA: Trio ***

Arensky's D minor Piano Trio is delightful. The account by members of the Nash Ensemble is first class in every way, capturing the Slav melancholy of the Elegia, while in the delightful Scherzo Ian Brown is both delicate and nimble-fingered. The warm, resonant (1982) analogue recording has transferred naturally to CD.

The Borodins, too, give a lively and full-blooded account of the Trio. The Scherzo comes off well, and the whole does justice to the Borodins' genial playing.

String Quartet 2 in A min., Op. 35

 Hyp. CDA 66648. Raphael Ens. – TCHAIKOVSKY: Souvenir de Florence ***

The A minor Quartet is unusual in being for only one violin and two cellos. The second movement is a set of variations on Tchaikovsky's Legend from the Children's Songs, Op. 54. It is marvellously played by members of the Raphael

Ensemble, though the recording is a bit close, placing the listener in the front row of the hall.

ARIOSTI, Attilo (1666–1729)

Recueil de Pièces pour la Viola d'amore: Sonatas 15-21; (i) Cantata: Pur alfin gentil viola

Ⓝ  BIS CD 1675 Georgi, Harris, Brinkmann; (i) Emma Kirkby

Attilo Ariosti was born in Bologna and died in London, a celebrated player of the viola d'amore, and he left as his legacy the largest single set of baroque works for his instrument. They are available on three BIS discs – the others are BISCD 1535 and 1555 – and those enjoying the present selection will want to explore further. The works are certainly agreeably inventive and the writing offers a stimulating interplay between the excellent violist, Thomas Georgi and Mime Brinkmann (cello) who leads the continuo (with Lucy Harris archlute and baroque guitar). Recording and balance are excellent and, as a postlude, they are joined by the ever fresh-voiced Emma Kirkby in a ten-minute cantata, whose text acts as a tribute to the instrument, comparing it (favourably) with the 'arrogant' rose and 'gentle' violet.

ARNE, Thomas (1710–78)

Keyboard Concertos (played as listed): Harpsichord Concertos: in C; in G min.; Organ Concertos: in B flat; in G; Piano Concertos: in A; in B flat

Ⓑ  Hyp. Helios CDH 55251. Nicholson, Parley of Instruments, Holman

The six keyboard concertos of Arne date from different periods in his career and have a wide variety of movement-structures. Holman varies the solo instrument according to the character of each work: as a sampler, try the delectable No. 3 in A, given here on a gentle-toned fortepiano. Exhilarating performances, the instrumental balances perfectly managed, achieving clarity without exaggeration.

8 Overtures (1751); Overtures: Alfred; Thomas and Sally

🔑  Chan. 0722. Coll. Mus. 90, Standage

Thomas Arne, the composer of Rule Britannia, was a highly active composer of the theatre, in part due to his Catholic religion, which precluded him from posts in the church. He has a flair for writing simple, attractive melody, and his set of Eight Overtures, published in 1751, was an attempt to broaden his appeal through a series of publications. The invention is tuneful and elegant; though cosmopolitan in style, they have a certain 18th-century English pastoral spirit which is very pleasing. The two theatre overtures make for equally enjoyable listening, with the Scottish Gavotte of Thomas and Sally adding a dash of 'local' colour. Very stylish and alert playing from Simon Standage and Collegium Musicum 90, and the sound is vivid and full.

STAGE WORKS

Artaxerxes (complete)

 Hyp. CDA 67051/2. Robson, Bott, Partridge, Spence, Edgar-Wilson, Hyde, Parley of Instruments, Goodman

This sparkling, lively performance impressively explains why Arne's opera was such a success when it was first produced at Covent Garden. Catherine Bott gives a masterly performance, with the counter-tenor Christopher Robson also impressive in the castrato title-role, and with Ian Partridge pure-toned and incisive in the role of the villain, Artabanes, even if his sweet tenor hardly conveys evil. With the mezzo-soprano Patricia Spence taking the castrato role of Arbaces, the others are first rate too. On two very well-filled CDs, the set owes much of its success to the inspired direction of Roy Goodman.

ARNELL, Richard (1917–2009)

(i) Piano Concerto, Op. 44. Symphony 2

🔑 Ⓜ  Dutton CDLX 7184. RSNO, Yates; (i) with Norris

Arnell enjoyed a successful and productive career both in the United States and for some years after his return to England. Both concerto and symphony are rewarding and ambitious pieces, over 30 minutes each, and full of that sense of onward movement which defines the genuine symphonist.

Concerto Lirico for Violin and Orchestra; Violin Concerto in One Movement, Op. 9

Ⓝ Ⓜ  Dutton CDLX 7221. McAslan, RSNO, Yates – CREITH: Violin Concerto in G min ; PITFIELD: Concerto Lirico **

Arnell's Violin Concerto of 1940 is the most 'challenging' in this highly attractive collection of rare British Violin Concertos. Written in one movement, with clearly defined sections, Lewis Foremen (in his excellent sleeve note) accurately describes the soloists's outpourings as 'bittersweet'. There is plenty of contrast between lively and broody writing and if it doesn't possess the 'feel-good' factor of its companion pieces (it perhaps reflects the time it was written, at the beginning of WWII), it makes a very satisfying listening experience. Excellent performance and recording.

Lord Byron – a symphonic portrait, Op. 67

Ⓜ  Dutton CDLX 7195. RSNO, Yates – DUNHILL: Symphony **(*)

Richard Arnell's six-movement portrait of Byron was commissioned by Sir Thomas Beecham, who had championed and recorded the ballet, Punch and the Fool, which he premièred at the Festival Hall with the RPO in 1952. It is an eventful score and full of dramatic incident and character, and well worth searching out. Very good playing from the Scottish Orchestra and a vivid, well-balanced recording.

Symphonies 1, Op. 31; 6, Op. 171 (The Anvil); Sinfonia quasi variazioni, Op. 13

Ⓝ Ⓜ  Dutton CDLX7127. RSNO, Yates

Dutton's championship of Richard Arnell is a cause for celebration. The First Symphony (1943) comes from his productive American period and was premièred in New York by Beecham, who also programmed the earlier Sinfonia quasi variaziozoni of 1941. The Symphony is an inventive resourceful piece which should by rights have been a popular repertoire work. Half a century separates it from the Sixth (1994), a concentrated and powerful utterance whose anvil is probably best tamed by nervous listeners. It is all thoroughly compelling stuff, expertly played and recorded.

Symphony 3, Op. 40; The New Age, Overture, Op. 2

Ⓜ  Dutton CDLX 7161. RSNO, Yates

The Third Symphony has a lot going for it: a real sense of momentum strong musical ideas and an impressive mastery of the orchestra. Despite its length and the occasional moment of bombast, it holds the listener with its natural exuberance and life-affirming qualities. The Scottish orchestra plays with enthusiasm and is vividly recorded.

Symphonies 4, Op. 52; 5, Op. 77

Ⓜ  Dutton CDLX 7194. RSNO, Yates

The concentrated Fourth and the more expansive Fifth (the latter centrally combining slow movement and Scherzo) are both further examples of Arnell's symphonic skill, and the slow movement of the Fourth in particular is expressive and full of passionate feeling. Splendidly committed and very well-played Scottish performances, directed with real communicative zeal by Martin Yates, and with vivid recording in Glasgow's somewhat intractable Henry Wood Hall.

Cello Suite; Music for Harp, Op. 72a; Piano Trio, Op. 47; String Quintet, Op. 60; Trio for Flute, Cello & Piano, Op. 168

🔑 Ⓜ  Dutton CDLX 7122. Locrian Ens. (members)

The powerful Piano Trio of 1946 Arnell himself called 'the most compelling of my chamber works', while the compact two-movement Trio for Flute, Cello and Piano of 1991 is more quirky in its argument and the Music for Harp of 1961 brings another unusual line-up of instruments. In many ways the tautest of the works here is the four-movement String Quintet of 1950, with three relatively brief movements leading to a multi-sectioned Fantasia. The Locrian performances throughout are most sympathetic.

ARNOLD, Malcolm (1921–2006)

'Toward the Unknown Region': Malcolm Arnold – A Story of Survival

 Isolde Films DVD ISO 001. Includes performances from Bream, Galway, Lloyd Webber, RTE NSO/Houlihan (V/D: Tony Palmer)

Tony Palmer adds to his store of deeply revelatory profiles of composers this moving portrait of Malcolm Arnold at 80. With most of Arnold's own contributions drawn from interviews given earlier in his life, the film follows his career from boyhood in Northampton, through his time as principal trumpet in the LPO – 'it inspired me to compose myself' – and on to his work, writing film music, with the nine symphonies used as cornerstones, plus contributions from such artists as Julian Bream, James Galway and Julian Lloyd Webber, for whom he has written works. The film, originally shown in two parts on Melvyn Bragg's South Bank Show, is here given in its full form with over half an hour of important extra material.

Anniversary Overture; Beckus the Dandipratt (Comedy Overture), Op. 5; The Fair Field, Op. 110; A Flourish for Orchestra, Op. 112; A Grand Grand Festival Overture, Op. 57; Peterloo Overture, Op. 97; Robert Kett Overture, Op. 41; The Smoke, Op. 21; A Sussex Overture, Op. 31; Tam O'Shanter Overture, Op. 51

🔑 * Chan. 10293. BBC PO, Gamba

Beckus the Dandipratt came first in 1943, a characterization hailed as a cross between Till and Scapino, but possibly more of an uninhibited self-portrait. Tam O'Shanter is another flamboyant portrayal, with a spectacular orchestral realization of bagpipes at its witty climax. A Grand Grand Festival Overture came a year later. The scoring included four vacuum cleaners and a floor polisher. On the night they were despatched by the rifles of a firing squad! But this is far more than an occasional piece, not least because it has a really good tune. The noisily dramatic Peterloo also has one. But then so have all the other works here. They are marvellously played, with a truly Arnoldian infectious exhilaration, and the Chandos recording is spectacularly worthy, thrillingly in the demonstration bracket.

Beckus the Dandipratt Overture; (i–ii) Concerto for Piano Duet & Strings, Op. 32; Double Piano Concerto (3 hands); (i) Fantasy on a Theme of John Field, Op. 116

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.570531. Ulster O, Heikkilä, with (i) Dyson, (ii) K. Sargent

The longest of the concertante works is the Fantasy on a theme of one of John Field's Nocturnes. This is in effect a set of variations, which for the most part are dark; but, as a totally contrasted conclusion, the piece ends with a Rachmaninov-like passages of lyricism. The Concerto for Piano Duet and Strings brings busy and brilliant passagework for the soloists in the first movement, a still and intense Passacaglia slow movement and a relentlessly high-spirited finale. The Concerto for Two Pianos (3 hands) portrays a generally lighter side of the composer, ending with a delightful rumba, full of cross-rhythms. Phillip Dyson and Kevin Sargent are brilliant and alert piano soloists, with the young Finnish conductor Esa Heikkilä drawing dazzling playing from the Ulster Orchestra, vividly recorded, not least in Beckus.

Beckus the Dandipratt Overture; Flourish for a 21st Birthday; The Inn of the Sixth Happiness: Suite; Philharmonic Concerto; Symphony 6

🔑 Ⓜ  LPO 0013. LPO, Handley

The Sixth Symphony and the Philharmonic Concerto express more darkly personal, more introverted feelings, the symphony, written in Cornwall in 1967, enigmatic and troubled, and the rondo finale, for all its surface exuberance, never quite shaking off the work's disconsolate atmosphere. The Philharmonic Concerto, written in 1976 for the orchestra's USA tour in the bicentenary year, celebrates the American War of Independence without glory, with an elegiac central Andantino (very beautifully played here) leading to an energetic Chacony finale. But it is the suite from the film score for The Inn of the Sixth Happiness that shows his rich melodic inspiration, while in the Happy Ending finale we meet Arnold's infectious wit in his interpolation of the folksong This old man with its bouncing 'paddiwack' rhythm. These live performances are very committed indeed, and Handley's skill in sustaining atmosphere and holding elusive structures together is heard at its finest. Excellently balanced sound.

Clarinet Concertos 1–2; Divertimento for Flute, Oboe & Clarinet, Op. 37; Fantasy for B flat Clarinet, Op. 87; Sonatina, Op. 29; 3 Shanties for Wind Quintet

 ASV CDDCA 922. Johnson, Martin, Kelly, Briggs, Cohen, Martineau; ECO, Bolton

Clarinet Concertos 1, Op. 20; 2, Op. 115; Scherzetto

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55060. King, ECO, Wordsworth – BRITTEN: Clarinet Concerto Movement; MACONCHY: Concertinos ***

With the characterful Emma Johnson as the central figure in all six works, this makes a delightful collection of what is labelled as Arnold's 'Complete Works for Clarinet'. Above all, these performances bring out the fun in Arnold's music, his bluff sense of humour set alongside a vein of warm lyricism matched by few of his contemporaries.

Thea King's collection makes an exceptionally attractive disc, beautifully recorded and superbly performed. The Scherzetto is a delightfully jaunty piece adapted by Christopher Palmer from Arnold's music for the film You Know What Sailors Are.

(i; ii) Double Piano Concerto (three hands); (iii) English Dances 3 & 5; Symphonies (iv) 1; (v) 2, (i) 5. Overtures: (v) Beckus the Dandipratt; (i) Peterloo; (iii) Tam O'Shanter

🔑 ✿ (M) * EMI (mono/stereo) 382146-2 (2). (i) CBSO; (ii) Sellick, Smith; (iii) Philh. O; (iv) Bournemouth SO; (v) RPO; all cond. composer

Sir Malcolm Arnold was the most persuasive conductor of his own works, finding an emotional depth and intensity rarely matched by even his finest interpreters. Listen to the glorious melody which opens the slow movement of the Symphony 5, arguably his finest, and the warmth and natural expressiveness have one gulping; similarly with the pianissimo reprise of the melody in the closing pages of the finale, before the downbeat fades away. That is just one of the treasures in this superb compilation, which brings together all the recordings Arnold made for EMI, as well as a great rarity, the vivid account of his Symphony 2, which he recorded with the vintage RPO in 1955 for Philips. No Arnold collection captures his special magic quite so compellingly as this.

Guitar Concerto; Serenade for Guitar & Strings

 Chan. 9963. Ogden, N. Sinf., Hickox – BERKELEY: Guitar Concerto; WALTON: 5 Bagatelles ***

Craig Ogden is a consummate soloist in the concerto and he is beautifully recorded. The charming, lyrical Serenade for Guitar and Strings which comes as supplement was written by Arnold a couple of years earlier. An excellent alternative to Julian Bream's recordings, especially if the Berkeley and Walton couplings are preferred.

Horn Concerto 2, Op. 58

🔑  Lyrita SRCD 316. Pyatt, LPO, Braithwaite – BOWEN; GIBBS; JACOB: Horn Concertos; VINTER: Hunter's Moon ***

Like so many works for this instrument, Arnold's masterly Second Concerto was written for Dennis Brain (in 1956). Although its bravura is demanding, its core is lyrical. David Pyatt naturally takes on Brain's mantle and gives a superbly effortless performance, catching the work's many mood changes; and he is admirably accompanied by Braithwaite and the LPO. Exuberant.

4 Cornish Dances, Op. 91; 8 English Dances, Set 1, Op. 27; Set 2, Op. 33; 4 Irish Dances, Op. 126; 4 Scottish Dances, Op. 59; 4 Welsh Dances, Op. 138

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.553526. Queensland SO, Penny

The advantage this Naxos disc enjoys – to say nothing of its price – is the inclusion of the four Welsh Dances, the last to be written and closer in mood to the Cornish and Irish Dances than to the cheerful ebullience of the masterly English Dances of 1950–1. These performances have the composer's imprimatur (he was present at the recording sessions) and can be cordially recommended. The Naxos sound might be thought a shade over-resonant, but it does not lack brilliance.

Film music, Vol. 1

🔑  Chan. 9100. LSO, Hickox

Malcolm Arnold wrote over 100 film scores, and it was the music for The Bridge on the River Kwai which (as the composer has acknowledged) put his name before the wider public. All this music is superbly played by Hickox and the LSO (who obviously relish the often virtuoso instrumental scoring), and the recording is as lavish as anyone could wish – very much in the Chandos demonstration bracket.

Film music, Vol. 2

 Chan. 9851. BBC PO, Gamba, with (i) Dyson; (ii) Bradbury

In Vol. 2 the suite arranged by Philip Lane from David Copperfield opens with a typical melodic sweep, followed by a whimsical moto perpetuo representing the Micawbers. The Overture from The Roots of Heaven has a lilting waltz tune and The Belles of St Trinian's (the composer's favourite film) an audacious sparkle. Arnold's jaunty samba from The Captain's Paradise, in which Alec Guinness starred in the bigamous title-role, makes a splendid finale. Rumon Gamba and the excellent BBC Philharmonic provide plenty of infectious zest and a sometimes bitter-sweet lyricism, and the recording is of top Chandos quality. If you enjoy film music, it doesn't come any better than this.

Sinfonietta 1, Op. 9

🔑  Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 257. LSO Braithwaite – LENNOX BERKELEY; BRITTEN: Sinfoniettas; RAWSTHORNE; TIPPETT: Divertimentos ***

In his time the Sinfonietta was one of Malcolm Arnold's most popular and frequently heard works. Now it is hardly ever played. Yet, its textures are clean and the melodic invention is fertile and gracefully written for the instruments. Lively playing from the LSO, fine recording and first-rate couplings make this disc very desirable.

Symphonies 1–9

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.505178 (5). Nat. SO of Ireland, Penny (with conversation between composer and conductor)

Andrew Penny's complete set of the Arnold Symphonies is a very considerable achievement. The five discs are reviewed separately below, but are here gathered together with admirable documentation, including a biography of the composer. Self-recommending.

Symphonies 1, Op. 22; 2, Op. 40

 Chan. 9335. LSO, Hickox

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.553406. Nat. SO of Ireland, Penny

Richard Hickox takes naturally to the Malcolm Arnold idiom and he is particularly impressive in the two slow movements, which are full of atmosphere, vividly coloured and strongly felt and the LSO response is powerful and thoroughly committed throughout.

Andrew Penny in his Naxos version matches Hickox closely, but the National Orchestra of Ireland cannot command the richness of sonority of the LSO, and in the poignant Lento of the Second, with its plangent funeral march, Hickox's more spacious tempo is profoundly moving. Yet the slow movement of the Second Symphony communicates strongly in the Dublin performance. The Naxos recording is excellent, but the Chandos is in the demonstration bracket.

Symphonies 3, Op. 63; 4, Op. 71

 Chan. 9290. LSO, Hickox

(BB)  Naxos 8.553739. Nat. SO of Ireland, Penny

Arnold's Third Symphony is notable for the long, expressively austere string-melody in the opening movement and the desolation of its Lento slow movement, both played with great expressive intensity under Richard Hickox. The first movement of the Fourth Symphony is dominated by one of those entirely winning, Arnoldian lyrical tunes, even though there is jagged dissonance in the central episode. Hickox has the work's full measure, and the Chandos recording is superb, full of colour and atmosphere.

Andrew Penny and his Dublin orchestra also give finely played and spontaneous performances that can readily stand alongside the full-price competition, and this Naxos record understandably has the composer's imprimatur. The recording, if not as rich as the Chandos, is of high quality.

Symphonies 5, Op. 74; 6, Op. 95

 Chan. 9385. LSO, Hickox

(BB)  Naxos 8.552000. Nat. SO of Ireland, Penny

Arnold's Fifth Symphony is a consciously elegiac work, written in memory of friends who died young and the first movement brings moments of valedictory evocation in Hickox's hands. The disconsolate Sixth Symphony is a good deal less comfortable than the Fifth, but Hickox handles the powerfully menacing climax of the Lento quite superbly, which then suddenly evaporates with the arrival of the joyous, syncopated brass fanfares of the rondo finale. In both symphonies the committed response of the LSO, together with the richly expansive Chandos recording, increases the weight and power of the readings.

Andrew Penny draws fine, concentrated playing from the National Symphony Orchestra of Ireland, with brass and percussion in particular brilliantly caught. As a bargain version this wins the highest recommendation.

Symphonies 7, Op. 113; 8, Op. 124

(BB)  Naxos 8.552001. Irish Nat. SO, Penny

Andrew Penny and the Irish National Symphony Orchestra crown their fine cycle of the nine Arnold symphonies for Naxos with these two most troubled and challenging works, reflecting the darkest period of the composer's life. The darkness is relieved by the wealth of thematic material, demonstrating the vitality of the composer's imagination through his worst trials.

Symphony 9, Op. 128

(BB)  Naxos 8.553540. Nat. SO of Ireland, Penny

This superb first Naxos recording confirms the Ninth Symphony as a fitting culmination to Arnold's symphonic series. The baldness of the arguments, with two-part writing the general rule, consistently speaks in a true Arnoldian accent, culminating in the long slow finale, almost as long as the other three movements together, registering a mood of tragedy and disillusion. As to Penny's performance, this is not just concentrated and consistently committed but warmly resonant, with the Dublin strings sounding glorious and the woodwind and brass consistently brilliant.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Complete Music for Brass: Brass Quintets 1–2; Fanfare for Louis; Fantasy for Horn; Fantasy for Trombone; Fantasy for B flat Trumpet; Fantasy for Tuba; Little Suites 1–3; Symphony for Brass, Op. 123

🔑 * Nim. NI 5804. Fine Arts Brass, Roberts

Arnold was an admirer of the Fine Arts Brass Ensemble and composed the Second Brass Quintet especially for them. His writing for brass has enormous flair and his ready melodic felicity (and wit) illuminates every piece. While the Symphony is the major work here, the First Brass Quintet of 1961, with its central Chaconne, and the three Little Suites consistently show the quality of his invention, as do the solo Fantasies. The performances here are superb, wonderfully proficient and spontaneous, and the richly blended, sonorous recording is very much in the demonstration bracket.

Divertimento, Op 35; Dream City; Duo; Divertimento, Op. 135; Fantasia, Op. 87; Fantasy; Grand Fantasy; Hobson's Choice: Overture and Shoe Ballet; Suite Bourgeoise; 3 Shanties, Op. 4; Wind Quintet, Op. 2; You Know What Sailors Are: Scherzetto

(BB)  Naxos 8 570294. East Winds

Sir Malcolm Arnold has always been an enthusiastic composer of wind music. East Winds, made up of talented young wind-players, here give brilliant performances which consistently bring out the wit of the writing.

String Quartets 1, Op. 23; 2, Op. 118; Phantasy for String Quartet (Vita Abundans)

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.557762. Maggini Qt

Sir Malcolm Arnold's two String Quartets date from very different periods in his career, one early, written in 1949, the other later, written in 1975 at a period when his life had fallen apart and he was suffering serious tensions. The Maggini Quartet here add to their superb series of British quartets for Naxos with a disc that makes one marvel that these fine works are not far better known. Even in the very early Phantasy, which comes as a very welcome bonus, a piece written when he was still in his teens, he was using the medium with a confidence and originality which rightly won him a prize in the Cobbett competition, for which it was entered in 1941.

PIANO MUSIC

Piano Sonata in B min.; 2 Pieces: Prelude; Romance; Variations on a Ukrainian Folksong

 Somm SOMMCD 062. Bebbington – LAMBERT: Piano Sonata, etc. ***

Arnold's very considerable Piano Sonata has a first movement of serious purpose, plus characteristic moments of quirkiness, but he lets his hair down just a little in the closing Alla marcia. The Two Pieces (a birthday present for the composer's mother) are modest in scale but gently memorable, both serene and quite lovely; the Ukrainian Variations (on a rather endearing theme) explore the more percussive possibilities of the keyboard, but with plenty of lyrical contrast. Mark Bebbington is splendidly at home in this music (as he is in the equally rewarding Lambert couplings) and the recording is very real and present.

ARRIAGA, Juan (1806–26)

Symphony in D; Overture: Los esclavos felices

 Hyp. CDA 66800. SCO, Mackerras – VOŘÍŠEK: Symphony in D ***

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.557207. Algarve O, Álvaro Cassuto – (with Concert of music by CARVALHO; MOREIRA; PORTUGAL; SEIXAS **(*))

The Overture is a real charmer, almost Schubertian, but also very much in the style of Rossini, complete with crescendo. The Symphony could scarcely be played with more character than it is under Mackerras, and the somewhat resonant but very well-balanced Hyperion recording does not cloud detail. Highly recommended.

The Naxos performances, recorded in Faro, convey the sunny high spirits of the pieces and also bring four other rarities that few readers are unlikely to know. Good playing and recording.

String Quartets 1 in D min.; 2 in A; 3 in E flat

🔑  HM HMI 1987038. Cuerteto Casals

(BB)  Naxos 8.557628. Camerata Boccherini

 MDG 603 0236-2. Voces Qt

Arriaga died when he was only nineteen, and these quartets were published when he was 17 and have an astonishing assurance and miraculous purity of invention. They are within the tradition of the Mozart quartets and Beethoven's Op. 18, but they also have a Schubertian feel to them.

These new performances by the Cuerteto Casals, recorded in 2003, use modern instruments, yet they show a background understanding of period-instrument practice without creating abrasiveness or linear distortion. Their ensemble is impeccable and their group personality striking. Excellent, truthfully balanced recording.

The Camerata Boccherini are also thoroughly in sympathy with these delightful quartets and they play them on original instruments with vivacity, but never losing their elegance or expressive warmth. This version is thoroughly recommendable in its own right, especially at Naxos price.

The Romanian Voces Quartet is also completely at home in this engaging music and gives warmly refined, polished performances of all three works, full of elegance and spirit. The recording is warm and naturally balanced in an attractively warm acoustic.

AUBER, Daniel (1782–1871)

OPERA

Fra Diavolo (complete; in Italian)

(*) Fonit 3984 27266-2 (2). Serra, Dupuy, Raffanti, Portella, Cambridge University Chamber Ch., Martina Franca Festival O, Zedda

Alberto Zedda in this live festival performance offers the first recording of the Italian version, with all the material preserved and with accompanied recitatives by Auber in place of dialogue. The result is dramatically more convincing. In the title-role Dano Raffanti characterizes well, using a ringing tenor with flair and only occasional coarseness, relishing the challenge of the big arias. Luciana Serra has a touch of acid at the top of the voice, but this is a bright, agile soprano who brings out the charm in the role of the country-girl, Zerlina. Nelson Portella and Martine Dupuy, clear and firm, are well contrasted as the English Milord and Lady Pamela. An Italian libretto is provided but no translation.

La Muette de Portici

Ⓑ  EMI 5 75257-2 (2). Kraus, Anderson, Aler, Lafont, Munier, Jean Laforge Choral Ens., Monte Carlo PO, Fulton

Auber's opera was notorious for sparking off a rebellion in Brussels that led to Belgium's separation from the oppressive Dutch. The writing has several striking melodic ideas, lively ensembles and choruses (some anticipating Gilbert and Sullivan) and a magnificent aria for the hero. Strongly cast and vigorously conducted by Thomas Fulton, it makes an attractive set, with lively, theatrical sound, even though it lacks a little in richness. No texts are provided, but the set is inexpensive.

AURIC, Georges (1899–1983)

L'Eventail de Jeanne (complete ballet, including music by Delannoy, Ferroud, Ibert, Milhaud, Poulenc, Ravel, Roland-Manuel, Roussel, Florent Schmitt). Les Mariés de la Tour Eiffel (complete ballet, including music by Honegger, Milhaud, Poulenc, Tailleferre)

✿ Ⓜ  Chan. 10290. Philh. O, Simon

A carefree spirit and captivating wit run through both these composite works; in fact these pieces are full of imagination and fun. Geoffrey Simon and the Philharmonia Orchestra give a very good account of themselves and the Chandos recording is little short of spectacular. This unique recording is even more welcome at mid-price.

Film scores

🔑  Chan. 8774. BBC PO, Gamba

It is remarkable that a French composer should have provided the film scores for some of the most famous Ealing comedies, so British in every other respect. But Auric's delicacy of orchestral touch and his feeling for atmosphere (together with his easy melodic gift) made him a perfect choice after his first flamboyant venture with Rank's Caesar and Cleopatra. From the witty railway music of The Titfield Thunderbolt and the distinct menace of Dead of Night, Auric moved easily to the buoyantly spirited Passport to Pimlico. But it was Moulin Rouge that gave Auric his popular hit, with a charming Parisian waltz song (delicately sung here by Mary Carewe) that was understandably to be a remarkable commercial success. Most of the excerpts are short vignettes but they make enjoyable listening when so well played and recorded.

La Belle et la Bête (complete film score)

(BB)  Naxos 8.557707. Axios Ch., Moscow SO, Adriano

Auric's style was always distinctive and unfailingly inventive. Many consider his score to Cocteau's La Belle et la Bête (1945) his finest achievement; indeed its 60 minutes are full of colour and clever invention, with the large orchestra (with chorus) used with great imagination throughout.

AVISON, Charles (1709–70)

12 Concerti grossi after Geminiani's Violin Sonatas, Op. 1

🔑 Ⓜ * Divine Art dda 21210 (2). Avison Ens., Beznosiuk

Geminiani's Violin Sonatas show him at his finest and consistently inspired. Avison arranged only eleven of the twelve sonatas, so Pavlo Beznosiuk has himself completed the set. The period-instrument performances by the excellent Avison Ensemble are full of life and richly expressive, yet always freshly stylish. The recording is first class.

12 Concertos, Op. 6

(BB)  Naxos 8.557553/54. Avison Ens., Beznosiuk

Avison's ability to pattern his works on the music of others stood him in good stead throughout his career. While he was a fine musical craftsman, his own creative powers seem to be more limited. His concertos are skilfully fashioned, have plenty of vitality and show perceptive use of dynamic contrast; but the music itself, finely wrought as it is, displays no special melodic individuality or any unconventional features. Played as vibrantly and freshly as it is here, on period instruments by this expert ensemble from Avison's own city, and led by the excellent violinist Pavlo Beznosiuk, one cannot help but respond to the vitality of the writing, even if these concertos are not in the same league as the similar works of Corelli or Handel.

12 Concerti grossi after Scarlatti

Ⓝ Ⓜ  divine art dda 1213 (2) Avison Ens., Beznosiuk

(*) Alpha 031. Café Zimmermann (3, 5–6, 9, 11 & 12)

(*) Hyp. Dyad CDD 22060 (2). Brandenburg Cons., Goodman

Pavlo Beznosiuk and the Avison Ensemble offer thoroughly recommendable versions of these expert transcriptions of popular Scarlatti sonatas. These are performances of style and flair and also score with the warmth of the recorded sound to make a first choice for these attractive works.

The period instrument group Café Zimmermann, with Pablo Valetti expertly leading the concertino, play with great energy and zest, and in slow movements with delicacy of lyrical feeling. These performances are distinctly preferable to those from Roy Goodman and, by not offering a complete set, are placed on a single disc. Even so, the fairly close balance brings a certain 'scratchiness' on tuttis, which is not altogether mitigated by the basically warm ambience.

Roy Goodman's version has plenty of vitality. Fast movements fizz spiritedly, but the linear style of the slower movements, though not lacking expressive feeling, is altogether less smooth, and these performances are essentially for those who are totally converted to the authentic movement. The recording is excellent.

6 Sonatas for 2 Violins & a Bass, Op. 1; 6 Sonatas for Harpsichord with Accompaniments for 2 Violins and a Cello, Op. 8

Ⓝ Ⓜ * divine art dda 21214 (2) Avison Ens. (members)

Here is a double example of Charles Avison's instrumental enterprise and diversity of invention, both very appealing indeed. The Corelli-inspired Trio Sonatas de chiesa are, all but one, based in the minor key. They usually open with a stately slow movement, then comes a vibrant fugal section, followed by another lyrical movement, before the lively finale. The featured organ continuo adds warm sonority to the textures and Nos. 1 and 4 stand out by their use of the Dorian mode. The Harpsichord Sonatas are different again, very like miniature concertos with the keyboard instrument dominating, and the writing often boldly rhythmic – catchily so. They are innovative and most entertaining, especially when played with such infectious vitality. In both sets the music could not be more persuasively played and the recording is very real and present.

BACH, Carl Philipp Emanuel
(1714–88)

Cello Concertos: in A min., Wq.170; in B flat, Wq.171; in A, Wq.172

🔑 ✿  BIS CD 807. Suzuki, Bach Coll., Japan

🔑 (BB)  Virgin 2x1 5 61794-2 (2). (with Hamburg Sinfonias, Wq.183/¼; Sinfonia in B min., Wq.182/5) OAE, Leonhardt; with Bylsma

(i) Cello Concerto in A, Wq.172. Hamburg Sinfonias, Wq.181/1 & 4; Wq.183/1–4

🔑  HM HMU 807 403. E. Concert, Manze; (i) with McGillivray

Hidemi Suzuki creates a dashing flow of energy in the orchestral ritornellos of outer movements, and the Bach Collegium play with great zest and commitment. In slow movements Suzuki's eloquent phrasing, warmth of feeling and breadth of tone are totally compelling, a cello line of heart-stopping intensity. The recording is splendid.

Bylsma's expressive intensity communicates strongly without ever taking the music outside its boundaries of sensibility, and these artists convey their commitment to this music persuasively. The Hamburg Sinfonias (for woodwind and strings) are striking works, notable for their refreshing originality. Gustav Leonhardt's account of this second set is the one to have if you want them on period instruments.

Alison McGillivray's nimble account of the Cello Concerto makes a fine centrepiece for the programme, and although her tone is a little dry the sombre eloquence of the Largo is affectingly caught. But it is the collection of Hamburg Sinfonias from Andrew Manze and the English Concert which is special here. It is the most stimulating in the catalogue.

(i) Flute Concertos: in D min., Wq.22; in A min., Wq.166; in B flat, Wq.167; in A, Wq.168; in G, Wq.169. Sonata for Solo Flute, Wq.132

🔑 ✿ (BB)  Naxos 8.555715/6. Gallois; (i) Toronto Camerata, Mallon

Patrick Gallois is a masterly flautist, and he gives a superb set of performances of these fine concertos written for the court of Frederick the Great and arranged by the composer from works originally featuring the harpsichord as soloist. There is much sparkling vivacity in the allegros, and the expressive range of the slow movements, sometimes quite dark in feeling, is fully captured by both soloist and the excellent Toronto Camerata under Kevin Mallon.

Harpsichord Concertos 1–3 (BIS CD 707); 4, 7 & 12 (BIS CD 708); 5 & 35; 2 Sonatinas (BIS CD 868); 6, 8 & 18 (BIS CD 767); 9, 13 & 17 (BIS CD 768); 11, 14 & 19 (BIS CD 785); 15, 25 & 32 (BIS CD 786); 20 & 38; Sonatina (BIS CD 1127); 16 & 36; Sonatina (BIS CD 914); 21 & 27; Sonatina (BIS CD 1587); 22; 2 Sonatinas (BIS CD 1307); 23 & 39; Pieces; Sonatina; 2 Sonatas (BIS CD 1422); 24, 28 & 29 (BIS CD 857); 26 & 40; Sonatina (BIS CD 187); 30, 33 & 34 (BIS CD 867)

(*) BIS (as above). Spányi (harpsichord, fortepiano, or tangent piano)

Miklós Spányi is now more than halfway in his ongoing survey of Bach's 52 harpsichord concertos, and they are generally more successful than his accounts of the sonatas in having greater spontaneity and animation, and often a degree of elegance and delicacy in slow movements. The earlier works use a period-instrument string group (6211) which is probably larger than the ensemble the composer would have expected, and the resonance of the recording militates against a really intimate effect in the tuttis of outer movements, although slow movements make an effective contrast. The later concertos and the more modest concertante keyboard sonatinas (the latter designed to be suitable for amateur as well as professional performance) include wind instruments.

Harpsichord Concertos: in E, Wq.14; in G, Wq.43

🔑 Ⓜ  CRD (ADD) 3311. Pinnock, E. Concert – J. C. BACH (arr. MOZART): Harpsichord Concerto ***

The E major Harpsichord Concerto is one of the most ambitious that C. P. E. Bach left us. Trevor Pinnock and his English Concert (using original instruments) give admirable performances, nicely balancing the claims of modern ears and total authenticity. First-rate recording and a fascinating coupling.

Berlin Sinfonias: in C; in F, Wq.174/5; in E min.; in E flat, Wq.178/9; in F, Wq.181

 Cap. 10 103. C. P. E. Bach CO, Haenchen

The playing of Haenchen's excellent C. P. E. Bach group is alert and vigorous, with airy textures and attractively sprung rhythms. Modern instruments are used in the best possible way. Excellent sound.

6 Hamburg Sinfonias, Wq.182/1–6

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553285. Capella Istropolitana, Benda

🔑 Ⓜ  DG 4775000. E. Concert, Pinnock

The six Hamburg String Sinfonias are particularly striking in their unexpected twists of imagination, and they contain some of his most inspired and original ideas. Using modern instruments at higher modern pitch, Benda directs light, well-sprung accounts, with extra light and shade. The excellent sound is full and open, as well as immediate.

The performing style of the English Concert concentrates on a concern for 18th-century poise and elegance. This disc in its LP format won the Gramophone Early Music Award in 1980, and the excellent recording sounds splendidly fresh and clear in its remastered format.

4 Hamburg Sinfonias, Wq.183/1–4

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.553289. Salzburg CO, Lee – W. F. BACH: Sinfonia in F **(*)

The Naxos Salzburg versions are freshly played, the results spick and span, with polished playing from strings and woodwind alike. Obviously Yoon K. Lee knows about period-performance styles and, though modern instruments are used here, textures are clear and clean.

CHAMBER AND INSTRUMENTAL MUSIC

Duo for 2 Clarinets (Adagio & Allegro), H.636; 6 Sonatas for Pianoforte, Clarinet & Bassoon, H.516–21; Flute Sonatas (for flute and harpsichord): in E, H.506; in C, H.573; Oboe Sonata (for oboe & continuo) in G min., H.549; Pastorale for Oboe, Bassoon & Continuo

Ⓜ  CPO 999 508-2. Fiati con Tasto, Cologne

This delightfully diverse cross-section of Carl Philipp Emanuel's chamber music for wind instruments could hardly be bettered as a source of exploration. The use of period instruments is expert, and the felicitous interplay at times anticipates Mozart. The recording is very natural and gives a vivid projection to one and all.

11 Flute Sonatas (for flute & continuo), Wq.123–31; 133–4; Sonata for Solo Flute in A min., Wq.132

 MDG L 3284/5 (2). Hünteler, Bylsma, Ogg

There is nothing watery about the coolly beautiful timbre that Hünteler achieves on his transverse flute, and he proves a masterly exponent of this rewarding repertoire and obviously enjoys an excellent rapport with his continuo partners, Anner Bylsma and Jacques Ogg. The MDG recording is exemplary.

Quartet in D for Flute, Viola, Cello & Fortepiano, Wq.94; Solo Flute Sonata in A min., Wq.132; Sonata in G min. for Viola da gamba & Harpsichord, Wq.88: Larghetto. Trio Sonatas: in C for Flute, Violin & Continuo, Wq.147; in C min. for 2 Violins & Continuo (Sanguineus & Melancholicus), Wq.161

🔑 ✿  Channel CCS 11197. Florilegium

A wholly delightful collection. Ashley Solomon's exquisite flute-playing dominates the D major Quartet, and the balance with Neal Peres da Costa's delicate fortepiano is quite perfect, registering subtle nuances of dynamic contrast before Bach's highly imaginative dialogue between Sanguine and Melancholy brings quixotic changes of mood and tempo. The recording balance could hardly be bettered.

Sinfonia a tre voci in D; 12 Variations on 'La Folia', Wq.118/9; Trio Sonatas: in B flat, Wq.158; in C min. (Sanguineus & Melancholicus), Wq.161/1; Viola da gamba Sonata in D, Wq.137

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55232. Purcell Qt

The Variations on 'La Folia' are fresh and inventive, particularly in Robert Woolley's hands, but the remaining pieces are hardly less rewarding. The Hyperion recording is well balanced, faithful and present.

KEYBOARD MUSIC

Alla Polacca, Wq.116/8; Fantasia in G min., Wq.117/13; 2 Menuets, Wq.116/5 & 7; Romance with 12 Variations in G, Wq.118/6; 3 Sonatas, Wq.65/43, 44 & 46

Ⓝ  BIS CD 1492 Miklós Spányi (tangent piano)

Miklós Spányi is recording all C.P.E. Bach's keyboard music for BIS, and we have discussed his many previous issues in earlier volumes with mixed feelings, because of his sometimes eccentric rhythmic twists in the melodic lines. His recent issue of the 6 Württemberg Sonatas, Wq.49 (BIS 1423/4) is dramatically impressive and has been generally well received, although our reservations remain. But this latest collection, played on a characterful tangent piano can be welcomed with enthusiasm, and not least because the selection includes a splendidly inventive set of variations, besides three of his most impressive sonatas. The recording is excellent.

Keyboard Sonatas: in F sharp min., Wq.52/4; in E min., Wq.59/1; in D, Wq.61/2; in G, Wq.62/19; in G min., Wq.65/17; in C min., Wq.65/31; Andante contenerezza; Rondos: in A, Wq.58/1; in C min., Wq.59/4; in D min., Wq.61/4

🔑 ✿ * DG 459 614-2. Pletnev

Altogether remarkable playing, even by Pletnev's exalted standards. He finds both the wit and depth of this music, and the resource of keyboard colour and refinement of articulation are pretty awesome. And what interesting music it is! He receives very natural recorded sound from the DG team.

Keyboard Sonatas: in B flat, Wq.62/16; in G, Wq.65/22; in E min., Wq.65/30; in A, Wq.65/37; in G, Wq.65/48; in A, Wq.70/1; Rondo in E flat, Wq.61/1

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553640. Chaplin (piano)

François Chaplin plays these works freshly and confidently on the modern piano. The result demonstrates how forward-looking these sonatas are, especially the appealingly expressive slow movements of the later works. The closing Rondo of 1786 is particularly successful in using the piano's fuller sonority.

VOCAL MUSIC

Cantatas for Pastor Joh Jacobs Schäffer, H. 821; Pastor Joh Christoph Froderoci. Choruses: Amen! Lob und Preis und Stärke; Leite mich nach deinem Willen; Mein Heiland, meine Zuversicht

 CPO 777 108-2. Himlische Cantorey, Les Amis de Philippe, Rémy

Much of the lively and often striking invention we know from C. P. E. Bach's orchestral music is to be found in these occasional festive pieces, written for a variety of reasons. The two large cantatas (written in 1775 and 1785 respectively) contain some splendid arias, and the Choruses are all enjoyable, with the orchestra (using plenty of timpani) always colourful and effective. The recordings and performances are vivid and fresh, the CPO booklet copious. Texts and translations provided.

Easter Cantata, Wq.243; (Christmas Cantata), Wq.249; Heilig, Wq.217; Klopstocks Morgengesang am Schöpfungsfeste, Wq.239

 Cap. 10 208. Schlick, Lins, Prégardien, Elliott, Varcoe, Schwarz, Rheinische Kantorei, Kleine Konzert, Max

Klopstocks Morgengesang am Schöpfungsfeste ('Klopstock's morning song on the celebration of creation') is a work of many beauties and is well performed by these artists. Anbetung dem Erbarmer ('Worship of the merciful') is another late work, full of modulatory surprises. Auf schicke dich recht feierlich ('Up, be reconciled') and Heilig ('Holy') (1779) are Christmas works. A record of unusual interest, very well performed and naturally recorded.

Die Auferstehung und Himmelfahrt Jesu (The Resurrection and Ascension of Jesus)

(*) EuroArts DVD 2054039. Karthäuser, Hardt, Christoph & Stephan Genz, Ex Tempore, La Petite Bande, Kuijken – J. S. BACH: Cantata 11 (Ascension) ***

 Hyp. CDA 67364. Schwabe, Christoph Genz, Stephan Genz, Ex Tempore, La Petite Bande, Kuijken

Carl Philipp Emanuel Bach wrote three superb oratorios, of which this is the last and, as he thought himself, the finest, given a masterly performance here under Sigiswald Kuijken. All three of the soloists sing with clear, fresh tone, the tenor of Christoph Genz nicely related to the baritone of Stephan Genz, while the choir, Ex Tempore, brings bite and clarity to the dramatic choruses, with each half ending on an elaborate fugue. Although the timpanist makes a dramatically visual contribution to the tenor recitative, Judda zittert!, for the most part this is a more lyrical, less dramatic account than the earlier, Hyperion recording, which has greater range and bite. The cameraman explores the church as well as offering every angle of the performers, including a bird's-eye-distance shot. However, this is still musically very enjoyable, and the coupling of Johann Sebastian's Ascension Cantata is superbly done.

BACH, Johann Christian (1735–82)

Bassoon Concerto in B flat and E flat; Flute Concerto in D & G; Oboe Concerto 1–2 in F

 CPO 999 346 & 999 347. Ward, Brown, Robson, Hanover Band, Halstead

These early concertos had an obvious influence on Mozart's wind concertos, and if you enjoy the Mozart works you will surely enjoy these by J. C. Bach. The six concertos are played with much felicity by Jeremy Ward, Rachel Brown and Anthony Robson respectively, and Halstead's accompaniments are a model of elegance. The recording is full and natural. Most enjoyable.

Harpsichord or Clavier Concertos (complete)

Ⓑ  CPO 999 930-2 (6). Halstead, Hanover Band

Bach's early Berlin concertos (from the 1750s) in these splendid performances from Anthony Halstead, directing the Hanover Band from the keyboard, are appealingly fluent, full of flair and vitality. Slow movements are deeply expressive and outer movements bustle vigorously. Halstead has recorded Op. 7 in chamber form with just an accompanying string trio. His solo playing is very persuasive and the result is delightfully intimate. Bach's Op. 13 appeared in 1777 and shows him still developing in ideas and orchestration. Op. 14 is more ambitious, although it may have been written earlier. Halstead uses a Broadwood pianoforte and accompanies himself brightly and gracefully.

Harpsichord Concerto in D (arr. by Mozart as K.107/1)

Ⓜ  CRD (ADD) 3311. Pinnock, E. Concert – C. P. E. BACH: Harpsichord Concertos ***

It seemed more sensible to list this work here as it tends to get lost in the Mozartian discography. In the early 1770s the teenage Mozart turned three sonatas by J. C. Bach into keyboard concertos, adding accompaniments and ritornellos as well as cadenzas. The first of the group makes an excellent coupling for the two fine C. P. E. Bach concertos.

Sinfonias concertantes (complete); Cadenza in C for Oboe, Violin, Viola & Orchestra; Fortepiano Concerto in G

(*) CPO 777 292-2 (6). Hanover Band, Halstead

Johann Christian Bach might well be regarded as the true father of the sinfonia concertante, for (among others, including Karl Stamitz) he wrote over a dozen of them for various solo instruments, and they are of a consistently higher musical quality than those of most of his contemporaries. Throughout, the performances have warmth and proper finish and refinement; the balance and recording are excellent and the effect is undoubtedly authentic.

Complete Sinfonias

6 Sinfonias, Op. 3; 6 Sinfonias, Op. 6; 3 Sinfonias, Op. 8; Sinfonias: in C (Venier 46) (2 versions); in F (manuscript); Sinfonias, Op. 9/1–2 (standard and original versions); Op. 9/3; Sinfonia in E flat with Clarinets; 6 Sinfonias, Op. 18

(M)  CPO 999 896 (5). Hanover Band, Halstead

J. C. Bach's sinfonias shared the same three-part format as the Italian opera overture, and at that time the descriptive titles were interchangeable. Indeed, as we shall discover in Opp. 9 and 18, Bach borrowed overtures from his own operas to include in his published sets. The works were initially intended for his London concerts and this is the first complete coverage on period instruments, and very impressive it is.

Sinfonias, Op. 9/1–4; Sinfonia concertante in A for Violin & Cello; Sinfonia concertante in E flat, for 2 Violins, Oboe & Orchestra

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.553085. Camerata Budapest, Gmür

This disc is of interest, not so much for the symphonies as for the two Sinfonias concertantes, which are beautifully played, with stylish and appealing contributions from the soloists, all drawn from the orchestra. The solo writing in the A major Sinfonia concertante is quite elaborate, and in the Andante of the E flat work there is a surprise when the two solo violins introduce Gluck's Che farò senza Euridice, which is then taken up by the oboe. The second of the Op. 9 symphonies has a real lollipop Andante con sordini, presented over a pizzicato accompaniment. The balance is excellent.

6 Sinfonias (Grand Overtures), Op. 18

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.553367. Failoni O, Gmür

Hanspeter Gmür and the Failoni Orchestra give warm and graceful accounts of Op. 18. The spirited allegros are slightly cushioned by the resonance, but slow movements are phrased very musically (particularly the lovely, almost Handelian melody of Op. 18/2, which also has a fine oboe solo from Laszló Párkányi).

CHAMBER MUSIC

6 Symphonies for Wind Sextet (1782)

 MDG 301 0434-2. Consortium Classicum

There is already a recommended recording of these Symphonies for Wind Sextet, by the London Wind Soloists under Jack Brymer (Testament (ADD) SBT 1345). But good though that is, this new set from the Consortium Classicum, equally well played and beautifully recorded, has more warmth and charm, and a certain bucolic flavour from the horns, that make it even more enjoyable. A clear first choice, though not to be played all the way through at a single sitting.

KEYBOARD MUSIC

Solo Keyboard Music

Harpsichord Sonatas: in E & C min., Op. 5/5–6; in C min.; E flat & A, Op. 17/2–3 & 5

(M)  CRD (ADD) 3453. Black (harpsichord)

Virginia Black plays a modern copy of a Goujon harpsichord, c. 1740, and she is beautifully recorded, the sound clear and robust, with the instrument given a vivid presence (yet not aggressively close) against a warm backgound ambience. A most attractive disc.

6 Keyboard Sonatas, Op. 17

(BB)  Naxos 8.570361. Nosè (piano)

Johann Christian's Op. 17 Keyboard Sonatas date from the 1770s. They are most engaging works in two or three movements and obviously they had a profound influence on the young Mozart. They are played very stylishly on a modern piano by Alberto Nosè, and are very well recorded.

VOCAL MUSIC

(i) Laudate pueri Dominum (Vesper psalm); (ii) Salve regina (antiphon); (iii) Si nocte tenebrosa (motet)

 CPO 999 718-2. (i) Kirkby; (ii) Schäfer; Orfeo Bar. O, Gaigg

Johann Christian's church music was all composed to Latin texts. The lyrical melodic flow has an unmistakable operatic feel to its line and the Laudate pueri Dominum is very reminiscent of Mozart in the opera house. Emma Kirkby sings the extended Salve regina very beautifully, and she navigates brilliantly the sparkling bravura of the second section, Ad te clamatus, before the melting Ad te suspiramus. The solo motet, Si nocte tenebrosa, is splendidly caught by the pleasing tenor voice of Markus Schäfer. Michi Gaigg's accompaniments are stylish and very well played, and the recording is first class.

BACH, Johann Sebastian

(1685–1750)

The Art of Fugue, BWV 1080

(*) Naïve OP30191. Concerto Italiano, Alessandrini

The Art of Fugue; A Musical Offering, BWV 1079

(B)  Ph. (ADD) Duo 442 556-2 (2). ASMF, Marriner

(B) (*) Double Decca (ADD) 467 267-2 (2). Stuttgart CO, Münchinger

Sir Neville Marriner in the edition he prepared with Andrew Davis has varied the textures most intelligently, giving a fair proportion of the fugues and canons to keyboard instruments, organ as well as harpsichord, and the 1974 recording is admairably refined. Similarly, in the Musical Offering Marriner uses his own edition and instrumentation: strings with three solo violins, solo viola and a solo cello; flute, organ and harpsichord. The performances here are of high quality, though some of the playing is a trifle bland.

Rinaldo Alessandrini's approach to The Art of Fugue is to seek out its underlying expressive and colouristic possibilities. So, after opening with strings, he scores each of the contrapuncti for different groups of wind and/or stringed instruments, allotting only the four canons to the harpsichord. The result has distinctive aural appeal. Alessandrini's solution may not be conventional but the playing (on baroque instruments) is full of life and easy to enjoy. The recording is clear, within a pleasing ambience.

Münchinger's Stuttgart performance allots the fugues to the strings and the canons to the solo woodwind, varied with solo strings. After the incomplete quadruple fugue, Münchinger rounds off the work with the chorale prelude, Wenn wir in höchsten Nöten sein, BWV 668a, in principle quite wrong but moving in practice. The Musical Offering, although somewhat more relaxed, also brings playing of genuine breadth and eloquence. The recordings were made a decade apart (in the mid-1960s and 1970s) but are of vintage quality, with warmth and excellent presence and detail.

Brandenburg Concertos 1–6, BWV 1046–51 (DVD versions)

🔑 ❀ Ⓜ * EuroArts Invitation DVD 2050316. Freiburg Bar. O, von der Göltz

Ⓝ () Medici Arts DVD 2056738. O Mozart, Giuliano Carmignola, Abbado

It is remarkable that so early in the DVD era we should have such an outstanding set of period-instrument performances of the Brandenburgs, appropriately recorded at Castle Cöthen. The castle's Spiegesaal has been magnificently restored and makes a visually entrancing backcloth for the recordings. The spacious room seems also to have an ideal acoustic for a chamber group.

The Freiburgers play their period instruments with great finesse and warmth. Inner detail is clear, there is no edginess on the strings or linear distortions in the expressively played slow movements. The choice of tempi seems near ideal and Gottfried von der Göltz, who directs proceedings almost impassively but with obvious commitment, plays with an easy virtuosity which is engrossing to watch.

Abbado himself assembled the Orchestra Mozart in 2004, but their DVD debut is very disappointing. They play against the splendid backcloth of the Teatro Municipale Romolo, Reggio Emilia, and the performance is musically sensitive and strikingly polished. Yet Abbado hardly moves a finger and the effect is curiously dull and inert. Excellent recording, but this is a non-starter.

Brandenburg Concertos 1–6, BWV 1046–51 (CD versions)

🔑 * Avie AV 2119 (2). European Brandenburg Ens., Pinnock

🔑 * Naïve OP 30412 (2). Concerto Italiano, Alessandrini (with Sinfonia from Cantata, BWV 174, and DVD by Phillippe Béziat on the making of the recording)

🔑 Ⓜ  Warner Elatus 2564 61773-2 (2). Il Giardino Armonico, Antonini

🔑 DG  471 720-2 (1–3, with Oboe d'amore Concerto, BWV 1055; Double Concerto for Violin & Harpsichord, BWV 1060); 474 220-2 (4–6, with Triple Concerto, BWV 1044). E. Concert, Pinnock

🔑 Ⓑ  Hyp. Dyad CDD 22001 (2). Brandenburg Consort, Goodman

The arrival on Avie of a completely new recording from Trevor Pinnock suggests that there can be no question of a clear first choice for the Brandenburgs, although for DVD collectors the glorious Freiburg Baroque Orchestra version on Euro Arts is unsurpassed and perhaps unsurpassable. But on CD the splendid period-instrument versions by Alessandrini's Concerto Italiano and Il Giardino Armonico are particularly stimulating, standing alongside the pioneering versions of Pinnock and Goodman.

However, Pinnock has rethought his whole approach in 'revisiting' this ever renewable music, and on his latest Avie recording, although using an authentic ensemble, he is 'eager to cut through any narrow perceptions of period style'. He all but turns back the clock in the approach to tempo and manners with the European Brandenburgers in inviting players from different countries and different generations 'to join my new voyage of discovery'. The ensemble (using up to 16 musicians), with Pinnock leading from the harpsichord, convened in December 2006 to celebrate his sixtieth birthday. The recording, with a glowing ambience, is full and remarkably real and transparent.

Alessandrini and his Concerto Italiano seldom disappoint. Tempi throughout seem unerringly right and the solo playing on period instruments is rich in baroque colour. The strings are bright and resilient without abrasiveness and the recording, made in March 2005 in the Rome Palazzo Farnese, has a most attractive ambience. A DVD on the making of the recording is included as a bonus, including interesting information about the music and the early instruments involved.

The exhilarating set from the Milanese period-instrument group, Il Giardino Armonico, directed by Giovanni Antonini, is also among the finest. Tempi seem perfectly judged, buoyantly brisk but never exaggeratedly so. The playing is alive and joyful; slow movements have expressive warmth and serenity. The wind and brass soloists are first rate, the recorder, flute and oboe sounds are equally characterful, and the strings are bright and clean and without edge; the recording is both warm and freshly transparent so that one can hear the harpsichord coming through quite naturally. A splendid achievement.

Pinnock's Brandenburgs from the beginning of the 1980s represent the peak of his early achievement as an advocate of authentic performance, with sounds that are clear and refreshing but not too abrasive. Soloists are outstanding, and they are equally persuasive in the concertante works transcribed from better-known originals.

However, Roy Goodman's excellent Hyperion set of the Brandenburgs is on a Dyad, with two discs offered for the price of one. The stylish, lively playing is another attractive example of authenticity, lacking something in polish but none in spirit, with the last three concertos especially fresh. Characterization is strong, and slow movements are often appealingly expressive. Tempi of outer movements are very brisk but often bring the lightest rhythmic touch. Very good sound.

Brandenburg Concertos 1–6; (i) Flute Concerto in G min. (Keyboard Concerto in G min., BWV 1056, arr. Réty). Musical Offering, BWV 1079: Trio Sonata in C min.

Ⓑⓑ  Naxos 8.557755/6 (2). Swiss Baroque Soloists, Gabetta; (i) with Réty

The virtuoso players of the Swiss Baroque Soloists, founded and directed by the Argentinian violinist, Andres Gabetta, fearlessly tackle even the most challenging passages, with the recording admirably clear on detail in such movements as the opening of the Fifth Concerto with the harpsichordist Giorgio Paranuzzi articulating clearly in the virtuoso cadenza. In the Sixth Concerto the violas are admirably tuned, with the performance of the slow movement establishing it as one of Bach's most beautiful.

(i) Brandenburg Concertos 1–6; (ii) Violin Concertos 1–2; Double Violin Concerto; Double Concerto for Violin & Oboe; (iii) Goldberg Variations; (iv) Organ masterpieces, including Toccata & Fugue in D min.

🔑 Ⓑ  Decca (ADD/DDD) 475 8058 (5). (i) ASMF, Marriner; (ii) Grumiaux; Krebbers; Holliger & O; (iii) Schiff (piano); (iv) Carlo Curley

The first of a Decca composer series, 'Ultimate Bach' is highly recommendable, offering as it does Marriner's splendid 1980 set of the Brandenburgs, and Grumiaux's indispensable recordings of the Violin Concertos, alongside András Schiff's admirable Goldberg Variations (all praised above and below). Carlo Curley's flamboyant performances of key organ works, played on a magnificent Philadelphia organ, make an arresting bonus. In his account of a chorale from Cantata 219, 'Awake thou wintry earth', even the dead surely could not remain asleep!

Brandenburg Concertos 1–6; Orchestral Suites 1–4

Ⓝ Ⓜ () EMI mono 2 12699-2 (3) Busch Chamber Players, Adolf Busch

The Busch performances come from 1935/6 and now re-emerge on CD among EMI's Great Recordings of the Century and serve as a reminder that these 'inauthentic' years have something to teach us. For all the period limitations, string portamenti, sweet-toned vibrato, piano continuo and so on, these readings have a radiance and a joy in music-making that completely transcend their sonic limitations, which are remarkably few, given the provenance. There is a naturalness of musical expression, never more telling than in Marcel Moyse's contribution to the B minor Suite, and a richness of feeling on the part of all concerned that make this a special document.

Brandenburg Concertos 1–6; (i) Violin Concerto in E, BWV 1042; (i;ii) Double Violin Concerto in D min., BWV 1043

Ⓝ Ⓑⓑ (*) EMI Gemini 2 17617-2 (2) (i) Menuhin; (ii) Ferras; Bath Fest. O, Menuhin

Menuhin's 1959 set of the Brandenburgs still sound well: the recording is not always absolutely refined, but has not lost its bloom. These are modern instrument performances, but rarely have the rhythms been sprung more joyfully, and tempi are uncontroversially apt. The soloists are outstanding and there is a spontaneity here that is consistently satisfying. The Violin concertos were made the following year. Menuhin's solo playing gives much pleasure, with its balance of humanity and classical sympathy. Ferras matches his timbre to Menuhin's perfectly in the Double Concerto. However here the accompaniments fall slightly short, with outer movements not as rhythmically resilient as in the Brandenburgs.

Complete solo and multiple concertos

(i) Harpsichord Concertos 1 in D min.; 2 in E; 3 in D; 4 in A; 5 in F min.; 6 in F; 7 in G min., BWV 1052–8; (ii) Double Harpsichord Concertos: 1 in C min.; 2 in C; 3 in C min., BWV 1060–2; (i–iii) Triple Harpsichord Concertos 1 in D min.; 2 in C, BWV 1063–4; (i–iv) Quadruple Harpsichord Concerto in A min., BWV 1065; (i; v–vi) Triple Concerto for Flute, Violin & Harpsichord, BWV 1044; (vi–vii) Double Concerto for Oboe & Violin in C min., BWV 1060; (vii) Oboe d'amore Concerto in A, BWV 1055; (vi) Violin Concertos 1 in A min.; 2 in E; (vi; viii) Double Violin Concerto in D min., BWV 1041–3

🔑 Ⓑ  DG (ADD/DDD) 463 725-2 (5). E. Concert, Pinnock, with (i) Pinnock; (ii) Gilbert; (iii) Mortensen; (iv) Kraemer; (v) Beznosiuk; (vi) Standage; (vii) Reichenberg; (viii) Wilcock

Pinnock's performances of the Bach Harpsichord Concertos first appeared in 1981 and have dominated the catalogue ever since. In the solo concertos he plays with real panache, his scholarship tempered with excellent musicianship. Pacing is brisk but, to today's ears, used to period performances, the effect is convincing when the playing is so spontaneous, and the analogue sound is bright and clear.

The transcribed concertos for flute, violin and harpsichord, for oboe and violin, and for oboe d'amore are equally persuasive, both vigorous and warm, with consistently resilient rhythms, while the violin concertos are equally welcome. Rhythms are again crisp and lifted at nicely chosen speeds – not too fast for slow movements – and the solo playing here, led by Simon Standage, is very stylish.

Harpsichord Concertos 1–8, BWV 1052/1059

Ⓝ Ⓑ (*) Virgin 2x1 5 22001-2 (2) van Asperen, Melante Amsterdam

Bob van Asperen favours an accompaniment with one instrument to each part, basically using a string quartet, with a double bass added in BWV 1052, a pair of recorders in BWV 1057, and one has an intimate sense of chamber music-making. Van Asperen's solo contribution is consistently nimble and has an appealing graceful delicacy, and for the most part the accompaniments from the Melante Amsterdam are lightly etched in, even if sometimes in slow movements the bass seems a little heavy. However overall one feels a certain paleness about these performances, even if they have no lack of character or style. The recording balance is excellent.

Harpsichord Concertos 1–7

 HM HMU 907283-84 (2). With Triple Concerto for Flute, Violin & Harpsichord, Egarr; (i) with Brown, Manze; AAM, cond. Manze

The performances from Richard Egarr with the Academy of Ancient Music are more intimate, the authentic harpsichord image quite small. But what makes these performances so memorable are the slow movements, which often have a poignant expressive dolour which is very affecting. There is an improvisational quality here in both the solo playing and accompaniments which is very distinctive.

Harpsichord Concertos 1, BWV 1052; 2, BWV 1053; 4, BWV 1055; 5, BWV 1056

Ⓝ  Decca O/L 475 9355 Dantone, Accademia Bizantina

Ottavio Dantone is a stylish soloist, but the textures created by his accompanying string group, with one instrument to a part, are at times even more meagre than those offered by Melante Amsterdam for van Asperen. The Accademia Bizantina play with vigour and sensibility, and the balance with the small harpsichord is well managed, but this disc is essentially for purists.

Harpsichord Concertos 1, BWV 1052; 4, BWV 1055; 5, BWV 1056; & 7, BWV1058

Ⓝ  Virgin 213064-2 Fray, Deutsche CO, Bremen

David Fray plays nimbly and sensitively (his account of the Adagio from the F minor Concerto is memorable). The accompanying string group of 21 players from Bremen, which he directs from the keyboard, provides accompaniments which are vigorous and refined, and the effect is pleasingly transparent while not lacking warmth and body. Most enjoyable.

Clavier Concertos 1–7

🔑 ❀ * Sony 696998924529 (1, 2 & 4); 69698969025 (3, 5–7). Perahia, ASMF

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.550422 (1–3); 8.550423 (4–7). Chang (piano), Camerata Cassovia, Stankovsky

Clavier Concertos 1–7; Brandenburg Concerto 5; (i) Triple Concerto in A min., BWV 1044

🔑  Hyp. CDA 67307 (Concertos 1 & 7; Brandenburg & Triple Concerto); CDA 67308 (Concertos 2–6). Hewitt (piano), Australian CO, Tognetti; (i) with A. Mitchell

Murray Perahia's set of the Bach solo keyboard concertos sweeps the board. The performances are totally pianistic, with Perahia's lightness of rhythmic touch in allegros and deliciously crisp ornamentation communicating an exhilarating yet intimate sense of joy. Slow movements are warmly expressive, helped by the elegant fullness of the Academy strings. Beautifully balanced recording too. In short, the effect here is to put aside any consideration of period 'authenticity' and instead give this wonderfully life-enhancing music an ageless universality.

Hae-won Chang is a highly sympathetic Bach exponent, playing flexibly yet with strong rhythmic feeling, decorating nimbly and not fussily. Robert Stankovsky directs freshly resilient accompaniments; and both artists understand the need for a subtle gradation of light and shade. The digital recording, made in the House of Arts, Košice, is first class, with the piano balanced not too far forward. A fine superbargain alternative.

Angela Hewitt provides refreshingly lightweight performances, both texturally and in their style. Her playing is nimble, crisply articulated and small-scale, and she is perfectly balanced with the accompanying group. It was appropriate to include also the Fifth Brandenburg Concerto, and here the affetuoso marking for the slow movement is also applied to the central Adagio of the Triple Concerto (marked dolce) which brings a precise delicacy of articulation which is just as engaging. Throughout, the recording is most natural.

(i) Clavier Concerto 1 D min., BWV1052. Partita 2 for violin, BWV 1004: Chaconne (arr. Busoni.); Partita 3 for Violin, BWV 1006: Prelude in E (arr. Rachmaninov). Preludes and fugues from the Well-tempered Clavier: Book 1: 2 & 4; Book 2: 6, 9 & 20 Prelude & Fugue in A minor, BVW 543 (arr. Liszt)

Ⓝ  DG 477 7978 Hélène Grimaud with (i) Die Deutsche Kammerphilharmonie, Bremen

Hélène Grimaud possesses a fine technique and above all a keen musical intelligence. Her playing compels the listener and gives consistent pleasure. The DG recording has naturalness and presence: we were puzzled to see the orchestral sound in the concerto described as claustrophobic by one critic, though the texture could do with greater transparency.

Oboe Concerto in F (after BWV 1053); Oboe d'amore Concerto in A (after BWV 1055)

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55269. Goodwin, King's Consort, King – TELEMANN: Oboe Concerto in D min.; Oboe d'amore Concerto in G ()

Paul Goodwin's performances are delightful and he is most ably accompanied by the King's Consort. The Hyperion recording too is first class; so if you want a single budget disc combining concertos of Bach and Telemann, this will serve admirably.

Oboe Concertos: in F (after BWV 1053); in C (after BWV 1055); in G min. (after BWV 1056 & BWV 156)

(BB)  EMI Gemini (ADD) 3 50905-2 (2). De Vries, I Solisti di Zagreb – TELEMANN; VIVALDI: Oboe Concertos ***

All three of Bach's memorable slow movements are played very beautifully by Han de Vries; indeed, the Siciliano of BWV 1053 is exquisite, and is made to sound as if written for the oboe. I Solisti di Zagreb provide most stylish accompaniments, and the recording is excellent (with the soloist fairly well forward). Altogether a delectable bargain anthology.

Oboe d'amore Concertos: in D, BWV 1053; in A, BWV 1055; Oboe Concertos: in G min., BWV 1056; in D min., BWV 1059; Double Concerto in C min. for Oboe & Violin, BWV 1060

(BB) * Naxos 8.554602. Hommel, Cologne CO, Müller-Brühl

Christian Hommel's outstanding performances of concertos for oboe and oboe d'amore, all of them reconstructions of other works, are lively and sensitive; the recording, with the soloist balanced well in front, is excellent. A most enjoyable disc.

Concerto for Oboe d'amore in A, BWV 1055; Double Concerto for Oboe & Violin, BWV 1060; Triple Concerto for Flute, Violin & Harpsichord, BWV 1044

Ⓝ Ⓜ (*) DG 477 7429 Beznosiuk, Standage, Reichenberg, Pinnock, E. Concert

These reissued recordings date from 1984. The soloists use baroque instruments and there is a suitable matching harpsichord timbre. All the artists play with genuine warmth and plenty of vitality too. Tempi are well judged and there is no want of style. However there would easily have been room for a fourth concerto.

(i) Violin Concertos 1–2; (ii) Double Violin Concerto, BWV 1041–3; (iii) Double Concerto for Violin and Oboe, BWV 1060

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * Ph. (ADD) 420 700-2. Grumiaux, with (ii) Krebbers, (iii) Holliger; (i–ii) Les Solistes Romandes, Gerecz; (iii) New Philh. O, de Waart

Ⓑ  Nim. NI 1735 (3). Shumsky, Scottish CO; with (ii) Tunnell; (iii) Miller – MOZART: Concertos 4 & 5; YSAŸE: Sonatas ***

Ⓝ  Decca 478 0650 Julia Fischer, ASMF, with (i) Sitkovetsky; (ii) Rubtsov

Arthur Grumiaux is joined in the Double Concerto by Hermann Krebbers. The result is an outstanding success. The way Grumiaux responds to the challenge of working with another great artist comes over equally clearly in the concerto with oboe, reconstructed from the Double Harpsichord Concerto in C minor. Grumiaux's performances of the two solo concertos are equally satisfying.

One has only to sample the simple beauty of Shumsky's playing in the Andante of the A minor Violin Concerto to be won over to his dedicated Bach style, which is not quite as pure as Grumiaux's but is seductive in its simplicity of line and tonal beauty. John Tunnell makes highly musical exchanges with him in the Double Violin Concerto, and Robin Miller is a no less appealing partner in the work for violin and oboe.

Julia Fischer's first recording, after her move to Decca, proves somewhat disappointing. She takes the solo lead impressively enough, and directs the Academy briskly. They play with characteristic finesse and style. As the soloist she is at her finest in her all-but ethereal account of the Adagio of the E major Concerto, but when she is joined by Alexander Sikovetsky in the slow movement of the Double Violin Concerto, the result is disappointingly unmemorable. The oboist, Andrey Rubtsov, too, could be more inspiring in the Adagio of BWV 1060.

(i) Violin Concertos 1–2; (ii) Double Violin Concerto; (iii) Orchestral Suite 4

Ⓑ (*) DG 449 844-2. (i-ii) D. Oistrakh, RPO, Goossens; (ii) with I. Oistrakh; (iii) Munich Bach O, Richter

David Oistrakh's playing is peerless and can be ranked alongside the Grumiaux versions. In the Double Concerto father and son are suitably contrasted in timbre, and the performance of the great slow movement is Elysian. The 1961 recording hardly sounds dated. Richter's account of the Fourth Orchestral Suite is rhythmically unstylish in the matter of double-dotting but is otherwise alert – less heavy than we had remembered.

(i) Violin Concertos 1–2; (i; ii) Double Violin Concerto. (Unaccompanied) Violin Sonata 1

 Avie AV 0007. L. St John; (i) New York Bach Ens.; (ii) with S. St John

Lara St John is a first-rate Bach violinist, her playing lithe and full of communicative intensity. Allegros are exhilaratingly fresh, favouring fleet tempi; indeed, some will feel that the outer movements of the Double Concerto are too brisk. Yet they set off the simplicity of approach to the beautiful slow movement in which Scott St John is an admirable partner. With buoyant, polished accompaniments, this collection is very enjoyable indeed, especially as the unaccompanied G minor Sonata is equally rewarding, and the recording throughout real and vivid.

(i–iii) Violin Concertos 1–2; (i; ii; iv) Double Violin Concerto

✿ Ⓜ () EMI mono 3 91963-2. Partita 2: Chaconne; (i) Menuhin; (ii) O Symphonique de Paris; (iii) cond. Enescu; (iv) with Enescu (violin), cond. Monteux

Ⓝ (BB) (*) Naxos mono 8.111288 Heifetz , LAPO, Wallenstein or RCA Victor CO, Waxman – MOZART: Violin Concerto 5 ()

Menuhin's 78-r.p.m. recording of the Double Concerto, with Georges Enescu his partner (and teacher) and Monteux conducting, is legendary for its rapport and simple expressive beauty. It was recorded in Paris in 1932, the same year that Menuhin recorded the Elgar in London. The two solo concertos – with Enescu on the rostrum – followed in 1933 and 1936. They are hardly less remarkable, with a wonderful purity of line and natural expressive feeling. The famous Partita is hardly less impressive (see below). In the concertos, the orchestral string-sound is dry, the violins unflattered, but this expert remastering for EMI by Andrew Walter makes the very most of the original 78s.

Heifetz, recorded in 1946, plays with wonderfully pure tone and Elysian phrasing (including the second violin part to the Double Concerto). He is well accompanied, especially by Waxman and Mark Obert-Thorn's transfers are remarkably clear and true. The Mozart coupling is pretty good too, and this disc is indispensable.

(i) Double Violin Concerto; (ii) (Unaccompanied) Cello Suite 1 in C: Bourrée I & II

(*) EMI DVD 490449-9. (i) D. Oistrakh, Y. Menuhin, RTF CO, Capdevielle; (ii) Rostropovich – MOZART: Sinfonia concertante; BRAHMS: Double Concerto **(*)

The Double Concerto in D minor was recorded at the Salle Pleyel in October 1958. The two great soloists first played this together at the 1947 'Prague Spring', and their Paris account affords an admirable opportunity for contrasting the golden tone of the one with the (on this occasion) seraphic playing of the other. Of course the sound calls for some tolerance, but this film is a rarity and is to be treasured. Rostropovich, playing with enormous intensity the Bourrées from the Third Suite for Solo Cello, recorded in December 1962, is a welcome bonus.

Double Violin Concerto in D min., BWV 1043

Ⓜ  RCA SACD (ADD) 88697 04605-2. Heifetz, Friedman, London New SO, Sargent – BRAHMS: Double Concerto; MOZART: Sinfonia concertante, K.364 ***

It is good to have Heifetz's 1961 stereo recording of the Double Concerto as a worthy successor to Menuhin's two versions. Sargent's tempi in the outer movements are brisk but are none the worse for that, and the Elysian dialogue of the slow movement, with Heifetz's pupil Erick Friedman a natural partner, is hardly less inspired and much better recorded. Indeed the new SACD transfer gives much greater body to the sound.

A Musical Offering, BWV 1079 – see also above, under Art of Fugue, and below under Chamber Music

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.553286. Capella Istropolitana, Benda

Christian Benda uses a small chamber orchestra. Strings alone, with a minimum of vibrato, play the framing Ricercars. The first group of canons add in flute, oboe and bassoon; in the second group, the stringed instruments predominate. A harpsichord joins in the first, and the cor anglais and bassoon dolorously share the last (common) solution of the four offered alternative proposals for solving Bach's so-called 'puzzle canon'. The recording is excellent, clear yet with a pleasing bloom, and the result, if a little didactic at times, is undoubtedly fresh.

Orchestral Suites 1–4, BWV 1066–9

🔑 * Telarc CD 80619. Boston Bar., Pearlman

🔑 * BIS SACD 1431 (Surround Sound/Compatible) (2). Japan Bach Coll., Suzuki

A splendid period-instrument recording of the Orchestral Suites from the excellent Boston Baroque under Martin Pearlman. All four fit on to a single CD, yet speeds are well judged and lively but not pressed too hard (with stylish flute-playing from Christopher Krueger) making a sprightly end to the programme. They are given first-class Telarc recording.

Like Pearlman in Boston before him, Suzuki alters the order of the Suites, only he elects to begin with the favourite Third Suite in D. The second (included at no extra cost) is reserved for the Fourth Suite. Above all, these are exhilarating performances, for some of Suzuki's tempi are very fast, especially in the allegros of the Overtures. But the famous Air of the Third Suite could not be more restrained and noble in feeling. The recording is spectacularly realistic, especially in surround sound, which adds attractively to the ambient effect and gives a remarkable feeling of presence.

Orchestral Suites 2-3; Sinfonias to Cantatas 12 & 31. Cantatas (i-iii) 45; (ii-vi) 67; (ii; v; vi) 101 (excerpts); (i-iii) 105; (ii-vi) 130

Ⓝ (*) Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD) 480 0027 (2) OSR, Ansermet with (i) Giebel; Partridge; (ii) Watts; (iii) Krause; (iv) Krenn; (v) Ameling; (vi) Choeur Pro Arte de Lausanne

Ansermet's surprisingly warm-hearted way with Bach, offers much to enjoy in this two-disc survey of his complete recordings of this repertoire for Decca. The richness of the strings in the orchestral suites does not swamp the contrapuntal writing, and the allegros of the Overtures of the Suites 2 & 3 are lively and well articulated. The playing is really rather good (André Pepin is the stylish soloist in the famous Badinerie of Suite No. 2). However, the cantatas are perhaps the best thing here, largely on account of the superb quality of the singers – Elly Ameling, Helen Watts, Werner Krenn, Tom Krause and Ian Partridge, to name some of them. The opening of BWV 130, Herr Gott, dich loben wir is lusty and has a real sense of purpose, and in the baritone aria (the superb Tom Krause) Der alte Drache brennt vor Neid, the vivid timpani and brass are very tellingly recorded. André Pepin makes another stylish appearance in this cantata. Cantatas Nos. 45, 67, 105 and excerpts from 101 are included (all music with much beauty), along with the Sinfonias to Nos. 12 & 31 (an especially bright, vigorous piece). The 1960s sound is beautifully warm and rich throughout and, as always in these Australian Eloquence releases, real care has been taken over the quality of the transfers.

CHAMBER & INSTRUMENTAL MUSIC

The Art of Fugue, BWV 1080

🔑  Hyp. CDA 67138. Delmé Qt

As the tessitura lies too low to perform The Art of Fugue in D minor, Simpson has transposed the whole sequence into G minor. Incidentally, he includes Tovey's completion of Contrapunctus XIV, although the listener can play it without the conjectural ending if preferred. The Delmé Quartet, who have recorded ten of Simpson's own quartets, play with great dedication. Excellent recording. This outclasses other string quartet versions.

(Unaccompanied) Cello Suites 1–6, BWV 1007–12 (DVD Versions)

🔑 ✿ * EMI DVD DVA 5 99159 9. Rostropovich

🔑 ✿  Arthaus DVD & CD 101419 (4). Wen-Sinn Yang (V/D: Ruth Käch)

Rostropovich was filmed recording the six Bach Cello Suites in 1991 in the Basilique Sainte-Madeleine, Vézelay, Yonne, France, a venue he chose for the comparative severity of its interior architecture, which, he felt, created the right backcloth for the music. He introduces the whole project by telling us about his own approach to the interpretation of these masterpieces, with which he has lived all his life. Of course, one can choose to hear the music without the commentaries. The performances hardly need recommendation from us: they are totally compelling and are truthfully recorded.

Like Rostropovich, the Burmese cellist Wen-Sinn Yang has carefully chosen the venue for his recording, in this case the intimate atmosphere of the small Romanesque Church of St Servatius, high up in the Bavarian Alps, and its warm acoustic proves perfect for his recording. Also like Rostropovich, Yang introduces and concludes each of the six Suites (in German, but with surtitles) with his own perceptive comments on Bach and his music, its performance, colouring and expressive feeling. These comments are of course optional, but in any case excellent CD recordings of all six works are included as a bonus for alternative performance to the visual versions. So one has the best of both worlds. Yang's performances are superb, obviously deeply felt and full of subtlety in their phrasing, both in their control of light and shade as well as in their bowing.

(Unaccompanied) Cello Suites 1–6, BWV 1007–12

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * EMI 5 18158-2 (2). Rostropovich

🔑 * Virgin 5 45650-2. Truls Mørk

🔑 * Hyp. CDA 67541/2 (2). Steven Isserlis (with alternative versions of Prelude from Suite 1 & The Song of the Birds)

Ⓝ Ⓑ  CfP 2 28358-2 (2) Tortelier

Rostropovich verbally characterizes each one of the series: 'No. 1, lightness; No. 2, sorrow and intensity; No. 3, brilliance; No. 4, majesty and opacity; No. 5, darkness; and No. 6, sunlight'. True to his word, more than usual he draws distinctions between each, also reflecting the point that the structure of each suite grows in complexity. The results are both moving and strong, with the sound of the cello, as recorded in a warm acoustic, full and powerful, making one hear the music afresh, with pianissimo repeats magically achieved.

Not only does the Norwegian cellist Truls Mørk possess a fine sense of line and a wonderfully rich and expressive tone, but he has imagination too, and a feeling for character. In short, fine fingers at the service of a fine mind. Readers will find these as musically satisfying as any rival accounts now before the public, and we are inclined to rank this newcomer second to none.

Like Rostropovich, Steven Isserlis characterizes each of the six Cello Suites very personally, although for him they are 'Mystery Suites' linked to the life of Jesus. He suggests his own subtitles: 1 (Joyful Mystery: The Nativity); 2 (Sorrowful Mystery: The Agony in the Garden); 3 (Glorious Mystery: The Descent of the Holy Spirit); 4 (Joyful Mystery: The Procession in the Temple); 5 (Sorrowful Mystery; The Crucifixion); 6 (Glorious Mystery: The Resurrection). Yet although the playing is permeated with deep inner feeling, there is no sense of overflowing intensity, simply a spontaneous flow of music: this is simply great cello playing. The recording is very real and natural and this set understandably won the 2007 Gramophone Instrumental Award.

Heinrich Schiff is straighter but no less concentrated in feeling. Strong and positive, producing a consistent flow of beautiful tone at whatever dynamic level, he here establishes his individual artistry very clearly, his rhythmic pointing a delight. He is treated to an excellent recording, with the cello given fine bloom against a warm but intimate acoustic. This is now an outstanding bargain as a double. (EMI Gemini 5 86534-2)

Playing on a Stradivarius cello of 1693, Maria Kliegel gives deeply satisfying performances of these formidable works. With her flawless intonation and well-judged choice of tempi, her intense concentration and direct approach have one enjoying the music without distraction from personal mannerism, with the dark intensity of the Sarabandes consistently brought out. She is beautifully recorded in Budapest. (Naxos 8 557280/81)

Fournier's richly phrased and warm-toned performances carry an impressive musical conviction. He can be profound and he can lift rhythms infectiously in dance movements, but above all he conveys the feeling that this is music to be enjoyed. This recording has been remastered splendidly and now has even greater presence and realism. (DG 477 6724)

Recorded in the reverberant acoustic of the Temple Church in London, Tortelier's 1983 performances present clear contrasts with his set of twenty years earlier. His approach remains broadly romantic, but this time the rhythms are steadier, the command greater, and the preludes of each suite strongly characterised to ensnare the attention even in simple chattering passagework. Some will prefer a drier acoustic than this, but the digital sound is very truthful.

Flute Sonatas 1–6, BWV 1030–5

🔑 (BB) * ASV Resonance CD RSN 3008. Bennett, Malcolm (harpsichord), M. Evans

Flute Sonatas 1–6; in G min., BWV 1020

* Glossa GCD 920807 (2). Sonata in C min. (from BWV 1079); Hazelzet, Ogg (harpsichord & fortepiano), ter Linden (cello)

Flute Sonatas 1–6; in G min.; Partita in A min., BWV 1013

Ⓜ  CRD (ADD) 3314/5 (2). Preston, Pinnock, Savall

Flute Sonatas 1–6, BWV 1030–5; in G min; Partita in A min., BWV 1013

Ⓝ * Nimbus NI 5829/30 Schmeiser, Müller, Rainer (with Partita in C minor, BWV 997)

William Bennett uses a modern flute, and in the first three sonatas he and George Malcolm manage without the nicety of using a viola da gamba in the continuo. In Sonatas Nos. 4–6 the two players are joined by Michael Evans, and the bass is subtly but tangibly reinforced and filled out, though the balance remains just as impressive. The playing, as might be expected of these artists, has superb character: it is strong in personality yet does not lack finesse. Bennett himself has made the reconstruction of the first movement of BWV 1032.

Hansgeorg Schmeiser plays the two solo Partitas with much felicity, and his flute dominates the six sonatas too, partly because the Nimbus recording is comparatively resonant. Even so the ensemble is well integrated and well balanced, yet with clear detail. The C minor Partita, BWV 997 is probably authentic and makes an additional bonus, so this excellent new set now goes to the top of the list of recommendations, even if the ASV Resonance disc still remains a tempting best buy.

William Hazelzet plays with a gentle authority and sensitivity and a delicacy of articulation that are altogether most persuasive. He uses two different period instruments, with a subtle difference of colour. Jacques Ogg, his sympathetic partner, uses a modern harpsichord based on models of Couchet, Blanchet and Taskin for the majority of the sonatas, but an attractively bright but shallow fortepiano after Silbermann for BWV 1031, 1035 and 1079. Jaap ter Linden adds the cello continuo on BWV 1021 and 1033–5. The balance is expertly judged and, with excellent documentation, this must now take pride of place among period performances of this repertoire.

Using an authentic one-key instrument, Stephen Preston plays with a rare delicacy. Throughout, the continuo playing, led by Trevor Pinnock, is of the highest standard and this is an excellent alternative mid-price choice. This set now comes handsomely repackaged in a box.

Music for lute-harpsichord

Suites 1–2, BWV 996; 7 Prelude, Fugue and Allegro in E flat, BWV 998; Prelude in C min., BWV 999; Fugue in G min., BWV 100; Sarabanda con partite, BWV 990; Suite in E, BWV 1006a (transcription of BWV 1006); Sonata in D min., BWV 964 (transcription of BWV 1003)

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8.570470/1 (2) Elizabeth Farr (Lauten Werk)

Bach's effects as listed in his posthumous estate included a pair of Lautenwerk (lute-harpsichords). But they were not saved and the instrument is now obsolete. We know that it had one, two or three keyboards, used gut strings plucked simultaneously by several jacks and quills, and reputedly possessed an uncannily effective lute stop. So the present single-manual instrument, ingeniously built by Keith Hill in Manchester, Michigan had to be reconstructed conjecturally from drawings. The result is very impressive, the sound rather like a large-scale harpsichord only with a distinct impression of sonorous plucking, with the warm acoustic giving the sound plenty of colour.

Elizabeth Farr has obviously achieved complete mastery of this instrument and all these works project impressively and have pleasing life and spontaneity. We know the Suites in their guitar versions, but the Sarabanda con partite is especially worth having. All the music is vintage Bach and this unusual and intriguing presentation can be cordially recommended.

Lute Suites (arranged for guitar) 1–4, BWV 995–7; 1006a

🔑 Ⓜ  Sony 696998 996427. Williams (guitar)

🔑 Ⓑ  Oehms OC 202. Fernández (guitar)

John Williams shows a natural response to Bach, and his performances of the four Lute Suites are among his finest records. The flair of his playing, with its rhythmic vitality and sense of colour, is always telling.

Eduardo Fernández now joins Williams in offering all four Lute Suites on a single disc – and very fine they are too. His flexible rubato in the Sarabandes has a thoughtful intensity that is very telling, yet he plays the livelier dances with spirit. His technique has an easy facility, and this is first-class Bach playing in every sense, while the recording cannot be faulted. A most enjoyable disc, and at budget price too.

Oboe Sonatas: in G min., BWV 1020 & BWV 1030b; in E flat, BWV 1031; in C, BWV 1033. (Organ) Trio Sonata in C, BWV 529; Well-Tempered Clavier Book II; Prelude & Fugue in C min., BWV 871

 Signum SIGCD 034. Hennessy, Parle (harpsichord)

Never mind that these works were not conceived by Bach with the oboe in mind; they sound quite delightful on Gail Hennessy's baroque instrument. Her tone is as pleasing as her playing is stylish; whether in the Siciliana of BWV 1031 or the searching Adagio of BWV 1033, she provides expressive playing of a high order. She has a fine partner in Nicholas Parle.

Viola da gamba Sonatas 1–3, BWV 1027–9

🔑 Ⓜ  Alia Vox AV 9812 (with Sonata in C, BWV 529). Savall, Koopman

(i) Viola da gamba Sonatas 1–3. Preludes & Fugues: in D, BWV 850; in G, BWV 860; in G min., BWV 861

 Signum SIGCD 024. (i) Crum (viola da gamba); Cummings (harpsichord)

Jordi Savall and Ton Koopman's new set completely supersedes their earlier performance on Virgin. There is a depth of expressive feeling here combined with an intimate rapport between the two players that gives an effect of eavesdropping on live music-making of the highest calibre. The recording is resonant but full, firm and cleanly focused. A clear first choice.

A fine alternative set comes from Alison Crum and Laurence Cummings. Here the harpsichord is very much in the picture, boldly played, with plenty of life and vigour, by Cummings. But Crum's firmly focused gamba is never eclipsed. Moreover, Cummings offers sparkling performances of three keyboard Preludes and Fugues as a bonus.

Viola da gamba Sonatas 1–3, BWV 1027–9 (cello versions)

 Orfeo C693071A. Müller-Schott (cello), Hewitt (piano) (with C. P. E. BACH: Viola da gamba Sonata, H.559 ***)

To play these sonatas on cello and piano is to create a wholly different sound-world. The result, as with Angela Hewitt's keyboard recordings of Bach, is very stimulating indeed. Many will be convinced by these splendidly alive performances, which bring the three sonatas vividly to life. But we still have a soft spot for Jordi Savall's fine versions of the original works. The C. P. E. Bach coupling makes a pleasing bonus.

Viola da gamba Sonatas 1–3 (arr. for Viola); Sonatas: in G min. (arr. from BWV 1020); in F (arr. from BWV 1022)

Ⓜ  Praga 350 016. Suk (viola), Ruičová (harpsichord)

Josef Suk follows the example of Lionel Tertis and Kim Kashkashian in recording Bach's Viola da gamba Sonatas very successfully on a period viola. His timbre has plenty of edge and character and, with his sympathetic partner, the result is very stimulating indeed, as it is in the transcriptions of BWV 1020 (originally for flute) and BWV 1022 (originally for the violin). Excellently balanced recording.

Violin Sonatas and Partitas

(Unaccompanied) Violin Sonatas 1–3, BWV 1001, 1003 & 1005; Violin Partitas 1–3, BWV 1002, 1004 & 1006

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * EMI 4 76808-2 [4 76811-2] (2). Perlman

🔑 Ⓜ * DG (ADD) 457 701-2 (2). Milstein

Ⓜ  Ph. (ADD) 438 736-2 (2) Grumiaux

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8.570277/8 Kaler

Ⓝ Ⓑ () IDIS mono 6535-36 Heifetz

Perlman's inspired survey, dating from 1986/7, has long been a top recommendation for the solo Sonatas and Partitas. Here he triumphantly demonstrates his insight in bringing out the deepest qualities of these six searching masterpieces, and this reissue is fully worthy of being included among EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century'.

Milstein's set from the mid-1970s remains among the most satisfying of all versions. Every phrase is beautifully shaped, there is a highly developed feeling for line, and these performances have an aristocratic poise and a classical finesse which are very satisfying.

Arthur Grumiaux's fine performances were recorded in Berlin in 1960/1. Now they return at mid-price and with the recording remastered. The venue offers a pleasingly warm background ambience against which the violin is forward, recorded in strong profile with complete realism, and with no microphonic exaggeration of the upper partials.

Ilya Kaler's Bach survey does not disappoint. His timbre is full, yet without romantic overtones, his sometimes dazzling virtuosity is put completely at Bach's service and his lyrical style is refreshingly free from idiosyncrasy, yet alive in every bar. The Chaconne of BWV 1004 is impressively structured, but the dance movements are also very appealing. The Naxos recording is remarkably live and real: he might be standing out there beyond the speakers.

Heifetz is in a class of his own and his compelling accounts of the solo Bach canon set standards that in terms of technical execution have never been surpassed. This is playing of consummate artistry and tremendous personality. We would not want to be without Grumiaux or Milstein in this repertoire but Heifetz is still immaculate.

Julia Fischer plays with immaculate purity and clarity, bringing out the separate strands in the Fugues of the sonatas, and never forcing her tone. Though her tone is refined rather than weighty, she plays the great Chaconne of the D minor Partita with power and concentration, with big contrasts between sections. Her set includes an additional DVD-compatible track, containing an artist interview and session impression. (Pentatone SACD PTC J 186 072)

Violin Sonatas (for violin & harpsichord) 1–6, BWV 1014–19

(BB)  Naxos 8.554614 (1–4); 8.554783 (5–6 & alternative movements for BWV 1019). Van Dael, Van Asperen

Ⓝ (*) Sony 8697112432 (2) Zimmermann, Pace (piano)

Violin Sonatas 1–6; BWV 1019a; Sonatas for Violin & Continuo, BWV 1020–24

🔑 ✿ Ⓑ * Ph. (ADD) Duo 454 011-2 (2). Grumiaux, Jaccottet, Mermoud (in BWV 1021 & 1023)

The Bach Sonatas for Violin and Harpsichord and for Violin and Continuo are marvellously played, with all the beauty of tone and line for which Grumiaux is renowned; they have great vitality, too. His admirable partner is Christiane Jaccottet, and in BWV 1021 and 1023 Philippe Mermoud (cello) joins the continuo. There is endless treasure to be discovered here, particularly when the music-making is so serenely communicative.

A fine new period-instrument version from Van Dael and Van Asperen on Naxos goes to the top of the list. It is beautifully played and recorded, and the violinist has a positive relationship with her distinguished keyboard partner. The set gives very great pleasure and satisfaction and includes four alternative movements for BWV 1019.

Zimmermann plays these sonatas beautifully. But he made a mistake in choosing a piano partnership (with Enrico Pace). Even though in many ways these works are enjoyable listening, and slow movements are pleasingly expressive using the modern instrument, the many keyboard running passages in outer movements make a far more convincing effect on the harpsichord.

KEYBOARD MUSIC

Bach Performances on the Piano by Angela Hewitt Including: Chromatic Fantasia & Fugue, BWV 903; Italian Concerto, BWV 971; Partita 4 in D, BWV 828

🔑 * Hyp. DVD DVDA 68001 (with Daniel Müller-Schott, cello) (Director: Uli Aumüller)

This is a self-recommending DVD in which Angela Hewitt first explains why she is drawn to play Bach on the modern piano and then gives an illustrated, all-embracing six-part lecture on Essentials (Phrasing; Singing Tone, etc.); Interpretation (Tempo, Dynamics, etc.); The Dance in Bach; Learning a Fugue; Ornamentation; and Practical Advice. She is then seen and heard playing the live recital above which is very rewarding in itself. The recorded quality is excellent and so is the camerawork, except for one repeated shot where she is reflected in the keyboard lid! She is a communicative artist and this comes over impressively on this DVD.

The Art of Fugue

(BB)  Naxos 8.557796. Guillot (harpsichord)

 Häns. CD 92.134 (2). Hill (harpsichord)

The Naxos harpsichord version from Sébastien Guillot is in every way attractive. His instrument, by Jonte Knüf of Helsinki (after German models), is most pleasingly recorded and Guillot presents Bach's masterly survey simply but not didactically: the result is very satisfying. Moreover the Naxos documentation by Pierre Bachmann and Keith Anderson is excellent. Why pay more?

Robert Hill lays out Bach's fugal progression in front of the listener with admirable clarity and concern for the contrapuntal detail, and he varies tempi with excellent judgement to keep the music continually alive. In the Duet Fugue he is joined by Michael Behringer. As an appendix he offers four contrapuncti and the Augmented Canon in Contrary Motion from Bach's early draft (BWV 1080a). The harpsichord itself has a fine, strong personality and is recorded in a warm acoustic which yet never blurs the interplay of the part-writing.

The Art of Fugue, BWV 1080; Canons 1–4; Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue, BWV 903; Fantasia in A min., BWV 922; etc.

 Lyrichord LEMS 8048 (2). Troeger (clavichord)

There is no reason why The Art of Fugue should not be played on the clavichord, and Richard Troeger here offers its début on this relatively intimate instrument. It works well, and he provides enough variety of tempi and colour to keep the listener's attention. Moreover, he has decided to complete the final fugue himself, very simply and logically, in a passage of 40 bars, which is perhaps better than being left hanging in mid-air! He adds the four Canons at the beginning of the second disc and follows with brilliant performances of the Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue and A minor Fantasia, used to frame his transcription of the Violin Partita, all of which sound very different from harpsichord or piano performances, and engagingly so. The recording is truthful and the discs come with excellent documentation.

Capriccio on the Departure of a Beloved Brother, BWV 992; Fantasias, BWV 906 & 919; Goldberg Variations, BWV 988; 2-Part Inventions and 3-Part Inventions etc.; The Well-Tempered Clavier, Books I & II, BWV 846–93

Ⓑ () RCA mono 82876 67891-2 (7). Wanda Landowska (harpsichord)

Wanda Landowska (in 1933) not only discovered and reintroducd Bach's complete Goldberg Variations to the European musical public, but soon afterwards she made its first recording. These are later recordings, made between 1945 and 1959. She favours a large, two-manual Pleyel harpsichord built especially for her, and at times she gives it a grand presence, but for the most part her playing is quite contained and is often expressive. At other times her virtuosity is very compelling. She is not only convincing but she leads the ear forward most spontaneously. The Well-Tempered Clavier was recorded over a period (between 1949 and 1954) and still sounds marvellous. Her playing has a colour, vitality, authority and grandeur that make it difficult for one to stop listening, and the CD transfers are very well managed.

Concertos (for solo harpsichord) after Vivaldi Violin Concertos: 1 (after Op.3/9); 2 (after Op. 7/2); 4 (after Op.4/6); 5 (after Op. 3/12); 7 (after Op.3/3), 9 (after Op. 4/1), BWV 972-3, 975-6, 978 & 980; Italian Concerto, BWV 971

Ⓝ (BB) * Warner Apex 2564 69325-4 Olivier Baumont (harpsichord)

We are used to hearing Bach's Vivaldi transcriptions on the organ, but they were intended for either a harpsichord or possibly an organ without pedals. In Olivier Baumont's hands they sound splendid on the harpsichord, full of vitality and vividly coloured. Baumont plays a modern French copy of a German harpsichord 'from the school of Silbermann' of 1735 and it has a particularly effective range of dynamic. He produces some splendidly dramatic staccato effects in the slow movement of Op.4/6. The Italian Concerto is offered as an encore and how eloquently Baumont plays the slow movement. This collection is very enjoyable indeed.

Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue in D min., BWV 903; Chorale Preludes, BWV 639; BWV 659 (both arr. Busoni); Fantasia in A min., BWV 922; Fantasia & Fugue in A min., BWV 922; Italian Concerto

🔑 Ⓜ  Ph. (ADD) 475 7760. Brendel (piano)

Brendel's fine Bach recital originally appeared in 1978. The performances are of the old school, with no attempt made to strive after harpsichord effects and with every piece creating a sound-world of its own. The Italian Concerto is particularly imposing, with a finely sustained sense of line and beautifully articulated rhythm. The original analogue recording was in every way truthful, and it sounds admirably present in this new CD remastering for Universal's extended series of Originals.

Chromatic Fantasia & Fugue; 4 Duets, BWV 802–5; Italian Concerto; Goldberg Variations; Partitas 1–6; in B min., BWV 831

🔑 ✿ Ⓑ * Decca 475 7079 (4). Rousset (harpsichord)

Christophe Rousset's playing combines the selfless authority and scholarly dedication of such artists as Leonhardt and Gilbert with the flair of younger players. He plays a 1751 Hemsch, which is superbly recorded within a generous but not too resonant acoustic, so that the harpsichord is very real and apparent. On their original issue we placed the Goldberg Variations and the Partitas at the top of the list, and the playing has great freshness and spontaneity. The Partitas, too, have complete naturalness and are obviously, like the Goldberg, the product of a vital imagination.

Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue; English Suite 2; French Suite 5; Italian Concerto; Partita 4 in D; 15 2-Part Inventions, BWV 772/786; The Well-Tempered Clavier, Book 1: Preludes and Fugues 1–2, 5–6, 14 & 17; Book 2: Preludes and Fugues 1, 3, 7, 12 & 24

🔑 Ⓑ  Decca 475 193-2 (2). András Schiff

This compilation of András Schiff's Bach recordings makes an ideal introduction to his way with this composer: the playing has freshness and individuality, and his sparkling ornamentation is always winning. The Preludes and Fugues are translated into pianistic terms, rarely if ever imitating the harpsichord, yet one is soon won over. Try the Gavotte in the Fifth Suite for rhythmic lift or the slow movement of the Italian Concerto to experience his sustained line at its most beautiful. Superb recordings, and inexpensive to buy.

4 Duets, BWV 802–5; English Suite 6 in D min., BWV 811; Italian Concerto, BWV 971; Toccata in C min., BWV 911

 Australian DG Eloquence 442 9446. Hewitt (piano)

This was Angela Hewitt's début recording, following her winning the 1985 International Bach Competition in Toronto. It is a splendid vindication of the wisdom of the judges' decision. In both the Italian Concerto and the English Suite her playing is enormously alive and stimulating. Textures are clean, with every strand in perfect focus and every phrase clearly articulated. She plays with vital imaginative resource, totally free from idiosyncrasy and affectation. These are exhilarating performances. The piano is beautifully captured on this recording, and thanks must be given to Australian Universal Records for restoring it to circulation.

English Suites 1–6, BWV 806–11

Ⓝ 🔑 * Sony 88697310502 (2) Perahia (piano)

🔑 * Hyp. SACD: SACDA 67451/2; CD: CDA 67451/2. Hewitt (piano)

Ⓝ  Italian Universal Decca 476 3127 (2) Andrea Bacchetti (Piano)

The two discs of Murray Perahia's English Suites (recorded separately, a year apart) now come together, to make a clear primary recommendation, although both Angela Hewitt and Bacchetti are strong competitors. But in Perahia's hands the forward flow is a living thing in itself, and the listener is always made conscious of the richness of the underlying harmony, especially in the Sarabandes which are played very beautifully indeed. The lighter dance movements have a refreshing lightness of articulation, with the decoration made to seem integral. The recording is excellent.

The opening Preludes (which Angela Hewitt relishes) show Bach at his most imaginative and exploratory. But it is in the Sarabandes that she finds a depth of feeling and richness of colour that is possible only on the piano, while the exuberant closing Gigues (sample that for No. 4) are sparklingly buoyant and spirited. The recording on CD is first class; we see no reason to prefer the SACD.

The Italian pianist, Andrea Bacchetti is a comparatively new name to us but he has already given us an outstanding DVD of the Goldberg Variations, and is a very impressive exponent of this repertoire. His set of the Italian Suites is very appealing, and can be spoken of alongside that of Perahia. His lyrical flow is most winning, his range of dynamic beautifully modulated, and the dance movements, neatly articulated, are full of character. He plays a Faziola piano, perfectly suited to the music, and is recorded with perfect realism and naturalness in the Fazioli Concert Hall, Sacile.

English Suites 1–6; French Suites 1–6

(BB)  Warner Apex (ADD) 0927 40808–2 (1–2); 09027 40814–2 (3–4); 09027 40813–2 (5–6) (available separately). Curtis (harpsichord)

Anyone wanting both the English and French Suites together at a modest cost, played on a fine period harpsichord, will find Alan Curtis's Teldec set excellent value. Curtis uses a harpsichord made by Christian Zell of Hamburg in 1928. The sound is resonant, but pleasingly so, and the full-bodied character of the sound suits Curtis's lively, comparatively robust approach. His playing is both thoughtful and spontaneous.

English Suites 1–6; Partitas 1–6

(BB)  Virgin 5 62379-2 (4). Leonhardt (harpsichord)

Leonhardt's playing here has a flair and vitality that one does not always associate with him. His set now comes coupled with the six Partitas. In terms of sheer sound these are among the most satisfactory versions available, and in terms of style they combine elegance, spontaneity and authority. In many respects this too is musically among the most satisfying of current harpsichord sets, save for the fact that Leonhardt observes no repeats.

English Suite 2 in A min.; Prelude in G, BWV 902

((*)) BBC Legends mono BBCL 4201-2. Hess – HAYDN: Sonata 62 in G min. (); SCHUMANN: Carnaval ()

Dame Myra Hess's gift for making contrapuntal lines sing lyrically is wonderfully illustrated in these BBC recordings, made in 1956, with textures beautifully clarified. Her incisiveness in fast music is also most persuasive. A good coupling with her Schumann party-piece and her very last recording of Haydn, in acceptable mono sound.

French Suites 1–6, BWV 812–17

🔑 * Ambroisie AMB 9942 (2). Rousset (harpsichord)

🔑 * Nim. NI 5744/5. Roberts (piano)

The comparison between the performances by the extrovert Christophe Rousset (handsomely packaged) and the comparatively laid-back Bernard Roberts is a fascinating one. Rousset chooses a large-scale Ruckers, restored in 1787. He plays the dance movements with real gusto – they are usually faster than with Roberts, who is by no means lacking in impetus, yet the tempi of the Allemandes and Sarabandes are slightly more relaxed in Rousset's hands. That is not to say that Roberts is not wonderfully cool; his slow movements are sensitive and gentle, and you have only to try the famous Gavotte in the Fifth Suite to revel in his spirited elegance. Both are spendidly recorded, so if you like exuberance (and a harpsichord) go for Rousset; if you have already discovered the natural grace and refinement which Roberts brings to Bach on the piano, without any loss of underlying vitality, he is your man.

French Suites 1–6 (including 3 additional movements); 18 Little Preludes, BWV 924–8; 930; 933–43; 999; Prelude & Fugue in A min., BWV 894; Sonata in D min., BWV 964

🔑  Hyp. CDA 67121/2. Hewitt (piano)

French Suites 1–6; Italian Concerto; Partita in B min., BWV 831

 Decca 433 313–2 (2). Schiff (piano)

French Suites 1–6; Suites in A min., BWV 818a; in E flat, BWV 819a

Ⓑ  Double Decca 466 736–2 (2). Hogwood (harpsichord) (with Allemande, BWV 819a)

Hogwood coaxes superb sounds from his pair of harpsichords: his playing is expressive, and the relentless sense of onward momentum that disfigures so many harpsichordists is pleasingly absent. These performances have both style and character and can be recommended with some enthusiasm.

Angela Hewitt's playing is informed by an intelligence and musicianship that are refreshing. Whether in the Preludes, written for Wilhelm Friedemann, or the suites themselves, she displays an imaginative vitality of a high order. The recorded sound is very natural.

András Schiff gives highly rewarding performances of just Nos. 1–6, his expressive style entirely without personal indulgence, his freedom in slow movements seemingly improvisatory and spontaneous, and his faster dance-movements an unqualified delight. The Partita in B minor is slightly more severe in style than the rest of the programme. As with the rest of his series, the Decca recording is appealingly realistic and an ideal acoustic has been chosen.

French Suite 4 in E flat, BWV 815; Ricercare a 3

 Orfeo C612031. Nikolaieva (with SHOSTAKOVICH: 4 Preludes and fugues, Op. 87) – BEETHOVEN: Piano Sonatas 25 & 32 ***

An Austrian Radio recording from the 1987 Salzburg Festival by Tatiana Nikolaieva, for whom Shostakovich wrote his Preludes and fugues, Op. 87. Listening to this, one realizes why this Bach playing made so strong an impression. Nikolaieva was a great pianist and her appearances in the West were far too few.

Goldberg Variations, BWV988 (DVD Version)

Ⓝ  Arthaus Musik DVD (plus CD) 101 447 Bacchetti

Andrea Bacchetti performs the Goldberg Variations in the handsome Villa Trissino Marzotto, Trissino, Vincenza in 2006 and offers a ten-minute introduction to them, albeit not particularly revealing, as well as much more perceptive notes. The performance itself is satisfyingly musical, with fine tonal shading and an effortless technique. Very good camera work which never detracts attention from the music. The set also includes a CD of another, later performance recorded at the Teatro Chiabrera, Savona in 2007. Very recommendable.

Goldberg Variations, BWV 988 (CD Versions)

🔑 * Hyp. CDA 67305. Hewitt (piano)

🔑 ✿ * VAI (ADD) VAIA 1029. Tureck (piano)

🔑 * Sony 696998924321. Perahia (piano)

🔑 Ⓜ  Decca 475 7508. A. Schiff (piano)

Ⓝ Ⓜ  EMI 2 19578-2 Lim (with chaconne, arr. Busoni)

Ⓜ  Sony mono 074645259420 (1955 recording). Gould (piano)

(BB) ((*)) Naxos 8.111247. Gould (piano) (with Partita 5 in G)

Angela Hewitt's performance is totally pianistic, involving the widest range of dynamic contrast, variety of touch and colour. It is imbued with what she calls 'the joyous tone that is characteristic of so much of this work'. She rightly regards the 'black pearl' Variation 25 as 'the greatest of all' and fully reveals its gentle, celestial beauty. After the bold Quodlibet, the return of the Aria on a magical half-tone reminds one of Tureck – and there can be no higher praise. The Hyperion recording is first class in every way.

Rosalyn Tureck's recording is very special indeed – there is no other record of Bach played on the piano quite as compelling as this, and for I. M. it would be a desert island disc.

Murray Perahia's set is even more personalized than Rosalyn Tureck's VAI version, essentially thoughtful and intimate, often introvert, even ruminative, but with moments of high drama. Some might prefer a more direct, less individualized approach, but Perahia's involvement and dedication are present in every bar of Bach's music, with continual contrasts of pianistic colour and dynamic, yet always with superbly clean articulation. The piano recording is wonderfully true and natural.

It is good to see András Schiff's earlier, Decca piano recording returning in the same Universal series of Originals. It can receive enthusiatic advocacy, and in some respects is preferable to his later, premium-priced version on ECM, for the Decca digital recording is excellent in every way, clean and realistic, so that the part-writing emerges with splendid definition and subtlety. Schiff does not play as if he is performing a holy ritual, but with a keen sense of enjoyment of the piano's colour and sonority.

Dong Hyek Lim made a strong impression with his début recital last year and enhances it with this thoughtful and imaginative reading of the Goldberg. He has a masterly technique and a fine musical head. The Busoni arrangement of the D minor Chaconne is also rather special.

Gould's famous (1955) mono recording enjoyed cult status in its day, and its return will occasion rejoicing among his admirers. He observes no repeats and in terms of sheer keyboard wizardry commands admiration, even if you do not respond to the results. There is too much that is wilful and eccentric for this to be a straightforward recommendation, but it is a remarkable performance nevertheless.

However, Naxos have had the even better idea of coupling the 1955 Goldberg set with a stimulating broadcast performance of the G major Partita – a favourite work of Gould's – dating from the year before. Both transfers are first class. It is also available on Sony in surround sound.

Goldberg Variations (arr. for harp by Catrin Finch)

Ⓝ () 477 8097 Finch (harp)

Catrin Finch is a very musical harpist and she opens the Goldberg Aria gently and seriously and elsewhere shows she is not intent on display. But at times there is an element of deliberation and the resonant sound seems to add a glow of romanticism to the music-making which is all but anachronistic. However this dedicated performance may make new friends for the work.

Goldberg Variations, BWV 988; Chorale: Jesu, joy of man's desiring, BWV 147; Partita 5 in G, BWV 829

 BBC BBCL 4228-2. Nikolayeva

Nikolayeva's performance came from a (1986) BBC Lunchtime Concert in St John's, Smith Square, and formed part of a Russian season which also included Mikhail Pletnev's London début. The legendary Tatiana Nikolayeva was the dedicatee of the Shostakovich Preludes and Fugues which were inspired by her Bach performances in Dresden. Magisterial and compelling Bach, and masterly in every way.

(i) Goldberg Variations; (ii) Chorale Preludes BWV 599 & 639 (arr. Busoni); Jesu, joy of man's desiring; Partita 1 in B flat; Siciliana (arr. Kempff)

(BB) () Regis mono RRC 1264. (i) Gould; (ii) Lipatti

Goldberg Variations; Italian Concerto; Partitas 1–6, & in B min. (French Overture), BWV 825–31

🔑 Ⓜ  DG (ADD/DDD) Trio 474 337-2 (3). Pinnock (harpsichord)

Trevor Pinnock uses four different harpsichords here. The playing is vital and intelligent, with alert, finely articulated rhythm. In the Partitas he conveys a sense of pleasure that is infectious, and he has great spirit and panache throughout. The recording is eminently truthful and vivid, a bit close in the B minor Partita, which nevertheless still conveys plenty of expressive feeling.

Regis have had the bright idea of coupling Glenn Gould's famous 1955 recording of the Goldberg Variations (out of copyright in the UK) with Lipatti's legendary Bach recordings made five years earlier. The transfers are faithful and this makes an excellent bargain.

15 2-Part Inventions, BWV 772–86; 15 3-Part Inventions, BWV 787–801

🔑 * BIS CD 1009. Suzuki (harpsichord)

🔑  Cap. 10 210 (with 6 Little Preludes, BWV 933–8). Koopman (harpsichord)

🔑 (*) Sony 82876 787662. Gould (piano)

Masaaki Suzuki plays with perception and skill. These Inventions can sound dry, but not in his hands. His response is naturally spontaneous, fresh and alive, never didactic and rigid. Suzuki is one of the finest Bach exponents of our time and he is truthfully recorded.

Ton Koopman scores over rivals in offering the Six Little Preludes in addition to the two sets of Inventions, and he plays with spontaneity and sparkle.

The Inventions are admirably suited to Glenn Gould's clear, didactic style, and they are among his most impressive Bach recordings. As he pairs each of these Two- and Three-Part works (each in identical keys) listeners are always conscious that they are in the presence of a penetrating musical mind: the clarity of the individual strands is remarkable. As usual, the ear cannot fail to be exasperated by the vocalizations. One longs for vocal silence. The current reissue includes extra takes, some unedited.

Partitas 1–6, BWV 825–30

🔑 * BIS CD 1313/4 (2). Suzuki (harpsichord)

🔑 ✿ Ⓑ * Nim. 5673/4. Roberts (piano)

🔑 * None. 7559 79698-2 (1, 3 & 6); 7559 79483-2 (2, 4 & 5). Goode (piano)

🔑  Häns. CD 92.115 (2). Pinnock (harpsichord)

🔑  Hyp. CDA 67191/2. Hewitt (piano)

Masaaki Suzuki plays a modern Dutch copy of an enlarged two-manual Rückers, which is forwardly recorded and has a strong personality. If you like a bold harpsichord sound, this very realistic BIS disc should provide great satisfaction, for Suzuki's Bach perceptions are fully revealed here and he plays thoughtfully, commandingly and spontaneously.

However, the Partitas are heard more often today on the piano, and the splendid set from Bernard Roberts shows why. His clear, clean articulation is a constant joy, and the dance movements are delightfully played. Throughout, Roberts's playing reveals new aspects of these many-faceted works, at times light-hearted but with an underlying profundity that is fully realized here. The Nimbus recording is first class in every way, beautifully focused, with just the right degree of resonance in an ideal acoustic.

Not surprisingly, Richard Goode's Nonesuch set on the piano is equally stylish and appealing. The clean articulation and crisp, well-lifted rhythms (sample the Gavotta and Gigue of the final Partita in E minor) are as arresting as the pianistic use of light and shade. With piano tone that is clear but never too dry, this is very stimulating.

Trevor Pinnock has recorded the six Partitas before for DG, but this new set is even finer. He uses a superb American copy of a Hemsch made by David Way in Stonington, Connecticut (with a particularly effective mute stop). As before, he plays these works with a keen sense of enjoyment and projects the music with enormous panache. The harpsichord is superbly recorded and given fine presence in a spaciously resonant acoustic.

Angela Hewitt's performances are fluent, deeply musical and, while expressively flexible, not personally wayward in the Sarabandes, which she still plays very sensitively. The Hyperion recording is first class.

Partitas 2 in C min.; 3 in A min.; 4 in D, BWV 826/8

Ⓝ * Sony/BMG 88697226952 Perahia (piano)

Murray Perahia is again in his element here. Bach keyboard playing does not come any finer than this. A disc of true distinction most truthfully recorded.

Partita 4, BWV828

Ⓝ * Onyx 4035. Kovacevich – BEETHOVEN: Diabelli Variations, Op. 120 ****

Stephen Kovacevich's magisterial set of the Diabelli Variations comes with a Bach Partita, a reminder that he was the pupil of Dame Myra Hess whose Bach playing was legendary in the post-war years. He plays with an impressive and natural eloquence that gives enormous musical satisfaction.

7 Toccatas; BWV 910–16

🔑  Hyp. CDA 67310. Hewitt (piano)

Hewitt always holds Bach's disparate motivations convincingly together, as in the G minor which, as she comments, can be made to sound uniquely varied and buoyant on the piano, especially the bouncing closing fugue. And how engaging is her sparkling articulation of the first section of the D major Toccata, with which she ends her programme. We have no hesitation in declaring this the most stimulating and rewarding CD of these complex and episodic works on any instrument, consistently showing Bach's youthful explorations at their most stimulating. The recording is excellent.

Toccatas 1–7; Partita 7 in B min. (Overture in the French Style), BWV 831

Ⓜ  Sony (ADD) SM2K 52612 (2). Gould (piano)

Glenn Gould's Toccatas were recorded in the mid- to late 1970s and combine the most fastidious and remarkable pianism with some characteristically impulsive, not to say wilful, touches. Though the playing is of the highest distinction, the piano tone is not, and the wearisome vocalization, on which this artist seems to insist, somewhat dampens one's enthusiasm.

The Well-Tempered Clavier (48 Preludes & Fugues), BWV 846–93

(*) EuroArts DVD 2050309 (2). Gavrilov (Book I/1–12); MacGregor (13–24); Demidenko (Book II/1–12); Hewitt (13–14)

The idea of filming and recording The Well-Tempered Clavier with four different pianists in four different venues is a novel one, and it certainly offers a variety of interpretative manners, none more controversial than Andrei Gavrilov's opening approach, which is both highly individual and wilful, yet obviously deeply considered. Altogether stimulating, but a very personal view. Joanna MacGregor then creates a complete contrast following her Russian colleague. There is both momentum and character in her playing, which is attractively crisp and clean in the major keys. Nikolai Demidenko's way is even more bold and direct, his pacing often brisk but never seeming pressed too hard, and there is never a hint of the romantic dallying which Gavrilov indulges in. Simplicity is Angela Hewitt's hallmark, with well-judged tempi and unexaggerated use of light and shade so that rhythms are precise, the contrapuntal interplay always clear. Throughout, the music is allowed to unfold naturally and sometimes quite intimately. The visual presentation is far from plain and the cameras are constantly moving, especially in the angle of approach to the pianist's hands. The palaces at Barcelona and Venice, where MacGregor and Demidenko play, are fully explored and the glory of the interiors at the Wartburg, Eisenach, are realized during Hewitt's final group. The recorded sound is excellent.

The Well-Tempered Clavier (48 Preludes & Fugues), BWV 846–93 (complete)

🔑 Ⓜ * BBC (ADD) BBCL 4109-2 (2) (Book I); BBCL 4116-3 (3) (Book II). Tureck (piano)

🔑 * Decca 475 6832 (3). Ashkenazy (piano)

* BIS CD 813/4 (Book 1); BIS CD 1513/4 (Book 2) Masaaki Suzuki (harpsichord)

Ⓜ 🔑 * Hyp. CDA 66741/4 (4) Angela Hewitt (piano)

Ⓝ * Signum SIGCD 136 (4); or SIGCD 113 (Book I); SIGCD 123 (Book II) Jill Crossland (piano)

🔑 Ⓑ  Hyp. CDS 44291/4. Hewitt (piano)

🔑 Ⓑ  Nim. NI 5608/11 (4). Roberts (piano)

Ⓝ Ⓜ  Decca 478 0391 (4) Schiff (piano)

Ⓜ () EMI mono 3 91958-2 (3); or (BB) () Naxos mono 8.110651/2 (Book I); 8.110653/4 (Book II). Edwin Fischer (piano)

In the autumn of 1975, when she was at her artistic peak, the BBC invited Rosalyn Tureck into the studio to re-record the entire '48' in groups, and the project was completed in November 1976. Because of her innate understanding of Bach, the result, for all its remarkable variety of mood, remains essentially pure in a classical sense and immensely satisfying, a miraculous blend of scholarship and personal insight and feeling. As can be seen, because of Tureck's often measured tempi, Book II extends over three CDs (the third playing for only 40 minutes, but including a 6-minute bonus – a brief conversation between Tureck and Michael Oliver). Throughout, the BBC recording is excellent, and the two Books are available separately.

Ashkenazy returned to the studio (or, rather, to Potton Hall, Suffolk) on two occasions in 2004 and once in 2005, to record Bach's Well-Tempered Clavier. The result is an extraordinary tour de force in the variety of its pianism. Ashkenazy obviously prepared well and he thought deeply about every prelude and every fugue as an individual entity, and he also considered the way each pair links and brings a potential for contrast. While the consistent spontaneity of his playing often brings an improvisatory feeling in the Preludes, he is very economical in the matter of ornamentation, obviously preferring to leave well alone, rather than to over-embellish.

Suzuki lays claim to being first choice for a harpsichord version of the '48'. His two-manual instrument (by Willem Kroesbergen of Utrecht after an enlarged Rückers) has a fine personality and is splendidly recorded. His pacing is admirably judged, his flexibility never sounds mannered and he brings Bach's great keyboard odyssey fully to life at every turn. A most satisfying achievement. The recording is in the demonstration bracket.

During 2007 and 2008 Angel Hewitt undertook a world tour playing the Well-Tempered Clavier in 58 cities in 21 countries. Then during September 2008 she recorded the complete work for the second time in the famous Jesus-Christus Kirche, Berlin, with the producer Ludger Böckenhoff providing a superbly real piano image and with little editing needed. The result is something of a triumph, for the performance as recorded has the ongoing spontaneity of a live performance. As before she uses all the resources of the modern piano. Her range of timbre is wide and her wide control of dynamic is ever subtle. Every bar is imaginatively alive with a pervading freshness, and many details are even more searching than before. She holds the listener firmly in her grip, and her expressiveness (as in her previous version) is never self-aware, not does it obscure the clarity of the part-writing. Truly an inspirational set of the highest calibre.

Jill Crossland is new to this repertoire but plays it with distinction and individuality. She opens the C major Prelude of Book I very gently but builds firmly to a considerable climax. Yet her delicate approach returns quite often during her survey – as in both the E flat and A flat major Preludes, which are very touching. Indeed her playing brings much felicity of articulation which constantly pleases the ear. As Book II soon demonstrates, she can also be bold and strong and the result is a refreshing variety of expression with the ongoing musical flow always secure. Altogether this performance ranks with the finest previous versions, a remarkable achievement, and Signum have given her very truthful recording and the opportunity to buy the set complete of a Book at a time.

In her earlier recording (CDS 44291/4) Angela Hewitt used all the resources of the modern piano to turn these preludes and fugues into ongoing concert music of great variety and interest. Her range of timbre and dynamic is wide, her articulation can be bold, lightweight or gently searching (as, for instance, in BWV 849). But every bar is imaginatively alive and her thoughtful expressiveness is never self-aware, nor does it obscure the clarity of the part-writing.

Bernard Roberts's Nimbus survey is full of individual touches and insights. That goes with the deepest concentration, bringing out the full power as well as the beauty, with counterpoint consistently clarified. To confirm the recommendation, the four discs come as a bargain offer, and this is the version, superbly recorded, which for many will be a first choice. He is very truthfully recorded, and his set has the added advantage of economy, in being complete.

Schiff often takes a very individual view of particular preludes and fugues, but his unexpected readings regularly win one over before the end. Consistently he translates the music into pianistic terms, and his voyage of discovery is increasingly compelling as he makes his way through this supreme keyboard collection. Not now a first choice, perhaps, but a very stimulating one, with first-rate sound.

Edwin Fischer's set was the first ever '48' to be put on shellac 78s, being recorded in 1933–6. Fischer produced a quality of sound and a sense of line that are an unfailing source of musical nourishment. The EMI transfers (by Andrew Walter) for EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century' are first class and the set is economically laid out on three mid-priced CDs, each accommodating close on 80 minutes. The Naxos transfers are also very impressive, the piano sound full and pleasing. However, Naxos has issued each Book on a pair of super-bargain discs, so the saving in cost is less than it might have been. The mastery and subtlety of Fischer's Bach playing needs no restating, for it has never been surpassed.

Glenn Gould's very opening Prelude of Book I is an instance of his staccato style, and the clarity of his playing is matched by his charisma. There are undoubtedly many imaginative if obdurate touches, and his often curious choice of tempi – sometimes rattlingly fast, sometimes slow and pensive – is wilfully personal, favouring rallentandos at the end of each prelude or fugue. Certainly this is a fascinating set and it has never sounded better. But the vocalise also remains, to interfere with one's concentration. For this repertoire on the piano, Tureck or Hewitt are safer recommendations. (Sony 5179702)

KEYBOARD RECITAL COLLECTIONS

Rosalyn Tureck recitals

'Bach and Tureck at Home' (a birthday offering): (i) Adagio in G, BWV 968; Aria & 10 Variations in the Italian Style, BWV 989; Capriccio on the Departure of a Beloved Brother, BWV 992; Chromatic Fantasia & Fugue, BWV 903; Fantasia, Adagio & Fugue in D, BWV 912; The Well-Tempered Clavier, Book I: Prelude & Fugue in B flat, BWV 866.* (ii) English Suite 3 in G min., BWV 808; Italian Concerto; Sonata in D min., BWV 964 (trans. from Unaccompanied Violin Sonata 2 in A min., BWV 1003); Well-Tempered Clavier, Book I: Preludes & Fugues: in C min.; in C, BWV 847–8; Book II: Preludes & Fugues: in C sharp, BWV 872; in G, BWV 884. (iii) Goldberg Variations; (iv) *Partitas 1 in B flat; 2 in C min.; 6 in E min.

🔑 ✿ * VAI (i) VAIA 1041; (ii) VAIA 1051; (iii) VAIA 1029; (iv) VAIA 1040 (available separately). Tureck (piano)

Rosalyn Tureck's Bach playing is legendary, and the performances here show that her keyboard command and fluent sense of Bach style are as remarkable as ever. Tureck uses a wide dynamic and expressive range with consummate artistry, her decoration always adds to the musical effect and she makes us feel that Bach's keyboard music could be played in no other way than this – the hallmark of a great artist.

Other keyboard collections

Capriccio in E in Honour of Johann Christoph Bach, BWV 993; Capriccio on the Departure of a Beloved Brother, BWV 992; Chromatic Fantasia & Fugue, BWV 903; Fantasia & Fugues: in A min., BWV 944; in C min., BWV 906; Fantasias: in A min., BWV 922; in G min., BWV 917; Fantasia on a Rondeau in C min., BWV 918; Prelude in C min., BWV 921; Fantasia & Fugue in A min., BWV 944; Fugue in A on a Theme of Albinoni, BWV 950; Prelude & Fugue on a Theme by Albinoni, BWV 923/951

 BIS CD 1037. Suzuki (harpsichord)

Masaaki Suzuki opens with a dazzlingly bravura account of the Chromatic Fantasia, and is equally impressive later in his brilliant articulation of the Albinoni Prelude and the engaging C minor Prelude, BWV 921 (which is marked Harpeggiando – Prestissimo). Yet the fugues are given aptly judged tempi, never rushed. The rest of this varied programme is played with comparable flair and all of it is very well recorded. In short, this is a very winning and often exciting collection, and if you are looking for keyboard virtuosity you won't be disappointed here.

Aria variata in A min., BWV 989; Chromatic Fantasia & Fugue, BWV 903; Fantasia & Fugue in A min., BWV 904; Prelude & Fugue in A min., BWV 894; Partita in B min. (Overture in the French Style), BWV 831

🔑 * Naxos 8.570291. Jandó (piano)

This is not only one of Jenö Jandó's finest records, it is one of the finest available recitals of Bach's shorter keyboard pieces on the piano. Jandó's opening of the Chromatic Fantasia is dazzling in its flair and crisp virtuosity, and the following Aria variata with its ten variations is ear-tweaking in its diversity. The two works with fugues are spacious and splendidly articulated, and the Overture in the French Style completes a most satisfying disc, very well recorded.

Capriccio in E, BWV 993; Capriccio on the Departure of a Beloved Brother, BWV 992; 4 Duets, BWV 802–5; Italian Concerto; Partita in B min., BWV 831

🔑 * Hyp. CDA 67306. Hewitt (piano)

Angela Hewitt's striking sense of keyboard colour is shown in the 'Departure' Capriccio, especially the Adagissimo, and, together with an imaginatively wide variety of touch, makes the four Duets (so called on account of their two-part counterpoint) unusually diverse, like a suite. As for the famous B minor Partita (or French Overture), the sparklingly rhythmic dance-movements make a perfect setting for the lovely central Sarabande. Hewitt is recorded most naturally and provides her own excellent notes.

English Suite 2 in A min., BWV 807; Partita 2 in C min., BWV 826; Toccata in C min., BWV 911

Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 463 604-2. Argerich (piano)

Martha Argerich's playing provides a genuinely musical experience: alive, keenly rhythmic, but also wonderfully flexible and rich in colour. There is an intellectual musical vitality here that is refreshing. She is very well recorded indeed, even if the measure (50 minutes) is not especially generous.

Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue in D min., BWV 903; Prelude, Fugue and Allegro in E flat, BWV 998; 4 Toccatas, BWV 911/14

Ⓝ () Lyrichord mono LEMS 8062 Fernando Valenti (harpsichord)

Here is a fascinating reminder of the early 1950s when Bach harpsichord recitals on LP were rare indeed. Fernando Valenti made many recordings for the Westminster label, including over 300 Scarlatti sonatas. His performances were famous for their dazzling virtuosity, immediately demonstrated here in the super-brilliant account of Bach's Chromatic Fantasia. The four Toccatas show the range and spontaneity of his style and his readiness also to play gently. The instrument in use is not documented, but it sounds like a copy of a large-scale Two-manuel Rückers, offering a full range of dynamic and colour. A fascinating disc. The mono recording is admirable clear.

ORGAN MUSIC

Peter Hurford Complete Decca Series

Ⓑ  Decca (ADD/DDD) 444 410-2 (17). Hurford (organs of Ratzeburg Cathedral, Germany; Church of Our Lady of Sorrows, Toronto, Canada; New College Chapel, Oxford; Knox Grammar School Chapel, Sydney, Australia; Eton College, Windsor; Stiftskirche, Melk, Austria; Augustinerkirche, Vienna, Austria; All Souls Unitarian Church, Washington, DC, USA; Domkirche, St Pölten, Austria; St Catharine's College Chapel, Cambridge)

It was Peter Hurford's achievement to influence a complete change in approach to this repertoire, moving away from an enduring and essentially pedagogic, German tradition (shown at its best by organists like Helmut Walcha on DG Archiv). Vigour and energy are the keynotes of Hurford's approach to the large-scale works and, without losing their majesty, he never lets the fugal momentum get bogged down by the music's weight and scale. We hear Bach's organ writing with new ears, its human vitality revealed alongside its extraordinary architecture. The set is supported with very good notes by Clifford Bartlett which are both scholarly and readable; full specifications of all the organs used are included. The recordings are splendidly transferred to CD, and while newer digital surveys are now appearing, this set of 17 bargain-price CDs remains a cornerstone among available recordings of this repertoire. Apart from the selection below, the discs unfortunately are not available separately.

Chorale Preludes, BWV 727, 729–30, 734, 659, 645 & 694; Fantasias: BWV 562, 572; Fantasias & Fugues: BWV 537 & 542; Passacaglia & Fugue, BWV 582; Preludes & Fugues, BWV 543, 532 & (St Anne) BWV 552; Toccata, Adagio & Fugue, BWV 564; Toccatas & Fugues: in D min. (Dorian), BWV 538; BWV 565

🔑 Ⓑ  Double Decca (ADD) 443 485-2 (2). Hurford (various organs)

A generous 146-minute collection of major Bach organ works, taken from Peter Hurford's complete survey (see above), brings two separate recitals, each framed by major concert pieces, with the beautifully played chorales used in between the large-scale pieces to add contrast.

Marie-Claire Alain Complete Erato Series

(BB)  Warner 4509 96358-2 (14). Alain (various organs)

Marie-Claire Alain's integral survey, made for Erato during the early 1990s, is again available, in a box of 14 CDs at budget price. Throughout, she plays to excellent effect on some splendid instruments; but competition is strong, and for most collectors a choice from among the separate issues would seem more sensible. Each volume (usually) centres on a group of Chorale Preludes, framing them with weightier (often very substantially textured) Preludes or Toccatas and Fugues.

Simon Preston DG Series (Complete Organ Works)

Ⓑ  DG 469 420-2 (14). Preston (various organs)

Simon Preston's survey was recorded over more than a decade from 1987 onwards, beginning with the solo Concertos, which set the standard for the entire series. These performances are first class in every way, and the recording of the Lübeck organ admirably clear, yet with an attractively resonant ambience. Preston revels in the extrovert brilliance of the early Weimar Preludes and Fugues (and indeed also the 'Dorian' Toccata) with their elaborately virtuoso use of the pedals, but relishes also the more mature, tightly structured works, which he plays with genuine panache. Another highlight of the series is the (1993) set of Trio Sonatas.

Some of the repertoire has been issued on separate recital discs, including a few works not included here, such as the 8 Little Preludes and Fugues, which are wrongly attributed to Bach. But apart from these omissions the whole series now appears in a DG bargain box, with the various genres sensibly grouped together. The performances are consistently alive and distinguished, and the choice of organs ear-ticklingly perceptive. Good notes, although the analysis of the music itself is general rather than detailed.

Ton Koopman Novalis Series

Disc 1: (i) Chorale Prelude: Liebster Jesu, wir sind hier, BWV 730/1; Fantasias: in C min., BWV 562; in G, BWV 572; Passacaglia & Fugue in C min., BWV 582; Preludes & Fugues, BWV 532, 543; Toccata, Adagio & Fugue in C, BWV 564; Toccata, BWV 538 (Dorian)

Disc 2: (ii) Chorale Preludes, BWV 639, 659; Schübler Chorale: Wachet auf, BWV 645. Fantasia (Prelude) & Fugue in G min., BWV 542; Partita: O Gott, du frommer Gott, BWV 767; Prelude & Fugue (St Anne), BWV 552; Toccata & Fugue in D min., BWV 565

🔑 Ⓑ  Regis RRC 2042 (2). Koopman, (i) Dreifaltigkeits organ, Ottobeuren, Christian Müller organ, Leeuwarden, or Garrels organ, Grote Kerk, Maassluis; (ii) Christian Müller organ, Waalse Kerk, Amsterdam

This two-CD set brings together two outstanding recitals drawn from a series for Novalis, using various Dutch organs. Ton Koopman's playing is superb throughout, always using organs admirably suited to Bach's music and all splendidly recorded. The first disc has been put together by Regis to include key items from several individual compilations and to demonstrate three different organs. All three organs are superbly caught by the Novalis engineers. The second disc brings a complete recital (originally issued on 150 005-2). The Waalse Kerk organ is itself a co-star of this programme, producing magnificent, unclouded sonorities in the spacious tapestry of the St Anne Prelude and Fugue, and a wide palette of colour. For the most popular of all Bach's organ pieces Ton Koopman then changes to a more flamboyant style, which he establishes immediately by decorating the opening flourishes so that they become almost a series of trills. The recording is in the demonstration bracket, the microphones in the right place for a proper illusion of reality.

Other organ music

The Art of Fugue, BWV 1080

 BIS CD 1034. Fagius (organ of Garnisons Kirke, Copenhagen)

The approach of the Swedish organist Hans Fagius is refreshingly straightforward and unaffected. Here he plays a Danish organ, a reconstruction from 1995 of an instrument made in 1724 by Lambert Daniel Kastens, a pupil of Arp Schnitger. He has the advantage of a first-class recording, as one would expect from this label and the producer-engineer

Ingo Petry. This version has a lot going for it, quite apart from the sound, and those who like their Bach plain and unadorned will find it well worth considering.

The Art of Fugue, BWV 1080; Prelude & Fugue in C, BWV 547; Toccata, Adagio & Fugue in C, BWV 554; Toccata & Fugue in D min., BWV 565; Trio Sonatas, BWV 525 & 530

Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 477 6508 (2). Walcha (St Laurenskerk organ, Alkmaar)

Helmut Walcha's Art of Fugue was DG's very first stereo recording, recorded in 1955. He had previously made a series of mono recordings of Bach's organ music and was to go on to make, between 1959 and 1971, a distinguished but incomplete stereo series (now on a dozen CDs: 463 712-2). In his account of The Art of Fugue the registration is admirably varied, yet with the contrasts of register and timbre heightened by the spatial effects of the stereo. The D major Toccata and Fugue certainly does not lack bravura; and typical of Walcha's playing at its most monumental is the gigantic triptych of the Toccata, Adagio and Fugue, a rigorous test of any organist's technique and a work which he comes through with flying colours.

Concertos (for solo organ) 1–5; 6 in E flat (arr. of concerto by an unnamed composer), BWV 592–7; Trio in C min. (after FASCH), BWV 585; Trio in G (after TELEMANN), BWV 586; Aria in F (from COUPERIN: Les Nations), BWV 587

(BB)  Naxos 8.550936. Rübsam (Flenthrop organ of St Mark's Cathedral, Seattle, Washington)

Wolfgang Rübsam's recital for Naxos is strikingly successful. Moreover it is very comprehensive in including the rarely played 'anonymous' concerto transcription, BWV 597. This is a most engaging piece, particularly the jaunty closing section, and it is nicely registered, as are the other individual movements here, by Couperin, Fasch and Telemann. Rübsam's tempi for allegros remain buoyant throughout and the playing is always seemingly spontaneous. The recording is in the demonstration class.

18 Leipzig Chorale Preludes, BWV 651–68; Fantasia in G, BWV 572; Prelude & Fugue in B min., BWV 544; Toccata & Fugue in F, BWV 540; Trio Sonata 4 in E min., BWV 528

Ⓜ  Priory PRCD 800AB (2). Weir (Gerald Woehl Bach organ of Thomaskirche, Leipzig)

The new Gerald Woehl organ has 61 stops and a magnificent range of colour which Gillian Weir exploits to the full (many of her registrations are captivating; others show the organ's dramatic power), and she is very gentle in the final sublime chorale, Vol deinem Thron tret ich hiermet, the first part of which Bach supposedly dictated from his deathbed. She then goes on to play a selection of miscellaneous works to display the organ's full range, from the brilliant filigree of the Arnstadt Fantasia in G minor and the charm of the Trio Sonata to the full power of BWV 540 and 544. The recording is first class, completely worthy of the occasion, and the documentation excellent.

Orgelbüchlein: 19 Chorale Preludes for Advent, Christmas, New Year and the Purification, BWV 599–617; Fantasia in C, BWV 570; Fugue on a Theme of Corelli, BWV 579; Preludes & Fugues, BWV 531 & 534; Prelude in G, BWV 568

(BB)  Naxos 8.553031. Rübsam (Flenthrop organ of Duke Chapel, Duke University, Durham, North Carolina)

Orgelbüchlein: 27 Chorale Preludes for Passiontide; Easter; Pentecost; and expressing Faith, BWV 618–44; Fantasia in C, BWV 570; Fugue in B min., BWV 579; Preludes & Fugues, BWV 531 & 534; Prelude in G, BWV 568

(BB)  Naxos 8.553032. Rübsam (Flenthrop organ of Duke Chapel, Duke University, Durham, North Carolina)

Rübsam finds great variety for his presentation of each chorale. The Christmas section is preceded by the flamboyant and joyous Prelude and Fugue in C, with its resounding pedals, and the first recital is rounded off with a characteristically spacious account of the imposing F minor Prelude and Fugue, BWV 534. The Easter Chorales are more robust, while the four Pentecost Chorales are touchingly contemplative. There is infinite variety of mood and colour in the last group, opening with a piece symbolizing the Ten Commandments and showing Bach reflecting on various aspects of the Christian faith. The introduction of the closing Prelude and Fugue in D minor, BWV 539, is grave and dignified, but the fugue itself is optimistic and vital, ending the concert satisfyingly. The Duke University Chapel organ is a magnificent instrument, and the recording is superb throughout.

Chorale Preludes: Ach bleib' bei uns, BWV 649; Liebster Jesu, BWV 731; O Mensch, bewein, BWV 622; Wachet auf, BWV 645; Fantasia in G, BWV 572; Fugue in E flat (St Anne), BWV 552; Prelude and Fugue in C, BWV 545; Sinfonia (arr. Rawsthorne) from Cantata 29; Toccatas & Fugues in D min. (Dorian), BWV 538; & BWV 565

(BB) (*) Regis RRC 1248. Rawsthorne (Willis Organ of Liverpool Anglican Cathedral)

Those who like their Bach on a really big organ, with a distinctly non-baroque flavour, will find that Noel Rawsthorne's performances have plenty of vigour, and they are effectively registered too, especially the better-known chorale preludes. The larger works have the right balance of momentum and controlled tension, and inner detail is only slightly blurred. With the wider reverberation period of Liverpool Cathedral, as sheer sound this is undoubtedly thrilling (especially the climax of the St Anne Fugue, which the Gramophone review commented on with great enthusiasm).

Chorale Preludes: Alle Menschen müssen sterben, BWV 643; Vater ünser im Himmelreich, BWV 737; Fantasia & Fugue in G min., BWV 542; Passacaglia

& Fugue in C min., BWV 582; Toccata in F, BWV 540

Ⓜ (*) Telarc CD 80049. Murray (Great organ at Methuen Memorial Music Hall, Massachusetts)

The Methuen organ is a famous instrument and the Telarc engineers catch its wide panoply of sound very impressively, if without crystal-clear detail. The most impressive performance here is the Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor, well judged and powerful with an effectively wide dynamic range. Michael Murray's approach to the Fantasia and Fugue and Toccata is traditional and rather measured. The chorale preludes are given serene and (it must be admitted) slightly static performances, but the sense of repose of Alle Menschen müssen sterben which ends the recital is enhanced by the clean focus, although the background is not quite silent, for the organ contributes its own characteristic sound as the air goes through the pipes.

VOCAL MUSIC

Complete Cantatas: Harnoncourt/Leonhardt Teldec Series

Cantatas 1–14; 16–52; 54–69; 69a; 70–117; 119–40; 143–59; 161–88; 192; 194–9 (complete)

(BB) (*) Warner (ADD/DDD) 2564 699 43-7 (60). Treble soloists from V. Boys' & Regensburg Choirs, Esswood, Equiluz, Van Altena, Van Egmond, Hampson, Nimsgern, Van der Meer, Jacobs, Iconomou, Holl, Immler, King's College, Cambridge, Ch., V. Boys' Ch., Tölz Boys' Ch., Ch. Viennensis, Ghent Coll. Voc., VCM, Harnoncourt; Leonhardt Cons., Leonhardt

This pioneering project, a recording of most – but not all – of Bach's sacred cantatas, is offered as a 60-CD box at bargain price.

The recordings got off to a very good start but, later in the project, various flaws of intonation, and sometimes a feeling that the ensemble would have benefited from more rehearsal, plus occasionally sluggish direction, slightly undermined the overall excellence. However, the authentic character of the performances is in no doubt. Boys replace women not only in the choruses but also as soloists (which brings occasional minor lapses of security), and the size of the forces is confined to what we know Bach himself would have expected. The simplicity of the approach brings its own merits, for the imperfect yet otherworldly quality of some of the treble soloists refreshingly focuses the listener's attention on the music itself. Less appealing is the quality of the violins, which eschew vibrato and, it would sometimes seem, any kind of timbre! Generally speaking, there is a certain want of rhythmic freedom and some expressive caution. Rhythmic accents are underlined with some regularity and the grandeur of Bach's inspiration is at times lost to view. Nevertheless there is much glorious music here which, to do justice to Harnoncourt and Leonhardt, usually emerges freshly to give the listener much musical nourishment. The CD transfers are first class. The acoustic is usually not too dry – and not too ecclesiastical either – and the projection is realistic. The set now comes at budget price with each CD in an individual slipcase, with two 300-page booklets containing full texts and translations.

Complete Cantatas: Koopman Series with Amsterdam Baroque Chorus & Orchestra on Challenge Classics

Volumes 1–22

Ⓜ  Chall CC 72201/722022 (67) Soloists including Schlick, Wessel, De Mey, Mertens, Prégardien, Stam, Holton, Bongers, Von Magnus, De Groot, Agnew, Türk, Stam, Chance, Rubens, Dürmüller, Gilchrist, Barosz, Stutzmann, Amsterdam Bar. Ch. & Orchestra

Koopman favours an intimate approach to choruses – namely one voice to a part – which seems to rob this repertory of some of its sheer majesty and breadth. He opts for female soloists rather than boys, as would have been the case in Bach's day, and he favours mixed rather than solely male choirs. For many this will be a plus point – and it is good news for fans of Barbara Schlick. Moreover, he goes for slightly higher than normal pitch – a semitone above present-day pitch, which, as Christoph Wolff's notes point out, is what Bach used in Mühlhausen and Weimar, brightening the sonority quite a lot. The singing in virtually all the cantatas is pretty impressive and the instrumental playing is of a high order of accomplishment. Moreover, Koopman offers the collector variants and alternative versions, which will again be an undoubted plus. For the most part the singing here is of a high order of accomplishment – in particular Andreas Scholl and Elisabeth von Magnus – and the instrumental playing is certainly finished, though here it is by no means always as fresh or secure as on the Japanese series now under way from BIS.

Taken as a whole, Koopman's cycle is an impressive achievement which will give much pleasure. If the solo singing is sometimes variable, the choral and orchestral contributions (with very sensitive solo obbligati) make a bedrock on which the whole project rests. Koopman's directing vitality keeps the music spontaneously alive, with no sense of over-refinement or scholarly rectitude; the recording is first class, and the documentation could hardly be more informative. In short this is a most enjoyable and rewarding series that will give much satisfaction.

The CDs are packaged in 22 separate volumes with 3 discs and a cross section of cantatas to each volume. No doubt the set will come out as a boxed set in the lifetime of this book.

Complete Cantatas: BIS Masaaki Suzuki Series with Japan Bach Collegium

Cantatas 1; 126; 127 (🔑 ✿ * BIS SACD 1551; with Sampson, Blaze, Türk, Kooy)

Cantatas 2; 3; 38; 135 (🔑 * BIS SACD 1461; with Mields, Berlin, Türk, Kooy)

Cantatas 4; 150; 196 (* BIS CD 751; with Kuriso, Tachikawa, Katano, Kooy)

Cantatas 5; 80; 115 (* BIS CD 1421; with Rydén, Bertin, Türk, Kooy)

Cantatas 6; 42; 103; 108 (* BIS SACD 1611; with Nonoshita, Blaze, Gilchrist, Wörner)

Cantatas 7; 20; 94 (* BIS CD 1321; with Nonoshita, Blaze, Kobow, Kooy)

Cantatas 8; 33; 113 (* BIS CD 1351; with Nonoshita, Blaze, Türk, Kooy)

Cantatas 10; 93; 107; 178 (* BIS CD 1331; with Nonoshita, M. White, Sakurada, Kooy)

Cantata 11 (Ascension); Easter Oratorio, BWV 249 (🔑 * BIS SACD 1561; with Nonoshita, Van Goethem, Kobow, Uramo)

Cantatas 12; 54; 162; 182 (* BIS CD 791; with Kuriso, Mera, Sakurada, Kooy)

Cantatas 13; 16; 32 (Concerto in Dialogo); 9; 72 (* BIS SACD 1722; with Nicholls, Blaze, Türk, Kooji)

Cantatas 18; 152; 155; 161; 163 (* BIS CD 841; with Midori Suzuki, Schmithüsen, Mera, Sakurada, Kooy)

Cantatas 21 (with 3 alternative movements); 31 (* BIS CD 851; with Frimmer, Türk, Kooy)

Cantatas 21; 147 (🔑 * BIS CD 1031; with Nonoshita, Blaze, Türk, Kooy, Concerto Palatino (BWV 21))

Cantatas 22–3; 75 (* BIS CD 901; with M. Suzuki, Mera, Türk, Kooy)

Cantatas 24; 76; 167 (* BIS CD 931; with M. Suzuki, Blaze, Türk, Urano)

Cantatas 25; 50; 64; 69a; 77 (* BIS CD 1041; with Nonoshita, Blaze, Sollek-Avella, Türk, Sakurada, Kooy, Concerto Palatino (BWV 25 & 64))

Cantatas 25; 68; 85; 175; 183 (BIS SACD 1641; with Sampson, Blaze, Türk, Kooy)

Cantatas 35; 169; 170; Aria, BWV 200 (* BIS SACD 1621; with Blaze)

Cantatas 37; 86; 104; 166 ( BIS CD 1261; with Nonoshita, Blaze, Sakurada, MacLeod)

Cantatas 40; 60; 70; 90 (* BIS CD 1111; with Nonoshita, Blaze, Türk, Kooy)

Cantatas 41; 92; 130 (🔑 * BIS SACD 1541; with Nonoshita, Blaze, Kobow, Wörner)

Cantatas 44; 59; 173; 184 (* BIS CD 1271; with Nonoshita, Hatano, Türk, Kooy)

Cantatas 46; 95; 136; 138 (* BIS CD 991; with M. Suzuki, Wessel, Sakurada, Kooy)

Cantatas 48; 89; 109; 148 (* BIS CD 1081; with M. Suzuki, Blaze, Türk, Urano)

Cantata 51; Cantata 210: Aria: Spielt, ihr besellen Lieder. Aria: Alles mit Gott und nichts ohn' ihn, BWV 1127 (✿ * BIS SACD 1471. with Sampson, Bach Collegium, Japan, Masaaki Suzuki)

Cantatas (i) 52; (ii) 55; (iii) 58; (iv) 82 (* BIS SACD 1631; with (i) Sampson; (ii) Türk; (iii) Sampson, Kooy; (iv) Kooy)

Cantatas 61; 63; 132; 172 (* BIS CD 881; with Schmithüsen, Mera, Sakurada, Kooy)

Cantatas 65; 81; 83; 190 (* BIS CD 1311; with Blaze, Gilchrist, Kooy)

Cantatas 66; 67; 134 (* BIS CD 1251; with Blaze, Sakurada, Kooy)

Cantatas 71; 106; 131 (* BIS CD 781; with M. Suzuki, Yanagisawa, Mera, Türk, Kooy)

Cantatas 73; 144; 153; 154; 181 (* BIS CD 1221; with Nonoshita, Blaze, Türk, Kooy)

Cantatas 74; 87; 128; 176 (* BIS SACD 1571; with Nonoshita, Blaze, Sakurada, Kooy)

Cantatas 78; 99; 114 (* BIS CD 1361; with Nonoshita, Taylor, Sakurada, Kooy)

Cantatas 79; 137; 164; 178 (BIS SACD 1671 with Nonoshita, Blaze, Sakurada, Kooy)

Cantatas 91; 101; 121; 133 (🔑 * BIS SACD 1481; with Nonoshita, Blaze, Türk, Kooy)

Cantatas 96; 122; 180 (* BIS CD 1401; with Nonoshita, Kenworthy-Brown, Sakurada, Kooy)

Cantatas 105; 179; 186 (🔑 Ⓜ * BIS CD 951; with Persson, Blaze, Sakurada, Kooy)

Cantatas 111; 123; 124; 125 (🔑 * BIS SACD 1501; with Nonoshita, Blaze, Weller, Kooy)

Cantatas 119; 194 (* BIS CD 1131; with Hida, Nonoshita, Sollek-Avella, Sakurada, Kupfer, Kooy)

Cantatas (i) 163; (ii) 165; (iii) 185; (iv) 199 (* BIS CD 801; with (i–ii) Yanagisawa; (i–iii) Tachikawa, Sakurada, Schreckenberger; (iii–iv) M. Suzuki)

The variety of recordings of the Bach Cantatas is remarkable, but (although Koopman's Amsterdam set probably comes a close second), undoubtedly Suzuki's series with the Japan Bach Collegium is in a very special class. Each new volume seems to surpass its predecessor and offers performances of total conviction and consummate artistry. These performances radiate freshness, and their vitality is matched by a wonderfully present recorded sound which, in the later volumes, with the addition of the surround effect of SACD, is very realistic indeed, giving one the feeling that one is in the auditorium where the performances are taking place. With Carolyn Sampson, Robin Blaze and Yukari Nonoshita among others joining the soloists in recent volumes, the quality of the solo singing, and indeed of the instrumental obbligati, seems unsurpassable.

Suzuki uses a higher pitch (A = 465) with its concomitant brighter sound, and he also favours female voices. The strings are clean yet have bloom, and the sense of inhibition – of excessive awareness of the constraints of period performance that sometimes mars the Harnoncourt/Leonhardt set – is refreshingly absent here. This set, which comes with each disc fully documented and with texts and translations included, is now occupying a key position in the Bach discography and if one needs to choose from the various cycles currently available, the BIS set would be an obvious first choice. It is now impossible to discuss each CD individually. As each recording appears, the sheer quality of this achievement continues to prove a source of admiration and satisfaction. Masaaki Suzuki is proceeding chronologically. Although the excellence of rival surveys is not in doubt, this Japanese survey is the strongest and most consistent, and the BIS recordings are altogether exemplary.

Cantatas 210 (Wedding); 211 (Coffee)

🔑  BIS CD 1411; with Sampson, Sakurada, Schreckenberger

While the series of church cantatas continues, Suzuki and his team here inaugurate a separate collection of the secular cantatas, including two of the most famous. Carolyn Sampson is the star of both, singing with style and much aplomb in the Coffee Cantata, where Stephan Schreckenberger characterizes equally strongly as her father. Perhaps the bold humour of this work suits Suzuki less well than its companion wedding celebration, which is most beautifully sung and is very successful on all counts.

Cantatas: Gardiner DG Archiv Series with Monteverdi Choir and English Baroque Soloists

Cantatas 113; 179; 199 (🔑  Opus Arte DVD OA 0816D; with Kožená, Towers, Padmore, Loges)

Cantatas for Easter 6; 66 ( DG 463 580-2; with soloists)

Cantatas for Ascension Day 11; 37; 43; 128 ( DG 463 583-2; with Argenta, Blaze, Rolfe Johnson, Genz, Varcoe, Hagen)

Cantatas for Whitsun 34; 59; 74; 172 ( DG 463 584-2; with soloists)

Cantatas for Advent 36; 61; 62 ( DG 463 588-2; with Argenta, Lang, Rolfe Johnson, Bär)

Cantatas for Christmas 63; 64; 121; 133 ( DG 463 589-2; with soloists)

Cantatas for 3rd Sunday after Epiphany 72; 73; 111; 156 (DG 463 582-2; with soloists)

Cantatas for Feast of the Purification of Mary 82; 83; 125; 200 ( DG 463 585-2; with Tyson, Agnew, Harvey)

Cantatas for 9th Sunday after Trinity 94; 105; 168 ( DG 463 590-2; with soloists)

Cantatas 106; 118; 198 ( DG 463 581-2; with Argenta, Chance, Rolfe Johnson, Varcoe)

Cantatas for 11th Sunday after Trinity 113; 179; 199 ( DG 463 591-2; with soloists)

Cantatas 140; 147 (🔑 Ⓜ  DG 463 587-2; with Holton, Chance, Rolfe Johnson, Varcoe)

During the 250th anniversary of Bach's death in 2000 John Eliot Gardiner embarked on an ambitious project to perform all the cantatas on the appropriate days of the liturgical year in a variety of English and European venues. Deutsche Grammophon had planned to record the whole series, but the costs involved, the emergence of rival versions at budget price and the magnificent BIS series from Japan prompted them to reconsider the viability of the project.

The DVD offers not just three complete Bach cantatas but an hour-long feature film. The cantatas are very well chosen; the outer ones from 1723 and 1724 respectively are from Bach's Leipzig period, the central one (for solo soprano) dates from 1714 when Bach was in Weimar. Gardiner characteristically relies on fresh young voices, with the Monteverdi Choir typically bright and incisive, matched by the four soloists. The tenor, Mark Padmore, is excellent; the counter-tenor, William Towers, and the young German baritone, Stephan Loges, are consistently firm and clear. But it is the Czech soprano, Magdalena Kožená, who wins first honours with her superb singing in the solo cantata, Mein Herz schwimmt im Blut. Aptly, she also appears in the St David's sequence in the feature film, one of the 11 venues visited.

The eventual outcome was the release of the CDs listed above. Some are live performances and two are reissues. It goes without saying that in the course of these beautifully recorded performances there is much to refresh the spirit alongside much that has spirit rather than a sense of the spiritual. Gardiner is marvellously alive to the texture and is dedicated and enthusiastic, but he can also be unyielding and lacking in breadth and majesty. Despite such reservations and the fact that Suzuki's series with the Bach Collegium of Japan is even more rewarding, Gardiner's performances are undoubtedly of a consistently high calibre. Both the documentation and presentation are of the usual fine Archiv standard. The recordings are immediate and well balanced.

Soli Deo Gloria Gardiner Series

Cantatas 1, 22–3, 54, 127, 129 & 182 (Ⓜ  Soli Deo Gloria SGD 118 (2) with Holton, Hartelius, Schubert, Stutzman, Gilchrist, Oxley, Harvey, Trinity College Cambridge Ch.)

Cantatas 5; 48; 56; 79; 80; 90; 192 (Ⓜ (*) Soli Deo Gloria SDG 110 (2); with Lunn, Towers, Gilchrist, Harvey)

Cantatas 16; 41; 58; 143; 153; 171 (Ⓜ  Soli Deo Gloria SDG 150 (2) with Holton, Ballard, Humphries, Gilchrist, Harvey, Bruce-Payne

Cantatas: 17; 19; 25; 50; 78; 130; 149 (Ⓜ (*) Soli Deo Gloria SDG 124 (2); with Hartelius, Tyson, Roberts, Gilchrist, Harvey)

Cantatas 18; 84; 92; 126; 144; 181 (Ⓜ  Soli Deo Gloria SDG 153 (2); with Keith, Gruffydd Jones, Tyson, Gilchrist, Persson, Brummelstroete, Oxley, Brown)

Cantatas (i) 24; (ii) 71; 88; 93; 131; (i) 177; 185 (Ⓜ  Soli Deo Gloria SDG 141; with (i) Kožená, Stutzmann, Agnew, Teste; (ii) Lunn, Towers, Van Rensburg, Harvey)

Cantatas 40; 91; 110; 121 (Ⓜ (*) Soli Deo Gloria SDG 113 (2); with Lunn, Fuge, Towers, Tyson, Gilchrist, Harvey)

Cantatas (i) 42; 67; (ii) 85; 104; 112; (i) 150; 158 (Ⓜ  Soli Deo Gloria SDG 131; with (i) Keith, Taylor, Daniels, Varcoe; (ii) Fuge, Towers, Meyn, Varcoe)

Cantatas 45; 46; 101; 102; 136; 178 (Ⓜ  Soli Deo Gloria SDG 147; with Tyson; Genz; Sherratt; Lunn; Taylor; Schwarz)

Cantatas 54; 71; 78; 151; 155; 159; 182; 190; Aria: Alles mit Got und nichts ohn'ihn, BWV 1127 (Ⓜ (*) Soli Deo Gloria SDG 113 (2); with Hartelius, Keith, Lunn, Manahan Thomas, Stutzmann, Tyson, Gilchrist, Harvey)

Cantatas (i) 129; 165; (ii) 175; (i) 176; (ii) 184; (i) 194 (Ⓜ  Soli Deo Gloria SDG 138; with (i) Holton, Taylor, Agnew, Harvey; (ii) Larsson, Stutzmann, Genz, Loges)

When DG decided they could no longer sustain John Eliot Gardiner's ongoing pilgrimage to record all of Bach's cantatas in various venues, he bravely decided to set up his own label and underwrite the project himself and the project has proved successful on all counts. Performances are of a high standard, especially with regard to the soloists, and while ensemble cannot be as immaculate as it would be in the studios, the extra vividness of 'live communication' more than compensates.

The discs are being issued in handsomely produced double-packs, each like a book with notes, texts and translations bound into the leaves, although the reason for the choice of the picture which illuminates the front of each pack is elusive. The venues include Tewkesbury Abbey, St Magnus Cathedral, Kirkwall, and the Bach-Kirche in Arnstadt, and in all the concerts here the usual high standard of performance and recording are maintained. However, we have to comment that Gardiner's performances, fresh and clear-headed as they are, and often imbued with considerable intensity, do not quite match those of Suzuki in concentration, warmth and ultimate polish; nor are the recordings as seductive as the glorious SACD surround sound which BIS provide for the Japan Bach Collegium.

Cantatas: New Chandos Purcell Quartet Series

Early Cantatas, Volume 1: Cantatas 4; 106; 131; 196

 Chan. 0715. Kirkby, Chance, Daniels, Harvey, Augmented Purcell Qt

Early Cantatas, Volume 2: Cantatas 12; 18; 61; 161

* Chan. 0742. Kirkby, Chance, Daniels, Harvey, Augmented Purcell Qt

Early Cantatas, Volume 3: Cantatas 21; 172; 182

 Chan. 0752 (2). Kirkby, Chance, Daniels, Harvey, Augmented Purcell Qt

These Chandos discs are the first in a new survey of the Bach cantatas, using period instruments and creating a chamber scale of considerable intimacy. The first-rate soloists join together here to act as the chorus. No quarrels with the performances at all – they have a great sense of style – or with the excellent recordings, but obviously this is not for those who require a greater amplitude of sonority in this repertoire. Although the Purcell Quartet is listed as the accompanying group, it is augmented by other players, and there are some memorable obbligato contributions, showing just how effective small-scale performances can be.

Other cantata groupings

Cantata 11 (Ascension)

 EuroArts DVD 2054039. Karthäuser, Hardt, Einhorn, Van de Crabben, La Petite Bande, Kuijken (V/D: Michael Beyer) – C. P. E. BACH: Die Auferstehung und Himmelfahrt Jesu **(*)

It was a happy idea to combine a performance of Bach's Ascension Cantata, Lobett Got with his son's Ascension Oratorio, although the juxtaposition shows that while the latter is a fine work, Johann Sebastian's cantata is a supreme masterpiece. It is splendidly sung here, with excellent soloists and a first-class period-instrumental group, all working together as a team. The result is very enjoyable indeed, and beautifully recorded.

Cantatas 49, 57 & 152

(*) DG 477 6591. Quasthoff, Röschmann, Berlin RIAS Chamber Ch. & Berlin Bar. Sol., Kussmaul

The glory of this triptych is the wonderfully refined and richly coloured accompaniments from Kussmaul and the Berlin Baroque Soloists, but the disc does not quite repeat the success of its predecessor, below. In these Dialogue Cantatas Thomas Quasthoff is as impressive as ever, but Dorothea Röschmann, although she sings confidently and phrases eloquently, at times has quavery tone production which not all will take to.

Cantatas 51; 82a; 199

Ⓝ * Virgin 235004-2 Dessay, Le Concert d'Astrée, Haim

Natalie Dessay's dramatic experience adds to the projection of singing that is also movingly pure in line, especially in the ravishing account of Ich habe genug with its gentle flute obbligato. But the opening of Jauchzet Got, with its sparklingly joyful trumpet contributions is equally telling, with Dessay's exuberant vocal virtuosity always at the service of the composer. The disc concludes with Mein Herze schwimmt im Blut, with its theme of the repentant sinner joyfully accepting God's forgiveness, which is perhaps most emotionally demanding of all. Dessay's response is very moving in its simplicity and vocal beauty. Its pair of oboe solos bring the most sensitive playing from Patrick Beaugirade, as do Alexis Kossenko's lovely flute decorations of Ich habe genug, and the orchestral playing is wonderfully warm and refined throughout the disc. It is handsomely packaged, and comes with a 52-minute bonus DVD made at the recording sessions.

Cantatas 54; 169; 170

Ⓑ  Hyp. Helios CDH 55312. Bowman, King's Consort, King

James Bowman is on impressive form and his admirers need not hesitate here. The present disc is very desirable and the King's Consort under Robert King give excellent support. Good recorded sound.

Cantatas 56; 82; 158

🔑 * DG Surround Sound SACD 477532-6; CD 474505-2. Quasthoff, Berlin Bar. Sol., Kussmaul

Here is another of the most beautiful Bach cantata records in the catalogue. Thomas Quasthoff has the warmest bass-baritone voice you could possibly imagine, and his performance of the famous Ich habe genug is second to none (even remembering the many famous past recordings). His phrasing is wonderfully musical, and Rainer Kussmaul and his Berlin Baroque Soloists, playing modern instruments with authentic manners, accompany him with comparable warmth and style. The splendid oboe soloist is Albrecht Mayer. The recording is splendid, but if you have four-channel SACD facilities with back speakers, the added realism with a feeling of sitting within the ambience of the Berlin Dahlem Jesus-Christus-Kirche is uncannily real, and it brings an added depth to the voice as well as spaciousness to the accompaniment.

Cantatas 63; 91; 121 & 133. Magnificat in E flat, BWV 243a

🔑 * HMC 90 1781/2. Mields, Sampson, Danz, Padmore, Kooy, Noack, Ghent Coll. Voc., Herreweghe

A splendid compilation of Christmas cantatas from 1723/4, plus the glorious original version of the Magnificat, which was also intended for Christmas Day. Cantata 63, Christen, äztet diesen Tag, is equally jubilant and celebratory, richly scored for brass; and the other cantatas offer considerable variety of mood, reflecting Bach's remarkably varied musical response to this special time in the Christian calendar. Apart from fine choral singing, the soloists are memorable, especially Carolyn Sampson, surely an ideal Bach soprano, Ingeborg Danz and Mark Padmore.

Cantata 82: Ich habe genug

🔑 Ⓜ (*) EMI mono 5 62807-2. Hotter, Philh. O, Bernard – BRAHMS: Lieder ***

One of the greatest cantata performances ever. Glorious singing from Hans Hotter and wonderfully stylish accompanying from Anthony Bernard and the Philharmonia. This 1950 mono recording was never reissued on LP and it sounds vividly present in its current remastering. Moreover, EMI have found some extra Brahms songs to add to the coupling.

Cantatas (i) 82; (i–iii) 159; (ii) 170

🔑 ✿ Ⓑ * Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD) 476 2684. ASMF, Marriner; with (i) Shirley-Quirk; (ii) J. Baker; (iii) Tear

Classic accounts of three cantatas, including Seher, wir geh'n gen Jerusalem (159), one of Bach's most inspired works. Particularly glorious is the meditation Es ist vollbracht ('It is finished'), with its poignant oboe obbligato (played by Rachel Lord). Both Dame Janet Baker and John Shirley-Quirk are in marvellous voice, as they are in Nos. 82 and 170 – hardly less inspired works and performances. Indeed, this collection of cantatas is among the finest in the catalogue and is well worth seeking out. The mid-1960s recordings are of Decca's best vintage quality.

(i) Cantatas 82; 199; (ii) Double Concerto for Oboe & Violin, BWV 1060

* Priory/Carus 83 302. (i) Kirkby; (ii) Arften, Von der Golz; Freiburg Bar. Ens., Golz

Emma Kirkby's outstandingly fine account of Ich habe genug virtually ranks alongside the highly praised baritone versions of Hans Hotter and John Shirley-Quirk and this is claimed to be the first recording of the present E minor version. What is remarkable about the coupling, Mein Herz schwimmt im Blut, is not only the lyrical beauty of the arias, but the way this great baroque soprano invests the recitatives with comparable feeling. Here the obbligato is for oboe, and Katherina Arften is most sensitive in this role while, as a refreshing interlude, she joins the leader and conductor Von der Golz in the engaging Double Concerto, BWV 1060. The accompaniments could hardly be bettered, and the recording ambience and balance are just about perfect.

Cantatas 199; 202. Arias from Cantatas 68; 208

 Testament (ADD) SBT 1178. Schwarzkopf, Philh. O, Dart – MOZART: Ch'io mi scordi di te? ()

Testament have here gathered together Schwarzkopf recordings made in 1955–8 that for various reasons were never published. It is especially fascinating to compare the two versions (in German) of 'Sheep may safely graze', recorded a year apart in 1957 and 1958 – the second one far more dramatic in the recitative, and generally more freely expressive. The poised Schwarzkopf predominates, but the vehement Schwarzkopf also repeatedly comes through vividly, directly reflecting the singer's strong, positive character. Excellent transfers.

Cantatas 199; 202; 209

(BB)  Naxos 8.550431. Wagner, Capella Istropolitana, Brembeck

Mein Herz schwimmt im Blut (BWV 199) comes from Bach's Weimar years, and Friederike Wagner proves both sympathetic and lively; and both Weichet nur, betrübte Schatten, popularly known as the 'Wedding Cantata', and 209, Non sà che sia dolore, are given thoroughly enjoyable performances. Not for devotees of authentic-performance practice, but enjoyable for those who prefer a more traditional approach. Decent recording too.

Cantatas 202; 210 (Wedding Cantatas). Cantata 82 (excerpt): Ich habe genug. Arias (attrib.): Bist du bei mir (BWV 508, probably by Gottfried Stölzel); Gedenke doch, mein Geist (BWV 509, Anon.)

🔑 * Decca 455 972-2. Kirkby, AAM, Hogwood

This is among the most delightful of all the records of Bach's solo secular cantatas. Emma Kirkby, in her freshest voice, is ideally cast – as the lovely opening aria, Weichet nur, from the more famous of the two Wedding Cantatas, immediately shows. Her singing is no less ravishing in Schlummert ein from BWV 82, Schweigt, ihr Flöten ('Hush, you flutes' – Bach here isn't meaning to be taken seriously) from BWV 210, or the most famous 'Bach aria' which is not written by Bach, Bist du bei mir. The accompaniments from Hogwood and his Academy of Ancient Music could not have a lighter touch or more finesse, and the obbligato playing (of which there is a great deal) could not be more sensitive or more fluent.

Cantatas 208 (Hunting); 212 (Peasant)

Ⓝ Ⓜ  Warner 2564 69259-2 Blasi, Holl, Kenny, Equiluz, Arnold Schoenberg Ch., VCM, Harnoncourt

Harnoncourt topped off his complete recording of Bach's church cantatas with admirably ebullient accounts of a pair of secular cantatas, celebrating the name-days of two local dignitaries. The solo contributions in both works are splendid, and Blasi and the robust Robert Holl both enjoy themselves hugely in the boisterous Peasant Cantata. A typical eulogy from the soprano is introduced by a quotation of the famous La Folia, and the musical interest of this remarkably inspired cantata (considering its ragbag of a text) is Bach's use of various old melodies familiar to his audience. The exuberance of the performance carries over to Harnoncourt's accompaniments – no scholarly rectitude here – and the recording is first rate.

Cantatas 211 (Coffee Cantata); 212 (Peasant Cantata)

 O-L 417 621-2. Kirkby, Covey-Crump, Thomas, AAM, Hogwood

Emma Kirkby is particularly appealing in the Coffee Cantata and her father is admirably portrayed by David Thomas. Hogwood opts for single strings, and some may find they sound thin; however, there is a corresponding gain in lightness and intimacy. The recording is altogether first class.

Major choral works

Christmas Oratorio, BWV 248; Mass in B min., BWV 232; St John Passion, BWV 245; St Matthew Passion, BWV 244

🔑 Ⓑ  DG 469 769-2 (9). Soloists, Monteverdi Ch., E. Bar. Sol., Gardiner

All these performances are among our primary choices for these works, and this bargain box in DG's Collectors' Edition cannot be too highly recommended. The documentation is excellent, although no translations are included.

Christmas Oratorio, BWV 248

🔑  DG 423 232-2 (2). Rolfe Johnson, Argenta, von Otter, Blochwitz, Bär, Monteverdi Ch., E. Bar. Sol., Gardiner

🔑  BIS CD 941/2. Frimmer, Mera, Türk, Kooy, Bach Coll., Japan, Suzuki

Ⓝ (BB)  EMI Gemini (ADD) 5 69503-2 (2) Ameling, J. Baker, Tear, Fischer-Dieskau, King's College Cambridge Ch., ASMF, Ledger

The freshness of the singing and playing in the DG CD set is a constant pleasure. Far more than usual, one registers the joyfulness of the work, from the trumpets and timpani at the start onwards. Anthony Rolfe Johnson makes a pointful and expressive Evangelist, and also outstanding is Anne Sofie von Otter with her natural gravity and exceptionally beautiful mezzo. Beauty of tone consistently marks the singing of Nancy Argenta, Hans-Peter Blochwitz and Olaf Bär. The sound is full and atmospheric.

As in his recordings of the Bach cantatas, Masaaki Suzuki directs an exceptionally fresh and alert reading of the Christmas Oratorio, bringing out the joy of Bach's inspiration, with outstandingly crisp singing from the chorus. Speeds are often fast, but in the beautiful cradle-song, Schlafe mein Liebster, relaxed pacing allows full expressiveness, here with Yoshikazu Mera as a characterful male alto soloist. Mera in florid writing does not always avoid the intrusive 'h', but that is one of the few blemishes in the solo singing, with Gerd Türk a fine Evangelist and Peter Kooy a firmly focused bass. Warm, atmospheric sound, though with the choir behind the instruments in the main choruses. This makes a fine alternative to the Gardiner version.

It was Ledger who played the harpsichord continuo in many of Benjamin Britten's performances of this work, and some of Britten's imagination comes through here, helped by four outstanding and stylish soloists. The King's College acoustic gives a warm background to the nicely scaled performance of choir and orchestra; the timpani at the very start sound spectacularly impressive.

Easter Oratorio, BWV 249; Cantata 66: Erfreut euch, ihr Herzen

🔑  HM HMC 901513. Schlick, Wessel, Taylor, Kooy, Coll. Voc., Herreweghe

Bach's Easter Oratorio derives from a secular cantata, more than once revised. It opens with a joyful Sinfonia and an Adagio with oboe solo (very well played in the Herreweghe account), followed by a lively chorus ('Come hasten, come running, ye swift feet') with trumpets, but then it depends very much on the soloists, who blend beautifully together in their introductory recitativo before taking their individual roles with distinction – as Mary Magdalene, Peter and John respectively. The chorus and trumpets then return to end the work joyfully. The apt coupling of the Easter Cantata, BWV 66, with its lovely closing Alleluja completes a disc which is fresh and vivid and will be hard to surpass.

Easter Oratorio, BWV 249; Magnificat, BWV 243

(*) DG 477 6359. Gabrieli Consort & Players, McCreesh

Using five solo voices in the choruses and choosing Bach's less spectacular version of the Magnificat, with flutes tellingly added to the scoring, Paul McCreesh's authenticity brings above all a dedicated approach, so that the opening Sinfonia in the oratorio and the opening chorus in the Magnificat are colourful but less than overwhelming. However, the performances are made both distinctive and appealing by the lovely solo singing from Kimberly McCord and Julia Gooding (sopranos), Robin Blaze (alto) and Paul Agnew (tenor), especially in the Magnificat. The recording is suitably refined and clear.

Magnificat in E flat, BWV 243a; Cantata 10: Meine Seele erhebt den Herren

 EuroArts DVD 2053419. York, Bartosz, Dürmüller, Mertens, Amsterdam Bar. Ch. & O, Koopman – KUHNAU: Magnificat

Koopman chooses the earlier, E flat major version of the Magnificat, and it makes a magnificent début on DVD, recorded at St Thomas's Church, Leipzig, where, like its Kuhnau coupling, it was first heard. The performance is thrilling, with its bolder E flat major trumpets and splendidly incisive choral contribution. The soloists too are first class, both individually and as a team. Like Suzuki, Koopman offers the Kuhnau setting and includes also a fine performance of the cantata Meine Seele erherbt den Herren, which has associations with the more ambitious work. The camera is used sensibly and follows the music from soloists to chorus to instrumentalists. The cantata too is very successful in all respects.

(i) Magnificat in D; (ii) Violin Concerto 2

 Sony DVD SVD 45983. BPO, Karajan; with (i) Blegen, Mollinari, Araiza, Holl, Berlin RIAS Chamber Ch.; (ii) Mutter (Director: Humphrey Burton)

There are few better examples on DVD than this of a conductor's magnetism being almost tangible. It is apparent during Anne-Sophie Mutter's fine performance of the Violin Concerto, although she is given the limelight; but in the Magnificat one can feel the whole orchestra, chorus and soloists responding to the conductor, while Karajan's actual movements are minimal, his face all but impassive. This is gloriously old-fashioned Bach with a large orchestra, and when the camera dwells on the blazing trumpets, one feels almost able to reach out and touch them. It is a thrilling performance, richly and vividly recorded, and one feels right in the middle of it.

Magnificat in D, BWV 243

🔑 * Telarc SACD 60651. Tamara Matthews, Deanne Meek, Mary Phillips, Boston Baroque, Pearlman – VIVALDI: Gloria ***

🔑 Ⓜ  Virgin 3 63299-2. De Reyghere, Jacobs, Prégardien, Lika, Netherlands Chamber Ch., La Petite Bande, Kuijken

🔑  Chan. 0518. Kirkby, Bonner, Chance, Ainsley, Varcoe, Coll. Mus. 90, Hickox – VIVALDI: Gloria ***

Ⓝ (BB)  EMI Encore 2 08125-2 Hendricks, Murray, Rigby, Hellman, Hynninen, ASMF, Marriner – VIVALDI: Gloria ***

The opening of the new Telarc (Surround Sound) SACD from Martin Pearlman's Boston Baroque is immediately arresting. If one gets the balance of the back speakers just right, the sense of presence in the warm hall acoustic is very real. All the soloists are excellent, and they blend beautifully when they sing together in the Et misericordia and Suscepit Israel. The choral singing is committedly expressive and, if not always precise in the runs, this is partly the effect of the warm acoustic which prevents absolute sharpness of focus. But the overall impression is wholly natural and Pearlman's tempi are aptly vivacious. The Vivaldi coupling is comparably successful.

Splendidly framed by the vigorous opening and closing choruses with their resplendent trumpets, Kuijken's reissued version of the Magnificat from 1988, performed by the excellent Netherlanders and La Petite Bande, makes a strong mid-priced recommendation. There are some first-class contributions from Greta de Reyghere and Christoph

Prégardien with lovely singing from the soprano and a finely matched oboe obbligato in the aria Quia respexit. There are moments of vulnerable intonation from the oboe, but this is a small blemish. The choral singing is warmly expressive (especially in Suscepit Israel) and as lightly articulated as you could wish. The coupling is one of Bach's most expansive and celebrated Weimar cantatas, Ich hatte viel Bekümmernis, which again gives the soprano and tenor plenty of opportunities for espressivo, individually and as a duo, after which the trumpets return for the intricate closing chorus of praise. Above all there is a sense of breadth and majesty fully worthy of Bach. A highly recommendable disc in every respect.

Both Richard Hickox and Pearlman couple the Magnificat with the popular D major Gloria, RV 589, of Vivaldi, and for collectors seeking this coupling the clear choice is between period and modern instruments. Those who like the former will gravitate towards Hickox, who directs a most musical account and has the benefit of such fine singers as Emma Kirkby, Michael Chance and Stephen Varcoe, and good Chandos recording.

Marriner's performance with the Academy is well paced and executed with precision and fine musical intelligence. No quarrels with the soloists either, or with the splendidly warm and present recording. This can be recommended with confidence.

Markus Passion (1731) (reconstructed Koopman)

 Chall. DVD CCDVD 72141. Prégardien, Kooy, York, Landauer, Agnew, Mertens, Amsterdam Bar. Ch. & O, Koopman

The St Mark Passion is lost, and for many years scholars have been conjecturing as to whether its music had found its way into other Bach works. Ton Koopman has started afresh, drawing on Bach's music written before Easter 1731 and composing his own recitatives to the text by Christian Friederick Henrici, alias Picander, with the soloists participating in the words of the arias. The result is a triumphant success: a modest work, setting the Passion story with an appealing simplicity, but one which is very convincing in the present splendid performance. Indeed, it is difficult to imagine it being bettered, with superb soloists and Christoph Prégardien as Evangelist telling the story and Peter Kooy as Christ. There are only a limited number of arias but they are finely sung by the starry cast, and the chorus is as dedicated as it is excellent. The performance has all the virtues of a live performance, and the recording and camerawork against the beautiful backcloth of the Chiesa di San Simpliciano, Milan, is well handled. A most rewarding and repeatable experience.

(i) Masses (Missae breves): in F, BWV 233; in G, BWV 236. Trio Sonata in C, transposed to D, BWV 529

🔑  Chan. 0653. (i) Argenta, Chance, Padmore, Harvey, instrumental soloists; Purcell Qt

Masses (Missae breves): in A, BWV 234; in G min., BWV 235

🔑  Chan. 0642. Gritton, Blaze, Padmore, Harvey, Purcell Qt

There have been various good modern-instrument performances of these so-called short or Lutheran Masses over the years, but the authentic period-instrument performances on Chandos must now take pride of place. Although the soloists provide the one-voice-to-a-part chorus, their voices blend so richly together that one is not conscious of any lack of body or contrast: indeed the effect is glorious, while in the F major work the vigorous trumpeting horns add to the joyfulness of the Gloria and Cum Sancto Spiritu. The solo singing is splendid, and the overall balance quite excellent. The first disc uses a Trio Sonata to act as a kind of extended opening sinfonia, and very effectively too. This is the CD to try first, and you will surely want the other one also.

Masses (Missae breves), BWV 232: Sanctus (only); 233; 234; 235; 236; Gloria in excelsis Deo (from Cantata 191); Magnificat, BWV 243

Ⓝ  Challenge CC 72188 (2) Soloists, Amsterdam Bar. Ch. & O, Koopman

Following on after his set of the Cantatas, Koopman turns his attention to the Missae breves, with comparably impressive results. There are generally first class solo contributions (especially in the Gloria in excelsis Deo) and the Amsterdam Chorus and Baroque Orchestra are well up to form. Recommended especially to those not favouring one instrument to a part performances as are offered on Chandos.

Mass in B min., BWV 232 (DVD Version)

🔑  Virgin DVD 00946 370636-9. Ziesak, DiDonato, Taylor, Agnew, Henschel, Maîtrise Notre-Dame de Paris, O Ens. de Paris, Nelson (Director: Olivier Simonnet)

John Nelson gives the Mass in B minor a splendid DVD debut with a wholly invigorating and deeply expressive performance. He has excellent soloists, both individually (Daniel Taylor's Agnus Dei is memorable) and singing together (the Domine Deus another highlight). The soprano Ruth Ziesak sings radiantly and her duet with Joyce DiDonato in the Kyrie is an early highlight. The choral group have the men outnumbered by the women, and this affects the balance at times; but the singing in the Gloria, Sanctus, and especially the Osanna is thrilling. Nelson's tempi are admirably chosen and the performance moves forward spontaneously to its satisfying closing Donna nobis pacem. The authentic-sized orchestra plays modern French instruments. The cameras make the most of the interior, yet perceptively concentrate on the performers. In short, Olivier Simonnet's film is fully worthy of the music-making.

Mass in B min., BWV 232 (CD versions)

🔑 * DG 415 514-2 (2). Argenta, Dawson, Fairfield, Knibbs, Kwella, Hall, Nichols, Chance, Collin, Stafford, Evans, Milner, Murgatroyd, Lloyd-Morgan, Varcoe, Monteverdi Ch., E. Bar. Sol., Gardiner

🔑  BIS SACD 1701/2. Sampson, Nicholls, Blaze, Türk, Kooy, Japan Bach Collegium, Suzuki

🔑  BBC (ADD) BBCL 4062-2 (2). Hill, J. Baker, Pears, Shirley-Quirk, New Philh. Ch. and O, Giulini

🔑 Ⓜ  Hyp. Dyad CDD 22051 (2). Ritter, Mrasek, Schloderer, Fraas, Rolfe Johnson, George, Tölz Boys' Ch., King's Cons. Ch., King's Cons., King

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI 2 28507-2 (2). Donath, Fassbaender, Ahnsjö, Hermann, Holl, Bav. R. Ch. & O, Jochum

John Eliot Gardiner gives a magnificent account of the B minor Mass, one which attempts to keep within an authentic scale but which also triumphantly encompasses the work's grandeur. Gardiner masterfully conveys the majesty (with bells and censer-swinging evoked) simultaneously with a crisply resilient rhythmic pulse. The choral tone is luminous and powerfully projected. The regular solo numbers are taken by choir members making a cohesive whole. The recording is warmly atmospheric but not cloudy.

Masaaki Suzuki's performance is gloriously recorded in the BIS surround sound we now take for granted in his fine Bach series. The opening Kyrie sets the warmly relaxed style of the performance, with the Gloria, Cum Sancto Spiritu and Sanctus contrastingly exuberant and the closing Dona nobis pacem richly dignified. The choral singing is characteristically fine, and Carolyn Sampson and Robin Blaze's contributions stand out: Qui sedes and Agnus Dei are very moving. Instrumental obbligati are also memorable. This account may not be as extrovert and vital as with Gardiner, but in his warmer, more restrained way Suzuki is just as persuasive.

In the echoing acoustic of St Paul's Cathedral – remarkably well-tamed by the BBC engineers – Giulini conducts a spacious, dedicated reading with a superb quartet of soloists, notably Dame Janet Baker, whose contributions shine out with heart-warming fervour. Peter Pears, then 62, is in fine, clear voice, as is the bass, John Shirley-Quirk, with the soprano, Jenny Hill, fresh and bright. The chorus is not so clearly focused as the soloists, particularly in the meditative numbers, yet in vigorous sections and in the great censer-swinging rhythms of the Sanctus the weight and bite of the singing come over thrillingly. Giulini adopts speeds on the broad side even for a traditional, large-scale performance, but soloists and chorus alike sustain them superbly, as do the orchestra. As an illuminating supplement an interview with Giulini by John Amis is included at the end.

With the distinctive continental tone of the Tölzer Boys, very different from their English counterparts, Robert King's vigorous and alert reading has extra freshness, with 24 boys set brightly against 12 of the King's Consort tenors and basses. The individual finesse of the boy singers is impressively demonstrated in the solos. This is a reading which consistently brings out the joy of Bach's inspiration, not least in the great celestial outbursts of the Sanctus and the final Dona nobis pacem. Warm, atmospheric recording.

Jochum's memorable, dedicated (1980) performance, marked by resilient rhythms, remains among the most completely satisfying versions even today. The choral singing – by far the most important element in this work – is superb and, though the soloists are variably balanced, they make a fine, clear-voiced team to leave Bach's inspired music resonating in the listener's memory. The digital recording is admirably spacious and clear. Documentation is just about adequate, but with no text.

Motets: Singet dem Herrn ein Neues Lied; Der Geist hilft unsrer Schwachheit; Jesu, meine Freude; Der Gerechte Kommt um Fürchte dich nicht; Komm, Jesu, Komm; Lobet den Herrn; Sei Lob und Preis mit Ehren, BWV 225–31

🔑 Ⓜ  Teldec 0630 17430-2. Stockholm Bach Ch., VCM, Harnoncourt

The Teldec recording is very successful indeed, beautifully fresh and clear, the acoustic attractively resonant without clouding detail, and the accompanying instrumental group giving discreet yet telling support. The vigour and joy of the singing come over splendidly. This is one of Harnoncourt's most impressive Bach records, while the Stockholm chorus show stamina as well as sympathy. At mid-price this must now be the prime recommendation for these six works.

St John Passion, BWV 245 (DVD versions)

🔑 Ⓜ  EuroArts Invitation DVD 2050396. Türk, Midori Suzuki, Blaze, Urano, MacLeod, Japan Bach Coll., Masaaki Suzuki (includes interview with conductor)

🔑  DG DVD 073 4291. Equiluz, Holl, Soprano & Alto Soloists of Vienna Boys' Ch., Moser, Scharinger, Tölz Boys' Ch., VCM, Harnoncourt (Director: Humphrey Burton)

Recorded in Suntory Hall, Tokyo, on 28 July 2000 – the day marking the 250th anniversary of Bach's death – this is an outstanding version on DVD of the St John Passion, a tribute to the work of Masaaki Suzuki in Japan. The interpretation remains very similar to Suzuki's earlier CD account on BIS, with fresh, light textures and generally brisk speeds which yet allow for depth of feeling, and the sense of occasion is irresistible. Only Gerd Türk as the Evangelist is presented as a soloist in front of the choir, giving an achingly beautiful performance, with his profound involvement all the more evident when seen as well as heard. Türk also sings the tenor arias, and the other soloists, all first rate, also have double roles, singing in the sixteen-strong choir (4–4–4–4) before stepping forward when needed as soloists: Stephan MacLeod singing Christus as well as the bass arias, Chiyuki Urano singing Pilate and other incidental solos, Robin Blaze a superb alto soloist and the ravishing Midori Suzuki in the two soprano arias.

Harnoncourt has successfully recorded the St John Passion three times, first in 1971 with similar forces to this 1985 DG set, and more recently in 1993 when he opted for the mixed voices of the Schoenberg Choir and a fine team of soloists. But this DVD version continued his earlier pattern with all-male forces and boy trebles in the choir as well as singing the soprano and alto arias. The result is very successful indeed, authentic in every respect, and the visual and acoustic ambience of Graz Cathedral adds much to the projection of what is an outstandingly vibrant account, second to none. The two soloists from the Vienna Boys' Choir are extraordinarily assured, the singing of the alto especially fine. But what sets the seal on the power of the performance is Kurt Equiluz's vividly inspired narrative as the Evangelist, answered eloquently by Robert Holl as a richly resonant Jesus. The choral contribution is a pleasure to watch, when the boys are so obviously committed and involved, and the period instrumental support of the Vienna Concentus Musicus is splendid, tempi are admirably flexible (the chorales especially moving) and Harnoncourt himself electrifyingly dominates the proceedings. Humphrey Burton's visual direction uses the church interior very tellingly, although concentrating mainly on the performers. The sound is excellent and surtitles are available.

St John Passion (CD versions)

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.557296/7 (2). Gilchrist, Bernays, Dougan, Littlewood, Bowman, Beale, Baldy, New College, Oxford, Ch., Coll. Novum, Higginbottom

🔑  DG 419 324-2 (2). Rolfe Johnson, Varcoe, Hauptmann & soloists, Monteverdi Ch., E. Bar. Sol., Gardiner

🔑  BIS CD 921/22. Schmithüsen, Mera, Türk, Sakurada, Hida, Urano, Kooy, Bach Coll., Japan, Suzuki

The Naxos CD version of the St John Passion, with the choir of New College, Oxford, at budget price, offers an outstanding period performance which can stand comparison with any in the catalogue. Only male voices are used, with the soprano arias sung by a boy treble. The choir itself is fresh and bright, singing incisively, with the crowd choruses vividly adding to the drama, helped by the natural balance. Higginbottom's speeds on the fast side follow period practice, except in relatively broad chorales. James Gilchrist is a superb Evangelist, fluent and expressive, and the main quartet of soloists makes a sensitive team, including the confidently firm-toned treble, Joe Littlewood, and the veteran counter-tenor, James Bowman, still in fine voice. The wind instruments of the Collegium Novum have a sharp edge, which brings out the agony implied in the accompaniment to the opening chorus, while the darkness of instrumentation in the great alto aria, Es ist vollbracht, adds to the poignancy of Bowman's singing.

Gardiner conducts an exhilarating performance. Speeds are regularly on the fast side but, characteristically, he consistently keeps a spring in the rhythm. Chorales are treated in contrasted ways, which may not please the more severe authenticists; but, as with so much of Gardiner's work, here is a performance using authentic scale and period instruments which speaks in the most vivid way to anyone prepared to listen, not just to the specialist. Soloists – regular contributors to Gardiner's team – are all first rate. Warm and atmospheric, yet clear and detailed recording.

Suzuki directs an urgently refreshing reading of the St John Passion on BIS, with fine singing from the chorus giving dramatic impact to the 'turba' choruses. The big choruses at the beginning and end are beautifully sung too, though here the voices are set back behind the orchestra and are rather lightweight. Suzuki's feeling for the natural timing of numbers – generally on the fast side in the modern period manner – is impeccable, and the soloists make an excellent team, with Gerd Türk an outstanding Evangelist, light and clear. There is additionally a reduced price boxed set combining Suzuki's outstanding performances of the St John and St Matthew Passions (BIS CD 1342/4).

St John Passion (in English)

✿ (B)  Double Decca (ADD) 443 859-2 (2). Pears, Harper, Hodgson, Tear, Howell, Shirley-Quirk, Wandsworth School Boys' Ch., ECO, Britten

Britten characteristically refuses to follow any set tradition, whether baroque, Victorian or whatever, and, with greater extremes of tempo than is common (often strikingly fast), the result makes one listen afresh. The soloists are all excellent, Heather Harper radiant, and the Wandsworth School Boys' Choir reinforces the freshness of the interpretation. A superb bargain.

St Matthew Passion, BWV 244 (DVD version)

🔑  Chall. DVD CCDCD 72233 (2). Dürmüller, Abele, Samuelis, Bartosz, Agnew, Mertens, Breda Sacraments Church Boys' Ch., Amsterdam Bar. Ch. & O, Koopman

Having completed his cycle of cantatas, in 2005 Koopman turned to the St Matthew Passion, which he recorded live at St Joriskerk, Amersfoort, using the tenor and bass soloists from his cantata series – Paul Agnew and Klaus Mertens, who make distinguished contributions, although Mertens is comparatively light-voiced. Jörg Dürmüller (the Evangelist) is first class in every way. He tells the tragic story sympathetically and often dramatically, and he has a fine, rich tone, and when he makes a lyrical comment his voice is honeyed. Ekkehard Abele (Christ), darker but not gruff, is similarly impressive, and the crucifixion dialogues of Part II are among the most telling elements of the performance, supported by vivid choral interjections, typical of the choral singing as a whole which, when needed, is full of vitality, as for instance in Sind Blitze sind Donner at the end of Part I.

St Matthew Passion, BWV 244 (CD versions)

🔑  DG 474 200-2 (2). York, Gooding, Kožená, Bickley, Padmore, Gilchrist, Harvey, Loges, Gabrieli Players, McCreesh

🔑  DG 427 648-2 (3). Rolfe Johnson, Schmidt, Bonney, Monoyios, von Otter, Chance, Crook, Bär, Hauptmann, Monteverdi Ch., E. Bar. Sol., Gardiner

🔑  BIS CD 1000/1002 (3). Türk, Kooy, Argenta, Blaze, Sakurada, Urano, Sollek-Avella, Hagiwara, Odagawa, Bach Coll., Japan, Ch. & O, Suzuki

Though Paul McCreesh uses minimum forces for Bach's masterpiece, with one voice per part, the result has the sharpest dramatic impact, thanks not only to the incisiveness of the performance but also to the vivid immediacy of the recorded sound, with words exceptionally clear. The great opening chorus sets the pattern. The speed is far faster than usual, with the compound time conveying jollity. Mark Padmore as the Evangelist is fresh and fluent throughout, also taking on the tenor arias with his light, heady tone. Though Peter Harvey, more a baritone than a bass, has his moments of grittiness, as in the bass aria, Gerne will ich, with its low tessitura, he makes a suitably grave Jesus in the recitatives. Deborah York as first soprano and Magdalena Kožená as alto, both solo and choral, are excellent with clear, firm voices. As for the supreme alto aria, Erbarme dich mein Gott, with its baroque violin obbligato, Kožená in an intimate atmosphere conveys the ecstatic devotion of resting on God's mercy. In the closing numbers the mood is made to grow lighter, with the reservation that the final chorus with such small forces makes for a downbeat close, hardly weighty enough.

Gardiner's version of the St Matthew Passion, the culminating issue in his Bach choral series for DG Archiv, brings an intense, dramatic reading which now makes a fine alternative choice, not just for period-performance devotees but for anyone not firmly set against the new authenticity. The result is an invigorating, intense telling of the story, with Gardiner favouring high dynamic contrasts and generally fast speeds, which are still geared to the weighty purpose of the whole work. He and his performers were recorded in what proved an ideal venue, The Maltings at Snape, where the warm acoustic gives body and allows clarity to period textures.

Masaaki Suzuki provides a fresh and beautifully sung reading of the most challenging of all Bach choral works with a first-rate team of soloists led by the free-toned Gerd Türk as the Evangelist, and with Nancy Argenta outstanding among the others. If the result is a little short on devotional intensity in the culminating sections of this work, that is partly the result of the rather close-up recording, with solo voices and orchestra not always cleanly separated. More seriously, the double choir in the great double-choruses at the beginning and end is more backwardly balanced than elsewhere, set behind the orchestra, so that the dramatic impact is lessened. Nevertheless, this remains a powerful achievement.

Koopman's fine performance is mirrored by its DVD equivalent and is discussed above. It would not be a first choice on CD, as undoubtedly the visual element adds much to its impact on the listener.

While it certainly will not appeal to the authentic lobby, Klemperer's 1962 Philharmonia recording of the St Matthew Passion represents one of his greatest achievements on record, an act of devotion of such intensity that points of style and interpretation seem insignificant. The whole cast clearly shared Klemperer's own intense feelings, and one can only sit back and share them too, whatever one's preconceptions. (EMI 5 67538-2 [67542-2])

St Matthew Passion (in English)

Ⓑ ((*)) Dutton mono 2CDAX 2005 (3). Greene, Suddaby, Ferrier, Cummings, Bach Ch., Jacques O, Jacques – PERGOLESI: Stabat Mater ()

In 1947–8 Decca recorded the St Matthew Passion, based on the annual performances conducted by Dr Reginald Jacques, and that is what Michael Dutton has here transferred immaculately to CD, with the bonus of the 1946 Decca recording of the Pergolesi Stabat Mater, also with Ferrier as soloist. The Bach is very much a performance of its time. Only the 'turba' choruses commenting on the action are brisk in the way one would now expect. Eric Greene is the noble Evangelist and the sweet-toned Elsie Suddaby shines out in the soprano arias, but it is Ferrier who instantly on each entry conveys quite a different degree of intensity from the rest, immediately magnetic. Having an English text is well justified, when the words are so clear.

Vocal collections

Arias: Bist du bei mir; Cantata 202: Weichet nur, betrübte Schatten. Cantata 209: Ricetti gramezza. St Matthew Passion: Blute nur; Ich will dir mein Herze schenken

(*) Delos D/CD 3026. Augér, Mostly Mozart O, Schwarz – HANDEL: Arias **(*)

Arleen Augér's pure, sweet soprano, effortlessly controlled, makes for bright performances of these Bach arias and songs, very recommendable for admirers of this delightful singer, well coupled with Handel arias.

Arias from: Cantatas BWV 32; 151; 202 (Wedding); St Matthew Passion

Ⓑ  EMI 3 68255-2. Yu, Prague Philh., Sato – MOZART: Arias ***

The Korean-American soprano, Hyunah Yu, with her firm, creamy voice is just as stylish in Bach as she is in the Mozart arias which provide the coupling on this excellent issue in EMI's Debut series. There is a natural intensity in her singing, backed by a fine technique, readily surmounting any technical difficulties. On this showing Yu is going to make an important career.

Arias: Mass in B min.: Agnus Dei; Qui sedes. St John Passion: All is fulfilled. St Matthew Passion: Grief for sin

Ⓜ () Decca mono 4756411. Ferrier, LPO, Boult – HANDEL: Arias () ✿

On 7 and 8 October 1952 Kathleen Ferrier made her last and perhaps greatest record in London's Kingsway Hall, coupling four arias each by Bach and Handel. The combined skill of John Culshaw and Kenneth Wilkinson ensured a recording of the utmost fidelity by the standards of that time. Now it re-emerges with extraordinary naturalness and presence.

Orchestral transcriptions and arrangements

Conductors' transcriptions: Aria: Bist du bei mir? (Klemperer); Chorales: Ein feste Burg (Damrosch); Herzlich tut mich verlangen (Leinsdorf); Ich ruf' zu dir, Herr Jesu Christ (Gui); Jesu, Joy of Man's Desiring (Ormandy); Sheep may safely graze

(Barbirolli); Fantasia & Fugue in G min., BWV 542 (Mitropoulos); Suite 3: Air (Sargent); Suite 6 (Sir Henry Wood); Toccata & Fugue in D min., BWV 565 (Skrowaczewski)

* Chan. SACD CHSA 5030. BBC SO, Slatkin

What this collection confirms yet again is that Stokowski's orchestral transcriptions, however flamboyant, are almost unique in catching the innate spirit of Bach's music. Mitropoulos's spectacular scoring of the Fantasia and Fugue in G minor combines panache with individuality. Klemperer's restrained scoring of the lovely Bist du bei mir for strings alone is wonderfully luminous as played here, where Sargent's string version of Jesu, Joy of Man's Desiring curiously omits Bach's oboe obbligato, and both this and his semi-luscious treatment of what he calls the Air on a G String are somewhat bland. The six-movement Suite arranged by Sir Henry Wood is unexpectedly diverse and enjoyable. The programme opens with Skrowaczewski's spectacular alternative transcription of the famous D minor Toccata and Fugue, owing much to Stokowski, especially in the use of the horns; although the effect is essentially brasher, especially in its use of percussion. Very fine playing throughout from the BBC Symphony Orchestra, and superbly spacious, demonstration-worthy sound from Chandos.

Chaconne* from solo Violin Partita 2, BWV 1004 (orch. Raff); Chorales: O Mensch, bewein' dein' Sünde gross (orch. Reger); Wachet auf (orch. Bantock); Fantasia & Fugue in C min., BWV 537 (orch. Elgar); Fugue à la gigue in G (orch. Holst); 'Giant Fugue' (Wir glauben all' an einen Gott) (orch. Vaughan Williams & Foster); Passacaglia & Fugue in C min. (orch. Respighi); Preludes & Fugues: in C (orch. Honegger); in E flat (St Anne) (orch. Schoenberg)

* Chan. 9835. BBC PO, Slatkin

Flying boldly in the face of period performance, these transcriptions by nine celebrated composers, including Respighi, Elgar, Holst, Vaughan Williams, Schoenberg and Raff, bring out the grandeur of Bach's vision in his organ music. That is greatly helped by the sumptuous Chandos sound and the magnificent playing of the BBC Philharmonic under Leonard Slatkin. Respighi is weightily dramatic in the Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor, and so is Schoenberg in the St Anne Prelude and Fugue, while Honegger even uses a saxophone in the Prelude and Fugue in C. Most imaginative of all is the Fantasia and Fugue in C minor, with Elgar glorying in percussion and harp.

Arrangements: Bach–Stokowski

Orchestral Suite 3, BWV 578. Fugue in G min., BWV 578; Passacaglia and Fugue, BWV 582;* Excerpts from Cantatas: Chorales: Nun komm, der Heiden Heiland; Komm süsser Tod, BWV 478; Wir glauben all'an einen Gott, BWV 437; Aria: Schafe können sichter weiden. Easter Oratorio: Kommt, eilet und laufer. St John Passion: *Es ist vollbracht!

Ⓝ (BB) Naxos 8.557883 Bournemouth SO, Serebrier (with: HANDEL: Messiah: Pastoral Symphony; PURCELL: Dido and Aeneas: When I am laid in earth; STOKOWSKI: 2 Ancient Liturgical Melodies)

Harpsichord Concerto in F minor, BWV 1056: Largo (Arioso). Chorales: Ich ruf' zu dir, Herr Jesu Christ, BWV 639; Ein Feste Burg; Mein Jesu! was vor Seelenweh, BWV 487; Jesu, Joy of Man's Desiring, BWV 147;* (Organ): *Schübler Chorale: Wachet auf, BWV 645 Adagio in C major, BWV 564 Toccata and Fugue in D minor, BWV 565. Violin Sonata in C minor, BWV 1017: Siciliano.The Well-Tempered Clavier, Book I: Fugue 2 in C minor, BWV 847; Prelude 24 in B minor, BWV 869

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8.572050. Bournemouth SO, Serebrier. (with: PALESTRINA: Adoramus te Christe; BYRD: Pavane and Gigue; CLARKE: Trumpet Voluntary; BOCCHERINI: Minuet; MATTHESON: Suite 5 in C minor for Harpsichord: Air; HOFFSTETTER: String Quartet in F major (attrib HAYDN as Op. 3/5: Serenade (Andante cantabile))

José Serebrier's first disc of Stokowski's sumptuous Bach transcriptions is outstanding in every way, not just for the performances but for the spectacular recording, never more telling than in the powerful account of the C minor Passacaglia and Fugue. Yet the sprightly contrasting G major Fugue is also one of the highlights of the programme. In the Air from the Third Orchestral Suite and the Chorales Serebrier (as a former pupil of Stokowski) follows the maestro's romantic style with portamento slides in string phrasing, and this is carried through to the warmly appealing account of Purcell's Dido's Lament, one of the pieces by other composers included here.

The second instalment begins with the popular D minor Toccata and Fugue, and the recording brings out to the full, as never before, the subtlety of Stokowski's orchestrations with their brilliant terracing of texture, with colourings which designedly echo the sound of the organ: its impact is magnificent, here more than ever. The other pieces here include other popular favourites such as the Wachet auf Chorale Prelude, Eine feste Burg and Jesu Joy of Man's Desiring, all sumptuously presented with the strings in particular made to sound glorious.

The extra items are all valuable in their way. Popular favourites include Boccherini's Minuet (with the central section wonderfully elegant), and the collection ends with a Bach piece that Stokowski himself often used as an encore, the Fugue from No. 2 of Bach's 48, with each section arriving one after the other.

Chorale Preludes: Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott; Komm, süsser Tod; Mein Jesu, was vor Seelenweh. Christmas Oratorio: Sinfonia. English Suite 2 in A min., BWV 807: Bourrée. Fugue in G min., BWV 578 (Little Fugue); Orchestral Suite 3 in D, BWV 1068: Air on the G String. Passacaglia & Fugue in C min., BWV 582; Toccata & Fugue in D min., BWV

565; Violin Partita 1 in B min., BWV 1002: Sarabande; 3 in E, BWV 1006: Preludio

(M)  EMI Legend CD/DVD (ADD) 5 57758. Symphony O, Stokowski (with DVD Bonus: DEBUSSY: Prélude à l'après-midi d'un faune)

A welcome return to circulation of Stokowski's (American Capitol) late-1950s recordings of Bach arrangements. The earliest sessions date from 1957, and if the sound, understandably, displays a degree of thinness, it is well balanced, the ambience is remarkably warm, and overall the quality is certainly impressive for its time. The Chorale Preludes are played with great intensity, while in the spectacular showpieces, such as the D minor Toccata and Fugue and the Passacaglia, with their generous splashes of romantic colour, plenty of electricity is generated. The bonus DVD records the 1972 film of Debussy's Prélude à l'après-midi d'un faune, played at the Royal Festival Hall. It is a joy to watch – deeply felt and magical.

Harpsichord Concerto in F min., BWV 1056: Arioso (Largo). Chorales: Aus tiefer Noth (De profundis), BWV 1006; Ein feste Burg; Jesu, Joy of Man's Desiring (from Cantata 147); My Soul is Athirst (from St Matthew Passsion). Wachet auf, BWV 645; Fantasia & Fugue in G min., BWV 542; Violin Partitas: 1 in B min., BWV 1002: Sarabande. 2 in D min., BWV 1004: Chaconne. 3 in E, BWV 1006: Preludio. Violin Sonata 2, BWV 1003: Andante sostenuto. Well-Tempered Clavier: Fugue in C min., BWV 847; attrib. C. P. E. BACH: Chorale: Aus der Tiefe rufe ich

* Chan. 10282. BBC PO, Bamert

Matthias Bamert manages the kind of spontaneous, flexible rubato that was Stokowski's personal style and, with superb playing from the augmented BBC Philharmonic and marvellous Chandos recording, the result is spectacular indeed. Yet, when one turns to the richly opulent scoring of the piece which Stokowski describes as 'Arioso' (the beautiful Largo from the Harpsichord Concerto in F minor) and the equally lovely Andante sostenuto from BWV 1003, the music moves entirely out of Bach's era into Stokowski's own world of ripe romanticism, while Ein feste Burg brings flamboyant contrasts of sonorous brass and strings. Yet it is in the Fantasia and Fugue in G minor that we are thrilled by the most spectacular Stokowski sound. The piece is recorded here for the first time in the original scoring with the fullest possible string sections, and laced with percussion.

Toccata & Fugue in D min., BWV 565 (arr. Fox-Lafiche for unaccompanied violin)

 EMI 5 57384-2. Vengerov – SHCHEDRIN: Balalaika; Echo Sonata; YSAŸE: Solo Violin Sonatas 2, 3, 4 & 6 ***

The arrangement for unaccompanied violin by Fox-Lafiche of Bach's most popular organ piece in Vengerov's hands works surprisingly well, backing up the scholarly argument that, stylistically unlike any other Bach organ work (and possibly not by Bach at all), it is better suited to the violin (for which it may have originally been written) than the organ. A welcome makeweight for the four Ysaÿe Sonatas and the Shchedrin pieces.

BACH, Wilhelm Friedemann

(1710–84)

Adagio & Fugue in D min., F.65; Adagio & Fugue in F min.; (i) Harpsichord Concerto in E min., F.43; Sinfonias in D, F.64; in F, F.67

 HM HMC 901772. (i) Alpermann; Berlin Akademie für Alte Musik, Mai

This fine Harmonia Mundi disc makes an ideal introduction to the music of Bach's favourite son. It opens with the Sinfonia in D with its most engaging woodwind writing, particularly for the flutes in the Andante, and closes with the whimsical Sinfonia in F, which nevertheless has a gracious Andante and ends mellowly with a warm-hearted Minuet. The Concerto exudes the striking rhythmic life that characterizes this composer's music, but suffers from a recessive balance for the modest-sized chosen harpsichord. However, Raphael Alpermann plays its Adagio with appealing delicacy, and survives the rough buffeting of the orchestral tuttis in the finale. Most remarkable of all are the pair of Adagios and Fugues, the F minor arranged for strings from a keyboard piece by Mozart, who added the spacious introduction. Excellent recording thoughout, apart from the backward balance of the harpsichord.

Sinfonia in D, F.64

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.553289. Salzburg CO, Lee – C. P. E. BACH: Sinfonias **(*)

Wilhelm Friedemann's three-movement Sinfonia in D major was intended for use as an introduction to the Whitsun cantata, Dies ist der Tag. The Sinfonia is given a lively account in Salzburg; modern instruments are used, but textures are clean and fresh and the recording is faithful and well balanced.

6 Sonatas for flute duet, F.54–9

 MDG 311 984402. Hüteler, Schmidt-Casdorf

These works must be fun to play, especially when the two instruments chirrup together as in the first-movement Allegro of No. 2, dance along graciously as in the final Gigue of the same work, or chase each other's tails as in the Presto finale of No. 4. Slow movements are innocent, yet have a thoughtful melancholy. Overall, the final work in F minor is the most individual of the six, but all are different and this simple polyphony stands up to repeated listenings. The performances here are technically immaculate, have a pleasing, spontaneous simplicity and are beautifully recorded.

12 Polonaises, F12; Sonata in D, F3; Fantasia in A, F23

(BB)  Naxos 8.57966. Hill (fortepiano)

Wilhelm Friedmann was the oldest (and favourite) son of Bach: the first book of the '48' was written for him. He combined rich melodic invention and originality of harmony with a highly personal expressive style and these are much in evidence in the Polonaises. In this admirable recording, the American scholar Robert Hill uses a reconstruction of a Florentine fortepiano of 1720 in the manner of Bartolomeo Cristofori. His playing has great flair and style and it makes out the strongest case for this interesting and individual master. Excellent recorded sound too.

BAERMANN, Heinrich (1784–1847)

Adagio for Clarinet & Orchestra

 ASV CDDCA 559. Johnson, ECO, Groves – CRUSELL: Concerto 2  ✿; ROSSINI: Introduction, Theme & Variations  ; WEBER: Concertino ***

Heinrich Baermann's rather beautiful Adagio, once attributed to Wagner, is offered by a celebrated clarinettist who plays the work warmly and sympathetically.

Clarinet Concertinos: in C min.; E flat; Concertstück in G min.; Sonata in D min.

 Orfeo C065011A. Klöcker, Prague CO, Lajèík

With an unexpected drum-roll beginning the G minor Concertstück, which opens this disc, no one could accuse Baermann of not being entertaining in these works. Indeed, these are enjoyably unpretentious concertos, with lively, vivacious writing which fully shows off the prowess of the soloist. With three of these works in a minor key, a certain drama is evident too, but it is Baermann's catchy tunes to which one most readily responds, with the Polacca of the E major Concertino being especially enjoyable. The Sonata in D minor (also for clarinet and chamber orchestra), uniquely here, begins with an attractive Adagio, and is followed by two movements at the composer's perky best. Virtuoso performances from Dieter Klöcker, well supported by the Prague Orchestra, and all in good sound, too.

BAINES, William (1899–1922)

Coloured Leaves; Paradise Gardens; 7 Preludes; Silverpoints; Tides; Twilight Pieces

 Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 266. Parkin – MOERAN: Piano music ***

William Baines came from Yorkshire and died in his early twenties. These small piano miniatures show a very considerable talent, with a refined harmonic palette and a nice melodic strain. The influence of Delius, Cyril Scott and others can be discerned, but some of these pieces deserve wider recognition and are quite powerful and individual, and often ear-catching (try Water-Pearls from Silverpoints or the Valse from Coloured Leaves). Eric Parkin plays persuasively and the recording is quite vivid if slightly shallow.

BAINTON, Edgar (1880–1956)

(i) Concerto fantasia (for piano and orchestra). The Golden River; 3 Pieces for Orchestra; Pavane, Idyll and Bachanal

Ⓝ * Chan 10460 (i) Fingerhut; BBC PO, Paul Daniel

This Chandos collection makes an ideal introduction to Edgar Bainton's music. He was to become a key figure in the musical life of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, and his attractive melodic ideas and colourful command of the orchestral palette show him as a composer of some distinction. The pair of triptychs are winningly scored, the Three Pieces opening in the English pastoral tradition but gathering energy in the third, mirrored by more delicate Pavane, Idyll (with an engaging flute solo) and robust Bacchanale.

The Golden River, written as a four-movement suite, is a passionately atmospheric tone-poem, based on a short story by Ruskin, about three brothers, with the youngest defeating the machinations of the two eldest to restore the 'treasure valley' through which the river flows. But most striking of all is the tuneful five-movement Concerto fantasia, opening unusually in the glittering upper register of the piano but soon developing a passionately memorable theme on the strings, which is to return in the finale after a delectably witty scherzo and a slow movement Improvisation. The work ends with a peaceful Epilogue and this is a concerto which immediately tempts one to return to it, especially when it is superbly played by Margaret Fingerhut, while Paul Daniel clearly shares her enjoyment in this rewarding music, and directs the whole programme with sympathy and flair. Typically excellent Chandos sound makes this CD very recommendable.

Epithalamion; (i) An English Idyll

 Chan. 10019. (i) Whelan; BBC PO, Brabbins – CLIFFORD: A Kentish Suite, etc. ***

The rhapsody, Epithalamion, is a brilliant fantasy Scherzo dazzlingly orchestrated, which carries you exhilaratingly along with its elaborate cross-rhythms. The English Idyll sets words by the critic Neville Cardus, who at the time, 1946, was also an English exile in Sydney. Atmospheric and sensuous, it vividly catches a mood of nostalgia for England, not just the countryside but central London and a West Country cathedral. Martyn Brabbins draws dedicated performances from the BBC Philharmonic, with Paul Whelan a sensitive baritone soloist.

Symphony 2 in D min.

 Chan. 9757. BBC PO, Handley – CLIFFORD: Symphony; GOUGH: Serenade ***

Symphony 3 in C min.

🔑 Ⓜ  Dutton CDLX 7185. BBC Concert O, Handley – BOUGHTON: Symphony 1 (Oliver Cromwell) ***

Bainton's Second and Third Symphonies are also well worth exploring, both full of good and interesting ideas. Both are impressively structured, the lyrical writing is especially enjoyable, and there is no lack of energy in the dramatic passages. Both performances and recordings are first class.

String Quartet in A

Ⓜ  Dutton CDLX 7163. Locrian Ens. – CLIFFORD: String Quartet ***

The String Quartet is pastoral in content, with some touches of Ravelian influence. It is well served by the Locrian Ensemble and the recording is exemplary.

BAIRSTOW, Edward (1874–1946)

Blessed city, heavenly Salem; Evening Services in D & G: Magnificat & Nunc dimittis. If the Lord had not helped me; Jesu, the very thought of thee; Let all mortal flesh keep silence; Lord, thou hast been our refuge; (i) 5 Poems of the spirit. Save us, O Lord

 Hyp. CDA 67497. St John's College, Cambridge, Ch., Hill, Provost (organ); (i) Williams, Britten Sinfonia

Edward Bairstow's beautiful unaccompanied Let all mortal flesh keep silence keeps the composer's name before the public, but If the Lord had not helped me and Blessed city, heavenly Salem are hardly less fine and, as this superbly sung collection shows, he wrote much else of quality and general appeal. The Five Poems of the Spirit for solo baritone and orchestra, impressively sung here by Roderick Williams, are late works, dating from 1944; they show him at his most mature and make a fine climax for the concert before the touching Save us, O Lord (written nearly half a century earlier) ends a satisfyingly planned programme, splendidly sung and recorded in St John's itself. Paul Provost's organ contribution adds much to the accompanied items.

BALAKIREV, Mily (1837–1910)

(i) Piano Concerto 1. In Bohemia; King Lear Overture; Symphonies 1–2; Tamara

Ⓜ  Chan. 2 for 1 CHAN 241-20. (i) Shelley; BBC PO, Sinaisky

Piano Concertos 1 in F sharp min., Op. 1; 2 in E flat, Op. posth.

 Hyp. CDA 66640. Binns, E. N. Philh. O, Lloyd-Jones – RIMSKY-KORSAKOV: Concerto ***

Piano Concertos 1 F sharp min., Op. 1; 2 E flat (ed. Lyapunov); Grande Fantaisie on Russian folksongs, Op. 4

Ⓝ (BB) (*) Naxos 8.570396. Seifetdinova, Moscow PO, Dmitri Yablonsky

(i) Piano Concerto 1; Symphony 2 in D min; Tamara

 Chan. 9727. (i) Shelley; BBC PO, Sinaisky

The one-movement First Piano Concerto (Youth) is well served by Malcolm Binns's intelligent and sensitive performance. It also has the only available account of the more characteristic Second Concerto. This was left incomplete and was finished after his death by Lyapunov.

Howard Shelley too is a powerful soloist in the first Piano Concerto, relishing the bravura writing, and though the Second Symphony cannot compare with the First in scale or memorability, Vassily Sinaisky makes a most persuasive case for it in his warm and thrustful performance. Tamara is played with similar panache.

The Naxos coupling of the two concertos and the Grande Fantaisie on Russian Folksongs comes as a useful appendage to the versions by Howard Shelley and Malcolm Binns (see above). Anastasia Seifetdinova is a formidable soloist who comes from the Ukraine but is now resident in the university of Hartford, Connecticut. Good sound.

Islamey (orch. Lyapunov)

🔑  Ph. SACD 470 618-2; CD 470 840-2. Kirov O, Gergiev – BORODIN: In the Steppes of Central Asia; RIMSKY-KORSAKOV: Scheherazade ***

Balakirev's virtuoso piano piece as orchestrated by Lyapunov sounds surprisingly like another section of Scheherazade, making it an apt and exciting coupling from Gergiev and the Kirov Orchestra, although the resonance clouds detail somewhat, especially on the SACD, where the added hall resonance is the more noticeable.

Symphony 1 in C

🔑 () BBC Legends mono BBCL 4084-2. BBC SO, Beecham – RIMSKY-KORSAKOV: Le Coq d'or: Suite; BORODIN: Prince Igor: Polovtsian Dances ()

Symphony 1; Russia; Tamara (symphonic poems)

🔑 (BB)  Regis RRC 1131. USSR State SO, Svetlanov

Svetlanov's earlier (1974) Russian recording of Balakirev's First Symphony brings an interpretation that has grip and tension. The wonderfully lyrical slow movement is both atmospheric and warmly relaxed, and the finale has both striking impetus and gleaming Russian woodwind colour. The recording is rich and well detailed. While Beecham reigns supreme in the symphony, this is still a first-rate bargain, for the two melodically attractive symphonic poems are splendidly done.

Tamara

Ⓝ  Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD) 480 0047. OSR, Ansermet – MUSSORGSKY: Night on a Bare Mountain; Pictures at an Exhibition, etc. ***

A rarity on disc. Balakirev's Tamara, who lures hapless men to their death with her siren calls and casts their bodies in raging waters as dawn breaks, emerges as quite a strong work here. Ansermet understands the melodrama of the music, and the quality of the 1954 stereo sound amazes. The 'exotic' qualities of the score are particularly enjoyable.

Islamey (Oriental Fantasy)

🔑 (BB) * EMI Encore 5 86881-2. Gavrilov – PROKOFIEV:

Piano Concerto 1, etc.; TCHAIKOVSKY: Piano Concerto 1, etc. ***

Gavrilov's dazzling account of Balakirev's piano fantasy is outstandingly charismatic; it is well recorded too. It comes in harness with an equally dazzling account of Prokofiev's First Piano Concerto.

Piano Sonata in B flat min.

(*) Kingdom KCLCD 2001. Fergus-Thompson – SCRIABIN: Sonata 3, etc. **(*)

The Balakirev is arguably the greatest Russian piano sonata of the pre-1914 era. Gordon Fergus-Thompson is fully equal to its considerable demands and he offers excellent playing.

BANTOCK, Granville

(1868–1946)

Caristiona; A Celtic Symphony; Cuchullan's Lament; The Cyprian Goddess (Symphony 3); Dante and Beatrice; Fifine at the Fair; Hebridean Symphony; Helena Variations; Kishmul's Galley; Omar Khayyám: Prelude & Camel Caravan; Overture to a Greek Tragedy; Pagan Symphony; Pierrot of the Minute; Processional; Sapphic Poem for Cello & Orchestra; Sappho; The Sea Reivers; Song of Songs (Prelude & extracts); Thalaba the Destroyer; The Wilderness and the Solitary Place; The Witch of Atlas

Ⓜ  Hyp. CDS 44281/6 (6). Lloyd Webber; Bickley; Connell; Begley; RPO (with Ch.), Handley

Between 1990 and 2003 Vernon Handley recorded all the principal orchestral works of Bantock (although the complete Omar Khayyám had to wait until 2006/7 and now appears on Chandos). It was a considerable achievement revealing Bantock as a major figure in English music in the late nineteenth and early twentieth century. Handley is a dedicated advocate and the standard of performances and recordings in this box is very high indeed. If you have not already invested in this rewarding composer, Hyperion's box with the sirens visually enticing on the front cover offers a chance to respond to their allure, with a promise of many rewards from this often sumptuously scored and consistently inventive music.

The Pierrot of the Minute: Overture

Ⓜ  Chan. 6566. Bournemouth Sinf., Del Mar – BRIDGE: Summer, etc.; BUTTERWORTH: Banks of Green Willow ***

Bantock's overture is concerned with Pierrot's dream in which he falls in love with a Moon Maiden, who tells him their love must die at dawn, but he will not listen. He wakes to realize that his dream of love lasted a mere minute. The writing is often delicate and at times Elgarian, and the 1978 recording sounds remarkably fresh.

Symphony 3 (The Cyprian Goddess); Dante and Beatrice; Helena (Variations on the Theme HFB)

 Hyp. CDA 66810. RPO, Handley

The Cyprian Goddess echoes Strauss in its sumptuous orchestration and melodic writing, and in its refinement it has something of the elegiac tone of late Strauss. The Helena Variations, written in tribute to his wife, echo the freshness and variety of Elgar's newly completed Enigma, while Dante and Beatrice is a free-ranging programme work which in its warmth and dramatic contrasts recalls Tchaikovsky's Romeo and Juliet. Whatever the echoes, in each piece Bantock establishes his own distinctive voice, here more tautly controlled than in his expansive, middle-period works. First-rate sound.

Omar Khayyám

🔑 * Chan. CHSA 5051 (3). Wyn-Rogers, Spence, Robinson, Menna, Williams, Price, BBC SO & Ch., Handley

Omar Khayyám is by far the most ambitious work of Granville Bantock; like many of his works, his spectacular setting of the words in Fitzgerald's translation is influenced by oriental music, both in the melodic material and by drawing on his personal impressions of the Middle East. The result is a sumptuous tapestry, with the poet communing with the beloved. The layout for six soloists, large double chorus and orchestra (with the strings divided antiphonally) is heard at its most spectacular in the 'Caravan' processional, with rich brass and percussion and tuned 'camel bells' resourcefully borrowed from an earlier performance. The performance is fully worthy of Bantock's vision; the soloists are excellent, Toby Spence and Catherine Wyn-Rogers singing with clean attack, and the others providing excellent support. Under Handley, the most sympathetic conductor, the result is exceptionally warm and idiomatic, and the Chandos recording, made in the Watford Colosseum, is fully worthy.

(i) Nebuchadnezzar; (ii) 2 Coronation Anthems; 3 Songs of Praise. Woodland Suite

 Chan. 10439. (i) Padmore, Davids; (i–ii) BBC Ch.; BBC SO, Hickox

Nebuchadnezzar features Bantock's skilful choral writing, powerfully dramatic. In the title-role Neal Davids sings with dark, firm tone, strongly characterful with the excellent Mark Padmore providing contrast in the subsidiary role of the Herald. The two Coronation Anthems are both dramatic but surprisingly brief. The Woodland Suite displays Bantock's gift in writing for young performers, a delightfully atmospheric piece designed for schools. Altogether this is an attractive and enjoyable collection.

BARBER, Samuel (1910–81)

Adagio for Strings, Op. 11

🔑 Ⓜ * Decca (ADD) 475 8237. ASMF, Marriner – COPLAND: Quiet City; COWELL: Hymn & Fuguing Tune; CRESTON: Rumor; IVES: Symphony 3 ****

Ⓜ  DG 477 6352-2. LAPO, Bernstein – COPLAND: Appalachian Spring ; GERSHWIN: Rhapsody in Blue **(*)

Marriner's 1976 performance of Barber's justly famous Adagio is arguably still the most satisfying version available. The quality of sound on the remastered Argo recording remains very impressive indeed, and Marriner's climax is absolutely gripping. This splendid anthology is now reissued as one of Decca's 'Originals'.

In Barber, Bernstein's expressiveness is more restrained and elegiac, but his control of the climax – in what is substantially a live recording – is unerring. Recording somewhat close but full and clear. The original coupling with Copland's Appalachian Spring and Gershwin's Rhapsody in Blue is now reissued in Universal's 'Critics' Choice' series.

Adagio for Strings; (i) Cello Concerto, Op. 22. Medea (ballet suite) Op. 23

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.559088. (i) Warner; RSNO, Alsop

Barber's Cello Concerto of 1945 is more elusive than the Violin Concerto, but Wendy Warner concentrates on its sometimes wry lyricism, and she articulates with brilliant point in the gentle scherzando passage of the finale. Marin Alsop is a persuasive partner, relishing the often plangent orchestral backcloth and securing a splendidly committed response from the Scottish players, both here and in the often astringent score for Medea. The famous Adagio for Strings then becomes essentially an elegy, but reaches a passionate climax. Fine, vivid recording, though the massed upper strings could have more weight.

(i) Adagio for Strings; (ii) Cello Concerto; (iii; iv) Violin Concerto; (iv) Essay 1, Op. 22; (v) Agnus Dei

Ⓝ Ⓑ  CfP 2 28275-2 (i) LSO, Previn; (ii) Kirshbaum, SCO, Saraste; (iii) Oliveira; (iv) Saint Louis SO, Slatkin; Winchester Cathedral Ch., Hill

Previn's LSO Adagio for Strings, from the 1970s, is especially fine. Kirshbaum's view of the Cello Concerto is darker and spikier than those of his direct rivals, and rather more urgent in the outer movements, yet it is played just as beautifully. Oliveira's excellent account of the Violin Concerto is included in the Gemini set below and the other items are just as successful, including the choral version of the Adagio.

(i) Adagio for Strings; (i; ii) Violin Concerto; (i) Essays 1–3; Medea: Medea's Dance of Vengeance, Op. 23a; Overture: School for Scandal, Op. 5; (iii; iv) Canzone for Flute & Piano, Op. 38a; (iv; v) Cello Sonata, Op. 6; (iii; v) Summer Music, Op. 31 (for wind quintet); (iv) (Piano) Excursions, Op. 20; Nocturne (Homage to John Field), Op. 33; Souvenirs, Op. 28

🔑 Ⓑ * EMI Gemini 5 86561-2 (2). (i) St Louis SO, Slatkin; (ii) Oliveira; (iii) Baxtresser; (iv) Margalit; (v) Stepansky; Robinson, Drucker, Le Clair, Myers

Slatkin's accounts of the orchestral pieces are superbly played and recorded, and he includes all three of the Essays, which is quite rare, as well as the amusing School for Scandal Overture. Elmar Oliveira's version of the Violin Concerto reacts to the nostalgia of the Andante with a vein of bitter-sweet yearning that is most affecting. It is a fine performance overall with a brilliantly played finale. The chamber music is especially valuable, with the performers producing the spontaneous feeling that they have lived with the music before performing it. The Canzone for Flute and Piano has an Elysian, soaring melody (slightly French in atmosphere) which Jeanne Baxtresser plays very beautifully. The Cello Sonata has a powerful impulse and is given the most eloquent advocacy here, while the Excursions have wit and elegance. The shorter pieces are all distinctive and well worth having.

(i) Adagio for Strings; (ii; iii) Violin Concerto; (iii) Essay 1; Medea's Dance of Vengeance; The School for Scandal Overture; (i; iv) Knoxville: Summer of 1915

Ⓝ Ⓜ  EMI 2 06625-2 (i) LSO, Tilson Thomas; (ii) Oliveira; (iii) Saint Louis SO, Slatkin; (iv) Hendricks

Knoxville is one of the most magically evocative pieces of its kind, and it is all the more magical here for the authentically American inflexions that Hendricks gives it, together with glowing string tone. The celebrated Adagio is taken at a flowing tempo, with no self-indulgence or sentimentality. With the addition of the fine account of the Violin Concerto this is a radiant disc.

Adagio for Strings; Essays 1, Op. 12; 2, Op. 17; Music for a Scene from Shelley, Op. 7; Overture: The School for Scandal, Op. 5; Symphony 1, Op. 9

🔑  Argo 436 288. Baltimore SO, Zinman

These performances are very alert and vital, particularly that of the First Symphony; the recording has superb presence and detail. Apart from the first two Essays for orchestra, Zinman's disc includes the more rarely heard Music for a Scene from Shelley, sumptuously scored and gloriously atmospheric. This adds greatly to the attractiveness of an already desirable issue, and Zinman and his excellent orchestra play the Overture to Sheridan's The School for Scandal with equal commitment.

(i) Canzonetta for Oboe & Strings. Capricorn Concerto; Fadograph of a Yestern Scene; Mutations from Bach; Vanessa: Interlude; (ii) A Hand of Bridge

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.559135. RSNO, Alsop, with (i) Stéphane Rancourt; (ii) Craigie, Winter, Wall, Williams

The neoclassical Capricorn Concerto, which takes its name from the house that Barber and Menotti shared, is a relative rarity, but this excellent budget version does it proud. The Canzonetta was left in short score on Barber's death, but this arrangement with strings is expertly done, and the piece is as moving as the very best of Barber. The Fadograph of a Yestern Scene is another rarity, a ruminative and reflective score with a strong vein of melancholy to sustain it. The witty ten-minute opera, A Hand of Bridge, which Barber wrote for Menotti's festival at Spoleto, also comes off well. Good recorded sound, too. In short this is a most pleasurable issue and repays repeated hearing.

Cello Concerto, Op. 22

 Naïve V4961. Gastinel, CBSO, Brown – ELGAR: Cello Concerto ***

 Chan. 8322. Wallfisch, ECO, Simon – SHOSTAKOVICH: Cello Concerto 1 ***

Anne Gastinel couples this fine account of the Barber Cello Concerto with a noble and dignified account of the Elgar. Gastinel is a thoughtful and sensitive artist and her recording is among the very finest now available, although the Wendy Warner/Alsop version on Naxos (see above) is also highly recommendable, and for many will have a more suitable coupling.

Wallfisch gives an impressive and eloquent reading, and the elegiac slow movement is especially fine. Wallfisch is forwardly balanced, but otherwise the recording is truthful; the orchestra is vividly detailed.

(i) Piano Concerto. Medea: Medea's Meditation and Dance of Vengeance. Die Natali; Commando March

Ⓑ (*) Naxos 8.559133. (i) Prutsman; RSNO, Alsop

Stephen Prutsman gives a powerful reading of Barber's formidable Piano Concerto, fully in command of the bravura writing of the outer movements and tenderly expressive in the central Canzone. As a bargain alternative, this is very welcome. With Marin Alsop a most sympathetic Barber interpreter, the Concerto is well supplemented by the well-known concert work drawn from the Medea ballet, the genial and colourful fantasia on Christmas Carols, Die Natali, written at the same period as the concerto in memory of Serge and Natalie Koussevitzky, and the wartime Commando March. Well-balanced sound, if with strings on the light side.

(i) Piano Concerto; (ii) Violin Concerto. Souvenirs, Op. 28

 Telarc CD 80441. (i) Parker; (ii) McDuffie; Atlanta SO, Levi

Robert McDuffie is a powerful violinist with a formidable technique, if not as individual an artist as many rivals in this warmly romantic Violin Concerto. His reading makes an excellent coupling for Jon Kimura Parker's outstanding performance of the Piano Concerto and the suite, Souvenirs, in its orchestral form. The performance is rather tauter and more purposeful than the fine one which John Browning (the pianist for whom the work was written) recorded for Sony.

Violin Concerto, Op. 14

🔑 ✿ * Onyx 4016. Ehnes, Vancouver SO, Tovey – KORNGOLD; WALTON: Violin Concertos *** ✿

🔑 Ⓜ  Decca 475 7710. Bell, Baltimore SO, Zinman – BLOCH: Baal Shem; WALTON: Violin Concerto ***

Ⓝ Ⓑ  EMI Encore 2 08124-2. Perlman, Boston SO, Ozawa – BERNSTEIN: Serenade; FOSS: 3 American Pieces ***

(i) Violin Concerto. Adagio for Strings

Ⓜ  Sony 516235-2. (i) Stern; NYPO, Bernstein (with IVES: The Unanswered Question; COPLAND: Fanfare for the Common Man) – SCHUMAN: In Praise of Shahn, etc. ***

Barber's Violin Concerto grows in stature with every hearing and the young Canadian violinist James Ehnes proves an ardent and committed advocate, mirrored by Bramwell Tovey's glowing partnership, particularly in the lyrical, inspired slow movement, which has exquisite delicacy of feeling. It is an inspired coupling, as well as a generous one, having the Barber alongside two other high-romantic concertos together. Ehnes gives superb performances of all three, bringing out their full emotional thrust without vulgarity or exaggeration.

Joshua Bell's passionate playing in the Barber, full of tender poetry, is well matched by the excellent orchestra, ripely and brilliantly recorded, with the soloist well forward, but not aggressively so. This won the 1998 Gramophone Concerto Award and has now become one of Decca's Originals.

Isaac Stern gave the Barber Violin Concerto its stereo première in 1964, and his performance, which is consistently inspired, is of superlative quality. It has warmth, freshness and humanity, and the slow movement is glorious. The CBS forward balance for the orchestra is less than ideal, but the recording is otherwise very good and has been impressively remastered.

For Perlman the kernel of the Barber Concerto lies in the central slow movement: he plays with a warmth and intensity that even he has rarely matched. Weight, power and virtuoso brilliance then come together in his dazzling account of the finale

(i) Violin Concerto. Music for a Scene from Shelley, Op. 7; Souvenirs (ballet suite), Op. 28; Serenade for Strings, Op. 1

Ⓑ  Naxos 8.559044. (i) Buswell; RSNO, Alsop

Marin Alsop with the Royal Scottish National Orchestra backs up the masterly Violin Concerto with the witty and delightfully parodic ballet, Souvenirs, and two early works, the evocative Scene from Shelley and a long-neglected three-movement Serenade, which is based on a string quartet written when Barber was nineteen and which anticipates the Adagio for Strings. James Buswell is a refined, sensitive soloist, warm without being soupy, if not quite as individual as Isaac Stern in his vintage version with Bernstein.

Essays for Orchestra 1, Op. 12; 2, Op. 17; 3, Op. 47

 Chan. 9053. Detroit SO, Järvi – IVES: Symphony 1 ***

In terms of both sonority and approach, Neeme Järvi's account of these appealing works differs from the American competitor. The strings have lightness and subtlety and are highly responsive. The recording is very natural and present, and beautifully balanced.

Essays for Orchestra 2; 3; (i) Toccata Festiva, Op. 36. (ii) Knoxville: Summer of 1915, Op. 24

Ⓑ  Naxos 8.559134. RSNO, Alsop, with (i) Trotter; (ii) Gauvin

In the evocative Knoxville: Summer of 1915, Karina Gauvin's voice is so rich that the diction is not as clear as it might be, but happily the booklet provides the full text. Alsop's reading in both of the Essays highlights contrasts to bring out the feeling in both of compressed symphonic structures. The Toccata Festiva for organ and orchestra is an exuberant piece that brings the widest expressive range in the organ part and with the orchestra colourful too, here superbly played and recorded.

Symphonies 1; 2; Essay for Orchestra 1; Overture: The School for Scandal

🔑 ✿ (BB) * Naxos 8.559024. RSNO, Alsop

The two symphonies are played on Naxos with passionate commitment and deep lyrical feeling by the Scottish orchestra. The account of the complete Second Symphony will surely confirm the reputation of a wartime work which the composer partly withdrew in despondency after its neglect. The First Essay for Orchestra also generates a powerful atmosphere when played with such depth of feeling. With spectacular recording, this exciting collection is very strongly recommended.

(i) Symphony 1 (in one movement); Essays for Orchestra, 1; 2; (ii) Music for a Scene from Shelley; (i) Night Flight, Op. 19a; (ii; iii) Knoxville (Summer of 1915)

🔑 (BB)  Regis (ADD) RRC 1139. (i) LSO; (ii) Western Australia SO; Measham; (iii) with McGurk

David Measham proves a splendid advocate of Barber's music, securing passionately committed performances of the First Symphony (where at times he brings out its somewhat Waltonian manner) and the powerfully romantic yet mysterious Music from Shelley, an inspired early work from 1933, which ought to be better known. The two Essays for Orchestra are also very well played, as is the haunting movement, Night Flight, all that the composer originally wanted to survive from the Symphony 2. Molly McGurk's ravishing account of Barber's Coplandesque setting of Knoxville could hardly be more warmly evocative.

Toccata Festiva, Op. 36

 Ondine ODE 1094-5. Latry, Phd. O, Eschenbach – SAINT-SAËNS: Symphony 3; POULENC: Organ Concerto ***

Toccata Festiva was written in 1960 in response to a commission to celebrate the new organ for the Academy of Music, then the Philadelphia Orchestra's home. This live performance could hardly be bettered and the sound, though rather dry, is very full and vivid.

CHAMBER MUSIC

(i; ii) Canzone for Flute & Piano; (ii; iii) Cello Sonata; (iii; iv) Summer Music for Wind Quintet; (ii) Excursions, Op. 20; Nocturne (Homage to John Field), Souvenirs: excerpts

Ⓝ Ⓑ  EMI 2 34473-2 (i) Baxtresser; (ii) Margalit; (iii) Stepansky; (iv) with Wind Qt

The Canzone for Flute and Piano has an Elysian, soaring melody (slightly French in atmosphere) which Jeanne Baxtresser plays very beautifully. The Cello Sonata has a powerful impulse and is given the most eloquent advocacy here, while the Excursions have wit and elegance. The shorter piano pieces are all distinctive. An unusual collection, well worth seeking out.

Summer Music

 Crystal (ADD) CD 750. Westwood Wind Quintet – CARLSSON: Nightwings; LIGETI: Bagatelles; MATHIAS: Quintet ***

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.553851. Michael Thompson Wind Quintet – HINDEMITH: Kleine Kammermusik (*); JANÁČEK: Mládí (*); LARSSON: Quattro tempi **

Samuel Barber's Summer Music is an evocative mood-picture of summer, a gloriously warm and lyrical piece. The Crystal CD offers superbly committed and sensitive playing; a vivid, warm recording.

The Michael Thompson Wind Quintet offer the piece with an enterprising choice of coupling and give an expressive account. The playing is wonderfully accomplished and sensitive, but the close balance does rob it of atmosphere.

PIANO MUSIC

Ballade, Op. 46; Excursions, Op. 20; Interlude 1 (Adagio for Jeanne); Nocturne, Op. 33; Piano Sonata, Op. 26

Ⓝ 🔑 * Nimbus NI 2528 John Browning

Horowitz gave the première of Barber's formidable Piano Sonata in 1950 and his performance has never been surpassed. Van Cliburn's later stereo version was pretty masterly too. Since then John Browning has rather made the sonata his own. He met the composer first in 1956 and frequently visited him until he died. In 1962 he was soloist in the New York première of the Piano Concerto which was commissioned for him. His performance of the Sonata from 1993 is very impressive, the Scherzo articulated with witty delicacy, and he confidently surmounts the technical difficulties of the closing fugue, which was added to the work at Horowitz's request. It comes here as part of the composer's complete solo piano music and includes the very first recording of the haunting Interlude (subtitled Adagio for Jeanne). The Nocturne is subtitled 'Homage to John Field', the Excursions draw on jazz idioms with real flare, and the Ballade, the composer's last completed piano piece, is in ternary form with a stormy middle section. All this music is played with a spontaneous virtuosity and much understanding, and the 1993 recording is excellent.

Piano Sonata

🔑  Hyp. CDA 67469. Hamelin – IVES: Piano Sonata 2 ***

Mark-André Hamelin makes an ideal alternative choice in coupling Sonatas by Barber and Ives. In Hamelin's hands the complex first movement unravels spontaneously to demonstrate both power and underlying lyricism, and he is equally at home in the catchily syncopated Scherzo and the thoughtful threnody of the slow movement. He is superbly recorded.

VOCAL MUSIC

Agnus Dei

 Hyp. CDA 66219. Corydon Singers, Best – BERNSTEIN: Chichester Psalms; COPLAND: In the Beginning, etc. ***

Barber's Agnus Dei is none other than our old friend the Adagio, arranged for voices by the composer in 1967. Matthew Best's fine performance moves spaciously and expansively to an impressive climax.

Choral Music

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.559053. Ormond College Ch., Melbourne Orchestra, Lawrence

Apart from his vocal arrangement of the famous Adagio, Barber's highly original, stimulating and immediately compelling choral music is still little known. None is more telling than the dramatic A Stopwatch and an Ordnance Map, a setting of a poem by Stephen Spender describing the death of a soldier in the Spanish Civil War, with its atmospheric accompaniment for three kettledrums. Reincarnations, a strikingly contrasted trio of Celtic folk songs, is equally memorable, as is The Virgin Martyrs for female voices, while many of the other items are lyrically and melodically highly appealing, not least Twelfth Night and the serene To be sung on water. The collection ends with a pair of avant-garde choruses from the opera, Antony and Cleopatra, followed by the powerful eight-part setting of Gerard Manley Hopkins's God's Grandeur. The performances are very accomplished and deeply felt, and the recording is first class.

Songs (Collection)

 Hyp. CDA 67528. Finley, Aronowitz Qt, Drake

This is an ideal collection of Barber's songs, including some of the Hermit songs, with the recital culminating in his setting of Matthew Arnold's Dover Beach. The quartet drawn from the Aronowitz Ensemble features in a performance which inspires Gerald Finley to some of the most delicate tonal shading, perfectly controlled. Interestingly, only one of the songs is a setting of an American poem, by James Agee. Otherwise the orientation is towards Britain and Ireland, bringing out Barber's natural inclination away from his American background.

BARRIOS, Agustin (1885–1944)

Humoresque; Junto a tu corazion – Vals; Mabilita; Madrigal – Gavota; Maxixa; Pepita; Sarita (Mazurka); Suite Andina; Tu y Yo (Gavota romántica); Un sueño en la floresta; Vals, Op. 8/4; Vidalita con variaciones; Vallancico de Navidad

(BB)  Naxos 8.554558. Goni

Goni's ebb and flow of rubato is a natural response to the line of the music and her playing always sounds spontaneous. She is very well recorded, and the back-up documentation is first class.

Canción de la Hilandera; La catedral; Confesión; Contemplación; Invocación a mi madre; Madrecita; 4 Minuets; Oración (Piegaria); Oración para todos; La Samaritana; El sueño de la muñequita; Variations on a Theme of Tárrega

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.555718. Enno Voorhoost

Enno Voorhoost's playing is of the highest order. His flexing of rubato and flowing lines are totally spontaneous-sounding, and his beguilingly subtle control of dynamic brings the most disarmingly attractive results. The recording is very real and properly intimate.

BARTÓK, Béla (1881–1945)

Concerto for Orchestra

 Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD) 467 602-2. Israel PO, Mehta – JANÁČEK: Taras Bulba; KODÁLY: Concerto for Orchestra ***

Ⓜ (*) DG (ADD) 477 7160. BPO, Karajan – STRAVINSKY: Rite of Spring **(*)

Mehta's performance lacks the last degree of bite, but its combination of brilliance and warm expressiveness is very attractive. The finale has a measure of jollity in it (what Bartók called its 'life-assertion') at a tempo that allows the strings to articulate their rushing semi-quavers clearly. The recording was in the demonstration bracket in its day, with translucent woodwind, firmly focused brass and plenty of sheen on the strings.

On DG, the Berlin Philharmonic, in superb form in the 1960s, gives a performance that is rich, romantic and smooth – to some ears perhaps excessively so. Karajan is right in treating Bartók emotionally, but the comparison with Solti on Decca immediately points the contrast between Berlin romanticism and earthy, red-blooded, Hungarian passion. Both conductors allow themselves a fair degree of rubato, but Solti's is linked with the Hungarian folksong idiom, while Karajan's moulding of phrases is essentially of the German tradition.

Concerto for Orchestra; (i) Piano Concertos 1-3; (ii) Concerto for 2 Pianos, Percussion & Orchestra; (iii) Violin Concerto 2. The Miraculous Mandarin (complete ballet). Rhapsodies (for Violin & Orchestra) 1-2; (ii) Sonata for 2 Pianos & Percussion. Excerpts from: Music for Strings, Percussion & Celesta (opening); (iv) Bluebeard's Castle: The Lake of Tears

Ⓝ Ⓑ EMI 2 15037-2 (4) CBSO, Rattle; with (i) Donohoe; (ii) Katia & Marielle Labèque (iii) Kyung-Wha Chung; (iv) von Otter & White

Rattle's live recordings of the Concerto for Orchestra and the studio version of The Miraculous Mandarin both draw on an exceptionally wide emotional and expressive range with rich and well-balanced recording. Donohoe then joins the CBSO for first class accounts of the three solo piano concertos and Kyung-Wha Chung gives commanding, inspired performances of the Violin Concerto and the Two Rhapsodies full of fire and imagination.

Concerto for Orchestra; Dance Suite; Divertimento; Hungarian Sketches; The Miraculous Mandarin: Suite; Music for Strings, Percussion & Celesta; Romanian Folk Dances

🔑 Ⓑ  Double Decca 470 516-2 (2). Chicago SO, Solti

Solti's digital Bartók recordings may not quite have the searing intensity of his classic LSO accounts of the major works here, but the extra warmth of the later readings brings out the lyrical qualities to the music. The Divertimento is superbly done too, incisive and full-bodied, and the Hungarian and Romanian dances have all the atmosphere one could wish for. In short, this is excellent value in the Double Decca series and brings typically fine Decca sound.

Concerto for Orchestra; Hungarian Sketches; Music for Strings, Percussion & Celesta

🔑 Ⓜ * RCA (ADD) SACD 82876 61390-2. Chicago SO, Reiner

Reiner's superlative account of the Concerto for Orchestra sounds better than ever in the new compatible-SACD version heard through two speakers. The performances of the Music for Strings, Percussion and Celesta and the splendid Hungarian Sketches also benefit from the additional presence and sumptuousness of the new transfer. Indispensable, even if you have other accounts of these scores.

Concerto for Orchestra; Dance Suite; Kossuth; The Miraculous Mandarin; 3 Village Scenes; The Wooden Prince

🔑 Ⓝ Ⓜ * Ph. 475 7684 (3). Budapest Festival O, Iván Fischer

The Budapest Festival Orchestra conducted by Iván Fischer add to their laurels with their outstanding account of the Concerto for Orchestra, also offering, as well as the Village Scenes, an equally compelling account of the rarely heard symphonic poem, Kossuth, and a modern recording was badly needed. The recording is first class, as it is in the other three works included.

Concerto for Orchestra; Miraculous Mandarin: Suite

(*) Sony 88869 7123632. Bav. RSO, Jansons – RAVEL: Daphnis et Chloë: Suite 2 *

Concert performances from 2004 and 2007 – and very good ones, too. The Bayerisches Rundfunksorchester is magnificent, with particularly lush string-tone, heard to excellent effect both in the Concerto for Orchestra and in the Ravel; the latter, incidentally, is without chorus. There are more polished Concerto for Orchestra versions to be found (Reiner still sounds marvellous on RCA – see above) but Jansons's Daphnis is very seductive.

Concerto for Orchestra; Music for Strings, Percussion & Celesta

Ⓑ  EMI (ADD) 4 76897-2. BPO, Karajan

Karajan is right in treating Bartók emotionally, but comparison with Solti points the contrast between Berlin romanticism and earthy Hungarian passion. Karajan's moulding of phrases is essentially of the German tradition. The Music for Strings, Percussion and Celesta has a well-upholstered timbre, and here Karajan's essentially romantic view combines with the recording to produce a certain urbanity.

(i) Piano Concertos 1–2; (ii) 2 Portraits, Op. 5

Ⓜ  DG (ADD/DDD) 477 6353. (i) Pollini, Chicago SO; (ii) Mintz, LSO; Abbado

The DG issue forms a partnership between two of the most distinguished Italian musicians of the day, collaborating in performances in which virtuosity goes with a sense of spontaneity. Rhythms in fast movements are freely and infectiously sprung to bring out bluff Bartókian high spirits, rather than any brutality. The Chicago Orchestra, vividly recorded, is in superb form and this reissue gives a new lease of life to the 1979 analogue recording, enhanced by Mintz's account of the 2 Portraits.

Piano Concertos (i) 1; (ii) 2; (iii) 3

🔑 * DG 477 5330. (i) Zimerman, Chicago SO; (ii) Andsnes, BPO; (iii) Grimaud, LSO; all cond. Boulez

Ⓜ  Ph. (ADD) 475 8690. Kovacevich, LSO or BBC SO, C. Davis

🔑 Ⓜ  Warner Elatus 0927 46735-2. Schiff, Budapest Festival O, Fischer

Krystian Zimerman gives an aristocratic and searching account of the First Concerto with the Chicago orchestra, made in 2001. Leif Ove Andsnes with the Berlin Philharmonic give a thrilling reading of the Second, arguably the most visionary of the three, which many readers will recall from BBC broadcasts. Hélène Grimaud's performance of the Third with the LSO is the most recent and can hold its own with any of the current competition. Masterly performances and clean, meticulously conducted support from all three orchestras, plus eminently fine DG recording. Arguably the most recommendable set of the concertos now before the public.

Kovacevich's direct, concentrated readings of the three Concertos now returns to the catalogue as one of Philips's Originals. Though No. 2 was recorded (with the BBC Symphony Orchestra) in 1968, and the other two in 1975, the sound is bright and clear, giving extra bite to the performances, although the effect of the original resonance remains. Sir Colin Davis accompanies sensitively and vigorously, with lifted folk rhythms in No. 1 sharply pressed home and the violent finale exhilarating, with its many unexpected changes of tempo expertly controlled. At mid-price this disc is still very competitive.

András Schiff's colourful, winning performances are totally idiomatic, brilliantly and warmly accompanied by the fine Budapest orchestra, bringing out point and sparkle. His depth of meditation in the slow movements matches that which he brings equally to Bach or Schubert. Now on Elatus, this is a real bargain.

(i) Piano Concertos 1–3; (ii) Violin Concertos 1–2

Ⓝ Ⓑ  EMI 2 06885-2 (i) Donohoe, CBSO, Rattle; (ii) Sitovetsky, Philh. O, Pešek

Donohoe's highly successful account of the three Piano Concertos are here joined with Sitkovetsky's equally recommendable versions of the Violin Concertos.

(i; ii) Piano Concertos 1–3. Violin Concertos: (iii; iv) 1; (iii; ii) 2

🔑 Ⓑ  Double Decca (ADD/DDD) 473 271-2 (2). (i) Ashkenazy; (ii) LPO; (iii) Chung; (iv) Chicago SO; all cond. Solti

If, in the Violin Concertos, Chung is rather forwardly balanced, the hushed intensity of the writing, as well as the biting Hungarian flavour, is caught superbly, thanks to Solti as well as to the soloist, and there is no sentimental lingering. In the Piano Concertos, the partnership between Ashkenazy and Solti works equally well. The Second and Third Concertos spark off the kind of energy one would expect from a live performance. The First Concerto (digital) is even tougher, urgent and biting, and the slow movements in all three works bring a hushed inner concentration, beautifully captured in warmly refined sound. Indeed, the recording throughout, whether analogue or digital, is of vintage Decca quality.

Piano Concerto 3

Ⓝ Ⓜ  EMI 2 28591-2 Argerich, Montreake SO, Dutoit – PROKOFIEV: Piano Concertos 1 & 3

(i) Piano Concerto 3. Mikrokosmos Vol. 6: 140, 144, 146–9, 151, 153

() Testament mono SBT 1300. Katchen, (i) SRO, Ansermet – PROKOFIEV: Piano Concerto 3 ()

Katchen's 1953 account of the then relatively new Third Concerto was the first LP version issued in Britain. Even now, half a century later, its freshness and spontaneity make its reissue welcome, particularly in so excellent a transfer. The excerpts from Mikrokosmos are also brilliant.

Elegant playing from Martha Argerich. There is a wonderful, improvisatory feel to much of it, though at times in the slow movement she caresses a phrase in a way that draws attention to her rather than the composer. Not perhaps a first recommendation then, but a very stimulating one.

(i) Viola Concerto (two versions: ed. Péter Bartók & ed. Tibor Serly); Two Pictures, Op. 10

(BB)  Naxos 8.554183. Xiao, Budapest PO, Kovacs (with SERLY: Rhapsody for Viola & Orchestra ***)

Bartók's Viola Concerto was the uncompleted work which, soon after his death, Tibor Serly put together from sketches. Now Bartók's son Péter, with the scholar Paul Neubauer, has re-edited those sketches. Though the differences are small, this first recording of the revised version, superbly played, proves fascinating, sounding closer to the Concerto for Orchestra. With the rich-toned Chinese viola-player Xiao as soloist, that version is here presented alongside Serly's. The warmly atmospheric Two Pictures and a viola work by Serly make a good coupling.

(i) Viola Concerto; Violin Concertos 1–2; (ii) Rhapsodies 1–2 for Violin & Orchestra; (iii) Duos 28, 31, 33, 36, 41, 42 for 2 Violins. Solo Violin Sonata

🔑 (BB)  EMI Gemini (ADD) 5 85487-2 (2). Y. Menuhin; (i) New Philh. O, Dorati; (ii) BBC SO, Boulez; (iii) Gotkovsky

Menuhin, with his strongly creative imagination, plays these concertos with characteristic nobility of feeling, and he and Dorati make much of the Hungarian dance-rhythms. There is an appealing, earthy, peasant manner in Menuhin's playing of the Two Rhapsodies, which are given an authentic tang, and rather surprisingly this is matched by Boulez's approach, warm, rather than clinical. The great violinist commissioned the Solo Violin Sonata, and this is his third recording, made at Abbey Road in 1974/5. The six individually chosen Duos make a bonus for what is a very attractive bargain double.

Violin Concertos 1; 2

(BB)  Naxos 8.554321. Pauk, Polish Nat. RSO (Katowice), Wit

 Nim. NI 5333. Hetzel, Hungarian State SO, Fischer

György Pauk plays both concertos with exemplary musicianship and is given very good support by the Polish National Radio Orchestra at Katowice. No one investing in this coupling need feel disappointed, and the sound has great warmth and naturalness. Though not a first choice, this offers value for money and gives musical satisfaction.

Gerhart Hetzel also plays both concertos with great feeling and understanding. These are performances of strong but unintrusive personality. Both concertos are very well recorded, with a natural, excellent balance which helps the soloist to just the right extent, and it must rank among the very best now available.

Violin Concerto 2; 2 Rhapsodies for Violin & Orchestra.

🔑  DG 459 639-2. Shaham, Chicago SO, Boulez

Shaham's reading of the Second Violin Concerto is full of flair and imagination, taut and intense, while Boulez draws superb playing from the Chicago orchestra. The hushed intensity of Shaham's playing in the slow movement has rarely been matched. The two Rhapsodies make an ideal coupling. Full-bodied, well-detailed sound.

(i) Violin Concerto 2; (ii) Contrasts for Clarinet, Violin & Piano; (iii) Violin Sonata 1. Sonata for Solo Violin

 Naïve V4991 (2). Korcia, with (i) CBSO, Oramo; (ii) Portal; (ii; iii) Bavouzet

Laurent Korcia won much acclaim and many international prizes. This two-CD Bartók set shows his virtuosity and musicianship to excellent effect. The Concerto was recorded in 2004 in Symphony Hall, Birmingham, and the Contrasts the following year in Brussels. The Solo Sonata and the First Violin Sonata are earlier (Marseilles, 1997) but are no less accomplished and persuasive.

Dance Suite; Hungarian Pictures; (i) The Miraculous Mandarin (ballet; complete)

(BB)  Naxos 8.557433. Bournemouth SO, Alsop, (i) with Bournemouth SO Ch.

Marin Alsop conducts powerful, colourful performances of the controversial and violent ballet, The Miraculous Mandarin in its full form, coupled with the Dance Suite of 1923, demonstrating in both the orchestra's virtuosity and the conductor's versatility. Helpfully, each of the 12 sections is separately banded. The Dance Suite in this performance brings together rustic vitality and orchestral refinement, a more genial reading than many, while the Hungarian Pictures, with Bartók's own colourful orchestrations of early piano pieces, makes a relaxed tailpiece.

Divertimento for Strings

🔑 ✿ * Chan. 9816. Norwegian CO, Brown – JANÁČEK: Idyll, etc. **** ✿

Iona Brown gives an arrestingly vibrant account of a piece that can sound dour but here is life-enhancing. The concentration is matched with playing of virtuosity and warmth and demonstration-standard sound of great presence.

Divertimento for Strings; Music for Strings, Percussion & Celesta

 Linn CKD 234. Scottish CO, Mackerras – KODÁLY: Dances of Galánta ***

In his warmth and refinement Sir Charles Mackerras evidently regards Bartók as a composer more expressive than brutal and the dance element is delightfully brought out in the two fast movements of the Music for Strings, Percussion and Celesta, with rhythms wittily pointed and the jazzy syncopations given a lift to bring fun to the finale. In the Divertimento that natural, easy flexibility makes for just as much of an idiomatic feeling as in the Music for Strings, Percussion and Celesta.

Hungarian Pictures

(M)  Chan. 6625 [id.]. Philh. O, Järvi – ENESCU: Romanian Rhapsodies 1–2; WEINER: Hungarian Folkdance Suite ***

The Hungarian Pictures are superbly played here and given spectacular sound. They are aptly coupled, not only with Enescu's pair of Romanian Rhapsodies but also with an equally engaging suite by Leó Weiner.

Kossuth: symphonic poem; The Wooden Prince: ballet (complete)

 Hungaroton HSACD 32502. Hungarian Nat. PO, Kocsis

Zoltán Kocsis is as authoritative an advocate of Bartók on the podium as he is at the piano. Kossuth is heavily indebted to the world of Strauss and Liszt and offers few glimpses of the Bartók who was soon to emerge. The Wooden Prince followed Bluebeard's Castle, occupying the composer during 1914–17 when the Stravinsky ballets and Le Rossignol were new music. Kocsis directs performances of real poetic feeling and his orchestra is first class. János Kárpáti's thorough and scholarly notes are particularly informative and helpful, and the recording is excellent.

(i) The Miraculous Mandarin (complete); Hungarian Peasant Songs; Hungarian Sketches; Romanian Folk Dances; Transylvanian Dances

🔑 (M) * Ph. 454-430-2. (i) Hung. R. Ch.; Budapest Festival O, Fischer

Iván Fischer's account of The Miraculous Mandarin is possibly the best ever committed to disc, and certainly the best recorded. The sound is in the demonstration category, with enormous range and depth. It has vivid presence and impact, and the balance is both truthful and refined. The performance has collected golden opinions almost everywhere and has virtuosity, bite and real flair. It won the Gramophone Orchestral Award in 1998 and is now reissued at mid-price in Universal's Award Collection: it makes a first-class recommendation for this repertoire.

2 Portraits, Op. 5

(M)  Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD) 476 2700. VPO, Dohnányi – STRAVINSKY: The Firebird **(*)

Dohnányi's Bartók style, rather more mellow than usual, is suited to the Two Portraits, the first of which is used also as the first movement of the First Violin Concerto. The 1977 recording is warm and spacious.

Portrait, Op. 5/1

✿ (BB) () Naxos mono 8.110973. Szigeti, Philh. O, Lambert – BLOCH: Violin Concerto; PROKOFIEV: Violin Concerto 1 () ✿

Szigeti was a stylist and one of the greatest and most individual artists of his day and there is no questioning the strength of his personality or the quality of his artistry. They are heard to admirable effect in this outstanding account of the first of the Bartók Portraits, which he recorded with Constant Lambert on one of his first post-war visits to London.

Rhapsody 1 for Cello & Orchestra

(BB)  Warner Apex 0927 40600-2. Noras, Finnish RSO, Saraste – ELGAR: Cello Concerto; DVOŘÁK: Cello Concerto **(*)

Bartók scored only the first of his two Rhapsodies (originally written for violin and piano) for cello and orchestra, and very effective it is on the responsive bow of Arto Noras. Good though not outstanding recording, with the cello dominating the sound-picture.

CHAMBER AND INSTRUMENTAL MUSIC

(i; ii) Contrasts for Clarinet, Violin & Piano; (ii) 2 Rhapsodies; Romanian Folk Dances. (Solo) Violin Sonata

🔑 (BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55149. Osostowicz, with (i) M. Collins; (ii) Tomes

(i) Contrasts. Violin Sonatas 1–2

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.550749. Pauk, Jandó, (i) with Berkes

Hyperion's distinguished coupling of the Bartók Contrasts with the Rhapsodies and the Sonata for Solo Violin now re-emerges on the Helios budget label. All these artists are on excellent form. Krysia Osostowicz is as good as almost any of her rivals in the Sonata, and the remainder of the programme is hardly less impressive.

The Naxos collection is very highly recommendable too, particularly when these works are played by such experienced artists as György Pauk and his fellow Hungarian, Jenö Jandó. The refinement and subtlety of Pauk's playing here is very persuasive. In the superb account of Contrasts, in which Kálmán Berkes joins them, the balance is better than in the Sonatas. Outstanding value.

(i) 44 Duos. Solo Violin Sonata

(BB)  Naxos 8.550868. Pauk, (i) with Sawa

György Pauk's impressive recording of the remarkable Solo Sonata of 1944 is commanding, and everywhere his pacing seems just right and his playing effortless. In the 44 Duos Pauk, partnered by the Japanese violinist, Kazuki Sawa, offers expertly judged and splendidly characterful accounts of these pieces. The Naxos recording is very good indeed and enhances the attractions of this super-bargain issue.

Romanian Folk Dances (arr. Székely)

 Warner 8573-85769-2. Repin, Berezovsky – R. STRAUSS: Violin Sonata; STRAVINSKY: Divertimento ***

Repin and Berezovksy give an exemplary account of these Székely transcriptions as a makeweight in their outstanding Strauss–Stravinsky recital. There is nothing flashy about this impeccable and relaxed music-making.

(i) Sonata for 2 Pianos & Percussion. Suite for 2 Pianos, Op. 4b

(BB)  Warner Apex 0927 49569-2. Heisser, Pludermacher, with (i) Cipriani, Perotin

Heisser and Pludermacher offer a particularly useful coupling, and it is good to see their eminently vital and intelligent reading of the Sonata returning to circulation, particularly as the Argerich–Kovacevich account, arguably the finest, is currently out of circulation. Heisser and Pludermacher and their two percussionists are completely at one and totally idiomatic. The attractions of the disc are considerably enhanced by the coupling, the 1941 two-piano transcription of the Second Suite for Orchestra of 1905–7. Decent sound and excellent value.

String Quartets 1–6

🔑 (BB)  Warner Apex 2564 62686-2. Keller Qt

🔑  Decca 455 297-2 (2). Takács Qt

(BB)  Naxos 8.557543/44. Vermeer Qt

 DG 463 576-2 (2). Hagen Qt

(M)  DG 477 6322. Emerson Qt

The Keller made their recordings of the Bartók cycle in the Salle de Musique de la Chaux-de-Fonds, where the Végh recorded their second cycle. The performances are totally idiomatic, intense yet natural, and at their new and highly competitive price are among the best you can find.

The Takács Quartet also bring to these masterpieces the requisite virtuosity, tonal sophistication and command of idiom. These are full-blooded accounts of enormous conviction, with that open-air quality which suggests the fragrance of the forests and lakes of Hungary. The recording is excellent, and this Decca set now takes its place near the top of the list.

The Vermeer are a superbly equipped quartet with first-class ensemble and attack. These are recent recordings and are certainly highly recommendable, though earlier recordings are perhaps even more idiomatic. However, the Vermeer recording has a considerable price advantage.

The Hagen Quartet also have all the requisite fire and virtuosity for these marvellous scores. One or two expressive emphases in the Third Quartet may disturb some listeners, but on the whole theirs is a set with strong claims to commend it – among which is the vivid recording. Not necessarily a first recommendation, but certainly among the finest in the catalogue.

The Emerson Quartet project very powerfully and, in terms of virtuosity, finesse and accuracy, outstrip most of their rivals. If at times their projection and expressive vehemence are a bit too much of a good thing, these are concentrated and brilliant performances that are very well recorded. Although not our first choice for this repertoire, this set won the 1989 Gramophone 'Record of the Year' award.

String Quartet 5

 ECM 476 5779. Zehetmair Qt – HINDEMITH: Quartet 4 ***

An excellent coupling which serves to introduce collectors of the Bartók quartets to the now grievously (and unjustly) neglected Hindemith. The Zehetmair Quartet give as fine a performance of the Fifth as it has ever received on record and they convey a freshness and passion that recalls the pioneering Hungarians.

Violin Sonatas 1–2; (Solo) Violin Sonata

🔑 (M)  Virgin 5 18177-2. Tetzlaff, Andsnes

Violin Sonata 1; Sonatina (trans. André Gertler); Rhapsody 2 for Violin & Piano; Hungarian Folksongs (trans. Tivadar Országh); Hungarian Folk-Tunes (trans. Jozsef Szigeti)

🔑  ASV CDDCA 883. Stanzeleit, Fenyö

(Solo) Violin Sonata; Violin Sonata 2; Rhapsody 1; Romanian Folk Dances

🔑  ASV CDDCA 852. Stanzeleit, Fenyö

Christian Tetzlaff and Leif Ove Andsnes offer both the Violin Sonatas and the solo work on a single mid-priced disc and bring a commanding intensity and fine discipline to all three, and their vividly recorded accounts must rank as the finest since the Oistrakh versions with Frida Bauer (No. 1) and Richter (No. 2) in the early 1970s. In the Solo Sonata Tetzlaff can withstand the most exalted comparisons.

Susanne Stanzeleit and her partner, Gusztáv Fenyö, are completely inside the idiom. The Violin Sonata 1 and the Rhapsody 2 are every bit as well played and recorded as the Solo Sonata and the Second Sonata for violin and piano (1922), and the performances are as good as any you can find in the current catalogue. The recording, too, is altogether first rate.

COMPLETE PIANO MUSIC

Allegro barbaro; 14 Bagatelles, Op. 6; 3 Burlesques, Op. 8c; Dance Suite; 4 Dirges, Op. 9a; 10 Easy Pieces; 2 Elegies, Op. 8b; 7 Esquisses, Op. 9b; First Term at the Piano; For Children, Books 1–4; 3 Hungarian Folksongs from Csik; 3 Hungarian Folk Tunes; 15 Hungarian Peasant Dances; Improvisations on Hungarian Peasant Songs, Op. 20; Kossuth; March funèbre; Mikrokosmos (complete); Out of Doors; 4 Pieces; Rhapsody Op. 1 (2 versions); Romanian Christmas Carols; 2 Romanian Dances, Op. 8a; 6 Romanian Folk Tunes; 3 Rondos on Folk Tunes; Sonatina; Sonata; 3 Studies, Op. 18; Suite, Op. 14

Ⓝ ✿ Ⓑ * Ph. (ADD/DDD) 475 6720 (8) Kocsis

Philips have restored Kocsis's coverage of the complete piano music to the catalogue and it remain the classic set for the foreseeable future. Bartók playing doesn't come any better than this – nor does piano recording. Kocsis penetrates to the very centre and soul of this music more deeply than almost any rival. Scrupulously attentive to the composer's wishes, Kocsis can produce power and drama when required, but he also commands a wide-ranging palette and a marvellously controlled vitality. His playing calls to mind Bartók's own injunction that performances must be 'beautiful but true'.

Allegro barbaro; 6 Dances in Bulgarian Rhythm; 3 Hungarian Folksongs; 15 Hungarian Peasant Songs; Mikrokosmos (excerpts); 3 Rondos on Slovak Folk Tunes; Sonatina

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550451. Szokolay

Balázs Szokolay is a highly musical player. His performances are always vitally intelligent and perceptive, and he is acceptably recorded. This is a thoroughly recommendable recital and excellent value.

Piano Music Vol. 1: Andante for Piano; 3 Hungarian Folksongs from Csík; 15 Hungarian Peasant Songs, Sz.71; 3 Rondos on Folk Tunes, Sz.84; 7 Sketches, Op. 9b; Sonata, Sz.80; Suite, Op. 14

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.554717. Jandó

Piano Music Vol. 2: Dance Suite; Improvisations, Op. 20; Petite Suite; Romanian Christmas Carols; Romanian Folk Dances 1–6; Slovakian Dance; Sonatina

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.554718. Jandó

Jenö Jandó is very well served by the Naxos engineers and gives far more than just serviceable accounts of this repertoire. His playing is thoroughly idiomatic without being really special.

14 Bagatelles; 3 Hungarian Folk Songs; Out of Doors; 2 Romanian Dances, Op. 8a; Romanian Christmas Carols; Sonatina; Sonata

🔑 Ⓜ * Ph. 464 676-2. Kocsis

This representative collection, chosen as one of Philips's '50 Great Recordings', comes from the Kocsis complete survey, and as it includes the Sonata and Sonatina and is superbly recorded, it can be highly recommended.

For Children (Books 1–4) complete; Mikrokosmos (Books 1–6) complete

Ⓜ  Teldec (ADD) 9031 76139-2 (3). Ránki

For Children, Volumes I & II (revised version); 10 Easy Pieces; 15 Hungarian Peasant Songs. Mikrokosmos, Vol. VI: 6 Bulgarian Dances; 6 Romanian Folk Dances; Sonata; Sonatina

(BB)  EMI Gemini (ADD) 3 50869-2 (2). Béroff

Dezsö Ránki here shows his musicianship and plays all 85 pieces with the utmost persuasion and with the art that conceals art, for the simplicity of some of these pieces is deceptive; darker currents lurk beneath their surface. He gives us the composer's original edition of 1908–9. Ránki also plays the Mikrokosmos with an effortless eloquence and a welcome straightforwardness. He is very clearly (if forwardly) recorded, and he is given a realistic presence.

Choice between Michel Béroff and Dezsö Ránki is simplified by the fact that Béroff records the revised score and Ránki gives us the original edition of 1908/9. Moreover, Ránki's set is coupled with the complete Mikrokosmos, whereas Béroff offers a number of Bartók's other major piano works. Béroff's playing has an unaffected eloquence that is touching, and the recording, made in the Salle Wagram, Paris, is very good.

Mikrokosmos (complete)

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.557821/22. Jandó, Szokolay, Takács

Jenö Jandó's plain style suits the earlier Mikrokosmos; and he has an excellent partner in the pieces for piano duo, and those needing a vocal contribution bring eloquent contributions from the rich-voiced Tamara Takács. Excellent recording makes this an economical first choice, with good documentation.

OPERA

Bluebeard's Castle (DVD Version)

🔑 * Decca DVD 074 3254. Sass, Kováts, LPO, Solti
(Director: Miklós Szinetár)

Solti made this electrifying video recording of Bluebeard's Castle in 1981. His two soloists could not have been better chosen, for both the dark-timbred Kolos Kováts and the rich-voiced Sylvia Sass are totally convincing in their roles as a grim, unmoving Bluebeard and an increasingly apprehensive but determinedly wilful Judith. The sets in Miklós Szinetár's production are extraordinarily imaginative, creating an uncannily gloomy atmosphere as Duke Bluebeard and his wife make their way slowly through the dank, ill-lit passages of his castle, and always bringing a vivid surprise to the viewer as well as to Judith as each door is opened. The tension steadily increases until the seventh door reveals Judith's own destiny. With the LPO responding with great concentration, Solti's orchestral commentary is superbly controlled: the taut grip for which his conducting is celebrated is felt at its most magnetic, and the powerful closing scene is haunting. It is difficult to believe that Bartók's masterpiece could be brought to life more convincingly, the recording and camerawork are of the highest quality and, for good measure, Chris Hassall has provided the translation for the surtitles.

Bluebeard's Castle (sung in Hungarian)

(BB)  Naxos 8.660928. Beláček, Meláth, Bournemouth SO, Alsop

Marin Alsop has made a series of impressive recordings for Naxos, of which this is one of the finest yet, with gloriously rich sound, very well focused. The big climax when Judith opens the door on to Bluebeard's vast kingdom is thrilling, a wonderfully weighty focus for the whole sequence of doors, a sequence which Alsop sustains masterfully. Gustáv Beláček has a Slavonic-sounding bass, firmly controlled, very apt for the role and well matched by the Judith of Andrea Meláth, an imaginative choice of soloist.

BATE, Stanley (1911-59)

Viola Concerto

Ⓝ Ⓜ  Dutton CDLX 7216. Chase, BBC Concert O, Bell – BELL: Rosa Mystica; VAUGHAN WILLIAMS: Romance ***

Stanley Bate studied with Vaughan Williams, R.O. Morris, Gordon Jacob and Arthur Benjamin, and then continued his musical schooling in Paris with Nadia Boulanger and in Berlin with Hindemith. He returned to London in 1949. His output includes five piano concertos and four symphonies. But his work remained little played and after his death in 1959 fell completely out of the repertoire. Hindemith, Vaughan Williams and Walton are major influences. The Viola Concerto was written in America during 1944– 6 and first broadcast with Emanuel Vardi and the NBC Orchestra in 1947 but never heard again until the present recording. It is a big piece, nearly forty minutes in length, warmly romantic in idiom, well laid out for the instrument and well worth investigating. Indeed it is both compelling and eloquent. Roger Chase is the excellent soloist and plays the Montagnana viola that once belonged to Lionel Tertis and he receives excellent orchestral support under Stephen Bell.

BAX, Arnold (1883–1953)

Cathaleen-ni-Hoolihan; (i) Concertante for 3 Wind Instruments & Orchestra; London Pageant; Tamara Suite (orch. Parlett)

 Chan. 9879. BBC PO, Brabbins; (i) with Callow, Bradbury, Goodall

Cathaleen-ni-Hoolihan began life in 1903 in Bax's student years as the slow movement of a quartet. The score of Tamara was inspired by Karsavina, Diaghilev's prima ballerina. He never finished the orchestration, and the present 23-minute suite was compiled by the Bax scholar Graham Parlett. London Pageant comes from the Coronation year, 1937. The Concertante for Cor Anglais, Clarinet, Bassoon and Orchestra finds Bax at the very end of his creative life as it was being composed for the Henry Wood memorial concert in 1949. The performances are first class, persuasive in every way, and so, too, is the richly sonorous recording.

(i) Cello Concerto; (ii) Violin Concerto; (iii) Morning Song (Maytime in Sussex)

🔑 Ⓜ  Chan. X10154. (i) Wallfisch; (ii) Mordkovitch; (iii) Fingerhut; LPO, Thomson

Chandos is re-grouping its vintage Bax recordings at mid-price, and Volume 1 includes two major concertante works plus the short but attractive Morning Song, an aubade for piano and chamber orchestra written to celebrate the twenty-first birthday of Princess Margaret. The Cello Concerto is marvellously played by Raphael Wallfisch, while Lydia Mordkovitch is equally committed to the Violin Concerto. This is full of good, easily remembered tunes, yet there is a plangent, bitter-sweet quality about many of its ideas and an easy, Mediterranean-like warmth that is very appealing. All three soloists are given splendid support by the LPO under Bryden Thomson, and the recording sets and maintains high standards for this Bax series.

Concerto for Piano (Left Hand); Symphonic Variations

Ⓝ 🔑 (BB) * Wass, Bournemouth SO, James Judd

Bax's Left Hand Piano Concerto is a real find – one of his most appealing concertane works. It has a hauntingly atmospheric central Moderato tranquillo with a lovely, gentle main theme and a perky marching figure with variations for its attractive diverse finale. The Symphonic Variations takes twice as long (46 minutes) and is in two sections combining eight linked movements. All are titled, but with no explanation given of their meaning, although the lovely third-movement Nocturne has touching serenity. The work is complex but full of Baxian lyricism and indeed in the opening sections reminds one a little of Rachmaninov, with full-blooded strings. The piano writing is demandingly complex, but, as Ashley Wass demonstrates, the bravura is very rewarding. His performances of both works are superb, and he gets admirable support from James Judd and the Bournemouth Orchestra. With a fine balance and spectacular sound this is a Bax disc not to be missed.

(i) Violin Concerto; (ii) Symphony 3

Ⓜ () Dutton mono CDLX 7111. (i) Kersey, BBC SO, Boult; (ii) Hallé O, Barbirolli

Barbirolli's wartime recording of Bax's Third Symphony, made in the winter of 1943–4 when he was rebuilding the Hallé Orchestra, has never been surpassed as an interpretation, and this Dutton version brings astonishingly full and vivid sound, heightening the power of the performance. It is good too to have another powerful performance in the Violin Concerto. Eda Kersey recorded this with Boult and the BBC orchestra in Bedford in 1944. The result again is astonishingly vivid, with Kersey, sadly short-lived, demonstrating her virtuosic flair and depth of feeling.

(i; ii) Eire: I, Into the Twilight; II, In the Faery Hills; III, Rose-Catha. (iii; ii) A Legend; (i; iv) On the Sea-Shore (ed. Parlett); (i; ii) The Tale the Pine Trees Knew

Ⓜ  Chan. X10157. (i) Ulster O, (ii) Thomson; (iii) LPO; (iv) Handley

These three tone-poems form an Irish trilogy. The first two are filled with typical Baxian Celtic twilight, but the last, Rose-Catha (meaning 'battle-hymn') presents the composer in vigorous, extrovert mood, making an excellent contrast. Also included is The Tale the Pine Trees Knew, one of the better known as well as one of the most evocative of Bax's tone-poems. All are directed with total sympathy by Bryden Thomson. The prelude, On the Sea-Shore, makes a colourful and atmospheric companion in the hands of Vernon Handley, played and recorded with similar warmth and brilliance. A fine disc.

Film Music: (i) Oliver Twist (complete original score, prepared Graham Parlett). Malta GC, Part 2: Gay March; Quiet Interlude; Work and Play; March

🔑  Chan. 10126. BBC PO, Gamba; (i) with James

Bax's richly detailed score for David Lean's masterly Oliver Twist comes from 1948, music of quality that could stand on its own apart from the visual images. Bax writes in effect a concertante piano part, originally written for (and recorded by) Harriet Cohen, but very well played here by Paul James.

The writing for Malta GC is less individual but still attractive. Only the music for the first reel is included here, but it features a notable March with a genuine nobilmente theme in the best Elgarian tradition. The performances under Rumon Gamba are persuasively sympathetic and spontaneous in their narrative flow and are gloriously recorded – just sample the luscious strings in the opening Prelude for Oliver Twist.

The Garden of Fand; The Happy Forest; November Woods; Summer Music; Tintagel

🔑 Ⓜ * Chan. X10156. Ulster O, Thomson

This is perhaps the most attractive so far of these reissued Chandos Bax compilations in including not only The Garden of Fand but also Bax's masterly Cornish evocation, Tintagel. The Celtic twilight is ripely and sympathetically caught in the first three items, while Summer Music, dedicated to Sir Thomas Beecham and here given its first ever recording, brings an intriguing kinship with the music of Delius. The Chandos recording is superb.

The Garden of Fand; The Happy Forest; November Woods; The Tale the Pine Trees Knew; Tintagel

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.557599. RSNO, Lloyd-Jones

A truly worthwhile collection of symphonic poems, which originally accompanied David Lloyd-Jones's recordings of the symphonies. The performances are warm and flexible and very well played. The slight reservation concerns the recording, which is not always as expansive in the middle frequencies as it might be, though the gentler passages in The Garden of Fand, Happy Forest and November Woods have attractive atmospheric lustre.

The Garden of Fand; In the Faery Hills; November Woods; Sinfonietta

🔑  Chan. 10362. BBC PO, Handley

Vernon Handley is no less eloquent and authoritative in the tone-poems, and the BBC Philharmonic respond with enthusiasm. The Sinfonietta comes from the period of the Third Symphony and is vintage Bax, full of invention and colour. A superb issue, and recorded in lifelike and vivid sound.

The Garden of Fand (symphonic poem); Mediterranean; Northern Ballad 1; November Woods; Tintagel (symphonic poems)

 Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 231. LPO, Boult

Sir Adrian Boult's recording of The Garden of Fand is full of poetry and almost erases memories of Beecham's magical account. Tintagel is no less involving and beguiling and, though not as uninhibited as Barbirolli's, is equally valid. The Northern Ballad 1, though less memorable than either Fand or Tintagel, is well worth having, as is November Woods, a lush, romantic score. Mediterranean, a Spanish picture postcard and almost a waltz, has an endearing touch of vulgarity uncharacteristic of its composer. Excellent sound.

Golden Eagle: incidental music; Romantic Overture; Russian Suite; (i) Saga Fragment; (ii) 4 Songs

Ⓝ  Chan. 10159. LPO, Thomson with (i) Margaret Fingerhut; (ii) Martyn Hill

Interesting repertoire from the Baxian foothills, so to speak. The Russian Suite comprises orchestrations of piano pieces including In a Vodka Shop, which served as an interlude during the 1919 Diaghilev Season in London. Two of the Four Songs, date from 1910, the period of his infatuation with the Ukrainian Natalia Skarginski, and the Saga Fragment written for Harriet Cohen's American tour (1933) is a transcription of his single-movement Piano Quartet written ten years before at the time of the First Symphony. The Golden Eagle is a play by his brother, Clifford, about Mary Queen of Scots, produced in 1945. The Romantic Overture was written for Delius whom Bax had visited at Grez-sur-Loing in the company of Peter Warlock. Expert performances from all concerned and fine recorded sound. A disc to reward all admirers of the composer, it comes with authoritative and fascinating notes by Lewis Foreman.

The Happy Forest; Into the Twilight; 3 Northern Ballads; Nympholept; Red Autumn (orch: Graham Parlett)

Ⓝ * Chan. 10446. BBC PO, Handley

The 3 Northern Ballads ooze atmosphere, with Handley bringing out all the harmonic colours with incredible vividness. The ebb and flow of Bax's writing is something Handley well understood, and he superbly holds together the longest work here, Nympholept with marvellous intensity (and what a fine, imaginative score it is too!). Red Autumn is the rarity here. Graham Partlett has done a magnificent job in entering Bax's sound-world and the result is another rather good and dramatic Bax tone poem. The picturesque qualities of both The Happy Forest and Into the Twilight are magnificently captured by the Chandos engineers, and this CD is an unqualified success in every way.

On the Sea-Shore

Ⓜ * Chan. 10426X. Ulster O, Handley – BRIDGE: The Sea; BRITTEN: Sea Interludes; STANFORD: Irish Rhapsody 4 ****

Bax's Prelude, On the Sea-Shore, makes a colourful and atmospheric companion to the masterly Bridge, Britten and Stanford pieces on the disc, played and recorded with similar warmth and brilliance.

Symphonies 1–7; Rogue's Comedy Overture; Tintagel

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * Chan. 10122 (5). BBC PO, Handley (set includes free bonus CD of an interview between Vernon Handley and Andrew McGregor)

Vernon Handley's is the most satisfying survey of the cycle we have yet had, and it is difficult to imagine it being superseded. Handley holds the scores together very convincingly. His tempi are expertly judged and allow the music to unfold naturally and eloquently. The Second (in some ways the most imaginative of them all) comes over impressively, and the Third is both tauter yet freer in spirit than any of its rivals, including Barbirolli's wartime pioneering set. Perhaps in the Fifth and Sixth honours are more evenly divided between Handley and David Lloyd-Jones and the Scottish National Orchestra; both show this music in the best possible light. Listening to Handley's Seventh, one is forced to question earlier doubts as to its weakness, and much the same goes for the Fourth, even though this is incontrovertibly the weakest of the seven. The orchestral playing is highly responsive and excels in all departments, and the Chandos BBC recording produces sumptuous tonal results and it all comes at mid-price together with a rarity from the 1930s, the Rogue's Comedy Overture, as well as the (rightly) popular Tintagel.

Symphony 1; The Garden of Fand; In the Faery Hills

(BB)  Naxos 8.553525. RSNO, Lloyd-Jones

Symphonies: (i) 1 in E flat; (ii) 7 in A flat

 Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 232. LPO, (i) Fredman; (ii) Leppard

This first disc in the Naxos Bax series offers warmly idiomatic readings of two early symphonic poems, as well as the First Symphony, in recordings less weighty than in the rival Chandos versions but finely detailed. In the two symphonic poems, more specifically inspired by Irish themes, Lloyd-Jones draws equally warm and sympathetic performances from the Scottish Orchestra, bringing inner clarity to the heaviest scoring. First-rate sound, though Bryden Thomson on Chandos has even richer recording.

The Lyrita coupling is particularly generous (78 minutes) and the performances by Myer Fredman and Raymond Leppard are powerful and finely shaped and can well hold their own with the later, Chandos digital versions. The Lyrita 1970s analogue sound, too, is vivid and clear.

Symphonies (i) 2; (ii) 5

🔑 * Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 233. LPO, (i) Fredman; (ii) Leppard

Myer Fredman has secured a first-class account of the Second; the LPO sound as if they have been playing it all their lives, and the analogue recording is in the demonstration bracket for its period (the early 1970s). The Fifth symphony shows Bax holding in check the purely lyrical impulse, to which he could give such generous vein, in favour of a greater degree of motivic integration, though the music has characteristic brooding intensity and a powerful atmosphere. Raymond Leppard gives a dedicated and indeed inspired account, the LPO are at their very best, and so too are the Lyrita engineers.

Symphony 3; The Happy Forest (symphonic poem)

(BB)  Naxos 8.553608. RSNO, Lloyd-Jones

Symphony 5; The Tale the Pine-Trees Knew

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.554509. RSNO, Lloyd-Jones

David Lloyd-Jones continues his admirable Bax series with a warmly idiomatic accounts of the Third and Fifth Symphonies. The playing of the Scottish Orchestra is clear and refined, helped by the transparency of the recording, clarifying often thick textures. From earlier in Bax's career The Happy Forest, described as a 'nature poem', provides a refreshing contrast in its youthful energy, tauter, less expansive. The Tale the Pine-Trees Knew of 1931, another northern inspiration, makes the ideal coupling. An excellent bargain.

Symphony 6; Into the Twilight; Summer Music

🔑 ✿ (BB)  Naxos 8.557144. RSNO, Lloyd-Jones

(i) Symphony 6; (ii) Irish Landscape; Overtures: To Adventure; Rogue's Comedy; Work in Progress

 Lyrita (ADD/DDD) SRC 296. (i) New Philh. O, Del Mar; (ii) RPO, Handley

David Lloyd-Jones's account of the magnificent Sixth has sweep and breadth, and the splendid Naxos recording has plenty of range, detail and presence. Into the Twilight (1909) is prefaced by a quotation from Yeats and its rich, luxuriant textures are fully characteristic of the mature Bax. Summer

Music (1921, revised 1932) was dedicated to Beecham, and it is an affecting piece for a much smaller orchestra than we associate with the composer, though the sonority he produces is characteristically sumptuous. David Lloyd-Jones secures eloquent playing from the Scottish orchestra throughout.

Del Mar's performance of the Sixth is committed, though a greater attention to dynamic nuance would have been welcome and the balance is too close at times. The Irish Landscape is much earlier, written during the First World War. Scored for strings and harp, the music includes 'a long melody of a folksong nature' and is full of yearning intensity. The three overtures are all extrovert pieces: the rambunctious Rogue's Comedy Overture is matched by the equally exuberant Overture to Adventure and the bustle of the later Work in Progress which whimsically even quotes briefly from Haydn's Emperor Quartet. Fine performances from Handley, and recording well up to Lyrita standard.

Symphony 7; Tintagel

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.557145. RSNO, Lloyd-Jones

The Seventh Symphony comes from 1939 and one in which the creative fires seem to burn less intensely than in its two immediate predecessors. David Lloyd-Jones makes out a strong case for it and is as persuasive as (or more persuasive than) his predecessors on record. Despite its length (it is the longest of the seven), the score is still richly stocked. The recording's climaxes do not have the transparency of earlier issues in the series nor the strings quite the bloom. David Lloyd-Jones also gives a thoroughly committed account of Tintagel.

The Truth about the Russian Dancers (incidental music); From Dusk till Dawn (ballet)

Ⓜ  Chan. 10457x. LPO, Thomson

The Truth about the Russian Dancers is vintage Bax, full of characteristic writing decked out in attractive orchestral colours. From Dusk till Dawn has many evocative ideas with some impressionistic orchestral touches. Not top-drawer Bax, but often delightful, and very well played by the London Philharmonic under Bryden Thomson, and splendidly recorded.

Tintagel

🔑 Ⓜ * EMI (ADD) 3 79983-2. LSO, Barbirolli – DELIUS: La Calinda, etc.; IRELAND: London Overture ****

Ⓝ Ⓜ  LPO036. LPO, Vänskä – RACHMANINOV: Symphony 3

Barbirolli's Tintagel is the finest ever recorded and is unlikely ever to be surpassed. The performance has a great romantic sweep and the full-bodied 1965 recording is superbly remastered.

Osmo Vänskä gives a first-rate account of Bax's most popular (and inspired) tone-poem recorded at a concert at London's Royal Festival Hall in December 2007. Plenty of spontaneity and vigour from the LPO and faithful recorded sound.

(i; ii) Winter Legends (for piano and orchestra); (i) A Hill Tune; A Mountain Mood; (i; iii) Viola Sonata

(BB) ((*)) Dutton mono CDBP 9751. (i) Cohen; (ii) BBC SO, Raybould; (iii) Primrose

Winter Legends is a masterly and imaginative score that enshrines much of the best of Bax. The piano writing places considerable demands on Harriet Cohen and this performance from a live (1954) BBC studio concert has less authority than the more recent recording by Margaret Fingerhut. However, Clarence Raybould and the BBC Symphony Orchestra give sympathetic support. The two miniatures come from 1942 and the days of 78s, while the Viola Sonata, which she recorded with William Primrose, was made in 1937.

CHAMBER AND INSTRUMENTAL MUSIC

Clarinet Sonata

🔑  Chan. 8683. Hilton, Swallow – BLISS: Clarinet Quintet; VAUGHAN WILLIAMS: 6 Studies ***

(i) Clarinet Sonata; (ii) Elegiac Trio (for flute, viola & harp); (iii) Harp Quintet; (iv) Nonet; (v) Oboe Quintet

🔑  Hyp. CDA 66807. (i; iv) Collins; (i) Brown (piano); (ii; iv) Davies; (ii–v) Chase; (ii–iv) Kanga; (iii–v) Crayford, Van Kampen; (iii; v) Juda; (iv) Wexler, McTier, Brown (cond.); (iv–v) Hulse

Bax's Clarinet Sonata opens most beguilingly, and Janet Hilton's phrasing is quite melting. Moreover the Bliss coupling is indispensable.

The Hyperion performances are of exemplary quality. The members of the Nash Ensemble, including Michael Collins in the Clarinet Sonata and Gareth Hulse in the Oboe Quintet, seem totally attuned to the idiom, and they play with their usual artistry and dedication. Excellent recording.

Concerto for Flute, Oboe, Harp & String Quartet; In memoriam, for Cor Anglais, Harp & String Quartet; Threnody & Scherzo for Bassoon, Harp & String Sextet; (i) Octet for Horn, Piano & String Sextet; String Quintet

 Chan. 9602. (i) Fingerhut; ASMF Ch. Ens.

In memoriam is the earliest piece here. The Octet is arguably the most appealing work in this collection. However, most of this music is captivating; the performances are absolutely first class and the recording in the best traditions of the house.

Elegiac Trio; Fantasy Sonata for Harp & Viola; Harp Quintet; Sonata for Flute & Harp

(BB)  Naxos 8.554507. Mobius

Ideal late-night listening for a balmy summer evening: a collection of Bax chamber music centred around the harp played by an accomplished group called Mobius.

(i) Harp Quintet; (ii) Piano Quartet. String Quartet 1

 Chan. 8391. (i) Kanga; (ii) McCabe; English Qt

The First String Quartet is music with a strong and immediate appeal. The Harp Quintet is more fully characteristic and has some evocative writing to commend it, alongside the Piano Quartet with its winning lyricism, and the performances are thoroughly idiomatic and eminently well recorded.

Oboe Quintet

 Chan. 8392. Francis, English Qt – HOLST: Air & Variations, etc.; MOERAN: Fantasy Quartet; JACOB: Quartet ***

Bax's Oboe Quintet is a confident, inventive piece. Sarah Francis proves a most responsive soloist, though she is balanced too close; in all other respects the recording is up to Chandos's usual high standards, and the playing of the English Quartet is admirable.

Piano Trio in B flat

Ⓝ  RTE Lyric CD 116. Ens Avalon – BERNSTEIN: Piano Trio Op. 2 ; BEETHOVEN: Piano Trio, Op.70/1 (Ghost) **(*)

The Bax Trio on this Irish disc is a rarity, a late work dating from 1946, and unlike most of this often diffuse composer's chamber works compact in its structure and sharp in its thematic material. Good performances and recording.

Rhapsodic Ballad (for solo cello)

 Chan. 8499. Wallfisch – BRIDGE: Cello Sonata; DELIUS: Cello Sonata; WALTON: Passacaglia ***

The Rhapsodic Ballad for cello alone is a freely expressive piece, played with authority and dedication by Raphael Wallfisch. The recording has plenty of warmth and range.

String Quartet 1

 Discrete 0701. Pavão Qt – ELGAR: Quartet ***

The First Quartet is an early work, composed some years before the Elgar with which it is coupled. It comes from 1910 when Bax's distinctive voice was yet to emerge. The four ladies who comprise the Pavão lack neither strength nor sensitivity and they give a well-thought-out and well-integrated account of the piece. Those who do not want the Naxos coupling with Bax's Third Quartet will find this more than serviceable.

String Quartets 1; 3 in F; String Quartet in E: Adagio ma non troppo 'Cathaleen-ni-Hoolihan'; (i) Lyrical Interlude for String Quintet

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.555953. Maggini Qt, with (i) Jackson

The Maggini Quartet's series of British music recordings for Naxos goes from strength to strength and this Quartet represents Bax at his sharpest, with no meandering. The opening of the first movement sweeps the listener forward in a way that reminds one of Mendelssohn's Octet, despite the far more modern idiom. The Lyrical Interlude is a re-working Bax made in 1922 of the slow movement of his String Quintet of 1908. It is a rather beautiful piece, like the Adagio ma non troppo from an even earlier quartet. The Magginis are masterly throughout, not just in the four substantial movements of the Quartet but in the two evocatively Irish-inspired movements written much earlier.

Viola Sonata; Legend; Concert Piece; (i) Trio, Op. 4

(BB)  Naxos 8.557784. Outram, Rolton with (i) Jackson

The Viola Sonata comes from 1922 and the Legend seven years later. The other pieces are both early. All are beautifully played and very well recorded.

Violin Sonatas: 1 in E; 2 in D

 Chan. 8845. Gruenberg, McCabe

The Second is the finer of these two Sonatas and is thematically linked with November Woods. Rhapsodic and impassioned, this is music full of temperament. Erich Gruenberg is a selfless and musicianly advocate and John McCabe makes an expert partner.

Violin Sonatas: 1 in F; 3

(BB)  Naxos 8.557540. Jackson, Wass

Bax's writing for the violin is always grateful and these two artists are persuasive and eloquent interpreters. As an appendix Laurence Jackson and Ashley Wass give us the original second and third movements of the First Sonata, as well as the later and more personal Third from 1927.

Violin Sonata 2

 Global Music Network GMN CO113. Little, Roscoe – ELGAR: Violin Sonata ***

Tasmin Little gives a powerful, big-scale reading of the four-movement Bax Sonata 2, relishing the virtuosity of the writing, with Martin Roscoe similarly brilliant. An excellent if unusual coupling for Tasmin Little's fine version of the Elgar, very well recorded.

Music for 2 pianos: The Devil That Tempted St Anthony; Festival Overture; Hardanger; Moy Mell; The Poisoned Fountain; Red Autumn; Sonata

(BB)  Naxos 8.570413. Wass, Roscoe

The earliest works here are the 1909 Festival Overture and Moy Mell, a wartime piece from 1916, which is highly Celtic. The Devil That Tempted St Anthony was originally for one piano, as indeed was Red Autumn, and both are full of resource and originality. The Sonata comes from the same period as the Third and Fourth Symphonies and is full of their resonances. Ashley Wass and Martin Roscoe are fully inside the idiom and play with great sympathy and authority. Excellent sound too.

Piano Music (complete)

Ⓜ  Chan. X10132 (4). Parkin

Eric Parkin proves a sympathetic guide through this repertoire. The Sonatas are grievously neglected in the concert hall but are most convincingly presented here. The recording is on the resonant side, but the playing is outstandingly responsive.

A Hill Tune; Lullaby; The Maiden and the Daffodil; Mediterranean; A Mountain Mood; Pæan; The Princess's Rose Garden; 2 Russian Tone Poems; Sleepy-Head; What the Minstrel Told Us

(BB)  Naxos 8.557769. Wass

The earliest works here are the Two Russian Tone Poems, the Nocturne – May Night in the Ukraine and Gopak, written in 1912. They are inventive and atmospheric, as are most of the pieces here. The annotations by Bax's biographer, Lewis Foreman, are very helpful and highly interesting. What a fine pianist this young artist is!

Piano Sonatas: 1 in F sharp min.; 2 in G; 3 in G min.; 4 in G

 British Music Society BMS 434-444. Binns (with BRIDGE: Sonata; IRELAND: Sonata)

Bax himself was a formidable pianist and his writing for the keyboard offers plenty of challenges: the four sonatas span the period 1910–33 and Binns has made a deep and thorough study of them. He had worked on the Second with Arthur Alexander, who had given its first performance in 1919, and has researched the various editions of all four. To a certain extent they sound like short-score versions of unwritten symphonies, though they are highly pianistic in layout. The set also includes sonatas by Frank Bridge, a fine work, and John Ireland (by no means as well laid out for the piano as one might expect). Binns makes all this music his own. The recording is decent rather than distinguished.

Piano Sonatas 1–4; Sonata in E flat (1919)

Ⓜ  Oehms OC565. Endres

Michael Endres's survey of the Sonatas enjoys an advantage in that it includes the early E flat Sonata, which is the keyboard version of the First Symphony. It is good to see a distinguished German pianist championing Bax not only in these magnificent performances but in his equally persuasive sleeve-notes.

Piano Sonatas 1–2; Burlesque; Dream in Exile (Intermezzo); In a Vodka Shop

(BB)  Naxos 8.557439. Wass

Piano Sonatas 3–4; Allegro quasi Andante (Very difficult throughout); Country Tune; O Dame get up and Bake your Pies; Water Music; Winter Tune

(BB)  Naxos 8.557592. Wass

Ashley Wass plays all four works with great authority and panache and is equally sympathetic in the shorter pieces, most persuasively bringing out the freely improvisational style. Excellent recording in Potton Hall, Suffolk, and authoritative notes from Lewis Foreman to guide the listener.

VOCAL MUSIC

(i) Enchanted Summer; (ii) Fatherland; (iii) Walsingham

Ⓜ  Chan. 10366X. Brighton Festival Ch., RPO, Handley; with (i) Williams-King; (i; ii) McWhirter; (ii; iii) Hill

Three richly romantic choral works of Bax, with Enchanted Summer the finest of the three, an imaginatively ambitious setting of the text of Act II of Shelley's Prometheus Unbound, using three soloists. The earliest is the quite brief Fatherland. It envisaged a strolling ballad singer (here the eloquent Martyn Hill in good voice). But its patriotic feeling was originally directed to Scandinavia. Walsingham (1926) sets a poem by Sir Walter Raleigh and it was long neglected and is every bit as much of a revelation as Enchanted Summer, showing Bax at his most fluently mature. But all three works here are given dedicatedly intense performances, with Handley at his finest, and chorus and orchestra responding to his spontaneous fervour. The Chandos recording too is magnificently full-blooded.

Songs

Ⓜ  Dutton CDLX 7136. Partridge, Rigby, Dussek

Many of these Bax songs were inspired by his love affairs from his student days onwards, not least his culminating love for the pianist, Harriet Cohen. The opening song, Youth, from this sequence is a fine example, and the composer's emotions plus his prowess as a pianist led him to write the most elaborate accompaniments, here brilliantly played by Michael Dussek, making light of the technical difficulties. Ian Partridge with his heady tenor-tone is the ideal interpreter, bringing out word-meaning with fine clarity, and characterizing well in wide-ranging settings of texts ranging from Chaucer to Housman and Bax himself, as well as Yeats and other Irish poets. The mezzo-soprano, Jean Rigby, is similarly persuasive in the Celtic Song Cycle, an early work dating from 1904, in a rather simpler, more openly lyrical style.

BEACH, Amy (1867–1944)

(i) Piano Concerto, Op. 45. Symphony in E min. (Gaelic)

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.559139. (i) Feinberg; Nashville SO, Schermerhorn

It is Naxos who have had the happy idea of coupling Amy Beach's attractive Piano Concerto with the equally diverting Gaelic Symphony, which was written in 1894–6 after she had been impressed with the Boston première of Dvořák's New World Symphony and determined to build her own symphony by drawing on four traditional Irish tunes of 'simple, rugged and unpretentious beauty'. Yet much of the invention is her own and of high quality to match the concertante work for piano. Alan Feinberg's performance of the latter is in the grand romantic tradition, with splendid digital bravura in the finale, balanced by warm and often passionately lyrical support from the excellent Nashville orchestra.

The Symphony receives a no less sympathetic and committed reading under Kenneth Schermerhorn. The recording is vivid throughout, not in the very front rank perhaps, but bright and atmospheric.

Symphony in E min. (Gaelic)

 Chan. 8958. Detroit SO, Järvi (with BARBER: Symphony 1, etc. ***)

Amy Beach was largely self-taught. Her Symphony in E minor operates at a high level of accomplishment and has a winning charm, particularly its delightful and inventive second movement. Once heard, this haunting movement is difficult to exorcize from one's memory. A very persuasive performance by the Detroit Orchestra under Neeme Järvi, and good recorded sound.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Pastorale for Wind Quintet, Op. 151; String Quartet (in one movement), Op. 89; Violin Sonata, Op. 34; 4 Sketches for Piano: Dreaming (trans. for cello & piano)

✿  Chan. 10162. Ambache

The early Violin Sonata of 1897 is characteristically lyrical and very traditional in style. The slow movement is melodically and harmonically rich, but the confident finale establishes the work's distinction, for its secondary theme is memorable. The character of the one-movement String Quartet is determined by the three Alaskan folk themes on which it draws. The Pastorale is a charming, gentle, folksy evocation with the balmy atmosphere of a summer afternoon. The arrangement of Dreaming, a song without words for cello and piano, gives the cello the gently rhapsodic melodic line, but the piano remains insistent. First-class performances and recording, and worth having for the String Quartet, one of Beach's most memorable works.

(i) Piano Quintet; Piano Trio in A min., Op. 150; (ii) Theme & Variations for Flute & String Quartet

🔑 ✿ * Chan. 9752. (i) Ambache; (ii) Keen; The Ambache

Amy Beach's glorious 1908 Piano Quintet with its passionately lyrical first movement and hauntingly beautiful Adagio is already available. But the Chandos version from Diana Ambache and her group is even richer, more passionately involving, and the coupling with two other fine chamber works is more apt. The Theme for the Flute Variations (1916) has a touching nostalgia and, with exquisite flute-playing from Helen Keen, this music comes over as equally deeply felt. The Piano Trio is a late work (1939), the opening movement delicate in the manner of Fauré. These are marvellous performances of three very highly rewarding works, superbly recorded.

Piano Trio in A min., Op. 150; String Quartet in One Movement, Op. 89; Violin Sonata in A min., Op. 34

 Ara. Z 6747. Polk; Lark Qt

The early Violin Sonata (1896), which introduces this highly recommendable collection, opens most beguilingly on the bow of Diane Pascal, its warm lyricism pervading the first movement and the equally melodically fluent Largo. The performances here are first class (Joanne Polk, the pianist, especially worthy of mention) and so is the recording. Most enjoyable and highly recommended.

PIANO MUSIC

By the Still Waters; Far Awa'; Gavotte fantastique; A Humming Bird; 3 Morceaux caractéristiques, Op. 28; Out of the Depths; Scherzino: A Peterboro Chipmunk; Scottish Legend; Variations on Balkan Themes, Op. 60; Young Birches (Ara. Z 6693); Ballad, Op. 6; A Cradle Song of the Lonely Mother; The Fair Hills of Eire, O!; A Hermit Thrush at Eve; A Hermit Thrush at Morn; Prelude & Fugue, Op. 81; Les Rêves de Columbine: Suite française, Op. 65; Valse-caprice, Op. 4 (Ara. Z 6704); Eskimos, 4 Characteristic Pieces, Op. 64; Fantasia fugata, Op. 87; From Grandmother's Garden, Op. 97; 5 Improvisations, Op. 148; Nocturne, Op. 107; 4 Sketches, Op. 15; Tyrolean Valse-fantaisie, Op. 116. Transcription: R. STRAUSS: Serenade (Ara. Z 6721)

 Polk

Arabesque are now exploring Amy Beach's piano music in depth and confirming the consistency of its quality. The Variations on Balkan Themes readily demonstrates her ability to sustain a major work. The imaginative pictorial evocations from nature are capped by the beautiful evocation of Young Birches, while the nocturnal Cradle Song of the Lonely Mother is quite haunting. Beach's ability to assimilate different styles in a single work is never better displayed than in the attractive Four Sketches, Op. 15, where at times Schumann, Beethoven, Mendelssohn and Liszt all look over her shoulder; while the disarming simplicity of characterization in Eskimos and From Grandmother's Garden is quite delightful. Joanne Polk is an understanding and persuasive advocate, capturing the music's special combination of sophistication and innocence with fine spontaneity. She is most truthfully recorded.

SONGS

Songs

(*) BRIDGE 9182. Mason, Polk

It is good to hear the ballad, Shena Van (complete with Scottish rhythmic snap) from a pleasing male voice, so suitable too for a simple song like Good Morning. Patrick Mason has a vibrato, but he is particularly good at the passionate songs like Ah Love, but a day!, which he sings with real fervour. Once again the ear is struck throughout by the sheer quality of Beach's piano accompaniments, here relished and sparkling in the hands of Joanne Polk. With warm, well balanced recording, this disc has much to offer Beach aficionados.

BEETHOVEN, Ludwig van
(1770–1827)

'Beethoven 50': EMI Collector's Edition of CDs: Piano Concertos 1–2 (Gilels, Vandernoot); 3 & 5 (Gelber, Leitner); 4 (Gilels, Ludwig); Violin concerto (D. Oistrakh, Cluytens); Romances for Violin & Orchestra (Fontanarosa); Triple Concerto (Oborin, D. Oistrakh, Knushevitsky, Sargent); Choral Fantasia (Lill, Gibson); Overtures including Leonora 3; Symphonies 1–9 (BPO, Cluytens); Cello Sonatas & Variations (Tortelier, Heidsieck); Clarinet Trio (Boutard); Flute Sonata & Variations (Debost, Ivaldi); Mandolin & Harpsichord works (Schivittaro, Veyron-Lacroix); Piano Trios (Hungarian Trio); Serenade for Flute, Violin & Viola, Op. 25; Trio for Flute, Bassoon & Piano, WoO 37 (Debost Ens.,) Serenade for String Trio; String Trios (Trio à cordes Français); String Quartets 1–15 & Grosse Fuge (Hungarian Qt); Duo for Clarinet & Bassoon; Octet, Op. 103; Piano & Wind Quintet; Septet, Op. 20; Sextet, Op. 81b; March & Rondino for Wind, WoO 29 & 25 (all Melos Ens.); Violin Sonatas 1–10 (Ferras, Barbizet); Piano Sonatas 1–32 (Heidsieck); Bagatelles; Für Elise; Variations including Diabelli & Eroica Variations (Solchany; Cziffra; Danielle Laval); Christ on the Mount of Olives (Soloists, Bonn Ch. & O, Wangenheim); Aria: Ah Perfido (Nilsson); Adelaide; An die ferne Geliebte; 7 Goethe Lieder; 6 Gellert Lieder (Fischer-Dieskau, Moore or Hertha Klust); Mass in C (Ameling, J. Baker, Altmeyer, Rintzler); Missa solemnis (Harper, J. Baker, Tear, Sotin; both: New Philh. Ch., LPO, or Philh., Giulini); Fidelio (Dernesch, Vickers, Ridderbusch, Van Dan, Donath, Laubenthal, Deutsch Opera Ch., BPO, Karajan)

(BB) (*) EMI 3 87739-2 (50)

Even though the cast list contains some unknown names, there are plenty of familiar ones here: Gilels, David Oistrakh, Cluytens (whose recordings of the symphonies will not disappoint); Tortelier, the Hungarian Quartet, and Karajan, while the cast lists for the two Masses and Fidelio are distinguished. Fifty-five minutes of music on each of 50 CDs at around a pound per CD must be one of the bargains of all time.

DVD Recordings

(i) Piano Concertos 1–5. Overtures: Egmont; Leonora 2 & 3; Symphony 8

 Decca DVD 074 3214 (2). (i) Ashkenazy; LPO, Haitink (V/D: Brian Large)

These video recordings were made jointly by the BBC and Decca during the live broadcasts from the Royal Festival Hall in 1974, but the sound quality is remarkably good. The performances by a strikingly youthful Ashkenazy are full of spirit (he shows his individuality and really lets himself go in the cadenzas – those for the first two concertos are his own), and his crisp virtuosity elsewhere is a joy in itself, with finales sparkling. The partnership with Haitink (who also provides excellent, direct accounts of the three Overtures and the Eighth Symphony) produces crisp, classical reading of the first three concertos, apt for early Beethoven, but with slow movements touchingly simple, easily lyrical, and that for No. 3 more romantic and memorably expressive. Ashkenazy is at his most poetic in the Fourth Concerto, although Haitink is perhaps just a little phlegmatic in the dialogue of the slow movement. In many ways the Emperor is finest of all, freshly inspired, not barnstorming, with a beautiful, hushed slow movement. The camerawork is straightforward, as one would expect from Brian Large, and he can't resist showing the moment when in Leonora 3 Haitink is seen avidly listening to the offstage trumpet.

Piano Concertos 1–5

(N) * Medici Arts DVD 3085298 (2 discs). Perahia, ASMF, Marriner

 EuroArts DVD 2056778 (2). Barenboim, Staatskapelle Berlin

Murray Perahia recorded in 1988 with Neville Marriner and the Academy of St Martin-in-the-Fields. His playing is peerless and Marriner gives him vital and sensitive support. The camera gives us a lot of Perahia's facial expressions which at times seems a little intrusive. But admirers of this great pianist need not hesitate for the sound is first class.

Impressively thoughtful and finely wrought accounts from Daniel Barenboim and the Staatskapelle Berlin. Barenboim never attempts to draw attention to himself and the listener is consistently held under his spell. The performances are recorded at the Klavier-Festival Ruhr in May 2007 at the Jahrhunderthalle in Bochum, which must be one of the ugliest venues in Europe, though the audiences are wonderfully responsive and attentive and the camera direction admirable. Recommended.

(i) Piano Concerto 1. Symphony 7; Coriolan

* Arthaus DVD 100 148. (i) Perahia; LSO, Solti (V/D: Humphrey Burton)

This is a straight recording directed by Humphrey Burton of a concert at London's Barbican Centre in 1987. The camerawork is discreet and unfussy and the sound impeccably balanced throughout. Solti's accounts of both the Coriolan Overture and the Seventh Symphony are very fine, and in the concerto Murray Perahia is unfailingly thoughtful, intelligent and imaginative. A memorable concert; and the first-rate recording will give much pleasure.

(i) Piano Concerto 2 in B flat; (ii) Symphony 9 (choral)

 TDK DVD DV-EC10A. (i) Pletnev; (ii) Mattila, Urmana, Moser, Schulte, Swedish R. Ch., Eric Ericson Chamber Ch.; BPO, Abbado (Producer: Paul Smaczny, V/D: Bob Coles)

Pletnev's account of the B flat Concerto is immaculate, both artistically and technically. In short, it is wonderfully fresh and exhilarating. The Ninth Symphony has a fine line-up of soloists, together with the legendary Eric Ericson Choir and the Swedish Radio Choir, and is a hardly less fine performance, direct and powerful. It comes with a 20-minute documentary, with commentaries and subtitles in English.

Piano Concerto 4 in G, Op. 58

(*) EMI DVD 492840-9. Rubinstein, LPO, Dorati (with Bonus: CHOPIN: Polonaise in A flat (Heroic)) – MENDELSSOHN: Violin Concerto ; WALTON: Cello Concerto ***

Rubinstein's present performance comes from a Royal Festival Hall concert by the LPO under Antal Dorati, when the great pianist was already eighty. He was a fine Beethoven interpreter, albeit slightly underrated as a Beethovenian by the wider generality of critics. Although this performance does not offer the effortless keyboard mastery of Rubinstein's youth and maturity, it is a valuable document and will be treasured by all admirers of this artist.

CD Recordings

Piano Concertos (i) 1 in C, Op. 15; (ii) 2 in B flat, Op. 19 (() Testament mono SBT 1219)

Piano Concertos (i) 3 in C min., Op. 37; (ii) 4 in G, Op. 58 (() Testament mono SBT 1220)

Piano Concerto 5 (i) (Emperor) (() Testament mono SBT 1221. Solomon, Philh. O, (i) Menges, (ii) Cluytens)

Olympian performances from Solomon are restored on the Testament label in altogether exemplary sound. They have been out many times since they were made in the 1950s but have never sounded richer and fresher than they do here. Solomon's performances celebrate a dedication to musical truth and a timeless purity that place him among the keyboard giants. This is great Beethoven playing.

Piano Concertos 1; 3 (Ⓜ  Telarc CD 80663)

Piano Concertos 2; 4 (Ⓜ  Telarc CD 80664)

Piano Concerto 5 (Emperor) (Ⓜ  Telarc CD 80665. Rudolf Serkin, Boston SO, Ozawa)

Serkin's cycle for Telarc dates from 1981/2, the very beginning of the digital era, yet the sound is excellent: full, warm and natural. It presents a deeply satisfying series of performances. Serkin brings those moments of total magic which are the mark of live performances from a master, here caught in the studio. Technically, the playing of the octogenarian is flawed (there is one amazing slip of finger in the C major Concerto); where in his late Mozart recordings for DG the lack of polish is distracting, here one consistently registers certainty and power. The accompaniments have comparable distinction – Ozawa has never sounded more spontaneous on record.

Piano Concertos 1–5

🔑 * Ph. 462 781-2 (3). Brendel, VPO, Rattle

Ⓜ * DG 477 6409 (3). Pletnev, Russian Nat. O, Gansch

Piano Concertos 1–5 (Emperor)

Ⓝ  DG DVD 440 073 4269 (2). Krystian Zimerman; (1 & 2) VPO, Zimerman; or (3–5) cond. Bernstein

Ⓝ (BB) Virgin 2x1 5 22014-2 (2) Tan (fortepiano), L. Classical Players, Norrington

Piano Concertos 1–5. Piano Sonata 23 (Appassionata), Op. 57

🔑 Ⓜ * Warner Elatus 2564 60130-2 (1–2); 2564 60433-2 (3–4); 2564 60348-2 (5 & Piano Sonata 23). Schiff, Dresden State O, Haitink (available separately)

(i) Piano Concertos 1–5; (ii) Triple Concerto

Ⓝ  DG 477 7244 (3). (i) Pollini, Berlin PO; (ii) Lonquich, Gingolts, Brunello, Simón Bolívar Youth O; Abbado

(i) Piano Concertos 1–5; (ii) Choral Fantasia, Op. 80

Ⓑ  CfP (ADD) 575 752-2 (3). Lill, SNO, Gibson

Alfred Brendel offers this new Philips set as his third and last recorded survey of the Beethoven concertos, made in Vienna with Sir Simon Rattle. With each concerto recorded immediately after live performances, the results have an extra spontaneity, usually at speeds marginally faster than in his previous recordings. The dynamic range is greater too, with hushed pianissimos more intense, and with Rattle encouraging lightness in his accompaniments. The ambience of the Musikverein casts a warm, natural glow over the proceedings and adds the necessary weight to the Emperor. A fine achievement. The separate issues include Concertos 1 & 4 (462 782-2), 2 & 3 (462 783-2), 5 (Emperor) plus Appassionata Sonata (468 666-2).

Pletnev's performances were recorded at the Bonn Beethovenfest in September 2006, and his playing is pretty well in a class of its own. The remaining three concertos will be appearing during the lifetime of this book. Pletnev produces a distinctively original sonority and his keyboard articulation is highly individual. These are performances of commanding stature and deep musical insight.

The original intention for Zimerman had been to record all five concertos with Bernstein but the latter's death in 1990 prevented that, and so he directed the first two concertos from the keyboard. In the last three there is a close rapport and unity of purpose between these two in many ways highly differing musical personalities; Zimerman poised and aristocratic, Bernstein a full-bodied, brilliant temperament. Their collaboration is a triumphant success, and these readings are both compelling and insightful. Zimerman's own direction from the keyboard in the earlier works also recorded in the Grossermusiksaal of the Musikverein, shows impressive grip and command, and his playing, as one might expect, is immaculate. The camera work by Klaus

König is discreet and John McClure's sound balance in Nos. 3–5 cannot be faulted.

András Schiff with ideal, transparent support from Haitink and the Dresden Staatskapelle offers one of the most refreshing, deeply satisfying Beethoven concerto cycles of recent years. He crowns the cycle with a scintillating account of the Emperor Concerto, electrifying from first to last, aptly coupled with the most heroic sonata of Beethoven's middle period, the Appassionata. Clear, well-balanced sound to match. The discs are available separately.

Melvyn Tan's playing has a flair and poetic feeling that are rather special and this partnership with Norrington in the five Beethoven concertos has great spontaneity. Tan's individuality comes over unforcedly to make these readings characterful without unwanted wilfulness. The set is capped by a superb account of the Emperor in which Tan displays a poetic fire and brilliance all his own. The reading urgently conveys a feeling of a live performance.

The combination of Barenboim and Klemperer, recording together in 1967–8, brings endless illumination, with Klemperer's measured weight set against Barenboim's youthful spontaneity, specially compelling in slow movements. The Choral Fantasia too is given an inspired performance. The remastered sound is clear and full. (EMI 3 61525-2)

John Lill has never been more impressive on record than in his set of the Beethoven concertos, recorded in 1974–5. In each work he conveys spontaneity and a vein of poetry that in the studio have too often eluded him. Gibson and the Scottish National Orchestra provide strong, direct support, helped by very good analogue recording using the spacious City Hall, Glasgow. Very competitive with other versions at whatever price.

Starry as the line-up is, Pollini's set of the Beethoven Piano Concertos with Abbado and the Berlin PO, is a surprisingly disappointing set, but in this reissue DG offer the bonus of a lively account of the Triple Concerto with Abbado conducting the brilliant youth orchestra from Venezuela. That hardly makes the main offering recommendable, when the piano tone is woolly, the playing lacks tension and the finales are generally too fast with no wit in the pointing of rhythm.

(i) Piano Concertos 1–5; (ii) Triple Concerto

Ⓑ  EMI 5 00927-2 (3). Zacharias, with (i) Dresden State O, Vonk; (ii) Hoelscher, Schiff, Leipzig GO, Masur

Christian Zacharias's set, which dates from 1986 and 1989, is first class in every way and is well worth its modest cost. With consistently clean, rhythmic playing, he gives fresh, bright performances, the brightness and clarity go with concentration, to make the slow movements deeply thoughtful. The weight and body of the orchestral sound equally rebuts any feeling of excessive lightness, though Vonk does not quite match the Mozartian elegance of his soloist in No. 2. The Emperor, however, is really commanding. The performance of the Triple Concerto dates from two years earlier. Led by cellist Heinrich Schiff (a balance of responsibility suggested by Beethoven's own priorities in this work) the soloists make a characterful but finely integrated trio. Their rhythmic flair prompts Masur in turn to give one of his most sparkling performances on record.

Piano Concertos (i) 1; (ii) 2–4; (i) 5 (Emperor); (iii) Cello Sonata in G min., Op. 5/2. Bagatelle in A min. (Für Elise); Rondo in C, Op. 51/1

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.505189 (5). Schnabel, with (i) LSO; (ii) LPO; Sargent; (iii) Piatigorsky – BRAHMS: Piano Concertos 1–2, etc. (); SCHUMANN: Kinderszenen ()

Schnabel's early set has a nobility and robustness that makes one realize why audiences of the 1930s identified Schnabel with Beethoven. The playing is in every way typical: in other words, he is fully aware of the deepest musical currents. Sargent gives him impressive support, even though wind tuning is not always impeccable. These performances are boxed together with his less impressive accounts of the Brahms, but they are also available separately. Decent transfers.

Piano Concertos (i) 1–4; (ii) 5 (Emperor). 7 Bagatelles, Op. 33; 6 Bagatelles, Op. 126; 11 Bagatelles, Op. 119; Piano Sonatas 5 in C min., Op. 10/1; 8 (Pathétique); 17 (Tempest), Op. 31/2; 18, Op. 31/3; 28, Op. 101; 30, Op. 109; 31, Op. 110; 32, Op. 111; 33 Variations on a Waltz by Diabelli, Op. 120

✿ Ⓑ * Ph. (ADD) 475 6319 (6). Kovacevich, with (i) BBC SO; (ii) LSO; C. Davis

Stephen Kovacevich's Beethoven concerto recordings remain undisputed classics of the catalogue and have been benchmark recordings since their release in the early 1970s. In the first four concertos, with the BBC Symphony Orchestra, Kovacevich and Colin Davis are consistently crisp and fresh, and it is impossible not to respond to their spontaneity, no matter how may times one hears them. In the Emperor, with the LSO, Kovacevich is unsurpassed, and in its time this famous (1973) account set a model for everyone else. The sound remains excellent. This new, economical packaging also conveniently gathers together Kovacevich's Philips piano sonata recordings for the first time. The 1970s recording sounds consistently fresh, full and vivid. Altogether, this box reflects an outstanding achievement.

Piano Concerto 1 in C. 6 Bagatelles Op 126

Ⓝ  Virgin 5 03111-2. Anderszewaki, with (i) Deutsch CO, Bremen

Directing the Deutsche Chamber Orchestra of Bremen from the keyboard, Piotr Anderszewski gives a powerful performance of the First Concerto. Speeds and dynamic contrasts tend to be exaggerated, making the version less attractive, and the 6 Bagatelles make a mean coupling.

Piano Concertos 1–2

🔑 (BB)  Arte Nova 82876 82587-2. Bronfman, Tonhalle O, Zurich, Zinman

Piano Concertos 1–2; Rondo in B flat

 Simax PSC 1181. Berezovsky, Swedish CO, Dausgaard

A worthy successor to their accounts of Nos. 3 and 4, Bronfman's playing has great elegance and he has a close rapport with Zinman and his Tonhalle players. Very good recording, which should satisfy the most demanding listener.

Berezovsky's Beethoven has real stature: it has sparkle and zest, and both concertos are paced beautifully and are full of vitality. In terms of their pianism and interpretation they are to be recommended among the best. Very good sound, as one would expect from a record produced by Andrew Keener.

Schnabel's performances reigned supreme in the 1930s, when they first appeared, and still make for powerfully compelling listening 70 years on. Mark Obert-Thorn's transfers do justice to the vitality and beauty of sound that Schnabel commanded. (Naxos 8.110638)

Piano Concertos 1, 3 & 4

Ⓝ Ⓜ (*) Telarc 805704 (2). O'Conor, LSO, Delfs

In a two-for-the-price-of-one package on Telarc, the Irish pianist John O'Conor offers three concertos in generally crisp and direct performances on the brisk side. The LSO under Andreas Delfs match the pianist's crispness making it a reasonable, generously priced recommendation.

Piano Concerto 2

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.110767. Kapell, NBC SO, Golschmann – SCHUBERT: Waltzes, etc.; RACHMANINOV: Cello Sonata ()

We have written with enthusiasm about the Kapell Beethoven B flat Concerto in earlier editions, and its commanding authority is evident from the outset. Moreover, this newcomer is worth investigating for the sake of the Rachmaninov Sonata.

Piano Concertos 2–3

 DG 477 5026. Argerich, Mahler CO, Abbado

There is an element of daring in Martha Argerich's inspired readings of the Second and Third Concertos which, with stylish accompaniment from the Mahler Chamber Orchestra under Abbado, makes it a winning coupling. Both have the characterful stamp of a unique artist, and one hopes that both will remain available.

Piano Concertos 2; 5 (Emperor)

Ⓑ (*) RCA 82876 65838-2. Rubinstein, LPO, Barenboim

Rubinstein, in the Emperor, plays with spontaneous inspiration in every bar, and the LPO under a relatively young Barenboim accompany with keen understanding. The B flat Concerto is not quite so arresting but is still very fine, with a beautifully poised slow movement. The piano timbre is truthful and fuller than Rubinstein often received, but the upper range of the violins is a bit fierce and lacks refinement of focus. A very worthwhile reissue, just the same.

Piano Concerto 3 in C min., Op. 37

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.111263. Arrau, Phd. O, Ormandy (with WEBER: Konzertstück in F min., Op. 79; Sonata 1 in C, Op. 24 ())

Ⓝ ((*)) Sony mono 88697. Gould, Berlin PO, Karajan (with SIBELIUS: Symphony 5 **(*))

This is Arrau at the height of his powers. The Third Concerto finds Arrau's performance (in the words of the Record Guide) 'powerful, masculine, yet informed with a thoughtful, imaginative quality'. The Konzertstück is a 'live' performance and has great dash and sparkle. It remains one of the best ever records of this piece, once often encountered in the concert hall but now much neglected.

This Sony disc offers a live recording of the legendary concert in May 1957, when Glenn Gould appeared with Karajan and the Berlin Phil. Karajan keeps Gould, then aged 25, in order without his usual eccentricities, though the slow movement is exceptionally slow, if well sustained, and the finale is brisk and light. The limited mono sound is acceptable for a historic issue. This means that the Karajan version of Sibelius's Fifth Symphony makes less than its full effect; although Karajan is at his finest in a live performance and the present account is no exception.

(i) Piano Concerto 3. Coriolan Overture (with rehearsal sequence)

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.110804. (i) Hess; NBC SO, Toscanini (with WAGNER: Götterdämmerung: Siegfried's Rhine Journey ())

On this live recording of a 1946 broadcast Dame Myra Hess gives a thrilling performance, one of her very finest on disc, with the outer movements crisply articulated and beautifully sprung at high speed and the slow movement warmly expressive, bringing out a rare warmth in Toscanini too. Coriolan is high-powered, dry and incisive, and the Wagner makes a welcome fill-up.

Piano Concertos 3 in C min., Op. 37; 4 in G, Op. 58

🔑 (BB)  Arte Nova 82876 64010-2. Bronfman, Tonhalle O, Zürich, Zinman

Yefim Bronfman plays very stylishly, with exceptionally clean attack and clarity of articulation. The slow movement of No. 3 also brings high contrasts, as does the dialogue in the slow movement of No. 4. The sparkle of the finale in No. 3 is matched by the rippling wit of the playing in the finale of No. 4, while poetry marks the whole performance. A splendid coupling, the more attractive at super-bargain price, with excellent sound.

Schnabel's 1933 versions of the Third and Fourth Piano Concertos with Malcolm Sargent conducting the LPO have long been absent from the catalogues. Their return in these fine transfers is welcome: Schnabel's insights are always special, and although they do not occupy quite the same awesome pinnacle as the sonatas in Schnabel's Beethoven discography, they are still memorable. (Naxos mono 8.110639)

(i) Piano concertos 3–5 (Emperor). Piano Sonatas 24, Op. 78; 31, Op. 110

🔑 ✿ () Testament mono SBT2 1351 (2). Arrau; (i) with Philh. O, Klemperer

These 1957 Festival Hall performances sound as magnificent and magisterial on CD as they did in the concert hall, all those years ago. The Fourth is particularly fine and the Emperor is masterful. The two sonatas were recorded at about the same time and are, as one might expect, performances of some stature: poised, considered, cultivated. Paul Baily's transfers give a truthful and vivid sound-picture and enhance the musical experience these artists offer. Not to be missed.

Piano Concertos 3 in C min., Op. 37; 5 (Emperor) in E flat, Op. 73

(*) DG DVD 073 4097 (2). Pollini, VPO, Boehm – MOZART: Piano Concertos 19 & 23; BRAHMS: Piano Concerto 2()

Both Beethoven concertos exhibit Pollini's cool and dedicated classicism, shorn of expressive exaggeration, characteristic of this partnership. There is considerable poetic feeling in both slow movements, but the overall impression is of majestic prose resounding. Pollini is faithful and sober in much the same way that Backhaus was in the 1950s. In the C minor, Christopher Nupen's camera is always where one wants it to be and the production is straightforward and unfussy, with no attempt at eye-catching visual tricks. In the Emperor, Franz Kebelka's direction is similarly unobtrusive and the sound-balance from the legendary Günther Hermanns is clean but full-bodied.

Piano Concerto 4 in G, Op. 58

 EMI DVD 492840-9. Rubinstein, LPO, Dorati (Bonus: CHOPIN: Polonaise in A flat (Heroic) ) – MENDELSSOHN: Violin Concerto, etc. (); WALTON: Cello Concerto ()

 Warner Elatus 0927 49617-2. Grimaud, NYPO, Masur – SCHUMANN: Piano Concerto ***

 Sup. SU 3714-2. Moravec, Prague Philh. O, Bělohlávek – FRANCK: Symphonic Variations ; RAVEL: Piano Concerto in G **(*)

((*)) BBC mono BBCL 4111-2. Hess, LPO, Boult – MOZART: Piano Concerto 23, etc. ((*))

Rubinstein is splendidly patrician, though he is not as poetic in fashioning detail as he was in his earlier LP cycle with Krips. Good orchestral playing from the LPO and Dorati, and it is good to see some of the celebrated players of the day, including Richard Adeney. Anthony Craxton directs the viewer's eyes where they need to be and the camerawork is unfussy and economical. The stirring Chopin encore also comes from the Festival Hall, from a recital given a few months later.

Hélène Grimaud rises to the occasion in both works, and in the Beethoven she has excellent support from Masur, who provides a spacious accompaniment for the first movement, which Grimaud opens with Kempff-like gentleness, and is poetically lyrical throughout. The interchange of the Andante is similarly thoughtful, and the vigorous finale brings a joyful, exhilarating conclusion. Warmly resonant recording which adds weight without clouding detail.

Thanks to the distinctive artistry of the Czech pianist, Ivan Moravec, with his extraordinary clarity of articulation, as well as to the conductor, Jiří Bělohlávek, the result has an attractive consistency. With incisive support from Bělohlávek and the Prague Philharmonia, there is no lack of muscular strength either, with Moravec drawing on a wide tonal range, as he does in his deeply meditative reading of the slow movement. In the finale Bělohlávek matches his soloist in drawing comparably transparent textures.

Though Dame Myra Hess was among the most celebrated British pianists of her time, she recorded disappointingly little commercially, and the Beethoven marked her Prom farewell, while the Mozart Concerto was her very last public performance. You would never know it from the vigour of the playing. Hess may above all have been noted for the poetry of her performances – the slow movement has a rapt quality and a radiance that compel admiration. This may not be a flawless performance but, even with limited mono sound and a very close balance for the piano, it retains a winning freshness and spontaneity.

(i; ii) Piano Concerto 4 in G, Op. 58; Overtures: (iii) Coriolan; The Creatures of Prometheus; Egmont; Fidelio; King Stephen; (ii) Leonore III. Symphonies: (i) 5 in C min., Op. 67; (iv) 7 in A, Op. 92; (ii; v) 9 (Choral) in D min., Op. 125. (iii) String Quartets 14 in C sharp min., Op. 131; 16 in F, Op. 135 (arr. for string orchestra); (vi) Missa solemnis, Op. 123

Ⓜ  DG (ADD/DDD) 477 6690 (6). Bernstein, with (i) Arrau; (ii) Bav. RSO; (iii) VPO; (iv) Boston SO; (v) Anderson, Walker, König, Rootering, various choirs, Dresden State O; Kirov O, LSO, NYPO, O de Paris (members); (vi) Moser, Schwarz, Kollo, Moll, Hilversum R. Ch., Concg. O

The Fourth Piano Concerto and the Fifth Symphony come from a live 1976 concert in aid of Amnesty International and, along with the Leonore III Overture, are released on CD for the first time. The one or two indulgences in the Piano Concerto are nothing compared to the emotional intensity of the overall experience, and the same can be said of the compelling Fifth Symphony and Leonore III Overture. The sound is surprisingly vivid and full. The Seventh Symphony was recorded live at the very last concert Bernstein conducted with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood on 19 August 1990. He takes an extraordinarily expansive view, quite different from his previous recordings. Yet, for all the slowness of the basic speeds, he consistently conveys the joy of Beethoven's inspiration while springing rhythms with characteristic infectiousness. Again, good sound. Recorded live on the morning of Christmas Day 1989, Bernstein's Choral brings a performance that has something special to say, even after all the many recordings of this work, and not only because Bernstein substitutes the word 'Freiheit', 'Freedom', for 'Freude', 'joy', in the choral finale, something Beethoven himself might well have approved of. For many, the uniqueness of this version and the emotions it conveys make it a top choice despite obvious flaws. The lively, sympathetic performances of the overtures with the VPO were originally the fill-ups for Bernstein's set of the Beethoven symphonies. The Missa Solemnis was edited together from tapes of two live performances in 1978, and the result has a special intensity matched by few rivals. Bernstein was not the first person to record the late Quartets in a full string-version form. There is no doubt as to the commitment and depth of feeling that Bernstein brings to these performances (dedicated to the memory of his wife), nor are there any doubts as to the quality of the response he evokes from the VPO strings; it could not be given more eloquent advocacy than it is here. Excellently recorded, too. This set is a must for Bernstein fans.

Piano Concertos 4; 5 in E flat (Emperor)

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * EMI (ADD) 4 76828-2. Gilels, Philh. O, Ludwig

🔑  Testament SBT 1299. Richter-Haaser, Philh. O, Kertész

🔑 Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 447 402-2. Kempff, BPO, Leitner

🔑 Ⓜ  Decca mono/stereo 467 126-2. Curzon, VPO, Knappertsbusch

Fascinatingly, EMI have chosen Gilels's earlier (1957) Philharmonia performances with Leopold Ludwig rather than the later, Cleveland versions partnered by Szell, to be included among their 'Great Recordings of the Century'. About the magisterial G major Concerto there can be no reservations whatsoever. It is a masterly reading of striking authority and eloquence, strong and poetic, yet warm-hearted. The poetry of the dialogue in the slow movement is of the purest kind, tone control such as we rarely hear these days is finely realized, and there is a rare combination of strength and sparkle in the finale. The early stereo recording is remarkably good and is splendidly remastered.

These noble performances from Hans Richter-Haaser on Testament stand the test of time well and deserve the strongest recommendation. This is Beethoven playing of the first order, and we hope that Testament will bring other of Richter-Haaser's records back into circulation. The transfer does the original LPs (which we have long cherished) full justice.

In the Fourth Concerto Kempff's delicacy of fingerwork and his shading of tone-colour are unsurpassed. Though his version of the Emperor is not on an epic scale, Kempff's exceptionally wide range of tone and dynamic gives it power in plenty.

Curzon's Fourth Concerto is an Elysian performance, full of delicate lyrical feeling, the slow movement unsurpassed on record, not even by Kempff. Moreover, the 1954 mono recording, made in the Musikverein, is of outstanding quality, with warm, luminous piano-tone and a clear, transparent orchestral image, not lacking bloom. The Emperor is stereo, made in the Sofiensaal three years later. Again it is a refined and thoughtful reading. Yet the keen intelligence of the playing and the inner concentration working throughout the reading keep it fully alive. The Vienna Philharmonic plays strongly and authoritatively under Knappertsbusch, and the new transfer of the 1957 master has miraculously cleaned up the sound.

Piano Concerto 5 in E flat (Emperor), Op. 73

🔑  DG 477 641-7 Pletnev, Russian Nat. O, Gansch

🔑 Ⓜ  BBC (ADD) BBCL 4020-2. Curzon, BBC SO, Boulez – MOZART: Piano Concerto 26 ***

(i) Piano Concerto 5 (Emperor). Piano Sonata 28 in A, Op. 101

 DG 477 6595. Grimaud, (i) with Dresden State O, Jurowski (with bonus DVD on the making of the recording)

Piano Concerto 5; Grosse Fuge, Op. 133

Ⓑ  CfP 585 6162. Kovacevich, Australian CO

Strictly speaking, at 37 minutes Pletnev's CD offers very short measure, so we must withhold a fourth star. But there is nothing short measure about the performance, which is magisterial and commanding, full of the most remarkable pianistic colour and penetrating musicianship. One of the finest Emperors of recent years, this ranks among the greats.

Kovacevich's later, EMI digital version of the Emperor, sharper and tauter than the earlier, Philips account, now arrives on Classics for Pleasure. His version with the soloist directing from the keyboard is recognizably from the same inspired artist, though speeds are consistently faster and the manner is sharper and tauter. The piano-sound on the digital recording is brighter, if not so well balanced. The Grosse Fuge makes an unusual but apt coupling.

There is a fantasy-like quality in Hélène Grimaud's playing which is very attractive. In this, the mightiest of Beethoven's concertos, the soloist finds an often magical poetry in the piano writing . The slow movement is extraordinarily beautiful and the finale radiates joy. Again, in Op. 101, Grimaud lavishes much care on detail and it is her poetic qualities which most strike the listener, with an often haunting beauty permeating this late-Beethoven score. The bonus DVD includes a short behind-the-scenes documentary on the making of this recording, with interviews with the soloist and conductor, along with some other items. Full, rich DG sound.

The partnership of the introspective Clifford Curzon and the incisive Boulez may not seem a promising one, but in this live performance (recorded in 1971 at the Royal Festival Hall) the challenge between the two brings electrifying results. Curzon is at his most taut and incisive, while finding depths of poetry, and Boulez proves a surprisingly sympathetic interpreter of Beethoven, matching his soloist in subtle dynamic shading, while bringing home the work's dramatic power. Full, forward recording.

Horowitz was underrated as a Beethoven interpreter: his Emperor is wonderfully authoritative and completely devoid of ostentation or display. It is among the most classical of readings and Reiner is a totally like-minded partner. The coupled Rachmaninov Third Concerto is equally fine. Good new transfers. (Naxos mono 8.110787)

(i) Piano Concerto 5; (ii) Triple Concerto for Violin, Cello & Piano

(BB) (*) Sony (ADD) SBK 46549. (i) Fleisher, Cleveland O, Szell; (ii) Stern, Rose, Istomin, Phd. O, Ormandy

Leon Fleisher, who worked with Szell with special understanding, gives a reading of the Emperor impressive for its dramatic vigour. Stern, Rose and Istomin make an inspired trio of soloists in the Triple Concerto, sadly marred by their close balance.

(i) Piano Concerto 5; (ii) Cello Sonata in G min., Op. 5/2

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.110640. Schnabel, (i) LSO, Sargent; (ii) Piatigorsky

Schnabel's Emperor was recorded in 1932 when he was at the height of his powers. Schnabel had met Piatigorsky in the 1920s. Alas, they made no records, and this 1934 set of the G minor Cello Sonata is the sole representation of Schnabel's collaboration with the great cellist. It is very distinguished indeed.

Violin Concerto in D, Op. 61 (DVD versions)

🔑  EMI DVD 5 44544-9. Perlman, BPO, Barenboim (Producer: Johannes Müller) – BRAHMS: Violin Concerto ***

 EMI DVD 490445-9. Grumiaux, O Nat. de l'ORTF, Dorati (Bonuses: BACH: Violin Partita 2, BWV 1004: Sarabande & Chaconne. BLOCH: Nigun (Baal Shem). PAGANINI: Caprice, Op. 1/14) – MENDELSSOHN: Violin Concerto ()

Ⓝ (*) Medici Arts DVD 2072 518 (Karajan Memorial Concert) Mutter, BPO, Ozawa (with BACH: Partita for Solo Violin 2: Sarabande; TCHAIKOVSKY: Symphony 6 (Pathétique) **(*))

(*) EMI DVD (ADD) DVB 38845690. Milstein, LPO, Boult (V/D: Brian Large) – VAUGHAN WILLIAMS: Symphony 8 ***

() EMI DVD 492834-9. Kogan, O Nat. de l'ORTF, Louis de Froment (With recital: BACH: Violin Partita in D min., BWV 1004: Sarabande. HANDEL: Violin Sonata in E, HWV 373. DEBUSSY: Beau soir. SHOSTAKOVICH: Preludes, Op. 34/10, 15, 16 & 24 (with Andrei Mytnik, piano). BRAHMS: Hungarian Dance 17. PAGANINI: Cantabile. FALLA: Suite populaire espagnole (with Naum Walter, piano). LECLAIR: Sonata for 2 Violins in C, Op. 3/3 (with Elizaveta Gilels-Kogan, violin) ***)

Whether or not Perlman's 1992 DVD with Barenboim represents his finest recorded performance on record, it is very satisfying, with a particularly beautiful and serene Larghetto and a genial, dancing finale. The live recording at the Schauspielhaus, Berlin, is excellent, better balanced than some of his studio recordings, and the camerawork is excellently managed. If you want a recommendable DVD coupling with Brahms, this will give every satisfaction.

Grumiaux has great naturalness of eloquence – and what a good accompanist Dorati was. The sound is very good, though the quality of the picture is not much more than serviceable. Memorable music-making. The remaining pieces come off equally well, as you would expect from this great artist, and there is a remarkable bonus in the form of a very characterful account of the Saint-Saëns Introduction et Rondo capriccioso by Ivrys Gitlis and the young Georges Pludemacher, recorded at the ORTF studios in 1971 which gives much pleasure.

Anne-Sophie Mutter surpasses herself in her memorable account of the greatest of all Violin Concertos, with the slow movement movingly beautiful, and the finale fresh and joyful. Her accompaniment from Karajan's own orchestra is worthy of this superbly recorded memorial concert, and this is certainly a three-star and perhaps a four-star performance. The camera is rather restless, but the close-ups of the violin, and Mutter's bow and fingers, often closely observed during the performance, are visually fascinating. Her personal tribute is a Bach Sarabande, played simply and eloquently. However, Ozawa's reading of Tchaikovsky's Pathétique, very well played by this great orchestra, lacks the overwhelming intensity worthy of the occasion.

It is really good to watch both Milstein and Boult working together at a Royal Festival Hall concert in 1972. Milstein, as ever, is aristocratic and patrician in Beethoven, and the reading is essentially classical, with a fine but not profound slow movement – affected, alas, by some bronchial afflictions from the audience and one unexplained 'bump' in the slow movement. The documentation is non-existent and the coupling curious but welcome.

Leonid Kogan was the most natural and supremely classical of artists, and his purity of vision and undemonstrative demeanour are well captured on film. Admirers of this great player should snap this up while it is in circulation. As for the coupled recital: the Handel, Debussy and Dmitri Tsiganov's arrangements of four of Shostakovitch's Op. 34 Preludes for piano were recorded on a visit to the BBC studios in 1962 (the Shostakovich are particularly beguiling). The remainder come from the Paris studios of French Radio in 1968. The bonus is a Sonata for Two Violins by Leclair, which he recorded with his wife, Elizaveta, the sister of Emil Gilels.

Violin Concerto in D, Op. 161 (CD versions)

🔑 * Pentatone SACD Surround Sound PTC 5186. Grumiaux, Concg. O, C. Davis – BRUCH: Violin Concerto 1 ***

🔑 Ⓜ  Warner Elatus 0927 49773-2. Kremer, COE, Harnoncourt (with Romances 1 in G; 2 in F)

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 5 62607-2. Y. Menuhin, Menuhin Festival O (with Romance 1 in G) – TCHAIKOVSKY: Sérénade mélancolique ***

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI 5 66900-2. Perlman, Philh. O, Giulini

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 447 403-2. Schneiderhan, BPO, Jochum – MOZART: Violin Concerto 5 ***

 EMI 7 54072-2. Kyung-Wha Chung, Concg. O, Tennstedt – BRUCH: Violin Concerto 1 ***

 DG 471 349-2; SACD (compatible) 471 633-2. Mutter, NYPO, Masur (with Romances 1 & 2)

Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 477 7165. Mutter, BPO, Karajan

Ⓜ  EMI 5 03410-2. Kyung-Wha Chung, Concg. O, Tennstedt – BRUCH: Violin Concerto 1 ***

Ⓜ  RCA (ADD) SACD 82876 61391-2. Heifetz, Boston SO, Munch – BRAHMS: Concerto ***

Ⓜ  RCA (ADD) 09026 68980-2. Heifetz, Boston SO, Munch – MENDELSSOHN: Violin Concerto ***

Grumiaux made this glorious recording of the Beethoven Violin Concerto for Philips in 1974 with Sir Colin Davis. The balance between soloist and orchestra is perfect, the Concertgebouw sound, full and ambient-rich, is marvellously, uncannily realistic in this new Pentatone SACD transfer, whether or not the back speakers are put to use. Grumiaux imbues the performance with a wonderful spirit of classical serenity, specially in the slow movement, and the finale dances gracefully. A first choice for those with a four-speaker set-up.

Gidon Kremer's Elatus account with Nikolaus Harnoncourt and the Chamber Orchestra of Europe offers one of his most commanding recordings, both polished and full of flair, with tone ravishingly pure. The controversial point is the cadenza in the first movement, for (like Schneiderhan) he uses a transcription of the big cadenza which Beethoven wrote for his piano arrangement of the work, but with added piano as well as timpani. Kremer also plays violin versions of the other cadenzas and flourishes that punctuate Beethoven's piano version. One of the most refreshing versions of the Concerto ever put on disc, backed up by crisp, unsentimental readings of the two Romances, and at mid-price too!

Recorded in 1971 but never issued until 2003, Menuhin's version of the Beethoven Concerto, with the soloist directing the Menuhin Festival Orchestra from the bow, is on balance the finest he ever made, an inspired reading which brings extra expressive freedom and a sense of urgency beyond his performances with a conductor, however great, while the silvery beauty of Menuhin's playing above the stave is bewitching throughout. The Romance too is light and spontaneous-sounding, and the Tchaikovsky piece makes an attractive filler.

Perlman's outstanding first digital recording of Beethoven's Violin Concerto is rightly reissued as one of EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century'. The element of slight understatement, the refusal to adopt too romantically expressive a style, makes for a compelling strength, perfectly matched by Giulini's thoughtful, direct accompaniment. The beautiful slow movement has a quality of gentle rapture, almost matching Schneiderhan's sense of stillness; and the finale, joyfully and exuberantly fast, is charged with the fullest excitement. The digital recording is satisfyingly full and spacious.

Wolfgang Schneiderhan's stereo version of the Violin Concerto is still among the greatest recordings of this work: the serene spiritual beauty of the slow movement has never been surpassed on record. Schneiderhan, like Kremer, uses cadenzas transcribed from Beethoven's piano version of the Concerto. The transfer of the well-balanced 1962 recording is fresh and realistic. The Mozart coupling is apt and generous.

Kyung-Wha Chung's EMI performance, recorded live in the Concertgebouw, is searching and intense. Next to Perlman, Chung is lighter, more mercurial. The element of vulnerability adds to the emotional weight, above all in the wistfully tender slow movement, while the outer movements are full of flair. The recording is full and atmospheric.

In her 1979 recording, the slow basic tempi of Anne-Sophie Mutter's beautiful reading on DG were her own choice, she claims, and certainly were not forced upon her by Karajan. The first two movements have rarely if ever been more expansively presented on record, but the purity of the solo playing and the concentration of the whole performance make the result intensely convincing.

Anne-Sophie Mutter's very distinguished second performance with Masur stands out, both for its sheer individuality and for the rapt, lyrical beauty of phrase and tone that often brings one to catch one's breath. The playing is deeply felt in an entirely personal way, often conveyed by moments of magically hushed pianissimo, the use of the widest variety of dynamic and great variation of vibrato, and Mutter is obviously determined to think and feel the music through afresh.

His supreme mastery has Heifetz finding time for individuality and imagination in every phrase. For some, the comparative lack of serenity in the first movement (though not in the Larghetto) may be a drawback, but the drama of the reading is unforgettable. Heifetz's unique timbre is marvellously captured on SACD, as is Munch's conducting, with its distinctive character, notably its clarity and crispness, and the normal CD transfer of the alternative coupling with Brahms also has a fine sense of realism and presence.

Other versions by Menuhin (Naxos 8.110996 or EMI 5669752), Milstein (EMI 5 67583-2), Tetzlaff (Arte Nova 82876 76994-2), Shumsky (ASV Resonance CDRSN 3032), Nishizaki (Naxos 8.550149) and Zukerman (DG 453 142.2) are all distinctive but perhaps do not reach the top of the recommended list.

Historical Recordings

Kreisler is at his very peak in this wonderful, poetically rich account of the Beethoven Concerto, particularly the ravishing account of the Larghetto which causes one to catch one's breath (Naxos mono 8.110909). Szigeti's searching and magical account of the Concerto enjoys legendary status. Made in 1932, when he was at the height of his career, it has the refinement and purity for which he was famous (8.110946). The partnership of Heifetz and Toscanini in the Beethoven Violin Concerto is uniquely powerful and purposeful, with the purity of the violinist's playing, notably above the stave, making up for any lack of tenderness. Heifetz's example leads Toscanini to a rare gentleness in the slow movement, while the finale is exhilarating in its rhythmic drive. The hard NBC recording is nicely mellowed in the Naxos transfer, if with some audible hiss (8.110936).

(i) Violin Concerto (ii) Violin Sonata 9 (Kreutzer)

Ⓝ * DG 477 6596 Repin with (i) VPO, Muti; (ii) Argerich

(i;ii) Violin Concerto; (iii) Violin Sonata 7 in C min., Op. 30/2

Ⓝ  Sony 88697 144422. (i) Kym; (ii) Philh. O, A Davis; (iii) Brown

There are two outstanding new versions of the Beethoven Violin Concerto. Vadim Repin's new DG recording is one of the very finest of recent years. It is a performance which is for the first decade of the twenty-first century what Schneiderhan's famous version was for the twentieth. Muti and the VPO (an accompanying team chosen by the soloist) provide a strong, ever-flexible backcloth and the result has both charisma and an inspired sensitivity. In the exquisitely measured slow movement Repin plays on a thread of tone with a magical tenderness. Then he and Muti join joyfully together in the dancing finale, which lifts and sparkles to make a satisfying conclusion. Repin plays Kreisler's cadenzas in the outer movements and makes them his own. In the brilliant coupled performance on the Kreutzer Sonata one senses that Argerich is the dominant partner in the first movement which is played with enormous dash and verve. But in the variations Repin comes into his own and again produces effortlessly beautiful phrasing, and overall this is a highly spontaneous account. The two CDs are offered for the price of one.

The young Korean violinist, Min-Jin Kym is another newcomer of distinction and begins her recording career with this impressive coupling of the Beethoven Violin Concerto and the C minor Violin Sonata Op. 30/2. Her pure tone and fine range of expression immediately grips the listener, and in the slow movement she plays with a natural magnetic gravity with hushed tension and finely graded pianissimos. The 6/8 finale brings nicely lifted rhythms, helped by Sir Andrew Davis's tense direction of the Philharmonia. The Sonata is equally impressive with Ian Brown an ideal partner. The tension, urgency and witty pointing make one wish she might record more sonatas before long. Excellent sound with clean separation.

Triple Concerto for Violin, Cello & Piano in C, Op. 56 (DVD Version)

 TDK DVD DVWW-COMARG. Argerich, Renaud, Gautier Capuçon, Flanders SO, Rabinovitch-Barakovsky (V/D: Frédéric Le Clair) – PROKOFIEV: Piano Concerto 1; Symphony 1 (Classical); SCHUMANN: Violin Sonata 1 ***

(i) Triple Concerto; (ii) Choral Fantasia (DVD Version)

🔑  EMI DVD 4 92994-9; CD 5 55516-2. BPO, Barenboim, with (i) Perlman, Ma; (ii) Deutsche Staatsoper Ch.

The TDK DVD is designed as a showcase for Martha Argerich, but she is very much part of a team in the Beethoven Triple Concerto and indeed in the expressive slow movement it is the cellist Gautier Capuçon whose solo remains in the memory. Alexandre Rabinovitch-Barakovsky, his hair flying, energetically directs vital accounts of the outer movements, with a spontaneous accelerando at the very end of the work and throughout the balance between the highly responsive solo trio is all but ideal.

Recorded at concerts on consecutive days in February 1995, with Barenboim directing from the keyboard in both works, this makes an excellent if ungenerous coupling on EMI. These are all spontaneously imaginative artists, never more so than when recorded live. That makes both performances very compelling, with delightful interplay between the soloists in the Triple Concerto, led by Yo-Yo Ma. Barenboim's piano may be backwardly placed in the sound spectrum but one barely notices it, particularly when the orchestra is satisfyingly full-bodied. The Choral Fantasia depends above all on the solo pianist, and here Barenboim is in his element, not only revelling in the improvisatory quality of the opening solo but also bringing out the fun of the variations on the main theme.

Triple Concerto for Violin, Cello & Piano in C, Op. 56 (CD Versions)

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI 5 57773-2. Argerich, Capuçon, Maisky, Svizzera-Italiana O, Rabinovitch-Barakovsky – SCHUMANN: Piano Concerto ***

🔑 (BB)  EMI Gemini (ADD) 381487-2 (2). D. Oistrakh, Oborin, Knushevitsky, Philh. O, Sargent – BRAHMS: Double Concerto; MOZART: Violin Concerto 3; PROKOFIEV: Violin Concerto 2 ***

Ⓝ () BBC Legends mono BBCL 42652-2. Menuhin, Gendron, H Menuhin, LSO, Kertesz – BRAHMS: Double Concerto ()

This live recording of the Triple Concerto, like the Schumann Piano Concerto with which it is coupled, was made at the Lugano Festival, reflecting throughout the magnetism of Martha Argerich. Not that the cellist Mischa Maisky is any less characterful; but Argerich's powerful presence seems to modify his customary wilfulness.

The vintage EMI recording now on Gemini features distinguished Russian soloists led by David Oistrakh, and it dates from the early days of stereo; yet the sound is excellent for its period, the balance one of the most successful this concerto has received even to date. Sargent is authoritative, and his soloists make a good team.

Though recorded in mono only at the 1964 Bath Festival in the Colston Hall, Bristol, the sound is clear and vivid, heightening the outstanding performances of all three soloists. Menuhin and his sister Hephzibah were regularly joined by Maurice Gendron in chamber music, which helps to make this account of the Triple Concerto satisfyingly cohesive, with the LSO under Istvan Kertesz in superb form. Soloists are balanced forward with Gendron's playing in the lovely slow movement warm and tender, and the finale full of rhythmic bounce. Well coupled with an equally fine account of the Brahms Double Concerto.

(i) Triple Concerto. Piano Concerto in D (arr. from Violin Concerto), Op. 61a

(BB)  Naxos 8.554288. Jandó, (i) with Kang, Kliegel; Nicolaus Esterházy O, Drahos

(i) Triple Concerto for Violin, Cello & Piano. Symphony 7

🔑 (BB)  LSO Live LSO 0078. (i) Nikolitch, Hugh, Vogt; LSO, Haitink

(i) Triple Concerto; (ii) Symphony 10: 1st movt (realized & completed Cooper)

(M)  Chan. 6501. (i) Kalichstein-Laredo-Robinson Trio, ECO, Gibson; (ii) CBSO, Weller

The partnership of Dong-Suk Kang, Maria Kliegel and Jenö Jandó may not be familiar, but it is none the less formidable. All three are accomplished soloists. Béla Drahos draws clean-cut, consistently alert playing from the orchestra, more crisply detailed than in most versions. Beethoven's piano version of the Violin Concerto makes an apt and exceptionally generous coupling. Jenö Jandó uses his artistry to minimize any ungainliness in the piano-writing, articulating as cleanly and crisply as he does in the Triple Concerto.

On the LSO label an appealingly spontaneous account of the Triple Concerto (recorded live in the Barbican in November 2005), successfully combining a tonally lightweight trio of soloists, with Haitink's full-bodied orchestral backing. The slow movement brings a moving cantilena from cellist Tim Hugh, and in the ebullient finale Lars Vogt leads the high spirits with scintillating piano roulades. The coupling is even more impressive. Haitink has the full measure of the Seventh Symphony, and the weight of his reading gives it strength and gravitas, while still preserving the spirit of the dance in the finale which is very exciting. Good, full-bodied sound, but the Barbican acoustic is slightly damped by the close microphones. But not the performance.

(i) Triple Concerto for Violin, Cello & Piano; (ii) Septet

🔑 (BB)  Arte Nova 82876 64015-2. Shaham, Mørk; with (i) Bronfman, Tonhalle O, Zinman; (ii) Rouilly, Dangel, Reid, Jenny, Helfti

The coupling of the Triple Concerto and the Septet is unique. Zinman and his soloists treat it with light, clear textures and wonderfully clean articulation from all three soloists. The slow movement with its soaring cello melody is played by Truls Mørk with total dedication and not a hint of sentimentality. The Septet is played with similar blitheness, with allegros often challengingly fast, yet never rushed, and the wit of the fifth-movement Scherzo, with its galumphing horn, beautifully brought out. First-rate, cleanly focused sound.

The Creatures of Prometheus: Overture & Ballet, Op. 43

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55196. SCO, Mackerras

(BB)  Naxos 8.553404. Melbourne SO, Halász

Here, in fresh, vigorous performances, Sir Charles Mackerras and the Scottish Chamber Orchestra bring out not only the drama of the piece but also the colourful qualities which made Beethoven a great composer of light music. The ballet ends with the number which gave him one of his most fruitful themes, used for the finale of the Eroica Symphony. Highly recommended, especially at its new Helios price.

The Naxos issue provides another bargain version. The playing is neat and fresh, with rhythms well pointed. Though the string-sound is at times a little cloudy, dramatic passages such as the military trumpets and timpani of the Allegro con brio (No. 8) are very well caught, bringing out the panache of the playing. In the big Adagio (No. 5) the important cello solo confirms the quality of the Melbourne players.

OVERTURES

Overtures: The Consecration of the House; Coriolan; The Creatures of Prometheus; Egmont; Fidelio; King Stephen; Leonora 1–3; The Ruins of Athens; Zur Namensfeier

🔑 (M)  Arte Nova 82876 57831-2 (2). Zurich Tonhalle O, Zinman

David Zinman and the Zürich Tonhalle Orchestra here take on board the lessons of period performance in this performance of Beethoven's 11 overtures. The very first, Prometheus, sets the pattern with the phenomenal clarity of articulation in an exceptionally fast Allegro, and transparency of texture marks all these performances. The drama of Beethoven's writing is underlined in the sharpness of attack and high contrasts of dynamic. Helpfully, the two discs present the sequence of 11 works in an order to make a satisfying programme.

(i) Overtures: The Consecration of the House; Coriolan; The Creatures of Prometheus; Egmont; Fidelio; King Stephen; Leonora 1–3; The Ruins of Athens; Zur Namensfeier; (ii) 12 Contredanses, WoO 14; 12 German Dances, WoO 8; 12 Minuets, WoO 7

(B)  Ph. (ADD) Duo 438 706-2 (2). (i) Leipzig GO, Masur; (ii) ASMF, Marriner

Masur's performances of the Overtures are more direct than those of Karajan, satisfying in their lack of mannerism. The Philips recording from the early 1970s is of high quality, and the remastering has enhanced its vividness and impact. To complete the second CD, Marriner and the Academy offer a splendid foil with the dance music. Even as a composer of light music, Beethoven was a master.

Romances for Cello and Orchestra 1, Op. 40; 2, Op. 50

(*) Orfeo C080031A. Müller-Schott, Australian CO, Tognetti – HAYDN: Cello Concertos 1 & 2 **(*)

Daniel Müller-Schott has transcribed the two Beethoven Violin Romances for his own instrument – and very successfully too! This is playing of some eloquence and finesse.

Romances for Violin and Orchestra 1, Op. 40; 2, Op. 50

(M)  CRD (ADD) CRD 3369. R. Thomas, Bournemouth SO – MENDELSSOHN: Violin Concerto; SCHUBERT: Konzertstück ***

The purity of Ronald Thomas's intonation (particularly important in the double-stopping at the start of Op. 40) makes for sensitive, clean-cut readings which, along with the Schubert Konzertstück, provide enjoyable if unexpected couplings for the Mendelssohn Concerto. The recording is first rate.

SYMPHONIES

Symphonies (DVD versions)

Symphonies 1–3 (Eroica)

🔑  DG DVD 073 4101 (5.1 Surround Sound). BPO, Karajan (V/D: No. 1: Arne Arnbohm; No. 2: Hans Joachim Schulz; No. 3: Karajan)

During the analogue LP era, Karajan recorded the Beethoven symphonies in stereo, both in 1961/2 and again in 1977, and undoubtedly the later set was the more successful of the two. But Karajan also planned a video cycle, and this has now been issued on DVD. Nos. 1–7 were filmed in 1971; No. 5 was made a year later; but the joyous Pastoral dates from 1967.

The DVD accounts of the earlier symphonies are interpretatively closer to the second cycle. No. 1 is elegant enough, but the finale is already giving way to genuine Beethovenian strength and urgency, and this maturity is even more noticeable in No. 2, where the slow movment is richly and beautifully played, and the finale full of characteristic energy and impulse. The Eroica is splendid: the first movement presses forward strongly but does not sound rushed (especially today when we are more used to brisk pacing), and the hushed opening of the Funeral March brings an account which is both deeply felt and intense.

The ever-reliable Arne Arnbohm was the Video Director for the First Symphony, where the cameras follow the music vividly. Hans Joachim Schulz directs the cameras in the same vein in No. 2, but Karajan himself apparently takes over for the Eroica, where the orchestra is re-positioned, now laid out in three triangular groups, with wind and brass placed in the central triangle. The camera close-ups continue to involve the listener in the intensity of the music-making.

Symphonies 4–6 (Pastoral)

🔑 (*) DG DVD 073 4102 (5.1 Surround Sound). BPO, Karajan (V/D: Nos. 4 & 5: Karajan; 6: conceived and directed by Hugo Niebling)

The Fourth and Fifth Symphonies are live performances and have all the added communicative intensity that this brings. Karajan is now credited as having taken over the video direction himself, and the very opening of the Fourth is arresting, both visually and musically. The camera often places one very close to the orchestra, seeing the players almost from the conductor's own viewpoint. The Fifth (with exposition repeat included) is superb, with all the adrenalin and warmth for which Karajan is famous, and a thrilling finale. Alas, the Pastoral, beautifully played though it is, is the one blot on the set. Hugo Niebling, the Director, lays out the orchestra in serried ranks, as if on the barrack square, and there are exaggerated lighting effects, fades, losses of focus, and so on – which is a pity, for the music-making is glorious and deserves better.

Symphonies 7–9 (Choral)

🔑  DG DVD 073 4103 (5.1 Surround Sound). Janowitz, Ludwig, Thomas, Berry. Deutsche Opera, Berlin, Ch. in No. 9; BPO, Karajan (V/D: No. 8: Hans Joachim Scholz; Nos. 7 & 9: Karajan)

The Seventh Symphony returns the orchestral layout to the triple triangle, but the cameras again frequently take us among the players, which is very stimulating. The performance of the Seventh is excitingly hard-driven and rhythmically vibrant, but it mellows in the beautifully played Allegretto. The visual layout for the Eighth is more conventional, but not the performance. For Karajan it is no 'little' symphony. He takes the first-movement exposition repeat, and drives forward strongly. The central movements bring lighter, refined contrast, but the finale again has powerful thrust and an exciting coda.

The Choral Symphony, which dates from 1968, brings four superb soloists, both individually and singing splendidly as a team. Karajan opens his eyes at last, to communicate with the chorus. The performance caps the cycle thrillingly and exudes all the vitality of live music-making, even though recorded in the studio. The layout, with a huge chorus who sing with great involvement and zest, is visually gripping. The sound throughout is excellent, brilliant, wide-ranging and full-bodied, and the chorus has plenty of bite. Even with the flawed production of the Pastoral Symphony this set is wonderfully stimulating.

Symphonies 1–8 (i) 9

Ⓜ * Sony DVD 88697195439. Berlin PO, Karajan with (i) Soloists, Vienna Singverein

This set comes from 1982–4, only a few years after his third cycle which appeared in 1977 (in a very handsomely presented boxed set). The performances are inspiring and among the finest Beethoven this great conductor has given us. However documentation and presentation is distinctly on the sketchy side: neither the booklets nor the disc themselves identify the soloists in the finale of the Ninth. Nevertheless, a strong recommendation.

Symphony 9 (Choral)

Ⓝ 🔑 * EuroArts DVD 2072408 Tomowa-Sintow, Baltsa, Kollo, Van Dam, Deutsch Opera Ch., BPO, Karajan (V/D Humphrey Burton)

Recorded live on New Year's Eve 1977, a decade before he died, Karajan's thrilling account of the Choral Symphony in many ways caps his previous versions. It has a superb solo quartet and the tremendously vivid choral response is matched by the Berlin Philharmonic playing with great and consistent intensity, yet with a moving warmth in the Adagio. The closing pages are overwhelming. Throughout one watches Karajan, eyes closed, and using a minimum of gesture, completely in control at every moment and obviously totally dedicated to Beethoven's masterpiece. The sound is extremely vivid and Humphrey Burton's video direction is admirably poised between showing the orchestra and conductor, together and in alternation.

Symphonies 1 in C, Op. 21; 6 in F (Pastoral), Op. 68; 8 in F, Op. 93

 EuroArts DVD DV BPAB 168. BPO, Abbado (V/D: Bob Coles)

Symphonies 2 in D, Op. 36; 5 in C min., Op. 67

 EuroArts DVD DV BPAB 25. BPO, Abbado (V/D: Bob Coles)

These two DVDs offer Abbado's live recordings made in February 2001 in the Santa Cecilia Academy in Rome, exhilarating performances rapturously received by the Italian audience. Interpretatively, they very much follow the pattern set by Abbado in the complete cycle he recorded for DG in Berlin in 1999, using the new edition of Jonathan del Mar, with an extra repeat in the Scherzo of No. 5, for example. Abbado again opts for a performance-style that takes some note of period practice, lighter and more resilient than before, with sharp, clean attack. That particularly applies to slow movements, which flow easily, though he tends to avoid the extreme speeds in fast movements suggested by some of Beethoven's metronome markings. One facility offered in all the symphonies except No.2 is an alternative camera-angle. The first option varies the shots of the conductor with those of different instruments, whereas the second option concentrates the whole time on the conductor. There is a marked discrepancy between the running time of each DVD, with Nos. 1, 6 and 8 lasting almost half an hour longer than Nos. 2 and 5.

Symphonies (CD versions)

Symphonies 1–9

✿ Ⓑ () EMI (mono) 5 15863-2 (5). Philh. O, Karajan (with Schwarzkopf, Höffgen, Haefliger, Edelmann & Vienna Gesellschaft Ch. der Musikfreunde in No. 9)

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI 3 75812-2 (5). VPO, Rattle (with Bonney, Remmert, Streit, Hanson & CBSO Ch. in 9)

Ⓜ  Hyp. CDS 44301/5 (5). SCO, Mackerras (with Watson, Wyn-Rogers, Skelton, Roth, Edinburgh Festival Philh. O & Ch. in No. 9).

🔑 (BB)  Arte Nova 74321 65410-2 (5). Zurich Tonhalle O, Zinman (with Ziesak, Remmert, Davislim, Roth, Swiss Chamber Ch. in 9)

🔑 Ⓑ  CfP 575 7512 (5). RLPO, Mackerras (with Rodgers, D. Jones, Bronder, Terfel, RLPO Ch. in 9)

🔑 Ⓑ  DG (ADD) 474 924-2 (5). VPO, Bernstein (with Jones, Schwarz, Kollo, Moll, V. State Op Ch. in 9)

Ⓝ Ⓜ  DG 477 5864 (5), BPO, Abbado (with Nattila, Urmana, Moser, Quastoff, Swedish R Ch. & Eric Robinson Chamber Ch. in 9)

🔑  DG 439 900-2 (5). ORR, Gardiner (with Orgonasova, von Otter, Rolfe Johnson, Cachemaille, Monteverdi Ch. in 9)

(i) Symphonies 1–9; Overtures: Consecration of the House; Coriolan; Creatures of Prometheus; Egmont; Fidelio; King Stephen; Leonora 2; The Ruins of Athens; (ii) Missa solemnis

(BB) (*) Nim NI 1760 (7). Hanover Band, (i) cond. Goodman or Huggett (with Harrhy, Bailey, Murgatroyd, George, Oslo Cathedral Ch. in 9); (ii) Hirsti, Watkinson, Murgatroyd, George, Oslo Cathedral Ch., cond. Kvam

Symphonies 1–9; Overtures: Coriolan; Creatures of Prometheus; Egmont; Fidelio; Leonora 3; Ruins of Athens

🔑 Ⓑ  DG (ADD) 463 088-2 (5) (or SACD 474 600-2 (6) with rehearsal of no.9) BPO, Karajan (with Janowitz, Rossel-Majdan, Kmentt, Berry in No. 9)

Ⓝ Ⓑ  DG (ADD) 429 089-2 BPO, Karajan (with Tomowa-Sintow, Baltsa, Schreier, V. Singverein, Van Dam in No. 9)

Ⓝ (BB)  Zig-Zag Territories ZZT080402/6 (5) (without Fidelio; Leonora 3 but with Turkish March) Anima Eterna, Jos van Immersel (with Kaapola, Kielland, Schäfer, Bauer in No. 9)

Symphonies 1–9; Overture Coriolan

🔑 (BB)  Warner Apex 2564 60457-2 (5). Sinfonia Varsovia, Y. Menuhin (with Glennon, Schaechter, Janutas, Schollum, Lithuania Kaunas State Ch. in 9)

Symphonies 1–9; Overtures: Coriolan; Egmont; Leonora 3

Ⓑ (*) Decca (ADD) 475 9090 (6). Chicago SO, Solti (with Lorengar, Minton, Burrows, Talvela, Chicago Ch. in No. 9)

Karajan's mono set is placed first in our listings, not because it is an obvious 'best buy' – although it is both distinguished and rewarding – but because it has a very special place in the catalogue. Recorded between 1952 and 1955 with the Philharmonia Orchestra at their peak, it was the first time Karajan delivered all the Beethoven symphonies. Though the recordings are in mono only, the separation of the new EMI transfers is remarkable, with excellent clarity and definition and no loss of body and weight, partly a tribute to the acoustics of the Kingsway Hall. The approach finds Karajan at his freshest, in no way self-conscious (as he came to be later) and above all conveying the joy of the music-making. Speeds are admirably chosen, the playing generally crisp and resilient, with a wide dynamic range obtained throughout. The Ninth is different from all the rest in being recorded not in London but in Vienna, with the Philharmonia joined by the Gesellschaft der Musicfreunde. It is a powerful reading, with the two contrasted themes of the slow movement taken at very different speeds. The finale benefits not only from the fine singing of the chorus, but from an outstanding team of soloists, led by Elisabeth Schwarzkopf.

Of Karajan's later stereo recordings the 1961/62 set (DG 463 088-2 but also now available in a new hybrid SACD transfer) is most compelling, combining high polish with a biting sense of urgency and spontaneity. There is one major disappointment, the over-taut reading of the Pastoral, which in addition omits a vital repeat in the Scherzo. Otherwise these are incandescent performances, superbly played and with excellent sound. On five CDs at bargain price, this set should be a cornerstone of any collection.

In Karajan's 1977 recordings the character of the first two symphonies has genuine Beethovenian strength and urgency. The Eroica, however, presents the one major disappointment, at least in the outer movements: faster than before, though the Funeral March remains very measured and direct. To compensate the first movement of the Pastoral now has elegance and joyfulness at a tempo barely any slower than before, while the other movements, too, avoid the tense manner. Otherwise the middle symphonies remain very much as they were. Most important of all the Ninth is given a superlative performance, with the slow movement warmer and an extra toughness and intensity in outer movements. In the finale the singing of Peter Schreier and Van Dam stands out within a fine quartet.

Sir Simon Rattle's Beethoven cycle is not the first to be recorded in concert, but the quality of immediacy and spontaneous expression is something that marks it out more than most of its rivals.

With Rattle's approach reflecting his experience with period performers, textures are clarified and string-tone is thinned down with reduced vibrato, but the string sound still has VPO sweetness. In the heat of the moment Rattle allows himself an element of freedom, and generally his approach is more warmly expressive than that of other performances with modern instruments which have taken note of period practice. Overall, Rattle regularly conveys exuberance, not least in the finales, notably in the Fifth. In the finale of the Ninth he scores palpably with one of the finest quartets of soloists assembled for many years, and the decision to bring over the CBSO chorus is triumphantly justified, with incandescent choral sound. Though Rattle adopts the new Bärenreiter editions of Jonathan del Mar, he does not include the extra repeat of the Scherzo section in the third movement of No. 5 but leaves the structure as we have long known it. The five discs come at mid-price in a lavish presentation package, complete with hardback booklet.

Mackerras's Hyperion set was also recorded live and it gains in vitality from that. The approach is very much influenced by the lessons Mackerras has learned from conducting period performances, with textures light and clear and speeds which tend to be fast, at times challengingly fast. The players respond superbly, and the clarity of even the most rapid semiquaver passagework is astonishing. The timpani too is prominently presented, clean and dry, as in period performances. When it comes to the Ninth, Mackerras understandably opts for a full orchestra rather than a chamber band, with the first movement strong and incisive, and the second subject of the slow movement flowing much faster than usual. The choral finale is impressively done with fine chorus-work and strong soloists. Although Mackerras's CfP survey remains fully competitive (and the discs are available separately), the newer performances are marginally even finer.

David Zinman too, has learnt from the example of period performance and has consistently presented performances of all the symphonies, early and late, which have a transparency not usually achieved with modern instruments, helped by the clear, fresh acoustic of the Zurich hall. There is an important advantage too that this was the first modern-instrument cycle to use the new edition prepared by Jonathan Del Mar, with important modifications in the text. Zinman also allows a degree of ornamentation beyond convention. What matters above all is that not only are the performances electrifying, with the players responding to the challenge of fast speeds in observance of Beethoven's metronome markings, but there is also refinement and tenderness in slow movements, even in the face of fast-flowing tempi. The sound is vivid and beautifully balanced, making this a front-runner among recommendations for cycles using modern instruments.

Sir Charles Mackerras's CfP Beethoven cycle is also among the most recommendable of all at any price, beautifully recorded and interpretatively refreshing, in a refined way steering a satisfying mid-course between traditional and period performance. So the brass have a satisfying braying roundness and the timpani echo period practice, not only in the sharp attack with hard sticks but also in their prominent balance, as in the finale of No. 5. Speeds are on the fast side, but it is a measure of Mackerras's mastery that rhythms are always beautifully sprung without any hint of breathlessness and with consistently refined detail.

Bernstein's late-1970s cycle is dramatic, perceptive, rich in emotion but never sentimental, and it has a natural spontaneous quality that stems in part from his technique of recording. As in other Bernstein/DG recordings of this period, the maestro opted to have live performances recorded and then (with some tidying of detail) edited together. Those who know the thrilling account of the first movement of the Eroica in his earlier, New York cycle may be disappointed that the voltage here is lower, but with Bernstein's electricity matched against the traditional warmth of Viennese playing, the results are consistently persuasive. It culminates in a superb account of the Ninth, with a fast, tense first movement, a resilient Scherzo, a hushed, expansive reading of the Adagio and a dramatic account of the finale. Balances are not always perfect, with microphones placed in order to eliminate audience noise, but the results are generally undistracting, and the CD transfers are very good.

DG have now issued Abbado's complete 2001 live recording of his Rome Beethoven cycle (partly available on DVD – see above) to which the re-edited version of his earlier recording of the Choral Symphony, made in Berlin, has been added. The conductor himself feels that for this cycle his 'interpretative vision matured, becoming more natural and shared', so this set now replaces the earlier 2000 cycle as representing the conductor's final views on these works.

Menuhin's set represents the refreshing response of a great interpretative musician who remained perennially young to the very end of his musical life. Though the applause that greets the opening of some of the symphonies is irritating (though it is now edited out on the CD containing Coriolan and Nos. 4 and 8), the tensions of live performance regularly bring magical results, as in the dedicated, ecstatic performance of the great Adagio of the Ninth.

Gardiner's cycle makes a clear first choice for those wanting period versions. These are exhilarating versions which have bite and imagination and a sense of spontaneity. Like others, Gardiner observes Beethoven's own fast metronome markings, but allows himself expansion in the slow movements of the Eroica and the Ninth. With Jonathan del Mar a scholarly helper, his amendment of the marking for the Turkish March in the finale of the Ninth is twice as brisk as Norrington's and leads logically into the fugue. The set comes in full, luminous sound, complete on only five discs, with a sixth containing an illustrated talk by Gardiner in three languages.

Solti's first cycle with his own Chicago orchestra has a firm centrality to it, following the outstandingly successful version of the Ninth with which he started the series. The performance of the Eroica has comparable qualities, with expansive, steady tempi and a dedicated, hushed account of the slow movement. The CD transfers give an admirable consistency, with plenty of weight in the bass balancing the bright top register. At bargain price, Solti admirers should not miss this set, particularly as these performances are more satisfying than those in the later, digital series. The reissue comes with a bonus CD including Solti in conversation with William Mann.

By unearthing a live recording of No. 2, made in the Royal Albert Hall in 1948, and borrowing a radio recording of No. 8 made in Stockholm, EMI has put together a complete Furtwängler cycle – and very impressive it is interpretatively. The sound of those two ad hoc recordings may be rough, with heavy background noise, but the performances are electrifying. No. 9 comes in the dedicated performance given at Bayreuth in 1951, but the others are EMI's studio versions, not always as inspired as Furtwängler's live performances but still magnetic and, with well-balanced mono sound, well transferred. (EMI 567496-2)

The small-scale Belgian period instrument set from Jos van Immersel and Anima Eterna, with its string timbre slightly meagre and without vibrato, can hardly match the competition from other more distinguished authentic sets, but it has spontaneity and stimulation, and makes points of its own, notably the use of Viennese period instruments in the orchestra of two dozen players (more in the Choral Symphony – not one of the more memorable performances). The highlight is undoubtedly the Eroica, with the Seventh not far behind; and the early symphonies certainly have plenty of life, as do the overtures, all played with plenty of vitality.

Symphonies 1–9. Overtures: Fidelio; Leonore 1–3

Ⓜ  Ph. (ADD) 475 8147 (6). Concg. O, Jochum (with Rebmann, Reynolds, Ridder, Feldhoff, Netherlands R. Ch. in 9)

Eugen Jochum recorded his earlier Beethoven symphony cycle with the Concertgebouw Orchestra in the late 1960s, the period when he also recorded with the same orchestra what has claims to be the most dedicated version of the Missa Solemnis ever. There is something of the same dedication in these symphony recordings, notably in the hushed tension in such movements as the Funeral March of the Eroica, given a spacious reading, powerful in the fugatos. Jochum as an admirer of Furtwängler conveys many similar qualities, but without the idiosyncratic approach to tempo. Fast movements are crisp and incisive, with rhythms well lifted and offbeat accents sharply attacked, helped by the superb Concertgebouw ensemble. The spacious, intense account of the Ninth makes an apt culmination to a memorable cycle. The sound is still full-bodied and clear, with ample detail, as it is in the four overtures Beethoven wrote for his opera Fidelio. An outstanding bargain box in Philips's 'Original Masters' series.

Symphonies.* (i) 1; (ii) 2. Overtures: (i) The Creatures of Prometheus; (iii) Fidelio; (ii) Leonore 2; The Ruins of Athens (BB () Naxos mono 8.110854)

Symphonies.* (i) 3 (Eroica); (ii) 4 (BB () Naxos mono 8.110856)

(i) Symphony 5; (ii) Piano Sonata 29 ((Hammerklavier) arr. Weingartner); (i) Overture: The Creatures of Prometheus (BB () Naxos mono 8.110913)

Symphonies.* (i) 5; (ii) 6 (Pastoral). (iii) 11 Viennese Dances, WoO 17 (BB () Naxos mono 8.110861)

(i) Symphonies 7; 8. Egmont: Overture; (ii) Clärchens Tod; Entr'acte 2 (BB (*) Naxos mono 8.110862)

(i) Symphony 9 in D min. (Choral); (ii) Overture: Consecration of the House (BB () Naxos mono 8.110863. LSO, LPO, RPO, British SO, (i) Helletsgruber, Anday, Maikl, Mayr, V. State Op. Ch., VPO; (ii) LPO; Weingartner)

Weingartner's accounts of the symphonies are free of the opulence and weight that characterized some of his contemporaries (including the often glorious Furtwängler). They have a sinewy classicism, and for many collectors they stood for the voice of Beethoven in much the same way as did Schnabel in the late Sonatas or the Busch Quartet in the late Quartets. The sound is generally more than just acceptable. For many older collectors Weingartner's 1936 account was the Eroica, speaking with an altogether special authority.

Weingartner recorded the Fifth Symphony no fewer than four times, and this third version, made in London in 1932 with an ad hoc orchestra, is distinguished by sobriety and freedom from any self-regard. His Pastoral from 1927 is totally unaffected and sounds strikingly good in this transfer, as do the delightful Viennese Dances made with the LPO in 1938. Weingartner's follow-up 1933 version of the Fifth Symphony with the LPO was his fourth and most satisfying. But not even Weingartner can make out a totally convincing case for the Hammerklavier being transcribed for the orchestra. Apart from the Eroica and his magisterial Ninth, the Seventh and Eighth are the most commanding of Weingartner's Beethoven cycle. The Seventh is completely classical in approach, without the (very slightly overdriven) intensity of the contemporaneous Toscanini version, while the Eighth has a mercurial quality that is quite special. The sound is better than we have had in any previous transfer of the Eighth.

Symphonies 1; 2; (Eroica); 3 (Eroica); & 8

Ⓝ (BB)  EMI Gemini 2 17635-2 (2) Concg. O, Sawallisch

Symphonies 4; 5; 6; (Pastoral); 7

Ⓝ (BB) (*) EMI Gemini 5 17659-2 (2) Concg. O, Sawallisch

The first of these two Sawallisch Gemini reissues is the one to go for. The orchestral playing is of a very high standard throughout and Sawallisch has a fine sense of proportion. The First Symphony immediately sounds fresh and vibrant; the Second and Eighth receive lovely, alert accounts that give much pleasure, and textures are clean and transparent. The Eroica receives a performance of some stature and has great breadth and dignity; the orchestral playing is a joy in itself.

The mellow acoustic of the Concertgebouw Hall must, however, have encouraged Sawallisch into middle-aged spread for the first movement of the Fifth Symphony, but blazing brass introduce an altogether more electrifying view of the finale. A relaxed view of the Pastoral is altogether more sympathetic, but the sound is not ideally clear. The Seventh is fully acceptable, but not memorable.

Symphonies 1–5; 7; (i) 9 (Choral); Missa solemnis

Ⓜ () Testament mono/stereo SBT 1284 (1 & 7); SBT 1285 (2 & Overtures: Coriolan, Egmont, Leonora 3); SBT 1286 (4 & 5); SBT2 1283 (2) (3 (Eroica) & Missa solemnis); SBT 1287 (9 (Choral)). Gurzenich O, Wand; (i) with Kirschstein, Deroubaix, Schreier, Morbach, Gurzenich Ch.

These recordings, made between 1955 and 1986, demonstrate Wand's Beethoven interpretations from earlier in his career. The Gurzenich Orchestra, with which he made the recordings in Cologne, was the orchestra of the Cologne Opera when performing in concert. The comparisons with Wand's outstanding Beethoven cycle for RCA/BMG reveal that the interpretations themselves are remarkably similar. If the ensemble of the Gurzenich Orchestra is not always quite as crisp as that of the Hamburg players there is an extra freshness and spontaneity, helped by the bright forward sound, more sharply focused than on RCA, whether in the earlier mono recordings (Symphonies 1, 2, 3, 4 and 9) or the later ones in stereo.

The two-disc package of the Missa solemnis and the Eroica Symphony is the pick of the series. The Eroica is more urgent here than it is in Wand's later recordings, with a dedicated reading of the Funeral March as centrepiece. Finer still is the Missa solemnis, conveying the impression not of a studio recording but of a great occasion. With high dynamic contrasts Wand is bold, strong and dramatic, incandescent in the culmination of the Dona nobis pacem with its spine-tingling military incursions. The chorus, despite rather backward placing, sings with admirable freshness, and among the soloists the soprano and tenor (the young Peter Schreier) stand out.

Symphonies 1–2

🔑 * Pentatone Surround Sound SACD PTC 5186 118. ASMF, Marriner

🔑 (BB)  Arte Nova 74321 63645-2. Zürich Tonhalle O, Zinman

 Simax PSC 1179. Swedish CO, Dausgaard (with Ritterballet, WoO 1)

Marriner's 1970 recordings were originally made in quadraphonic sound of amazingly realistic quality, with the ambience warmly captured, notably the natural strings. Here they are reissued for the first time as they were meant to be heard, although the disc also reproduces admirably on a normal CD system. Marriner presents the first two symphonies authentically on a Mozart-sized orchestra. The result is lithe and fresh, with plenty of character but few if any quirks and mannerisms, and the dramatic contrasts are now the more powerful. Yet the proper scale is most realistically captured and in many ways this coupling has never been surpassed.

Using the Bärenreiter scores newly edited by Jonathan del Mar, David Zinman conducts electrifying performances of the first two symphonies, with a rather smaller band of strings than in later works. With textures transparent and rhythms crisply sprung at generally fast speeds, the results consistently reflect the influence of period performance. For the Andantes in both symphonies there is a hushed dedication.

Dausgaard's Simax coupling offers engagingly fresh performances, stylish and elegant, and with plenty of spontaneous excitement in the outer movements. They combine the vigour of period performance with the richness of a modern orchestra. The early but delightful ballet music is a bonus, and the sound is superb.

Symphonies 1 in C; 3 in E flat (Eroica)

🔑 Ⓑ  CfP 575 9842. RLPO, Mackerras

With Mackerras, the First is fresh and alert in a Haydnesque way, while the Eroica has ample power, with heightened dynamic contrasts and with the flowing speed for the Funeral March still conveying dedication. First-rate recording.

The one irritant to Menuhin's performances on Apex is the welcoming applause that comes before the music begins and at the close of No. 1, but not before the opening of No. 3. This is intrusive without the visual element. Otherwise these highly musical performances, strong, but on a convincing chamber scale, are among the most satisfying available, with a dedicated reading of the Eroica Funeral March. Warm, well-balanced recording. (Warner Apex 2564 60452-2)

Symphonies 1; 5

🔑 Ⓑ  LSO LSO0590. LSO, Haitink

Haitink's Beethoven cycle with the LSO was recorded at live concerts in 2005–6 at the Barbican, London. This CD begins with a fast and exciting version of the Fifth Symphony, with biting urgency and dramatic timpani thwacks. The slow movement flows at a fair pace but is beautifully moulded and phrased. The finale is as bracing and exhilarating as one could wish for, and the sound is immediate and warm. The First receives a crisply elegant performance, with Haitink making the most of the woodwind detail. The Menuetto here looks forward to the Beethovenian Scherzo in its high-spirited drama. The finale is fast without sounding rushed, and is always beautifully phrased. As in the Fifth Symphony, the audience is very quiet and the sound full and vivid.

(i) Symphonies 1 in C, Op. 21; 8 in F, Op. 93; (ii) Grosse Fuge, Op. 133

Ⓝ (*) Testament mono SBT1405. Klemperer, with (i) Philh., (ii) NPO

The two symphonies come from Klemperer's 1963 Beethoven cycle and the Grosse Fuge from a Festival Hall concert given three years later after the orchestra had broken with its founder Walter Legge and reformed itself as a self-governing body. The BBC mono recordings are excellently balanced and though the Eighth Symphony does not have the lightness of touch of, say, Karajan, it is not as ponderous as Klemperer's Beethoven was to become towards the end of his life. The Grosse Fuge is titanic.

Symphony 2 in D, Op. 36

Ⓜ () BBC mono BBCL 4099-2. RPO, Beecham – BRAHMS: Symphony 2 ()

The Second Symphony was the work of Beethoven that Beecham most enjoyed, and he gives an electrifying performance, recorded in 1956 with clear, well-balanced mono sound. The reading is typical of Beecham, if anything even more magnetic than his EMI studio recording, fiery in the outer movements and warmly persuasive in the Larghetto slow movement, affectionately moulded at a steady speed.

Symphonies 2; 6 in F (Pastoral)

🔑 Ⓑ  LSO LSO0082. LSO, Haitink

(BB)  Warner Apex 2564 60453-2. Sinfonia Varsovia, Y. Menuhin

Haitink's Pastoral is a fresh, bracing performance of tremendous vitality as well as warmth. With generally fast speeds, any feeling of being rushed is suppressed by the beautiful quality of the playing, with the LSO on fine form, and Haitink coaxing exquisite phrasing from the strings especially. The second movement, Scene by the Brook, is simply gorgeous. In the Second Symphony, the dramatic qualities are well brought out, again with fast tempi in the outer movements, sharply pointed rhythmically. The slow movement is beautifully moulded. The closely miked 'live' sound throughout this CD is excellent, bringing out much detail in its warmth.

After the opening applause, Menuhin's reading of the Second Symphony is weighty and mature-sounding, the first movement lacking a little in bite but not in buoyancy. The Larghetto is nobly phrased, the finale vigorous and high-spirited. Alongside the Choral Symphony, Menuhin's performance of the Pastoral Symphony (which opens without applause) crowns his cycle in its sheer lyrical beauty. The chamber scale and the combination of warmth and lightness of touch bring a joyous momentum. The storm bursts in dramatically, and the heartfelt Shepherds' Thanksgiving brings a lyrical apotheosis. Satisfyingly full sound, with a natural brilliance.

Symphonies 2; 7 in A, Op.92

Ⓝ (*) BIS SACD 1816. Minnesota O, Vänskä

Osma Vänskä's account of the Second Symphony is crisp and precise, lacking a little poetry, but always thrusting, with speed on the fast side, whether in the powerful first movement or in the flowing account of the slow movement. In the first movement of No. 7 Vänskä brings out the rustic quality in the dotted rhythms in compound time. The second movement Allegretto is on the slow side though nicely flowing, but the last two movements are brisk and exciting. Very sound, but not a first choice.

Symphonies 2; 7; (i; ii) Mass in C, Op. 86; (ii) The Ruins of Athens (incidental music; excerpts), Op. 113

(BB) (*) EMI Gemini (ADD) 5 86504-2 (2). RPO, Beecham, with (i) Vyvyan, Sinclair, Lewis, Nowakowski; (ii) Beecham Ch. Soc.

In both symphonies Beecham's pacing is highly personal. yet has plenty of Beecham elegance. The Allegro con brio of the first movement of the Second is extreme, exhilaratingly fast to challenge the RPO players at their peak; while the last two movements are both taken easily and and wittily. It is a strong, individual performance. Beecham's Seventh is comparably brisk; yet the result is exhilarating. The digital transfer of the 1956/7 recording of the Second Symphony brings some stridency in the violins, and the analogue hiss is relatively high, but the 1958 sound of the Seventh is much more successful, the sound full and well balanced.

On the companion disc, the C major Mass is a vintage performance, passionately committed. With a first-rate team of soloists and excellent choral singing, Beecham is still a front-runner among modern-instrument performances of this work. The transfer of the 1958 recording is vivid and lively, with clear choral sound. The fill-up of incidental music is equally vibrant, with Beecham roaring through the Chorus of Dervishes (finely sung by the Beecham Choral Society), whiskers obviously bristling, these are all memorable performances by a great conductor in his prime, and we must be grateful they were recorded in stereo.

Symphonies 2; 8

🔑 Ⓑ  CfP 575 9852. RLPO, Mackerras

Mackerras rounded off his outstanding Beethoven cycle with performances of these two even-numbered works which bring out the dramatic bite in performances at once refined and full of sharp contrasts, with exhilarating results.

Symphony 3; 12 Contredanse; Prometheus Ballet Music: finale

Ⓝ  HM HMU Helsingborg SO, Manze

Symphony 3 in E flat; Overtures: Leonora 1–2

Ⓜ () EMI mono 5 67740-2. Philh. O, Klemperer

Symphony 3 (Eroica); Leonore Overture 2

🔑 Ⓑ  LSO LSO0080. LSO, Haitink

Symphony 3; Overture: Leonora 3

🔑 ((*)) Testament (mono) SBT 2242 (2). Royal Danish O, Klemperer – BRAHMS: Symphony 4; MOZART: Symphony 29 ((*))

The exceptional clarity of Haitink's Eroica is due in part to the close microphones, which bring out amazing detail, as well as minimizing any audience noise from this live recording. There is a tremendous forward impulse to the music-making here, so that the first movement's (almost) 18 minutes don't seem at all too long. The Marcia funèbre is done very convincingly, its steady tempo creating an impressive, cumulative effect. The Scherzo is full of life and energy, with the horns in the Trio especially enjoyable. The finale is hugely satisfying in terms of tempi and overall effect, with the drama, as well as the joy, fully brought out. The Leonore Overture 2 is played dramatically, with its splendidly controlled, atmospheric opening. Warm, vivid sound throughout.

Imaginatively, Andrew Manze's version of the Eroica comes coupled with three other Beethoven works using the Prometheus theme which is the subject of the Variations in the Eroica finale. As one would expect of this conductor, the approach has much in common with period practice with clean textures and limited vibrato in the strings. With a big dynamic range the Funeral March is both powerful and relatively measured. The scherzo is jolly in its bouncing rhythms and the finale is clean and direct. Excellent sound.

Recorded in April 1957 on Klemperer's last visit to conduct the Royal Danish Orchestra in Copenhagen, the version of the Eroica on Testament is even more magnetic than either of his studio recordings with the Philharmonia, fine as they are. The Third Leonora Overture, like the Brahms and Mozart symphonies, derives from a concert Klemperer conducted in January 1954, and though the slow introduction brings some rough ensemble and the recording is rougher too, the weight and intensity of the performance come over strongly, with the main Allegro fiercely dramatic.

The 1954 recording of the Leonora Overtures 1 and 2 and the 1955 mono version of the Eroica were among the first recordings Klemperer made with the Philharmonia Orchestra, and their success immediately revealed his full strength. This Eroica is one of his supreme achievements, with speeds generally more urgent than in his 1961 stereo version.

Symphonies 3; 4

🔑 Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 477 7157. BPO, Karajan

🔑 (BB)  Arte Nova 74321 59214-2: Zürich Tonhalle O, Zinman

Ⓝ (*) Sony 886971 92522 (2). Basel CO, Antonini

Karajan's 1962 Eroica is among his finest Beethoven recordings, refreshing and urgent, without the hint of excessive tension which makes the first movement of the 1977 performance slightly controversial. The refinement of detail never gets in the way of the dramatic urgency, and this is an outstandingly safe central recommendation, with the Berlin Philharmonic on top form. His reading of the Fourth is equally splendid with the dynamic contrasts heavily underlined in the outer movements. In the slow movement there is a lyrical feel to the playing that suggests Schubert. The remastering means that the recording still sounds excellent.

David Zinman and the Tonhalle Orchestra give outstanding performances of both symphonies. The string and wind articulation in both symphonies is phenomenally crisp and clear so that there is no feeling of excessive haste. In the Eroica, even with the exposition repeat observed, the first movement lasts barely 15 minutes, and the Funeral March at a flowing speed still conveys darkly tragic intensity, not least at the close. First-rate recording, with ample bloom on the sound.

With his chamber forces Antonini opts for a very fast speed, generally crisp and well-pointed. This works well in the Eroica, with its fine slow movement offering real contrast. In No. 4 he is less clear in his articulation than most rivals, with the rushed finale sounding fierce and the interpretation offers less lyrical contrast.

Symphonies 3 (Eroica); 6 (Pastoral); 8; Overtures: Coriolan; Creatures of Prometheus; Egmont; Fidelio

🔑 (BB)  EMI Gemini 3 71462-2 (2). LPO, Tennstedt

Tennstedt's outstanding and unerringly paced account of the Eroica derives from a 1991 performance in the Festival Hall, and it has the true hallmark of a live occasion, natural spontaneity and gripping tension throughout. The recording is remarkably spacious and full, and this is one of the really memorable Eroicas on disc. Nos. 6 and 8 plus the Overtures were recorded at Abbey Road between 1984 and 1986. The fresh, alert yet imaginative performance of the Pastoral brings a warmly moulded Andante, a dramatic account of the Storm and a radiant reading of the finale, with beautiful string-playing from the LPO. The Eighth is given an equally enjoyable reading, in which the second-movement Allegretto at a fast speed is made into a Scherzo, while the Minuet is spaciously lyrical. Altogether an unmissable set for Tennstedt's admirers, and a splendid general recommendation.

Symphonies 3 (Eroica); 8

 Sony SACD 88697 00655-2. Deutsche Kammerphilharmonie, Bremen, Paavo Järvi

Järvi's is by no means a conventional view of the Eroica, but it is a very enjoyable one, taking a fresh look at a familiar work. He plays the first movement very fast, and it skips along all but light-heartedly (exposition repeat included) and he takes the listener along with him irresistibly. Then the Funeral March makes a striking contrast, sombre and intense. But the Minuet prepares the way for the finale which again overflows with high spirits. The Eighth is weightier, but the pacing is nicely judged, though the Allegretto is a genuine scherzando and makes a happy, bouncing contrast. The playing throughout is of the highest quality and the surround sound recording very impressive indeed (with or without the rear speakers).

Symphony 4 B flat, Op. 60

Ⓝ  Testament STB1430. BPO, Karajan – STRAUSS: Ein Heldenleben, Op. 40 ****

Symphony 4

 Orfeo (ADD) C 522 991 B. VPO, Boehm – MAHLER: Lieder eines fahrenden Gesellen; SCHUMANN: Symphony 4 ***

Symphonies 4 in B flat; 5 in C min.; Egmont Overture

() Testament mono SBT1407. Philh. O, Klemperer

A masterly Karajan Fourth recorded at the Royal Festival Hall when the Berlin Philharmonic came to London in April 1985. The performance unfolds with an imposing fluency and logic, and can only be described in superlatives: the Testament sound is similarly impressive. The Heldenleben in the second half of the concert is terrific.

These Klemperer performances come from the celebrated 1957 cycle which received such critical and public acclaim. The late Mosco Carner wrote that 'there were many moments in the Fifth where I thought I was hearing the symphony for the first time'. There were many revelatory qualities about this cycle that did not always distinguish later ones. Classic accounts, in very decent sound, which are self-recommending.

This Orfeo issue vividly portrays the mastery of Karl Boehm in varied repertoire, electrifying from first to last. His account of No. 4 is bitingly intense in the fast movements, with sharply rhythmic attack, and tender and sweet in the spacious slow movement.

Symphonies 4; 6 (pastoral)

🔑 Ⓑ  CfP 575 9862. RLPO, Mackerras

Mackerras adopts consistently fast speeds in both symphonies, except in the slow introduction to No. 4. Crisp, light articulation allows for superb definition from the strings, and Mackerras's subtle rubato ensures that the opening of the Pastoral avoids any feeling of rigidity. With hard sticks used by the timpanist, the Storm has rarely sounded so thrilling, resolving on an ecstatic, glowing finale.

Symphonies 4 & 7

Ⓝ  RCA 88697129 332. Bremen Deutsche CO, Paavo Järvi

With his chamber orchestra based in Bremen Paavo Järvi takes advantage of limited string forces to favour very fast speeds with clean, crisp, well-pointed rhythms, so that only in the finale does the speed makes it sound breathless. Similarly in the first movement of No. 7 the fast speed for the first movement still allows a delightful lilt to develop in the compound time of the main Allegro. The Allegretto flows very freely, and no one could mistake this for an Andante, while the remaining movements are similarly fast with crisp pointing.

Symphonies 4; 8

🔑 Ⓑ  LSO 0087. LSO, Haitink

This coupling of Nos. 4 and 8 continues Bernard Haitink's Beethoven cycle on LSO Live. These are traditional readings which, with their generally brisk speeds, are exceptionally powerful. No one would ever dismiss either work in these performances as in any way lacking in Beethovenian bite. After the refined strings of the slow movement the Scherzo and finale of No. 4 are exceptionally tough in the sharpness of their syncopated rhythms, yet the clarity of the running quavers in the finale add a delightful sparkle. The Eighth has similar power which Haitink builds up wonderfully thrustfully to the climactic recapitulation in the first movement. The second movement is deliciously sprung, and the third-movement Minuet flows easily, leading to an account of the finale with the right element of wildness. Altogether a fine culmination for an outstanding cycle, made the more attractive by its bargain price.

Symphonies 4; 8; Coriolan Overture

🔑 (BB)  Warner Apex 2564 60454-2. Sinfonia Varsovia, Y. Menuhin

On the reissued Apex CD the opening applause has been edited, and the opening of the Fourth Symphony is immediately full of tension, the Allegro joyful and vigorous without being over-driven, and the rapt Adagio played most beautifully. The opening movement of the Eighth brings more joyous spirits and a most elegant second subject. This elegance also pervades the Allegretto, but here Menuhin's pacing is rather too relaxed and there is a lack of rhythmic uplift. However, all is forgiven when the finale erupts with buoyant energy. Again very fine playing, with the widest dynamic range, adds much to the character of the performances, and the spacious yet clear sound-picture is very satisfying.

Symphony 5 (DVD versions)

🔑 * EMI DVD DVA 492843-9. LPO, Stokowski – SCHUBERT: Symphony 8 (Unfinished) * ❁ (with LSO: DEBUSSY: Prélude à l'après midi d'un faune; WAGNER: Die Meistersinger: Overture ; Bonus: DUKAS: L'Apprenti Sorcier, Monteux **)

🔑 * EuroArts DVD 2072118 (with rehearsal of 2nd movt). BPO, Karajan – SCHUMANN: Symphony 4 (with rehearsal) **** ❁

Symphony 5 (Part of The Ramallah Concert) DVD Version (with 'Knowledge is the Beginning' (Documentary))

Ⓝ  Warner DVD 2564 62792-2 (2) West-Eastern Divan O, Barenboim (including: MOZART: Sinfonia concertante in E flat, K.297b; ELGAR: Enigma Variations: Nimrod)

Stokowski's EMI DVD of Beethoven's Fifth is part of one of the very finest of all orchestral concert DVDs and offers an electrifying performance, coupled with a superb Schubert Unfinished, with the LPO in peerless form. In the slow movement the glorious tonal richness of the cellos is unforgettable, while the double basses come into their own in the Scherzo (after an unfortunate but momentary slip from the horns). These are both great performances, caught on the wing with all the advantages of live music-making, and the wide-ranging recording, made in the attractive ambience of Croydon's Fairfield Halls, is worthy of them, as indeed is the visually appealing colour photography. The expansive Wagner overture and beautifully played Debussy Prélude, both featuring the LSO in the London Festival Hall, are fine performances too, but without quite the total memorability of the two main works. As a bonus, the dapper Pierre Monteux directs a lively L'Apprenti Sorcier, with a perfectly judged basic tempo, although here the black-and-white photography and compressed sound are a drawback. But this remains an indispensable DVD, both for Stokowskians and Beethovenians. One soon becomes totally caught up in the communicated tension of the music-making: it really is very like being in the hall itself.

This EuroArts DVD (from 1966) is apparently the only available film of Karajan in rehearsal. In this instance, the exercise is part of his master class for one of his students and concerns the second movement only. One feels sorry for the student, for he is very much upstaged by his mentor, who at one point shows him the subtleties he has missed in the playing of the musicians he is directing. This is illuminating but not as enthralling as the hour-long rehearsal for Schumann's Fourth Symphony which acts as coupling. However, the complete performance of Beethoven's Fifth which follows is visually and musically electrifying in its visceral intensity.

Barenboim's electrifying performances of the Fifth Symphony and Mozart Sinfonia concertante, bringing together young Arab and Israeli musicians, is reviewed below in its CD format. Together with an extraordinarily vivid DVD of the concert itself, held in Ramallah on the occupied West Bank, comes a documentary exploring the problems of getting the players from two different cultures safely to the concert hall and home again afterwards. It also features interviews with the orchestral players, Barenboim, the Palestinian co-founder, Edward Said, plus a film of a visit to Buchenwald. But it is the music-making itself that captures the imagination, with Elgar's Nimrod also creating a 'gulp-in-the throat' element in the performance.

Symphony 5 (CD versions)

🔑 * Warner 2564 621791-2. West-Eastern Divan O, Barenboim (with ELGAR: Nimrod) – MOZART: Sinfonia concertante, K.297b ***

Recorded in Ramallah in August 2005, Barenboim conducts an electrifying performance of Beethoven's Fifth with his brilliantly talented young musicians, Arab and Israeli. Characteristically, he takes an emphatic view of the opening 'Fate knocking on the door' motif, but then launches into the first movement at exhilaratingly high speed. The mystery of the Scherzo (in which the strings play with wonderfully clean articulation in the Trio) leads then to the bold and thrustful account of the finale. Barenboim makes a moving speech afterwards (in English) and rounds the concert off with Elgar's Nimrod, an account joyful rather than valedictory in its nobility at a steady speed, wonderfully warm. That such magnetic, finely detailed performances have stemmed from a single live event makes them all the more remarkable.

Symphony 5 in C min., Op. 67

(BB) ((*)) Naxos mono 8.110879. BPO, Furtwängler – WAGNER: Parsifal: Prelude & Good Friday Music (); FURTWÄNGLER: Symphonic Concerto: Andante ((*))

John Ardoin speaks of Furtwängler's 1937 Fifth Symphony as 'a performance of the greatest brilliance and clarity, with incisive attacks, fewer extremes of dynamics and tempo and, despite its fire and fury, more classically controlled than the earlier Polydor or the second EMI version of 1954'. These Obert-Thorn transfers were previously available in England on the Biddulph label and are of high quality.

Symphony 5; (i) Egmont: Overture & Incidental Music, Op. 84 (complete)

(BB)  Warner Apex 8573 89078-2. NYPO, Masur; (i) with McNair, Quadflieg (narr.)

Masur's rugged NYPO account of the Fifth Symphony is immensely powerful, compelling from the first bar to the last. The reading is given even greater weight by Masur's observing the repeat both of the Scherzo and of the finale's exposition. As if that were not enough, he also provides the finest account of the complete Egmont incidental music in the catalogue, opening with a thrillingly positive account of the Overture, and Sylvia McNair is a highly responsive and rich-voiced soloist. Will Quadflieg speaks his melodrama with dignity (separately banded, in German, untranslated in the notes) before the trumpets anticipate the final exultant paean of victory. The full-bodied sound is ideal for both works, with warm string-tone as well as a vivid overall brilliance and projection.

Symphony 5; Egmont Overture

🔑 ✿ Ⓑ () Dutton mono CDBP 9784. BPO, Nikisch (with WEBER: Overtures: Der Freischütz; Oberon. MOZART: Overture: Nozze di Figaro; LISZT: Hungarian Rhapsody 1; all LSO)

This is a key record if ever there was one – the very first complete recording of a Beethoven symphony and arguably the first complete recording of any symphony. Played by the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra under Arthur Nikisch, it gives the listener a real frisson, listening to a record made nearly a century ago, for it was recorded on 10 November 1913! What is astonishing is that, once the ear has adapted to the cavernous sound quality – recorded acoustically through a horn – one can really listen to and enjoy the performance as a fine interpretation, and from a great conductor who, even in the recording studio directs the music flexibly and spontaneously. Also included are impressive versions of the Egmont Overture and two Weber overtures, both featuring the horns which take so well to the acoustic process. But the technical highlight of the disc is the Liszt Hungarian Rhapsody 1, recorded six months before the symphony, a virtuoso performance from the LSO, in which the orchestral sound has amazingly vivid detail. Of course, all this is thanks to Mike Dutton's miraculous transfers which, apart from freeing up the sound, have removed virtually all the background noise.

Symphonies 5; 6 (pastoral)

 Arte Nova 74321 49695-2. Zürich Tonhalle O., Zinman

David Zinman conducts the Tonhalle Orchestra in unusually direct and incisive readings. The use of Jonathan del Mar's Bärenreiter edition in No. 5 brings a full repeat of the Scherzo and Trio. If in No. 5 Zinman's approach works extremely well, the Pastoral is more problematical. The opening allegro, at a brisk speed, has plenty of energy but not much warmth. The slow movement by contrast is spaciously done, and the Storm is biting rather than atmospheric, with the finale plain, strong and intense, rather than warmly persuasive. The sound is fresh and clean, perhaps a little lacking in weight, although this suits the performances.

Symphonies 5; 7

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ  DG (ADD) SACD 471 630-2; CD 447 400-2. VPO, C. Kleiber

🔑 (BB) () Naxos mono 8.111 248. Philh. O, Klemperer

🔑 Ⓜ () EMI mono/stereo (ADD) 5 67851-2 [576852]. Philh. O, Klemperer

🔑 Ⓑ  CfP 572 849-2. RLPO, Mackerras

In Carlos Kleiber's hands the first movement of the Fifth is electrifying but still has a hushed intensity. The slow movement is tender and delicate, with dynamic contrasts underlined but not exaggerated. In the Scherzo, the horns (like the rest of the VPO) are in superb form; the finale then emerges into pure daylight. In Kleiber's Seventh, symphonic argument never yields to the charm of the dance. Incisively dramatic, his approach relies on sharp dynamic contrasts and thrustful rhythms. A controversial point is that Kleiber, like his father, maintains the pizzicato for the strings on the final phrase of the Allegretto, a curious effect. The latest digital remastering has again greatly improved the sound, especially on SACD.

Klemperer's EMI performances are now coupled together as one of EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century'. Both works have a clarity, immediacy and fidelity of balance that enhance electrifying readings, revealing Klemperer at his best. The Fifth is mono only, the Seventh stereo.

Unless you insist on stereo for the Seventh Symphony, Mark Obert-Thorn's Naxos transfers (using the mono masters for both works) all but upstage the EMI versions, the sound vividly bold and fresh, certainly not sounding dated. The performances are among Klemperer's very finest.

Sir Charles Mackerras and the Royal Liverpool Philharmonic also give revelatory performances of both the Fifth and Seventh. Tempi are on the fast side in all four movements but, thanks to rhythmic control, they never sound hectic. The superb recording is both weighty and atmospheric.

After the inevitable opening applause, Menuhin opens the Fifth unselfconsciously, if not very sharply, immediately setting a brisk tempo for the Allegro, which is played comparatively lightly. The Andante, too, begins with a sense of delicate lyricism, and it is in the finale that the performance explodes into joyful illumination. The Allegro certainly dances along in the first movement of the Seventh, but here the pacing is relatively steady. The Allegretto is deeply eloquent and, as in the Fifth, it is the finale that carries the work to its exhilarating yet weighty conclusion. (Warner Apex 2564 60455-2)

Symphonies 5; 8; Fidelio: Overture

Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 419 051-2. BPO, Karajan

Karajan's 1977 version of the Fifth (419 051-2) is magnificent in every way, tough and urgently incisive, with fast tempi bringing weight as well as excitement. The coupling is an electrically intense performance of the Eighth, plus the Fidelio Overture.

Symphony 6 (Pastoral)

🔑 Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 447 433-2. VPO, Boehm – SCHUBERT: Symphony 5 ***

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.110877. BBC SO, Toscanini (with MOZART: Die Zauberflöte: Overture; ROSSINI: La Scala di seta: Overture; WEBER (arr. BERLIOZ): Invitation to the Dance; BRAHMS: Tragic Overture)

Ⓜ () Cala mono CACD 0545. NBC SO, Stokowski (with Talk: 'Sounds of Nature') – LISZT: Hungarian Rhapsodies 1–3 ()

(*) Testament SBT2 1217 (2) (with rehearsal). BPO, Klemperer – with BACH: Suite 3 in D; MOZART: Symphony 29 **(*)

Symphony 6; Overtures: Coriolan; The Creatures of Prometheus; (i) Egmont: Overture; Incidental Music: Die Trommel gerühret; Freudvoll und leidvoll; Klärchens Tod, Op. 84

🔑 Ⓜ * EMI (ADD) 5 67965-2. Philh. O, Klemperer; (i) with Nilsson

Symphony 6 (Pastoral); Overtures: Coriolan; Fidelio; Leonora 2

Ⓝ Ⓑ  Warner Maestro2564 69367-0 COE, Harnoncourt

(i) Symphony 6 (Pastoral); Overtures: Creatures of Prometheus; (ii) Coriolan; (iii) Fidelio; (i) Leonora 3

For its reissue as one of EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century' Klemperer's outstanding account of the Pastoral has its previous couplings restored, with the Coriolan Overture thrown in for good measure. The extra items act as a prelude to the symphony, with Birgit Nilsson in her prime in the Egmont music, effectively cast in the two simple songs, the first made to sound almost Mahlerian. The recordings have been newly remastered, and the 1957 Kingsway Hall recording now sounds astonishingly vivid, less confined.

Boehm's 1971 version of the Pastoral is as fine as any, a beautiful, unforced reading, one of the best-played and (in its day) one of the best-recorded. It still sounds fresh in its current reissue in DG's 'Originals' series with a Schubert coupling.

There is nothing over-tense about Harnoncourt's Pastoral with the brook flowing freely and perhaps bubbling a little over the stream bed. A most enjoyable performance and the Overtures, recorded live, have plenty of character too, Coriolan powerful in tragic atmosphere, and Fidelio and Leonora 2 (with an impressive trumpet solo) not rushed but with plenty of impetus and exciting codas. Excellent sound too.

The famous Toscanini/BBC performance has often been reissued, and the present compilation and transfer can hold its own with the best. A useful reminder that the Pastoral with the BBC Symphony Orchestra, with its extra dimension of humanity, more than deserves its classic status.

Though Leopold Stokowski's 1954 version of the Pastoral Symphony is among the slowest ever, the performance is magnetic, thanks to the conductor's concentration. Not only that, he draws from what till then was regarded as Toscanini's orchestra not only a reading totally contrasted with that of the Italian maestro, but one in which the sound is totally different too: warm, with a bloom on each instrument. One oddity is that the disc, following the original issue, also contains a brief talk by Stokowski on 'Beethoven and the Sounds of Nature', set against the natural sounds – birdsong, a brook and a storm – not in itself of great interest; but it is good to hear the conductor's distinctive voice.

When in May 1964 Otto Klemperer, aged 79, returned to Berlin to conduct the Berlin Philharmonic after a gap of over 40 years, the climax of the occasion, rapturously received, came with Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony. As the 45-minute rehearsal sequence on the first disc demonstrates, Klemperer was intent on getting the orchestra to produce a distinctive Klemperer sound, making his version fresher, encouraging each soloist to play out individually. The result is fresh and dedicated, rustic and refined. The rehearsal sequence is spoken in German, but the booklet provides a helpful summary in English.

Symphonies 6 (Pastoral); 8

🔑 (BB)  EMI Encore 5 08993 2. LPO, Tennstedt

Tennstedt's fresh, alert and imaginative 1986 performance of the Pastoral comes with an equally enjoyable reading of the Eighth in which the second-movement Allegretto at a fast speed is made into a Scherzo while the Minuet is spaciously treated. In the Pastoral, the slow movement brings a finely moulded performance, a dramatic account of the Storm and a radiant reading of the finale. Well-balanced Abbey Road recording, bright and fresh. A bargain.

Symphony 7 in A, Op. 92 – see also under Missa solemnis, below and Triple Concerto above

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ  Orfeo SACD (Surround Sound Compatible) C 700 051B. Bav. State Op. O, Carlos Kleiber

Symphony 7

Ⓝ (*) Channel Classics CCS SA 25207. Budapest Fest O, Fischer. (With: WEBER: Clarinet Concerto 1: Adagio (soloist Akos Acs); ROSSINI: Italiana in Algeri Overture; WILMS: Symphony 4: Rondo ())

This is the real thing! Carlos Kleiber's (1982) live recording of the Seventh, made in Munich with the Bavarian State Orchestra, that is if anything even more electrifying than his Fifth. The Bavarian orchestra play as if their very lives depended on it: the first movement is riveting enough, with a thrilling coda. But the tension is maintained through the finely graduated and ideally paced Allegretto, with richly expresssive string-playing. The Scherzo is dazzling, but the finale, taken Allegro molto (rather than con brio), carries all before it, generating enormous energy and thrust, and the coda is built to a height of tension not even matched by Toscanini. Yet overall this is a performance that, for all its excitement, has an underlying depth of feeling. The sound has a superbly resonant hall acoustic, and the orchestra is naturally balanced within that ambience; on SACD playback, with the back speakers properly balanced, the feeling of sitting in the hall is uncanny.

Though Ivan Fischer directs his splendid Festival Orchestra in an outstanding version of the Seventh Symphony, crisply pointed at well-chosen speeds, the odd coupling of fragments makes the disc uncompetitive. The fill-ups have been chosen as representing the sort of music that might have been played when Beethoven's Seventh was new.

Symphonies 7; 8

🔑  DG 471 490-2. BPO, Abbado

🔑 (BB) (*) Arte Nova 74321 56341-2. Zürich Tonhalle O, Zinman

Abbado's coupling of Nos. 7 and 8 is more impressive even than his highly praised earlier coupling with the VPO (currently withdrawn). Dynamic contrasts are heightened, and the description 'Little One' of No. 8 is again in no way apt, when the outer movements are so dramatic and the middle two winningly direct, avoiding mere charm while maintaining refinement. Only in the hectic tempo for the finale is there a reservation, when the recording, well balanced in the Philharmonie, obscures the rapid semiquaver articulation. But this remains an outstanding disc.

Zinman's coupling of Nos. 7 and 8 has similar qualities to his earlier, less recommendable coupling of Nos. 5 and 6. That works very well in No. 7, with speeds on the brisk side, which still have rhythmic resilience, notably in the Allegretto. In No. 8 Zinman, like Toscanini, takes a rather fierce view of this most compact of the symphonies, with a clipped manner and a fast speed in the first movement and with little or no charm in the middle movements. With clean, crisp ensemble and vivid recording, the power of the piece is reinforced.

Symphonies 8; (i) 9 (Choral) (with rehearsal of the 9th)

Ⓝ  DG 477 7568 (2) BPO, Karajan; (i) with Janowitz, Rössel-Majdan, Kmentt, Berry, V. Singverein

When recording his 1962 cycle Karajan, in a concentrated series of sessions, kept till the end the biggest challenge of all – the Ninth, and one senses that feeling of a challenge accepted in triumph throughout this incandescent performance. Though the great Adagio has received more intense readings, the hush of pianissimo has never been recorded with greater purity than here, and the electricity of the finale has all the tension of Karajan at his most inspired. The recording still sounds very well, and the sharply dramatic account of the Eighth makes an excellent coupling, together with part of the rehearsal of No. 9.

Symphony 9 in D min. (Choral), Op. 125 (DVD version)

 Euroarts DVD 2072038. Anderson, Walker, König, Rootering, Bav. R. Ch., Berlin R. Ch., Dresden Philharmonic Children's Ch., Bav. RSO, Kirov O, LSO, O. de Paris, NYPO, Bernstein

Even Leonard Bernstein rarely made a recording quite as historic as this, here vividly presented in a television relay seen in 20 countries. At Christmas 1989, just after the Berlin Wall came down, Bernstein devised this unique performance of Beethoven's Ninth in celebration, drawing not just on the Bavarian RSO but on members of orchestras from Russia, Britain, France and the USA, as well as choirs from East and West Germany. Reflecting what had just happened he replaced the word 'Freude', 'Joy', in the Schiller ode set in the choral finale with the word 'Freiheit', 'Freedom', a sentiment which Bernstein thought was originally in Beethoven's mind. The result is a performance of unique tensions, with speeds broader than have become the rule latterly, and with the great Adagio as slow as on any version, wonderfully sustained. The finale, with four excellent soloists, crowns the occasion, received rapturously by the newly united citizens of East and West Germany.

(i) Symphony 9 (Choral). Overture Leonora 3 (DVD Version)

Ⓝ  Medici Arts DVD 2055528 Denoke, Fritz, Meier, Pape, Deutsche State Opera Ch., West-Eastern Divan O, Barenboim

Barenboim and his West–Eastern Divan Orchestra followed their 2005 Ramallah Concert by going to Berlin in August 2006 to record the Choral Symphony live in the Philharmonie. It was certainly an occasion, with Barenboim and his players creating consistent tension throughout, notably so at the bravura close of Leonora 3 and the thrilling final section of the Ninth. The four soloists made an excellent team, and were especially fine in their lyrical quartet, topped by the soprano, Angela Denoke, not long before the exciting acceleration to the work's close. The chorus were predictably first rate. Barenboim's reading was above all spacious, warmly humane in the Adagio, yet the incisiveness of the playing elsewhere prevented any slackness and he created remarkable pianissimo openings to the first and slow movements. Altogether a memorable concert well covered by the cameras, but not quite as electrifying as their earlier account of the Fifth Symphony.

Symphony 9 in D min. (Choral) (CD versions)

🔑 Ⓑ  CfP 575 9882. Rodgers, D. Jones, Bronder, Terfel, RLPO Ch. & O, Mackerras

Ⓝ Ⓜ  LPO LPO 0026. Popp, Murray, Rolfe Johnson, Pape, LPO Ch., LPO, Tennstedt

🔑 (BB)  Arte Nova 74321 65411-2. Ziesak, Remmert, Davislim, Roth, Swiss Chamber Ch., Zürich Tonhalle O, Zinman

🔑 Ⓑ  LSO LSO0092. Robinson, Cargill, Master, Finley, LSO Ch., LSO, Haitink

 BIS SACD 1616. N. Davies, Juntunen, Karneus, Norman, Minnesota Chorale & O, Vänskä

Mackerras conducts the Royal Liverpool Philharmonic in an inspired account of the Ninth, one which has learnt from the lessons of period performance, and, like period specialists, Sir Charles has taken careful note of Beethoven's controversial metronome markings. The recording is outstanding, warm yet transparent and with plenty of body; and the singing in the finale is fine, even if the tenor, Peter Bronder, is on the strenuous side.

Klaus Tennstedt never recorded the Beethoven Ninth commercially which makes this outstanding version, recorded live in October 1992 at the Royal Festival Hall, especially welcome. Terminally ill as he was, a fact widely known, made each of his last concerts into an event, which added to tensions. This concert marked the 60th anniversary of the orchestra's founding, and stands comparison with any rival version in the thrusting intensity of the performance, brisk in the first movement with timpani prominent, lilting in the scherzo (though with no repeats observed), radiant in the slow movement, with the LPO strings at their most mellifluous and violent at the start of the choral finale, leading to an exceptionally intense and well-coordinated sequence of sections, with outstanding soloists and chorus. The sound, though on the dry side has vivid separation.

David Zinman, too, crowns his Beethoven cycle with a magnificent account of the Ninth, using the new Bärenreiter Edition, opting for the fast speeds which have latterly come to be thought authentic, always giving the music the deeper qualities needed and with a sense of hushed dedication in the slow movement, even when taken at a flowing speed. The finale crowns his performance, with the chamber chorus not only fresh and dramatic but deeply dedicated too in the prayerful sections. The soloists are an excellent team of young-sounding singers, and the sound is full and well balanced. On a separate track the last half of the finale is given in an alternative version, with a pause included towards the end, representing Beethoven's first thoughts, later amended.

Haitink tops his LSO Live Beethoven cycle with a superb performance of the Ninth Symphony which from the word go is full of conviction. Choice of tempi is admirable in conveying the drama and epic scope of this work in an unforced yet lively way. The Scherzo is exceptionally well characterized with its sharply pointed rhythms and timpani strokes, and it contrasts superbly with the strikingly beautiful slow movement which follows, with radiant playing from the LSO. With an excellent team of soloists and the London Symphony Chorus on magnificent form, the finale is superb, with Haitink's tempi, as usual, providing a dramatically cumulative effect. The sound for this live performance is amazingly good, considering it was recorded in the hardly ideal Barbican acoustic.

Osmo Vänskä's first movement is incisive and sharp, with textures clean and transparent, while the Scherzo is similarly fast and transparent. The great slow movement is hushed and meditative, with a clear distinction made between the two interweaving variation themes, and with clean attack on the climactic fanfare passages. The choral finale brings more clean and incisive singing from the excellent chorus and soloists, building up powerfully to give the impression of a live occasion. First-rate surround sound – the finest this symphony has received on CD with the chorus particularly clear.

The previously unpublished live recording of Klemperer conducting Beethoven's Ninth on Testament is magnetic from beginning to end. The occasion at the Royal Festival Hall in November 1957 was the very first concert of the newly founded Philharmonia Chorus – the culmination of Klemperer's first Beethoven symphony cycle in London. He followed that up immediately by recording the Ninth in the studio with exactly the same forces; but in all four movements this live performance has an extra bite and intensity at marginally faster speeds. In every way it is preferable to the published EMI studio recording, when even the sound is both warmer and kinder to the voices. (Testament SBT 1177)

Of the three stereo recordings Karajan has made of the Ninth, his 1976 account (477 6325) is the most inspired, above all in the Adagio, where he conveys spiritual intensity at a slower tempo than before. In the finale, the concluding eruption has an animal excitement rarely heard from this highly controlled conductor. The soloists make an excellent team. The sound has fine projection and drama. This 1976 Karajan recording, newly remastered, is also available in a two-CD set (see above) together with the Fifth and Sixth Symphonies.

Though the opening applause is distracting and the first movement is less biting than the rest, the Choral Symphony brings a fitting culmination to Menuhin's cycle, thanks also to the fresh, clear singing of the Lithuanian choir and a young, rather lightweight quartet of soloists. Following the Gardiner thesis, the drum-and-fife sequence in the finale of No. 9 is taken very fast, like a French military march. But with a deeply felt slow movement, this must be counted among the very finest of performances on modern instruments at bargain price. (Warner Apex 2564 60456-2)

With Gardiner there is no mystery in the tremolos at the start of the Ninth, but the movement at its brisk speed builds up inexorably. The slow movement is far faster than usual but still conveys repose. The finale is urgent and dramatic, and the quartet of fresh-voiced soloists is exceptionally strong. An exuberant conclusion confirms this as a clear first choice among period versions. (DG 447 074-2)

As bitingly dramatic as Toscanini in the first movement and electrically intense throughout, Szell directs a magnetic account of the Ninth which demonstrates the glories of the Cleveland Orchestra. The chorus sings with similar knife-edged ensemble, set behind the orchestra. The performance of the Fidelio Overture is electrifying. (Sony 696998995925)

It is thrilling to have such a splendid new transfer of Furtwängler's historic recording, made at the reopening of the Festspielhaus in Bayreuth in 1951. The chorus may not be ideally focused in the background, and the audience noises are the more apparent on CD, but the extra clarity and freshness impressively enhance a reading without parallel. The spacious, lovingly moulded account of the slow movement is among Furtwängler's finest achievements on record and, with an excellent quartet of soloists, the finale crowns a performance fully worthy of reissue among EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century'. (5 66901-2 [566953-2])

Recorded at the Edinburgh Festival on 19 August 1956, Beecham's account of the Ninth suffers inevitably from the dry acoustic of the Usher Hall and the limited mono sound. Beecham takes a relatively direct view of the first two movements, getting a shade faster in the first, with god contrasts in the Scherzo, with the Trio unusually light. The Adagio sections of the slow movement are very slow, but well-sustained, with a warmly expressive, well contrasted Andante at a flexible tempo, with beautifully shaded dynamics and the fanfare passages crisply dramatic. The finale benefits from having first-rate chorus and soloists, even if Sylvia Fisher is rather squally at times. The movement builds to a thrilling climax, though here as elsewhere ensemble is not as crisp as it might have been in a studio performance. Nonetheless, well worth hearing (BBCL 4209).

Wellington's Victory (Battle Symphony), Op. 91

✿ Ⓜ  Mercury (ADD) 475 8508. Cannon & musket fire directed by Gerard C. Stowe, LSO, Dorati (with separate descriptive commentary by Deems Taylor) – TCHAIKOVSKY: 1812, etc. *** ✿

This most famous of all Mercury records was one of the most successful classical LPs of all time, selling some two million copies in the analogue era. Remastered for CD, it sounds even more spectacular than it ever did in its vinyl format, vividly catching Beethoven's musical picture of armies clashing. The presentation, with excellent documentation, now comes as one of Philips's 'Originals'.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Cello Sonatas 1–2, Op. 5/1–2; (i) 3, Op. 69; 4–5, Op. 102/1–2

() EMI DVD mono 492848-9. Rostropovich, Richter (Bonus: MENDELSSOHN: Variations sérieuses (for piano) ())

The Rostropovich/Richter DVD was recorded at the Edinburgh Festival in 1964 at a mammoth Usher Hall recital, which, incidentally, began at midnight! Now we can see as well as hear the extraordinary rapport between the two and the intensity of their expressive dialogue. Both artists were in their prime, and Richter never subsequently played these sonatas again. The camerawork is a model of discretion and there is a splendid bonus in the form of a studio recording of the Mendelssohn Variations sérieuses, which Richter made in the late 1950s in Moscow. Here the camerawork is pretty austere (we stay on one angle for a long time) but none the worse for that. In any event, his playing is quite electrifying.

Cello Sonatas 1–5; 7 Variations on 'Bei Männern, welche Liebe fühlen', WoO 46; 12 Variations on 'Ein Mädchen oder Weibchen', Op. 66 (both from Mozart's Die Zauberflöte); 12 Variations on Handel's 'See the conqu'ring hero comes' (from Judas Maccabaeus), WoO45

🔑 * Ph. 475 379-2 (2). Adrian & Alfred Brendel

This new set of Beethoven's Cello Sonatas (and Variations) is among the finest ever on disc and is now a clear first choice. Not only is Adrian Brendel a marvellous artist in his own right, with a clean, pure tone and naturally musical phrasing, but he also inspires his father to spontaneously imaginative playing of the kind that has sometimes eluded him in the recording studio. There are countless details in Alfred Brendel's playing that reveal how thoughtful is his approach to the piano part, which his son matches at every turn. The recording is out of Philips's top drawer, admirably truthful and naturally balanced.

(i) Cello Sonatas 1–5; (ii) 7 Variations on 'Bei Männern'; 12 Variations on 'Ein Mädchen'; 12 Variations on 'See the conqu'ring hero comes', WoO 45

🔑 Ⓑ * Ph. (ADD) Duo 442 565-2 (2). (i) Rostropovich, Richter; (ii) Gendron, Françaix

🔑 Ⓑ  DG (ADD) 477 6266 (2). Fournier, Gulda

Made in the early 1960s, the Philips performances by Mstislav Rostropovich and Sviatoslav Richter, two of the instrumental giants of the day, have also withstood the test of time astonishingly well and sound remarkably fresh in this transfer. The performances of the Variations by Maurice Gendron and Jean Françaix have an engagingly light touch and are beautifully recorded.

The masterly performances of Fournier and Gulda date from 1959, but in the CD transfer the realism is remarkable enough to convince you, with closed eyes, that the bow is really touching the strings only a few feet away, and the piano sounds equally real and beautifully balanced with the cello. Fournier's playing is glorious throughout, with the great D major Sonata (5) given a wonderfully rounded performance in which Gulda is more than a mere partner. In the hands of these artists the Variations also assume a much greater significance than one might have supposed possible.

The Harrell–Ashkenazy mid-1980s performances are very fine too: they are unfailingly sensitive and alert, well thought out and yet seemingly spontaneous, with superb digital recording. The inclusion in this Double Decca issue of the Horn Sonata, equally recommendable (from 1974), makes this particularly attractive for those who regard sound-quality to be of importance. (Decca 466 733-2)

The set of performances by Jacqueline du Pré with Daniel Barenboim was recorded live for the BBC during the Edinburgh Festival of 1970. The playing may not have the final polish of a studio-made version, but the concentration and intensity of the playing are wonderfully caught. (EMI Gemini 5 86242-2)

Fournier and Kempff also recorded their cycle of the sonatas at live festival performances. These fine artists were inspired by the occasion to produce unexaggeratedly expressive playing and to give performances which are marked by their light, clear textures and rippling scale-work, even in the slow introductions, taken relatively fast. In this remastering as a DG Double, the sound is beautifully clear. (453 013-2)

Clarinet Trio in B flat, Op. 11

ⒷⒷ  EMI Encore 3 55674-2. de Peyer, du Pré, Barenboim – BRAHMS: Clarinet Sonatas 1–2 ***

Beethoven's delightful Clarinet Trio is most beautifully played by this finely balanced trio, with Jacqueline du Pré coming into her own in her gently played solo in the slow movement. The 1970 Abbey Road recording is fresh and clear, with an attractive ambience. The coupling with Brahms is surely ideal. A real bargain.

(i) Clarinet Trio, Op. 11; (ii) Septet, Op. 20

Ⓝ 🔑 Ⓑ * Virgin 50999 522126 2 8 (i) Collins, Iona Brown, van Kampen; (ii) Nash Ens

A wholly delightful coupling, recorded in 1989, which has hitherto eluded us, of two of Beethoven's most engaging early chamber works. With Michael Collins in the lead, and with fine support from Iona Brown and Christopher van Kampen, the Clarinet Trio is wonderfully spirited and infectious, and the Septet is hardly less winning, with all six movements as fresh as new paint. The Theme and Variations, Scherzo and vivacious finale are particularly delectable in the latter work and both slow movements are memorable. The recording is absolutely first class, and this is truly a key recording in the Beethoven discography.

Clarinet Trio, Op. 11; Serenade for Flute, Violin & Viola, Op. 25; Piano and Wind Quintet, Op. 16

 Hyp. CDA 67526. Gaudier Ens.

Ideal chamber music-making from this distinguished group, with particularly enjoyable playing from their pianist, Susan Tomes. The collection is generous, and those wanting these attractive pieces need not hesitate. The recording quality, as one would expect from Simon Eadon and Andrew Keener, is very natural and lifelike.

Horn Sonata in F, Op. 17

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.557471. Tomboeck, Inui – BRAHMS: Horn Trio; SCHUBERT: Auf dem Strom; SCHUMANN: Adagio and Allegro in A flat ***

 HM HMC 90 9250. Müller, Torbianelli – DANZI; RIES: Horn Sonatas ***

The distinctively fruity sound of the Vienna horn is wonderfully caught on the superb Naxos disc with its programme perfectly designed to show off the instrument. Wolfgang Tomboeck has been first horn in the Vienna Philharmonic since 1980, and here in all four works he demonstrates what a fine artist he is. The Beethoven Horn Sonata brings a stylish performance, crisp in attack, yet warm too, with the brief central Adagio given the gravity of a funeral march before the sparkling finale. The piano sound is relatively lightweight, which Madoka Inui with her clean articulation turns to advantage in suggesting the sound of a fortepiano.

As Thomas Müller shows here, Beethoven's very classical Horn Sonata gains much character from a period instrument with stopped notes. How striking is the opening theme of the first movement (after the bold fanfare) played on the hand horn used here, with the stopped note undisguised at the end of the first phrase. Eduardo Torbianelli's fortepiano, too, makes a naturally supportive partnership. Müller plays with great spirit, and then in the brief Poco Adagio he achieves a wan, gentle melancholy, so that the joy of the finale is the more infectious. (Again the ear soon notices the stopped notes.) This is coupled with two other sonatas, and that by Danzi pays its respects to the Beethoven model.

Piano Trios 1–12 (complete); Septet, Op. 20 (arr. for Piano Trio)

Ⓝ 🔑  Phoenix Edition 122 (4). Haydn Trio Eisenstadt

Pride of place in this collection must go to the collected edition of all of Beethoven's music for Piano Trio from the Haydn Trio Eisenstadt. It is particularly valuable to have not just the six regular trios with opus numbers and the different variations and the shorter works without opus numbers, but such a rarity as Beethoven's own arrangement of his popular Septet Op. 20. That last is remarkably successful (even though it lacks the tonal variety of the original), particularly when it is played here with such sparkle by the Haydn Trio Eisenstadt.

Witty pointing of rhythm marks all the playing of this fine Austrian Trio, though some may find the balance favouring the piano emphasizes the way that the pianist, Harald Kosik is plainly the leader of the ensemble. But sparkle marks all the performances, as in both the Scherzo and the Finale of the Archduke Trio, the greatest work of the cycle, even if the Ghost Trio is a close rival. One omission is the piano trio transcription of the second symphony, though that would have been a much more questionable choice than the arrangement of the Septet.

Piano Trios: 1–3, Op. 1/1–3; 7 (Archduke); 9 (Allegretto in E flat), WoO39; 10 (Variations in E flat), Op. 44; 12 (Allegretto in E flat), Hess 48

(BB)  EMI (ADD) Gemini 3 50798-2 (2). Barenboim, Zukerman, du Pré

(i) Piano Trios: 4 in D (Ghost); 5 in E flat, Op. 70/1–2; 8 in E flat, WoO38; 11 (Variations on 'Ich bin der Schneider Kakadu'), Op. 121a; (ii) Cello Sonatas 3 in A, Op. 69; 5 in D, Op. 102/2

(BB)  EMI (ADD) Gemini 3 50807-2 (2). (i) Barenboim, Zukerman, du Pré; (ii) du Pré, Kovacevich

The 1970 Barenboim/Zukerman/du Pré set is economically fitted here on to a pair of super-bargain Gemini Doubles, together with the two Cello Sonatas Barenboim and du Pré recorded earlier, in 1966, music-making of rare concentration, spontaneity and warmth. Any tendency to self-indulgence plus a certain leaning towards romantic expressiveness, is counterbalanced by their urgency and intensity, and the Innigkeit of some of the slow movments, especially in the Ghost Trio, Opus 70, No. 1, has the depth of really mature artistry, extraordinary in the work of musicians so young at the time of the recordings. The excellent analogue recording has been newly remastered on CD, and the players are given a natural presence, with plenty of depth to the sound and a convincing hall ambience.

The alternative EMI recordings of the Cello Sonatas come from the year after Jacqueline had made her definitive recording of the Elgar Cello Concerto. Du Pré's tone ranges from full-blooded fortissimo to the mere whisper of a half-tone, and these artists allow the most free range of expressive rubato. With excellent recording, well transferred, these performances make a welcome return to the catalogue, sounding crisp and present on CD, without loss of body and warmth.

Piano Trios 1 in E flat, Op. 1/1; 2 in G, Op. 1/2; 3 in E flat, WoO 38 (🔑  Hyp. CDA 67393)

Piano Trios: 3, Op. 1/3; 4 in B flat, Op. 11; 10 (Variations in E flat), Op. 44. Theme & Variations on 'Pria ch'io l'impegno' from Weigl's 'L'amor marinaro' (🔑  Hyp. CDA 67466)

Piano Trios 5 (Ghost) in D, Op. 70/1; 6 in E flat, Op. 70/2; Allegretto in B flat, WoO 39 (🔑  Hyp. CDA 67327)

Piano Trios 7 in B flat (Archduke), Op. 97; 12 (Allegretto in E flat, Hess 48); Variations on 'Ich bin der Schneider Kakadu', Op. 121a (🔑  Hyp. CDA 67369)

The performances by the Florestan Trio bring an admirable lightness of touch and inner vitality throughout. The playing of Susan Tomes is particularly felicitous, and the Hyperion recording does it full justice. The account of the two Op. 70 trios is outstanding in every way. The playing is quite gripping and masterly, and the sound is very vivid and well balanced. Their commanding, dramatically conceived account of the Archduke is no less superb. The variations make a neat encore, and the set as a whole can be strongly recommended as a key recommendation in this repertoire.

Piano Trios 1–2, Op. 1/1–2 ( MDG 303 1051-2. Trio Parnassus)

Piano Trios 3, Op. 1/3; 10 (14 Variations in E flat), Op. 44; 11 (Variations on 'Ich bin der Schneider Kakadu'), Op. 121a ( MDG 303 1052-2)

Piano Trios 5 (Ghost); 6, Op. 70/1–2 ( MDG 303 1053-2)

The Trio Parnassus use modern instruments, but their spiritedly vibrant style, with bold accents, is every bit a match for their competitors. It is balanced by a warm legato from the excellent pianist (Chia Chou) in slow movements, and the finale of Op. 1/2 has exhilarating dynamism. The recording is vividly realistic. The remaining trios, plus the Kakadu and Op. 44 Variations, are hardly less satisfying. Indeed, they can be thought of as among the best of the recent versions of these pieces. The playing is unfailingly musical, and the recordings are fresh and vivid.

Piano Trio 3, Op 1/3

Ⓝ (*) DUX 0626. Trio Cracovia – BRAHMS: Piano Trio Op. 101 (*); RACHMANINOV: Piano Trio in G min, (Elégiaque) **(*)

The disc from the Trio Cracovia brings together two well-known works alongside Beethoven's Trio Op. 1/3. It is a slight disappointment that these performances suffer from the relative weakness of the solo cello, though they still might be considered by those who fancy the coupling.

Piano Trios 4, Op. 11; 5 (Ghost); 7 (Archduke)

Ⓜ  Ph. (ADD) 464 683-2. Beaux Arts Trio

From the Beaux Arts Trio the Archduke is a particularly successful transfer, with an attractive bloom on the sound, yet detail is clear. This performance has more spontaneity than their later version and the overall feeling is of lightness and grace. The Op. 11 Trio is usually heard in its clarinet version. The Beaux Arts players are again on excellent form here and they project the drama and intensity of the Ghost Trio to brilliant effect.

Piano Trio 5 (Ghost), Op.70/1

Ⓝ (*) RTE Lyric CD 116. Ens Avalon – BAX: Piano Trio in B flat; BERNSTEIN: Piano Trio Op. 2 **(*)

The Ghost Trio is offered in a competitive version from the Ensemble Avalon, an Irish group with members drawn from both north and south of Ireland. One criticism is that the violin and cello play with rather excessive portamento, though it remains an enjoyable performance.

Piano Trios 5 (Ghost); 6; 7 (Archduke); 8 in E flat, WoO 38; 10 (Variations in E flat), Op. 44; 12 (Allegretto in E flat), Hess 48

🔑 (BB)  EMI Gemini (DDD/ADD) 5 85496-2 (2). Ashkenazy, Perlman, Harrell

This generous bargain-priced EMI Gemini compilation (which includes both the Archduke and Ghost Trios) is drawn from the complete set by these artists, which was made over a period of five years between 1979 and 1984. The playing is unfailingly perceptive and full of those musical insights that make one want to return to the set. The recording is a shade dry but very present and realistic.

Piano & Wind Quintet in E flat, Op. 16

🔑  BIS CD 1552. Hough, BPO Wind Quintet – MOZART: Piano & Wind Quintet; Adagio & Rondo ***

🔑  CBC MCVD 1137. Kuerti, Campbell, Mason, Sommerville, McKay – MOZART; WITT: Quintets ***

🔑 ✿ () Testament mono SBT 1091. Gieseking, Philh. Wind Ens. – MOZART: Quintet, etc. () ✿

Stephen Hough joins members of the Berlin Philharmonic Wind Ensemble to give a totally captivating account of this light-hearted work. They open fairly robustly, but soon take off into the allegro, and in the Andante Hough creates an expressive cantabile, subtly varied in dynamic, to contrast with the sparkling finale. First-class sound makes this a first choice for this attractive coupling.

A totally winning performance too from this group of leading Canadian wind soloists, appropriately led by the Viennese-born pianist Anton Kuerti. They play together with total rapport and their performance has great freshness and all the spontaneity of live music-making. The finale is particularly infectious. The recording has great vividness and realism – indeed, it is in the demonstration bracket.

Ideal chamber music-making in this version by Walter Gieseking and members of the Philharmonia Wind (Dennis Brain, Sidney Sutcliffe, Bernard Walton and Cecil James). Recorded in 1955, it has few rivals in tonal blend and perfection of balance and ensemble. The mono sound comes up wonderfully fresh in this Testament transfer.

Septet in E flat, Op. 20; Octet for Wind in E flat, Op. 103

(BB)  EMI Gemini (ADD) 3 50864-2 (2). Melos Ens. of London – MENDELSSOHN: Octet ; SCHUBERT: Octet ***

(i) Septet, Op. 20; (ii) Wind Sextet in E flat, Op. 81b

🔑 (BB)  Helios CDH 55189. Gaudier Ens.

The young members of the Gaudier Ensemble give an exuberant performance, bringing the Septet home as one of the young Beethoven's most joyfully carefree inspirations. The rarer Sextet for two horns and string quartet makes a generous coupling. Excellent sound, with the wind well forward. A superb bargain.

The Melos Ensemble give a reading of the Septet that brims with life and energy, wonderfully idiomatic and spontaneous-sounding, and much the same comments apply to the companion work for wind instruments.

An enchanting version of the evergreen Septet from the Vienna Octet: it oozes Viennese charm but is without any cloying sentimentality. The 1956 recording is astonishingly warm and vivid (a tribute to whoever made this transfer, as well as to the original Decca engineers). Delightful Spohr coupling, too. (Testament SBT 1261)

Serenade in D for Flute, Violin and Viola, Op. 25

 Avie AV 2108. Lisa & Pavlo Beznosiuk, Dunn – MOZART: Flute Quartets ***

The light and charming combination of flute, violin and viola inspired the youthful Beethoven to write in an unexpectedly carefree and undemanding way. The sequence of tuneful, unpretentious movements reminds one of Mozart's own music for flute, so the couplings on this Avie CD are entirely apt. The stylish, light-textured period-instrument performances from the Beznosiuk group are admirable and are beautifully recorded.

STRING QUARTETS

String Quartets (DVD versions)

String Quartets: 1, 3 & 4, Op. 18/1, 3 & 4; 10 (Harp), Op. 74; 13, Op. 130; 14, Op. 131

 EMI DVD 3 38567-9 (2). Alban Berg Qt

String Quartets: 2, Op. 18/2; 7 (Rasumovsky), Op. 59/1; 11, Op. 95; 12, Op. 127; 15, Op. 132

 EMI DVD 3 38580-9 (2). Alban Berg Qt

String Quartets: 5–6, Op. 18/5–6; 8–9 (Rasumovsky), Op. 59/2–3; 16, Op. 135; Grosse Fuge, Op. 133

 EMI DVD 3 38592-9 (2). Alban Berg Qt

Anyone who has ever felt that the Alban Berg Quartet's performances of Beethoven are too rigid or lack warmth should watch these fascinating DVDs. These are performances that bring out the many varied aspects of Beethoven, the joy of the early quartets and the power of the middle-period works, as well as the depth and weight of the last-period works. Where too often on disc this quartet has seemed to slide over the profundities, here they give rapt, dedicated performances, with hushed intensity a necessary element, and fine shading of dynamic as evident as the brilliance and precision of the ensemble. Some may find their dynamics exaggerated and the pianissimos do occasionally strike one as a little self-conscious. But there is far more to admire than to cavil at, and the cycle offers much musical satisfaction. Watching and listening to them, for the most part this is music-making on such a high level of accomplishment that criticism is muted. Visually, the direction is impeccable, completely unobtrusive and musical.

String Quartets (CD versions)

String Quartets 1–16; Grosse Fugue; String Quintets & Fragments

Ⓝ 🔑 * Warner 2564 6947 1-3 (10). Endellion Qt

This collected edition of Beethoven's quartets and string quintets, celebrating the Endellion Quartet's 30th anniversary, includes not just the regular Beethoven String Quartets but variants as well as the String Quintets and Fragments. The first version of Opus 18 No. 1 for example, is markedly different from the text we know. It is fascinating here to have both versions on the first of the ten discs, with Misha Donat's authoritative notes analysing the principal differences. Opus 59 No. 2 draws from the Endellions the most refined, dedicated playing in the slow movement, one of Beethoven's most visionary, on a par with the late Quartets. It is also good to have Beethoven's own neat arrangement of the Piano Sonata, Opus 14 No. 1. As for the fragments, none is specially valuable, but they are all worth hearing, as are the String Quintets Opp. 4 & 29 as well as two Fugues for string quintet.

At every point the Endellions demonstrate their extra maturity, and so they do in the remaining quartets, including the late masterpieces, in which they make impeccable choices over tempos, and consistently play with inner depth and dedication, bringing out the visionary qualities, not least in daring to employ the widest dynamic range, with whispered pianissimos as intense as the biting fortissimos. The recordings are a model of balance and refinement.

String Quartets 1–16; Grosse Fuge, Op. 133

🔑 Ⓜ  Valois (ADD) V 4400 (8). Végh Qt

🔑 Ⓑ  Ph. (ADD) 454 062-2 (10). Italian Qt

For long a first choice, the Végh performances, recorded in the mid-1970s, have rightly been acclaimed for their expressive depth. That intonation is not always immaculate matters little in relation to the wisdom and experience conveyed. There is no cultivation of surface polish, though there is both elegance and finesse. The CD transfers have a far cleaner image than the original LPs. The eight discs are not now available separately.

The Italian performances, superbly stylish, are now offered in a bargain box of unbeatable value. The Végh versions, in some ways even finer, are at mid-price, but on eight discs instead of ten, so the difference in cost is relatively marginal. The latest Philips remastering is most impressive, with the sound much smoother than before and very naturally balanced. In the Rasumovsky Quartets in particular, their tempi are perfectly judged and every phrase is sensitively shaped, while the late quartets receive satisfyingly thoughtful and searching interpretations.

The great merit in the earlier Lindsay recordings of Beethoven lies in the natural expressiveness of their playing, most strikingly in slow movements, which brings a hushed inner quality too rarely caught on record. The sense of spontaneity necessarily brings the obverse quality: these performances are not as precise as those in the finest rival sets; but there are few Beethoven quartet recordings that so convincingly bring out the humanity of the writing, its power to communicate. They regularly find tempi that feel completely right, conveying both the letter and the spirit of the music in rich, strong characterization. These are among the very finest versions to have been made in recent years and, at budget price, are excellent value. (ASV Resonance RSB801)

The Alban Berg Quartet's earlier performances are characterized by assured and alert playing, a finely blended tone and excellent attack; they generally favour brisk tempi in the first movements, which they dispatch with exemplary polish and accuracy of intonation. Occasionally a tendency to exaggerate dynamic extremes (Op. 59/3, for example) is evident and sounds self-conscious, but by any standards this is superb quartet playing. Other versions have displayed greater depth of feeling in this repertoire – including their own live performance cycle on the same label – but this well-packaged, beautifully recorded set (from 1978–83) at bargain price is well worth considering. (EMI 5 73606-2)

The Amadeus Quartet are at their very best in the Op. 18 Quartets, where their mastery and polish are heard to excellent advantage. The smooth and beautifully balanced DG recording from the early 1960s disguises its age. In the middle-period and late quartets, their richly blended tone and refinement of balance are always in evidence and are caught equally well by the DG engineers, but their playing does not always penetrate very far beneath the surface, particularly in the late quartets. The set is now offered at bargain price in DG's Collector's Edition and is well documented. (DG 463143-2)

String Quartets 1–6, Op. 18/1–6; Op. 14/1 (arr. Beethoven); (i) String Quintet

🔑  ASV CDDCA 1111 (1–3); CDDCA 1112 (4–5 & Op. 14); CDDCA 1113 (6 & Quintet). Lindsay Qt; (i) with L. Williams

The Lindsay Quartet set out on a new recorded cycle of the Beethoven string quartets after an interval of almost 20 years. Already in the Op. 18 Quartets the trends are clear, all encouraging. Consistently throughout these performances, speeds are a fraction faster than before, in Scherzos often markedly so, with interpretations tauter and more positive, as well as more spontaneous sounding. In the two key Adagios which point forward to the visionary qualities of the late quartets – the D minor slow movement of No. 1 in F and the deeply mysterious Adagio, La Malinconia, at the start of the finale of No. 6 – the speeds, as in the rest, are a fraction more flowing than before, but the hushed intensity is even greater, with no hint of heaviness inappropriate to these early works.

String Quartets 1–6, Op. 18/1–6

Ⓝ 🔑 * HM HMU 90 7436/7 Tokyo Qt.

 Decca 470 848-2 (2). Takács Qt

Fine as their competitors are, the new set of Opus 18 by the Tokyo Quartet is finer still. Tempi are consistently apt, internal balance and phrasing cannot be faulted, and the overall combination of freshness and spontaneity is irresistible.

The Takács Quartet in their ongoing Beethoven cycle maintain the high standards they have achieved in earlier releases, their command of nuance, sensitive phrasing and musical architecture. Their sound musical intelligence and freshness of approach are always in evidence, and they are given splendid recorded sound.

The Talich have great directness of approach and a simplicity of manner which is disarming. They are recorded clearly, if somewhat dryly. It has to be said that this set won a Grand Prix du Disque and a Diapason d'Or. Excellent value. (Calliope CAL 3633/4)

String Quartets 1–6, Op. 18/1–6

 Chan. 10381 (3). Borodin Qt

String Quartets 11, Op. 95; 14, Op. 131, Grosse Fuge, Op. 133

 Chan. 10268. Borodin Qt

Although the Borodins included Op. 95 in one of their first concerts, they have never essayed a complete Beethoven cycle before now. Theirs is as deeply felt as any; their survey can be recommended alongside the very finest of recent years, such as the Takács. Recorded in the Grand Hall of the Moscow Conservatory, the sound is satisfyingly warm and present. Most distinguished performances.

String Quartets 1 in F, Op. 18/1; 11 in F min., Op. 95; 16 in F, Op. 135; Satz (Allegretto) in B min., WoO

 Warner 2564 62161-2. Endellion Qt

String Quartets 3 in D, Op. 18/3; 15 in A min., Op. 132

 Warner 2564 62196-2. Endellion Qt

The Endellion Quartet is the latest ensemble to embark on a complete cycle, based on the new Henle edition. This newcomer, as Jonathan del Mar observes in a note, embodies some newer discoveries, based on the original first edition parts and a set of the parts in manuscript which came to light in the 1980s with some corrections in Beethoven's hand. The autograph manuscript of Opus 132 survives in the Staatsbibliothek zu Berlin, and the 2002 edition includes a number of corrections, two actually affecting the melodic line. The Endellions are, as always, selfless interpreters, unconcerned with anything other than presenting the music as expertly and imaginatively as possible. They are recorded in the excellent acoustic of Potton Hall, Ipswich, and are truthfully balanced by Tony Faulkner.

String Quartets 1, Op. 18/1; 11, Op. 95; 16, Op. 135

❁ (BB) * Dutton mono CDBP 9765. Busch Qt

The Busch recordings come from 1932–3 and were made at the then new Abbey Road Studios. To say that they have never been equalled – let alone surpassed – is no exaggeration and no serious collector of these great works should be without the Busch. Dutton makes them sound better than ever.

String Quartets 4 in C min., Op. 18/4; 7 in F (Rasumovsky), Op. 59/1; 14 in C sharp min. 131 (DVD Versions)

Ⓝ (*) Medici DVD 2072348. Juilliard Qt

Polished and committed playing of a quartet drawn from each period of Beethoven's life. The performances were recorded and filmed in 1975 at a particularly beautiful venue, the Bibliotheksaal, Polling in Bavaria. Although the camera work, directed by Hugo Käch is admirably discreet the colours are a little faded and the focus wanting in sharpness.

String Quartets Nos. 4, Op. 18; 8, Op. 59/2 (Razumovsky No.2)

Ⓝ (*) Virgin 00946 3802 6822. Artemis Qt

Polished as the playing of the Artemis is, in Op. 59/2, they are relatively earthbound, and they cannot match, for instance, the Endellions in Op. 18/4.

String Quartets 7–9 (Rasumovsky), Op. 59/1–3; 10 in E flat (Harp), Op. 74

🔑  Decca 470 847-2 (2). Takács Qt

These are sober and perceptive readings, which make one think anew about this great music. The slow movement of the E minor, Op. 59, No. 2, taken more slowly than usual, is searching, and generally they find the right tempi to enable the music to speak effortlessly. Technically impeccable playing, well thought through and scrupulously attentive to detail (with all repeats made), this is a set to rank alongside the very best, and the recording is of Decca's finest quality.

String Quartets 7–9 (Rasumovsky), Op. 59/1–3; 10 (Harp), Op. 74; 11, Op. 95

Ⓜ  Ph. (ADD) 475 8503 (3). Italian Qt

The remastered Italian set (now on Originals) still sounds well: there is only a slight thinness on top to betray their age (the early 1970s), with no lack of body and warmth. Superb playing is marked by purity of intonation, perfectly blended tone and immaculate attack and ensemble. With tempi that are perfectly judged and every phrase sensitively shaped, these performances remain a strong recommendation at mid price.

String Quartets 7 in F (Rasumovsky); 11, Op. 95 (Naxos 8.554181); String Quartets 8, Op. 59/2; 10 (Harp), Op. 74 (Naxos 8.550562); String Quartets 9, Op. 59/3; 12, Op. 127 (Naxos 8.550563); String Quartet 13, Op. 130; Grosse Fuge (Naxos 8.556593); String Quartets 14, Op. 131; 16, Op. 135 (Naxos 8.556594); String Quartets 15, Op. 132; in F (arr. of Piano sonata, Op. 14/1) (Naxos 8.556592)

(BB)  Kodály Qt

The Kodály have the benefit of very good recorded sound, with a particularly good balance, and the actual playing is very fine, with judiciously chosen tempi and expertly moulded phrasing. Both the Rasumovsky Quartets here are very good indeed: thoughtful, decently paced and thoroughly musical accounts, which will give satisfaction. No one getting any of these discs is likely to be disappointed, although they are not a first choice in the bargain range.

String Quartets 8 (Rasumovsky); 10 (Harp)

🔑  ASV CDDCA 1115. Lindsay Qt

This fifth disc in the new Lindsay series follows the pattern of earlier issues in the extra sharpness of the characterization as well as the extra warmth, compared with the fine performances in their earlier Beethoven cycle for ASV. So in the Rasumovsky No. 2 the three fast movements are all noticeably faster and sharper than before, while the sublime Molto adagio has an inner hush beyond what was conveyed in the earlier version. The contrast in the Harp Quartet is different in that the first two movements are this time lighter in mood, and the Adagio treated songfully at a markedly more flowing speed. Ensemble is not always as immaculate as it was before, but the vital qualities easily outweigh any reservations. Excellent sound.

String Quartets 8; 10–16; Grosse Fuge

 Chan. 10191 (8 & 10); Chan. 10269 (11, 14 & Grosse Fuge); Chan. 10292 (12–13); Chan. 10304 (15–16). Borodin Qt (available separately)

The Borodin Quartet's Beethoven cycle has magisterial authority. They shape each movement with exemplary feeling and there is a pleasing naturalness of phrasing. They bring us closer to the soul of this music than do many rivals and they are accorded first-rate sound. These accounts can rank along with the finest.

String Quartets 9 in C, Op. 59/3 (Rasumovsky); 14 in C sharp min., Op. 131

Ⓑ () Dutton CDBP 9773. Busch Qt

Whichever versions of these quartets you may have, these accounts from the 1930s are mandatory listening. Neither Op. 59, No. 3 nor the C sharp minor quartet, Op. 131, has ever been played better; the Busch bring a depth to their music-making which has never been surpassed and Dutton lets us hear them in better sound than ever before.

String Quartets 11, Op. 95; 12 in E flat, Op. 127

🔑 * ASV CD DCA 1116. Lindsay Qt

In their sixth disc the Lindsays launch into their biggest challenge yet with the first of the last-period quartets, the Op. 127 Quartet. The big contrast in this new version is that the heavenly slow movement flows much more freely than it did before, conveying an even deeper concentration, with subtler shading and sharper contrasts. Also, the more refined recording brings cleaner textures in a reading that is more detailed and sharply characterized throughout. In the Op. 95 Quartet, more compact than any, the Lindsay's speeds in all four movements are faster than before, giving an extra bite to the arguments, recognizing this as a halfway house towards the quirky sublimity of the last-period work.

String Quartets 11–16; Grosse Fuge

🔑  Decca 470 849-2 (3). Takács Qt

The Takács have the advantage of working with the new Henle edition by Ernst-Günter Heinemann and Rainer Cadenbach, and their leader Edward Dusinberre's sleeve-note draws attention to some of the detailed differences. But apart from the letter of the score, it is the spirit they project. The Decca recording, made at St George's, Bristol, is first class.

String Quartets 12–16; Grosse Fuge, Op. 133

Ⓜ () EMI mono 5 09655-2 (3). Busch Qt

 EMI 5 86405-2 Alban Berg Qt

Ⓜ  Ph. (ADD) 475 8685 (3). Italian Qt

An indispensable set: the Busch are to the Beethoven Quartets what Schnabel is to the piano sonatas. The musical insight of these players, their wisdom, humanity and total absorption in Beethoven's art have never been surpassed and only occasionally matched. These performances are so superb that, despite their sonic limitations, it is possible to recommend them to young, non-specialist collectors. There are portamenti at times that were in general currency in the 1930s but which are unfashionable now, but few will find them irksome. No. 11 dates from 1932, 12 and 14 from 1936, and 16 from 1933, all produced by Fred Gaisberg at Abbey Road. Nos. 13 and the Grosse Fuge were recorded by Sony in New York in 1941: the sound is mellower, but less sharply defined. The present transfers were made at Abbey Road by Andrew Walter in 2008 and are very truthful, if not as impressive as Dutton's (see above). However, the set rightly takes its place among EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century'.

On balance, these Alban Berg performances, seeking to ensure the greater intensity and spontaneity generated by the presence of an audience, are freer and more vital than those on the earlier set, but the differences are small.

The merits of the Italian Quartet's performances are very considerable. The remastered sound is very satisfying.

The renowned (1957) Hollywood set is one of the classic sets. Technically, the Hollywood players are superior and their virtuosity in the Grosse Fuge has to be heard to be believed. But there is no playing to the gallery at any time: this is Beethoven perfectly played without any thought of display. The recordings are mono but have plenty of presence. (Testament SBT 3082)

String Quartet 13, Op. 130; Grosse Fuge, Op. 133

🔑 * ASV CDDCA 1117. Lindsay Qt

The Lindsays play not just as if they have lived a whole lifetime in the presence of Op. 130 but as if they are discovering it for the first time. The opening movement is perfectly paced – the Adagio opening having all the space that it needs – and the Allegro unfolding at the tempo giusto. Indeed this is a performance that soon has you forgetting the players and concentrating on the score. They speak with a naturalness and understanding that makes for a totally satisfying musical experience. Here the Lindsays repeat the Cavatina, each time subtly modified, so that the listener can proceed either with that and the Grosse Fuge (Tracks 1–6) or with Beethoven's second thoughts (Tracks 1–4, 7 & 8) with the appropriate musical preparation, another performance of the Cavatina. The Grosse Fuge is given a shattering performance, crisper and more urgent than before, easily lyrical before the regular finale, an ultimate demonstration of the players' responsiveness.

String Quintets: in E flat Op. 4; C, Op. 29

Ⓝ 🔑 * Hyp. CDA67683. Nash Ens

The Nash Ensemble, with a distinguished line-up of players, here give flawless, superbly disciplined performances of Beethoven's two String Quintets. Opus 4 is a transcription and rewriting by the composer himself of the Wind Octet that he wrote in emulation of Mozart's great examples of Harmoniemusik, the Wind Octets in E flat and C minor. Opus 29 on the other hand is Beethoven's first completely original exploitation of the String Quintet genre. It is fascinating to find how in his string rewriting of wind music, Beethoven took the opportunity to develop and expand his arguments, as Richard Wigmore explains in his excellent note with the disc. Key-modulations are much more adventurous, and textures lightened compared with the wind original, making this by far the finer work. The Nash players by their careful balancing, helped by the transparent recording, bring out the inner lines with admirable clarity and with clean separation. First-rate sound and immaculate performances.

String Trios 1 in E flat, Op. 3; 2 in G; 3 in D; 4 in C min., Op. 9/1–3; Serenade in D, Op. 8

Ⓑ  DG Double (ADD) 459 466-2 (2). Italian String Trio

String Trios: 1, Op. 3; 2-4 Op. 9/1-3; Serenade, Op. 8

Ⓝ Ⓜ  DG 477 7430 (2) Mutter, Giuranna, Rostropovich

String Trio 1; Serenade in D, Op. 8

 Hyp. CDA 67253. Leopold String Trio

String Trios 2–4

 Hyp. CDA 67254. Leopold String Trio

The young Beethoven, in preparation for writing string quartets, composed the three Op. 9 String Trios in 1798. They have a winning originality, each well contrasted with the others. The delightful seven-movement Serenade was published in 1797. The performances by the prize-winning Leopold Trio are particularly alive and fresh, and the Hyperion recording is remarkably real and vivid.

The Italian performances are immaculately played, full of vitality and vivid in sound, and choice is a matter of taste: both are equally valid interpretations.

DG have reissued their 1989 two-disc package of the String Trios from Anne-Sophie Mutter, Bruno Giuranna and Rostropovich and it goes without saying that they are splendidly played. They deserve a three-star recommendation – but if pressed to a choice, the less glamorous but highly accomplished performances by the Leopold Trio on Hyperion are to be preferred. The sound in the DG set is rather forward and dry: the Hyperion quality is far more natural, and though their playing is less high-powered, it better conveys the spirit of chamber music-making in domestic surroundings.

VIOLIN SONATAS

Violin Sonatas 1–10 (complete); 'A Life with Beethoven' (documentary by Reiner Moritz)

(*) DG DVD 073 014-2 (2). Mutter, Orkis

Violin Sonatas 5 in F, Op. 24 (Spring); 9 in A, Op. 49 (Kreutzer). 'A Life with Beethoven' (documentary by Reiner Moritz)

 DG DVD 073 004-9 (2). Mutter, Orkis

Violin Sonatas 5 (Spring); 9 (Kreutzer)

(*) DG SACD (compatible) 471 641-2. Mutter, Orkis (from above)

This hour-long documentary follows Anne-Sophie Mutter and Lambert Orkis during their year spent preparing and touring the Beethoven sonata cycle. The performances were recorded at the Théâtre des Champs Elysées in 1999. To follow them over an extended period yields useful insights, though the playing, particularly that of the distinguished violinist, will strike some as being at times just a little self-regarding. However, the complete set yields considerable rewards and is probably a better investment than the single disc. Good, straightforward camerawork and excellent sound. Subtitles for the English-language documentary are also available in German and French.

The two performances are also available on a very successfully transferred compatible SACD, which readily conveys the sense of 'live' music-making. The variations and finale of the Kreutzer are particularly spontaneous sounding.

Violin Sonatas 1–10

🔑  DG 471 495-2 (3). Dumay, Pires

🔑 Ⓜ  Decca 421 453-2 (4). Perlman, Ashkenazy

Ⓜ () Decca mono 475 8460 (3). Grumiaux, Haskil

The set by Augustin Dumay and Maria João Pires is another of the finest recent surveys. These two artists have a special rapport and play as if they were controlled by one mind. Pires's sense of keyboard colour and pianistic control are to be relished, and the violinist is both thoughtful and individual. He does take some liberties of phrasing, and some may be worried by the odd moment of self-consciousness. But these are intelligently conceived accounts that sound beautiful and are very vividly and naturally recorded. They are elegantly and economically packaged.

Perlman and Ashkenazy's performances offer a blend of classical purity and spontaneous vitality that is hard to resist; moreover, the realism and presence of the recording in its CD format are very striking.

The 1962 versions by David Oistrakh and Lev Oborin are also performances to treasure. There is a relaxed joy in the music-making, an almost effortless lyricism and an infectious sparkle. Some might feel a lack of inner tension, and the recording is rather wider in separation than we favour nowadays, but it is a beautiful sound in every other respect. (Ph. 468 406-2)

The combination of Schneiderhan's refinement and classical sense of poise with Kempff's concentration and clarity makes these 1953 performances highly competitive, even compared with Kempff's later set with Menuhin. One has only to sample the Spring or Kreutzer Sonatas to discover the calibre of this partnership, spontaneous, dramatic and full of insights, while Kempff's opening of the slow movement of the C minor Sonata, Op. 30/2, is unforgettable, and his partner joins him in comparable rapt concentration. The mono recording obviously does not separate violin and piano as clearly as in the stereo set, but the internal balance could hardly be bettered. (DG 463 605-2)

Arthur Grumiaux and Clara Haskil made their celebrated recordings in 1956–7 and these versions sound remarkably well for their age. The performances are wonderfully civilized and aristocratic, and no one investing in them will regret it. They accommodate all ten Sonatas on three CDs at mid-price in an attractive box. Recommended.

Violin Sonatas 1–3, Op. 12/1–3 (Naxos 8.550284); Violin Sonatas 4, Op. 23; 10, Op. 96; 12 Variations on Mozart's 'Se vuol ballare', WoO 40 (Naxos 8.550285); Violin Sonatas 5 (Spring); 9 (Kreutzer) (Naxos 8.550283); Violin Sonatas 6–8, Op. 30/1–3 (Naxos 8.550286)

(BB)  Nishizaki, Jandó

Naxos offer a winning combination here, in performances wonderfully fresh and alive. Takako Nishizaki's timbre, though not large, is admirably suited to Beethoven and she is in complete rapport with Jandó, who is in excellent form. The recording is most naturally balanced and the acoustic is spacious without clouding the focus.

Violin Sonatas: 1; 7; 10

🔑  ASV Gold GLD 4024. Cropper, Roscoe

Peter Cropper, leader and founder of the Lindsay Quartet, and Martin Roscoe embark on what promises to be a complete cycle of the Sonatas and, if the rest are as good as the present issue, one that promises to hold its own with the very best now before the public, and one which looks set to become a top recommendation among modern recordings. There is a naturalness about this playing that gives delight. All in all, a superb partnership, given vividly present recording.

Violin Sonatas 5 in F, Op. 24 (Spring); 6 in A, Op. 30/1; 7 in C min., Op. 30/2

Ⓝ (BB) () Naxos mono 8.111252. Fuchs, Balsam

Joseph Fuchs's set with Artur Balsam of the Beethoven sonatas on the Brunswick label was the first to appear on LP. They are refreshingly sane performances, free from any kind of exaggeration, but with no want of personality. The sound – a little on the dry side perhaps – comes up well. The authors of The Record Guide found 'this bright, bold playing most attractive and nowhere more so than in the first movement of the Kreutzer which sweeps forward with superlative panache'. Yet ultimately they were disappointed by the absence of a thoughtful quality particularly in the slow movements. Nevertheless these are eminently serviceable readings.

Violin Sonatas 5 (Spring); 9 (Kreutzer)

🔑 Ⓜ  Decca 475 7509. Perlman, Ashkenazy

On Decca, an obvious candidate for the Originals label. The dynamism is there but never becomes too extrovert, and the music unfolds naturally and spontaneously. The recording quality is excellent: the disc has been remastered for this reissue.

Violin Sonata 9 in A (Kreutzer), Op. 47

 EMI 5 56815-2. Perlman, Argerich – FRANCK: Violin Sonata ***

Perlman and Argerich, both big musical personalities, strike sparks off each other in this vividly characterful reading of the Kreutzer, recorded live. Ensemble is not always immaculate, and audience noises intrude, but this playing could not be more vital, with the first movement fiery and dramatic, the slow movement warmly expressive, and the finale sparkily volatile. The recording, not as immediate as most of Perlman's studio recordings, gives a better idea than usual of his full range of dynamic and tone. Well coupled with a comparable reading of the Franck.

Wind Music

Chamber Music for Wind (complete)

Ⓜ (*) CPO 999 658-2 (4). Consortium Classicum

The Consortium Classicum are a highly musical and eminently stylish group, and anyone wanting all Beethoven's important music for wind ensemble will find the CPO recordings well balanced and pleasing. However, few will want to repeat the 38-minute selection (Harmoniemusik) from Fidelio very often and, four key works are available together on ASV in rather more characterful performances (see below): their superiority is most apparent in their more imaginative response to slow movements.

(Wind) Octet in E flat, Op. 103; Quintet in E flat for Oboe, 3 Horns & Bassoon; Rondino in E flat for Wind Octet, WoO 25; Sextet in E flat, Op. 71

🔑 (BB) * ASV CDCOE 807. Wind Soloists of COE

The wind soloists of the Chamber Orchestra of Europe give strong and stylish performances of this collection of Beethoven's wind music, marked by some outstanding solo work, notably from the first oboe, Douglas Boyd. They are recorded in warm but clear sound, with good presence, and this is a real bargain.

Wind Ensemble transcriptions: Overtures: Egmont (arr. Starke); Fidelio & March (arr. Sedlak). Pathétique Sonata (arr. Anon); Symphony No.1 (arr. Schmitt). Piano & Wind Quintet, Op. 16: Andante cantabile (arr. Triebensee)

Ⓝ  Somm SOMMCD 070. Albion Ens

The Albion Ensemble give brilliant performances of this collection of Beethoven wind arrangements, guaranteed to delight lovers of wind music. The first point that strikes one is the clarity of definition brought by wind arrangements. The Egmont Overture ends with a spectacular fanfare display in the final, while the arrangement of the First Symphony encourages speeds rather faster than one expects with the full orchestral version, at least in outer movements. The sharp syncopations in the Scherzo are particularly effective, as they are in the exuberant finale. The arrangement of the Fidelio Overture brings a transposition of key, and a judicious cut is made for the ease of execution. The arrangement of the slow movement of the Piano and Wind Quintet, Opus 16, has the piano part incorporated in the wind textures. In some ways the most successful of all these arrangements is the one of the Pathétique Sonata, bringing out the high romanticism of the opening. In the lovely slow movement a horn takes the first statement of the main melody, while the central contrasting section is lightened, compared with the piano original, and the finale again emphasises the sharpness of attack encouraged in wind arrangements. The disc has been jointly sponsored by the Birmingham Conservatoire, and the Royal Northern College of Music in Manchester.

PIANO MUSIC

Piano Sonatas 1–32 (DVD version)

Ⓝ  EMI DVD 3 68993-9 (6). Barenboim. (Dir. Andy Sommer). Bonus: 6 Master Classes (Director Allan Miller) With Ashkar, Bax, Biss, Kadouch. Lang Lang, Wosner

Barenboim's new survey of the complete canon was recorded over eight concerts during late May and early June 2005 at the Staatsoper Unter den Linden, Berlin, and they are unfailingly impressive and searching. Start one of these concerts and you will be held spellbound. They are supplemented by six master classes which underline the fact that not only are his fingers magnificent but there is a mind of vision and imagination to guide them. We doubt whether any Beethovenian would fail to learn from them or the recitals themselves. The concerts are directed by Andy Sommer and the classes by Allan Miller and both find the ideal placing for the cameras. Excellent sound, too.

Piano Sonatas 1–32 (complete CD versions)

🔑  Nonesuch 7559 79328-2 (10). Goode

🔑 ✿ Ⓑ () DG mono 447 966-2 (7). Kempff

🔑 (BB) * EMI 5 72912-2 (10). Barenboim

Ⓝ Ⓑ  DG 477 7958 (8). Kempff

Piano Sonatas 1–32; Bagatelles, Opp. 119 & 125

🔑 ✿ Ⓑ * EMI 5 62700-2 (9). Kovacevich

Stephen Kovacevich recorded his Beethoven cycle for EMI between 1992 and 2003 with consistent success, capping the series with an extraordinarily powerful and imaginative account of the Hammerklavier. The individual CDs have been highly praised by us. However, some of them have been withdrawn, so the arrival of the complete set at bargain price is doubly welcome. EMI's recording is of consistently high quality, and this cycle must now be counted a first choice, alongside those by Goode, Kempff, Paul Lewis, and (of course) the pioneering Schnabel readings.

It is not just the power of Goode's playing that singles him out, but also the beauty, when he has such subtle control over a formidably wide tonal and dynamic range. Even at its weightiest, the sound is never clangorous. Particularly in the early sonatas, Goode brings out the wit and parody, while slow movements regularly draw sensuously velvety legato. Helped by unusually full and clear recording, with no haze of reverberation, the clarity of his articulation is breathtaking, as in the running semiquavers of the finale of the Appassionata Sonata. Above all, Goode has a natural gravity which compels attention. One has to go back to the pre-digital era to find a Beethoven cycle of comparable command and intensity.

It is good to have Kempff's second recording (in stereo and dating from 1964/5) back in the catalogue – performances which alongside those of the earlier mono set still represent a yardstick by which all others are judged. Kempff's shading of pianistic colour is so imaginative that the ear readily accommodates any slight dryness in the upper range. The interpretations have a commanding stature, yet Kempff brings his own individuality to every bar and a clarity and sparkle that make you want to go on listening.

Those who have cherished Kempff's later, stereo cycle for its magical spontaneity will find this quality conveyed even more intensely in his mono set, recorded between 1951 and 1956. The interpretations are the more personal, the more individual, at times the more wilful; but for any listener who responds to Kempff's visionary concentration, this is a magical series.

Barenboim's earlier set of the Beethoven Sonatas, recorded for EMI when he was in his late twenties, remains one of his very finest achievements on record. The readings often involve extreme tempi, both fast and slow, but the spontaneous style is unfailingly compelling. At times Barenboim's way is mercurial, with an element of fantasy. But overall this is a keenly thoughtful musician living through Beethoven's great piano cycle with an individuality that puts him in the line of the master pianists. The admirably balanced recordings were made at Abbey Road between 1967 and 1970, and the remastered quality brings a most believably natural piano-image.

Bernard Roberts's cycle – his second for Nimbus – can be warmly recommended, the more so when it too comes at super-bargain price. These are dedicated, undistracting readings which consistently reflect Roberts's mastery as a chamber-music pianist, intent on presenting the composer's arguments as clearly as possible, not drawing attention to himself. Always spontaneous-sounding, the digital sound is full-bodied, with the piano set in a helpful, quite intimate acoustic. (Nimbus NI 1774)

Spontaneity and electricity, extremes of expression in dynamic, tempo and phrasing, as well as mood, mark Daniel Barenboim's DG cycle, as they did his much earlier one for EMI, though that means he has a tendency at times to rush his fences, particularly in the early sonatas. All three movements of the Waldstein are more lyrical this time, and that applies to the late sonatas too, not just in slow movements but equally strikingly in the great fugal movements, where inner parts are brought out more clearly and warmly. The sound is full and spacious, more consistent than before. The CD transfers, on one disc fewer than Barenboim's EMI set, are of consistently high quality. (DG 463 127-2)

Piano Sonatas 1–4; 12-13; 14 (Moonlight); 22; 23 (Appassionata)

Ⓝ * HM HMC 90 906.8. Paul Lewis

Piano Sonatas 5–7; 15; 19; 20; 26 (Les Adieux); 30–2

Ⓝ * HM HMC 901 909.11. Paul Lewis

Piano Sonatas 8 (Pathétique); 9–11; 21 (Waldstein); 24–5; 27; 28; 29 (Hammerklavier)

* HM HMC 901903.5

Piano Sonatas 16–18

*HM HMC 901 902. Paul Lewis

At once thoughtful and incisive, but with underlying inspiration, Paul Lewis is one of the most magnetic personalities of our generation, here rising masterfully to the challenge of these great sonatas. He began with fine accounts of the three Opus 31 Sonatas and his second chosen group culminated in the most challenging of them all, the epic Hammerklavier, which is given a taut structural coherence, matching even the greatest accounts of earlier generations. The Waldstein and Pathétique have a freshness, strength and lyrical appeal that makes them stand out among the early and middle-period works, and some of the other most popular works, including the Moonlight and Appassionata are equally revelatory. The last three sonatas now stand among the finest in the catalogue, and throughout the series there is not a suspicion of routine. Lewis's playing, with each movement perfectly paced and textures wonderfully clarified, even when he opts for unusually fast speeds, still involves no lack of weight. Excellent sound throughout places this set among the very finest modern surveys of these demanding works.

Piano Sonatas 1–3, Op. 21/1–3* (Naxos mono 8.110693); Piano Sonatas 4, Op. 7; 5–6, Op. 10/1–2; 19–20, Op. 49/1–2 (Naxos mono 8.110694); Piano Sonatas 7, Op. 10/3; 8 (Pathétique); 9–10, Op. 14/1–2 (Naxos mono 8.110695); Piano Sonatas 11 in B flat, Op. 22; 12 in A flat, Op. 26; 13 in E flat, Op. 27/1 (Naxos mono 8.110756); Piano Sonatas 14 in C sharp min. (Moonlight; 15 in D (Pastoral; 16 in G, Op. 31/1) (Naxos mono 8.110759); Piano Sonatas 17 in D min. (Tempest; 18 in E flat, Op. 31/3; 21 in C (Waldstein) (Naxos mono 8.110760)

(BB) () Schnabel

Schnabel brought to this great repertoire a rare depth and vision. There are pianistic inelegances (rushed triplets, etc.), sometimes extreme tempi and a bad-tempered quality that sound totally Beethoven; but the concentration, wisdom and insights (particularly of the late sonatas) remain in a class of their own. There is no question as to the superiority of Mark Obert-Thorn's transfers in comparison with the previous EMI issues: they are more present and vivid, and have much greater body. They also have the advantage of being available singly, so that those who want the greatest performances, such as the Waldstein, and the Opp. 110 and 111, can get them without having necessarily to bother with the earlier ones or the very approximate Hammerklavier. (This is no match for Solomon's classical and articulate account or his C major, Op. 2/3, for example, now on Testament.) But the best are beyond price and they have never sounded better. They come closer to Beethoven than has almost any other musician since, and in these excellent transfers remain an indispensable part of any self-respecting collection.

Piano Sonatas 1, Op. 2/1; 3, Op. 2/3; 32, Op. 111 (Testament mono SBT 1188); Piano Sonatas 7, Op. 10/3; 8 (Pathétique); 13; 14 (Moonlight), Op. 27/1–2 (Testament mono SBT 1189); Piano Sonatas 17; 18, Op. 31/2–3; 21 (Waldstein); 22, Op. 54 (Testament mono SBT 1190); Piano Sonatas 23 (Appassionata); 28, Op. 101; 30 & 31, Opp. 109–110 (Testament mono SBT 1192); Piano Sonatas 26 (Les Adieux); 27, Op. 90; 29 (Hammerklavier) (Testament mono SBT 1191)

✿ () Solomon

This five-CD set provides a welcome reminder of Solomon's artistry and stature. Alas, it was never completed, as his stroke in 1956 brought his career prematurely to an end. All these discs are available separately, and no one who cares about Beethoven and great piano-playing should lose this opportunity of acquiring them. Solomon was the least assertive of musicians yet the most deeply satisfying, and his interpretations never obscure Beethoven's intentions. His approach has a unique gravity, an Olympian serenity and an unforced naturalness. These transfers have never sounded better, surpassing in every respect the earlier, EMI Références issues.

Piano Sonatas 1–3, Op. 2

(*) DG 477 6594. Pollini

Impressive pianism from this great Italian artist, but there is a want of spontaneity that somewhat diminishes its appeal. Wonderfully 'present' piano sound, recorded in the Herkulessaal in Munich.

Piano Sonatas 1–3; 5–7; 16–18; 11; 13; 14 (Moonlight); 16; 17 (Tempest); 18–20; 21 (Waldstein); 23 (Appassionata); 25; 26 (Les Adieux)

(BB)  Virgin 5 62368-2 (5). Tan (fortepiano)

Melvyn Tan began his survey of Beethoven's sonatas using the fortepiano in 1990, continuing in 1991 and 1992; but it was never completed, presumably because of lack of demand, certainly not because of any lack of artistry. Tan has a strong musical personality and in the named middle-period sonatas attacks his instrument with tremendous spirit and flair; every phrase lives, and he is not afraid to present the widest dynamic range. There is consummate artistry and real temperament and fire. Nor is there any want of poetic feeling. In the earlier sonatas he plays with brilliance and sensitivity in equal measure. He uses a copy by Derek Adlam of a Streicher (1814), an instrument for which Beethoven himself expressed a strong preference. The EMI recording is excellent.

Piano Sonatas 1 in F min.; 2 in A; 3 in C, Op. 2/1–3

 Chan. 9212. Lortie

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550150. Jandó

Louis Lortie has the benefit of an immediate and truthful recording, greatly enhancing his playing. He brings his usual refined musical intelligence to all three of the Op. 2 Sonatas, giving ample evidence of his instinctive musicianship and artistry.

Jenö Jandó's complete recording of the Beethoven Piano Sonatas is also available in two flimsy slip-cases, each comprising five CDs (8.505002 and 8.505003). This first CD (actually Volume 3) establishes Jandó's credentials as a strong, unidiosyncratic Beethovenian. The piano sound is full and bold.

Piano Sonatas 2–3, Op. 2/2 & 3; 4, Op. 7; 5–7, Op. 10/1–3; 8 (Pathétique); 10, Op. 14/2; 11, Op. 22; 12, Op. 26; 13; 14 (Moonlight), Op. 27/1–2; 15 (Pastoral); 16–18, Op. 31/1–3; 19–20, Op. 49/1–2; 21 (Waldstein); 23 (Appassionata); 25, Op. 79; 26 (Les Adieux); 27, Op. 90; 28, Op. 101; 29 (Hammerklavier); 30, Op. 109; 31, Op. 110; 2 Electoral Sonatas, WoO 47/1–2. Eroica Variations & Fugue, Op. 35

🔑 ✿ (B) * DG (ADD/DDD) 477 6360 (9). Gilels

Gilels's survey of the Beethoven Sonatas, made between 1972 and 1985, was left unfinished at his death, although he did include a masterly account of the Eroica Variations and the two so-called 'Electoral Sonatas'. Throughout, he manages to make one believe that his is exactly the tempo giusto, even when one feels tempted to question the very deliberate speed he adopts, for instance in the slow movement of the C minor, Op. 10, No. 1, or his strange reserve at the opening movement of E flat Sonata, Op. 27, No. 1. Among the named sonatas the Appassionata has been hailed by us as being among the finest ever made, and much the same must be said of the Waldstein; it has a technical perfection denied even to Schnabel, and though in the slow movement the latter found special depths, Gilels is hardly less searching and profound. If the Pathétique does not quite rank among his very best, such are the strengths of his playing that the reading still leaves a profound impression. Gilels's Hammerklavier is a performance of supreme integrity: Olympian, titanic, subtle, imperious, one of the finest accounts ever recorded. However, as in some other performances here (the Pathétique for instance) the digital recording is very close and bright, harder than usual. In the earlier analogue recordings the piano is usually much less closely observed. No. 31 in A flat is also given a performance of real stature. Even when Gilels storms the greatest heights in the closing fugue, no fortissimo ever sounds percussive or strained. Such is his magic that doubts are silenced. Altogether this set is a unique achievement and well worth its modest cost, even if the documentation is meagre.

Piano Sonatas 3 in C, Op. 2/3; 4 in E flat, Op. 7; 27 in E min., Op. 90

🔑 (BB) * Regis (ADD) RRC 1185. S. Richter

A superb disc which, at Regis price, ought to be in every collection, if only for the inspired and very beautiful account of the rapt slow movement of Op. 2/3 and the rippling finale of Op. 90, which all but smiles. But all three performances are masterly in their control of structure and intensity, and none sounds either early or immature, just great Beethoven.

Piano Sonatas 3; 29 (Hammerklavier); 6 Bagatelles, Op. 126

🔑 Ⓜ () BBC (ADD) BBCL 4052-2. S. Richter

Sviatoslav Richter's opening of the Hammerklavier explodes like some galactic force, and the intensity and fire of the performance carries all before it. There is tremendous spontaneity as well as a magnificence about it. Unusually for Richter, he does not repeat the exposition in the first movement of Op. 2, No. 3. Both this piece and the Bagatelles complete a memorable musical occasion, which fortunately escaped oblivion in the BBC Archives. Very acceptable sound.

Piano Sonatas 3 in C, Op. 2/3; 32 in C min., Op. 111

 Opus Arte DVD OA 0939D. Michelangeli – GALUPPI; SCARLATTI: Sonatas ***

These magisterial performances come from the Archives of RAI (Italian Radio-TV) and derive from a 1962 recital given in Turin. The playing is of the utmost elegance and refinement, and there is a cool poise that is totally appropriate to the early C major Sonata but less so to Op. 111. Marvellous pianism in terms of range and colour, and something to wonder at rather than to be involved by. Unobtrusive camerawork. Though the black-and-white image is not always sharp in focus, Michelangeli is totally compelling.

Piano Sonatas 4; 13 in E flat, Op. 27/1; 19–20, Op. 49/1–2; 22 in F, Op. 54

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550167. Jandó

The performances of both the E flat Sonata, Op. 7, and the Sonata quasi una fantasia, Op. 27/1, in which Jandó is totally responsive to Beethoven's wide expressive range, show the excellence of this series, and the three shorter works are also freshly presented.

Piano Sonatas 5–7, Op. 10/1–3; 8 (Pathétique)

(*) DG 474 810-2. Pollini

These accounts of the Op. 10 set and the Pathétique offer the superb pianism and intelligence which Pollini's admirers rightly treasure. But, as with other recent Beethoven from this artist, they remain for us curiously uninvolving. Excellent sound.

Piano Sonata 7; Eroica Variations

Ⓝ (*) BBC Legends mono BBCL 4250-2. Gilels (with SCRIABIN: Etudes; RAVEL: Jeux d'eau, Alborada del gracioso)

This recital by Emil Gilels, recorded live by the BBC from Cheltenham in October 1950, gives a wider view of this great Soviet pianist than most of his commercial recordings, with the quirkiness of the finale of the Beethoven and the wit of Ravel's Alborada del gracioso deliciously brought out. Good broadcast sound.

Piano Sonatas 8 (Pathétique); 14 (Moonlight); 15 (Pastoral); 17 (Tempest); 21 (Waldstein); 23 (Appassionata); 26 (Les Adieux)

Ⓑ  Ph. (ADD) Duo 438 730-2 (2). Brendel

Ⓑ  Double Decca (ADD) 452 952-2 (2). Ashkenazy

All the performances here are taken from Brendel's analogue cycle for Philips; they are impressive and the recording is consistently excellent. The Tempest, Op. 31/2, is finely conceived and thoroughly compelling, and the central movements of the Pastoral resonate in the memory. Outstanding too is Brendel's account of the Waldstein.

The comparable Decca collection of named sonatas shows Ashkenazy consistently as a penetrating and individual Beethovenian. The Moonlight is poetic and unforced, and he brings concentration together with spontaneity of feeling to the Tempest, with an impressive command of keyboard colour. Taking a broadly lyrical view, the Waldstein is splendidly structured, and the Appassionata is superb. The very good analogue recordings are excellently transferred to CD.

Piano Sonatas 8 (Pathétique); 14 (Moonlight); 15 (Pastoral); 17 (Tempest); 21 (Waldstein); 23 (Appassionata); 26 (Les Adieux); 29 (Hammerklavier): 31, Op. 110; 32, Op. 111

Ⓝ Ⓑ * EMI 2 15314-2 (3) Kovacevich

A self-recommending collection taken from Kovacevich's cycle. Returning to these performances one is all but surprised how compelling is the experience they provide. Playing of stature, excellent EMI recording, remarkable value.

Piano Sonatas 8 (Pathétique); 14 (Moonlight); 23 (Appassionata)

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550045. Jandó

Jandó's clean, direct style and natural spontaneity are particularly admirable in the slow movements of the Pathétique and Appassionata, warmly lyrical in feeling, yet not a whit sentimental. Only in the coda of the finale of the Appassionata does one feel a loss of poise, when the closing presto becomes prestissimo and the exuberance of the music-making nearly gets out of control.

Piano Sonatas 8 (Pathétique); 14 (Moonlight); 23 (Appassionata); 26 (Les Adieux)

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * RCA (ADD) SACD 82876 71619-2. Rubinstein

Ⓜ (*) Sony (ADD) 5174812. Serkin

Artur Rubinstein had never recorded the Moonlight previously, and he brings to it a combination of freshness and maturity to make it stand out even among many fine recorded versions, with an improvisatory feel to the opening movement which is unforgettable and which also extends to the performance of Les Adieux, which is hardly less magical. The Pathétique has a youthful urgency in the outer movements, and the simplicity of the Adagio cantabile brings a wonderfully sustained sense of spiritual peace, while the impulsive surge of feeling in the Appassionata is equally compelling. The recordings, made in the Manhattan Center in New York City in 1962 and 1963, have been superbly remastered by John Newton from the original three-track source, and this compatible SACD brings a remarkable sense of realism and presence, and is firmer in the bass than on LP.

Rudolf Serkin's aristocratic approach is immediately apparent at the opening of the Moonlight Sonata, and in the Allegro he is as incisive and dramatic as ever. As with all master pianists, one finds many points of insight emerging as well as one or two points of personal mannerism. The studio recording dates from December 1962 and the Les Adieux Sonata, added for the present reissue, was recorded in Carnegie Hall exactly 15 years later. The present transfers are firmer and more real than in the original LP incarnations, although, surprisingly, the effect is drier in the concert hall than in the studio.

Piano Sonatas 8 (Pathétique); 15 (Pastoral); 27 in E min, Op. 90; 30 in E, Op. 109

 EMI 3 94422-2. Biss

Jonathan Biss's début CD of the Appassionata and Schumann's Davidsbündlertänze was very impressive. This newcomer is hardly less successful. The young American pianist is a serious artist, with intelligence and fine musicianship to commend him.

Piano Sonatas 8 (Pathétique); 19; 20 (Hammerklavier)

🔑  Naïve V 3023. Guy

Of the many rival versions of the Hammerklavier, this one from François-Frédéric Guy was chosen as the finest of all on BBC Radio 3's Record Review, a well-deserved tribute. The intensity of the playing is formidable, with speeds very well chosen and maintained, and with textures clarified. The Pathétique Sonata and the tiny G minor, Op. 49/2, make a welcome and generous supplement.

Piano sonatas 8 in C min. (Pathétique); 23 (Appassionata); 31 in A flat, Op. 110

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ  DG (DDD/ADD) 476 2194. Gilels

If the Pathétique does not rank among Emil Gilels's very finest Beethoven performances on record, such are the strengths of his playing that the reading still leaves a profound impression. The account of the Appassionata has previously been hailed by us as among the finest ever made, and the 1973 analogue recording is both full and believably present. Op. 110 is given a performance of real stature. Even when Gilels storms the greatest heights in the closing fugue, no fortissimo ever sounds percussive or strained. The Pathétique and Op. 110 are truthful digital recordings, both made in the Berlin Jesus-Christus-Kirche; the Pathétique, made in 1980, has the microphones a bit close, but in No. 31 (dating from five years later) the balance is better judged. An outstanding bargain, all the same.

Piano Sonatas 9–10, Op. 14/1–2

Ⓜ () BBC mono BBCL 4126-2. Sviatoslav Richter (with CHOPIN: Etude in F sharp min., Op. 10/4) – SCHUBERT: Wanderer Fantasy (); SCHUMANN: Abegg Variations, Op. 1; Faschingsschwank aus Wien ()

The two Op. 14 Sonatas come from a festival recital in February 1963, two years after Richter's first concert appearances in the West (he had already recorded them commercially for Philips). His very deliberate pace for the Allegretto movement of the E major lends it a reflective, almost melancholy character, which is unusual, but (as always with this great artist) his readings are the product of much thought. The mono sound is perfectly acceptable.

Piano Sonatas 9–10; 24, Op. 78; 27, Op. 90; 28, Op. 101

(BB)  Naxos 8.550162. Jandó

Opp. 90 and 101 show this artist at full stretch. These are demanding works and Jandó does not fall short, particularly in the eloquent slow movements. The piano-sound is most believable.

Piano Sonatas 10, Op. 14/2; 19–20, Op. 49/1–2

Ⓜ  Ph. (ADD) 464 710-2 (2). S. Richter – LISZT: Piano Concertos 1–2 ***

These three sonatas (sonatinas in all but name) are among those works that most budding amateur pianists have tried to play. Richter presents them with disarming ease and simplicity, and with the utmost eloquence. He is beautifully recorded (in 1963), but this was a curious coupling for his famous versions of the Liszt Concertos with Kondrashin, dating from two years earlier, which also had a London venue.

Piano Sonatas 11–12; 19–20

 Chan. 9755. Lortie

Performances of vital and unfailing intelligence which make one think afresh about the music itself. What we have heard so far of Louis Lortie's Beethoven odyssey makes one feel that it is worth placing alongside Stephen Kovacevich's sonata cycle on EMI; it is certainly not inferior to it. The Chandos recording is state of the art and wonderfully natural. A most distinguished issue.

Piano Sonatas 11, Op. 22; 29 (Hammerklavier)

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550234. Jandó

Piano Sonatas 12, Op. 26; 16 & 18, Op. 31/1 & 3

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550166. Jandó

Jandó's trio of middle-period sonatas can be recommended with few reservations. No. 18 is a considerable success, and there is much to stimulate the listener's interest here. Excellent sound. From its very opening bars, the Hammerklavier is commanding; there is rapt concentration in the slow movement, and the closing fugue runs its course with a powerful inevitability. Again, most realistic recording.

Piano Sonatas 14 (Moonlight); 21 (Waldstein); 23 (Appassionata)

Ⓑ  Virgin 3 63280-2. Pletnev

Ⓜ (*) Sony (ADD) 827969274422. Horowitz (with Sonata 8 Pathétique excerpts: 1st and 2nd movements only)

Some will find the Pletnev Moonlight rather mannered, but he has the capacity to make you listen intently, and he finds the right depths in the slow movement and finale of the Waldstein. The account of the Appassionata is masterly. The engineering is immaculate. A fine bargain reissue.

In his 1972 Sony/CBS recording of the Moonlight Sonata, Horowitz takes the first movement faster than he did on his earlier 1956 RCA account and the result is undoubtedly less poetic. The other works on the Sony disc are much more successful, with the finale of the Waldstein magically introduced and the Appassionata very powerful. This extends to the bonus of the 1963 excerpts from the Pathétique Sonata, which are equally impressive. No explanation is given for the omission of the finale.

Piano Sonatas 15–18; 30–2

Ⓜ () Sony mono 874645263823 (3). Gould

'Wilful yet charismatic' is a phrase to which many have recourse whenever Glenn Gould's name is mentioned. There are no doubts as to his pianism or control or the quality of his musicianship; but his late Beethoven, for all its intelligence, is quirky and marred by his vocal contributions. It can be recommended only to his admirers.

Piano Sonatas: 15 (Pastoral); (Kurfürstensonaten) in E flat, F min., D, WoO 47/1–3; in C (incomplete), WoO 51; Sonatinas: in G, F, Anh. 5/1–2

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550255. Jandó

Jenö Jandó's playing is fresh, clean and intelligent and, if the two Sonatinas are not authentic, they make agreeable listening here. The Pastoral Sonata is admirably done.

Piano Sonatas 16–17 (Tempest); 18, Op. 31/1–3

🔑  Chan. 9842. Lortie

Louis Lortie's ongoing Beethoven sonata cycle is second only to Stephen Kovacevich's magisterial cycle on EMI, and in some instances (thanks to the quality of the Snape recording) it is every bit as fine. Lortie's playing is tremendously alive and vibrant, and the vivid nature of the sound makes for supremely satisfying listening.

Piano Sonata 17 (Tempest)

🔑 ✿ (BB)  EMI (ADD) Gemini 5 86543-2 (2). Sviatoslav Richter – HANDEL: Suites 9–16 *** ✿

Richter makes the most of possibilities of contrast. He plays the opening extremely slowly and then, when the Allegro comes, he takes it unusually fast. Far from being odd, this effect is breathtaking. Excellent Abbey Road sound, and a bargain price.

Piano Sonatas 17 (Tempest); 21 (Waldstein); 26 (Les Adieux)

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550054. Jandó

Jenö Jandó offers here three famous named sonatas, and very enjoyable they are in their direct manner.

Piano Sonatas 17 in D (Tempest), Op. 31/2; 31 in A flat, Op. 110

(*) EuroArts Callico Classics CCCR 101. Jill Crossland – MOZART: Sonata in F *

Jill Crossland is a new name to be reckoned with. A highly individual player, thoughtful yet compelling, she has the gift of spontaneity in the recording studio to carry the personal insights of her interpretations, as at a live performance. Her account of the Adagio of the 'Tempest' Sonata is wonderfully lyrical, and the delicacy of the finale equally persuasive. The following performance of Opus 110 is undoubtedly very wayward, but her strength of commitment is always convincing. She is very well recorded.

Piano Sonatas 21–5; 27; 30–2

Ⓜ () EMI mono 5 62880-2 (2). Schnabel

Piano Sonatas 22–26

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.110761. Schnabel

These classic accounts have rarely been out of the catalogue. Keith Hardwick's 1991 transfers of the eight-CD EMI Références set have been replaced by new ones by Andrew Walter which have considerably more freshness, smoothness and transparency. There are some marvellous things, including a magnificent Waldstein and the final Opp. 109–111, which have arguably never been surpassed since they were made in 1932. The Naxos transfers are hardly less fine.

Piano Sonatas 25; 32

 Orfeo C 612031. Nikolaieva (with SHOSTAKOVICH: 4 Preludes & Fugues, Op. 87) – BACH: French Suite 4, etc. ***

An Austrian Radio recording by Tatiana Nikolaieva, for whom Shostakovich wrote his Preludes and Fugues, Op. 87. Nikolaieva was a great pianist and her musical insights matched her technical mastery. A searching performance of Op. 111 and a bonus of four Shostakovich Preludes and Fugues.

Piano Sonatas 26 (Les Adieux); 29 (Hammerklavier); Bagatelles, Op. 119

Ⓑ * EMI 2 28515-2. Kovacevich

Stephen Kovacevich opens the Hammerklavier, like Schnabel, with an urgent, impatient forward momentum, as if to show Beethoven's ideas straining at the leash and attempting to transcend the constraints of the medium. The slow movement has a depth and imagination that only the greatest interpretations can rival. This is arguably the finest Hammerklavier since Gilels and it has the advantage of excellent recorded sound. The Bagatelles, Op. 119, and the Les Adieux Sonata are worthy companions.

Piano Sonatas 27–8; 29 (Hammerklavier)

(BB) (*) Regis (ADD) RRC 1205. Brendel

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.110762. Schnabel

Brendel's early Vox/Turnabout recordings make for another enterprising budget reissue on Regis. Brendel's first movement of Op. 101 is disappointingly underplayed, but there is much more Innigkeit in the wayward and elusive opening movement of Op. 90, and a smoothly flowing reading of the haunting second movement. The Hammerklavier is another matter. The concentration and sense of drama in the first movement are most striking, and only the comparatively unhushed reading of the slow movement – taken on the fast side – mars the interpretation.

The Naxos transfers of Schnabel's recordings are of a very high standard. Comparing Mark Obert-Thorn's transfer of the E minor Sonata, Op. 90, with Andrew Walter's is instructive. Walter favours a rather forward sound and a much higher level, while the Naxos is relatively recessed and in some ways does greater justice to the tonal subtlety of Schnabel's playing. The Hammerklavier, not included in the EMI set, is perhaps the least technically successful of Schnabel's Sonata Society records, though there are wonderful insights in the slow movement.

Piano Sonatas 27, Op. 90; 28, Op. 101; 29 (Hammerklavier); 30, Op. 109; 31, Op. 110; 32, Op. 111

🔑 ✿ Ⓑ  DG Double (ADD) 453 010-2 (2). Kempff

🔑 Ⓑ  Ph. (ADD) Duo 438 374-2 (2). Brendel

Kempff has never been more inspirationally revealing than in these performances of the last six Beethoven sonatas. These are all great performances, and the remastered recordings have been enhanced to an extraordinary degree, to give an uncannily realistic piano-image, helped by the immediacy of Kempff's communication.

Brendel's set is among the most distinguished Beethoven playing of the analogue era. The recordings, made in the 1970s, are most realistic and satisfying in the CD transfers. The documentation too is first rate.

Piano Sonata 28 in A, Op. 101; (i) String Quartet 12 in E flat, Op. 127 (trans. Marrion)

(*) Sony SK93043. Perahia, (i) with ASMF

Perahia's reading of Op. 101 does not fall short of the highest expectations. Indeed it is one of his most perfect recordings, immaculate in delivery and flawless in musical judgement. He leaves you feeling that there is no other way of playing this work. However, the coupling is more controversial, even though there are precedents. Decent playing, though intonation in the Trio of the Scherzo is problematic on occasion. But Op. 101 is exceptional.

Piano Sonatas 28, Op. 101; 29 (Hammerklavier)

🔑 Ⓜ * DG (ADD) 463 639-2. Gilels

Gilels is at his most inspired in both sonatas, playing with the sort of rapt concentration that makes one forget that these are not live performances. His Hammerklavier is a reading of supreme integrity. Olympian, subtle, imperious, one of the finest ever recorded. However, allowances have to be made for the digital recording, which is close and bright and harder than is ideal. The more elusive Op. 101 is also given a superb reading, with a deeply expressive first movement and Adagio before the contrapuntal finale. Here the analogue recording of a decade earlier is first rate and very well transferred.

Piano Sonatas 28–9 (Hammerklavier); 30–2

Ⓑ  Ph. Duo (ADD) 468 912-2 (2). Arrau

Ⓜ (*) DG 449 740-2 (2). Pollini

Claudio Arrau's famous Hammerklavier is particularly impressive, one of the triumphs of the cycle (Richard Osborne called it 'a torrential performance in full Niagaran spate'). Its middle movement is particularly searching. As always, the Arrau sonority is sumptuous, and the Philips recording still sounds pretty magnificent.

Pollini's recordings of the late sonatas, which won the 1977 Gramophone critics' award for instrumental music, contain playing of the highest mastery. The remastering for reissue as a DG 'Original' has brought no marked improvement, but the two discs are now packaged like a DG Double and are offered at a special price.

Piano Sonata 28 in A, Op. 101

Ⓜ  Wigmore Hall Live WHL018. Cooper (with DEBUSSY: La terrasse des audiences du clair de Lune; MOZART: Sonata in A min., K.310) – RAVEL: Miroirs etc. ***

It is puzzling that Imogen Cooper has been so neglected by the record companies, and so it is all the more gratifying to have this Wigmore recital from February 2007. Her account of the A major Sonata, Op. 101, is expertly paced and beautifully shaped; in short, it is one of the finest currently before the public, and the remainder of the programme is hardly less impressive. (Some may find her rubato in the slow movement of the Mozart a little excessive.) This issue offers some very distinguished and satisfying music-making. Good sound, too.

Piano Sonata 29 (Hammerklavier); Bagatelles, Op. 126/2 & 3

 EMI DVD 4 901239. Alfred Brendel (with SCHUBERT: Wanderer Fantasy; Julius Katchen)

Brendel's DVD, in black and white, was made in Paris in February 1970 and offers a rare opportunity to see as well as hear him. He puts the listener immediately under his spell and proves (as ever) a dedicated and faithful guide. The bonus is a rare telerecording from ORTF of Julius Katchen playing the Wanderer Fantasy in the last months before his death.

Piano Sonatas 29 (Hammerklavier) Op. 106; 30 in E, Op. 109; 31 in A flat, Op. 101; 32 in C min., Op. 111; 6 Bagatelles, Op. 126

🔑 ✿ (BB)  EMI Gemini (ADD) 5 85499-2 (2). Eschenbach

Christoph Eschenbach recorded the Hammerklavier Sonata in 1979 for EMI at the Abbey Road Studios along with Opp. 109, 110 and 111 and the Six Bagatelles, Op. 126. The Op. 111 is among the most concentrated, powerfully conceived and sensitive realizations of the score currently before the public, and the Hammerklavier is no less magisterial and commanding. Listening to Beethoven playing of this quality is a wonderfully satisfying experience. These are readings of great musical insight that have the strengths of a master pianist combined with the wisdom of a great musician. The recorded sound is very present and lifelike.

Piano Sonatas 30 in E flat, Op. 109; 31 in A flat, Op. 110; 32 in C min., Op. 111

 Ph. 446 701-2. Brendel

Brendel's performances are searching and concentrated. They draw one into Beethoven's world immediately, with an eloquence that is all the more potent for being selfless. The recordings, made at the Henry Wood Hall and at The Maltings, Snape, are excellent, real and full of presence.

The last three sonatas of Beethoven, offered in Naxos's Volume 4, are very imposing indeed in Jandó's hands. There is serenity and gravitas in these readings and a powerful control of structure. (Naxos 8.550151)

Piano Sonatas 31, Op. 110; 32, Op. 111; Bagatelles, Op. 126/5 & 6

 EMI DVD 3 314949-2. Stephen Kovacevich

Beethoven's last two piano sonatas have inspired Stephen Kovacevich for many years to some of the most dedicated pianism imaginable. Here, in a DVD recorded in August 2004 at La Roque d'Antheron, one can visually witness the depth of his concentration, adding to the intensity of the experience. These are not just thoughtful readings but powerful ones, notably in the first movement of Opus 111. Some may find the camerawork distracting when, quite frequently, the pianist's hands are made to fill the whole screen, but that is a minor distraction.

Miscellaneous piano music

Allegretto in C min., WoO 53; Allegretto, WoO 61; Allegretto quasi andante, WoO 61; Bagatelles, WoO 52 & 56; in B flat, WoO 60; in C; 2 Bagatelles; Für Elise, WoO 59; 12 German Dances, WoO 8; 7 Ländler, WoO 11; 6 Ländler, WoO 15; Minuet in C; 6 Minuets, WoO 10

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.553795. Jandó

Allegretto in C min., H.69; Bagatelle in C (Lustig-Traurig), WoO 54; Fantasia, Op. 77; 12 German Dances, WoO 13; 7 Contredanses, WoO 14; 6 Ecossaises, WoO 83; Fugue in C, H.64; Minuet in E flat, WoO 82; Polonaise in C, Op. 89; 2 Preludes, Op. 39; Prelude in F min., WoO 55; (Concerto) Rondo in C, WoO 48; (Concerto) Finale in C, H.65

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.553798. Jandó

It is always a joy to witness Beethoven relaxing. These collections of shorter piano pieces may offer no great music, but they have a freshness and vitality that is an endless delight. Jenö Jandó is at his finest in the two C minor Allegrettos and the C major Rondo. He opens the second disc with an appropriately impulsive and enjoyable account of the Op. 77 Fantasia. Elsewhere his clear, direct manner certainly evokes the spirit of Beethoven. The set of six Ecossaises (in essence, contredanses, and little to do with Scotland) are rhythmically very jolly and emerge as an exhilarating offering. The two Preludes, Op. 39, modulating through all the major keys in turn, have their fascination too. With playing fresh and clear, this is for the most part a delightful supplement to Jandó's cycle of Beethoven sonatas for Naxos.

Andante favori, WoO 57; 2 German Dances, Hess 67; 12 Minuets, WoO 7; Rondo in A, WoO 49; 2 Rondos, Op. 51/1 & 2; Rondo a capriccio in G, Op. 129

(BB)  Naxos 8.553799. Jandó

With such lightweight items as the two German Dances and the Twelve Minuets Jandó's fresh, alert manner unobtrusively enhances their charms alongside equally winning performances of the headlong Rage over a Lost Penny and the substantial set of variations, Andante favori, that Beethoven originally intended as a middle movement for the Waldstein Sonata. Excellent sound.

Andante favori, WoO 57; Bagatelles, Opp. 33, 119; WoO 52; C, WoO 56; 6 Minuets, WoO 10; Rondos: 1, 2, Op. 51; WoO 48; WoO 49; 6 Variations on an Original Theme, Op. 34; 9 Variations on a March by Dressler, WoO 63; Variations on a Swiss Song, WoO 64; 24 Variations on Righini's 'Venni Amore', WoO 65; 12 Variations on Haibel's 'Menuet à la Viganò'; 6 Variations on Paisiello's 'Nel cor più non mi sento', WoO 70

🔑  DG 457 493-2 (2). Pletnev

These performances are articulated with characteristic mastery and clarity, with no nuance of phrasing or dynamic left unobserved. Pletnev always makes an individual sound and brings his own special insights to bear on this repertoire. The sound is very clean and well focused.

7 Bagatelles, Op. 33; 11 Bagatelles, Op. 119; 6 Bagatelles, Op. 126

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550474. Jenö Jandó

Bagatelles, Opp. 33; 119; 126; WoO 52 & 56

 Chan. 9201. John Lill

John Lill characteristically takes a serious view of these miniatures, bringing out their relationship to some of the full masterpieces.

Jandó plays with a crisply rhythmic style, almost at times as if he were thinking of a fortepiano. Then, in the later works, he finds more depth of tone and is thoughtful as well as flamboyant. He is given an excellent, modern, digital recording.

7 Bagatelles, Op. 33; 6 Bagatelles, Op. 126; 6 Variations in F, Op. 34; 15 Variations with Fugue in E flat (Eroica), Op. 35; 32 Variations on an Original Theme in C min., WoO 80

Ⓜ (*) Sony (ADD) SM2K 52646 (2). Gould

6 Bagatelles, Op. 126; Polonaise in C, Op. 89; Variations & Fugue on a Theme from 'Prometheus' (Eroica Variations), Op. 35

 Nim. NIM 5017. Roberts

Bernard Roberts gives a characteristically fresh and forthright reading of the Eroica Variations, recorded in exceptionally vivid sound. He may not have quite the flair of Brendel, but the crispness and clarity of his playing are most refreshing. The shorter pieces bring performances even more intense, with the Bagatelles – for all their brevity – given last-period intensity.

Glenn Gould's Bagatelles and Variations are better and less quirky than his Beethoven piano sonatas, which are not competitive. Gould fanatics can invest in them; others who are not converted can be assured that any eccentricity is positive and thought-provoking. Not a first choice but deserving of a place in the catalogue.

Bagatelles, Op. 33; in A min. (Für Elise), WoO 59; Fantasia in G min., Op. 77; Minuet in E flat, WoO 82; Rondo in A, WoO 49; 6 Variations on an Original Theme in F, Op. 34; 15 Variations & Fugue on a Theme from Prometheus (Eroica), Op. 35

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.110764. Schnabel

These pieces are played by Schnabel with a refreshing simplicity: the way he presents the Original Theme of Op. 34 is extraordinarily apt, and there is a remarkable amalgam of drama and classicism in the Eroica Variations that is totally compelling. Mark Obert-Thorn's transfers of the 1937–8 Abbey Road recordings are as satisfying as ever.

Bagatelles, Op. 126; Rondo a capriccio, Op. 129; 33 Variations on a Waltz by Diabelli

✿ (BB) () Naxos mono 8.110765. Schnabel

Schnabel's account of the Diabelli Variations was made in the 1930s. It has never been surpassed, although there have been readings which have come some of the way close to approaching it (Horszowski, Kovacevich, Brendel and, more recently, Piotr Anderszewski). But there is a special authority and wisdom here, and this set should be in every collector's library.

6 Variations, Op. 34; 6 Variations on 'Nel cor più non mi sento', WoO 70; 15 Variations & Fugue on a Theme from 'Prometheus' (Eroica Variations), Op. 35; 32 Variations, WoO 80

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550676. Jandó

6 Variations, Op. 34; 15 Variations & Fugue on a Theme from 'Prometheus' (Eroica Variations), Op. 35; 2 Rondos, Op. 51; Bagatelle: Für Elise, WoO 59

🔑  Chan. 8616. Lortie

Louis Lortie's readings have both grandeur and authority. This account of the Eroica Variations belongs in exalted company and can be recommended alongside such magisterial accounts as that of Gilels.

Jenö Jandó essays the same strong, direct style in his performances of the two major sets of variations as he does in the sonatas. Occasionally his forceful manner in Op. 35 and the C minor Variations reaches the point of brusqueness, but no one could deny the strength of his playing. His approach is appropriately lighter in Op. 34. Excellent recording, clear and vivid.

33 Variations on a Waltz by Diabelli, Op. 120

Ⓝ 🔑 * Onyx 4035. Kovacevich – BACH: Partita 4, BWV828 ****

🔑 Ⓑ * Virgin 5 03406-2. Anderszewski

Stephen Kovacevich first recorded the Diabelli Variations in 1968 and his version (available on Philips 475 7556) long reigned supreme. Forty years and much experience (including recording the thirty-two sonatas and the concertos) separate it from this newcomer. Nothing this artist does is less than compelling and this masterly newcomer enriches his discography with its sweep and control, and depth of feeling. This is balm for the soul.

Piotr Anderszewski's Wigmore performance of the Diabelli excited rave reviews and this searching and finely recorded account is also outstanding, most thoughtful and impressively played.

On Philips Alfred Brendel, here working in the studio, captures the music's dynamism, the sense of an irresistible force building up this immense structure, section by section. It would be hard to imagine a more dramatic reading, sparked off by the cheeky wit of Brendel's treatment of the Diabelli theme itself. The whirlwind power of the whole performance is irresistible, and the piano-sound is full and immediate. (Ph. 426 232-2)

33 Variations on a Waltz by Diabelli, Op. 120; 32 Variations on an Original Theme in C min., WoO 80

🔑 (BB)  ASV Resonance CD RSN 3058. Frith

Benjamin Frith brings out both the rhythmic urgency and power of the Diabelli Variations, playing with a consistent sense of spontaneity, persuasively leading on from one variation to the next and bringing magnetic intensity to the meditative variations. He then takes the great fugue just before the end of the work at a sensible speed that allows him to spring the rhythms and shape it effectively, rounding off the work with a crisply pointed account of the final Minuet which keeps in mind its dance origin. He follows with a masterly account of the 32 Variations in C minor, in which flamboyant virtuosity and poetry are well contrasted. Good, bright piano-sound, set in a helpfully warm acoustic.

VOCAL MUSIC

Adelaide; An die ferne Geliebte, Op. 98; An die Geliebte; An die Hoffnung; Aus Goethes Faust; Klage; Der Liebende; Das Liedchen von der Ruhe; 6 Lieder aus Gellert; Mailied; Neue Liebe, neues Leben; Sehnsucht; Wonne der Wehmut

 Hyp. CDA 67055. Genz, Vignoles

The German baritone Stephan Genz not only has a voice of warm, velvety beauty, but he already shows a rare depth of understanding. In the very first song here, An die Hoffnung ('To Hope') – Beethoven's response to suffering – he sings with rapt concentration, using the widest range of expression, while songs like Adelaide bring out his honeyed tone, allied to flawless legato. That contrasts with the youthful energy of the brisk songs and the biting irony of Goethe's Song of the Flea, taken very fast. A disc to have one reassessing Beethoven as songwriter, with the mould-breaking cycle, An die ferne Geliebte, as a fine climax.

Adelaide; Der Kuss; Resignation; Zärtliche Liebe

Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 449 747-2. Wunderlich, Giesen – SCHUBERT: Lieder; SCHUMANN: Dichterliebe ***

Wunderlich was 35 when he recorded these songs, and the unique bloom of the lovely voice is beautifully caught. Though the accompanist is too metrical at times, the freshness of Wunderlich's singing makes one grieve again over his untimely death.

Ah, perfido, Op. 65; Fidelio: Abscheulicher!

Ⓝ (BB) () Naxos mono 8 111287. Schwarzkopf, Philh. O, Karajan – SCHUBERT: Lieder ()

Schwarzkopf's celebrated performances with Karajan date from 1954 and make a fine bonus for her early Schubert recital with Edwin Fischer.

(i–iv) Cantata on the Death of Emperor Joseph II, WoO 87; (ii–v) Cantata on the Accession of Emperor Leopold II, WoO 88. Meeresstille und glückliche Fahrt, Op. 112; (ii) Opferlied

🔑 ❀  Hyp. CDA 66880. (i) Watson; (ii) Rigby; (iii) Mark Ainsley; (iv) van Dam; (v) Howarth; Corydon Singers & O, Best

Arguably Beethoven's first major masterpiece, WoO 87 was one of the few early, unpublished works of which he approved: when he came to write Fidelio he used the soaring theme from the first of the cantata's soprano arias for Leonore's sublime moment in the finale, O Gott! Welch ein Augenblick. The aria is sung radiantly here by Janice Watson. Relishing the tragic C minor power of the choruses, Matthew Best conducts a superb performance, incisive and deeply moving, with excellent soloists as well as a fine chorus. The second cantata, much shorter, written soon afterwards, brings anticipations of the Fifth Symphony and of the choral finale of the Ninth, while the two shorter pieces – with Jean Rigby as soloist in the Opferlied – make a generous fill-up, equally well performed. The atmospheric recording combines weight and transparency.

(i) Cantata on the Death of Joseph II; (ii) Mass in C Op. 86

Ⓝ  Accord 480 0793. Radio Lettone Ch, Montpellier National Orch, Friedmann Layer with (i) Ptasseek, Davidchuka, Soulis, Antoun, Burmester; (ii) Komocar, Gubish, Salens, Wilde

On this Accord disc the Lettone Radio Choir give a fresh, incisive performance, the more compelling for being recorded live, and the soprano, Cornelia Ptasseek, brings out the 'gulp' quality in the great sublime theme in its build-up in triple time. The Mass is fully the equal of Haydn's late Masses. The performance under Friedmann Layer has the same positive qualities as the Cantata under the same conductor, and though the mezzo falls short of the other soloists, the singing of choir and soloists alike is excellent. The live recordings are generally first-rate, even if the inclusion of applause at the end of each work tends to be intrusive. An exceptionally generous coupling at almost exactly 80 minutes. A credit to Accord, a French subsidiary of Universal.

Che fa il mio bene? (2 versions); Dimmi, ben mio; Ecco quel fiero istante!; In questa tomba oscura; La partenza; T'intendo, si, mio cor

 Decca 440 297-2. Bartoli, A. Schiff – HAYDN: Arianna a Naxos; MOZART: Ridente la calma; SCHUBERT: Da quel sembiante appresi, etc. ***

These rare Italian songs come as part of a recital which has an outstanding account of Haydn's Arianna a Naxos as its highlight. La partenza has a winningly ingenuous simplicity and the Ariettas (including two completely contrasting settings of Che fa il mio bene?) are also full of charm.

Mass in C, Op. 86; Cantatas: Elegischer Gesang, Op. 118; Meeresstille und glückliche Fahrt, Op. 112

🔑  Chan. 0703. Evans, Stephen, Padmore, Varcoe, Coll. Mus. 90, Hickox

(i) Mass in C, Op. 86; Meeresstille und glückliche Fahrt (Calm Sea and a Prosperous Voyage), Op. 112

🔑  DG 435 391-2. Margiono, Robbin, Kendall, Miles, Monteverdi Ch., ORR, Gardiner

Beethoven's Mass was initially a failure. Yet Hickox consistently brings out the joy of the inspiration, with excellent soloists and a fresh-toned choir, and directs similarly concentrated readings of two brief choral works of 1814, the fine Goethe setting, Meeresstille und glückliche Fahrt, and the simple but deeply felt Elegiac Song (not offered by Gardiner), which come as welcome couplings.

In this long-underrated masterpiece, Gardiner gives just as refreshing a performance as his earlier, prize-winning account of the Missa solemnis. Aptly clear-toned soloists match the freshness of the Monteverdi Choir. As an imaginatively chosen coupling Gardiner offers the dramatic soprano scena, Ah! perfido, with Charlotte Margiono as soloist, and the brief choral cantata, Meeresstille und glückliche Fahrt.

Mass in C; Fidelio: Prisoners' Chorus

Ⓝ Ⓜ LSO Live SACD LSO 0594. Matthews, Mingardo, Ainslie, Miles, LSO Ch & O, Colin Davis

The LSO Live performance is more vigorous and intense, less heavy, than Davis's previous version. The singing of the LSO Chorus is incandescent from beginning to end, with high dynamic contrasts, so that the fortissimos hit the ear thrillingly, and the engineers have here managed to get a good clear and open sound in the notoriously difficult Barbican acoustic. The Gloria opens with exhilarating attack, and so does the Credo, with dramatic contrasts for such intimate passages as the Et incarnatus est (with its clarinet solo) and with the Et resurrexit introduced not by the full chorus but by the bass, Alistair Miles in glorious voice. The soloists make a first-rate team, with the soprano, Sally Matthews and the mezzo, Sarah Mingardo both excellent, and though the tenor, John Mark Ainslie, is not as sweet-toned as once he was, he sings sensitively with clean focus.

(i) Mass in C, Op. 86; (ii) Missa solemnis in D, Op. 123

Ⓝ (BB)  EMI Gemini (ADD) 5 17664-2 (2) New Philh. Ch., with (i) Harper, (i; ii) Janet Baker, Tear, Sotin; (ii) Ameling, Altmeyer, Rintzler; (i) New Phil. O; (ii) LPO, Giulini 1971, 1976

Giulini recorded Beethoven's two masses six years apart, in 1971 and 1976. The performance of the C major work is by far the finer of the two, inspired, polished and intense, with a fine quartet of soloists and a superb choir. Alas, while the recording of the Missa solemnis is comparably vivid, the performance rarely conveys and kind of hushed tension, and the ensemble of the chorus is far from perfect. There are excellent soloists but they are very closely balanced.

Missa solemnis in D, Op. 123 (DVD Version)

🔑  DG DVD 073 4391. Tomowa-Sintow, Baldani, Tappy, van Dam, Vienna Singverein, BPO, Karajan

Karajan first conducted the Missa solemnis in 1937 and he returned to the score many times throughout his life. He also recorded it on four occasions. The present performance comes from the Salzburg Easter Festival of 1979 and was televised by Österreichesrundfunk that year; their transmission forms the basis of this DVD. It is good to see as well as hear Karajan in this mighty score for, along with Klemperer, he was probably its greatest modern interpreter. His soloists, especially Tomowa-Sintow and José van Dam, are in imposing form and the Wiener Singverein and the Berlin Philharmonic magnificent. No other partnership has ever produced so extraordinary a tonal refinement or range of colour. Self-recommending.

Missa solemnis in D, Op. 123 (CD Versions)

🔑  DG 429 779-2. Margiono, Robbin, Kendall, Miles, Monteverdi Ch., E. Bar. Sol., Gardiner

🔑 () Testament mono SBT 1408. Söderström, Höffgen, Haefliger, Frick, Philh. Ch. & O, Klemperer

🔑  HM HMC 901557. Mannion, Remmert, Taylor, Hauptmann, La Chapelle Royale Coll. Voc., O des Champs Elysées, Herreweghe

Ⓜ () Medici Arts (mono) MMO 15-2. Kupper, S. Wagner, Schock, Greindl, N. German R. Ch., Cologne R. Ch. & RSO, Klemperer

Gardiner's inspired reading matches even the greatest of traditional performances on record in dramatic weight and spiritual depth, while bringing out the white heat of Beethoven's inspiration with new intensity. Though the performers are fewer in number than in traditional accounts, the Monteverdi Choir sings with bright, luminous tone, and the four soloists are excellent. The recording is vivid too. Even those who normally resist period performance will find this compelling.

In this radio recording from Cologne in 1955, Klemperer, with excellent forces, conducts an intensely dramatic reading. In every way this is preferable to the studio recording he made with Philharmonia forces, except that it is made in mono. There is no suspicion of the excessive heaviness which later afflicted Klemperer's Beethoven.

Klemperer's legendary 1963 broadcast of the Missa solemnis with a distinguished line-up of soloists and the magnificent Philharmonia forces does not disappoint memories, and it is good to have it in such miraculously restored sound.

OPERA

Fidelio (complete; DVD versions)

🔑 * DG DVD 940 073 4159. Janowitz, Popp, Kollo, Sotin, Jungwirth, Dallapozza, V. State Op. Ch & O, Bernstein

Ⓝ  DG DVD 073 4438 Gwyneth Jones, Talvela, Greindl, Miljakovic, Greindl, Ch. & O of Berlin Deusche Opera, Boehm V/D Ernst Wild

🔑  Arthaus DVD 101 099. Söderström, De Ridder, Gale, Appelgren, Allman, Glyndebourne Festival Ch, LPO, Haitink (Director: Peter Hall; V/D: Dave Heather)

In a production by Otto Schenk and with sets by Gunther Schneider-Siemssen, Bernstein conducts a classic account of Fidelio with an outstanding cast. This live recording, made in January 1978, anticipated the studio recording made for DG a month later with an almost identical cast. The great finale of Act II in particular conveys a rare dedication, with Bernstein conducting 'as though in a trance', as one commentator put it. Gundula Janowitz sings gloriously as Leonore, with Lucia Popp radiant as Marzelline. All the male soloists are firm and clear, each of them at their peak, not least René Kollo as Florestan and Hans Sotin as Pizarro. The sound is on the dry side, but the magnetism of the performance quickly makes one overlook that.

It is a joy to see Karl Boehm (rarely caught on video) directing the Overture of Fidelio with great spirit, before he and the orchestra are observed no more, for Ernst Wild's 1970 film takes us straight into the opera's opening scene, photographed as in a normal movie, with close-ups (sometimes superimposed in duets and trios) and the big scenes widely spatial. The sets, too, are totally realistic, with the domestic scene in the living room of Rocco's quarters contrasted with the fortress courtyard where the prisoners encounter daylight and spring, and finally the dark, subterranean dungeon where Florestan is incarcerated. During the opening scene, subtitles give a simple synopsis of the background to the story. With a splendidly assembled cast, without a vocal flaw, this realization of Beethoven's great score could not be more accessible or rewarding. Gwyneth Jones looks the part of Fidelio and sings gloriously as Leonora, and is matched by her companions; Josef Greindl's resonant Rocco is splendidly characterized, and his daughter, Marzelline has an unexaggerated charm. Gustav Neidlinger makes an effectively villainous governor. Boehm conducts with consistent vitality and the recording is full-blooded if a little over-bright at times.

It is good to have as consummate an actress as Elisabeth Söderström as Leonore in this vintage Glyndebourne account of Fidelio, recorded in 1979. That was well before the new opera house was built there; in the old, small auditorium there is no question of Söderström's pure soprano being overwhelmed, even if the dry acoustic is not a help. Bernard Haitink conducts a powerful performance, with Kurt Appelgren a superb Rocco, Elizabeth Gale a sweet Marzelline, and Anton de Ridder an unstrained Florestan. Though Robert Allman is a rather gritty-toned Pizarro, that goes well with the character. John Busy's sets for Peter Hall's production vividly capture the atmosphere of the Napoleonic period, including the domestic scenes at the start.

Fidelio (complete; CD versions)

🔑 ✿ () Testament mono SBT 2 1328 (2). Jurinac, Vickers, Frick, Hotter, Morison, Dobson, ROHCG Ch. & O, Klemperer

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * EMI (ADD) 5 67364-2 (2). Ludwig, Vickers, Frick, Berry, Crass, Philh. Ch. & O, Klemperer (with Overture: Leonora 3)

Ⓜ  DG 474 420-2 (2). Janowitz, Kollo, Jungwirth, Sotin, Popp, Dallapozza, Fischer-Dieskau, V. State Op. Ch., VPO, Bernstein

(BB)  LSO Live LSO 0593 (2). Brewer, MacMaster, Sigmundsson, Matthews, Uusitalo, Kennedy, L. Symphony Ch., LSO, C. Davis

(BB)  Naxos 8.660070/71. Nielsen, Winbergh, Moll, Titus, Lienbacher, Pecoraro, Hungarian R. Ch., Nicolaus Esterházy Sinfonia, Halász

The superb BBC recording of the first Klemperer performance at Covent Garden in February 1961 in many ways even outshines his classic studio recording, so that the drama of the piece comes over the more vividly, with speeds generally a degree faster than in the studio, and though his decision to include the Leonore 3 overture in the once-traditional place just before the finale is controversial, the performance of it is hair-raisingly exciting, leaving one agog to hear the sublime sequence of the finale. Vickers and Frick are if anything even more magnetic than in the studio recording, and the rest of the cast includes at least one singer who totally outshines her studio counterpart, Elsie Morison, whose enchanting portrait of Marzelline makes her EMI rival seem characterless. The casting of the great Wagnerian, Hans Hotter, as Pizarro brings impressive weight to the role, making this arch-villain far more of a threat than he is with the excellent but relatively lightweight Walter Berry on EMI. John Dobson makes a warmly engaging Jaquino, and Forbes Robinson is a noble Don Fernando; but it is Sena Jurinac singing Leonore for the very first time who sets the seal on the whole performance. She may not have quite the same weight as Ludwig on the studio set, but her projection is superb in singing which combines both brightness and warmth, both noble defiance and womanly compassion. In the excellent Testament transfer the radio sound is astonishingly vivid, with the voices cleanly balanced even when the singers move around on stage.

Klemperer's great studio set of Fidelio, now rightly reissued as one of EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century', has been freshly remastered by Allan Ramsay. For some reason, the Overture, though full-bodied, lacks absolute sharpness of focus; but, once the singers enter, the quality of the splendid (1962) Kingsway Hall recording is very apparent, with the voices beautifully caught in relation to the orchestra, all within a glowing ambience. The result is a triumph to match the unique incandescence and spiritual strength of the performance, superbly cast, which leads to a final scene in which the parallel with the finale of the Choral Symphony is underlined. The documentation, including a full translation, is in every way excellent. The Overture, Leonore 3 has been added as a postlude, an outstanding performance excellently transferred.

Bernstein's highly dramatic Fidelio brings some splendid singing from a consistently fine cast, with Lucia Popp a delightful Marzelline, Janowitz an outstanding Leonore and Kollo an equally strong Florestan. This now re-emerges as one of DG's 'Originals'.

Recorded at concerts in the Barbican in May 2006, Sir Colin Davis's version is crisp and dramatic, dedicated in such numbers as the great canon Quartet of Act I, and rising to a thrilling climax in Act II. Christine Brewer is the superb Leonore, if anything even stronger and warmer than she is in the Chandos version in English. Her Abscheulicher brings out all her masterly qualities to the full, thanks to her big, firm, creamy voice, perfectly controlled, whether in the spacious legato of the main section or in the florid passages of the final cabaletta, which she shades expressively. The rest of the cast sings strongly too, with John MacMaster a clear, bold Florestan, Juha Uusitalo a Pizarro more lyrical than usual, and Kristinn Sigmundsson a finely controlled Rocco, baritonal but not as old-sounding as he might be. Sally Matthews as Marzelline and Andrew Kennedy as Jaquino make a charming pair of lovers, and though the Barbican sound is on the dry side, the clarity of textures brings compensation, with ample weight in the sublime concluding scene.

The Naxos Fidelio from Budapest offers a first-rate modern cast incisively directed by Michael Halász, and very well recorded. Inga Nielsen is an outstanding Leonore, with every note sharply focused, using the widest tonal and dynamic range from bright fortissimo to velvety half-tone. Few singers on disc in recent years begin to rival her account of the Abscheulicher, ranging from venomous anger to radiant tenderness. Gösta Winbergh makes a formidable Florestan, with Alan Titus a firm, sinister Pizarro and Kurt Moll a splendid Rocco. Only the Don Fernando falls short, with a voice too woolly to focus cleanly. Even making no allowance for price, this version is among the very finest to have arrived in years, gaining in clarity and incisiveness from the relatively small scale.

Rattle's Berlin recording was made at a concert performance in the Philharmonie soon after he had conducted staged performances at the Salzburg Easter Festival. Yet, with a flawed cast, the result is one of the rare failures of his discography – a comfortable run-through rather than a genuinely dramatic experience. Even the Canon Quartet in Act I lacks tension, with none of the rapt mystery it should have. Only at the end of Act II does the performance acquire something of the bite one expects, and even then the opening of the finale is brisk to the point of sounding perfunctory. (EMI Gemini 2 17630-2).

Fidelio (sung in English; CD Version)

Ⓜ  Chan. 3123 (2). Brewer, Lloyd, Evans, Hunka, Purves, Margison, Philh. Ch. & O, Parry

It is a measure of David Parry's achievement as an opera conductor (not least in Peter Moores's Opera in English series) that, facing the challenge of directing Beethoven's Fidelio, he offers so strong and cohesive a reading. Parry is helped not only by outstandingly vivid recording, among the finest ever to come from Chandos, but an exceptionally consistent cast, with no weak link in it. It is good to have so distinguished a soprano as Christine Brewer as Leonore, at once heroic but intensely human and warm, brilliant in the demanding Abscheulicher. She is well matched by the Florestan of Richard Margison, who sings his long opening aria in Act II with unusual subtlety, starting on the gentlest pianissimo, always vocalizing lyrically and never barking in heldentenor style, suggesting a fresh, youthful hero. Rebecca Evans, sweet and radiant, is outstanding as Marzelline, opposite the light, clear Jaquino of Peter Wedd, with the veteran, Robert Lloyd, as a characterful Rocco. Like the Florestan, the Pizarro of Pavlo Hunka sounds relatively youthful, again a singer who vocalizes well instead of barking, and Christopher Purves too as the governor, Don Fernando, sounds youthfully firm. A fresh, convincing reading that offers well-produced dialogue in English.

BELL, William Henry (1873–1946)

Viola Concerto (Rosa Mystica)

Ⓝ Ⓜ  Dutton CDLX 7216. Chase, BBC Concert O, Bell – STANLEY BATE: Viola Concerto; VAUGHAN WILLIAMS: Romance ***

William Henry Bell was born in St Albans and spent the first thirty-nine years of his life there or in London. He studied with Stanford and Frederick Corder and made a name for himself as a composer with his Walt Whitman symphony of 1902. In 1912 Bell was appointed Director of Music in Capetown and his creative career flourished: there are five settings of Japanese No plays, and much orchestral music including five symphonies. The Viola Concerto comes from 1916 and though wanting a strongly distinctive personality (it is not as individual as the Stanley Bate coupling), it is meditative and thoughtful. Lewis Foreman's authoritative note is supplemented by a personal reminiscence by John Joubert who grew up in South Africa. The Vaughan Williams Romance makes an appealing makeweight.

BELLINI, Vincenzo (1801–35)

OPERA

Beatrice di Tenda (complete; DVD version)

*() TDK DVD DV OPBDT (2). Gruberová, Volle, Kaluza, Hernández, Zurich Op. Ch. & O, Viotti (V/D: Yves André Hubert)

Recorded in December 2001, the TDK DVD version offers an updated production from Zurich Opera House, with modern dress and geometric sets with stairs and handrails as though on an ocean liner. The performance – after Beatrice's delayed entry into the story – revolves round the fine performance of Edita Gruberová in the title-role, bright and agile, if occasionally edgy as recorded. Raul Hernández sings stylishly as the hero, Orombello, and the mezzo, Stefania Kaluza, is strongly cast as Agnese, with Marcello Viotti the purposeful conductor. The opera alone (144 minutes) might have been squeezed on to a single disc, but with a 26-minute interview (in French) with the conductor also included, the set spreads to a second disc.

Beatrice di Tenda (complete; CD version); Arias: Norma: Casta diva. I puritani: Son vergin vezzosa; Oh rendetemi la speme. La sonnambula: Ah, non credea mirarti

🔑 Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 433 706-2 (3). Sutherland, Pavarotti, Opthof, Veasey, Ward, Amb. Op. Ch., LSO, Bonynge

Dame Joan Sutherland had made Beatrice di Tenda her own when this recording was made in 1966, a dazzling example of her art with Bonynge, a natural Bellini conductor. The supporting cast could hardly be better, with Pavarotti highly responsive. The recording, of Decca's best vintage, has been transferred to CD with vivid atmosphere and colour. Four famous arias are provided as a filler: one from Sutherland's 1964 Norma, two from her 1963 I puritani and one from the 1962 La sonnambula.

I Capuleti ed i Montecchi (DVD version)

(*) Dynamic DVD 33504. Ciofi, Polito, Formaggia, Sacchi, Amodio, Italian International O, Acocella (V/D: Marco Scalti)

Luciano Acocella's performance was recorded live at the Martina Franca Festival in the summer of 2005. It is a contemporary-dress production – which we tend to resist – with machine- and hand-guns instead of swords. But the Ducal Palace makes an attractive backcloth, so if you can swallow the director's unwillingness to mount a traditional in-period production you will find the attractively young Patrizia Ciofi as Giulietta and Clara Polito (mezzo) as Romeo make an ardent pair of lovers. Friar Laurence, a tenor role, is impressively sung by Nicola Amodio. On DVD this is only a stopgap, but it is an enjoyable one from a vocal point of view, and the chorus does not let the side down.

I Capuleti ed i Montecchi (CD versions)

🔑  Teldec 3984 21472-2 (2). Larmore, Hong, Groves, Aceto, Lloyd, SCO, Runnicles

Ⓜ (*) EMI 5 09144-2 (2). Baltsa, Gruberová, Raffanti, Howell, Tomlinson, ROHCG Ch. & O, Muti

Donald Runnicles offers a fresh and sympathetic reading of Bellini's 'Romeo and Juliet' opera with an outstanding cast. Jennifer Larmore is warm, fresh and firm as Romeo, youthfully ardent. Most remarkable of all is the Korean soprano Hei-Kyung Hong as Juliet, at once pure and warm of tone and passionate of expression, equally bringing out the youthfulness of the heroine. As Tebaldo, Paul Groves is clear and stylish, even though the tone is not Italianate, and Robert Lloyd is a commanding Lorenzo. Though the competition is strong, the Teldec set scores both in its casting and in its fullness of sound.

Muti's set was recorded live at Covent Garden in March 1984, the sound is hard and close. Agnes Baltsa makes a passionately expressive Romeo and Edita Gruberová a Juliet who is not just brilliant in coloratura but also sweet and tender. Muti's conducting is masterly, especially striking at the end of Act I, when the five principals sing a hushed quintet. With excellent contributions from the refined tenor Dano Raffanti (as Tebaldo), Gwynne Howell and John Tomlinson, it is a performance to blow the cobwebs off this once-neglected opera.

In the earlier EMI studio recording, made at Abbey Road in 1975, Janet Baker responds richly to the unfailing lyricism of Bellini's writing. Beverly Sills has her moments of shrillness, but the rest of the singing is very commendable, and the conducting of Giuseppe Patanè is beautifully sprung and the recording is atmospheric. No libretto with translation or synopsis is provided, but the former is available on the EMI Classics Website (www.musicfromemi.com). (EMI Gemini 5 86055-2)

Norma (complete; DVD versions)

🔑  DG DVD 073 4219 (2). Gruberová, Ganassi, Todorovich, Scandiuzzi, Bav. State Op. Ch. & O, Haider (Director: Jürgen Rose; V/D: Brian Large)

🔑  Arthaus DVD 100 180. Sutherland, Elkins, Stevens, Grant, Opera Australia Ch., Sydney Elizabethan O, Bonynge (V/D: Sandro Sequi)

Edita Gruberová is a superb Norma. At her peak, her glorious singing is matched by fine acting, a totally convincing performance of the tragic heroine forced to choose between her lover and children, and her key religious role. Sonia Ganassi makes a fine, touching partner as Adalgisa. Their great central duet scene is memorably beautiful. Zoran Todorovich is a strong Pollione, with a bold, ringing tenor voice, and Roberto Scandiuzzi is an impressive Oroveso, and his contribution to the final scene is very moving. Friedrich Haider conducts his excellent chorus and orchestra with understanding and real flair. Altogether, this is very impressive indeed, and the sets and costumes are simple and effective. Choice between this and the Sutherland Australian set is not an easy one, for both have much to offer. But while Sutherland is at her finest, she does not have a Pollione to match Todorovich, and this Bavarian production is admirably directed.

Recorded live at the Sydney Opera House in 1978, this Australian Opera production by Sandro Sequi is chiefly valuable for presenting Dame Joan Sutherland in one of her most important roles when she was still at the peak of her powers. Casta diva finds Dame Joan in glorious voice, at once powerful, creamily beautiful and wonderfully secure. With sets by Fiorella Mariani it is a traditional production, springing no surprises, encouraging the diva to relax in the role, never more so than in her big duet with Adalgisa, Mira o Norma, ending in a dazzling account of the cabaletta, where Margreta Elkins equally sparkles, and Richard Bonynge draws light, crisply sprung playing from the orchestra. Less satisfying is the singing of Ronald Stevens as Pollione, powerful and heroic, but rather too coarse for Bellinian cantilena. Clifford Grant by contrast could hardly be more cleanly focused as Oroveso. The sound is a little dry, not as full-bodied as in the finest, fully digital recordings, but the sharpness of attack heightens the dramatic thrust of Bonynge's conducting.

Norma (complete; CD versions)

🔑 Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 475 7902 (3). Sutherland, Horne, Alexander, Cross, Minton, Ward, L. Symphony Ch. & O, Bonynge

🔑 Ⓜ () EMI mono 5 62668-2 (3). Callas, Picchi, Stignani, Vaghi, ROHCG Ch. & O, Gui

Ⓜ () EMI mono 5 62638-2 [562642-2] (3). Callas, Stignani, Filippeschi, Rossi-Lemeni, La Scala, Milan, Ch. and O, Serafin

(*) Decca 414 476-2 (3). Sutherland, Pavarotti, Caballé, Ramey, Welsh Nat. Op. Ch. & O, Bonynge

Ⓜ (*) EMI (ADD) CMS5 66428-2 (3). Callas, Corelli, Ludwig, Zaccharia, Ch. & O of La Scala, Milan, Serafin

In her first, mid-1960s recording of Norma, Sutherland was joined by an Adalgisa in Marilyn Horne whose control of florid singing is just as remarkable as Sutherland's own. The other soloists are very good indeed. A most compelling performance, helped by the conducting of Richard Bonynge; and the Walthamstow recording is vivid but also atmospheric in its CD format. This set has now been reissued at mid-price as part of Decca's 'Classic Opera Collection', which carries full text and translation.

Recorded live at Covent Garden, the 1952 account of Norma presents Callas at her very peak, with Ebe Stignani, ideally cast as Adalgisa, a splendid foil. More than her studio recordings of the role, this finds Callas in perfect voice, with none of the flaws that developed later in her career, notably unsteadiness under pressure. Callas's top notes are immaculate, and her coloratura agile, but it is the weight of emotion conveyed that makes this performance unique. As Pollione, the tenor Mirto Picchi cannot match the women in the cast, but at least he sings with firmer, less strained tone than Mario Filippeschi in Callas's first studio recording of Norma, made for EMI in 1954.

In Callas's later mono set, the recording is opened out impressively in the new transfer, and the sense of presence gives wonderful intensity to one of the diva's most powerful performances. Balance of soloists is close but Callas justifies everything, even the cuts. The veteran, Ebe Stignani, as Adalgisa is a characterful partner in the sisters' duets, but Filippeschi is disappointingly thin-toned and strained, and Rossi-Lemeni is gruff. This is now one of EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century'.

Though Dame Joan Sutherland was 58 when her second Norma recording was made, her singing is still impressive, but Pavarotti is in some ways the set's greatest strength, easily expressive as Pollione. Caballé as Adalgisa seems determined to outdo Sutherland in cooing self-indulgently. Full, brilliant, well-balanced recording of the complete score.

By the time Callas came to record her 1960 stereo version, the tendency to hardness and unsteadiness in the voice above the stave, always apparent, had grown serious; but the interpretation was as sharply illuminating as ever, a unique assumption, helped by Christa Ludwig as Adalgisa, while Corelli sings heroically. Serafin as ever is the most persuasive of Bellini conductors.

(i) Norma (complete). Excerpts: (ii) Ite sul colle, o Druidi; Ah! Del Tebro al giogo indegno; (iii) Merco all'altar di Venere . . . Me protegge!; (iv) Sedioze voci . . . Casta diva . . . Ah! bello a me ritorna; Mira, o Norma; (v) Sgombra è la sacra selva; (vi) Deh! Non voleri vittime

🔑 (BB) () Naxos mono 8.110325/7. (i) Callas, Stignani, Filippeschi, Rossi-Lemeni, La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, Serafin; (ii) Pinza, Met. Op. Ch.; (iii) Merli; (iv) Ponselle; (v) Minghini-Cattaneo; (vi) Cigna, Pasero, Breviario

Mark Obert-Thorn's impressive new transfer has been made from the best portions of two 1950s-era British LP pressings, and he has taken the opportunity to add earlier, historical recordings (made between 1927 and 1937), among which the Pinza and Ponselle items obviously stand out, but the final excerpt (Deh! Non voleri vittime) includes some superb singing from Gina Cigna.

Il pirata (complete)

Ⓜ ((*)) EMI mono 5 66432-2 (2). Callas, Ego, Ferraro, Peterson, Watson, Sarfaty, American Op. Soc. Ch. & O, Rescigno

Though Callas herself shows signs of vocal deterioration, with top notes often raw and uneven, hers is a fire-eating performance, totally distinctive, instantly magnetic from the moment she utters her first word, 'Sorgete', in Act I. The rest of the cast is indifferent, with Constantine Ego strenuous in the tenor role of Ernesto. The second disc offers an alternative recording of the final scene, made in Amsterdam six months later, with Rescigno conducting the Concertgebouw Orchestra and with Callas in smoother vocal form, helped by less raw recording.

I Puritani (DVD Version)

 DG DVD 073 4421 (2). Netrebko, Cutler, Vassallo, Relyea, NY Met. Opera Ballet, Ch. & O, Summers (Director: Sandro Sequi; V/D: Gary Henderson)

At last a worthy DVD of I Puritani, recorded live at the Met. in 2007, a traditional production but an imaginative one. It is very much dominated by the superb portrayal of Elvira by Anna Netrebko, who sings superbly throughout and acts as a convincingly unhinged heroine, to make the Mad Scene visually as well as vocally a dramatic highlight. She is well matched by Eric Cutler's Arturo and the celebrated quartet of singers needed for this opera is completed by Franco Vassallo as Riccardo and John Relyea's resonant Giorgio. Patrick Summers directs the score with conviction, and with attractive sets and costumes it is no wonder that the return of this vintage production brought rave reviews all round. The camerawork is excellent and so is the recording. As a bonus, we go backstage with Renée Fleming talking to Netrebko. A strong recommendation.

I Puritani (complete; CD versions)

🔑 * Decca (ADD) 417 588-2 (3). Sutherland, Pavarotti, Ghiaurov, Luccardi, Caminada, Cappuccilli, ROHCG Ch. & O, Bonynge

🔑 () EMI mono 5 56275-2 (2). Callas, Di Stefano, Panerai, Rossi-Lemeni, La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, Serafin

Whereas her earlier set was recorded when Sutherland had adopted a soft-grained style, with consonants largely eliminated, her singing brings fresh, bright singing, rich and agile. Pavarotti emerges as a Bellini stylist, with Ghiaurov and Cappuccilli making up an impressive cast, but with Anita Caminada disappointing as Enrichetta. Vivid, atmospheric recording.

In 1953, when she made this recording, Callas's voice was already hard on top and with some unsteadiness, but her portrayal is uniquely compelling. None of the other soloists is ideal, though most of the singing is acceptable. The mono sound is now opened up and the solo voices project well. Like other EMI/Callas recordings, this has been handsomely redocumented. Highlights are available on 5 66665-2.

La sonnambula (complete; CD versions)

🔑  Decca 417 424-2 (2). Sutherland, Pavarotti, D. Jones, Ghiaurov, L. Op. Ch., Nat. PO, Bonynge

🔑 Ⓑ  Naxos 8.660042/3. D'Artegna, Papadjiakou, Orgonasova, Giménez, Dilbèr, De Vries, Micu, Netherlands R. Ch. and CO, Zedda

🔑 Ⓜ () EMI mono 5 62672-2 (2). Callas, Monti, Cossotto, Zaccaria, Ratti, La Scala, Milan, Ch. and O, Votto

Ⓝ 🔑 (BB) () Naxos mono 111284/5 Callas, Monti, Cossotto, Zaccaria, Ratti, La Scala Milan Ch. & O, Votto (with CHERUBINI: Medea: Dei tuoi figli; SPONTINI: La Vestale: Tu che invoco; O Nume, tutelary; Caro oggetto)

Ⓝ  Decca 478 1082. Bartoli, Flórez, d'Arcangelo, Zurich Op House Ch, orch La Scintilla, De Marchi

(*) Virgin 3 95138-2 (2). Dessay, Meli, Columbara, Mingardo, Lyon Op. Ch. & O, Pidò

Sutherland's singing in her later version is even more affecting and more stylish than before, generally purer and more forthright, if with diction still clouded at times. The challenge of singing opposite Pavarotti adds to the bite of the performance, crisply and resiliently controlled by Bonynge.

The Naxos issue offers the finest version of the opera at any price since Joan Sutherland's. Luba Orgonasova is an expressive and characterful heroine, agile and pointed in her phrasing of coloratura, deeply affecting in the tender legato of Ah non credea mirarti, with tone delicately varied. Raul Giménez is equally stylish as Elvino, the rich landowner, using his light Rossinian tenor most sensitively, with Alberto Zedda, scholar as well as conductor, pointing the accompaniment lightly. The other principals are not quite on this level but they make an excellent team. As usual with Naxos opera issues, there is a libretto in Italian but only a detailed summary of the plot in English.

Substantially cut, the Callas version was recorded in mono in 1957, yet it gives a vivid picture of the diva at the peak of her powers. Nicola Monti makes a strong rather than a subtle contribution, but he blends well with Callas in the duets; and Fiorenza Cossotto is a good Teresa. Again, the remastered recording for the Callas Edition shows considerable improvement.

Mark Obert-Thorn's faithful remastering for Naxos is transferred from a first edition British LP pressing as are the Cherubini and Spontini arias included as a supplement. The set comes with an acceptable cued synopsis.

Natalie Dessay proves a formidable heroine in this demanding opera with her pure, precise soprano, ideally agile, adding extra decorations for the Cabaletta repeats. Carlo Columbara, not nearly so characterful, is still a clear-voiced hero, and Evelino Pidò draws sympathetic singing and playing from the Lyon Choir and Orchestra. First-rate sound.

In Sutherland's earlier version, her use of portamento is often excessive, but the freshness of the voice is a delight, Bonynge's direction is outstanding, and the casting is first rate too, with Nicola Monti a Bellini tenor. Both Sylvia Stahlman as Lisa and Margreta Elkins as Teresa sing beautifully and with keen accuracy. Even Fernando Corena's rather coarse, buffo-style Rodolfo has an attractive vitality. The recording has come up vividly on CD. (Decca 448 966-3)

It was bold of Decca to bring out a version of Bellini's opera that in two ways breaks new ground, the first using a mezzo instead of a high coloratura soprano, echoing to example of Malibran, and using a period orchestra. Admirable as that initiative is, the result is overall disappointing, lacking sparkle, with the rapid vibrato in Bartoli's voice and the flicker in Juan Diego Flórez's tending to be obtrusive, though the baritone Ildebrando d'Arcangelo is excellent.

La Straniera

Ⓝ  Opera Rara ORC38 (2). Ciofi, Schmunck, Shkosa, Mitchell Choir, LPO, Parry

Written in 1829 when Bellini was 27, La Straniera ('The Stranger') comes after Il Pirata, and points forward very clearly to the three masterpieces, Sonnambula, Norma and I Puritani. The very opening brings a brief, lively prelude leading in to a warmly attractive chorus without any delay. The story is typically involved, centring around the identity of the mysterious woman, who roams through the Brittany countryside, wearing a heavy veil. The peasants think she must be a witch, but she is in fact Alaide, the exiled wife of the King of France. There are misunderstandings on every side, involving also the local Count, Arturo and Alaide's disguised brother, Veldeburgo. The confusion leads to violence and a tragic end, when Alaide is falsely accused of murder.

It is no more confusing than many opera plots of the period, and what matters is the quality of the melodic writing, which inspires some excellent singing from this strong cast, led by the fresh-voiced soprano, Patrizia Ciofi, opposite Dario Schmunck in the principal tenor role of Arturo. The recording is excellent, clear and well-balanced, and like so many Opera Rara sets it offers an important rarity that stands as a key work in the composer's development.

BENJAMIN, Arthur (1893–1960)

(i) Cotillion, A Suite of Dance Tunes; (ii) North American Square Dance Suite; (iii) Overture to an Italian Comedy; (ii) Symphony

 Lyrita (ADD/DDD) SRCD 314. (i) LSO, Braithwaite; (ii) LPO, Wordsworth; (iii) RPO, Fredman

Arthur Benjamin was gifted with much natural facility and his Overture to an Italian Comedy is as gay and vivacious as anyone could wish, and it is delightfully scored. At its best, his invention approached real distinction. However, Cotillion, an arrangement of melodies found in 'The Dancing Master' by W. Pearson and John Young in London in 1719, and scored for a fairly large orchestra, hardly seems worth putting on record. The North American Square Dances (originally fiddle music) are more agreeably inventive and pleasingly scored, but much of the music is lyrical – one would have expected more catchily lively dances. The Symphony was written when the composer was 51, suffering from what Benjamin called 'that awful Brahms influence' – the feeling that it was 'impertinent' to compose a symphony before reaching middle age. Yet it is a spectacular work of great confidence. Barry Wordsworth and the LPO play the work with great energy and commitment, and the digital recording is both brilliant and vividly expansive.

(i) Cello Sonatina; (ii) Viola Sonata; (iii) Violin Sonatina; 3 Pieces for Violin & Piano; Jamaican Rumba; (iv) Le Tombeau de Ravel (for clarinet and piano)

 Tall Poppies TP 134. Tall Poppies Ensemble: Munro, with (i) Pereira; (ii) Van Stralen; (iii) Harding; (iv) Jenkin

Although opening with a lilting account of the Jamaican Rumba in the 1944 arrangement for violin and piano, dedicated to and played by Heifetz, the earliest music here is also for violin and piano, a set of Three Pieces. A lively Humoresque and Carnavalesque (with a curious tolling-bell introduction) frame a ghostly Arabesque. The Violin Sonatina followed in 1924. The Cello Sonatina of 1938 is perhaps the most warmly lyrical of Benjamin's string duos, easily melodic but with a highly rhythmic closing March. The Viola Sonata, written in 1942 for William Primrose, is a particularly fine work, combining a haunting Elegy with a nostalgic Waltz, and ending with a boldly virtuosic Toccata. But especially beguiling is the Tombeau de Ravel, written for Gervase de Peyer.

All the performances here are of high quality and show a composer of great resource who always captures and holds the listener's ear. The recording is excellent.

Pastoral Fantasy (for string quartet); 5 Spirituals (for cello & piano); Viola Sonata; 3 Violin Pieces; A Tune & Variations for Little People; Violin Sonatina.

Ⓜ  Dutton CDLX 7110. Locrian Ens.

This excellent Dutton collection duplicates the Viola Sonata and Violin Sonatina, and the Three Pieces also offered on the Tall Poppies disc above, with the performances here if anything more persuasive, no less passionate and often with appealing touches of fantasy. These artists are completely inside all this music and have the advantage of the warm acoustic of The Maltings, Snape. The Five Spirituals are delightful vignettes which ought to be in the regular cello repertoire, while the Pastoral Fantasy is in the best tradition of English pastoralism. The Tune on which he bases his Variations for Little People is also very beguiling. This disc has a price advantage over its equally admirable Tall Poppies competitor, but both collections are well worth investigating.

PIANO MUSIC

Brumas Tunes; Chinoiserie; Elegiac Mazurka; Fantasies I–II; Haunted House; Jamaican Rumba; Let's Go Hiking; 3 New Fantasies; Odds and Ends I–II; Pastorale, Arioso & Finale; Romance-impromptu; Saxophone Blues; Scherzino; Siciliana; Suite

 Tall Poppies TP 105. Munro

Australian born, Arthur Benjamin's Jamaican Rumba was the result of a professional examination visit to England in 1938, and it soon became a worldwide hit. He did not repeat that success, yet his other genre pieces here are full of attractive ideas and comparably catchy rhythmic invention, at times cool in the jazz sense of the word (Saxophone Blues), at others (the Odds and Ends or the Fantasies, for instance) offering writing of charming but indelible simplicity. Throughout, Ian Munro plays with great style and elegance and with obvious affection. This is a wholly delightful recital, with never a dull moment throughout its 78 minutes. The recording is admirably natural. (If you find it difficult to obtain this CD, you can order it direct from Tall Poppies, PO Box 373, Glebe, NSW 2037, Australia.)

BENNETT, Richard Rodney (born 1936)

(i) Piano Concerto; (ii) Commedia IV (for 2 trumpets, horn, trombone & tuba); (iii) Capriccio for Piano Duet; (iv) 5 Studies for Piano

 Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 275. (i) Kovacevich, LSO, Gibson; (ii) Philip Jones Brass Ens.; (iii) Thea Musgrave; (iii; iv) composer

Richard Rodney Bennett wrote his Piano Concerto, a work involving complex, endlessly fluttering fragments, especially with Stephen Kovacevich in mind. The Commedia IV for brass quintet is also one the composer's most strikingly memorable works. Six ensemble passages for the full ensemble frame five groups of solos, duets, and trios, with a central solo for horn. The music is virtuosic but it has a central gravity and ends very positively. It is marvellously played here by the Philip Jones Brass Ensemble and makes highly stimulating listening. The works for piano show Bennett at his most unpredictable, especially in their rhythmic punctuation. The performances here could not be more authoritative, and the recording is excellent.

BERG, Alban (1885–1935)

Documentary: The Secret Life of Alban Berg (narrated by Kristine Ciesinski): (i) Violin Concerto

 Arthaus DVD 102 117. Kremer, Bav. Rad. SO Colin Davis

The documentary is most valuable and includes contributions from such authorities as the American composer and Berg scholar, George Perle and the British Berg authority, Douglas Jarman – and also Louis Krasner who gave the very first performance of the concerto in 1936. The film reveals that all is not what it seemed in Berg's marriage and that his wife took little real interest in his compositions until the 1960s (not even attending their first performances) and talks frankly about his personal life. Kristine Ciesinski narrates and also sings excerpts from Wozzeck and Lulu with the BBC Symphony Orchestra under Elgar Howarth. The performance of the Concerto, recorded during Sir Colin's tenure in Munich, is very leisurely indeed though Kremer is appropriately neurasthenic and inward-looking. A fascinating programme.

(i; ii) Chamber Concerto for Piano, Violin & 13 Wind; (iii) Violin Concerto (To the Memory of an Angel); (iv) Lyric Suite: 3 Pieces; 3 Pieces for Orchestra, Op. 6; (v; vi) Adagio from Chamber Concerto (arr. for Violin, Clarinet & Piano); (vii) Lyric Suite for String Quartet; (vi) 4 Pieces for Clarinet and Piano; (vii) String Quartet, Op. 3; (i) Piano Sonata, Op. 1; (viii; iv) Altenberg Lieder, Op. 4; (ix) 7 Early Songs (versions with (x) piano; (iv) orchestra); (xi) 4 Lieder, Op. 2; (xii) Lieder: An Leukon; Schlieffe mir die Augen beide (2 settings); (ix; iv) Der Wein (concert aria); (viii; iv) Lulu: Suite (symphonic pieces); (xiii) Lulu (opera; complete); (xiv) Wozzeck (complete); (xv) Transcription of JOHANN STRAUSS JR: Waltz: Wein, Weib und Gesang

Ⓑ  DG (ADD/DDD) 474 657-2 (8). (i) Barenboim; (ii) Zukerman, Ens. InterContemporain, Boulez; (iii) Mutter, Chicago SO, Levine; (iv) VPO, Abbado; (v) Kremer, (vi) Meyer, Maisenberg; (vii) LaSalle Qt; (viii) Banse; (ix) von Otter; (x) Forsberg; (xi) Fischer-Dieskau, Reimann; (xii) Marshall, Parsons; (xiii) Stratas, Minton, Schwarz, Mazura, Blankenheim, Riegel, Tear, Paris Op. O, Boulez; (xiv) Grundheber, Behrens, Haugland, Langridge, Zednik; (xv) Boston Symphony Chamber Players

An impressive and inexpensive collection that should satisfy the most demanding Berg enthusiast. Nearly all these recordings are three star and most are still currently available separately and are praised below, including the Chamber Concerto, Violin Concerto, Three Pieces for Orchestra, Lulu Symphonic Suite, the Seven Early Songs and Boulez's pioneering recording of Lulu. Abbado's Wozzeck, recorded live, has the inevitable drawback of intrusive stage noises and backwardly balanced singers, but is still very compelling.

Among the other recordings, the LaSalle Quartet provide the most persuasive advocacy in the Op. 3 String Quartet and Lyric Suite arrangement and are vividly recorded. Sabine Meyer's contribution to the works including clarinet is hardly less impressive, and Barenboim, if not quite a match for Pollini, gives a concentrated account of the Piano Sonata.

Juliane Banse sings expressively and lyrically in the Altenberg Lieder, atmospherically accompanied by the VPO and Abbado; though some Bergians may prefer tougher, edgier performances, few will resist such a warmly musical response. The contribution of the rich-toned Margaret Marshall and Geoffrey Parsons is hardly less impressive. Fischer-Dieskau with highly sensitive accompaniment from Aribert Reimann is equally communicative in the early Op. 2 Songs, and the Boston Chamber Players provide an unexpected bonus in Berg's arrangement of a familiar waltz by Johann Strauss. The documentation is generally very good and includes synopses for the operas but no translations.

(i) Chamber Concerto; (ii) Violin Concerto (To the Memory of an Angel)

🔑 Ⓜ  Warner Elatus 0927 46737-2. Dresden State O, Sinopoli, with (i) Lucchesini; (ii) Watanabe

It would be hard to imagine more romantic readings of Berg's principal orchestral works than those under Giuseppe Sinopoli. The atonal arguments of Berg have never been presented more sinuously, cocooning the ear, helped by sumptuous playing and recording. The violinist, Reiko Watanabe, is totally in sympathy with this approach, using the widest range of expression, tone and dynamic, with the music at the start seeming to emerge out of mists. Romantic readings of the Violin Concerto are common enough, but with the pianist, Andrea Lucchesini as a perfectly matched partner for Watanabe, the Chamber Concerto, which can seem one of Berg's more cerebral works, is just as seductive.

Violin Concerto

🔑  Warner 2564 60291-2. Hope, BBC SO, Watkins – BRITTEN: Violin Concerto ***

Ⓜ  DG 447 445-2. Perlman, Boston SO, Ozawa (with RAVEL: Tzigane; STRAVINSKY: Concerto ***)

 DG 437 093-2. Mutter, Chicago SO, Levine – RIHM: Gesungene Zeit, etc. ***

(BB)  Warner Apex 0927 40812-2. Zehetmair, Philh. O, Holliger – HARTMANN: Concerto funèbre; JANÁČEK: Concerto ***

It was Daniel Hope who, a year before publication, gave the first performance of the corrected version of the Violin Concerto in Manchester; here, in a warm and purposeful performance, he is the soloist in the first recording of it. He sustains spacious speeds with no sense of self-consciousness, intense and concentrated from first to last, subtly varying his vibrato to heighten emotion, notably in the hushed and tender resolution on the Bach chorale theme, Es ist genug. The cellist Paul Watkins proves himself a fine conductor, drawing warmly intense playing from the BBC Symphony Orchestra, helped by full, immediate recording with impressively weighty brass.

Perlman's performance is above all commanding. The Boston Orchestra accompanies superbly and, though the balance favours the soloist, the recording is excellent. The current transfer shows the Boston acoustic at its most seductive.

Anne-Sophie Mutter begins the Concerto with a pianissimo of much delicacy. She proceeds to give an intensely passionate reading, both freely expressive and intensely purposeful, with James Levine and the Chicago orchestra matching her in subtle shading. As an imaginative coupling, Mutter offers a concerto written for her by the forty-year-old German composer, Wolfgang Rihm.

On the inexpensive Apex disc Zehetmair plays with great sensitivity and a natural eloquence, and many will prefer this to Mutter on DG. That has tremendous brilliance and panache but Zehetmair's less sensational reading brings one closer to the heart of this poignant music. Moreover, apart from the price advantage, he offers more interesting couplings. The recording, made at The Maltings, Snape, is of exemplary clarity and has great presence, making this triptych a very real bargain.

Violin Concerto. Lyric Suite: 3 Pieces; 3 Pieces for Orchestra, Op. 6

(BB)  Naxos 8.554755. Netherlands RSO, Klas, (i) with Hirsch

This Naxos issue brings together clear, positive versions of three key works by Berg, with the recordings, made in the Hilversum concert hall under the Estonian conductor Eri Klas, presenting each work in close focus. Rebecca Hirsch is an outstanding young violinist who has concentrated on twentieth-century music, and here she combines clean, precise attack with natural tonal warmth. The balance is securely held between weight of emotion and fresh modernity.

(i) Violin Concerto; (ii) Lulu Suite; (iii) 3 Orchestral Pieces, Op. 6; (iv) 4 Pieces for Clarinet and Piano; (v) Lyric Suite; (vi) Piano Sonata, Op. 1; (vii) 7-Frühe Lieder; (viii) Wozzeck: Act III: Interlude

🔑 (BB) EMI Gemini 3 81771-2 (2). (i) Zimmermann, Stuttgart RSO; (ii) CBSO, Rattle, with Augér; (iii) Bamberg SO; (iii; viii) Metzmacher; (iv) Meyer, Vogt; (v) Alban Berg Qt; (vi) Donohoe; (vii) Sine Bundgaard, Danish R. O, Pintscher; (viii) Hamburg Philharmonic State O

These are all key performances of Berg's major works, recorded between 1987 and 2004. The cast list is very impressive, and the recordings of uniformly high quality. Zimmermann's account of the Violin Concerto is very competitive. If you can take this much Berg, the set is a real bargain. If you want just a sampler, the set's highlight is Rattle's superb account of the Lulu Suite, with Arleen Augér, which is available separately, coupled with Schoenberg and Webern – see below.

(i) Violin Concerto. Passacaglia (realized by Borries & Venzago); Lulu: Symphonic Pieces. Piano Sonata, Op. 1 (orch. Verbey); 3 Pieces, Op. 6; Wozzeck: 3 Fragments. Der Wein (sung in (ii) French & (iii) German). Transcription of JOHAN STRAUSS II: Wein, Weib und Gesang!

Ⓝ Ⓜ * Chan. (SACD) CHSA 5074 (2). Gothenburg SO, Venzago with (i) Keulen; (ii) Murray; (iii) McGreevy

An outstanding new collection of the key works of Berg, spanning the creative career of the composer, with a few novelties thrown in too. These include Theo Verbey's superb orchestration of Berg's solo Piano Sonata, which transforms the piece into virtually a new work. In the Passacaglia fragment (1913), each variation builds on the former one rather than on the original theme, and the result is an intense piece of orchestral writing, put together from sketch by the composer by Christan von Venzago. The concert aria, Der Wein ('The Wine') is heard here in two performances, one in the usual German, by Geraldine McGreevy, and the other in French, by the tenor Robert Murray. The latter, in Baudelaire's original French, is markedly sweeter in tone. The main orchestral works come off extremely well here: both the soloist and the conductor bring out all the colours which make up the Violin Concerto, and the orchestral suites from Wozzeck and Lulu have both intensity and atmosphere. The Three Pieces, Op. 6 have more warmth here than usual, though the finale has a fine sense of impending doom. The disc ends with Berg's enjoyable arrangement of Strauss's Wein, Weib und Gesang! Throughout, these performances benefit from superb Chandos SACD sound, and excellent playing from the Gothenburg Orchestra. The two new CDs are offered for the price of one.

Lyric Suite: 3 Pieces; (i) 5 Altenberglieder, Op. 4

🔑 Ⓜ  Warner Elatus 0927 49009-2. Dresden State O, Sinopoli, (i) with Marc

(BB)  Arte Nova 74321 27768-2. (i) Orsanic; SW German RSO, Gielen – ZEMLINSKY: Lyric Symphony ***

The three movements from his Lyric Suite make an ideal coupling for the Zemlinsky Lyric Symphony, the work which Berg quotes and which prompted his title. They are beautifully played and recorded here, as are the five settings of Altenberg poems, crisp and compact yet full of emotion, here sung superbly with fresh tone and clean attack by the soprano, Vlatka Orsanic. First-rate recording. A pity the documentation does not match the musical excellence.

The Elatus disc is taken from live recordings made at the Saxon State Opera in Dresden in 1997–8, and if anything is even warmer. It offers the very generous coupling of the three-movement orchestral version of the Lyric Suite plus the two orchestral works based on Berg's two operas. In those the atmospheric warmth of the playing and conducting is enhanced by the expressive singing of Alessandra Marc, making one wish that these same performers had recorded the complete operas. With late-nineties recording, excellent value.

3 Pieces for Orchestra, Op. 6; (i) 5 Orchestral Songs, Op. 4; Lulu: Symphonic Suite

Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 449 714-2. (i) M. Price; LSO, Abbado

Abbado makes it clear above all how beautiful Berg's writing is, not just in the Lulu excerpts but in the early Op. 4 Songs and the Op. 6 Orchestral Pieces.

Lyric Suite (String Quartet version)

 Testament SBT 1374; Juilliard Qt – CARTER: Quartet 2; SCHUMAN: Quartet 3 ***

Ⓑ  None. 7559 79696-2. Upshaw, Kronos Qt

Recorded in 1959, this is as fine an account of the Lyric Suite as you can ever hope to hear; indeed, a first recommendation. The Juilliard took the piece into their repertoire at an early stage and play it with consistent fervour and deep understanding. Excellent recorded sound, too.

The Nonesuch disc offers a Lyric Suite with a difference and so has a special claim on the collector's allegiance. The work originally included a setting of lines from Baudelaire's Fleurs du mal. George Perle has reconstructed the original version of the finale and this is its first recording, very eloquently sung by Dawn Upshaw. The Kronos play with a certain robust intensity and fire (nothing in the least mellifluous here), and they are decently recorded. Since this disc contains only 27 minutes of music, it comes at bargain price.

Lyric Suite for String Quartet; String Quartet, Op. 3

 MDG 307 0996-2. Leipzig Qt (with WEBERN: 3 Pieces ***)

The Leipzig Quartet's performances were coolly received in some quarters but have much warmth and generosity of spirit to commend them. They offer the Webern 3 Pieces (which take two minutes) as a bonus. (Christiane Oelze is the singer in the second.)

Piano Sonata, Op. 1

🔑  Ph. 468 033-2. Uchida – SCHOENBERG: Piano Concerto, etc.; WEBERN: Variations

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553870. Hill – SCHOENBERG: Piano Pieces, etc.; WEBERN: Variations ***

In the Berg Piano Sonata, Op. 1, as in the remainder of her programme devoted to the Second Viennese School, Uchida is very persuasive indeed. The main work on the disc, Schoenberg's Piano Concerto, receives one of its most successful readings on record.

Peter Hill's account of the Berg Sonata on Naxos has more than just its bargain price to commend it. He is a pianist of proven intelligence and sensitivity and is decently recorded. It comes with the Schoenberg piano music, played with no less expertise and authority.

7 Early Songs

 DG 437 515-2. von Otter, Forsberg – KORNGOLD; STRAUSS: Lieder ***

 Decca 466 720-2. Bonney, Concg. O, Chailly – MAHLER: Symphony 4 **(*)

In the Seven Early Songs of Berg, Anne Sofie von Otter and Bengt Forsberg offer inspired playing and singing, drawing out the intensity of emotion to the full without exaggeration or sentimentality. Along with Strauss and Korngold songs, a fascinating programme, magnetically performed.

Barbara Bonney also sounds spontaneous and warm in the Seven Early Songs, which come as a coupling for Mahler's Fourth Symphony, and Chailly and the orchestra too sound a degree more involved than in the Mahler.

Lulu (with orchestration of Act III completed by Friedrich Cerha)

Ⓜ  EMI 5 09400-2 (3). Wise, Fassbaender, Straka, Clark, Schöne, Clarey, O Nat. de France, Tate

 Chan. 9540 (3). Haupman, Jaffe, Straka, Juan, Danish Nat. RSO, Schirmer

Jeffrey Tate's live recording of the full three-Act version provides a welcome alternative to the Chandos version. Tate's reading is more flexible, more volatile than Schirmer's even if there are stage noises, and some minor flaws of ensemble. On casting, Tate's set is marginally preferable, with Patricia Wise sensuous in the title-role and with Brigitte Fassbaender incomparable as the predatory Countess Geschwitz, spontaneously expressive for Tate. Graham Clark is excellent too and Peter Straka is again a fine Alwa. At its new price this is very recommendable (with a good synopsis).

Recorded at a series of live performances, the Chandos version is strongly and purposefully conducted by Ulf Schirmer. Constance Haupman makes Lulu a girlish, vulnerable figure, as well as thrusting and selfish. Her singing is commendably precise, even if under pressure the tone grows shrill. As Dr Schön, Monte Jaffe relies too heavily on unpitched sing-speech, but his is a vividly characterful performance too; and among the others Peter Straka makes a fresh, clear Alwa and Julia Juan a touchingly mature Geschwitz.

Lulu (in English)

Ⓜ (*) Chan. 3130 (3). Saffer, Parry, Kale, Hayward, Graham-Hall, Howell, ENO Ch. & O, Daniel

Paul Daniel (using his own English translation) conducts an exceptionally persuasive account, more than is usual bringing out the work's lyricism alongside the lilt of the many dance-passages. The element of cabaret and circus is after all behind much of Berg's writing, but this is also a performance which underlines the stylized structure that Berg ingeniously developed – sonata, variations, rondo, etc. In the title-role Lisa Saffer with her bright, fresh soprano is most convincing through all the sinister developments in this often repellent story, well supported by a strong team of incidental characters, of whom the most striking are Gwynne Howell as Schigolch and Susan Parry as Geschwitz. Saffer sings strongly and movingly, even though this is a role which has prompted even more characterful readings from others.

Wozzeck (complete; DVD versions)

🔑  Arthaus DVD 101 277. Blankenheim, Janowitz, Cassilly, Unger, Sotin, Moll, Grundheber, Hamburg State Op. Ch. & O, Maderna (V/D: Jurgen Hess)

Ⓜ  Warner DVD 2564 69742-2. Grundheber, W. Meier, M. Baker, Wottrich, Clark, von Kannen, German Opera, Berlin, Ch., Berlin State O, Barenboim (Director: Patrice Chéreau; Video Editor: Jean-Claude Piroué)

It is rare that a performance of Berg's 12-note masterpiece is as well sung as on this studio recording, made with Hamburg State Opera forces in 1970. You hear every note of this difficult, atonal score on pitch with minimal use of sing-speech, which adds to the musical delights of Bruno Maderna's powerful reading. Toni Blankenheim is outstanding in the title-role, poignantly conveying the suffering of the central character, while Gerhard Unger is brilliant as the domineering Captain, well contrasted with Richard Cassilly in the other leading tenor role of the Drum major. Gundula Janowitz, with her sweetly pure soprano, sings beautifully as Marie, but also gives the necessary edge to the character, and Hans Sotin is strong and sinister as the Doctor. The miming of the singers to the studio recording is not always perfectly coordinated, but the musical precision is a great benefit, and the settings, with many scenes shot out of doors, are aptly atmospheric. The recorded sound is on the dry side, but that too adds to the precision. An excellent version of a difficult opera.

Already available on CD (see below), Barenboim's performance gains much from a visual presentation, even if Richard Peduzzi's sets are bare and unatmospheric. But Patrice Chéreau's direction is powerful, to match Barenboim's warmly committed contribution. As on disc, Franz Grundheber is strong in the title-role, and the only disappointment is Waltraud Meier's lack of vocal bloom in the part of Marie. But with excellent video direction, this performance projects powerfully and can be recommended as a fine (but less atmospheric) alternative to the Arthaus version.

Wozzeck (complete; CD versions)

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.660076/7. Falkman, Dalayman, Qvale, Wahlund, Stregard, Stockholm Royal Op. Ch. & O, Segerstam

Ⓜ  EMI 5 56865-2 (2). Skovhus, Denoke, Olsen, Merritt, Blinkhof, Sacher, Hamburg State Op. Ch. & State PO, Metzmacher

(*) Teldec 0630 14108-2 (2). Grundheber, Meier, Baker, Wottrich, Clark, von Kannen, German Opera, Berlin, Ch. & Children's Ch., Berlin State O, Barenboim

Segerstam proves a strong, thrusting interpreter, tautly holding the drama together, with the impact heightened by the vividness of the live recording. Though the Sprechstimme ('sing-speech') is sometimes free – again not surprisingly – the great merit of all the singers is their musicality, with the Captain and the Doctor less caricatured than usual, and with a firm, central account of the title-role from Carl Johan Falkman. Katarina Dalayman is also superb as Marie, singing with character as well as beauty. A detailed synopsis is provided in the booklet and a complete libretto in German but no translation. An excellent issue which, at the Naxos price, should tempt collectors to experiment with a challenging work that in a performance like this is deeply moving.

Ingo Metzmacher's live recording for EMI was made at the Hamburg State Opera, with Metzmacher drawing powerful, clean-textured playing from his orchestra, firmly establishing this as a high romantic work, whatever its modernist credentials. The casting is strong too, with Bo Skovhus singing with clean focus in the title-role, and with Marie superbly sung by Angela Denoke, sensuous on the one hand, tenderly affecting on the other. Otherwise, the production on a bare stage seems to have encouraged each character to overact, Skovhus included, even while the results are exceptionally vivid, with the sense of a live performance consistently adding to the dramatic impact.

Barenboim's Teldec version of Wozzeck was recorded live at the Deutsche Staatsoper in Berlin in 1994. With Grundheber even finer than under Abbado, Barenboim leads a warmly expressive performance. The cast is an outstanding one, with such characterful singers as Graham Clark (Captain) in incidental roles. Less successful is Waltraud Meier as Marie, with an uneven, grainy quality in the voice.

Wozzeck (in English)

Ⓜ (*) Chan. 3094 (2). Shore, Woodrow, Kale, Bayley, Barstow, Rigby, Geoffrey Mitchell Ch., Philh. O, Daniel

In Paul Daniel's account of Wozzeck the drama is intensified, even if the sinister element in this story of neurosis is minimized. Andrew Shore is strongly cast in the title-role, even if the firm clarity of his singing equally underplays the neurosis. He is strong and positive rather than mad-sounding, at least until the final scenes of Marie's murder and his own suicide. There the atmospheric recording vividly captures the sinister ambience of this disturbing opera. The extremes of expression and dynamic in the scenes with Marie are also very well caught. Dame Josephine Barstow sounds too mature for the role, not quite steady enough, even though dramatically she gives a vivid portrayal, with Jean Rigby a fine foil as Margret. The grotesques among the male characters are all very well portrayed, their characterization the more vivid thanks to the clarity of words.

BERKELEY, Lennox (1903–89)

Guitar Concerto

 Chan. 9963. Ogden, N. Sinf., Hickox – ARNOLD: Guitar Concerto; WALTON: 5 Bagatelles ***

The Berkeley Concerto, one of his last works, begins atmospherically with a duet for two unaccompanied horns, relaxed in its mood, gaining in this performance under Richard Hickox from relatively urgent speeds. It leads via a mysterious slow movement to a finale which starts with a sly quotation from Rodrigo's Concierto de Aranjuez. Craig Ogden gives a commanding performance.

(i) Piano Concerto in B flat, Op. 29; (ii) Double Piano Concerto, Op. 30

 Lyrita SRCD 250. (i) Davis Wilde, New Philh. O, Braithwaite; (ii) Garth Beckett, Boyd McDonald, LPO, Del Mar

The Piano Concerto was written in the immediate wake of the Second World War and is traditional in layout, but every bit as rewarding as the symphonies. The Double Concerto, no less finely wrought and enjoyable, comes from 1948. The orchestral playing and the contributions of all three soloists deserve the warmest plaudits and the analogue recording maintains the high standards of the Lyrita series. But the new Chandos version is even finer – see below.

Divertimento in B flat, Op. 18; Partita for Chamber Orchestra, Op. 66; Serenade for Strings, Op. 12; (i) Sinfonia concertante for Oboe & Chamber Orchestra, Op. 84: Canzonetta (only). Symphony 3 in 1 Movement, Op. 74; Mont Juic (with Britten), Op. 9

🔑  Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 226 [id.]. LPO, composer; (i) with Winfield

The Divertimento is enchanting, with its four stylish and highly inventive movements, while the String Serenade, similarly in four sections, is hardly less attractive and brings a beautiful Lento closing movement. In its rather weightier tone of voice the Partita belies that it was written originally with a youth orchestra in mind, while the fourth movement from the Sinfonia concertante makes a splendid interlude before the closing Symphony 3. This is a concise, one-movement work, slightly more austere in its lyricism, but with a popular element entering the finale. The recording from the early 1970s, is first class, and the CD transfers only improve the sense of presence and realism. The programme opens with the charmingly spontaneous Mont Juic Suite which Berkeley wrote in collaboration with Benjamin Britten, two movements each (Berkeley contributing the opening pair), and the work was later published jointly as Berkeley's Op. 9 and Britten's Op. 12.

Double Piano Concerto

🔑  Chan. 10408. Stott, Shelley, BBC Nat. O of Wales, Hickox – MICHAEL BERKELEY: Concerto for Orchestra, etc. ***

Written in 1948 for the husband-and-wife team of Cyril Smith and Phyllis Sellick, Lennox Berkeley's Double Piano Concerto adopts a layout similar to that of Beethoven's last Piano Sonata, Opus 111, with a compact first movement leading to an extended set of variations. The piano writing is unusual too in employing the two pianos as a unit, and only rarely in contrast. The result, warmly recorded, is a strong and attractive work, here beautifully performed by Kathryn Stott and Howard Shelley with Richard Hickox providing excellent support.

The Judgement of Paris (ballet)

Ⓜ  Dutton CDLX 7149. Royal Ballet Sinfonia, Wordsworth – LAMBERT: Apparitions; LANCHBERY: Tales of Beatrix Potter ***

Sir Lennox Berkeley's Judgement of Paris is genuine ballet music and winningly scored, even if the melodic invention is unmemorable. It is splendidly played by the Royal Ballet Sinfonia under Barry Wordsworth, and the recording is first class in every way.

(i) Sinfonia concertante, Op. 84; Symphony 3

 Chan. 10022. BBC Nat. O of Wales, Hickox, with (i) Daniel – MICHAEL BERKELEY: Oboe Concerto, etc. ***

In Lennox Berkeley's Sinfonia concertante the first two of the five movements are linked by using the same material, while the third and fourth, Aria and Canzonetta, bring a relaxation before the vigorous finale, with a cadenza in the middle and a thoughtful passage before the strongly rhythmic coda. Symphony 3, written in 1968–9, is in a single movement divided into three sections. It represents his late style at its most striking, dark and compressed in the first section, with rapidly contrasting motifs, before a brief, slow, central section leads to a rather more extrovert finale with galloping 6/8 rhythms and a brassy conclusion, all brilliantly caught in the full-ranging Chandos recording.

Sinfonietta, Op. 34

 Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 257. ECO, Del Mar – ARNOLD; MICHAEL BERKELEY; BRITTEN: Sinfoniettas; RAWSTHORNE; TIPPETT: Divertimentos ***

Berkeley's Sinfonietta is a delightful example of his genius for miniature. Perfectly crafted, it says much in the shortest possible span, lightly but with no feeling of triviality. It is beautifully performed and recorded.

Symphony 1; Serenade for Strings

🔑  Chan. 9981. BBC Nat. O of Wales, Hickox – MICHAEL BERKELEY: Horn Concerto; Coronach ***

The First Symphony is one of Lennox Berkeley's most luminous and captivating scores – and very good it is too. It is a fresh and beautifully written work, prompting a strong, committed performance from the BBC National Orchestra of Wales under Richard Hickox which has been superbly recorded. The Serenade for Strings is a delightful piece, carefree until the final Lento, where, reflectively, Berkeley touches deeper emotions. In Hickox's hands it comes off splendidly. The BBC National Orchestra of Wales again play with zest and sensitivity, and the recording is extremely vivid and present. Recommended with enthusiasm.

Symphonies (i) 1, Op. 16; (ii) 2, Op. 51

 Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 249. LPO, (i) Del Mar; (ii) Braithwaite

The First Symphony is distinctly individual and memorable. The Second Symphony is also a work of a sophisticated and cultivated musical mind; textures are clean and the ideas are beautifully laid out. This is civilized music, and its originality is all the more rewarding for the restrained expressive means. The warmly sympathtic playing of the LPO under Norman Del Mar and Nicholas Braithwaite is of the highest quality and the analogue Lyrita recording has impeccable depth and realism.

Symphony 4

 Chan. 10080. BBC Nat. O of Wales, Hickox – MICHAEL BERKELEY: Cello Concerto, etc. ***

Lennox Berkeley's Fourth Symphony of 1977/8, one of his most ambitious works, is a remarkable piece for a composer in his mid-seventies, starting disconcertingly in darkness but with the slow introduction leading to an energetic first-movement Allegro, followed by a strongly contrasted set of variations and a sharply rhythmic finale, all colourfully orchestrated. Richard Hickox and the BBC National Orchestra of Wales are powerful advocates, brilliantly recorded. The Symphony makes a fine coupling for the two major works by the composer's son, Michael.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Concertino, Op. 49; Duo for Cello & Piano, Op. 81/1; Elegy for Violin & Piano, Op. 35/2; Introduction & Allegro for Solo Violin, Op. 24; Oboe Quartet, Op. 70; Petite suite for Oboe & Piano; Sextet, Op. 47; Toccata for Violin & Piano, Op. 33/3

Ⓜ  Dutton CDLX 7100. Endymion Ens.

Lennox Berkeley's elegantly fashioned music is fastidiously crafted and musically rewarding, unpretentious, urbane and charming. The Endymion Ensemble do it proud, and so does the natural and well-balanced recording.

(i) Diversions (for oboe, clarinet, bassoon, horn, piano & string trio), Op. 61; Oboe Quartet; Sextet (for clarinet, horn & string quartet), Op. 47; (ii) Piano Duet: Palm Court Waltz, Op. 81/2. Sonatina, Op. 39

🔑 (BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55135. (i) Nash Ens.; (ii) I. Brown; Stott

Diversions is particularly diverting. Both the slow movement and finale are unostentatious essays in counterpoint, yet in addition they manage to be (respectively) lyrically appealing and attractively jaunty. The Sextet for clarinet, horn and strings brings an aurally fascinating linear interplay between the wind and string lines. The Oboe Quartet is a good deal more than just the usual pastoral excursion. The slow movement comes last, at first hauntingly sad and mysterious, growing more animated, then returning to the mood of the opening, with each instrument dropping out in turn, leaving the cello alone at the close. The Palm Court Waltz for piano duet has a disarming insouciance, and it goes well with the elegant Sonatina. Of the soloists, the oboist, Gareth Hulse, and the clarinettist, Michael Collins, deserve special mention; the recording, although a shade resonant in the two piano works, is very good, with woodwind balanced a little forward from the strings.

4 Pièces pour la guitare, Op. post.; Sonatina, Op. 1; Theme and Variations, Op. 77

 Chan. 10261. Craig Ogden – MICHAEL BERKELEY: Impromptu; Lament, etc. ***

It was the artistry of Julian Bream that inspired Lennox and Michael Berkeley to compose these works for the guitar. They both find an extraordinarily idiomatic style, so that the Quatre Pièces, dedicated to Segovia, sound like anglicized Spanish music, yet they are wholly individual. The invention is consistently ear-catching, as it is in the Sonatina (written for Bream), which has a musing slow movement that brings just a faint hint of Rodrigo before the equally appealing and vibrant rondo finale. Finest of all is the Theme and Variations, which explores the widest range of guitar figurations and musical divisions, before the haunting closing epilogue, which returns to the mood of the opening. Craig Ogden plays all this music superbly, sustaining great concentration, so that one has a continuing sense of a live performance, borne out by the totally realistic recording. If you enjoy the guitar, this disc is on no account to be missed.

(i) Sextet for Clarinet, Horn, & String Quartet, Op. 47; (ii) Violin Sonatina, Op. 17

 Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 256. (i) Brymer, Civil, Bean, Routh, Wellington, Croxford; (ii) Bean, Parkhouse – A. BUSH: Concert Studies, etc. (*); RAWSTHORNE: Clarinet Qt

Lennox Berkeley recorded his Sonatina with Frederick Grinke in the early days of LP, and this new version reinforces the pleasing impression it made. Like the Sextet (with its star-studded group of performers) it is inventive, refined and polished, and it could hardly be more persuasively played than it is here.

String Quartets 1, Op. 6; 2, Op. 15; 3, Op. 76

(BB)  Naxos 8.570415. Maggini Qt

The First Quartet comes from 1935 and shows a debt to Stravinsky and Bartók, as well as the composer's strong Gallic sympathies. The Second too has a certain astringency, as does the Third, composed in 1970, written in the immediate wake of the Third Symphony and notable for an ethereal slow movement, bringing an intense, emotional climax, resolved in the sharply rhythmic finale. The Maggini play these rewarding scores with great dedication: the contribution of Lorraine McAslan as leader is particularly impressive, especially in the lyrical slow movement of No. 1. The recording, made at Potton Hall, Suffolk, has clarity and presence.

PIANO MUSIC

Concert Study in E flat, Op. 48/2; Improvisation on a Theme of Falla; Paysage, Mazurka, Op. 32/1; 3 Pieces, Op. 2; 6 Preludes, Op. 23; Scherzo, Op. 32/2; Sonata

 Chan. 10247. Fingerhut (with MICHAEL BERKELEY: Strange Meeting ***)

Lennox Berkeley wrote for the piano with exceptional fluency and natural feeling. Margaret Fingerhut, vividly recorded, has both eloquence and authority. This is a fine survey of rewarding repertoire, as well played as it is recorded. Piano sound does not come much better than this. As part of the series devoted to both father and son, Michael is represented by an early piece from the early 1970s, Strange Meeting, inspired by the poem by Wilfred Owen which his godfather, Benjamin Britten, had used a decade earlier in his War Requiem.

(i) Music for Piano 4 Hands: Sonatina, Op. 39; Theme & Variations, Op. 73; Palm Court Waltz, Op. 81/2. Solo piano music: 6 Preludes, Op. 23; 5 Short Pieces, Op. 4; Sonata, Op. 20

 British Music Society BMS 416CD. Terroni, (i) with Beedle

A generous selection of the cultivated and tuneful piano music of Lennox Berkeley: the fine Sonata with its sensuously coloured Adagio, the often witty Preludes and the five charming Short Pieces, which often have a whiff of Poulenc, the Sonatina with another elegantly individual slow movement, and the more complex Theme and Variations. Raphael Terroni is an accomplished and sympathetic exponent, with Norman Beedle an admirable partner in the Music for Piano Four Hands. The piano recording is most natural. The CD is available direct from the British Music Society, 7 Tudor Gardens, Upminster, Essex.

OPERA

A Dinner Engagement (complete)

 Chan. 10219. Williams, Kenny, Rigby, Collins, City of L. Sinfonia, Hickox

Richard Hickox conducts a performance of Lennox's most popular opera which, with an excellent cast, brings out the light-hearted fun in this comedy of manners. It tells of a diplomat and his wife, the Earl and Countess of Dunmow, who, fallen on hard times, have royal guests, the Grand Duchess and her son, Prince Philip, from Monteblanco, where the Earl was ambassador. The comedy lies in the hosts' embarrassment when, with only the help of a comic char (a stock 1950s figure), their efforts at self-catering go wildly wrong. All comes well in the end, with the Dunmow daughter, Susan, falling in the arms of the Prince. As a comedy it may be dated, but on disc Berkeley's light and lyrical score works well, with excellent singing all round, including Roderick Williams and Yvonne Kenny as the Earl and Countess, Claire Rutter as Susan and Robin Leggate as Philip, with the resonant Anne Collins as a characterful Grand Duchess.

Ruth (complete)

 Chan. 10301. Rigby, Tucker, Kenny, Rutter, Williams, Joyful Company of Singers, City of L. Sinfonia, Hickox

The story of Ruth and her loyalty to her mother-in-law, Naomi, is among the most touching in the Bible, and Lennox Berkeley, helped by a libretto by Eric Crozier, builds it into a moving opera in three scenes lasting 80 minutes. After a brief prelude, the opening scene brings a warmly expressive trio, with Ruth and Naomi joined by the other daughter-in-law, Orpah. When Orpah opts to return to the land of Moab, Ruth pledges her loyalty to Naomi in the memorable solo, Whither thou goest, I will go, leading on to a duet and an atmospheric chorus to round the scene off. The role of Boaz is taken by a tenor, the farmer who, against the hostility of the villagers, supports the right of Ruth, a Moabite, to glean in his fields with the others. The happy ending comes when Boaz declares his love for Ruth, leading on to the founding of the House of David. Richard Hickox, drawing excellent singing and playing from chorus and orchestra, as well as from the first-rate team of soloists, paces the three scenes most persuasively, bringing out dramatic contrasts in what might have been too gentle a sequence. Warm, clear sound.

BERKELEY, Michael (born 1948)

(i) Cello Concerto. The Garden of Earthly Delights

 Chan. 10080. BBC Nat. O of Wales, Hickox (i) with Gerhardt – LENNOX BERKELEY: Symphony 4 ***

Dating from 1998, The Garden of Earthly Delights is a formidable piece for a huge orchestra, including quadruple woodwind and a wide-ranging percussion section, complete with 'lion-roar'. Berkeley uses these forces with a winning exuberance in some of the strongest, most colourful music he has ever written. Richard Hickox inspires the BBC National Orchestra of Wales to a brilliant performance, vividly recorded.

The Cello Concerto makes the cello soloist very much the centre, with a series of cadenzas, often meditative, punctuated by orchestral passages which emerge almost as interludes rather than the main meat. Well supported by Hickox and the orchestra, Alan Gerhardt's performance is both brilliant and dedicated.

(i) Horn Concerto (for horn and string orchestra). Coronach (for strings)

 Chan. 9981. BBC Nat. O of Wales, Hickox; (i) with Pyatt – LENNOX BERKELEY: Symphony 1; Serenade ***

Coronach is a lament for string orchestra which explores the 'complex emotions of grief; the rage and anger as well as the sadness'. It builds up powerfully in the manner of a funeral dirge, with a quotation from the Scottish ballad, 'The Bonny Earl of Moray'. The Horn Concerto in two movements is more powerful still. Written in 1984, it represents a new departure for the composer in its often gritty, uncompromising tone. Yet it makes an immediate emotional impact, with the naggingly energetic first movement giving way to a deeply thoughtful and spacious slow movement. David Pyatt is the superb soloist, magnetically bringing out the logic of each development, with Hickox and the orchestra equally powerful in support. Full, brilliant sound.

(i) Oboe Concerto. Secret Garden

🔑  Chan. 10022. BBC Nat. O of Wales, Hickox with (i) Daniel – LENNOX BERKELEY: Sinfonia Concertante, etc. ***

Next to Lennox Berkeley's Sinfonia concertante, a late work, Michael Berkeley's early Concerto for Oboe and Strings of 1976–7 seems all the more warmly conservative, with two substantial slow movements framing a relatively brief central Scherzo. One notes the writing for the strings is often sensuous, not least in the finale, entitled Elegy in memoriam Benjamin Britten. The disc is rounded off impressively with the Secret Garden of 1997, in which stuttering brass fanfares at the start create what the composer describes as a wall of sound. The coda brings a warm echo of the great horn theme in Sibelius's Fifth Symphony, reflecting the love of both Berkeleys for that work. As on the companion disc, Richard Hickox and the BBC National Orchestra of Wales give powerfully committed performances, warmly and fully recorded.

Concerto for Orchestra (Seascapes); Gregorian Variations

 Chan. 10408. BBC Nat. O of Wales, Hickox – LENNOX BERKELEY: Double Piano Concerto ***

Michael Berkeley's Gregorian Variations, using a chant-like theme, contrast lyricism (notably in a beautiful cor anglais solo) with syncopated, jazzy rhythms. The orchestration is colourful too, with timpani and bells. 'Seascape' belies its title in offering an abrasive style, hardly at all atmospheric, but it is well constructed, beautifully recorded and very well performed by Richard Hickox and the Welsh orchestra.

Guitar music: Impromptu; Lament; Sonata in One Movement; Worry Beads

🔑  Chan. 10261. Craig Ogden – LENNOX BERKELEY: 4 Pièces pour la guitare, etc. ***

The haunting Lament and the intriguing Worry Beads (with a main theme that mirrors a more famous piece by another composer) are followed by a one-movement Sonata, improvisatory in feeling, written for Julian Bream; the final encore is an Impromptu, a fiftieth birthday present for Bream. Craig Ogden plays all this music with total spontaneity, and he is superbly recorded.

Jane Eyre (complete opera)

 Chan. 9983. Marsh, Wyn, Mills, Bauer-Jones, Slater, Music Theatre Wales Ens., Rafferty

Michael Berkeley took on the formidable challenge of adapting Charlotte Brontë's long novel as a compact opera just over 70 minutes long. With a libretto by David Malouf, he has devised a surreal, dream-like sequence that, instead of telling the full story direct, sketches in its outlines with time treated kaleidoscopically, whether in selective moments, flashbacks or offstage voices from the past. Setting the sinister scene, the writing is lyrical in free arioso, with clear tunes emerging. When, for example, Adele, Rochester's ward, refers to the mad scene from Lucia di Lammermoor, the main melody from Donizetti's opera is quoted. Michael Rafferty conducts the Music Theatre Wales in a compelling performance, with Natasha Marsh as Jane and Andrew Slater as Rochester singing strongly in the principal roles, and Ffiur Wyn bright and girlish as Adele.

BERLIOZ, Hector (1803–69)

COMPLETE ORCHESTRAL WORKS

(i) Grande symphonie funèbre et triomphale, Op. 15; (i–ii) Harold in Italy, Op. 16; (i; iii) Lélio, Op. 14b; Overtures: (i) Béatrice et Bénédict; (iv) Benvenuto Cellini; (i) Le Carnaval romain, Op. 9; Le Corsaire, Op. 21; Les Francs-juges, Op. 3; Le Roi Lear, Op. 4; Waverley, Op. 1; (v) Rêverie et caprice (for violin & orchestra), Op. 8; (vi–vii) Symphonie fantastique, Op. 14; (i; vii) Tristia, Op. 18 (excerpt): Marche funèbre pour la dernière scène d'Hamlet; (i) La Damnation de Faust, Op. 24 (excerpts): Menuet des follets; Marche hongroise; (i; viii) Romeo and Juliet, Op. 17; (i) Les Troyens à Carthage, Part II, Prélude, Act III; (ix) Les Troyens, Act IV: Royal Hunt and Storm; Marche pour l'entrée de la reine; Ballet Music

Ⓑ  Ph. 456 143-2 (6). (i) LSO; (ii) with Imai; (iii) with Carreras, Allen, Constable (piano), Jowitt (clarinet), Scheffel-Stein (harp); (iv) BBC SO; (v) Grumiaux, New Philh. O, De Waart; (vi) Concg. O; (vii) with Alldis Ch.; (viii) with Kern, Shirley-Quirk, Tear, L. Symphony Ch.; (ix) ROHCG O; all (except Op. 8) cond. C. Davis

This bargain-priced collection of Sir Colin Davis's Berlioz recordings is self-recommending.

(i) Grande symphonie funèbre et triomphale; (ii) Overtures: Benvenuto Cellini; Le Carnaval romain; Le Corsaire; Les Francs-juges; (iii) Les Troyens: Royal Hunt and Storm; Ballet Music; Trojan March; (iv) La Mort de Cléopâtre

(BB)  Warner Apex 2564 62183-2 (2). (i) Chorale Populaire de Paris, Musiques des Gardiens de la Paix, Dondeyne; (ii) Strasbourg PO, Lombard; (iii; iv) Nouvel PO de Strasbourg, Amy; (iv) with Denize

Désiré Dondeyne's 1958 performance of the Grande symphonie funèbre et triomphale, spaciously recorded in Notre Dame, is exciting and convincing in a specially French way. The central movement has a very French trombone solo which some non-Gallic listeners may not take to, but overall this is impressive. The sound has plenty of spectacle and bite. Nadine Denize is equally at home in La Mort de Cléopâtre, which combines dramatic flair with a moving closing section. The four key overtures, recorded digitally two decades later, are also very well played, and the programme ends with excerpts from Les Troyens, the Royal Hunt and Storm, without chorus but still impressive. Excellent recording throughout, but the documentation is totally inadequate, with no texts.

(i; ii) Harold in Italy. Overtures: (ii) Le Corsaire; (iii) King Lear; (ii) Les Troyens: Trojan March

((*)) BBC mono BBCL 4065-2. (i) Riddle; (ii) RPO; (iii) BBC SO; Beecham

(i) Harold in Italy. Les Troyens: Ballet Music

🔑 (BB)  LSO Live LSO 0040. (i) Zimmermann; LSO, C Davis

Sir Colin Davis demonstrates his supreme mastery as a Berlioz interpreter in a version of Harold in Italy recorded live, even tauter and more dramatic than his earlier ones made in the studio, with speeds consistently faster, notably in the first movement. One other benefit of the recording is that the soloist, the magnificent Tabea Zimmermann, is balanced as part of the orchestra instead of being spotlit. The Ballet Music, taken from Davis's prize-winning LSO Live version of Les Troyens, makes a warmly atmospheric bonus. The disc comes at super-budget price, complete with authoritative notes by David Cairns, and now becomes a primary recommendation.

The radio recordings of Beecham in full flight are most welcome. All these items confirm how Beecham in live performances of Berlioz conveyed a red-blooded manic intensity, to match the composer's revolutionary wildness, making almost any rival seem cool. The Corsaire Overture has a fierceness and thrust entirely apt to the Byronic subject, culminating in a swaggering climax that verges on the frenetic. Harold in Italy, recorded in 1956 with the dynamic range compressed so as to magnify pianissimos, is valuable for having as soloist Beecham's chosen leader of the RPO violas, Frederick Riddle. The Trojan March makes a swaggering encore, an electrifying performance from the historic opening concert of the Colston Hall in Bristol in 1951.

(i) Harold in Italy. Symphonie fantastique (DVD versions)

🔑  Bel Air DVD BAC 016. O de Paris, Eschenbach, (i) with Zimmermann (V/D: Andy Sommer)

In his excellent note Professor Kern Holoman calls the Symphonie fantastique 'probably the most extraordinary first symphony ever composed' and in a great performance one is almost tempted to say the most extraordinarily original symphony ever. Christoph Eschenbach secures a first-class response from the superb Orchestre de Paris. Harold in Italy, inspired by Berlioz's time in Italy and by the playing of Paganini, who commissioned the piece for his Stradivarius viola, was the winner of the Prix de Rome. It is another work of remarkable vision and originality, which Eschenbach and his distinguished soloist play marvellously. The recording was made in 2001 at the Salle Gavaux, Paris.

Overtures: Béatrice et Bénédict; Benvenuto Cellini; Le Carnaval romain; Le Corsaire; Les Francs-juges; Le Roi Lear; Waverley

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * RCA 82876 65839-2. Dresden State O, C. Davis

Mercurial, full of vitality and poetic feeling, wonderfully light in articulation, and superbly played and recorded. This RCA disc completely supersedes Sir Colin's recordings on Philips in every way. A glorious issue, outstanding in every way, and now the best Berlioz overtures disc in the catalogue.

Symphonie fantastique, Op. 14 (DVD Version)

Ⓝ  Medici Arts DVD 2020 0098 BPO, Jansons (with HAYDN: Symphony 94 (Surprise); MOZART: Flute Concerto 2 in D, K.314 (with Emmanuel Pahud))

Jansons's interpretation is of the kind that dashes off passionately at the very opening, but otherwise the performance is well paced and finely controlled. The slow movement brings glorious Berlin Philharmonic playing, and the finale unleashes plenty of spectacle and excitement. One of the advantages of DVD is that the camera reveals, with close-ups, the way Berlioz's extraordinarily imaginative orchestration achieves the colouristic effects with which the work abounds. The modern-instrument account of the Haydn Surprise Symphony is amply textured, but elegantly turned and warm-hearted. Emmanuel Pahud is the prince of flautists, and his contribution to the Mozart Flute Concerto is completely captivating, even including a neat little cadenza just before the close. Excellent recording throughout.

Symphonie fantastique, Op. 14 (CD versions)

* Pentatone Surround Sound SACD PTC 5186. Concg. O, C. Davis

🔑 Ⓜ  BBC (ADD) BBCL 4018-2. New Philh. O, Stokowski (with conversation with Deryck Cooke) – SCRIABIN: Poème de l'extase ***

🔑 * BBC BBCL 4163-2. Leningrad PO, Rozhdestvensky – TCHAIKOVSKY: Francesca da Rimini ***

(i) Symphonie fantastique; Overture: Le Corsaire; (ii) Les Troyens: March troyenne; (iii) Royal Hunt and Storm

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ  EMI 5 67971-2. (i) O Nat. de France; (ii) RPO; (iii) with Beecham Ch. Soc., Beecham

Beecham's account still enjoys classic status and has a demonic intensity that is immediately compelling and holds the listener on the seat-edge until the work's electrifying close. In this extraordinary new transfer, in which every detail is crystal clear, the strings have an especially rich sheen and the brass a sonority and depth more telling than on any previous incarnation of the 1959 recording. Even the tolling bells of the finale deserve a credit for their remarkable tangibility, while the warm acoustic of the Salle Wagram, Paris, frames a concert-hall balance of remarkable realism. This is an indispensable record, made the more so for a tinglingly atmospheric account of the Royal Hunt and Storm (with chorus) and the classic account of the Corsaire Overture. Ian Jones, the remastering engineer, deserves to share the honours.

In 1974 Sir Colin Davis chose the Symphonie fantastique for his first recording with the Amsterdam Royal Concertgebouw Orchestra. The interpretation is very similar to his earlier account with the LSO, only the performance has even more energy, life and colour. The slow movement too is more atmospheric than before, and it sounds richly beautiful. Even on CD the recording is outstanding but, by returning to the original quadraphonic master tapes, a more spectacularly realistic sound has been achieved for those with a four-channel reproducer. The results place the Pentatone disc alongside Beecham as a primary recommendation.

A really high-voltage performance from Stokowski and the New Philharmonia Orchestra of the Symphonie fantastique, recorded in 1968. The great conductor was eighty-six and in astonishing form. Though this would not be a first choice, every bar is stamped with personality. There are characteristic expressive exaggerations, but everything rings true and has conviction. The sound is acceptable, though not all the strands in the texture are ideally balanced. This comes in tandem with an outstanding performance of Le poème de l'extase and a conversation between the great conductor and Deryck Cooke.

The high-powered (1971) Prom performance from Rozhdestvensky and the Leningrad Philharmonic demonstrates the orchestra's superlative quality at the time, astonishing British listeners. There is an element of wildness in the reading, perfectly suited to the work, encouraged no doubt by the live occasion, and the stereo recording, good for its period, brings the drama of that out to the full, even if again inner detail is not always ideally clear. The thrill of a great Prom event is vividly caught, not least in the eruption of cheering at the end. The 1960 account of Francesca da Rimini makes an equally compelling coupling.

Gardiner with his Orchestre Révolutionnaire et Romantique uses the extra sharpness of focus to add to the dramatic bite. In his electrifying, warmly expressive performance, heightening Berlioz's wild syncopations, he is second to none in conveying the astonishing modernity of music written within three years of Beethoven's death. (Ph. 434 402-2)

Symphonie fantastique, Op. 14; (ii) Lélio, Op. 14b

Ⓝ (BB)  EMI Gemini (ADD) O. Nat. de l'ORTF; (ii) with Soloists, French R Ch, Martinon

Berlioz provided Lélio as a sequel to the Symphonie fantastique and Martinon conveniently offers the works paired together at bargain price. His account of the Symphonie is uniquely seductive, for though he is brilliant he never presses on too frenetically. The finale, with its tolling bells of doom, has a flamboyance and power to match any available, and the 1973 sound remains remarkably vivid. Lélio quotes the idée fixe from the Symphonie, which helps the listener to feel at home.

CHORAL WORKS

Le Ballet des ombres, Op. 2; Chanson à boire, Op. 2/5; Chant de chemin de fer, Op. 19/3; Chant guerrier, Op. 2/3; Chante sacré, Op. 2/6 (versions I & II); Le Cinq Mai; Hymne pour la consécration du nouveau tabernacle; Marche funèbre pour la dernière scène d'Hamlet; La Mort d'Orphée; La Mort d'Ophélie; Sara la baigneuse, Op. 11; Scène héroïque (La Révolution grecque); Tantum ergo sacramentum; Tristia, Op. 18; Veni Creator Spiritus

(*) EMI 5 57499-2 (2). Villazón, Naouri, Riveno, Les Eléments Ch., Capitole Toulouse O, Plasson

La Révolution grecque, written in 1825–33 and described as a scène héroïque, harks back to the music of a generation earlier, inspired by the French Revolution, a rousing piece in four sections for two basses, chorus and orchestra. Le Cinq Mai, written to commemorate the death of Napoleon, is equally rare, part of a planned major work to celebrate the defeated Emperor, which Berlioz abandoned. The Op. 2 pieces are taken from a collection of settings of poems by the poet Thomas Moore (in translations by Thomas Gounet), usually given the collective title Irlande. Most of the Op. 2 pieces are simple songs, but Plasson has here extracted the choral items, which, like the songs, have piano accompaniment. One of the weirdest pieces here is the ronde nocturne, Ballet des ombres, and one of the liveliest the Chants des chemins de fer, celebrating the opening of the railway line from Paris to Lille in 1846. The lovely Hugo setting, Sara la baigneuse, the three movements labelled Tristia, Méditation religieuse and La Mort d'Ophélie and the Hamlet Funeral March, are all relatively well known, here given warmly idiomatic performances, but curiously two of the later choral works, both settings of Latin for female chorus, Veni creator spiritus, a cappella, and Tantum ergo, with harmonium accompaniment, are the least typical. Good, warm sound for most items, though the piano in the Op. 2 songs is shallow and clangy.

VOCAL MUSIC

Cantatas: (i) Herminie; (ii) La Mort de Cléopâtre; (iii) La Mort d'Orphée; La Mort de Sardanapale

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.555810. Ch. Régional Nord, O Nat. de Lille, Régional Nord, Pas-de-Calais, Casadesus; with (i) Lagrange; (ii) Uria-Monzon; (iii) Vallejo

La Mort de Sardanapale, though ironically only a fragment has survived, that fragment is markedly less original than any of the earlier works, even if it is well worth hearing for the hints of Berlioz themes to come. Herminie, based on Tasso's Jerusalem Liberated, strikingly uses as a central theme the motif that soon after became the idée fixe of the Symphonie fantastique, while La Mort de Cléopâtre even more clearly anticipates the operatic tone of voice that reached its culmination in Les Troyens. Even the earliest cantata, La Mort d'Orphée, with tenor and a chorus of raging bacchantes, brings a memorable close, though the soloist, Daniel Galvez Vallejo, is coarser than either the excellent soprano, Michèle Lagrange, in Herminie or the mezzo, Beatrice Uria-Monzon, in Cléopâtre, with the Lille Orchestra under Jean-Claude Casadesus warm and refined.

La Damnation de Faust (complete; DVD version)

 Arthaus DVD 102 023. von Otter, Lewis, van Dam, Rose, Chicago SO Ch. & O, Solti

Recorded at the Proms at the Royal Albert Hall in 1989, with Chicago forces imported en masse, Sir Georg Solti's brilliant version is excellent in every way. The performance is not as fierce as this conductor could be in this music, but it is wonderfully dramatic, with the Prom audience cheering the visitors on. Margaret Hillis's Chicago Symphony Chorus matches the orchestra in brilliance and responsiveness, and the trio of soloists makes an ideal team. Keith Lewis as Faust is fresh and unstrained, while José van Dam is a superb Mephistopheles, tender and seductive as well as flamboyant, and Anne Sofie von Otter, handsome in royal blue, sings flawlessly as Marguerite, at her most tender in the Roi de Thule aria. Rodney Greenberg's video direction effectively brings out the atmospheric qualities of the Royal Albert Hall.

La Damnation de Faust (complete; CD version)

🔑 (BB)  LSO Live LSO 0008 (2). Sabbatini, Shkosa, Pertusi, Wilson-Johnson, L. Symphony Ch., LSO, C. Davis

Sir Colin Davis's new version at super-bargain price offers a performance and sound which, even more than in his classic 1973 recording for Philips, Davis involves you in the painful quandary obsessing Faust, never letting tension slip for a moment. This time the playing of the LSO is even more refined, with rhythms even more lightly sprung, as in the witty treatment of Mephistopheles's Flea song, characterfully sung by Michele Pertusi, weighty yet agile. As Faust, Giuseppe Sabbatini is more overtly emotional than any rival, Italianate in his expressiveness helped by his radiant tonal range down to a perfectly controlled head-voice. The Albanian soprano Enkelejda Shkosa is a warm, vibrant Marguerite, with a flicker in the voice giving a hint of the heroine's vulnerability. Not just the LSO but the London Symphony Chorus too are in searing form, and the recording brings out the detail of Berlioz's orchestration with ideal transparency. The complete text is provided in the booklet, along with David Cairns's authoritative notes, if in microscopic print.

L'Enfance du Christ, Op. 25

🔑 Ⓝ Ⓜ  Hyp. Dyad CDD 22667 (2) / CDA 66991/2. Rigby, Miles, Finley, Aler, Howell, Corydon Singers & O, Best

Ⓑ (*) LSO Live SACD LSO 0606 (2). Beuron, Cargill, Dazeley, Matthew & Peter Rose, Tenebrae Ch., LSO, C. Davis

Ⓜ (*) HM HMX 2971632.33. Gens, Agnew, Lallouette, Naouri, La Chappelle Royal, Coll. Voc., O de Champs-Élysées, Herreweghe

This atmospheric oratorio for Christmas, so different from almost any other Berlioz work, has been lucky on disc, vividly recorded in beautifully balanced digital sound, immediate yet warm. Matthew Best's version offers a keenly dramatic view. So Alastair Miles conveys pure evil in Herod's monologue at the start and, with words exceptionally clear, Joseph's pleas for shelter are movingly urgent. Jean Rigby is a fresh, young-sounding Mary, with Gerald Finley warm and expressive as Joseph. John Aler is a powerful Reciter and Gwynne Howell a strong, benevolent-sounding Father of the family. This makes an ideal choice for those who want an intimate view and a superb modern recording.

This is the third recording of L'Enfance du Christ that Sir Colin Davis has made, and the line-up of soloists is not so starry this time. The result is bitingly dramatic (although the famous Shepherds' Chorus is lyrically beautiful), gaining from being recorded live, with vigour the keynote. Like the soloists, the choir sings with clean, clear voices; but, gripping though this is, the work's atmospheric side emerges less tellingly.

Herreweghe has the advantage of a French-singing cast, except for Paul Agnew, whose pronunciation is as impeccable as his vocal contribution. It is an attractively warm performance, un-idiosyncratic in choice of tempi and, because it is a live recording, spontaneous in feeling. Not quite a first choice perhaps, but in its attractive new livery, admirably documented, with full texts and translation included, most attractive at mid-price.

Mélodies: Aubade; La Belle Voyageuse; La Captive; Le Chasseur danois; Le Jeune Pâtre breton; La Mort d'Ophélie; Les Nuits d'été; Zaïde

(BB)  Warner Apex 0927 49583-2. Montague, Robbin, Fournier, Crook, Cachemaille, Lyon Op. O, Gardiner

Like Davis before him, John Eliot Gardiner here divides the six keenly atmospheric songs of Les Nuits d'été between four singers, in some ways an ideal solution when his choice of singers is inspired and the presiding genius of the conductor makes this a memorable Berlioz bargain disc. In Les Nuits d'été Catherine Robbin, with clear echoes of Dame Janet Baker, gives a rich and moving account of Le Spectre de la rose (as she does also of the final item from among the miscellaneous orchestral songs, La Mort d'Ophélie), and Diana Montague is full and bright in her two songs, coping splendidly with Gardiner's very fast speed for the final L'Île inconnue, which brings a delightful pay-off. Pierre Cachemaille gives a thrilling bite to Sur les lagunes, and Howard Crook, with his rather thin, reedy tenor, is well suited to Au cimetière but is even more striking in the extraordinary Aubade, the rarest of the miscellaneous songs, with its accompaniment of two cornets and four horns. The Lyon Opéra Orchestra is helpfully recorded, not in the dry acoustic of the opera house, but atmospherically in a Lyon church. Altogether this Apex reissue is an outstanding bargain.

Mélodies: 'Chant d'amour': La Mort d'Ophélie; Zaïde

 Decca 452 667-2. Bartoli, Chung – BIZET; DELIBES; RAVEL: Mélodies ***

Cecilia Bartoli's collection of French songs is one of the most ravishing of her records yet, and these Berlioz items are among the highlights. Myung-Whun Chung's contribution is both imaginative and supportive.

Messe solennelle; Resurrexit (revised version)

Ⓜ  Ph. 464 688-2. D. Brown, Viala, Cachemaille, Monteverdi Ch., ORR, Gardiner

This massive work, completed in 1824, is uneven, but the glow of inspiration shines out over any shortcomings. Gardiner conducts with characteristic flair and a sense of drama, bringing brilliant singing from the Monteverdi Choir, though the choral sound is backwardly balanced. A second, modified and slightly expanded version of the violent Resurrexit is included as a supplement, a revised version that Berlioz himself acknowledged.

Les Nuits d'été (song-cycle)

🔑 Ⓜ  Decca 475 7712. Crespin, SRO, Ansermet (with Recital of French Songs *) – RAVEL: Shéhérazade **** ❀

() Testament mono SBT 3203 (3). de los Angeles, Boston SO, Munch – DEBUSSY: La Demoiselle élue; MASSENET: Manon ()

With Crespin's richness of tone, and with Ansermet at his finest, accompanying brilliantly, this glowing performance is truly legendary and fully worthy of a place among Universal's 'Originals'. Moreover, the Ravel coupling is even more inspired, and the superb new transfers enhance the listener's pleasure further.

Victoria de los Angeles's RCA recording of Les Nuits d'été, like Debussy's La Demoiselle élue, both dating from 1955, makes a splendid, generous bonus to the classic Monteux version of Massenet's Manon, recorded in Paris, also in 1955 and the charm of the lovely voice is still a delight.

Requiem (Grande Messe des Morts, Op. 5; DVD version)

🔑 * Arthaus Musik DVD 102 027. Keith Lewis, Bav. R. Symphony Ch. and O, C. Davis (V/D: Klaus Lindemann)

The spectacular setting of Regensburg Cathedral adds greatly to the impact of Sir Colin Davis's inspired performance of the Berlioz Requiem. With orchestra and chorus set at the far end, like an elaborate altarpiece, there is less spread of sound than in a broader church or concert hall, but the clarity of detail is remarkable, no doubt a tribute to the engineers as well. Davis as ever gives a dedicated performance, rising brilliantly to the relatively few moments of Berliozian drama, as in the Tuba mirum, with its array of brass and timpani, but bringing out the fundamentally devotional quality of the work. That stamp of dedication is sealed when, at the very end of the final Agnus Dei, Davis remains standing impassively, and one hears the distant boom of the bells from outside. Chorus and orchestra are superb, at once warm and incisive, responding to Davis's every gesture, as he leads them through a work they are unlikely to know well. Unison passages for whichever section emerge with exceptional purity. In the Sanctus Keith Lewis, at his peak, gives an ideal performance as soloist, totally unstrained. The DVD gives one the option of having the Latin text on the screen as though on a gauze over the main picture.

Requiem Mass, Op. 5 (CD Version)

Ⓝ 🔑 * Pentatone SACD Surround Sound PTC 5186 (2) Dowd, Wandsworth School Boys' Ch., LSO Ch., LSO, C. Davis

🔑  Telarc SACD 60627; CD 806276. Lopardo, Atlanta Ch. & O, Spano

🔑 Ⓜ  RCA SACD 82876 66373-2 (2). Simoneau, New England Conservatory Ch., Brass Bands, Boston SO, Munch

() BBC mono BBCL 4011-2. Lewis, RPO Ch., RPO, Beecham

Sir Colin Davis's inspired Philips recording of the Berlioz Requiem, made in Westminster Cathedral, dates from the very beginning of the 1970s, yet only now is its sonic potential being fully realized. Recorded in quadraphony, the performance is made available by Pentatone for the first time in four-speaker surround sound. The result, especially in the Dies irae – Tuba mirum outshines all other versions in amplitude and spectacle. The large-scale brass and drum climaxes are quite astonishing, and the choral fortissimos are glorious, helped by the fresh cutting edge of the Wandsworth School Boys' Choir. It was Davis's idea, not Berlioz's to have boys' voices, but the result is a triumph. The LSO provides finely incisive accompaniment and this reissue is now a clear first choice for Berlioz's masterpiece.

This new Telarc version of the Berlioz Requiem also brings the recorded sound of current demonstration quality, spectacular in capturing extremes of dynamic and tonal weight, outshining the previous Telarc version under Robert Shaw. The spectacular sound goes with a reading under the present Atlanta music-director, Robert Spano, which confirms that the chorus and orchestra are still in superb form, with Norman Mackenzie as chorus-master carrying on the tradition so brilliantly established by Shaw. That Spano's speeds are marginally more flowing than in most rival versions means that the whole work has been fitted on a single CD, a palpable advantage. The excellent tenor soloist in the Sanctus, Frank Lopardo, is set at a distance, almost off-stage, a heavenly voice heard from afar.

Munch's Boston version was recorded as early as 1959, yet in some ways it has still not been surpassed, although technically of course the new Telarc version is even more breathtaking. But it was an astonishing technical achievement for its time, and its full glories have not been realized on record until now. The four brass groups make a superbly bold effect within the resonant Boston acoustics and the big climaxes of the Dies irae and Tuba mirum are thrilling. Munch's overall direction has a fine lyrical flow; he brings powerful expressive feeling to the Lacrymosa, where the chorus is at its finest. The deep trombone effects come off splendidly in the Hostias and the Sanctus – where Leopold Simoneau, with headily beautiful tone, does full justice to the tenor solo – is particularly moving. All in all, this is a most distinguished set.

Though Beecham's live recording, made at the Royal Albert Hall in December 1959, comes in mono only, the BBC sound is warm and full. The weight and intensity of the performance and the sense of a great occasion are caught vividly, not least in the great outburst of brass bands, widely separated, in the Tuba mirum. Although the professional choir takes a little time to settle down, the Beecham magic gets to work quickly, to make this one of the most compelling performances on disc. The tenor, Richard Lewis, is in superb form in the Sanctus, his voice given a halo of reverberation. A most cherishable historic issue.

DG have reissued Munch's 1968 Bavarian set as one of their 'Originals' but the choice is hardly appropriate for it is much less successful than his later Boston version. The playing of the Bavarian Radio Symphony Orchestra cannot match that of the Boston Symphony and though the Bavarian Radio Chorus sings with professional precision, the result is not massive enough. The recording quality, though cleaner than the American one, has less atmosphere (DG 477 761-2).

Roméo et Juliette, Op. 17 (DVD versions)

🔑  Arthaus DVD 102 017. Schwarz, Langridge, Meven, Bav. R. Ch. & SO, C. Davis (V/D: Klaus Lindemann)

Sir Colin Davis is without peer as a Berlioz interpreter and it is good to have this fine (and often inspired) account of the master's dramatic symphony on DVD. Recorded fairly early in his days in Munich with the Bayerischer Rundfunk Orchestra, it has great fire and dramatic intensity – as well as the sensibility and poetic feeling we associate with him. Quite apart from the virtuosity of this wonderful orchestra, listeners will be riveted by the singing of the three soloists: Hanna Schwarz, whom we associate mainly with Wagner, the impeccable Philip Langridge and the splendid, dark-toned Peter Meven, who, alas, died in 2003. The video direction of Klaus Lindemann could hardly be bettered. A thrilling performance.

Roméo et Juliette, Op. 17; Les Nuits d'été

(BB)  LSO Live 0003CD (2). Barcellona, Tarver, Anastassov, L. Symphony Ch., LSO, C. Davis

(i) Roméo et Juliette; (ii) Les Nuits d'été

Ⓝ (BB)  EMI Gemini 2 17640-2 (2) (i) Norman, Aler, Estes, Westminster Ch., Phd. O, Muti; (ii) J. Baker, New Philh. O, Barbirolli

(i) Roméo et Juliette; (ii) Overtures: Béatrice et Bénédict; Le Corsaire; Les Francs-juges; Le Roi Lear; Waverley

🔑 ❀ Ⓑ  Ph. Duo (DDD/ADD) 470 543-2 (2). (i) Borodina, Moser, Miles, Bav. R. Ch., VPO; (ii) LSO; all cond. C. Davis

Sir Colin Davis's (1993) recording of Roméo et Juliette has the advantage of very fine soloists, and Olga Borodina has the full measure of the Berlioz style. Thomas Moser is no less ardent and idiomatic, and Alastair Miles is a more than acceptable Friar Laurence. Apart from its all-round artistic excellence, this scores over all-comers in sheer quality of sound, which reproduces the whole range of Berlioz's luminous orchestration in all its subtle colourings with remarkable detail and naturalness. The five superbly played and recorded overtures (dating from 1965, except Béatrice, which dates from 1977) make this an exceptional bargain on the Philips Duo series, though, sadly, no texts are included.

Davis's live Barbican recording may not match in opulence the 1993 recording with the Vienna Philharmonic, for the Barbican acoustic (as recorded) is drier. Yet the refinement of the sound, with orchestra and chorus set at a slight distance, brings pianissimos of breathtaking delicacy, focused in fine detail. The three young soloists are first rate, characterizing strongly. The Italian Daniela Barcellona controls her vibrant mezzo well in the strophes, and the American tenor, Kenneth Tarver, sings his Scherzetto with fluency and sparkle, while the tangily Slavonic timbre of the Bulgarian bass, Orlin Anastassov, stands out well in the Friar Laurence episodes.

Despite the impressive line-up of soloists, Muti's version of Roméo et Juliette is disappointing. This is partly a question of recording, relatively thick and ill-focused, but also a matter of interpretation, less idiomatic and fanciful, whatever the brilliance of the Philadelphia playing. It is good to hear Jessye Norman in the lovely Strophes, but the weight of voice and personality hardly match the incidental quality of that sequence. Dame Janet's superb version of Les Nuits d'été badly needs a new coupling.

Te Deum, Op. 22

🔑  Profil Medien PH 6039. Stuart, Schone (organ), Dresden Philharmonic Children's Ch., Dresden State Opera Ch. & Children's Ch., Dresden Symphony Ch., Dresden Singakademie, Dresden State O, Colin Davis (with MOZART: Kyrie, K.341/K.368a ***)

🔑 Ⓑ  Virgin 5 03 4072. Alagna, O de Paris, Nelson; Alain

 DG 410 696-2. Araiza, L. Symphony Ch., LPO Ch., Woburn Singers, Boys' Ch., European Community Youth O, Abbado

Berlioz is credited with assembling no fewer than 900 performers for the first performance of his Te Deum in Paris in 1855. This live performance from a concert celebrating the Dresden Staatskapelle's 250th anniversary cannot match that scale at 400 performers, but by today's standards that is an enormous body, which in this radio recording is thrillingly caught. Davis's 1969 recording with LSO forces for Philips remains impressive, but the sheer weight of sound on the new version is very much in its favour, particularly when the live occasion adds electricity to its impact. Neil Stuart this time is an impressive tenor soloist, firm and steady, with crystal-clear diction. In the same concert, Davis conducted music by his other favourite composer, Mozart, the Kyrie in D minor, K.341, included here as a supplement; but what will be disconcerting to many listeners today is that he treats it almost as though it is by Berlioz, with all idea of an apt eighteenth-century scale abandoned in a massive celebration.

John Nelson not only has a full, brilliant sound, with the complex textures well terraced, it offers two extra instrumental movements that Berlioz suggested should be included for performances celebrating victory, both with military overtones – a Prelude using one of the work's main themes in fugato and a rather corny 'March for the Presentation of the Colours'. It is good too to have Roberto Alagna as an imaginative soloist in the prayer, Te ergo quaesumus, and Marie-Claire Alain warmly idiomatic on the organ of the Madeleine, Paris.

The DG recording of the Te Deum from Abbado is very impressive. The sound is wide-ranging, with striking dynamic contrasts: Abbado brings great tonal refinement and dignity to this performance, and the spacious sound helps. Francisco Araiza is the fine soloist, but the Davis version is first choice.

OPERA

Complete operas

Benvenuto Cellini (original version)

 Virgin 5 45706-2 (3). Kunde, Ciofi, Di Donato, Lapointe, Naouri, Delaigue, R. France Ch., & O Nat. de France, Nelson

John Nelson has now recorded the original text, after concert performances in Paris. As the Berlioz scholar, David Cairns, says, this original score 'is Berlioz at his most recklessly inspired', and Nelson's fine performance brings that out, if anything more warmly expressive than Davis's. With one reservation, the cast is first rate, with Laurent Naouri singing characterfully in the equivocal role of Balducci, Treasurer to the Pope, and Patricia Ciofi fresh and pure as his daughter, Teresa, both given important extra material. In the title-role Gregory Kunde has a satisfyingly heroic tenor, but too often finds problems in tackling his top notes cleanly. A fine set, unmissable for anyone interested in the composer.

Les Troyens, Parts I & II (complete)

Les Troyens (complete; DVD versions)

* DG DVD 073 4310 (2). Troyanos, Norman, Domingo, Monk, Plishka, NY Met. Op. Ch., O & Ballet, Levine (Director: Fabrizio Melano; V/D: Brian Large)

 Opus Arte DVD OA 0900D (3). Graham, Antonacci, Pokupic, Kunde, Tezier, Monteverdi Ch., ORR, Gardiner (Director: Yannis Kokkos; V/D: Peter Maniura)

Recorded at the Met. in 1983, this very fine account of Berlioz's epic opera, Les Troyens, features the most starry cast of soloists, all at their peak, and is strongly directed by James Levine. Jessye Norman is magnetic in the Fall of Troy, commanding in her prediction of doom. Plácido Domingo is at his most heroic in both halves of the massive narrative, as Aeneas both in Troy and in Carthage. As Dido, Tatiana

Troyanos is touching and tender, more vulnerable by far than as Cassandra in the first opera. The staging is nicely stylized, with grandly traditional costumes and unobtrusive hangings in the set. The recorded sound is remarkably good, and Brian Large's video direction is characteristically well managed. This version is very rewarding on all counts and it makes an obvious principal recommendation for the foreseeable future.

In October 2003 John Eliot Gardiner with his Monteverdi Choir and the Orchestre Révolutionnaire et Romantique had a great success when they visited Paris to give Berlioz's epic opera in the relatively intimate Théâtre du Châtelet but, as the video shows, the stage production by Yannis Kokkos neatly achieves clarity and directness in the complex plot with an economical but effective staging. The first two Acts, covering the fall of Troy, have the darkest of settings, with costumes of unrelieved black, with an angled mirror giving one views from above as well as laterally. The performance gains from the fine singing in the central role of Cassandra of Anna Caterina Antonacci, then coming to the fore as a star of the future. Ludovic Tezier is also excellent as her lover, Chorebus, and the final chorus of Trojan women, led by Cassandra, brings a thrilling climax.

In Act III, 'The Trojans in Carthage', the set brings a complete contrast, light and airy and with bright colours. Again simplicity is the keynote, with spaciousness rather than crowded scenes; and again, surprisingly, it works well, with the story clarified. What is slightly disappointing is that the great love duet between Aeneas and Dido uses a set without any hint of foliage or any atmospheric background; but the singing of Susan Graham as well as of Gregory Kunde as Aeneas is first rate. What is remarkable in an age of wobblers is that Gardiner has gathered a whole team of singers, most of them native French-speakers, with exceptionally well-focused voices. The final Act, of Aeneas's departure and Dido's death, brings a return of the angled mirror, with Aeneas's fleet represented by model ships floating in the air. Fine as Graham's singing is, it does not have quite the weight of emotions of a Janet Baker, yet it still makes a moving impact. Altogether a preferable video presentation, with its period instruments and excellent cast, to the Salzburg Festival DVD of the opera on Arthaus.

Les Troyens, Parts I & II (complete; CD versions)

🔑 ✿ (BB) * LSO Live 0010CD (4). Heppner, DeYoung, Lang, Mingardo, Mattei, Milling, L. Symphony Ch., LSO, C. Davis

 Decca 443 693-2 (4). Lakes, Pollet, Voigt, Montreal Ch. & SO, Dutoit

Recorded live at performances (and rehearsals) in the Barbican in London, Sir Colin Davis's second recording of this epic opera magnificently crowns his whole career as a Berlioz interpreter on record, generally outshining even his pioneer version of 30 years earlier. The first wonder is that the sound of chorus and orchestra is even fuller, more spacious and certainly brighter and clearer than on the earlier, Philips recording, or even the opulent digital recording given to Charles Dutoit in his Montreal set for Decca. Davis is marginally faster in all five Acts, a degree more thrustful, with the excitement of a live occasion consistently adding extra intensity. The casting too is marginally even finer than before. Petra Lang, a last-minute substitute as Cassandra, is superb: firm, rich and intense, investing every phrase with emotional power, instantly establishing her dominance in the very first scene. Opposite her, Peter Mattei makes a powerful Chorebus. Both in The Fall of Troy and The Trojans at Carthage Ben Heppner excels himself, not just heroic with his unstrained Heldentenor, but finding a degree of refinement in the love duet of Act III that few rivals can match, let alone on disc. Michelle DeYoung may not be quite so rich and firm a Dido as Josephine Veasey on Davis's earlier set, but the vibrancy of her mezzo is warmly caught by the microphones, and her death monologue is the more moving for the vulnerability she conveys. The rest make an excellent team without any significant shortcoming. Though the set comes on four discs at super-budget price, full libretto and notes are provided, printed in very small type.

The Trojans: Royal Hunt and Storm

((*)) BBC mono BBCL 4113. RPO, Beecham, with BBC Ch. – CHABRIER: España; Gwendoline Overture; DEBUSSY: L'Enfant prodigue: Cortège et air de danse; DELIUS: Brigg Fair; MASSENET: La Vierge: Le Dernier sommeil de la vierge; SAINT-SAËNS: Le Rouet d'Omphale (with MOZART: Divertimento in D, K.131: excerpts ((*))

Beecham brought an almost unique gusto and excitement to the Royal Hunt and Storm, heard here with choral interjections, and it is a pity that the BBC recording has not more brilliance and range. Even so, the storm thunder is pretty impressive and the poetic close memorably atmospheric.

BERNERS, Lord (1883–1950)

Film Music from: (i) Champagne Charlie. The Halfway House; Nicholas Nickleby

Ⓝ  Chan. 10459. BBC Concert O, Gamba with (i) Carewe – LAMBERT: Anna Karenina; Merchant Seamen ***

Three classic Lord Berners scores here: the effervescence of Champagne Charlie, with its marvellous mock music-hall song, Come On Algernon (though not quite effacing memories of the film version) is well brought out here, as is the Dickensian atmosphere of Nicholas Nickleby (Lord Berners contrived a massive fanfare when the credits read, MUSIC BY LORD BERNERS). Some excellent tunes are found in both scores and the creepy atmosphere of The Halfway House is well-conveyed too. The Séance Waltz is particularly haunting. A splendidly entertaining addition to Chandos's film music series, with superb performances and sound.

The Triumph of Neptune (ballet): extended suite; Fantaisie espagnole; Fugue in C min.; 3 Morceaux; Nicholas Nickleby (film music)

 Olympia OCD 662. RLPO, Wordsworth

Barry Wordsworth captures the character of this music remarkably well. Moreover, the Trois morceaux and the Fantaisie espagnole are new to the catalogue. They are Gallic in inspiration and are attractively imaginative. The recording is good without being in the demonstration class; detail is well defined and there is plenty of body. Originally issued on EMI, this rather surprisingly reappears on the Olympia label and is very welcome.

BERNSTEIN, Leonard

(1918–90)

(i) Candide: Overture; (ii) Concerto for Orchestra (Jubilee Games); Divertimento; (iii) Dybbuk (ballet): Suites 1–2. (ii) Facsimile (Choreographic Essay); Fancy Free (ballet); (ii; iv) Halil (Nocturne) for Flute, Strings & Percussion; (ii; v) 3 Meditations from Mass (for cello & orchestra); (ii) A Musical Toast; On the Town: 3 Dance Episodes. On the Waterfront: Symphonic Suite. (vi) Prelude, Fugue & Riffs (for clarinet & jazz ensemble); (ii; vii) Serenade after Plato's Symposium. (ii) Slava; Symphonies (viii; ii) 1 (Jeremiah); (ix; ii) 2 (Age of Anxiety); (x; xi; ii) 3 (Kaddish: revised version); (x; ii) Chichester Psalms; (xii) Songfest; (i) West Side Story: Symphonic Dances

Ⓑ  DG (DDD/ADD) 469 829-2 (7). (i) LAPO; (ii) Israel PO; (iii) NYPO; (iv) Rampal; (v) Rostropovich; (vi) Schmidl, VPO (members); (vii) Kremer; (viii) Ludwig; (ix) Foss; (x) V. Jeunesse Ch.; V. Boys' Ch. (xi) Caballé, Wager; (xii) Soloists, Nat. SO

A self-recommending set in DG's Collector's Edition. A reminder of the composer's supreme theatrical talent comes with the Candide Overture, the excerpts from On the Town and the West Side Story Symphonic Dances. It may be that posterity will decide that his symphonies are too uneven in inspiration to be among the finest to have emerged from the USA in the twentieth century, but no one can doubt the composer's imaginative flair and ready flow of catchy, memorable ideas. Among the other works, the Serenade after Plato's Symposium and the Chichester Psalms are undoubted masterpieces. As can be seen below, Bernstein recorded much of his music earlier with the New York Philharmonic, and those initial accounts have a unique flair and vitality. But if the Israel Philharmonic is not as virtuosic as the NYPO, they respond to the composer committedly and persuasively, and the DG sound is generally fuller and better balanced than the vividly up-front CBS/Sony recordings. There is much to stimulate the listener here, and with good back-up documentation this box is fully worth its modest cost.

(i) Candide Overture; Facsimile; (i; ii) On the Town: 3 Dance Episodes; (iii) Prelude, Fugue & Riffs; (iv) Symphonic Dances from West Side Story; (v) Mass: A Simple Song; 1600 Pennsylvania Ave: Scena

Ⓝ Ⓑ  EMI 2 06626-2 (i) Saint Louis SO, Slatkin; (ii) with Barbara Lieberman; (iii) L. Sinf., Rattle; (iv) CBSO, Jarvi; (v) Hubbard, O of St Lukes, Russell Davies

Though Slatkin cannot quite match Bernstein himself in the flair he brings to his jazzier inspirations, this EMI bargain collection is very attractive. Slatkin directs a beautiful, refined reading of the extended choreographic essay, Facsimile, while in the West Side Story Dances Järvi relishes the romantic melodies.

Divertimento for Orchestra; (i) Facsimile (choreographic essay); (ii) Prelude, Fugue & Riffs. West Side Story: symphonic dances (original version)

Ⓑ  Virgin 3 63301-2. CBSO, Järvi, with (i) Marshall; (ii) Meyer

Järvi and the CBSO clearly enjoy themselves, especially in the elegantly polished and very spirited account of the Divertimento. There is some beautiful woodwind-playing in Facsimile and, not surprisingly, Wayne Marshall's contribution is glitteringly idiomatic. The same could be said for Sabine Meyer in the very jazzy account of the Prelude, Fugue and Riffs, while in the West Side Story Dances Järvi relishes the romantic melodies, which are exquisitely played, and finds plenty of rhythmic venom for the Rumble.

Divertimento for Orchestra; Facsimile: Choreographic Essay for Orchestra; (i) Serenade for Solo Violin, Strings, Harp & Percussion

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.559245. Bournemouth SO, Alsop; (i) Quint, Bournemouth SO (members)

The Serenade for solo violin and strings is one of the deepest, most ambitious works that Bernstein ever wrote. Philippe Quint gives a thoughtful, refined reading of a work inspired by the idea of mirroring Plato's Symposium. He is well supported by Marin Alsop and the Bournemouth orchestra. Facsimile is a ballet score on the theme of post-war life and the vain attempt to fill a spiritual vacuum, which results in a grim score with little evidence of Bernstein's lyrical gifts; it is most effective in the fast music, which distantly echoes West Side Story. The Divertimento, written for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is an occasional piece that has its moments of fun, but which fails to make its full mark in this performance, refined as it is. Excellent sound.

(i) Divertimento; (ii; iii) Serenade after Plato's Symposium; (ii; iv) Symphony 2 (The Age of Anxiety) (DVD Versions)

Ⓝ 🔑 * DG DVD 073 4514. (i) VPO; (ii) LSO; (iii) Kremer; (vi) Zimerman

This is truly a key recording in the Bernstein discography. The performances are full of joyful, spontaneous life. Bernstein clearly revels in the Divertimento, all but jigging to the infectious dance movements, and elsewhere he creates and sustains great tension, never more so than in the final climax of the Symphony. Gidon Kremer too has all the nervous intensity and vibrant energy to do justice to the inspired Serenade, and Zimerman proves a brilliant and understanding soloist in The Age of Anxiety, finding, like the composer himself, a natural idiomatic feeling for the jazz element in the Masque of Part II, yet rising to the work's visionary Epilogue. The orchestral playing, infected by the composer, is superb, and splendidly recorded and photographed, under Humphrey Burton's direction. Bernstein himself introduces the Serenade and Symphony and the bonus is a documentary 'Teachers and Teaching' in which he reminiscences and rehearses. An indispensable issue.

Dybbuk; Fancy Free (complete ballets)

(BB)  Naxos 8.559280. Burke, Nashville SO, Mogrelia

Dybbuk, written to celebrate the 25th anniversary of the State of Israel, is one of Bernstein's darkest scores. Over 45 minutes in length, it tells the creepy story of a sinister ghost, with the battle between good and evil represented respectively (and very aptly) by tonality and atonality. It is well coupled with another ballet written for Jerome Robbins 30 years earlier, including Abby Burke, the jazz-influenced vocalist. It is a work involving three sailors and anticipates the musical On the Town and is one of Bernstein's most colourful scores with its sharp syncopations well realized here.

(i) Facsimile; (ii) On the Town; (iii) Jeremiah Symphony

(BB) () Dutton mono CDBP 9758. (i) RCA Victor SO; (ii) On the Town O; (iii) Merriman, St Louis SO; composer – RAVEL: Piano Concerto in G ()

Bernstein made brilliant stereo recordings of these three pieces, but these accounts from the 1940s have enormous zest and freshness, and they are every bit as treasurable as the later, LP versions he made. Dutton draws very lively and lifelike sounds from the 78-r.p.m. grooves. The disc also brings his 1946 recording of the Ravel G major Concerto with the then newly formed Philharmonia Orchestra.

Serenade after Plato's 'Symposium'

Ⓑ  EMI 2 08124-2. Perlman, Boston SO, Ozawa – BARBER: Violin Concerto; FOSS: 3 American Pieces ***

Perlman may initially seem almost too confident in the Serenade, missing an element of fantasy. Yet he brings home tellingly how each movement leads thematically out of the preceding one, until the final movement, much the longest, with its references back to the beginning. He also makes it seem a warmer piece, thanks to his range of rich tone-colours, set against the richness of the Boston string-sound.

Symphonies 1 (Jeremiah); 2 (The Age of Anxiety); (i) Chichester Psalms

🔑 Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 457 757-2. Israel PO, composer, (i) with soloists from V. Boys' Ch.

The Jeremiah Symphony dates from Bernstein's early twenties and ends with a moving passage from Lamentations for the mezzo soloist (on DG, Christa Ludwig). As its title suggests, the Second Symphony was inspired by the poem of W. H. Auden, though no words are set to music in this purely orchestral work. The Chichester Psalms is one of the most attractive choral works written in the twentieth century: its jazzy passages are immediately appealing, as is the intrinsic beauty of the reflective sequences. These live performances with the Israel Philharmonic are not quite as polished or forceful as those Bernstein recorded earlier in New York, but the warmth of his writing is fully conveyed in these excellent recordings. With a playing time of just under 80 minutes, this DG 'Originals' CD is exceptionally good value.

(i) Symphony 3 (Kaddish); (ii) Chichester Psalms

Ⓜ  Warner Elatus 092746722-2. (i) Mattila, Menuhin, (ii) Mills; French R. Ch. & PO, Sado

Menuhin, with his thoughtful, measured tones, is the opposite of most narrators in the Kaddish Symphony, but the emotion is conveyed just as intensely. Karita Mattila is a radiant soprano soloist and the choir sings brilliantly, but at relatively measured speeds this does not have the dramatic bite of Bernstein's own recordings, though the sound here is fuller and clearer. In the Chichester Psalms the choir and orchestra seem more at home in Bernstein's jazzy syncopations, giving a dazzling performance, vividly recorded, with Joseph Mills from the New College, Oxford choir a fine treble soloist.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Clarinet Sonata

Ⓝ 🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.572240 Johnson, Lenehan – COPLAND: Clarinet Sonata; Romance; DANKWORTH: Suite for Emma; Picture of Jeannie ****

Bernstein's Clarinet Sonata (1942) is an early work, yet surprisingly characteristic in its melodic flair. In two movements, the first is ruminative, marked Grazioso, the second begins with a cool Andantino, then moves into a joyous burst of jazzy 5/8, 6/8 and 7/8 rhythmic drive, ending suddenly. It is here given an inspired account by Emma Johnson and John Lenehan, who are totally at home in the idiom, and vividly recorded. The couplings of music by Copland and Dankworth are equally rewarding.

Piano Trio Op. 2

Ⓝ  RTE Lyric CD 116. Ens Avalon – BAX: Piano Trio ; BEETHOVEN: Piano Trio, Op.70/1 (Ghost) **(*)

The Piano Trio is another attractive rarity, an early work written when Bernstein was only nineteen and still dabbling with atonality. It remained unpublished in the composer's lifetime, an even more compact work than the Bax Trio, and it certainly deserves an airing also.

VOCAL MUSIC

Chichester Psalms (reduced score)

 Hyp. CDA 66219. Martelli, Corydon Singers, Masters, Kettel, Trotter; Best – BARBER: Agnus Dei; COPLAND: In the Beginning, etc. ***

Martin Best uses the composer's reduced orchestration. The treble soloist's chaste contribution is persuasive and the choir scales down its pianissimos to accommodate him. Excellent, atmospheric sound, set in a church acoustic.

Mass (for the death of President Kennedy)

Ⓝ  Chan. SACD CHSA 5070 (2). Scarlata, Company of Music, Tolzer Boys' Choir, Sine Nomine Ch, Tonkunstler Orch, Krystian Järvi

Ⓜ (*) Sony (ADD) SM2K 63089 (2). Titus (celebrant), Scribner Ch., Berkshire Boys' Ch., Rock Band & O, composer

Described as 'Theatre Piece for Singers, Players and Dancers', Bernstein's Mass was written to celebrate the election of John F. Kennedy as the first Catholic President of the United States. Taking his cue from the then recently completed War Requiem of Benjamin Britten with its interleaving of Wilfred Owen poems with the liturgy of the Requiem, Bernstein similarly interleaves various texts with the liturgy of the Mass. He does more than that in ranging very wide in the styles of the various elements in the music, from simple songs, to jazz and black music, with one section of the Credo prompting an ensemble number that could well have come from West Side Story.

The result is alarmingly disparate, but Bernstein cleverly draws the ends together by the use of motifs that are transformed from number to number – one brings in the words Lauda Laude. The Celebrant in the role of Priest is a high baritone superbly sung with no sense of strain by Randall Scarlata. This new version stands in direct competition with Bernstein's own original recording, but gains enormously in the impact of the spectacular surround sound, very helpful in this work. Massed choruses and orchestra are all excellent, powerfully marshalled by the youngest of the Järvi family of conductors, Krystian. A formidable and compelling issue.

The composer's own performance remains uniquely persuasive and the Sony (originally CBS) recording is both vividly present and has a convincing ambience.

Songs: La bonne cuisine (French and English versions); I hate music (cycle); 2 Love Songs; Piccola serenata; Silhouette; So pretty; Mass: A simple song; I go on. Candide: It must be so; Candide's lament. 1600 Pennsylvania Ave: Take care of this house. Peter Pan: My house; Peter Pan; Who am I; Never-Never Land

 Etcetera KTC 1037. Alexander, Crone

A delightful collection, consistently bearing witness to Bernstein's flair for a snappy idea as well as his tunefulness. Roberta Alexander's rich, warm voice and winning personality are well supported by Tan Crone at the piano. The recording is lifelike and undistracting.

STAGE WORKS

Candide (final, revised version)

🔑 ❀ Ⓑ  DG Double 474 472-2 (2). Hadley, Anderson, Green, Ludwig, Gedda, D. Jones, Ollmann, L. Symphony Ch., LSO, composer

(i) Candide (final, revised version); (ii) West Side Story: complete recording

🔑 ❀ Ⓜ  DG 447 958-2 (3). (i) Hadley, Anderson, Green, Ludwig, Gedda, D. Jones, Ollmann, L. Symphony Ch., LSO; (ii) Te Kanawa, Carreras, Troyanos, Horne, Ollmann, Ch. and O; composer

The composer's complete recordings of Candide and West Side Story have been coupled together on three mid-priced discs for those who have not already acquired one or the other of these inspired scores. Candide is a triumph, both in the studio recording (which Bernstein made immediately after concert performances in London) and in the video recording of the actual concert at the Barbican, bringing out not just the vigour, the wit and the tunefulness of the piece more than ever before, but also an extra emotional intensity. There is no weak link in the cast. Jerry Hadley is touchingly characterful as Candide, and June Anderson as Cunegonde is not only brilliant in coloratura but also warmly dramatic. It was an inspired choice to have Christa Ludwig as the Old Woman, and equally original to choose Adolph Green for the dual roles of Dr Pangloss and Martin. Nicolai Gedda also proves a winner in his series of cameo roles, and the full, incisive singing of the London Symphony Chorus adds to the weight of the performance without inflation.

Bernstein's recording of the complete score of West Side Story takes a frankly operatic approach in its casting, but the result is highly successful, for the great vocal melodies are worthy of voices of the highest calibre. Tatiana Troyanos, herself brought up on the West Side, spans the stylistic dichotomy to perfection in a superb portrayal of Anita. The clever production makes the best of both musical worlds, with Bernstein's son and daughter speaking the dialogue most affectingly. Bernstein conducts a superb instrumental group of musicians 'from on and off Broadway', and they are recorded with a bite and immediacy that is captivating. The power of the music is greatly enhanced by the spectacularly wide dynamic range of the recording.

Trouble in Tahiti

 Opus Arte DVD OA 0838 D. Novacek, Daymond, Randle, Stafford-Allen, Hegarty, Gibbon, City of London Sinfonia, Daniel (V/D: Tom Cairns)

Directed for video by Tom Cairns, this DVD offers a lively revival of Bernstein's brilliant one-acter of 1952, a work that neatly spans the gap between opera and Broadway musical. In seven scenes introduced by a Prologue it focuses on a couple, Sam and Dinah, whose marriage is under strain in the artificial atmosphere of suburban America in the 1950s, as symbolized by their 'little white house'. From the Prologue onwards their problems are commented on by a vocal trio, often singing in jazzy close harmony. In the staging, period clips heighten the atmosphere of such scenes as the Psychiatrist's Office, where Dinah is having a consultation. Karl Daymond and Stephanie Novacek make an attractive couple, with their monologues and duets set against sharply rhythmic contributions from the vocal trio, helped by idiomatic playing from the City of London Sinfonia under Paul Daniel. Daniel is the principal contributor to a useful introduction, and Humphrey Burton, Bernstein's official biographer, offers a 20-minute personal portrait of the composer as a supplement for the 40-minute opera.

West Side Story: The Making of the Recording

 DG DVD 073 4054. Te Kanawa, Carreras, Troyanos, Ollmann, Bernstein (V/D: Chris Swann)

With narration from Bernstein himself, this classic feature film about the making of the controversial opera-style recording of West Side Story gives a vivid portrait of the composer at work. His unique combination of toughness, warmth, shining charisma and overwhelming genius is vividly conveyed. There is no false modesty in his approach to a work which he had written over 30 years before but never previously conducted. For the first time he had studied it in depth, and was surprised and gratified that it is 'so funky'. He goes on to explain that although it had been tiring listening to play-backs, the experience of recording it 'made me feel very young. It sounds as though I wrote it yesterday.'

West Side Story (complete)

🔑  DG 457 199-2. Te Kanawa, Carreras, Troyanos, Horne, Ollman, Ch. & O, composer

The composer's own recording of West Side Story is now available on one CD; the alternative choice combines it with Candide at mid-price on three CDs.

Wonderful Town

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI 5 556753-2. Criswell, McDonald, Hampson, Barrett, Gilfry, L. Voices, Birmingham Contemporary Music Group, Rattle

Wonderful Town was one of Leonard Bernstein's earliest successes, but unfairly it has tended to be eclipsed by the later success of West Side Story. Here, in a fizzing performance, starrily cast, Rattle rights the balance in a performance at once vigorously idiomatic and also refined in the many lyrical moments. The two characterful sisters finding their feet in the big city are brilliantly played here by Kim Criswell and Audra McDonald, not just charismatic as actresses, but singing superbly. Thomas Hampson as Robert just as commandingly bestrides the conflicting problem of Broadway and the classical tradition, and Brent Barrett in the secondary role of Wreck delightfully brings in the cabaret tradition. Such numbers as 'Ohio', 'A little bit in love', 'Conversation piece' and 'Wrong note rag', rounded off with the big tune of 'It's love', can be appreciated for their full musical quality, with Rattle and his talented Birmingham group relishing the jazzy idiom. Bright, forward sound to match, and a helpful booklet which gives the full text.

BERWALD, Franz (1796–1868)

Allvarliga och muntra infall; Bajadärfesten; (i) Piano Concerto; (ii) Violin Concerto. Overtures: Drottningen av Golconda; Estrella de Soria; Play of the Elves; Racing; Reminiscences from the Norwegian Mountains. Symphonies 1–4; Symphony in E flat

Ⓑ (*) EMI (ADD) 5 00920-2 (3). (i) Migdal; (ii) Tellefsen; RPO, Björlin

All these performances date from 1976. The Piano Concerto is a strange piece. There are some beautiful ideas, including the Chopinesque second group, and they are heard to splendid advantage in Marian Midgal's poetic and imaginative reading. The Violin Concerto is an early work, written in the shadow of Spohr and Weber. A beautiful and elegant performance from Arve Tellefsen and the RPO. The shorter pieces are also delightful: the two tone-poems are vintage Berwald. In the symphonies the orchestral playing under Ulf Björlin is a little deficient in vitality; other versions are more vital and alert, but this set is worth exploring at its very reasonable cost, and the EMI engineers have provided very good recording, clear and quite full blooded.

(i) Konzertstück for Bassoon & Orchestra. Drottningen av Golconda: Overture; Reminiscences of the Norwegian Mountains (Erinnerung an die norwegischen Alpen); Play of the Elves; Racing (Wettlauf); Serious and Joyful Fancies (Ernst und heitere Grillen)

(BB)  Naxos 8.555370. Gävle SO, Sakari; (i) with Håkansson

The Overture to Drottningen av Golconda ('The Queen of Golconda') is one of the Swedish master's most delightful and engaging pieces and deserves the widest currency. The performances under Petri Sakari are eminently lively and musical, Wettlauf and Play of the Elves are particularly enjoyable. Least original is the Konzertstück for Bassoon (excellently played though it is by Patrik Håkansson), which is much indebted to Spohr; but there is nothing to preclude a strong recommendation.

Symphony 1; Overtures: The Queen of Golconda; Estrella de Soria. Tone-poems: Festival of the Bayadères; Play of the Elves; Reminiscences from the Norwegian Mountains

 Bluebell (ADD) ABCD 047. Swedish RSO, Ehrling

The Sinfonie sérieuse was recorded in 1970 and is arguably the finest account of the work ever recorded (including Ehrling's later, BIS version). It is beautifully played and unerringly paced. The overtures and tone-poems were recorded in 1966. Excellent performances, vital and imaginative. Very well recorded, too.

Symphonies 1–4; (i) Konzertstück for Bassoon & Orchestra

🔑  BIS CD 795/6. (i) Davidsson; Malmö SO, Ehrling

As his earlier recordings of Berwald demonstrate, Sixten Ehrling has a natural feeling for the classic Swedish symphonist. Tempi are all well judged and there is an admirable lightness of touch. There is plenty of breadth in the Sinfonie sérieuse and no want of sparkle in the E flat Symphony. The Konzertstück was composed in 1827 (the year before the Septet). This could well be regarded as a first choice in this repertoire.

Symphonies 1 (Sérieuse); 2 (Capricieuse); Memory of the Norwegian Alps

 Chan. 10303. Danish Nat. RSO, Dausgaard

Symphonies 3 (Singulière); 4 in E flat; Play of the Elves

 Chan. 9921. Danish Nat. RSO, Dausgaard

The sheer excellence of the Danish orchestra's playing of these sparkling and original pieces under Dausguard is not in question, nor is the quality of the sound. A strong recommendation. However, first choice for a complete set of the four symphonies rests with Sixten Ehrling on BIS 795/6.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Duos: in B flat for Cello & Piano; in D for Violin & Piano; Duo Concertante in A min. for 2 Violins; Concertino in A min. for Violin & Piano: fragment; Fantasy on 2 Swedish Folk Melodies

(BB)  Naxos 8.554286. Rondin; Lundin; Ringborg, Bergström

The Duo for Cello and Piano (1857), played persuasively by Mats Rondin and Bengt-Ake Lundin, alludes to material from the A minor Quartet. In both the Duo and the Quartet the piano is hyperactive, as it tends to be in the roughly contemporaneous Piano Quintets. The Duo Concertante is quite inventive and well written, although it is nowhere as individual as the G minor Quartet (1818). The playing throughout is accomplished, although Lundin dominates in the Duos because of the recording balance. The sleeve and cover state incorrectly that the Duo in D major is in D minor, but this issue is well worth exploring.

Duo in D for Violin & Piano; Grand Septet in B flat; Piano Quintet 1 in C min.; Piano & Wind Quintet in E flat; Piano Trios 2 in F min.; 4 in C 🔑 Ⓜ (*) Hyp. Dyad CDD 22053 (2). Tomes, Gaudier Ens.

Hyperion have put together their two separate discs of Berwald's chamber music as a Dyad. The performances are nearly all first class. If the recording balance is not always ideal, the Piano Quintet (1853) comes off marvellously and, with Susan Tomes participating, there is much elsewhere to delight the ear, even if in the Duo Marieke Blankestijn's violin timbre sounds too pale and reticent; in this work Susan Tomes plays with great flair and finesse.

Grand Septet in B flat

Ⓜ  CRD 3344. Nash Ens. – HUMMEL: Septet ***

Berwald's only Septet is an imaginative work which deserves a secure place in the repertoire instead of on its periphery. It is very well played by the Nash Ensemble, and is finely recorded.

String Quartet 1 in G min.

Ⓜ  CRD (ADD) 3361. Chilingirian Qt – WIKMANSON: Quartet 2 ***

The G minor Quartet is a remarkably assured piece, and the first movement is full of audacious modulations, with themes both characterful and appealing. The Chilingirian players give a well-shaped and sensitive account of it. They are truthfully recorded, and the coupling – another Swedish quartet – enhances the attractions of this issue. Strongly recommended.

String Quartets 1; 2 in A min.; 3 in E flat

 BIS CD 759. Yggdrasil Qt

First-rate performances by this young Swedish ensemble of their great compatriot's output in this medium. They are both original and rewarding. This gifted ensemble play them very well indeed and are splendidly recorded. Anyone who enjoys the Mendelssohn or Schumann Quartets should not delay in investigating this music.

BIBER, Heinrich (1644–1704)

(i) Ballettae a 4 Violettas, 1–7; Battaglia in D; Peasants' Churchgoing Sonata in B flat a 6; Sonata Sancti Polycarpi a 9 (for 8 trumpets & bass); Sonatas 1–2 a 8 for 2 Clarini, 6 violae; 3–4 a 5 Violae; Sonata a 7 for 6 Trumpets, Taburin & Organ; (ii) Requiem in F min.; (iii) In festo trium regium, muttetum Natale (Epiphany Cantata) à 6; Laetatus sum à 7

🔑 (BB)  Warner Apex 2564 62031-2. (i) V. Concentus Musicus, Harnoncourt; (ii; iii) with Equiluz, von Egmond, Villesech, Soloists of Vienna Boy's Ch.; Ch. Viennensis; (ii) cond. Gillesberger

This is a good, varied and inexpensive introduction to Biber's music. The Battle sequence itself has some hair-raising instrumental effects, including barbaric pizzicati representing the cannon. The picture of 'the dissolute company' brings a half-minute of well-organized instrumental cacophony. In the March there is a bizarre drum-and-fife imitation by violin and double-bass. The Polycarp Sonata, using eight trumpets, makes a thrilling sound. The piece closes with a Lament of the Wounded Musketeers. The Sonatas for strings and clarini (and notably the Peasants' Churchgoing) show lyrical effects as well as dramatic ones. The performances have great character – Nikolaus Harnoncourt was always good at explosive accents – and are very well recorded. The Requiem has since been recorded with even greater success. The present version tends to lack some consistency of musical purpose, but still has fine moments. The two Cantatas contain music that is both beautiful and striking and are well sung, and the sound is excellent.

Battaglia à 10; (i) Requiem à 15 in A

🔑  Alia Vox AV 9825. (i) Soloists; La Capella Reial de Catalunya, Concert de Nations, Savall

Jordi Savall's Battaglia opens with a dance-like vigour and has more musical light and shade. The closing Lament is gently touching. The Requiem is recorded – like the Missa Bruxellensis below – in Salzburg Cathedral, which Savall accommodates in a spacious performance that moves forward strongly – in every way a superbly eloquent account with splendid soloists. The elaborate and sumptuous documentation even includes a reproduction of the cathedral interior showing where the various vocal soli in concerto, the antiphonal brass and the string group were placed for the recording. The overall balance is amazingly successful, the separation is natural, but all is bathed in the richly resonant cathedral ambience. This is a magnificent disc in every way and almost certainly first choice for the Requiem, although other fine versions are mentioned below.

(12 Sonatae) Fidicinium sacro-profanum; Balletti lamentabili; (i) Passacaglia for Solo Violin; (ii–iii) Laetatus sum; (iii) Nisi Dominus; (ii) Serenada (der Nachtwächer)

 Chan. 0605 (2). (i) Mackintosh; (ii) Harvey; (iii) Wistreich; Augmented Purcell Qt

The Fidicinium sacro-profanum (1682) are characteristically inventive works, varying between three and eight linked sections of considerable variety (rhythmic as well as melodic) and interest, very much the precursor of the concerto grosso. They are presented here with great freshness and give consistent pleasure. To add contrast, the Purcell Quartet intersperse them with other key works: the solo Nisi Dominus (Richard Wistreich in excellent form) and the dramatic duet setting of Laetatus sum, which is equally stimulating. Later, Peter Harvey returns as the Nightwatchman, singing against a winning pizzicato accompaniment. The famous Battle evocation is as impressive here as in any competing version. The second disc opens with the Balletti lamentabili, in which a haunting Sonata and a delicate closing Lamenti frame an Allemande, Sarabande, Gavotte and Gigue, all of which, for all their dance rhythms, maintain a mood of gentle melancholy. The programme ends with Biber's masterly Passacaglia for Solo Violin, which undoubtedly anticipates Bach's unaccompanied violin music. It is played superbly by Catherine Mackintosh. A splendid set, among the Purcell Quartet's finest achievements. The recording is very real indeed.

Harmonia artificiosa-ariosa (7 Partitas), 1–3 & 5 for 2 Scordatura Violins & Continuo; 4 for Scordatura Violin, Viola di braccio & Continuo; 6 for 2 Violins & Continuo; 7 for 2 Violas d'amore & Continuo (complete)

 Astrée E 8572. Rare Fruits Council

This complete recordings of Biber's masterly Harmonia artificiosa-ariosa shows us the amazing range of these seven partitas (or suites) which were published posthumously in 1712. The curiously named Rare Fruits Council play with great energy and virtuosity and effectively use an organ to add colour and weight to the texture. They are balanced rather forwardly, which reduces the dynamic range somewhat, but some of the solo passages have striking delicacy, and the chaconne-like variations of the closing Seventh Partita are very powerfully integrated. In short, you cannot go wrong with this recording. Auvidis manages to squeeze all seven partitas on to a single CD.

Harmonia artificiosa-ariosa: Partitas III & V. Rosenkranz Sonata 10; Passacaglia 16 for Solo Violin; Sonata VI; Sonata representativa (for violin & continuo)

 BIS CD 608. Lindal, Ens. Saga

Biber's melancholy Passacaglia for solo violin is totally memorable. But the hit of the programme is the Sonata representativa with its bird evocations – they are more than just imitations – including the nightingale, thrush, cuckoo (a most striking approach) and cockerel. Maria Lindal is a splendid soloist and the style of the playing here is vibrantly authentic: the ear quickly adjusts to the plangent (but in no way anaemic) timbres which suit this repertoire admirably.

Mensa sonora (Instrumental Taffel-Music) (Parts 1–6)

🔑  Chan. 0748. (augmented) Purcell Qt

Completed in 1680, the six chamber sonatas which make up Biber's Mensa sonora were subtitled 'Instrumental table-music with fresh-sounding violins'. Each has the usual mixture of baroque movements, including Allamanda, Courante, Sarabanda and Gigue, and sometimes a Balletto or Ciacona. They are lightweight but inventive and are readily appealing. The Purcell Quartett is augmented by Jane Rogers (viola); their performances are spirited and polished, and certainly fresh-sounding; this is much more enjoyable than the alternative version from the Musica Antiqua Köln on DG (477 5001), where the closely observed strings have a buzzy abrasiveness. The Chandos recording is beautifully balanced.

Mystery (Rosenkranz) Violin Sonatas (complete)

🔑  HM HMU 907321.22 (2). Manze, Egarr (with McGillivray in Sonata XII)

✿ (BB)  Virgin 5 62062-2 (2). Holloway, Moroney, Tragicomedia

 ASV Gaudeamus CDGAU 350 (1–9); CDGAU 351 (10–16). Huggett, Sonnerie

Biber's set of Mystery (or Rosary) Sonatas for violin and continuo tells the Christian story in instrumental terms. There are 15 Sonatas divided into three groups: The Five Joyful Mysteries (The Annunciation; Visitation; Nativity; Presentation of the Infant Jesus; and the Twelve-year-old Jesus in the Temple); The Five Sorrowful Mysteries (Christ on the Mount of Olives; the Scourging at the Pillar; Crowning with Thorns; Carrying of the Cross; and the Crucifixion) and The Five Glorious Mysteries (The Resurrection; Ascension; Descent of the Holy Ghost; Assumption of the Virgin; and Coronation of the Virgin). The work ends with an expressively powerful extended slow Passacaglia which becomes steadily more complex.

Needless to say, Andrew Manze's playing is of the highest quality. He is a master of this repertoire, and his timbre is strikingly full, his lyrical phrasing highly responsive, his use of scordatura has plenty of edge, and his supreme virtuosity is ever apparent, without exaggeration. He also opts for a comparatively simple backcloth for the solo violin. He could not have chosen a more distinguished accompanist than Richard Egarr, who provides a chamber organ continuo in nine of the sonatas, and uses a harpsichord in the remaining three. Alison McGillivray (cello) joins them in Sonata XII (The Ascension) to lead the way up to heaven and add to the sonority. The effect here is less dramatic than in the Virgin set, much plainer than in the Gaudeamus, but even more emotionally telling in its relatively austere presentation, and his restrained and dedicated account of the final Passacaglia makes a very moving apotheosis at the close of Part II. The recording is finely balanced, and this set is made the more attractive by an appendix, including Andrew Manze's spoken explanation of what scordatura means, with plenty of examples.

John Holloway's strong instrumental personality is very telling. Davitt Moroney (chamber organ or harpsichord) and Tragicomedia provide an imaginative continuo, using viola da gamba, lute, harp and a regal for the Crowning with Thorns. The recording gives a most vivid presence to the soloist.

Monica Huggett is also very persuasive in these wonderful sonatas and, besides vigorous bravura and characteristic sensitivity, she brings a sense of fantasy to her solo playing which is particularly appealing. Moreover, the sounds made by Sonnerie are aurally captivating, with Matthew Halls's organ continuo adding a rich background of colour to underpin the rest of the continuo. The recording balance is close, but the overall effect is most vivid within a pleasing acoustic. One drawback, however, is that there are only 12 separating bands, one for each sonata, with no cues for individual movements. However, this makes a genuine alternative to the Harmonia Mundi set.

12 Sonatae tam Aris, quam Aulis servientes

 Astrée E 8630. Rare Fruits Council, Kraemer

 Chan. 0591. Bennett, Laird, McGillivray, Cronin, Purcell Qt

Biber's Sonatae tam Aris, quam Aulis servientes are among his most immediately attractive works, their direct appeal comparable with the Bach Brandenburgs. They combine appealing expressive elements and great rhythmic vitality. The robustly extrovert recording from the Rare Fruits Council is full of character, vividly colourful and alive. In about half the Sonatas (Nos. 1, 4, 7, 10 and 12) the authentic string group of seven players plus continuo is joined by one or two trumpets, and here the effect is quite spectacular. The works for strings alone, however, are splendidly full-bodied and colourful (helped by the liberal use of organ in the continuo). The energy and expressive vigour of the music-making here bubbles over. Highly recommended.

The Chandos complete set from the augmented Purcell Quartet is also excellent in every way, full of life and imaginative detail. The sound is first class, but the Rare Fruits Council remains first choice.

Unam Ceylum: Violin Sonatas 3, 4, 6, 7; in A & in E (unpublished)

 ECM 472 084-2. Holloway, Assenbaum, Mortensen

Biber is presented here as the Paganini of his time. The writing, always entertaining, is both dazzling and tuneful and includes, besides the occasional Gigue and Gavotte, plenty of examples of his inventive writing in variation, passacaglia and chaconne styles. John Holloway presents the sonatas with great panache and obvious pleaure in their technical intricacies, while the continuo is admirably realized by Aloysia Assenbaum (organ) and Lars Mortensen (harpsichord). The recording is truthful – forwardly balanced in a warm acoustic.

8 Violin Sonatas (for violin & continuo) (1681); Sonata pastorella; Sonata representativa in A (for solo violin); Passacaglia for Solo Violin; Passacaglia for Lute

 HM HMX 2907344/45 (2). Romanesca (Manze, North, Toll)

Andrew Manze conveys to the full the tension that always springs from strong performances of technically demanding music, yet at the same time he retains an essentially expressive style, also featuring the improvisatory feeling in the writing, to say nothing of its sublimely volatile unpredictability. The recording has a fine, spacious acoustic, and only those who find the abrasiveness of authentic fiddling aurally difficult should stay away from this highly stimulating pair of discs.

Violin Sonatas 2, 3, 5, 7 (1681); Passacaglia for Solo Violin; (i) Nisi Dominus for Violin, Bass Voice & Continuo

 Gaudeamus CDGAU 203. Huggett, Sonnerie; (i) with Guthrie

Violin Sonatas (with continuo, 1681), 3–4; 6–8; 81 in A; 84 in E (unpublished)

 ECM 472 084-2. Holloway, Assenbaum, Mortensen

Monica Huggett's period-instrument timbre and style of attack are no less gutsy and vibrant than those of Andrew Manze, with plenty of vibrant edge on the phrasing. But this is superbly alive playing and the unaccompanied solo flourishes of the Second Sonata in D minor surely anticipate Bach, as the unaccompanied Passacaglia reminds one initially of his famous Chaconne. The Psalm setting, so resonantly, dramatically and touchingly sung by Thomas Guthrie, recalls Monteverdi. Here the violin figurations are clearly as important as the vocal line, and the continuo, using organ as well as theorbo, gives fine support. Excellent, vividly forward recording.

Holloway's performances have great flair. He creates a beautiful timbre on his Hoog copy of a 1649 Amati violin, and he obviously revels in the music's ready fund of melody. The continuo backing is very supportive and ideally balanced and recorded.

VOCAL MUSIC

Litaniæ de Sancto Josepho; Sonatas: Fidicinium sacro-profanum; Sancti Polycarpi

🔑 Ⓑ  HM HMA 1951667. Soloists, Cantus Köln, Concerto Palatino, Junghänel – MUFFAT: Missa in labore requies ***

This is a particularly recommendable coupling in its combination of the music of Biber and his lesser-known, but equally enterprising contemporary, Georg Muffat. The Litaniæ de Sancto Josepho was a late work, with its focal point the Feast of St Joseph which Pope Gregory XV had instituted in 1621, although Biber's music dates from the 1690s. It is characteristically spectacular, indeed one of the composer's most ambitious settings. The vocal and instrumental forces here do it full justice. The introductory Sonata Sancti Polycarpi (instrumental and drums) was used to accompany the exit of the Archbishop. (The other Sonata is interpolated in the Muffat Mass.) With Maria Cristina Kehr leading a fine group of soloists and some spectacular brass playing, this performance, recorded in the resonant Chapel of Melk Abbey, is very satisfying indeed. Highly recommended.

Mass in B flat a 6; Requiem in F min.

 DG 474 7142. Hemington, Holton, Auchinloss, Grant, Pott, Gabrieli Consort & Players, McCreesh (with MUFFAT: Ciacona; SCHMELZER: Sonatas II & XIII; MEGERLE: Peccator et consolator a 2; ANON.: Praeludium; Praeludium legatura; LASSUS: Ave verum corpus a 6; Media vita in morte sumus a 6)

Paul McCreesh offers a chance to enjoy and compare the relatively small-scale Mass for Six Voices and Continuo with the more familiar and more spectacular F minor Requiem which was probably written for performance in Salzburg Cathedral and which is here performed with a string ensemble and the chorus reinforced with trombones in the generous acoustic of Tonbridge School Chapel in Kent. Biber's Mass setting is here introduced by a Ciacona by Muffat and interspersed with other contemporary music to form a quasi-liturgical sequence in which the Ave verum and (closing) Media vita of Lassus stand out for their serene beauty. Characteristically McCreesh directs the proceedings with great vitality: the Gloria and Credo of the Mass, sung with resplendent vigour, really move along, and the Requiem too is never left to languish. The choral singing is splendid, and the Gabrieli Consort and brass players add a fine backing sonority. One of the highlights of the recording is the Offertory in the Mass, a setting of Peccator et consolator for two soprano voices, beautifully sung by Susan Hemington and Ruth Holton, in which the second voice is placed distantly to achieve an echo effect. If you acquire this superbly recorded disc, this is the excerpt you will be playing to your friends as an unforgettable sampler.

Missa Bruxellensis

🔑 ✿ * Alia Vox AV 9808. Soloists, La Capella Reial de Catalunya, Concert des Nations, Savall

This gloriously festive Missa Bruxellensis – a late (perhaps final) work, dating from 1700 – is scored for two eight-voice choirs, groups of wind, strings, trumpets, horns and trombones, and a bass continuo of organs and bassoons. The disposition of the soloists, choristers and instruments in the stalls, around the transept and in the cathedral choir was designed to add to the sense of spectacle, and the music is fully worthy of its ambitious layout. Its imaginative diversity, with continual contrasts between tutti and soli of great expressive power, shows the composer working at full stretch. The Kyrie opens in great splendour with the two antiphonal choirs and festive trumpets (cornets à bouquin). The closing Agnus Dei has the soloists singing radiantly but with piercing dissonance from Biber's extraordinary sustained suspensions, with the full forces then entering for the closing Amen. The performance here, superlatively recorded in the echoing – but never blurring – acoustics of Salzburg Cathedral, recreates the work's première and is truly inspired. This marvellous disc cannot be recommended too highly.

Missa Christi Resurgens

 Kleos SACD Compatible Surround Sound KL 5135. Soloists, NY Coll., Parrott

Andrew Parrott and his excellent New York Collegium here première on CD the lyrically exultant Missa Christi Resurgens from around 1673. It is written for the usual double choir, groups of soloists, cornets, sackbuts and strings, and two trumpets stationed across the transept from the other musicians. The performance places the Mass in the context of contemporary Salzburg performance, interspersing appropriate chant and instrumental interludes, mainly string pieces, taken from Biber's own works. The Sanctus interchanges voices and brass and the Benedictus brings a duet between alto soloist and principal violin. Organ voluntaries (by Alessandro Poglietti) frame the beautiful Agnus Dei, and the performance ends with an evocation of the Resurrection by using one of Biber's own Mystery Sonatas. In this way the New York performance imaginatively and authentically brings together a great variety of music, and the playing and singing could hardly be more persuasive.

Missa Salisburgensis

🔑 * DG 457 611-2. Gabrieli Cons. & Players, Col. Mus. Ant., McCreesh; Goebel

Paul McCreesh in partnership with Reinhard Goebel turns to one of the grandest of all ecclesiastical events, when in Salzburg Cathedral in 1682 they celebrated the 1,100th anniversary of Salzburg as a centre of Christianity. Though the score survived, there is no specific mention of the composer – all was created for the glory of God alone – but shrewd detective work, described in the note, clearly points to Heinrich Biber, who was soon to be appointed Kapellmeister to the archbishop. The blaze of sound on the disc is magnificent, with widely spaced antiphonal groups, choirs and instrumentalists, thrillingly capturing massive contrasts of sound.

BINGE, Ronald (1910–79)

(i) Elizabethan Serenade; (ii; iii) Saxophone Concerto; (iii) Saturday Symphony; (iv) At the End of the Day; Autumn Dream; Butterflies; Candles on the Table; Farewell Waltz; Fugal Fun; Give Me a Ring; Homeward; Inamorata; I Like Your Smile; I Sent You Roses; The Last of the Clan; The Look in Your Eyes; Man in a Hurry; Miss Melanie; The Moon Looks Down; Morning Light; Perhaps I'm Young; Sailing By; A Scottish Rhapsody; The Sound of Music is Everywhere; A Star is Born; Tango Corto; There's a Light in Your Eyes; Under the Sun; Waiting for Moonlight; The Watermill; What Do You Know?; When You are Young

Ⓜ  ASV (ADD) CDWLZ 245 (2). (i) Nat. PO, Gerhardt; O, Heller; (ii) Voss; (iii) S German R. O, composer; (iv) Walter Heller & his O; O Raphael, Hotter; or Dreamland O

Ronald Binge's most famous pieces must be the Elizabethan Serenade (which rightly opens disc 1), Sailing By, which was played at the closing of BBC Radio 4, accompanying the Shipping Forecast, from 1973, or the delightful watercolour portrait of The Water Mill. As this CD shows, his fund of melody was unquenchable and, with his deftness of orchestration, it resulted in some first-class light classical music of the type that blossomed in the 1950s and 1960s. The Saxophone Concerto and Saturday Symphony (conducted here by the composer) are much longer than his usual short character-pieces, though they are just as enjoyable. The recordings (mainly from the 1960s) are taken from a variety of sources but mostly feature Walter Heller and his Orchestra. Recommended to all lovers of good tunes. The recordings range from very good to thoroughly acceptable, and it is fascinating to note that the performers of four of the pieces are unknown.

BINGHAM, Judith (born 1952)

Choral music: (i) Irish Tenebrae (cantata); Beneath these Alien Stars; Ghost Towns of the American West; Gleams of a Remoter World; The Shepheardes Calendar; Unpredictable but Providential; Water Lilies

Ⓝ  Signum SIGCD 144 BBC Singers, Hill; (i) with Robinson, Osostowicz, Farrington (organ), Benjafield & Brannick (percussion)

Judith Bingham has been a member of the BBC Singers for over a decade and their Associate Composer for nearly five years. Her best-known work here is the engaging three-part Shepheardes Calendar, her most ambitious and individual is the Irish Tenebrae, a cantata of much diversity for soloists and chorus with organ, violin obbligato and percussion. The reader will surely be tempted by the titles of the other works and will not be disappointed by their imaginative settings including two poems Ghost Towns of the American West and Beneath these Alien Stars by the Mormon writer, Vesta Crawford. Performances throughout could not be more expert or persuasive. A disc for those who like to explore contemporary music which really communicates.

BIRTWISTLE, Harrison
(born 1934)

Carmen Arcadiae mechanicae perpetuum; Secret Theatre; Silbury Air

 Etcetera KTC 1052. L. Sinf., Howarth

Silbury Air is one of Birtwistle's 'musical landscapes', bringing ever-changing views and perspectives on the musical material and an increasing drawing-out of melody. With melody discarded, Carmen Arcadiae mechanicae perpetuum (The Perpetual Song of Mechanical Arcady) superimposes different musical mechanisms to bring a rhythmic kaleidoscope of textures and patterns. The title of Secret Theatre is taken from a poem by Robert Graves which refers to 'an unforeseen and fiery entertainment', and there is no doubting the distinctive originality of the writing, utterly typical of the composer. Howarth and the Sinfonietta could hardly be more convincing advocates, recorded in vivid, immediate sound.

VOCAL MUSIC

An Interrupted Endless Melody; Duets for Storab; Entr'actes & Fragments; 9 Settings of Niedecker; The Woman & the Hare

 Black Box BBM 1046. McFadden, Watson, Nash Ens., Brabbins

This collection of Birtwistle chamber works spans his whole career, from The Entr'actes and Sappho Fragments of 1962–4, his uncompromising style already established along with his love of a ritualistic structure, to the Harsent setting of 1999. In response to the verses, the music evokes the wildness of nature and of man himself in a sequence of fragments that characteristically still holds firmly together, thanks also to the performers here, including the soprano Claron McFadden and the reciter, Julia Watson. The Niedecker settings were again built on brief evocative images, while the Duets for Storab (1983) take their inspiration from a legendary Neolithic king and comprise duets for two unaccompanied flutes with echoes of Stravinsky. An Interrupted Endless Melody was written in 1991–4 in memory of the oboist, Janet Craxton, with a single melody varied by strongly contrasted accompaniments on the piano. A fascinating collection, vividly recorded.

Pulse Shadows

 Warner 3984 268672-2. McFadden, Arditti Qt, Nash Ens., De Leeuw

This sequence of laments, inspired by the cryptic verses of the poet, Paul Celan, is one of the most moving of Birtwistle's later works. In it he interleaves two works that had a separate genesis – his nine settings of Celan and the nine pieces for string quartet – making a two-tier sequence of over an hour which, among much else, enshrines the composer's response to the Holocaust. In this version the English translations of Paul Hamburger are used for all the poems except one, Todtnauberg, which is recited in English while the song is sung in German. The eighteen sections, most of them brief, far from seeming fragmentary, hang together in a kaleidoscope of sharp inspiration, superbly realized here by all the performers, not least the soprano, Claron McFadden, totally unfazed by the cragginess of the writing and helped by the vividly immediate sound.

OPERA

The Mask of Orpheus (complete)

🔑 Ⓜ  NMC D 050 (3). Garrison, Bronder, Rigby, Owens, Opie, Ebrahim, BBC Singers & O, A. Davis

Birtwistle's The Mask of Orpheus is one of the most challenging operas ever written. With Andrew Davis controlling his massed forces masterfully, helped by Martyn Brabbins as assistant conductor, the intense originality of a score dotted with havens of sheer beauty is never in doubt. Central to its success is the thrilling performance of the American tenor, Jon Garrison, as Orpheus the man, well supported by Peter Bronder as Orpheus the myth. Jean Rigby and Anne-Marie Owens, less prominent in the story, similarly take on the divided and superimposed role of the heroine, Eurydice woman and myth. The recorded sound is superb, vivid in conveying the different musical layers, electronic as well as instrumental and vocal. The documentation is very full. It is good that NMC have issued this important set as 'three discs for the price of two'.

The Minotaur (DVD version)

Ⓝ  Opus Arte DVD OA1000D. Tomlinson, Reuter, Rice, Watts, Langridge, Echalaz, O & Ch, of ROHCG, Pappano (Dir: Stephen Langridge)

This, Birtwistle's eighth opera, like his earlier commission from Covent Garden, Gawain, has a libretto by David Harsent, using a language nicely balanced between poetry and the vernacular, while Birtwisle's idiom, always abrasive, has developed here a more lyrical strain. As in previous operas Birtwistle is not only preoccupied with Greek myth but with central characters who are anti-heroes.

In The Minotaur the piece rises to a superb final climax, when Theseus has killed the Minotaur (in this incarnation with a bull's head and a human body), the monster is finally allowed to speak, so that the concluding monologue as he is dying echoes directly the Death of Boris in Mussorgsky's Boris Godunov, a likeness that Birtwistle intends. With typical ingenuity Birtwistle has created a lyrical thread passed from instrument to instrument symbolizing the thread that Ariadne gives to Theseus to lead him back through the Minotaur's maze.

The impact of the opera is greatly heightened not just by the casting but by the staging by Stephen Langridge at the Royal Opera House Covent Garden, very well filled on this DVD, with simple yet vividly atmospheric designs by Alison Chitty. The role of The Minotaur as a sort of Jekyll and Hyde figure was expressly designed for John Tomlinson, the famed Wotan from Bayreuth and centrally cast too in Birtwistle's earlier Gawain. His voice may no longer be as steady as it was, but his singing could not be more moving. There are no reservations whatever about Christine Rice as Ariadne, superb in every way, and other fine contributions come from the bass-baritone Johan Reuter as Theseus and Philip Langridge as the Oracle, while Antonio Pappano, Music Director at Covent Garden, excels himself conducting an electrifying performance with orchestra and chorus finely coordinated.

Punch and Judy (opera; complete)

 NMCD 138 (2). Roberts, DeGaetani, Bryn-Julson, Langridge, Wilson-Johnson, Tomlinson, L. Sinf., Atherton

Punch and Judy is a brutal, ritualistic piece. It may not make easy listening, but nor is it easy to forget: behind the aggressiveness, Birtwistle's writing has a way of touching an emotional chord, just as Stravinsky's so often does. Stephen Roberts is outstanding as Punch, and among the others there is not a single weak link. David Atherton, conductor from the first performances, excels himself. The clear, vivid recording, originally made by Decca for their enterprising LP Headline series, has been licensed by NMC.

BIZET, Georges (1838–75)

L'Arlésienne (complete incidental music; ed. Riffault)

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI 3 55671-2. Orféon Donostiarra, Toulouse Capitole O, Plasson

The score of the complete incidental music that Michel Plasson and his excellent French forces have recorded is based on the 1872 autograph, and the singing of the Orféon Donostiarra is as excellent as the Toulouse orchestral playing. The less familiar music is every bit as captivating as the suites, so that the performance has great charm, and the EMI recording is very good indeed. Strongly recommended.

L'Arlésienne : Suites 1 & 2; Incidental Music: Suite 3 (compiled Minkowski); Carmen: Suite 1

🔑 ✿ * Naïve V 5130. Lyon Nat. Opéra Ch., Musiciens du Louvre, Minkowski

Minkowski's new disc stands alone, and in front of its competitors, in including a considerable amount of extra music from L'Arlésienne. Fitting neatly between the familiar Suites 1 and 2 is a third, including extended excerpts from the original score, with the chorus adding much beauty to the Pastorale, the second Act Tableau, and extra vividness to the Farandole. The whole compilation is a delight, not least because of the refreshingly polished orchestral playing (with a really authentic French colouring). Minkowski's choice of tempi and crisp pointing of the woodwind are particularly telling – notably in the first Entr'acte from Carmen and the vivacious Minuet which follows. The Farandole, too, is given a splendid lift by Minkowski's rhythmic double dotting, while the flute solos in all three suites (plus the siciliano for a pair of flutes in tableau 4 of Act III of the latter) are delectably delicate. The famous L'Arlésienne Adagietto, played Andante quasi Adagio, as Bizet wanted, is very moving (and it touchingly returns before the final reprise of the exuberant Farandole, heard first with men's voices, and then excitingly with full choir. The choral singing and the playing of Les Musiciens du Louvre are very sensitive indeed, while the recording is first class. Moreover, the packaging, in book-format, is a pleasure in itself. The three-language documentation (including texts and translations) is interspersed with reproductions of famous French paintings by Van Gogh, Gauguin and others, increasing the pleasure of using the handsomely bound booklet which holds the disc. This is now a definitive first choice for those wanting a CD combining excerpts from Carmen and L'Arlésienne, unless the second suite from Carmen is essential.

L'Arlésienne (incidental music), Op. 23 (complete); Jeux d'enfants, Op. 22; Marche funèbre; Overture in A; Patrie Overture, Op. 19; Les 4 Coins; Roma Suite 3; Symphony in C; Carmen: Suite 1

🔑 Ⓑ  EMI 5 09414-2 (3). Orféon Donostierra, O Nat. du Capitole Toulouse, Plasson

This valuable reissue includes the complete incidental music of L'Arlésienne. Plasson also offers Les Quatre coins with Jeux d'enfants, which the composer unaccountably discarded. The other important novelty here is the delightful Overture in A which is contemporary with the Symphony and is scored equally felicitously. The Marche funèbre is in fact the flamboyant Prélude to the discarded opera, La Coupe du roi de Thulé. Roma was written over a period, some years after the Symphony in C. It has not the overall spontaneity of the Symphony and is uneven in quality, but it remains an easy piece to indulge if you are a lover of Bizet's feeling for the orchestral palette. The warmth of the opening horn chorale and the gaiety of the pleasing secondary tune are brought out enjoyably in Toulouse. The Symphony too is well played (with an imaginative oboe soloist) and is certainly enjoyable, if not distinctive. But there are no reservations about the Carmen Suite, and the recording is very good throughout, vividly coloured if not of demonstration standard.

(i) L'Arlésienne: Suites 1–2; (ii) Symphony in C

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 5 67231-2. (i) RPO; (ii) Fr. Nat. R. O; Beecham

L'Arlésienne: Suites 1–2. Carmen: Suite 1

Ⓑ  DG (ADD) 477 6350. LSO, Abbado

L'Arlésienne: Suites 1–2. Carmen: Suites 1–2

🔑 Ⓜ  Decca 466 421-2. Montreal SO, Dutoit

With playing that is both elegant and vivid, and with superb, demonstration-worthy sound, Dutoit's polished yet affectionate coupling of the L'Arlésienne and Carmen suites makes a clear first choice.

Beecham's famous Bizet coupling now rightly reappears as one of EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century'. His magical touch is especially illuminating in the two L'Arlésienne suites, and the early (1956) stereo gives the RPO woodwind striking luminosity yet plenty of body. The Symphony too sounds freshly minted. Although the playing here has slightly less finesse, its zest is in no doubt, especially in the finale, and the oboe soloist in the slow movement distinguishes himself.

Among other analogue couplings of the L'Arlésienne and Carmen suites, Abbado's 1981 DG recording also stands out. The orchestral playing is characteristically refined, the wind solos cultured and eloquent, especially in L'Arlésienne, where the pacing of the music is nicely judged.

Carmen Suite 1; Patrie Overture; Roma: Carnaval à Roma

🔑  EMI (ADD) 3 79986-2. Fr. Nat. R. O, or RPO, Beecham – CHABRIER: España; Joyeuse marche; Gwendoline Overture; FAURÉ: Dolly; SAINT-SAËNS: Le rouet d'Omphale ***

No one conducts the Carmen Prélude with quite Beecham's flair, set off by an explosive cymbal crash, while in his hands the Patrie Overture, even though it is played by the RPO, is as ebulliently Gallic as La Marseillaise, with a degree of brashness for good measure. With its equally illustrious lollipop companions, this is another obvious choice for EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century'.

Jeux d'enfants (Children's games), Op. 22

Ⓜ (*) BBC (ADD) BBCL 4039-2. Philh. O, Boult – RAVEL: Daphnis et Chloé: Suite 2; SCHUBERT: Symphony 8 (Unfinished); SIBELIUS: Symphony 7 **(*)

Sir Adrian's Bizet is performed with elegance, sparkle and tenderness. Marvellous playing from the Philharmonia and a good BBC recording which lacks only the last degree of range and sparkle.

La Jolie Fille de Perth: Suite

(*) Testament SBT 1238. Fr. Nat. R. O, Cluytens – RAVEL: Daphnis et Chloé Suites, etc.; ROUSSEL: Le Festin de l'araignée *

Unfussy, straightforward and fresh, even if the last ounce of polish is missing. But this CD is a must for the coupling, Cluytens's inspired and atmospheric account of Roussel's Le Festin de l'araignée.

Symphony in C

Ⓜ  Häns. CD 93013. Stuttgart SW RSO, Prêtre – RAVEL: Daphnis et Chloé: Suite 2; La Valse ***

Prêtre's tempo for the opening movement (exposition repeat included) is just right, with a nice rhythmic lift, and the Adagio brings a memorable oboe solo. The unnamed principal has an almost vocal vibrato, and he phrases exquisitely. In the very brisk moto perpetuo finale the strings articulate with tremendous bustling precision, yet the second theme is able to relax and lilt seductively. The Liederhalle, Stuttgart, has a most attractive acoustic and the recording, although digital, has an almost analogue ambient warmth. If you want the couplings this disc is highly recommendable.

PIANO MUSIC

Jeux d'enfants, Op. 22

(BB) (*) EMI Gemini 5 86510-2 (2). Collard, Béroff – DEBUSSY & RAVEL: Music for piano, 4 hands & 2 pianos; DUKAS: L'Apprenti Sorcier **(*)

Jeux d'enfants is a collection of 12 engaging piano miniatures, of which Bizet scored just five for his familiar orchestral suite. While he adroitly picked the highlights, many of the other pieces are delightful too. Jean-Philippe Collard and Michel Béroff play them appealingly, with items like Les Chevaux de bois and Les Quatre Coins standing out. The digital recording, made in the Paris Salle Wagram in 1994, is not flattering, but very acceptable when the repertoire is so rare.

VOCAL

'Chant d'amour': Mélodies: Adieux de l'hôtesse arabe; Chant d'amour; La Coccinelle; Ouvre ton cœur; Tarantelle

 Decca 452 667-2. Bartoli, Chung – BERLIOZ; DELIBES; RAVEL: Mélodies ***

These delightful Bizet songs come as part of an outstanding recital of French repertoire, readily demonstrating the versatility of Cecilia Bartoli, who is so sympathetically accompanied by Myung-Whun Chung. Both voice and piano are recorded beautifully. The collection is considered more fully in our Recitals section, below.

Te Deum

(*) Australian Decca Eloquence 476 2947. Greenberg, Winbergh, Lausanne Pro Arte Ch., Swiss R. Ch., SRO, Lopez-Cobos – POULENC: Gloria; Stabat Mater *

Bizet's Te Deum of 1858 is a product of his youth and was written while he was still at Rome. It is very much a student work, with little of the effortless mastery that distinguishes the even earlier Symphony, and there is much that is derivative. There are some entertaining moments in the course of its 25 minutes, along with some obviously manufactured ideas, not all of which are effective. However, with such a good performance and recording, there is enough of interest here to make it worth considering.

OPERA

Carmen (complete; DVD versions)

(N) * TDK DVD DV-CLOPCAR Obraztsova, Domingo, Buchanan, Mazurok, Vienna State Op., Ch. & O, Carlos Kleiber (Stage and V/D Franco Zeffirelli)

 DG DVD 073 4032. Bumbry, Vickers, Freni, Diaz, V. State Op. Ch., VPO, Karajan (Dir. & V/D: Karajan)

 Columbia Tristar DVD CDR 10530. Migenes, Domingo, Raimondi, Esham, Fr. Nat. RSO and Ch., Maazel (V/D: Franco Rossi)

(N)  Decca DVD 074 3312DH (Blu-ray version 074 3313) Antonacci, Kaufmann, D'Arcangelo, Amsellem, ROHCG Ch. & O, Pappano

(*) DG DVD 073 000-9. Baltsa, Carreras, Ramey, Mitchell, Met. Op. Ch. & O, Levine (V/D: Brian Large)

Zeffirelli's 1978 live DVD recording will be hard to surpass. Eleana Obraztsova and Domingo are ideally cast as Carmen and Don José. They act very convincingly and sing gloriously (the Flower Song is as memorable as Carmen's hit numbers). Moreover, for once there is a totally convincing Micaëla in Isobel Buchanan, who also sings ravishingly. Her Act III scene and aria is a highlight of the opera. From the opening Prelude Carlos Kleiber directs with fizzing vitality and drama, yet creates a warmly sympathetic backcloth for the voices in the lyrical writing: the close of Act II is unforgettable, as, of course, is the opera's final scene. Zeffirelli's production is predictably spectacular (especially in the outer Acts) and traditional in the best possible way, and the camera follows the action admirably. The sound cannot be faulted. The set is additionally offered in a reduced price box with Giordano's Fedora and Verdi's Il trovatore, both with Domingo, Il trovatore conducted by Karajan (TDK Gold Edition: DV-GOLDBOX2).

Based on a lavish Salzburg Festival production, directed (like the video production) by Karajan himself, his film of Carmen was made in 1967 with the starriest of casts. Though the sound recording was made in the Sofiensaal in Vienna, the filming was done in Munich, using an expansion of Teo Otto's impressive stage sets. That involved the singers miming to their own voices, so that when the film regularly uses revealing close-ups of the soloists, the discrepancies between lips and voice become obvious. That is one of the few flaws in an exceptionally powerful production. Grace Bumbry as Carmen is at her most seductive, sensuous in both voice and looks, establishing herself as sultry and provocative even before she starts singing in Act I. Jon Vickers is equally powerful as Don José, defiant of authority from the very beginning, and though his tenor is of heroic scale, he shades it down beautifully for such an aria as the Flower Song, using a perfectly controlled head-voice at the end in genuinely hushed singing. Mirella Freni is an enchanting Micaëla, girlish and fun-loving, with Justino Diaz a powerful and handsome Escamillo completing a quartet of principals not just characterful but vocally firm and clear. The rest of the cast cannot be faulted either, and Karajan conducts with a combination of bite and warmth to match and even outshine his two regular CD versions. Recitatives are preferred to spoken dialogue, and the full ballet is included.

Filmed on location in the most atmospheric of sites, few operatic films add so vividly to the music as this version of Carmen, directed by Franco Rossi. It starts with a striking visual coup: the credits are shown with merely the murmur of a bullring crowd in the background, while a matador is seen playing with a bull. He finally brings his sword down for the kill, and Bizet's opening Prélude thunders out. The film is set to a recording specially made in the studio, and issued on CD by Erato. An excellent performance, under Lorin Maazel, on DVD it projects as sharply dramatic, with Plácido Domingo at his finest and Julia Migenes the most vibrantly characterful of Carmens. Ruggero Raimondi makes a noble Escamillo, and though Faith Esham's voice is not ideally sweet as Micaëla, it is a tender, sensitive performance. The sound is first rate, and having the singers miming to the music is not too distracting.

The newest Covent Garden version of Carmen is traditional and large-scale, although some of the background detail is overdone, including the provision of animals! Pappano uses his own edition of the score, but his few cuts and adjustments will only worry purists. He directs the proceedings with much élan and Bizet's delightful score emerges in vivid colouring. Jonas Kaufmann gives a bold, lusty portrayal of Don José matched by a similarly strong and sexy Carmen in Anna Caterina Antonacci. Norah Amsellem's Micaëla has pathos and charm, but not a great deal else. Ildebrando D'Arcangelo is a potent Escamillo. An enjoyable version overall, with 5.1 surround sound available, plus an optional Blu-ray alternative (with a different catalogue number).

DG's alternative DVD version of Carmen offers a grandly traditional production from the Met. in New York. It is starrily cast, with James Levine bringing out all the brilliance of the score, almost to a fault, when the sound is bright to the point of edginess. This 1988 production, directed for the stage by Paul Mills and imaginatively directed for television by Brian Large, has the most lavish, solidly realistic sets and costumes by John Bury, so grand that at each curtain-rise the stage picture prompts loud applause. Happily, at the time the four principals, all noted for taking their respective roles, were at their peak. Agnes Baltsa, who earlier sang Carmen for Karajan, is as ever a tough, defiant heroine, sultry, with rarely a smile on her face, initially sneering at the attentions of the glamorous Escamillo of Samuel Ramey. Her mezzo is firm and dark if hardly beautiful, with none of the vocal unevenness that developed later. Similarly, José Carreras as Don José is in superb voice, singing with a honeyed range of tone before his voice was affected by leukaemia. The Flower Song is exquisitely shaded with a perfectly controlled head-voice for the pianissimo high note at the end. Samuel Ramey, more noble than flamboyant or dangerous, makes a powerful Escamillo, and Leona Mitchell with her warm soprano is an appealing Micaëla. Though Levine's fast speeds occasionally trip up the very large chorus, they sing brilliantly, even though stage movement is on the primitive side. Though this cannot match Rossi's film of Migenes and Domingo in imagination, it makes a fine recommendation for a live performance filmed in the opera house.

Carmen (complete; CD versions)

🔑 * EMI 5 57434-2 (3). Gheorghiu, Alagna, Hampson, Mula, Les Elements Ch., Toulouse Capitole O, Plasson

🔑  DG 410 088-2 (3). Baltsa, Carreras, van Dam, Ricciarelli, Barbaux, Paris Op. Ch., Schoenberg Boys' Ch., BPO, Karajan

🔑 Ⓜ (*) EMI 5 67357-2 (3). De los Angeles, Gedda, Micheau, Blanc, French R. Ch. & O, Beecham

It is only the first of the delights of EMI's richly enjoyable set of Carmen with Angela Gheorghiu that it is restored as a grand opera, returning to the traditional version, with spoken dialogue replaced by the recitatives that Ernest Guiraud provided at the suggestion of the composer just before he died. This is a Carmen at once threatening and seductive, using a glorious range of tone, with a hearty chest register and the subtlest control of vibrato to give moments of heightened emotion extra intensity. So in the Quintet, leading up to Carmen's confession, 'Je suis amoureuse', her vibrancy is suddenly transformed into rich, glowing tone on that confession, a moment of rapture. This is a performance full of just such imaginative detail, and it includes as a fascinating supplement the first version of what became the Habañera in Act I. Gheorghiu is well matched by Roberto Alagna as Don José, always at his happiest singing French and, most moving as the beaten victim in Act IV. Thomas Hampson is a heroic, swaggering Escamillo and Inva Mula a touching Micaëla, idiomatically French, with Michel Plasson drawing crisp and incisive playing from his Toulouse team, bringing lightness to ensembles, often at speeds faster than usual.

Otherwise Karajan's DG set of Carmen makes a first choice among modern versions. In Carreras he has a Don José who is lyrical and generally sweet-toned. José van Dam is incisive and virile, the public hero-figure; which leaves Agnes Baltsa as a vividly compelling Carmen, tough and vibrant, yet with tenderness under the surface.

De los Angeles's portrayal of Carmen is absolutely bewitching, and when in the Quintet scene she says Je suis amoureuse one believes her absolutely. Naturally the other singers are not nearly as dominant as this, but they make admirable foils; Nicolai Gedda is pleasantly light-voiced as ever, Janine Micheau is a sweet Micaëla, and Ernest Blanc makes an attractive Escamillo. The hall acoustic makes the chorus sound very resonant but gives an attractive theatrical atmosphere to the solo voices, caught naturally and without edginess, and well balanced in relation to the orchestra. At its mid-price, this famous set reasserts its position near the top of the list of recommendations and makes a worthy addition to EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century'. Beecham adds his own special touch to the orchestral interludes. The documentation cannot be faulted, including session photographs and a full translation.

Bernstein's 1973 Carmen was recorded at the New York Metropolitan Opera. Some of his slow tempi are very controversial, but what really matters is the authentic tingle of dramatic tension which permeates the whole entertainment. Marilyn Horne – occasionally coarse in expression – gives a fully satisfying reading of the heroine's role, a vivid characterization. The rest of the cast similarly works to Bernstein's consistent overall plan. It is very well transferred and comes as a Trio offered with only a cued synopsis. (DG 471 750-2)

Karajan's RCA version, made in Vienna in 1964, owes much to Leontyne Price's seductive, smoky-toned Carmen. Corelli has moments of coarseness but his is still a heroic performance. Robert Merrill sings with gloriously firm tone, while Mirella Freni is enchanting as Micaëla. With recording full of atmosphere, and attractively repackaged at mid-price, this is a very strong contender. (74321 39495-2)

Solti's Decca performance is remarkable for its new illumination of characters. Tatiana Troyanos is one of the subtlest Carmens on record. Escamillo too is more readily sympathetic, not just the flashy matador who steals the hero's girl, whereas Don José is revealed as weak rather than just a victim. Troyanos's singing is delicately seductive too, with no hint of vulgarity, while the others make up a consistent singing cast. Though the CD transfer brings out the generally excellent balances of the originally analogue recording, it exaggerates the bass, although the voices retain their fine realism and bloom. (414 489-2)

Maria Callas was ideally suited to the role of Carmen, but her complete recording is disappointing. One principal trouble is that the performance, apart from her, lacks a taut dramatic rein, with slack ensemble from singers and orchestra alike. The moment the heroine enters, the tension rises; but by Callas's standards this is a performance rough-hewn, strong and characterful but lacking the full imaginative detail of her finest work. The set has been remastered and a new booklet prepared for this latest reissue. (EMI 5 56281-2)

Les Pêcheurs de perles (complete)

Ⓜ () EMI mono 5 65266-2 (2). Angelici, Legay, Dens, Noguera, Théâtre Nat. de l'Opéra-Comique Ch. & O, Cluytens

Unavailable since the early days of LP, this superb EMI/Cluytens set of 1954 offers the finest, most warmly expressive performance on disc of this delectable opera. Ironically, its nearest rival is the Philips set of the previous year under Jean Fournet, also in mono, both of them outshining later, stereo sets. Cluytens is an even more sensitive conductor than his Philips rival, less four-square, getting the music to flow flexibly; and his cast, idiomatically French, has no weak link. Martha Angelici as the heroine, Leila, is both sweet and bright, with no Gallic shrillness, and Henry Legay has a degree of heroic timbre in the rounded, lyric quality of his tenor, while Michel Dens, as in other French opera recordings of the period, proves a firm, characterful baritone. With excellent choral and orchestral work, one gets the impression of a stage experience translated to the studio. The mono transfer is a little dull on orchestral sound, but it captures voices vividly.

BLAKE, Howard (born 1938)

Clarinet Concerto

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55068. King, ECO, composer (with LUTOSŁAWSKI: Dance Preludes; SEIBER: Concertino ***)

Howard Blake provides a comparatively slight but endearing Clarinet Concerto, which is played here with great sympathy by Thea King, who commissioned the work. At budget price this is even more attractive.

(i) Violin Concerto (Leeds). A Month in the Country (film incidental music): Suite; Sinfonietta for Brass

🔑  ASV CDDCA 905. (i) Edlinger; E. N. Philh., Daniel

It was the success of his music for The Snowman that gave Howard Blake the encouragement and the artistic breathing-space to write his beautiful and stimulating Violin Concerto. Christiane Edlinger is the soloist in what proves to be an inspired performance, caught 'on the wing'. The only snag is the excessively wide dynamic range of the recording. Blake's suite of string music written for the film A Month in the Country brings moments of comparable bitter-sweet, elegiac feeling. It is played most sensitively, as is the brass Sinfonietta, sonorous and jolly by turns. In terms of overall concert-hall realism, the recording is impressive and this record is strongly recommended.

Penillion for Violin and Piano, Op. 571; (i) Piano Quartet, Op. 179; Violin Sonata, Op. 586; Jazz Dances, Op. 520a

Ⓝ (BB) * Naxos 8.572083 Madeleine Mitchell, Composer (piano); (i) with Rothestein, Essex, Willison

Howard Blake follows his concertos for clarinet and violin, plus an enjoyable collection of piano miniatures (ABC Classics 476 118-4) with this splendid collection of chamber music again showing his seemingly unlimited melodic flow and structural felicity. Penillion is an appealing inventive set of seven variations on a 'Welsh-like' theme; the Piano Quartet is a highly spontaneous work with a deeply reflective Lento; but the highlight of the disc is the Violin Sonata, with its Elysian slow movement exquisitely played by Madeleine Mitchell in partnership with the composer. The Jazz Dances are not Jazz at all, but infectiously 'pay mischievous, but affectionate homage to its rhythmic intricacies'. Altogether four splendid works very persuasively played and recorded.

PIANO MUSIC

Piano miniatures

 ABC Classics 476 118-4. Chen

Howard Blake has a natural, easy-going melodic gift, which makes this series of unassuming piano miniatures very beguiling when they are so sympathetically played by William Chen and very well recorded. The simple, tuneful items like the Ballad, Impromptu, Berceuse, Walking Song and the film theme, The Music Box, may lack contemporary harmonic astringencies, yet they contrast well with the dancing staccato of the Toccatino, while the gentle portrait of Isabelle, written for a wedding, makes a foil for the vigorous ballet number, Dance of the Hunters, and the catchily syncopated Rag and Jump. Blake's famous Snowman tune is predictably included; perhaps the final item, Make-Believe, written for the animated film Grandpa will become a similar hit.

BLISS, Arthur (1891–1975)

(i; iii) Adam Zero (Ballet Suite); (iii; iv) Christopher Columbus (Film Score: Suite); (v) Cello Concerto; (iii; vi) Concerto for 2 Pianos; (vii) A Colour Symphony; (ii; iii) Discourse for Orchestra; (vii) Things to Come (Music from the film)

Ⓑ  EMI 5 86589-2 (2). (i) RLPO; (ii) Handley; (iii) CBSO; (iv) Marcus Dods; (v) Noras, Bournemouth SO, Berglund; (vi) Smith & Sellick; cond. Arnold; (vii) RPO, Groves

A fascinating cross-section of Bliss's orchestral and concertante music. Adam Zero for the most part shows his muse at its most fertile and the first movement of the Cello Concerto is one of the most inspired that Bliss ever wrote. The slow movement, with its rhapsodic style and elegiac atmosphere, is not sharply memorable, but the finale has splendid vigour and momentum. Arto Noras is the superbly eloquent soloist, and Berglund's accompaniment, pulsing with life, is little short of inspired.

The Two-Piano Concerto was arranged for three hands for Cyril Smith and Phyllis Sellick to play. The vigour of early Bliss makes for attractive results, with echoes of Petrushka and Debussy nicely worked in. Superbly played and richly recorded, it makes a delightful companion for the piano work. A Colour Symphony is too episodic to be truly symphonic, but it is nevertheless highly effective and is expertly scored. It comes into its own in Groves's sympathetic performance.

Of the two examples of Bliss's film music, it is the March from Things to Come which offers what is perhaps the single most memorable idea to come from its composer's pen. The invention shows Bliss at his finest, and once again Groves and the RPO are splendid advocates and the HMV engineers rise to the occasion.

(i; ii) Adam Zero (Ballet Suite); Mêlée fantasque; Hymn to Apollo; (i; ii; iii) Rout for Soprano & Orchestra; (i; iv; v) Serenade for Orchestra & Baritone; (i; vi; vii) The World is charged with the grandeur of God

 Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 225 [id.]. (i) LSO; (ii) cond. composer; (iii) with Rae Woodland; (iv) Shirley-Quirk; (v) cond. Brian Priestman; (vi) with Amb. S.; (vii) cond. Ledger

The ballet Adam Zero contains some attractive moments. The Mêlée fantasque (well named) is even more striking, with strong Stravinskian influences but with a characteristic elegiac section at its centre. After the Hymn to Apollo, although the rest of the programme is primarily vocal, it is in fact the orchestral writing that one remembers most vividly, for the Serenade has two purely orchestral movements out of three. The second, Idyll, shows Bliss's lyrical impulse at its most eloquent. The orchestra is almost more important than the voice in Rout. The solo vocal performances throughout this CD are of high quality, and John Shirley-Quirk's swashbuckling account of the gay finale of the Serenade must have pleased the composer greatly. The recordings date from the early 1970s and are of high quality.

Adam Zero (ballet; complete); A Colour Symphony

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553460. N. Philh. O, Lloyd-Jones

Full of striking ideas and effects to illustrate four heraldic colours, the Colour Symphony here receives a refined and idiomatic reading, marked by superb wind-playing. More valuable still is the first complete recording of the ballet, Adam Zero, in which the process of creating a ballet is presented as an allegory for the ongoing life-cycle. Lloyd-Jones directs a dramatically paced performance, amply confirming this as one of Bliss's most inventive, strongly coordinated scores, shamefully neglected. Full, well-balanced sound.

Checkmate (ballet); Prologue; 5 Dances

🔑 (BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55099. E. N. Philh. O, Lloyd-Jones – LAMBERT: Horoscope  ✿; WALTON: Façade ***

David Lloyd-Jones is a highly sympathetic advocate of Bliss's ballet suite, and he includes also the Prologue. The Hyperion recording, while warm enough to convey the score's lyricism, has plenty of bite in the Red Knight's Mazurka. This is most enjoyable, but it is the superb couplings that make this triptych both distinctive and now very desirable at Helios price.

(i) Checkmate: Suite; Hymn to Apollo; (ii) Music for Strings; (iii) Clarinet Quintet; (ii, iv) Lie strewn the white flocks

🔑 Ⓑ  Chan. 2-for-1 241-1 (2). (i) Ulster O, Handley; (ii) N. Sinfonia, Hickox; (iii) Hilton, Lindsay Qt; (iv) D. Jones, N. Sinfonia Ch.

The Music for Strings is surely the key work here, and Hickox directs it spontaneously and with deeply expressive feeling. Vernon Handley conducts with complete authority and evident enthusiasm both the Checkmate Suite and the less familiar Hymn to Apollo. In the masterly Clarinet Quintet (see below) Janet Hilton and the Lindsays are totally persuasive, and the recording is most naturally balanced. The Pastoral, Lie strewn the white flocks, is another of the composer's most memorable works and is brought vividly to life by the passionate singing of the Northern Sinfonia Chorus. Della Jones sings the Pigeon song touchingly, and the recording is in the demonstration bracket. On the whole, this is to be preferred to the Hyperion version (see above).

Checkmate (ballet): 5 Dances

Ⓜ  Chan. 6576. West Australian SO, Schönzeler – RUBBRA: Symphony 5 ; TIPPETT: Little Music **(*)

The five dances from Checkmate on the Chandos issue are well played under Hans-Hubert Schönzeler and, with its valuable Rubbra coupling, this is welcome back in the catalogue at mid-price.

(i) Cello Concerto. A Colour Symphony; (ii) The Enchantress (scena for contralto and orchestra)

Ⓜ  Chan. 10221X. (i) Wallfisch; (ii) Finnie; Ulster O, Handley

Raphael Wallfisch is a powerful soloist in the Cello Concerto. This is a reading which brings out the red-blooded warmth of the writing, with the soloist strongly supported by the Ulster Orchestra under Handley. They are equally persuasive accompanying Linda Finnie in the extended scena which Bliss wrote for Kathleen Ferrier nearly 20 years earlier. For this reissue Chandos have added Vernon Handley's authoritative and enthusiastic account of the Colour Symphony and the recording is warm and atmospheric throughout.

Piano Concerto

🔑 ✿ () British Music Society mono BMS 101 CDH. Mewton-Wood, Utrecht SO, Goehr – STRAVINSKY: Concerto for Piano & Wind (); SHOSTAKOVICH: Piano Concerto 1 ()

Bliss was so impressed with Noel Mewton-Wood's playing of his Concerto that he wrote a sonata especially for him. The Concerto was recorded in 1952, and it is a truly prodigious performance, full of flair and with a vein of easy lyricism that invests the slow movement with magical, poetic feeling. The concert hall recording of the orchestra is two-dimensional and lacks body, but the piano is well caught, and one adjusts when Brian Crimp's remastering is clear and clean and the playing so thrillingly compulsive.

(i) Violin Concerto. A Colour Symphony

🔑  Chan. 10380. BBC Nat. O of Wales, Hickox, (i) with Mordkovich

The music that makes the greater impact here is the Violin Concerto, thanks above all to the inspired interpretation of Lydia Mordkovich, very much at home in rare British works. Rightly, she treats the piece as a concerto in the great romantic tradition, not only powerful in the bravura passages, but tenderly affecting in the moments of pure lyricism, which are made deeply reflective. This version of the Colour Symphony readily matches and even outshines the earlier one on Chandos, bringing out the structural strength.

Discourse for Orchestra; Miracle in the Gorbals (complete ballet); Things to Come (complete film score, reconstructed Christopher Palmer)

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.553698. Queensland SO, Lyndon-Gee

The Naxos issue is most valuable for offering the complete ballet-score of Miracle in the Gorbals, colourful and vigorous in illustrating the sordid but moving tale of murder and salvation in the slums of Glasgow. The five movements from Things to Come are also welcome in Christopher Palmer's reconstruction of the original opulent scoring, though it is astonishing to find the famous March omitted. Good, warm sound.

Film music

🔑 ✿  Chan. 9896. BBC PO, Gamba

It seems extraordinary that Bliss's great pioneering film-score for Things to Come, some 45 minutes of music, became lost in its original form. Now, thanks to Philip Lane, we can at last hear this inspired, wonderfully orchestrated score as Bliss conceived it, with the closing Epilogue so full of Elgarian nobilmente spirit. Caesar and Cleopatra exists in a faded working manuscript, and again shows him in inspirational form. War in the Air, with its Waltonesque opening fanfare, was a splendid title and closing-credits piece of considerable panache.

The Royal Palaces Suite displays plenty of regality and also shows the composer at his most diverting and tuneful in the charming Waltz for The Ballroom in Buckingham Palace and altogether this splendid CD confirms Bliss as a composer of resource, who could write good tunes to order – at least in the early part of his career.

(i) Miracle in the Gorbals: Suite; Music for strings; (ii) Ceremonial Prelude; (i; iii) Welcome the Queen; A Song of Welcome

(M) () EMI mono 3 70564-2. Composer, with (i) Philh.; (ii) Simon Preston, New Philh. O; (iii) Joan Sutherland, John Cameron, BBC Ch.

All but the Ceremonial Prelude were recorded in 1954 and in mono. Bliss gets a responsive account of the Music for Strings from the Philharmonia Orchestra. A Song of Welcome, settings of Cecil Day Lewis for soprano, baritone, chorus and orchestra, was Joan Sutherland's very first recording, but for some reason the work was not issued at the time. It is a most useful addition to the Bliss discography and readers should snap it up.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Conversations; Madam Noy; (i–ii) Rhapsody; (ii) Rout. The Women of Yueh; Oboe Quintet

 Hyp. CDA 66137. Nash Ens., with (i) Rolfe Johnson; (ii) Gale

The predominant influence in Rout, for soprano and chamber orchestra, and in the Rhapsody, with its two wordless vocal parts, is Ravel. The Oboe Quintet is a work of considerable quality. The music assembled here represents Bliss at his very best. A lovely disc which can be warmly recommended, and eminently well engineered, too.

Clarinet Quintet

 Redcliffe RR 010. Cox, Redcliffe Ens. – RAWSTHORNE: Clarinet Quartet; ROUTH: Clarinet Quintet ***

(i) Clarinet Quintet. String Quartet 2

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.557394. Maggini Qt, (i) with Campbell

The Clarinet Quintet of 1932 is arguably Bliss's masterpiece, and David Campbell and the Maggini Quartet give an authoritative and searching account. Bliss dedicated his Second Quartet of 1950 to the Grillers, and in terms of intensity and imagination the Maggini come pretty close to them. These are totally dedicated performances, concentrated in feeling and expertly finished, which should do much to restore these pieces to their rightful place in the repertoire.

The Quintet is also played very beautifully by Nicholas Cox and members of the Redcliffe Ensemble, who readily catch the flowing lyricism of the opening movement and the intense valedictory feeling of the Adagietto, in which the composer remembers his younger brother, Kennard, killed at the Somme in 1916. The recording too, in the glowing acoustic of St George's, Brandon Hill, Bristol, is quite ideal. Moreoever the Rawsthorne coupling may be perceived by some collectors as being more appropriate than the Bliss Quartet.

(i; ii) Oboe Quintet; (ii; iii) Piano Quartet; (iv) Viola Sonata

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.555931. (i) Daniel; (ii) Maggini Qt; (iii) Donohoe; (iv) Outram, Rolton

Bliss's Piano Quartet is brim full of attractive melody and, in the hands of Peter Donohoe and the Maggini Quartet, is quite captivating. The later (1927) Oboe Quintet is mainly pastoral in feeling, but with a vigorous Vivace finale which quotes from Connell's Jig. Nicholas Daniel is a nimble, elegant soloist and catches the work's light-hearted mood to perfection. Bliss's Sonata is highly demanding for both participants, both in the rhapsodic expressive lyricism of the Andante and in the Furiant Scherzo. Martin Outram, with Julian Rolton a fine partner, rises to the occasion in a highly persuasive account of another work that deserves a more frequent hearing. Excellent recording throughout, and good documentation.

String Quartets 1 in B flat; 2 in F min.

Ⓜ () Dutton mono CDBP 9780. Griller Qt

The First Quartet, written in 1941 at the height of the war, first appeared on four Decca 78-r.p.m. discs two years later, and its successor of 1950 was among the earliest LP issues. Both are played with masterly eloquence by the Grillers, and their return to the catalogue in Dutton's excellent transfers is a cause for celebration.

Piano Sonata; Pieces: Bliss (One-Step); Miniature Scherzo; Rout Trot; Study; Suite; Triptych. arr. of BACH: Das alte Jahr vergangen ist ('The old year has ended')

 Chan. 8979. Fowke

The biggest work on the Chandos disc is the Sonata. Its neo-romantic rhetoric is less convincing than some of the earlier pieces Bliss composed, in particular the Suite (1925). There are some other lighter pieces, like the The Rout Trot and Bliss (One-Step), written in the 1920s when his inspiration was at its freshest. Good performances and excellent recording, made in The Maltings, Snape.

VOCAL MUSIC

Song-cycles and other songs

 Hyp. CDA 67188/9. McGreevy, Spence, Herford, Sturrock, Nash Ens., Brabbins

The collection spans the full extent of Bliss's composing career, from a boyhood song like the Housman setting, 'Tis time, I think, by Wenlock town, through to two of his last works, A Knot of Riddles (for baritone and 11 instruments) and Angels of the Mind, another song-cycle for soprano and piano setting poems by Kathleen Raine, a work he wrote not on commission but simply for his own enjoyment. Geraldine McGreevy is the outstanding soloist in that and the other soprano items, and the others also respond sensitively to Bliss's distinctive word-setting, often helped by sharply rhythmic accompaniments. It is striking how often Bliss liked to have more than a piano in accompaniment, not just in A Knot of Riddles but in such an isolated song as his Elegiac sonnet for tenor, string quartet and piano to words by Cecil Day Lewis, written for the memorial concert commemorating the pianist, Noel Mewton-Wood. Kathleen Sturrock is the excellent pianist in most of the songs, with members of the Nash Ensemble ever stylish in the rest. First-rate recording.

Lie strewn the white flocks

 Hyp. CDA 66175. Minty, Pierce, Holst Singers & O, Davan Wetton – BRITTEN: Gloriana: Choral Dances; HOLST: Choral Hymns from Rig Veda ***

Bliss's Pastoral is given a winning performance by the Holst Singers and Orchestra, with the choral sections (the greater part of the work) aptly modest in scale but powerful in impact. With glowing sound and very attractive works for coupling, this is an outstanding issue.

BLOCH, Ernest (1880–1959)

Baal Shem

🔑 Ⓜ  Decca 475 7710. Bell, Baltimore SO, Zinman – BARBER; WALTON: Violin Concertos ***

Bloch's own (1939) orchestrations of his three popular Hasidic pieces for violin and piano, Baal Shem, offers a fine, unusual makeweight for Bell's prize-winning disc of the Barber and Walton concertos; it won the 1998 Gramophone Concerto Award and now re-appears at mid-price in Universal's Gramophone Award Collection.

Baal Shem: Suite; Suite hébraïque; Suites 1 & 2

🔑  Hyp. CDA 67571. Shaham, Erez (with Pal BEN-HAIM: Sonata for solo violin; Improvisation and Dance, Berceuse sfaradite ***)

A follow-up to the highly successful Shaham–Erez set of the two Sonatas. Like its companion, this disc offers superbly shaped and highly musical playing in vivid and lifelike sound.

(i) Concertino for Flute and Viola; (ii) 4 Episodes (Humoresque macabre; Obsession; Calm; Chinese); (iii) Suite Modale for Flute and Strings; (iv) Two Poems (Hiver; Printemps)

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.570259. (i; iii) Buchman; (i) Gandelsman; (i; iii) Atlas Camerata O; (ii) Soloists of Israel PO; (iv) Slovak R. O; all cond. Atlas

A fascinating and highly rewarding collection, involving two soloists, two orchestras and, in the case of the Four Episodes, scored (in 1926) for a combination of string quintet, wind quintet and piano. The Two Poems are earlier (1905) and are appropriately titled in French, for there is an atmospheric warmth and transparency to the scoring which has influences from both Debussy and Ravel. But perhaps the highlights are the two late concertante works; the charming three-movement Concertino for violin and viola (1948) ends with a fugue which then gives birth to a lively polka. The Suite Modale, with a serene ancient-and-modern flavour, was written in 1956, three years before the composer's death – an engagingly nostalgic reverie, interrupted by a bright central Gigue. The performances here are excellent, all very persuasively directed by Dalia Atlas; they are splendidly played and given top-quality Naxos sound. A disc not to be missed.

Violin Concerto in A min.

✿ (BB) () Naxos mono 8.110973. Szigeti, Paris Conservatoire O, Munch – BARTÓK: Portrait; PROKOFIEV: Violin Concerto 1 () ✿

Szigeti's pioneering record of the Bloch Concerto has long been a classic of the gramophone. A wonderfully serene yet intense performance from both Szigeti and Munch that penetrates to the core of Bloch's masterpiece. Szigeti's nervous vibrato is heard to perfect effect here.

Violin Concerto; Baal Shem; Suite Hébraïque

(BB)  Naxos 8.557757. Z. Schiff, RSNO, Serebrier

The American violinist Zina Schiff is a protégé of Heifetz and is very much inside the Bloch idiom, both in the Concerto and in the shorter pieces on this disc. Recommended; but it is amazing that after all these years Szigeti's eloquent performance still resonates in the memory.

Schelomo (Hebraic Rhapsody) for cello & orchestra

🔑  Virgin 5 45664-2. Truls Mørk, Fr. R. PO, Paavo Järvi – BRUCH: Kol Nidrei; SCHUMANN: Cello Concerto ***

🔑 (BB)  Virgin 2x1 5 61490-2. Isserlis, LSO, Hickox – ELGAR: Cello Concerto; KABALEVSKY: Cello Concerto 2; R. STRAUSS: Don Quixote; TCHAIKOVSKY: Andante cantabile, etc. ***

(M)  DG 457 761-2. Fournier, BPO, Wallenstein – BRUCH: Kol Nidrei; LALO: Cello Concerto; SAINT-SAËNS: Cello Concerto 1 ***

Truls Mørk gives a superb account of Bloch's Schelomo, concentrated and powerful. The solo rhapsodizings suit his freely expressive style perfectly, and Paavo Järvi draws from the French Radio Philharmonic a performance of wonderful weight and clarity. The clarity of the sound heightens the magnetic impact of the playing of both soloist and orchestra.

The dark intensity of Isserlis's solo playing and the sharp, dramatic focus of Hickox in the big, climactic orchestral tuttis are magnetic, preventing Bloch's youthful outpouring on Solomon and the Song of Songs from sounding self-indulgent. Warm, refined recording.

Fournier is a bit too closely balanced in this fervent performance, but the sound is very beautiful and he is excellently supported by the Berlin Philharmonic under Wallenstein. Apart from the balancing of the cello, the 1967 recording is excellent.

3 Nocturnes for Piano Trio

 Simax PSC 1147. Grieg Trio – MARTIN: Piano Trio on Irish Folktunes; SHOSTAKOVICH: Piano Trios ***

The first Nocturne (Andante) finds Bloch in Hebraic-Debussy mode, while the second (Andante quieto) is more overtly romantic and less interesting, though the Grieg Trio play it with much feeling, as they do the final Tempestuoso. The couplings further enhance the value of this issue, arguably the best the Grieg Trio have given us.

(i) Piano Quintets 1 & 2. Night; Paysages; 2 Pièces

 Hyp. CDA 67638. (i) Lane; Goldner Qt

The First Quintet is expansive and romantic, and its subsequent neglect is difficult to understand for it is a powerful and thoughtful piece with carefully fashioned ideas and imaginative invention. The Second, the composer's last chamber work, is concentrated with a hint of neo-classicism. The central slow movement brings a mystical air, with variations leading to a clear and direct finale with a beautiful, hushed ending. The smaller pieces, Night (1923) and Paysages ('Landscapes') and the Deux Pièces are all evocative in their textures and serve to make this finely paced and immaculately recorded set a most desirable issue. Strongly recommended.

String Quartets 1–4

✿ () Decca mono 475 6071 (2). Griller Qt

These are clearly great performances, with any slight faults of intonation made irrelevant in the thrust of the music-making. Bloch's wonderfully rich, haunting harmonies are played by the Grillers with spine-tingling concentration, often producing sounds of otherworldly beauty, casting a powerful spell indeed. All in all, a worthy, enterprising (and unexpected) release on Decca's 'Original Masters' series, and the transfers of the relatively dry but atmospheric (1954) sound are excellent.

Violin Sonatas 1–2 (Poème mystique); Abodah; Melody; Nuit exotique

🔑  Hyp. CDA 67439. Hagai Shaham, Arnon Erez

Violin Sonatas 1; 2 (Poème mystique); Abodah (Yom Kippur Melody); Melody; Suite hébraïque

(BB)  Naxos 8.554460. Kramer, Over

This fine Israeli duo bring appropriate fervour and mystical feeling to this repertoire, and they are vividly recorded in Hyperion's high standard. This is now a first recommendation.

In Miriam Kramer and Simon Over the sonatas also have sympathetic advocates: both artists play with exemplary taste and sensitivity, and Simon Over produces a wonderful range of colour. So, for that matter, does Kramer, who has great refinement of tone. Good recordings, with plenty of space round the aural image.

Enfantines, 5 Sketches in Sepia; In the Night; Nirvana; Piano Sonata; Visions and Prophecies

 Chan. 9887. Fingerhut

Bloch's muse is essentially rhapsodic and improvisatory and his piano writing cries out for the colours of the orchestra, but it is difficult to imagine it better played than it is here by Margaret Fingerhut or more naturally recorded.

Sacred Service

Ⓜ  Chan. 10288X. Berkman, Zemel Ch., L. Chorale & Concord Singers, LSO, Simon

Bloch's Sacred Service has long been neglected by the gramophone. So the reappearance of this 1978 version must be welcomed, particularly in such vivid sound. The singing is perhaps wanting in ardour and intensity, and there could be greater attention to dynamic nuances. However, it would be unfair to dwell on the shortcomings of this performance in the light of so much that is good, not least of which is the orchestral playing. The recording is spacious and well focused.

BLOW, John (1649–1708)

Anthems

🔑 Ⓜ  Hyp. Dyad CDD 22055 (2). Winchester Cathedral Ch., Parley of Instruments, Hill

Blow's anthems are of diverse kinds. The opening God spake sometimes in visions is a glorious example of the grandest style of all; it was written for the Coronation of James II in 1685. Then there is the 'full and contrapuntal' anthem, of which God is our help and strength is a sonorous illustration. Many listeners will also be delighted to encounter a new and memorable setting of The Lord is my Shepherd, in which the layout is in sections, with limited polyphony and a warmly lyrical style. Other anthems are less ambitious, yet musically poignant. O Lord I have sinned (written for a funeral) is particularly beautiful, using a solo group intimately, with organ accompaniment. Lord, who shall dwell in thy tabernacle? has three obbligato recorders and combines soloists with a full chorus, like a vocal concerto grosso. The soloists from the choir sing most pleasingly individually, and (of course) beautifully together; the full choir is stirring, and the accompaniments are warm and refined. Altogether a remarkably valuable anthology. Full texts are included.

(i) Ode on the Death of Mr Henry Purcell. Fugue in G min.; Grounds: in C min.; in D min.; Sonata in A; Suite in G

(*) Virgin 5 45342-2. (i) Lesne, Dugardin; La Canzona – PURCELL: Songs & Duets **(*)

Ode on the Death of Mr Henry Purcell: Mark how the lark and linnet sing. Ah, heav'n! What is't I hear?

 Hyp. CDA 66253. Bowman, Chance, King's Consort, King – PURCELL: Collection ***

The Ode on the Death of Mr Henry Purcell is a most welcome addition to the catalogue. There are some striking chromaticisms and dissonances and some inventive and noble music. Robert King's spontaneous style is infectious, with the orchestral comments engagingly animated. Both performances are highly rewarding, and in the last resort couplings will dictate choice.

Venus and Adonis

Ⓑ  HM HMX 2901684. Joshua, Finley, Blaze, Clare College Chapel Ch., OAE, Jacobs

(i)Venus and Adonis; (ii) Organ Voluntaries in D min.; A min.; G (2 versions)

Ⓜ  Decca 4780019. (i) Bott, George, Crabtree, Gooding, King, Grant, Robson, Agnew, Westminster Abbey School Choristers, New L. Cons., Pickett; (ii) Leonhardt

Venus and Adonis has been well served on record, but Pickett's version has a pair of trump cards to play: Catherine Bott's imaginative, enticing Venus and Michael George's strongly characterized Adonis. The result is that this simple drama springs to life with unexpected vividness. The supporting cast is excellent, and so is the (1992) recording, and we are made to realize that this is a far finer and deeper work than hitherto suspected.

René Jacobs too conducts a lively performance. Speeds are on the brisk side, never rushed, and Rosemary Joshua makes a delightful Venus, bright and sweet, singing with ravishing tone in her big solo towards the end. Gerald Finley, clear and firm, makes a splendid Adonis, and it is good to have a counter-tenor, not a soprano, in the role of Cupid, the excellent Robin Blaze. Fresh, incisive singing from the Clare College Chapel Choir, and clear, atmospheric sound. A bargain.

BLUMER, Theodor (1881–1964)

WIND CHAMBER MUSIC

Kinderspielzeug (Children's Toys), Op. 64; Schweizer Quintett; (i) Piano Sextet (Chamber Symphony), Op. 92

 Crystal CD 755. Moran Woodwind Quintet; (i) with Paul Barnes

(i) From the Animal Kingdom; From the Plant World, Op. 57a/b; 10 Waltzes (Hausmusik), Op. 56 (all for flute & piano); (ii) Serenade & Theme & Variations for Wind Quintet, Op. 34

 Crystal CD 757. (i) John Bailey, Mark Clinton; (ii) Moran Woodwind Quintet

Theodor Blumer, director and principal conductor of the radio orchestras in Dresden and Leipzig, wrote delightfully for wind ensemble, and both these discs give much pleasure. The first CD is all but dominated by the Schweizer Quintet, which is charmingly melodic throughout and includes an inimitable set of variations on a Swiss folk tune, first heard on the horn. The Moran Quintet are excellent in every way, blending and taking solos with aplomb. Paul Barnes makes an agreeable, if not dominating, contribution to the Sextet.

The second disc opens with another Theme and Variations as part of a Serenade of much felicity. The following series of works for flute and piano are again highly inventive. The two Suites devoted to animals and plants also have some very attractive ideas, and the Waltzes too overflow with diversity. Again excellent performances.

BOCCHERINI, Luigi
(1743–1805)

COMPLETE CELLO CONCERTOS

Cello Concertos 1 in E flat, G.474; 2 in A, G.475; 3 in D, G.476; 5 in D, G.478 ((BB) * Naxos 8.553571)

Cello Concertos 4 in C, G.477; 6 in D, G.479; 7 in G, G.480; 8 in C, G.481 ((BB) * Naxos 8.553572. Hugh, SCO, Halstead)

Cello Concertos 9 in B flat, G.482; 10 in D, G.483; 11 in C; 12 in E flat ((BB) * Naxos 8.557589. Wallfisch, N. CO, Ward)

Cello Concertos 4 in C, G.477; 6 in D, G.479; 7 in G, G.480; 8 in C, G.481 (🔑 (BB) * Warner Apex (ADD) 0927 49805-2. Bylsma, Concerto Amsterdam, Schröder)

Cello Concertos 7 in G (G.480); 10 in D (G.483); Sinfonias: in D min. (La casa del diavolo), Op. 12/4; in B flat, Op. 21/5 (G. 497) (✿ Ⓜ * DHM 82876 60150-2. Bylsma, Tafelmusik, Lamon)

Naxos has an impressive new series covering Boccherini's twelve cello concertos. They are beautifully performed on modern instruments but with concern for period practice, and superbly recorded. There is dedicated playing not just from the soloist but also from the excellent Scottish Chamber Orchestra under Anthony Halstead. Tim Hugh offers substantial cadenzas not only in the first movements of each work but also in slow movements and finales too. Throughout, Hugh and Halstead make a stimulating partnership and all these works spring appealingly to life. Naxos then turned to Raphael Wallfisch and the Northern Chamber Orchestra under Nicholas Ward, with predictably stimulating results. Indeed, this is one of the finest single discs of Boccherini cello concertos in the catalogue.

Anner Bylsma on Apex is a fine player, well suited to this repertoire, while Schröder's accompaniments are most stylish and full of vitality. The 1965 recording is first class and the immaculate CD transfer makes the very most of the sound. Bylsma (a superb cellist) was at his peak in the G major Concerto. He is lucky to have Jeanne Lamon's Tafelmusik as his accompanying group, one of the most elegant and polished of all period-instrument ensembles. They come into their own in the pair of symphonies, playing with a Mozartian grace and zest. The recording is absolutely first class.

(i) _Cello Concerto 9 in B flat_ (original version, revised Gendron); (ii–iii) _Flute Concerto in D, Op. 27_ (attrib.; now thought to be by Franz Pokorny); (iv) _Symphonies 3 in C; 5 in B flat, Op. 12/3 & 5_; (v) _Guitar Quintets 4 in D (Fandango); 9 in C (La Ritirata di Madrid)_; (vi) _String Quartet in D, Op. 6/1_; (iii) _String Quintet in E, Op. 13/5: Minuet_ (only)

🔑 Ⓑ  Ph. Duo 438 377-2 (2). (i) Gendron, LOP, Casals; (ii) Gazzelloni; (iii) I Musici; (iv) New Philh. O, Leppard; (v) Pepe Romero, ASMF Chamber Ens.; (vi) Italian Qt

This most attractive anthology is well documented, and the famous Minuet could hardly be presented more winningly, the one digital recording here. It is also good that Gendron's version of the Cello Concerto is included, for he pioneered the return of the original version (without Grützmacher's reworking), and he plays it admirably. The Flute Concerto is a galant piece, elegantly played by Gazzelloni, and one can see why it was mistakenly attributed. Both Symphonies are full of vitality in these excellent performances under Raymond Leppard and are very well recorded. The Italian Quartet's performance of the D major Quartet is notable for its freshness and refinement. The charming Guitar Quintets are unfailingly warm and sensitive, and they are well recorded too, although there is a touch of thinness on top.

Cello Concerto in B flat (arr. Grützmacher)

Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 5 66896-2. du Pré, ECO, Barenboim – HAYDN: Concertos 1–2 ***

Working for the first time in the recording studio with her husband, Daniel Barenboim, Jacqueline du Pré was inspired to some really heart-warming playing, broadly romantic in style – but then that is what Grützmacher plainly asks for, and the disc now offers two Haydn cello concertos instead of one.

28 Symphonies (complete)

Ⓜ  CPO 999 401 (8). Deutsche Kammerakademie, Neuss, Goritzki

In this first complete survey of the Boccherini symphonies, Johannes Goritzki's achievement is remarkable. Himself a cellist, he shows a natural feeling for Boccherini's special combination of galant and classical styles, revealing the music's strengths rather than its weaknesses. The playing – on modern instruments – of the German Chamber Academy Orchestra of Neuss is alert, polished and warm-hearted, besides showing a nice feeling for Boccherini's delicate Andantinos, which are never sentimentalized. The recording is excellently balanced and has plenty of life and bloom.

Symphonies: in A, Op. 15/6, G.508; in E flat, Op. 35/5, G.513; in C min., Op. 41, G.519; in D, Op. 42, G.520

Ⓑ (*) HM Musique d'abord HMA 1951597. Berlin Akademie für Alte Musik

Four characteristic Boccherini Symphonies, given bold and energetic performances by the Berlin Akademie. In the A major work of 1771 Boccherini writes engagingly for the flutes, but the high horns here dominate the fortissimos. The C minor has a winning Pastorale slow movement, sympathetically presented here, but the D major is the finest of the four with a memorable Minuet (with violin obbligato) and a charming, Laendler-like trio, followed by a vigorous finale full of contrasts. The playing throughout lacks neither polish nor strength, but tuttis are gruff, with powerful accents, and at times one wishes the orchestra could relax more and convey a greater sense of elegance.

Symphonies: in D; in E flat; in A; in F; in E flat; in B flat, Op. 35/1–6

(*) Hyp. CDA 66903. L. Festival O, Pople

Symphonies: in C; in D min.; in A, Op. 37/1, 3 & 4, G.515, 517–18; in D, Op. 42, G.520

(*) Hyp. CDA 66904. L. Festival O, Pople

Ross Pople's directing lively, characterful and polished performances with his excellent chamber orchestra. As can be seen above, these are attractive and mature works. The Hyperion sound is pleasingly fresh and open, and this is a most enjoyable pair of discs.

Symphonies: in A, Op. 35/3, G.511; in D min. (Grande), Op. 37/3, G.517; Guitar Quintet 4 in D (Fandango), G.448; String Quintet 9 in C (La Musica Notturna delle Strada di Madrid), Op. 30/6, G.324

🔑  Alia Vox SACD AVSA 9815. Lislevand, Concert des Nations (members), Savall

Anyone wanting a single Boccherini disc as a sampler, in authentic, period-instrument costume, could hardly do better than this. The performances are exceptionally vivid. Rolf Lislevand is an excellent guitarist, and José de Udaeta's castanets glitter appropriately in the famous Fandango, while in the C major Quintet the patrol sequence is admirably managed. The outer movements of the two symphonies are played with abrasive period-instrument vigour and gusto, but the inner movements are engagingly refined, while the SACD recording has both depth and striking presence.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Cello Quintet, Op. 37/7

 Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD) 421 637-2. ASMF – MENDELSSOHN: Octet ***

The Quintet is an inspired piece and makes this disc worth getting for its own sake, though the coupled performance of Mendelssohn's Octet is a particularly fine one. The 1968 recording remains rich and full, and this Australian Eloquence CD has full sleeve-notes.

Cello Sonatas: in C min., G.2 (first version); in A, G.4 (first version); in G, G.5; in C, G.17; in F min.

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.554324. C. & S. Benda

Boccherini could hardly be boring if he tried, and these cello sonatas (of which he wrote thirty-four!) are full of attractive invention. They could hardly be more persuasively played. The A major Sonata which opens the disc is particularly enticing, warmly melodic and with fizzing display passages which Christian Benda handles with easy virtuosity against the simple fortepiano backing. The finale is marked Affetuoso, which sums up this team's approach throughout. The F minor Sonata was discovered as recently as 1987 and has a lovely Cantabile siciliano for its slow movement which is quite haunting in the hands of these players. In short this is a first-class disc, very naturally recorded.

6 Flute Quartets, Op. 19

 Hyp. CDA 67646. Ipata, Auser Music

Boccherini described his Flute Quintets as 'quintetti piccolo'. The sixth work is programmatic and is subtitled Las Parejas ('The Couples'), referring to a Spanish horse race in which two horsemen ride side by side. Here a vigorous central gallop is framed by an Entrada and a more sober Marcia. The other five quintets have an engaging diversity of style and often bring that element of gentle melancholy which so often lies beneath the surface of the composer's music. The flautist Carlo Ipata is sensitively expressive and sparkling by turns, and Auser Music provide an engaging period-instrument partnership. The recording is well up to Hyperion's standard.

Flute Quintets (for flute, violin, viola, 2 cellos), Op. 17/1–6, G.419–24)

(BB)  Naxos 8.553719. Magnin, Janáček Qt

The Op. 17 Quintets are comparatively familiar and certainly rewarding, and they are very well played and recorded here. This Naxos disc is excellent value.

Flute Quintets, Op. 55/1–6, G.431–6 (for flute & string quartet)

(M)  CPO 999 382-2. Faust, Auryn Qt

These six Flute (or oboe) Quintets are late works, dating from 1797, and show the composer at his most felicitous and charming. No. 6 is the only work in the minor key and it ends delicately. Michael Faust is a first-rate flautist and his performances here are vivacious and elegant, and recorded with a vivid presence.

Guitar Quintets 1–7, G.445–51; 9 (La ritirata di Madrid), G.453

🔑 (B)  Ph. Duo (ADD) 438 769-2 (2). P. Romero, ASMF Chamber Ens. (members)

Boccherini wrote or arranged 12 guitar quintets, but only the present eight have survived, plus another version of 4 in D (Fandango), G.448. Although some of the music is bland, it is nearly all agreeably tuneful in an unostentatious way, and there are some highly imaginative touches, with attractive hints of melancholy and underlying passion. These performances by Pepe Romero (often willing to take a relatively minor role) and members of the ASMF Chamber Ensemble are wholly admirable, and Philips are especially good at balancing textures of this kind in the most natural way, the guitar able to be assertive when required without overbalancing the ensemble.

Guitar Quintets 4 in D (Fandango), G.448; 5 in D, G.449; 6 in G, G.450

(BB)  HM HCX 3957026. Savino, Artaria Qt

It is good to have performances on period instruments which create such a natural balance between the strings and the guitar. Although textures are less ample, they can also be attractively delicate, and there is no lack of warmth in the lovely Pastorale which forms the second movement of the most famous work (4), with its Fandango finale. Here there is a spirited contribution from Peter Mund with his castanets. Performances are stylishly intimate with recording to match. Most recommendable.

Guitar Quintets Nos. (i) 4 in D (Fandango), G.448; 9 in C (La ritirata di Madrid), G.453. String Quartet in G min., Op. 24/6 (G.194)

(*) Virgin 5 45607-2. (i) Pinardi, Europa Galante, Biondi

The Virgin coupling of the Fandango and Riterata di Madrid Quintets is the most dramatic on record, with Mauro Occhinieri's castanets as spectacular in the one as the histrionic crescendo and decrescendo in the other, with the music finally fading away completely into the distance. The playing itself is immensely vigorous, with the cello line at times guttural in its intensity. The snag is the lack of charm (an important feature in Boccherini's music), entirely absent in the Adagio of the G minor String Quartet. The recording is vividly projected and it is easy to respond to the visceral power of this playing, but this is not the whole story.

Piano Quintets, Op. 56/1–2 & 5, G.407–8 & G.411; Op. 57/2–3 & 6, G.414–15 & G.418

(M)  Astrée E3001 (2). Cohen, Mosaïques Qt

There are 12 piano quintets, and Patrick Cohen and the Mosaïques Quartet are obviously embarking – so far with great success – on a complete set. There is drama and grace and warmth of feeling, balanced by elegance, in this music; and the playing here also emphasizes its vitality. Slow movements are particularly eloquent, and the use of period instruments in no way inhibits the expressive range of the music.

String Quartets, Op. 32/1–6

(B)  Warner Elatus (ADD) 2564 60028-2 (2). Esterházy Qt

String Quartets, Op. 32/1–2; String Quartet in A, Op. 39

(BB)  Naxos 8.555042. Borciani Qt

String Quartets, Op. 32/3–6

(BB)  Naxos 8.555043. Borciani Qt

The Esterházy Quartet set dates from 1780, about the same period as Haydn's Op. 33. They may ultimately lack the depth and vision of Haydn and Mozart, but to listen to this pioneering Elatus recording is to be amazed that music of this quality has been so long neglected. The Esterházy Quartet are led by Jaap Schröder and theirs is thoroughly rewarding music-making. The Quartet was beautifully recorded in Haarlem, Holland, in 1976 and the new CD transfer of these two Das alte Werk discs is outstandingly natural.

The Quartetto Borciani offer an equally accomplished alternative on modern instruments, which have plenty of character and vitality and are always sensitive to Boccherini's gentle touches of expressive melancholy. They include Boccherini's later A major Quartet, Op. 39 (1787), which has a particularly touching Grave third movement, most affectingly played here. The Naxos recording is vivid and truthful and there are excellent notes.

String Quartets: in C; in G min.; in A, Op. 32/4–6

(BB)  CPO 999 202-2. Nomos Qt

These are three most attractive works, of Boccherini's best quality. All three slow movements are expressively potent; the Andantino lentarello of the A major is particularly searching, and the following Minuet is hardly less striking. The Nomos is a first-class group, using modern instruments but in such a way as to provide textures which are fully blended and sweet while avoiding 19th-century opulence. The recording is excellent.

String Quintets: in A, Op. 10/1; in D min., Op. 18/5; in A (Della disgrazia), Op. 28/2; in A, Op. 29/4; in A, Op. 40/4; in F, Op. 41/2 (Testament mono SBT 1245)

String Quintets: in F, Op. 11/3; in C min. (Di Nina), Op. 18/1; in D min., Op. 25/1; in C min., Op. 29/2 (Testament mono SBT 1244)

String Quintets: in E, Op. 11/5; in D (L'Uccelliera), Op. 11/6; in G, Op. 25/3; in E flat, Op 31/1: Grave in D (Fandango), Op. 40/2 (Testament mono SBT 1243)

() Quintetto Boccherini

These mono recordings were all made in the mid-1950s by one of the finest ensembles of the day; they produce a finely balanced sound of great refinement and tonal beauty. This is most civilized music-making and much to be cherished. Very little allowance need be made for the 1950s recording, and the transfers are eminently truthful and present.

String Quintets Op. 11/5; Op. 25/1, 4 & 6

(B)  Virgin 5 03408-2. Europa Galante

Boccherini's quintets are an unfailing delight and their sunny, gentle aspect at times masks a touching melancholy. Europa Galante play with great sympathy and style and round things off with the famous minuet. A most attractive issue.

String Quintets: in E , Op. 13/5, G.275; in G min., Op. 37/13, G.348; in F min., Op. 37/19, G.351

 Hyp. CDA 67287 Vanbrugh. Qt, with Lester

It is particularly refreshing in the Vanbrugh performance to hear Boccherini's famous Minuet in context with the work's other three movements; their approach pays obvious tribute to period practice in the choice of tempo, far faster than one usually associates with this well-known 'lollipop', light and crisp. Both the other quintets here regularly rely on the characteristic Boccherini device of quickly switching between major and minor keys. Vividly recorded and with fine performances, both polished and refreshing, with Richard Lester a perfect partner for the prize-winning Vanbrugh Quartet, this is an outstanding disc in every way.

String Quintets: in C, Op. 28/4, (G.310); in C, Op. 42/2 (G.349); (Quintettino) in B min., Op. 42/3 (G.350); in D, Op. 43/2 (G.353)

 Hyp. CDA 67383. Vanbrugh Qt, with Lester

Throughout the four works Boccherini's invention never fails him, and these excellent players relish all the felicities of his writing. Excellent recording.

String Quintets, Op. 39/1–3, G.337–9; String Quartet, Op. 64/2, G.249

 MDG 603 1040-2. Frankfurt Ens. Concertante

The three Quintets of Op. 39, dating from 1787, are scored for a double bass in the place of second cello, which adds considerably to the body of the sound. The String Quartet, Op. 64/2, of 1804 was Boccherini's last composition, and he completed the first movement only. First-class performances throughout, polished and committed, and fine recording make this collection very recommendable.

VOCAL MUSIC

(i) Stabat Mater, G.532 (First Version); Concert Arias: Ah, no! son io che parlo; Care luci. Symphonies: in D min. (La Casa del Diavolo), Op. 12/4 (G.506); in C, Op. 23/3 (G.523); in A, Op. 37/4 (G.518)

🔑 (BB)  Warner Apex 2564 61689-2 (2). (i) Gasdia; Sol. Ven., Scimone

Boccherini wrote comparatively little vocal music but his Stabat Mater, in its original version an extended solo setting for soprano, here gloriously sung by Cecilia Gasdia, must be counted among his most inspired works. The beautiful sequence of movements towards the close – Eja mater fons amoris . . . Tui nati vulnerati . . . Virgo virginum praeclara, sung most affectingly here – contains some exquisite music, and in the despairing closing Quando corpus moretur, Gasdia is very moving indeed. The music has a Mozartian purity of line, and the two concert arias which follow also take Mozart as their model. They are brilliantly sung: Claudio Scimone provides highly sensitive support. Then on the second disc (with his I Solisti Veneti) offers vital and expressive accounts of three Symphonies, including not only La Casa del Diavolo, but a most appealing concertante work in C major. This was the composer's last symphony to be published (in 1798) and has prominent obbligato parts for oboe, violin and guitar, which are most sympathetically played here.

Stabat Mater (revised 1800 version)

🔑  Hyp. CDA 67108. Gritton, Fox, Bickley, Agnew, Harvey, King's Consort, King – D'ASTORGA: Stabat Mater ***

Boccherini's ambitious revision is masterly in increasing the range and expressive power of the work. With first-class soloists, Robert King's performance is as moving as it is gripping in the more dramatic moments. Notable are the lovely soprano duets, so beautifully sung by Susan Gritton and Sarah Fox, contrasting with the dramatic trios with tenor, and the closing Quando corpus morietur (another trio) is exquisitely managed. The apt coupling, a fine setting of the same text, written nearly a century earlier by an almost unknown Spanish composer, increases the value of this disc.

BOÏELDIEU, François
(1775–1834)

Harp Concerto in 3 Tempi in C

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * Decca 425 723-2. Robles, ASMF, Brown – DITTERSDORF; HANDEL: Harp Concertos, etc. **** ✿

Boïeldieu's Harp Concerto has been recorded before but never more attractively. The (originally Argo) recording is still in the demonstration class and very sweet on the ear. To make the reissue even more attractive, three beguiling sets of Variations have been added, including music by Handel and Beethoven and a Theme, Variations and Rondo Pastorale attributed to Mozart.

BOITO, Arrigo (1842–1918)

Mefistofele (complete)

Ⓜ  Decca 475 6666 (2). Ghiaurov, Pavarotti, Freni, Caballé, L. Op. Ch., Trinity Boys' Ch., Nat. PO, Fabritiis

Boito's Mefistofele is a strange and episodic work to come from the hands of the master-librettist of Verdi's Otello and Falstaff, but it has many fine moments. The early digital recording gives the brass and percussion plenty of weight – most importantly in the heavenly prologue. With the principal soloists all at their best – Pavarotti most seductive in Dai campi, dai pratti, Freni finely imaginative on detail, Caballé consistently sweet and mellifluous as Elena, Ghiaurov strongly characterful, if showing some signs of strain – this is a most recommendable set, though Fabritiis in his last recording lacks a little in energy, and the chorus is placed rather distantly. Texts and translation are included in its Classic Opera release.

BORODIN, Alexander (1833–87)

'The World of Borodin': (i) In the Steppes of Central Asia; Prince Igor: (ii) Overture; (ii–iii) Polovtsian Dances; (iv) Symphony 2 in B min.; (v) String

Quartet 2: Nocturne; (vi) Scherzo in A flat; (vii–viii) Far from the shores of your native land; (vii, ix) Prince Igor: Galitzky's Aria

🔑 Ⓜ * Decca (ADD) 444 389-2. (i) SRO, Ansermet; (ii) LSO, Solti; (iii) with L. Symphony Ch.; (iv) LSO, Martinon; (v) Borodin Qt; (vi) Ashkenazy; (vii) N. Ghiaurov; (viii) Z. Ghiaurov; (ix) L. Symphony Ch., LSO, Downes

'Essential Borodin': Symphonies. (i) 1 in E flat; (ii) 2 in B min.; (iii) 3 in A min.; In the Steppes of Central Asia; (iv) String Quartet 2 in B min.; (v–vi) Song: Far from the shores of your native land. Prince Igor: (vii) Overture; (vii–viii) Polovtsian Dances; (v; viii–ix) Galitzky's Aria; Konchak's Aria

Ⓑ  Double Decca (ADD) 455 632-2 (2). (i) RPO, Ashkenazy; (ii) LSO, Martinon; (iii) SRO, Ansermet; (iv) Borodin Qt; (v) N. Ghiaurov; (vi) Z. Ghiaurov; (vii) LSO, Solti; (viii) L. Symphony Ch.; (ix) LSO, Downes

The 'World of Borodin' is an extraordinarily successful disc. There can be few if any other collections of this kind that sum up a composer's achievement so succinctly or that make such a rewarding and enjoyable 76-minute concert. Solti's Prince Igor Overture is outstanding. The Nocturne follows the Overture so effectively that one might have thought it the composer's own plan. Ansermet's In the Steppes of Central Asia is warm and atmospheric. After Nicolai Ghiaurov has reminded us of the melancholy side of the Russian spirit, we come finally to Martinon's unsurpassed 1960 LSO performance of the B minor Symphony: the sound has remarkable presence and sparkle.

Decca have now happily expanded the programme to fit on to a Double, and in doing so they represent the composer even more comprehensively for very little extra outlay. Ashkenazy's reading of the First Symphony is less high-powered than Martinon's superb account of No. 2, but its many delights come over richly, thanks not only to the quality of the RPO playing but also to the warm (1992) digital recording. Ansermet's touch in the unfinished Third is most attractive, with some delightful moments from the SRO woodwind. What makes this extended programme especially attractive is the inclusion of the whole of the Second String Quartet, rather than just the slow movement. The performance by the eponymous Borodin Quartet is masterly in every respect. In Prince Igor Ghiaurov now adds a second role by singing Konchak's aria from Act II in addition to Galitzky's aria from Act I.

In the Steppes of Central Asia

🔑  Ph. SACD 470 618-2; CD 470 840-2. Kirov O, Gergiev – BALAKIREV: Islamey; RIMSKY-KORSAKOV: Scheherazade ***

Borodin's evocative tone-poem in a concentrated performance provides a well-judged contrast with the main work, Scheherazade, in Gergiev's exciting reading. The recording's rich atmosphere is undoubtedly enhanced on the surround-sound SACD stereo version.

In the Steppes of Central Asia; Prince Igor: Polovtsian Dances

(BB) (*) EMI Encore (ADD) 5 74763-2. Phil O, Cluytens – RIMSKY-KORSAKOV: Capriccio espagnol, etc.; MUSSORGSKY: Night on the Bare Mountain **(*)

From Cluytens comes a beautifully controlled performance of In the Steppes of Central Asia and a lively Polovtsian Dances, both enjoyable. The 1958 recording sounds astonishingly well, with only a touch of thinness betraying its age. Part of an attractive bargain CD of Russian show-pieces.

In the Steppes of Central Asia; Symphonies 2 & 3; Prince Igor: Overture & (i) Polovtsian Dances

Ⓝ Ⓑ (*) Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD) 480 0048. SRO, Ansermet with (i) Lausanne Rad. Ch., Choeur des Jeunes, Lausanne

Ansermet's pioneering version of Borodin's Second Symphony dates from 1954 but sounds far more recent. It has many fine qualities. If others have found more blazing excitement in the fast movements, Ansermet's ear of inner detail makes plenty of amends and the way he shapes the work makes this a thoroughly satisfying performance. The rarer Third Symphony is nicely done too, but it is the sparkling Scherzo second movement which finds the conductor on his colourful best form. The Prince Igor items go well enough: the Overture is lively and well played, and although the percussion are well brought out in the Polovtsian Dances, the tension sags a little when the choir (not the best in the world) is carrying the composer's memorable theme. It does, however, end in a blaze of excitement – and again, the brilliant recording (1960) is a thing of wonder. This disc ends in a beautifully shaped (and recorded) reading of In the Steppes of Central Asia.

Symphonies 1–3

Ⓜ (*) RCA 82876 62321-2. Nat. PO, Tjeknavorian

Tjeknavorian's performances, while lacking the last ounce of character, are polished and full of colour, and the orchestral response is on the whole lively. The RCA recordings are certainly vivid and well balanced with wide range and a warm ambience. However to have all three symphonies in modern recordings on a single disc is very attractive.

Symphony 1 in E flat

(BB) (*) Warner Apex 0927 40597-2. Norwegian R. O, Rasilainen – TCHAIKOVSKY: Symphony 2 ***

A very enjoyable and recommendable account of this delightful symphony from the Norwegian Radio Orchestra and their Finnish conductor is spirited, and is well enough played and recorded if you want the coupling. It certainly gives pleasure.

Symphony 2 in B min.

() Testament mono SBT 1048. Philh. O, Kletzki – TCHAIKOVSKY: Manfred Symphony ()

Symphony 2 in B min.; In the Steppes of Central Asia; Prince Igor: Overture; Polovtsian March; Polovtsian Dances

🔑 (BB)  Regis RRC 1215. RPO, Schmidt

Ole Schmidt with the RPO offers an outstanding bargain version of Borodin's Second Symphony, beautifully played and recorded in vivid, open sound, one of the finest at any price. In the first movement Schmidt evades the pitfall of adopting too slow a speed. At a nicely flowing tempo the great horn solo of the slow movement is gloriously played by the RPO's long-time principal, Jeffrey Bryant, his radiant playing matches and even outshines the finest of the past. The crisp finale is full of panache. The Prince Igor Overture again brings masterly horn-playing, while the Polovtsian Dances and March show off the brilliance of the RPO wind soloists.

Kletzki draws superb playing from the Philharmonia at a vintage period in the mid-1950s. The ravishing account of the slow movement has Dennis Brain at his peak in the big horn solo, backed by Bernard Walton on the clarinet and Sidney Sutcliffe on the oboe producing whispered pianissimos that caress the ear. The first movement is brisk and dramatic, while in the Scherzo the tonguing of the woodwind makes for phenomenal precision. As for the transfer, after a dull opening the bite and immediacy of the brass and woodwind are so vivid they give an illusion of stereo.

String Quartets 1 in A; 2 in D

 Chan. (ADD) 9965. Borodin Qt

Borodin's First Quartet is one of the most lyrical quartets in the repertoire, and its familiarity prompts some music-lovers to underrate its consummate mastery of form. The Borodins made this classic recording in 1979, and it remains the yardstick by which all others are judged.

String Quartets 1 in A; 2 in D; (i) String Sextet in D min.

🔑  ASV CD DCA 1143. The Lindsays, (i) with Williams, R. Wallfisch

The Lindsays add to their repertory of warm, intense recordings this splendid coupling of Borodin's two String Quartets alongside a rarity from early in the composer's career, the String Sextet, composed in Heidelberg in 1860, of which only two movements survive. The Lindsays, very well recorded, give glowing, ripely expressive and finely balanced performances that confidently bring out the light and shade of the writing of both scores, as well as a more convincing reading of the Sextet than any other we have heard.

String Quartet 2 in D

Ⓜ  Classic fM 75605 57027-2. Chilingirian Qt – DVOŘÁK: Quartet in F; SHOSTAKOVICH: Quartet 8 ***

() Testament mono SBT 1061. Hollywood Qt – GLAZUNOV: 5 Novelettes; TCHAIKOVSKY: String Quartet 1 ()

On the Classic fM label the Chilingirian Quartet offer powerful, incisive performances of an apt and generous coupling. With Levon Chilingirian an exceptionally alert leader, rhythms in the Borodin are consistently well sprung, with no sentimentality, in a warmly expressive account of the celebrated slow movement.

Although later recordings may match the Hollywood version, it is still a performance with persuasive freshness and ardour. The sound has been improved, and the addition of the Glazunov, which is new to the catalogue, enhances the disc's value. The playing time runs to one second short of 80 minutes.

Prince Igor (complete; DVD versions)

🔑  Ph. DVD 074 173-9 (2). Putilin, Gorchakova, Akimov, Aleksashkin, Vaneev, Borodina, Kirov Ballet Ch. & O, Gergiev (Producer: Paul Smaczny, V/D: Arno Cronvall)

🔑  Ph. DVD 075 099-9 (6). As above – GLINKA: Ruslan and Ludmilla; MUSSORGSKY: Boris Godunov

The Kirov production was mounted six years after the CD recording below, in 1998, with a different but equally strong cast. Both Galina Gorchakova and Olga Borodina sing the same roles (Yaroslavna and Konchakova respectively) but the Khan Konchak is Vladimir Vaneev while the performance is dedicated to the memory of the Khan in the earlier set, the incomparable Bulat Minjelkiev; most of the other male roles are differently (but no less superbly) cast. The notes replicate the scholarly account in the CD set of what this edition restores. It includes passages discovered among Borodin's papers that were rejected by Rimsky-Korsakov in his superb edition, and they have been specially orchestrated for this new production by Yuri Faliek. The Gergiev production reverts to a structural outline of 1883, which proposed alternating the Russian and Polovtsian acts. This is not the place to discuss the re-ordering of the material of the opera, but its artistic interest and success are not in question.

Prince Igor (complete; CD versions)

🔑  Ph. 442 537-2 (3). Kit, Gorchakova, Ognovienko, Minjelkiev, Borodina, Grigorian, Kirov Ch. & O, St Petersburg, Gergiev

Gergiev's electrifying account of Borodin's epic opera reflects not only his own magnetic qualities as a conductor but also the way he has welded his principal singers as well as the chorus and orchestra into a powerful team. Acts I and II are given in reverse order from the usual, with the substantial Prologue here followed by the first Polovtsian scene and its spectacular dances. Only then do you get the scene at Prince Galitsky's court, leading up to Yaroslavna's great lament, here sung superbly by Galina Gorchakova. Otherwise Gergiev generally follows the well-established edition, but he has included material omitted from Borodin's copious sketches, notably an extended monologue of lament for Igor himself as a prisoner of Khan Konchak in Act III: 'Why did I not fall on the field of battle?' On the solo casting, honours are much more even. The two principal women, not just Gorchakova but Olga Borodina too as Konchak's daughter, Konchakovna, are both magnificent, Ghiuselev and Ghiaurov, both older-sounding but still compelling. Gegam Grigorian in the tenor role of Igor's son gives a lusty performance, while Mikhail Kit as Igor himself, though often gritty and even fluttery of tone, sings thoughtfully and intelligently, making him a fair match for his Bulgarian rival.

Prince Igor: Overture & Polovtsian Dances

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI 5 66983-2. Beecham Choral Soc., RPO, Beecham – RIMSKY-KORSAKOV: Scheherazade ***

Ⓜ  Telarc CD 80039. Atlanta Ch. & SO, Shaw – STRAVINSKY: Firebird Suite ***

Beecham's 1957 performance of the Polovtsian Dances – now reissued as one of EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century' – sweeps the board, even though it omits the percussion-led opening Dance of the Polovtsian Maidens. Beecham draws an almost Russian fervour from his choristers. The recorded sound is little short of astonishing in its fullness, vividness and clarity.

In the Polovtsian Dances the choral singing on the remarkable Telarc recording is less clearly focused in the lyrical music than at climaxes, but the Atlanta Singers undoubtedly rise to the occasion. The entry of the bass drum is riveting and the closing section very exciting. The vivid sound-balance is equally impressive in the Overture, and if the Atlanta Orchestra does not possess the body of string timbre to make the most of the sweeping second subject, the playing has spontaneity and vitality throughout. Most enjoyable and, as a recording, in the demonstration bracket.

The Polish conductor Gregor Fitelberg recorded the Polovtsian Dances for Decca in 1946, a fresh, colourful reading enhanced by early Decca ffrr recording at its most impressive, very well transferred by Dutton. It makes an attractive fill-up for the Rimsky-Korsakov items from Ansermet and Constant Lambert. (Dutton CDBP 9712)

BOTTESINI, Giovanni
(1821–89)

Double Bass Concertino in C minor; Duo Concertante on theme from Bellini's I Puritani. Elegy in D; Passioni amorose for 2 Double Basses; Overtures: Ali Baba; Ero e Lenadro. Sinfonia: Il diavolo delle notte

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8.570398 Thomas Martin; LSO, Matthew Gibson; with Welsh; Petracchi

Gran Concerto in F sharp min.; (i) Gran Duo Concertante for Violin, Double Bass and Orchestra. Andante sostenuto for Strings; (ii) Duetto for Clarinet and Double Bass

Ⓝ (BB) * Naxos 8.570397 Thomas Martin, ECO, Litton; with (i) Garcia; (ii) Johnson

Capriccio à la Chopin; Fantasia La Sonnambula; 2 Melodies; Introduction and Gavotte; Meditation; Rêverie Variations on a Scottish Air (Auld Robin Gray); Intro & Variations on Carnaval of Venice; (i) Arias: Ci divide l'ocean; Giovinetto innamorato; Romanza; Tutto che il mondo serra

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8.570400 Thomas Martin, Halstead; (i) with Fugelle

Giovanni Bottesini was an all-purpose musician. Although as a famous virtuoso/composer for that instrument he was nicknamed the 'Paganini of the Double Bass' and as such appeared before all the crowned heads of Europe; he was also a highly regarded conductor, and Verdi chose him to direct the first performance of Aida in Cairo. His expertise on the double bass is well reflected here by the superb contribution of the soloist, Thomas Martin, whose lyrical style is warmly appealing and whose uncanny ease in the instrument's upper register (complete with harmonics) often suggests a cello, although the instrument's lower register has plenty of resonant warmth. The enjoyable collection of short pieces with Anthony Halstead on piano demonstrates the kind of repertoire featured at those illustrious venues including three vocal items. But the catchy Overtures included on the first disc listed shows that Bottisini could orchestrate vividly. The major double bass concertos on the second CD are less melodically distinctive, the highlight being the Duo Concertante using themes from I puritani. Undoubtedly the most rewarding disc here is the collection which includes the duet works with violin or clarinet which are both most entertaining, and very well presented, while the Andante sostenuto for Strings makes a splendid passionate interlude. Performances are peerless; recordings first class, although in the concertos the balance of the soloist bass at lower dynamic levels could be bolder.

BOUGHTON, Rutland
(1878–1960)

Symphony 1 (Oliver Cromwell)

Ⓜ  Dutton CDLX 7185. BBC Concert O, Handley – BAINTON: Symphony 3 ***

Any symphony inspired by Oliver Cromwell has to be at least interesting, and so this 35-minute work, dating from 1904, proves to be. There is plenty of lusty melodrama in the late-romantic (almost swashbuckling) writing which is thoroughly entertaining, with the composer's admiration of Wagner strongly felt. Superb performances and recorded sound, and coupled to an impressive work by Edgar Bainton.

(i) Oboe Quartet 1; 3 Songs without Words (for Oboe Quartet). String Quartets: in A (On Greek Folk Songs); in F (From the Welsh Hills)

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55174. (i) Francis; Rasumovsky Qt

Nearly all this music is inspired by the countryside. The second movement of the F major Quartet hauntingly evokes the Landscape from the (Welsh) Hilltops. The Oboe Quartet has two perky movements and a third, more reflective Andante con variazione. Sarah Francis, who has already given us a fine account of Boughton's First Oboe Concerto (see above), is equally persuasive both here and in the three equally winning Songs without Words. The Rasumovsky Quartet gives sympathetic support throughout and, with good, clear recording, this inexpensive disc has much to offer.

Pastoral

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55008. Francis, Rasumovsky Qt – HARTY: 3 Pieces; HOWELLS: Sonata; RUBBRA: Sonata ***

Boughton's enchanting Pastoral for oboe and string quartet has a disarmingly attractive, folksy pastoral melody which haunts the memory. The performance could hardly be more persuasive.

The Immortal Hour (opera; complete)

🔑 (B) * Hyp. Dyad CDD 22040 (2). Kennedy, Dawson, Wilson-Johnson, Davies, George Mitchell Ch., ECO, Melville

Analysed closely, much of The Immortal Hour may seem like Vaughan Williams and water; but this fine performance, conducted by a lifelong Boughton devotee, brings out the hypnotic quality which had 1920s music-lovers attending performances many times over, entranced by its lyrical evocation of Celtic twilight. The simple tunefulness goes with a fine feeling for atmosphere. The excellent cast of young singers includes Anne Dawson as the heroine, Princess Etain, and Maldwyn Davies headily beautiful in the main tenor rendering of the Faery song. Warm, reverberant recording, enhanced in its CD format, and this delightful opera is not to be missed at its new Dyad price.

BOULANGER, Lili (1893–1918)

(i) Clairières dans le ciel (song-cycle); (ii) Choral Music: Hymne au soleil; Les Sirènes; Pour les funérailles d'un soldat; Renouveau; Soir sur la plaine

(BB) (*) Hyp. Helios CDH 55153. (i) Hill, Ball; (ii) New L. Chamber Ch., Wood

Clairières dans le ciel is fragrantly sensuous in a particularly French way, the introduction balmy and exotic. Martyn Hill fully captures the work's essence and for the most part sings beautifully, though his bursts of intensity bring an intrusive vibrato. Andrew Ball's accompaniment, rippling and ardent, is delightfully supportive. The short choral works each have a soloist, Renouveau and Soir sur la plaine have three each. The piano accompaniments serve well enough when the choral writing is so exquisitely sumptuous in the blending of female voices, richly impressionistic. The most striking piece, however, is a dark evocation of a soldier's funeral. The New London Chamber Choir admirably catch the lavish impressionistic colouring of this highly original writing and sing with fervour, and Andrew Ball again rises to the occasion. Excellent recording and full texts and translations make this a bargain.

Faust et Hélène; Psaume 24; Psaume 130: Du fond de l'abîme; D'un matin de printemps; D'un soir triste

 Chan. 9745. Dawson, Murray, Bottone, MacKenzie, Howard, CBSO Ch., BBC PO, Y.-P. Tortelier

Faust et Hélène has astonishing beauty and a natural eloquence. Like Psaume 24, Du fond de l'abîme and the other music on the disc, it offers testimony to an altogether remarkable talent. There is a distinguished team of soloists (Lynne Dawson and Bonaventura Bottone in the cantata and Ann Murray in one of the Psalms) and first-rate contributions from the Birmingham chorus and the BBC Philharmonic under Yan-Pascal Tortelier.

Psaume 24; Psaume 130: Du fond de l'abîme; Pie Jesu

(M) (*) BBC (ADD) BBCL 4026-2. Price, Greevy, Partridge, Carol Case, BBC Ch., BBC SO, N. Boulanger – FAURÉ: Requiem **(*) ✿

The Pie Jesu, dedicated to her sister Nadia, certainly conveys her fervour and belief in these remarkable scores, and Du fond de l'abîme is a work of astonishing originality and imagination. Recorded at a live concert in the Fairfield Halls, Croydon, the BBC engineers provide more than acceptable sound, and the balance is skilfully done. A rather special musical document.

BOULANGER, Nadia (1887–1979)

Mademoiselle: A film by Bruno Monsaingeon

 Ideale Audience DVD 5DM41

Bruno Monsaingeon has produced impressive and revealing video portraits of Richter, Oistrakh and Menuhin. This film is about Nadia Boulanger, the most formidable teacher of the twentieth century, with whom practically everyone of note studied, including Aaron Copland, Walter Piston, Lennox Berkeley, Igor Markevitch and Leonard Bernstein to name only a handful. Much of the film is based on masterclasses she gave at her home in Paris, but it was reworked into its present form for her ninetieth birthday in 1977. There is a moving coda printed in the booklet, in which Bernstein describes a visit during her dying days. RL had the privilege of recording her on a number of occasions during his BBC career and can testify that the film brings one closer to a remarkable presence whose spirit still casts a strong spell.

BOULEZ, Pierre (born 1925)

Anthèmes 2; Messagesquisse; Sur Incises

 DG 477 635-1. Ens. InterContemporain, composer

All three of these contrasted works display Boulez's fascination with colour and texture. This collection is essentially for those who do not believe music is mainly concerned with melody. But it won a Gramophone Contemporary Music Award in 2001 and also a Grand Prix.

(i) . . . explosante-fixe . . .; (ii) Notations; (iii) Structures pour deux pianos, Livre II

 DG 477 5385. (i) Ens. InterContemporain, composer, with Cherrier, Ophèle, Valade; (ii; iii) Aimard; (iii) Boffard

Notations demonstrates his application of serialism to the widest range of parameters. In Book 2 of Boulez's Structures for Two Pianos he felt tempted to exploit the special effects that the medium itself offered, echoing electronic effects at times. Aimard with Florent Boffard again proves magnetic, but it is with the main work on the disc, . . . explosante-fixe . . ., 37 minutes long, that Boulez as composer emerges at full stretch in the colour and energy of his writing for chamber orchestra with electronic effects.

Figures-Doubles-Prismes; (i) Pli selon pli; (ii) Le Soleil des eaux; (i; ii; iii) Le Visage nuptial

(BB)  Warner Apex 2564 62083-2 (2). BBC SO, Boulez, with (i) Bryn-Julson; (ii) BBC Singers; (iii) Laurence

Pli selon pli has long been accepted as a modern classic. Phyllis Bryn-Julson is the superb soloist, and in duet with the contralto, Elizabeth Laurence, she is just as persuasive in the more sumptuous sounds of Le Visage nuptial with the two interweaving soloists supplemented by the BBC Singers. The BBC Singers then take centre stage for another setting of Char, Le Soleil des eaux, giving a virtuoso performance in the vigorous choral writing. As a coda comes the orchestral work, Figures-Doubles-Prismes, by turns darkly intense and powerfully abrasive; superbly controlled in this performance under the composer, as it is in all the works. First-rate digital sound all through.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Dérive (for flute, clarinet, violin, cello, vibraphone & piano); (i) Dialogue de l'ombre double; (ii) Flute Sonatine; Mémoriale (... explosante-fixe ... originel) for Flute & 8 Instruments; (iii) Piano Sonata; (iv) Cummings ist der Dichter

(BB)  Warner Apex 0927 49987-2. (i) Daimins; (ii) Cherrier; (iii) Aimard; (iv) BBC Singers; Ens. InterContemporain, composer

No one could suggest that the recklessly spiky progress of the Sonatine for Flute (a most assured performance) and the Piano Sonata are anything but intractable. But the Dialogue de l'ombre double (another superbly played work for clarinet in electronic duet with itself) is both imaginative and aurally fascinating, while Dérive and Mémoriale (which are not too long) are similarly exotically ear-tickling, if with no formal logic. Most strikingly original of all is the longest piece here, the weirdly atmospheric choral work, Cummings ist der Dichter and the result is nothing if not extraordinary.

Domaines

Ⓑ  HM HMA 195930. Ens. Portal, Musique Vivante, Masson

Domaines was first performed in 1968 as a work for solo clarinet, but two years later Boulez rewrote the score to include a responding concertante ensemble of 20 additional instrumentalists including percussion, divided into five groups arranged in a circle. The solo clarinet moves among them throughout the performance, yet remains a fulcrum. In the second Mirror half, the soloists reflect the instrumental tuttis which are now more elaborate, but the stereo here readily conveys the mobility of the soloist. Although this is a bargain reissue, the playing time is only just over half an hour, which many will say is quite long enough!

Piano Sonatas 1–3

(BB)  Naxos 8.553353. Biret

Those with an interest in this repertoire will be well rewarded by Idil Biret on Naxos; she is more than equal to their technical demands and is given good sound.

Piano Sonata 2

Ⓜ () DG (ADD) (IMS) 471 359-2. Pollini – DEBUSSY: 12 Etudes **

In Boulez's Second Sonata the composer's stated intention was to 'destroy what was first-movement sonata form, to dissolve slow-movement form by means of the trope, to dissolve repetitive scherzo-form by means of variation form, and in the fourth movement to destroy fugal and canonic form'. Indeed in the finale the pianist at one point has an instruction to 'pulverize the sound'. So, if you like musical disintegration, this is the piece for you. Pollini truly believes in this sonata, readily demonstrated by the forceful driving momentum of his playing throughout.

BOWEN, York (1884–1961)

Horn Concerto (for Horn, String Orchestra & Timpani), Op. 58

🔑  Lyrita SRCD 316. Pyatt, LPO, Braithwaite – ARNOLD; GIBBS; JACOB: Horn Concertos; VINTER: Hunter's Moon ***

Like the Malcolm Arnold Concerto, York Bowen's attractive work was written for Dennis Brain and, again like Arnold, Bowen underpins the bravura writing with a richly melodic lyrical strain, which David Pyatt plays very sensitively. The spirited finale dances off perkily, again paying homage to the Strauss First Concerto. David Pyatt's superlative performance here is splendidly recorded, like the Arnold, in the warm acoustic of Watford Town Hall.

(i) Piano Concerto 1, Op. 11; (ii) Violin Concerto, Op. 33

Ⓜ  Dutton CDLX 7169. BBC Concert O, Handley, with (i) Michael Dussek; (ii) Lorraine McAslan

The Piano Concerto is an early work, composed when Bowen was nineteen. There are some reminiscences of Saint-Saëns and Litolff, but the piece has refreshing fluency and charm. The Violin Concerto failed to find a persuasive champion and soon disappeared from the repertoire until this excellent recording restored it to circulation. As an eight-year-old boy, York Bowen made his debut in a Dussek concerto, so it is appropriate that Michael Dussek who is descended from the composer should play it here.

Piano Concertos 2 (Concertstück), Op. 17; 3 (Fantasia), Op. 23; Symphonic Fantasia, Op. 16

Ⓜ  Dutton CDLX 7187. Dussek; BBC Concert O, Handley

This couples the Second Concerto (subtitled Concertstück) with the Third (1907) and the Symphonic Fantasia, which no less a conductor than Hans Richter championed with the LSO. Bowen was still in his early twenties and these pieces all have a youthful freshness and generosity of feeling. Excellent notes from Lewis Foreman enhance the appeal of these most welcome and admirably performed issues.

Piano Concertos 3 in G minor 'Fantasia', Op 23; 4 in A minor, Op 88

Ⓝ  Hyp. CDA67659. Driver, BBC Scottish SO, Brabbins

Danny Driver is the engaging soloist in the one-movement Third Concerto from Dutton, and he also tackles the much later Fourth which the composer himself thought highly of. Indeed he regarded it as his finest work for the keyboard while Sorabji, no less, hailed it as the most important concerto written by an Englishman. Fine recorded sound makes this a most desirable acquisition.

Viola Concerto in C min., Op. 25

 Hyp. CDA 67546. Power, BBC Scottish SO, Brabbins – FORSYTH: Viola Concerto in G min. ***

Bowen was himself a viola-player as well as a pianist and he exploits the instrument masterfully, launching powerfully in the first subject of the opening Allegro assai. That restless theme is quickly set against a warmly relaxed second subject. The central Andante cantabile brings a rich, song-like melody, exploiting the viola's lower register, leading to a jaunty finale, witty in its use of woodwind, which combines elements of scherzo and finale. Well coupled, superbly played by Lawrence Power, with Martyn Brabbins and the BBC Scottish Orchestra, and very well recorded, with the viola well forward.

Cello Sonata

 British Music Soc. BMS 423CD. Cole, Talbot – FOULDS; WALKER: Cello Sonatas ***

Jo Cole does not produce a big tone, but she is highly sensitive to York Bowen's very English lyricism and she is at her finest in the elegiac main theme of the slow movement and in catching its passionate, rhapsodic feeling. The finale is a brilliant rondo, which brings back the principal themes from all three movements to make a powerful close, and it invites and receives a passionate response from both artists. The recording is essentially well balanced, but the piano often dominates, as much as anything because of the bold character of the piano writing.

Cello Sonata; Suite for Violin & Piano; Violin Sonata in E min.

Ⓜ  Dutton CDLX 7120. Endymion Ens.

What these keenly intense performances consistently demonstrate is the cogency of York Bowen's writing, with strongly argued structures built on striking thematic material. So the Violin Suite in four movements is framed by strongly rhythmic movements in sonata form, with a flowing Barcarolle for slow movement and a Humoresque Scherzo that Kreisler himself might have written as one of his encore pieces. The later works bring no lessening of passion behind the writing. With Krysia Osostowicz the outstanding violinist and Jane Salmon the fine cellist, these very well-recorded performances could not be better designed.

Horn Quintet; Piano Trio; Rhapsody Trio

🔑 Ⓜ  Dutton CDLX 7115. Endymion Ens.

Three more superb chamber-works that never seem routine, particularly in outstanding performances like these. The Horn Quintet is a glorious piece, with Stephen Stirling magnificent in the central horn part, and if the main motif of the first movement reminds one of Vaughan Williams's Fifth Symphony, York Bowen was writing almost 20 years earlier. One looks forward to hearing much more.

String Quartets 2 in D min., Op. 41; 3 in G, Op. 46b; (i) Phantasy-Quintet for Bass Clarinet & String Quartet, Op. 93

 British Music Society BMS 426CD. Archaeus Qt, (i) with Timothy Lines

The Second Quartet in D minor has a hauntingly melodic first movement. The Poco lento is unforgettably nostalgic and the busily folksy finale of contrasting brilliance, offset by more appealing lyricism. The Third Quartet opens with another lovely melodic contour reminding one a little of Dvořák, with the slow movement following in the same mood of intimate melancholy. The bass clarinet does not dominate the Phantasy-Quintet, but adds a beguiling touch of darkness to its texture, interwoven with solo interludes. Highly sympathetic performances and excellent recording ensure this CD receives a strong recommendation.

Viola Sonatas 1 in F; 2 in C min.; Phantasy for Viola & Piano, Op. 54

Ⓜ  Dutton CDLX 7126. Boyd, Forsberg

With James Boyd the rich-toned soloist, this collection of Bowen's music for viola and piano is equally welcome. In the unashamedly lyrical style that brought him such early success as a composer, this is warmly approachable music. The Swedish accompanist, Bengt Forsberg, proves as understanding an accompanist as he is in the song repertory.

PIANO MUSIC

Ballade 2, Op. 87; Berceuse, Op. 83; Moto perpetuo from Op. 39; Preludes, Op. 102: excerpts; Romances 1, Op. 35/1; 2, Op. 45; Sonata 5 in F min., Op. 72; Toccata, Op. 155

🔑  Hyp. CDA 66838. Hough

Hough, always compelling on disc, not only technically brilliant but spontaneously expressive, consistently conveys his love for Bowen's music, starting with 13 of the 24 Preludes. He puts them in his own very effective order, bringing out the contrasted qualities of jewelled miniatures, reflecting Rachmaninov on the one hand, Ireland and Bax on the other, but with a flavour of their own. The most powerful, most ambitious work is the Sonata 5, with two weighty, wide-ranging movements separated by an Andante interlude. Vivid piano-sound and illuminating notes by Francis Pott and Hough himself.

Ballade 2; 3 Miniatures, Op. 44; 3 Pieces. Op. 20; 3 Preludes: 2 & 3; 3 Serious Dances, Op. 51; 3 Songs without words, Op. 94

Ⓝ  Chan. 10506. Celis

24 Preludes, Op. 102; Sonata 6 in B flat min., Op. 160; Reverie, Op. 86

 Chan. 10277. Celis

The Dutch pianist Joop Celis proves an enthusiastic and highly virtuosic exponent of York Bowen and offers a valuable anthology of his solo piano music that well withstands comparison with Stephen Hough. Apart from the shorter pieces he is very impressive in the magnificent Sixth Sonata, and even more rewarding in the 24 Preludes, eclectic but with something unmistakeably English about them.

Partita, Op. 156; 10 Preludes, Op. 102; Toccata, Op. 155

Ⓝ Ⓜ (*) Lyrita mono REAM 2105(2). Composer – REIZENSTEIN: Sonata, Op. 19 etc

York Bowen was himself a pianist of great distinction and these performances recorded a year before his death, when he would have been seventy-four, testify to his elegance and mastery. The Partita was composed the year of this recording and has much of the charm he exuded as a man. It comes as a two CD set coupled with rarities by Franz Reisenstein.

BOYCE, William (1711–79)

Overtures 1–12; Concerti grossi: in B flat; B min. & E min.

Ⓑ  Chan. Double 6665 (2). Cantilena, Shepherd

Cantilena's performances readily convey the freshness of Boyce's inspiration, and this is one of the most recommendable of all their recordings, the more attractive for being reissued as a bargain Double. They are oddly balanced but the sound is both atmospheric and vivid and provides a refreshing musical experience.

Symphonies 1–8, Op. 2

 DG 419 631-2. E. Concert, Pinnock

Ⓜ  CRD 3356. Bournemouth Sinf., Thomas

Pinnock's disc of the Boyce Symphonies wears its scholarship very easily and in so doing brings not only lively, resilient playing but fresh revelation in the treatment of the vivace movements. Nicely scaled recording, bright but atmospheric.

Thomas's tempi are often brisk. But even against such strong competition as this, the buoyant playing of the Bournemouth Sinfonietta still gives much pleasure by its sheer vitality. Bright, clear sound and a price advantage.

12 Trio Sonatas (1747); Sonatas 13–15 (unpublished)

 Hyp. CDA 67151/2. Parley of Instruments or Parley B. O, Holman

Boyce gave the English trio sonata a new lease of life at a time when the format was in danger of falling into neglect, and they are consistently inventive and a good example of baroque 'easy listening'. As an appendix, Peter Holman has discovered three extra sonatas (here numbered 13–15) which survive in a manuscript in the Cambridge Fitzwilliam Museum. There is evidence to suggest that these sonatas were sometimes played in orchestral form, so the Hyperion recording alternates orchestral and chamber performance, with Nos. 1, 3, 5, 7–9, 11 and 13 heard on a full string group. These period performances are vigorously alert and stylish, with slow movements refined yet warmly relished. Excellent recording without edginess.

The Secular Masque. Overtures: Birthday Ode for George III (1768); King's Ode for the New Year (1772); Ode for St Cecilia's Day

🔑  Gaudeamus CDGAU 176. Howarth, Kuhlmann, Daniels, Robinson, Varcoe, Thomas, New College, Oxford, Ch., Hanover Band, Lea-Cox

The Secular Masque represents Boyce at his freshest and most unbuttoned. So 'Diana's song' – which Boyce published separately – with elaborate horn parts, brims with rustic jollity and is sung radiantly here by Judith Howarth. 'Mars's song', Sound the trumpet, beat the drum, also has Boyce responding with engaging directness, vigour and colour. Each of the overtures here, including the one for the Secular Masque, follows a similar form in two, three or four brief movements. Graham Lea-Cox draws lively performances from the Hanover Band, the choir and his excellent team of soloists. Warm, full sound.

Solomon (serenata)

 Hyp. CDA 66378. Mills, Crook, Parley of Instruments, Goodman

William Boyce's Solomon is a totally secular piece, a dialogue between She and He, with the verses freely based on the Song of Solomon. As this stylish and alert period performance using young, fresh-voiced soloists makes clear, it has some delightful inspirations, less influenced by Italian models than by popular English song. First-rate sound.

BRAHMS, Johannes (1833–97)

Piano Concertos. 1 in D min., Op. 15; 2 in B flat, Op. 83

🔑  Decca 475 7637 (2). Freire, Leipzig GO, Chailly

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ  Sup. SU 3865-2 (2). Ivan Moravec, Czech PO, Bělohlávek

Piano Concertos (i) 1; (ii) 2

Ⓝ Ⓑ () mono/stereo (ADD) Curzon; (i) LSO, Szell; (ii) VPO, Knappertsbusch

(i) Piano Concertos 1–2; (ii) Academic Festival Overture; Tragic Overture; Variations on a Theme of Haydn, Op. 56a

🔑 (BB)  EMI (ADD) Gemini 4 76939-2 (2). (i) Barenboim, New Philh. O; (ii) VPO; (i; ii) Barbirolli

(i) Piano Concertos 1–2. Variations & Fugue on a Theme of Handel; Waltzes, Op. 39

🔑 Ⓜ  Sony Heritage (ADD) MH2K 63225 (2). Fleisher; (i) Cleveland O, Szell

(i) Piano Concertos 1–2. Fantasias, Op. 116

🔑 Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 447 446-2 (2). Gilels, (i) BPO, Jochum

The Gilels performances can still hold their own against virtually all the competition, but the two concertos are also available separately. However, the present set is offered at a reduced price and the remastered recording is quite outstanding.

Nelson Freire and Chailly make a superb partnership, readily combining adrenalin, power and Brahmsian lyricism. Perhaps it is the stimulus of live recording, but the unleashed energy of the opening of No. 1 reminds the listener immediately of Curzon and Szell. The Leipzig Gewandhaus Orchestra, while retaining its fullness of texture, sounds revitalized by Chailly, yet the poetry of the slow movements is fully revealed. The Decca recording is in the demonstration class to match the virtuosity of the solo playing, and this new pairing is very recommendable indeed.

Electrifying playing from Ivan Moravec, matched by Bělohlávek's wonderfully understanding accompaniments. Moreover, this newer set also has the advantage of first-class digital recording and a natural orchestral balance, with the piano forward and dramatically present, within the warm acoustic of the Dvořák Hall of the Rudolfinum in Prague. The recordings were made in 1988 and 1989 respectively, and so gripping and spontaneous is the playing throughout that it is difficult to believe that the music-making did not take place in front of a live audience.

Barenboim's performances with Barbirolli of the two Piano Concertos from the late 1960s (and especially the First with the New Philharmonia) are also among the most inspired ever committed to disc, and the orchestral works also show Barbirolli at his finest. Excellent recording makes this budget Gemini reissue very desirable indeed.

Leon Fleisher's two concerto recordings are both masterly examples of joint inspiration, bringing out the point that these are in many ways symphonies with piano, when Szell's direction is so powerful and incisive as well as warmly expressive. Not that Fleisher in any way lacks individuality, for the crisp confidence of his virtuosity has a sureness in its musical and emotional thrust that carries one magnetically on. The sound is among the best offered by CBS/Sony at that period, with the piano balanced forwardly but not aggressively so. Generously, this Heritage issue also includes solo recordings by Fleisher of the Handel Variations and Waltzes, similarly crisp and concentrated.

Stephen Hough gives keenly distinctive and deeply thoughtful readings of both Brahms concertos, so that with refined recording the transparency of textures may be disconcerting to those who insist on a fat Brahms sound. He adopts the widest range of tone and dynamic, with the recording beautifully capturing the hushed pianissimos in both works, not least in both slow movements. Both recordings were made in 1989 (Virgin 2x1 5 61412-2). They are also available seperately (no. 1: 5 22098-2; no. 2: 3 91366-2).

While Curzon's memorable account of the First Concerto with Szell has long held an honoured place in the catalogue (see below) his 1957 recording of the Second Concerto (surprisingly only available in mono) fell by the wayside. Yet it is a remarkable interpretation, the pianism totally commanding (and well recorded); and if the orchestral upper strings are at times very thin, the acoustic of the Sofiensaal adds an overall warmth. Knappertsbusch's direction is volatile but convincingly Brahmsian, and altogether this version is well worthy of reissue alongside its more celebrated companion.

(i) Piano Concertos 1–2; (ii) Piano Quartet 1 in G min., Op. 25 (arr. Schoenberg)

Ⓝ Ⓑ  CfP 2 28363-2 (2) Tirimo, (i) LPO, Sanderling; (ii) CBSO, Rattle

The Second Concerto was Tirimo's début recording, made in 1972. He gives a commanding if measured account of the first movement, not always quite tidy in its occasional impulsiveness (but then neither is Richter). The second and fourth movements too have slow basic tempi, but the clarity of articulation gives a sharpness of focus to conceal that, and both are made exuberant and joyful. Similarly in the First Concerto, made six years later, Sanderling and Tirimo amply justify their straight and measured manner in the thoughtful concentration of the whole reading, with crisp, lifted rhythms in outer movements, while the slow movement has a rapt quality, holding one's attention as a live performance would. With excellent recording this is one of the best of the Classics for Pleasure reissued doubles, for Rattle makes quite a case for Schoenberg's transcription of the Piano Quartet.

(i) Piano Concerto 1. Piano Quartet 1 (orch. Schoenberg)

🔑  EuroArts DVD 2053659. (i) Barenboim; BPO, Rattle (Director: Bob Coles, Producer: Paul Smaczny)

The Barenboim/Rattle DVD of the First Concerto, coupled with Schoenberg's orchestration of the First Piano Quartet, (curiously scored minus a piano) is visually and sonically one of the most successful of all the available orchestral concert DVDs, and the Concerto is an overwhelming musical experience. The sound is magnificent – full, rich, resonant and vivid in its detail, as if the recording were made in a normal concert hall with perfect acoustics. It is a superb performance, with free-running adrenalin, to match Barenboim's much earlier studio partnership with Barbirolli. Indeed, it is remarkably like being present at the concert itself. The choice of Schoenberg's orchestration of the Piano Quartet for the second half of the concert was a curious one, yet that too is played with great conviction. But this DVD is an essential purchase for the Concerto alone.

Piano Concerto 1 in D min., Op. 15

🔑 * DG 477 6021. Zimerman, BPO, Rattle

🔑 Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 466 376-2. Curzon, LSO, Szell – FRANCK: Symphonic Variations; LITOLFF: Scherzo ***

Ⓜ  Warner Elatus 0927 46768-2. Grimaud, Berlin State O, Sanderling – STRAUSS: Burleske ***

Krystian Zimerman, Simon Rattle and the Berlin Philharmonic took their masterly account of the D minor Concerto into the studio the day after a concert performance. Of the latter, the Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung is quoted as saying 'Zimerman infused his piano part with that spark of individual genius which separates a merely committed and faithful interpretation from the revelation of absolute truth.' There is no doubt that this is a distinguished performance indeed, and it is very well recorded.

Clifford Curzon's 1962 recording, produced by John Culshaw in Kingsway Hall, returns to the catalogue, superbly remastered. The fierceness of attack in the upper strings, especially in the powerful opening tutti, sounds naturally focused on CD, adding a leonine power to Szell's orchestral contribution, and the piano tone is admirably natural.

Hélène Grimaud is an impressive Brahms interpreter and totally attuned to his world, while Kurt Sanderling is equally persuasive here. Grimaud's is a performance to reckon with and the recording has splendour and presence. No one buying this, particularly at so modest a price, is likely to be disappointed on any count.

Piano Concerto 2 in B flat, Op. 83 (DVD version)

(*) DG DVD 073 4097. Pollini, VPO, Abbado – BEETHOVEN: Piano Concertos 3 & 5; MOZART: Piano Concertos 19 & 23 **(*)

Pollini is commanding and majestic in the B flat concerto, recorded in May 1976 at the Musikvereinssaal, Vienna, and the Vienna Philharmonic give sympathetic support. By the side of the Gilels–Jochum performances, this does not seem as warm or involving. Of course it offers some superb pianism and eloquent orchestral playing but, as with the Beethoven, it exhibits cool and dedicated classicism, shorn of expressive exaggeration, characteristic of this partnership. Exemplary visual direction and predictably fine sound from Klaus Hiemann and Rainer Brock.

Piano Concerto 2 in B flat, Op. 83 (CD versions)

 Naïve V4944. Guy, LPO, Berglund

Ⓜ () BBC mono BBCL 4125-2. Arrau, SCO, Gibson – SCHUBERT: 3 Klavierstücke ()

(i) Piano Concerto 2. Piano Sonata 1, Op. 1/2

🔑 Ⓑ * RCA 82876 60860-2 (2). S. Richter, (i) Chicago SO, Leinsdorf

Richter's Brahms B flat is one of the very finest performances of this great work. There is nothing self-conscious or studied here; the music is allowed to unfold naturally and with warmth and eloquence. This belongs alongside the greatest. This two-CD package also includes Richter's classic version of the early C major Sonata, Op. 1, an outstanding performance in every way, and both 1960 recordings sound very good indeed.

The young French pianist François-Frédéric Guy's account of the Brahms B flat Concerto is very commanding. It comes from a concert given at the Royal Festival Hall on 30 May 2003 – and can hold its own against the finest – and, having the electricity of a live occasion, is in some ways to be preferred to many rivals. Berglund is a supportive and sympathetic accompanist and audience noises are unobtrusive. The Festival Hall acoustic does not flatter the upper strings but, that apart, readers should find this a most rewarding issue.

Arrau could be a masterly interpreter of the Brahms concertos, often performing both at the same concert. This concert performance was given in Glasgow in 1963 and shows him in splendid form: there is a breadth, warmth and luminosity of tone that are peculiar to Arrau at his finest, and an intensity he brought to everything he did in the concert hall. The mono sound is very faithful.

The commanding Solomon version of the B flat Concerto with Issay Dobrowen and the Philharmonia Orchestra comes from 1947. There is a leonine nobility about this performance and an immediacy, spontaneity and dramatic fire that sweep all before it. The piano is not always perfect (the C above the stave is out of tune in one passage) but the pianist is! One soon forgets the sonic limitations and is swept along by the performance. (Testament SBT 1042)

Violin Concerto in D, Op. 77 (DVD version)

🔑  EMI DVD 5 44544-9. Perlman, BPO, Barenboim (Producer: Ursula Klein, V/D: Klaus Lindemann) – BEETHOVEN: Violin Concerto ***

Perlman's DVD, recorded live in 1992 at the Berlin Schauspielhaus with the Berlin Philharmonic under Barenboim, is in every way satisfying but is especially notable for the raptly beautiful performance of the Adagio, and is followed by a sparkling account of the finale. Barenboim is a splendid partner, and the Berlin Philharmonic are on top form; the balance is unusually good for a Perlman recording, though he certainly dominates the performance. The sound itself is excellent, and the producer has directed the changing camera angles very perceptively, not missing out the conductor. If you want a DVD of the coupling with Beethoven, this will give every satisfaction.

Violin Concerto in D, Op. 77 (DVD Version; with Documentary 'Discovering Masterpieces')

 EuroArts DVD 2056078. Shaham, BPO, Abbado (Performance Director: Bob Coles; Documentary Director: Angelika Stielhler)

A lovely performance of the Concerto from Gil Shaham, the beautiful slow-movement oboe solo generating an exquisite response from the soloist. With Abbado looking very mature and generating plenty of vitality in the outer movements, he yet maintains the warmly lyrical approach of his soloist. The camerawork is sensible and the music-making comes fully alive for the listener/watcher. This can be recommended alongside Perlman. The documentary (which opens in German with subtitles) is mostly in English. It is quite visual and provides a great deal of illuminating background information about all aspects of the work and its gestation.

Violin Concerto in D, Op. 77 (CD versions)

🔑 Ⓑ  Decca 475 6703 (2). Bell, Cleveland O, Dohnányi – SCHUMANN; TCHAIKOVSKY; WIENIAWSKI: Violin Concertos ***

🔑 ❀ Ⓜ () EMI mono 5 67583-2 [567584]. Milstein, Pittsburgh SO, Steinberg – BEETHOVEN: Violin Concerto ()

🔑 Ⓜ  RCA (ADD) SACD 82876 61391-2. Heifetz, Chicago SO, Reiner – BEETHOVEN: Violin Concerto ***

🔑 (BB)  DG Entrée 474 569-2. Mutter, BPO, Karajan – BEETHOVEN: Triple Concerto ***

 Avie AV 2125. Zehetmair, N. Sinf. – SCHUMANN: Symphony 4 ***

 Sony SK89649. Hahn, ASMF, Marriner – STRAVINSKY: Violin Concerto ***

(BB) () Dutton mono CDBP 9710. Neveu, Philh. O, Dobrowen – RAVEL: Tzigane; SUK: 4 Pieces ()

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.110999. Menuhin, Lucerne Festival O, Furtwängler (with BRAHMS: Hungarian Dances, 1–3. MENDELSSOHN: Hebrides Overture; WAGNER: Siegfried Idyll ())

Joshua Bell's commanding performance of the Brahms Violin Concerto is full of flair, demonstrating not only his love of bravura display, but also his ready gift for turning a phrase individually in a way that catches the ear, always sounding spontaneous. Full, atmospheric recording and no less outstanding couplings put this among the very finest versions. This now comes as part of a bargain-priced two-CD set which, if you want the couplings, is very recommendable indeed.

The EMI mono Milstein–Steinberg recording originally appeared on Capitol in Britain and was long treasured. Returning to it after many years, its stature impresses more than ever before. It is quite simply glorious: a performance of surpassing beauty, its virtuosity effortless, and with a tremendous breadth, warmth and eloquence. There is, above all, a nobility here that shines through. Milstein re-recorded it in the 1980s in Vienna with Jochum – very well, too – but this remains in a class of its own.

Like the Beethoven with which it is coupled, the SACD transfer of Heifetz's dazzling performance makes vivid and fresh what on LP was originally a rather harsh Chicago recording, more aggressive than the Boston sound in the Beethoven. With the CD, the excellent qualities of RCA's Chicago balance for Reiner come out in full, giving a fine, three-dimensional focus.

Mutter's early partnership with Karajan proved naturally spontaneous, and her 1981 account of the Brahms Concerto has stood the test of time. In many ways her playing combines a natural feeling with the flair and individuality of Perlman. Needless to say, Karajan's accompaniment is strong in personality and the Berlin Philharmonic play beautifully; the performance represents a genuine musical partnership between youthful inspiration and eager experience.

Zehetmair's is a warmly lyrical reading, which gives much pleasure. It is traditional in that he takes no liberties with tempi, but there a real Brahmsian lyricism yet no lack of individuality. The result, with a matchingly eloquent response from the Northern Sinfonia, places this among the most directly enjoyable versions, for the Avie recording is naturally balanced. If you want the Schumann coupling, this can certainly be recommended.

Hilary Hahn's very first entry establishes her total command, coupled with a purity and precision which make for a magnetic reading from first to last, sensitively matched by the full and incisive playing of the Academy under Sir Neville Marriner. The close balance means that Hahn is much less hushed in the slow movement, but then her urgent reading of the finale is given extra impact.

Ginette Neveu's magnificent performance now becomes one of EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century' in its coupling with a magnetic account of the Sibelius Concerto. We are inclined to prefer the Dutton transfer of the Brahms, but that comes with music by Ravel, Suk and others, and the EMI transfer from the original 78s is very acceptable, clear and not lacking body. (4 76830-2 [4 76831-2])

Menuhin's classic 1949 account has been out many times during the last sixty years, but the present transfer by Ward Marston is arguably the finest. It comes with other 1949 recordings made in Vienna, including the poignant Siegfried Idyll.

(i) Violin Concerto; (ii) Double Concerto for Violin, Cello & Orchestra, in A min., Op. 102

Ⓝ  DG 477 7470. Repin, Gewandhaus O, Chailly, with (i) Mørk

* Pentatone SACD Surround Sound PTC 5186 066. Fischer, (ii) Müller-Schott ; Netherlands PO, Kreizberg

Ⓜ  RCA (ADD) 82876 59410-2. Heifetz, with (i) Chicago SO, Reiner; (ii) Piatigorsky, RCA Victor SO, Wallenstein

(BB) (*) Sony (ADD) SBK46335. Stern, (i) with Rose; Phd. O, Ormandy

Vadim Repin's Brahms Violin Concerto is spontaneously compelling, and like his account of the Beethoven concerto, admirably classical in feeling. He has first class support from Chailly and the Gewandhaus Orchestra. This comes in harness with the Double Concerto in which he is partnered by the Norwegian cellist, Truls Mørk, whose artistry is hardly less impressive. Like its companion, this immaculately recorded version is very impressive indeed and this DG issue is among the finest available versions of this coupling.

In the first movement of the Violin Concerto, Fischer takes an exceptionally expansive view, freely varying the tempo as she did in her equally outstanding version of the Tchaikovsky Violin Concerto, also for Pentatone. Fischer amply justifies her spacious and flexible speeds in the total feeling of spontaneity throughout. When it comes to the Double Concerto, there is a contrast of approach, with Fischer and Müller-Schott not nearly as expansive, though Fischer in her expressive freedom plays with an improvisatory quality that is apt for the music, and Muller-Schott matches his partner in warmth and brilliance. They choose ideal speeds for both the slow movement and the finale, relaxed and easily lyrical in the slow movement, brilliant and thrusting in the finale. Very well recorded, with excellent separation; if you have back speakers the surround sound is impressively natural.

An excellent and logical coupling of these two vintage Heifetz accounts for RCA's new 'Classic Library' series. The sound for both these recordings has been vastly improved in recent incarnations, and this CD certainly retains its classic status.

Stern's glorious (1959) account of the Violin Concerto with Ormandy is now given a coupling that is both generous and suitable, the mid-1960s' collaboration with Leonard Rose in the Double Concerto. The two soloists unfailingly match each other's playing, with Ormandy always an understanding accompanist. The only drawback is the characteristically forward balance of the soloists.

Double Concerto for Violin, Cello & Orchestra in A min., Op. 102

(*) EMI DVD 490449-9. (i) D. Oistrakh, Rostropovich, Moscow PO, Kondrashin – BACH: Double Violin Concerto, etc.; MOZART: Sinfonia concertante **(*)

David Oistrakh and Rostropovich were recorded during the Moscow Philharmonic's visit to London in October 1965. It is a highly charged account which shows both artists at their most emotionally intense yet profoundly disciplined. As usual at this period, the camerawork, expertly produced by the young Brian Large, is very restrained, with a limited number of angles and the minimum of visual distraction. Of course the sound is less transparent and present than the commercial records of the period, but this DVD does convey the sense of occasion and musical excitement.

Double Concerto for Violin, Cello & Orchestra in A min. (CD Versions)

Ⓝ Ⓜ  Warner Maestro 2564 69366-8 Perlman, Ma, Chicago SO, Barenboim – MENDELSSOHN: Violin Concerto ***

🔑 (BB)  EMI Gemini (ADD) 381487-2 (2). D. Oistrakh, Fournier, Philh. O, Galliera – BEETHOVEN: Triple Concerto; MOZART: Violin Concerto 3; PROKOFIEV: Violin Concerto 2 ***

🔑 (BB) () Naxos mono 8.110940. Heifetz, Feuermann, Phd. O, Ormandy – BRUCH: Scottish Fantasy; GLAZUNOV: Violin Concerto ()

🔑 Ⓜ  RCA (ADD) SACD 88697 04605-2. Heifetz, Piatigorsky, RCA Victor SO, Wallenstein – J. S. BACH: Double Violin Concerto in D min.; MOZART: Sinfonia concertante ***

Ⓝ () BBC Legends mono 4252-2. Menuhin, Gendron, LSO, Kertesz – BEETHOVEN: Triple Concerto ()

In the live Warner recording conducted by Barenboim, Perlman in collaboration with YoYo Ma, is more volatile, more flexible than in his previous recording with Rostropovich and Haitink. Although in the outer movements the speeds are noticeably faster than before, Perlman and Ma are both freer, broadening more markedly in moments of repose, while the finale dances with extra lightness. Overall a very satisfying account.

The reissue as a 'Great Recording of the Century' of David Oistrakh's first (1959) stereo recording of the Double Concerto with Fournier has claims to be considered the most desirable of all versions, and it is joined by a splendid account of the Tragic Overture which opens the CD compellingly. It has been remastered and the recording is remarkably rich, yet with plenty of detail.

Recorded in December 1939 in very good sound for the period, the Philadelphia account of the Brahms Double Concerto finds Heifetz perfectly matched with Emanuel Feuermann, as near a cellist counterpart to the violin wizard as could ever be found. This is passionate as well as purposeful, if lacking a little in tenderness. The incisiveness of the playing in the most taxing bravura passages makes for exciting results. Generously coupled with Heifetz's pioneering account of the Glazunov concerto and his 1947 version of the Scottish Fantasy, the Naxos issue brings a first-rate transfer.

Although Wallenstein is not as fine an accompanist as Ormandy, he provides a sympathetic backcloth for the 1960 Heifetz–Piatigorsky partnership which, even if it does not quite match Heifetz's earlier version with Feuermann, is still a strong, warm-hearted account with a strikingly brilliant finale. The 1960 recording, although a bit close, has been improved out of all recognition on SACD compared to the harsh quality of the LP, and there is certainly no lack of warmth here.

Menuhin and Gendron are both at their peak in this fine account of the Brahms Double Concerto with Menuhin's intonation, as well as that of Gendron, strong and secure. Speeds are all well-chosen with the finale clean and incisive. A strong and attractive coupling vividly recorded, though only in mono.

(i) Double Concerto. Symphony 2, Op 73

(BB) * LSO Live LSO 0043. (i) Nikolitch, Hugh; LSO, Haitink

Gordon Nikolitch and Tim Hugh, the soloists in Haitink's live LSO version of the Double Concerto, recorded at the Barbican in 2003, are taut and thrusting in the first movement, warm and flowing in the central Andante, and clean and incisive in the finale. The weight and warmth of the sound help to make this the finest of Haitink's Brahms series, with an equally persuasive account of the D major Symphony. There is no exposition repeat in the first movement, but that adds to the tautness and concentration, relaxing in an exceptionally charming account of the third movement, before a strong and steady reading of the finale, exciting yet with no headlong rush at the end.

(i) Double Concerto in A min., Op. 102; (ii) Clarinet Quintet, Op. 115

🔑 * Virgin 3 95147. (i) R. & G. Capuçon, Gustav Mahler Youth O, Myung-Whun Chung; (ii) Meyer, Capuçon Qt

Renaud and Gautier Capuçon are in complete accord in this impassioned and sensitive reading of Brahms's masterpiece and they receive imaginative support from Myung-Whun Chung and the Gustav Mahler Youth Orchestra. This is one of the most eloquent recent versions of the work and its attractions are enhanced by the excellence of the coupling, the pensive and autumnal Clarinet Quintet, marvellously played by Paul Meyer and the Capuçons and two colleagues. A highly satisfying disc.

Hungarian Dances 1–21 (complete)

🔑 ✿ (BB) * Naxos 8.550110; (1–2; 4–21). Budapest SO, Bogár

The Budapest Symphony Orchestra recording of the Brahms Hungarian Dances is sheer delight from beginning to end. The playing has warmth and sparkle, and the natural way in which the music unfolds brings a refreshing feeling of rhythmic freedom. Bogár's rubato is wholly spontaneous. The recording is warm and full yet transparent, with just the right brilliance on top. This is an outright winner among the available versions.

Hungarian Dances 1, 3, 5–6, 17–20

Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 447 434-2. BPO, Karajan – DVOŘÁK: Scherzo capriccioso, etc. **(*)

Karajan's performances have great panache and brilliance and the brightly lit (1959) recording is given added fullness in the current remastering, and the superlative orchestral playing is by turns warmly affectionate and dazzling.

Serenades 1 in D, Op. 11; 2 in A, Op. 16 – see also above

🔑 ✿  Australian Decca Eloquence [ADD] 466 672-2. LSO, Kertész

Kertész's classic performances remain as fresh as ever. Recorded in the mid-1960s, they have an unforced spontaneity, as well as robust vigour when called for. The recording in its new transfer is full and vivid, and this remains very highly recommendable on all counts.

Serenade 1 in D, Op. 11

 Finlandia 3984-25327-2. Royal Stockholm PO, A. Davis – STENHAMMAR: Serenade for orchestra *** ✿

Andrew Davis and the Stockholm Orchestra give a spirited account of Brahms's early masterpiece. Davis's direction is as sympathetic as the players' response. The recording is very good, even if the texture could be more transparent. However, Stenhammar's glorious Serenade is a logical and useful coupling, and this performance is very special.

Symphonies 1–4 (with introductions by the conductor) (DVD Version)

🔑 (*) DG DVD 073 4331(2). VPO, Bernstein (Director: Humphrey Burton)

Bernstein introduces each symphony himself. He is succinct and friendly but manages to say quite a lot about each work, more about Three and Four than about the first two. All four works are played with great warmth, intensity and concentration, and of course complete spontaneity; although some may feel that in the first movement of the Third Symphony, marked Allegro con brio, Bernstein is too measured. This means that, with the exposition repeat, the movement takes nearly 16 minutes. Yet the interpretation is consistent, for tempi are broad throughout and the conclusion is especially effective at the slower tempo. The Fourth Symphony is spacious, but convincingly so. It opens with delectable simplicity, the Andante is deeply expressive in a special Bernstein way, and after the lively Allegro giocoso the finale has tremendous gravitas and sonority, a truly noble Passacaglia, with some superb brass playing. Indeed, the Vienna Philharmonic is on terrific form throughout. Humphrey Burton's video direction is as perceptive as ever, following the orchestral action but never losing sight of Bernstein, who communicates to us as well as to the orchestra.

Academic Festival Overture; Tragic Overture; Serenade 2 in A, Op. 16; Variations on a Theme of Haydn

🔑  DG DVD 073 4354. VPO, Bernstein (Director: Humphrey Burton)

Symphonies 1–4 (CD Versions)

🔑 Ⓑ * DG (ADD) Double 453 097-2 (2). BPO, Karajan

🔑 Ⓑ (*) RCA 74321 20283-2 (2); or 74321 89102-2 (1 & 3); 74321 89101-2 (2 & 4). N. German RSO, Wand

Symphonies 1–4; Academic Festival Overture; Tragic Overture; Variations on a Theme of Haydn; (i) Alto Rhapsody

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 5 62742-2 [5 627602] (3). Philh. O, Klemperer; (i) with Ludwig, Philh. Ch.

Symphonies 1–4; Academic Festival Overture; Tragic Overture; Variations on a Theme of Haydn; (i) Alto Rhapsody; Fragment from Goethe's Harz Journey in Winter; (ii) Gesang der Parzen (Song of the Fates); Nänie; Schicksalslied

🔑  DG 435 683-2 (4). BPO, Abbado; (i) with Lipovšek, Senff Ch.; (ii) Berlin R. Ch. (also available separately with fill-ups No. 1: 431 790-2; No. 2: 427 643-2; No. 3: 429 765-2; No. 4: 435 349-2)

Symphonies 1–4; Tragic Overture; Variations on a Theme by Haydn

() Testament mono SBT 3167 (3). Philh. O, Toscanini

 Telarc CD-80450 (4). SCO, Mackerras

Symphonies 1–4; Academic Festival Overture; Tragic Overture; Variations on a Theme by Haydn. (i) Alto Rhapsody; (ii) German Requiem. (i) Nänie

Ⓝ (*) Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD) 480 0448. SRO, Ansermet with (i) Watts; (ii) SRO Choir & Lausanne Pro Art Ch

Abbado's remains the most successful of the modern, digital cycles and still makes a clear first choice, with playing at once polished and intense, glowingly recorded. The set gains from having a generous collection of imaginatively chosen couplings: the rare, brief, choral works, as well as the usual supplements in the Overtures and Variations.

Anyone wanting Karajan's readings of the four Brahms symphonies should be well satisfied with the DG Double, which offers his recordings made in the late 1970s. The current remastering makes the most of the analogue sound. The playing of the Berlin Philharmonic remains uniquely cultivated: the ensemble is finely polished yet can produce tremendous bravura at times, and there is no lack of warmth. Karajan's interpretations, with lyrical and dramatic elements finely balanced, changed little over the years. A very real bargain, hard to beat. This 1977 set also comes on three discs, including also the Tragic Overture and Variations on a theme of Haydn from 1964 (DG 477 7579), but the two-CD Double makes an obvious first choice.

Leonard Bernstein is a very visually communicative conductor: his intensity and commitment to the music project vividly. The very opening Academic Festival Overture is a joy, especially at the irresistible final climax when he can't help joining in and mouthing the words of Gaudeamus igitur with the exultant orchestra. The other works are relaxed (even the Variations) and Bernstein conveys his pleasure in the delightful lyricism of the Second Serenade. 'I was in perfectly blissful mood. I have rarely written music with such delight,' wrote Brahms to Joachim, and the Vienna Philharmonic wind players reflect that mood. The recording, made in the Musikvereinsaal, is excellent, and the cymbals at the close of the Overture cap the music splendidly.

Klemperer's 1 is unsurpassed; 2 and 3 may be a trifle austere for some tastes, but their emotional power is in no doubt. The combination of gravity and drama in 4 makes a continuing impact on almost all listeners. The Tragic Overture is done with equal strength, and the Alto Rhapsody also shows the conductor at his most masterful and, with Christa Ludwig on fine form, it is a beautifully expressive performance. The Haydn Variations is chosen to open the first disc, made in 1954, and he enters fully into the spirit of the Academic Festival Overture.

The concerts on Testament preserve the two legendary occasions in the autumn of 1952 when, in a Brahms cycle at the Royal Festival Hall, Toscanini conducted the Philharmonia Orchestra on his one visit to London after the war. The Philharmonia consistently bring a moulding of phrase and subtlety of rubato which bear out the regular Toscanini instruction to 'Sing!'. Though mono recordings made in the Royal Festival Hall are inevitably limited in range, the clarity and definition of the EMI recording quickly make one forget such limitations and the intrusive coughing. There are a couple of blips to note, which in context hardly matter. The chorale on trombones just after the great horn theme in the introduction to the finale of 1 brings a series of split notes, and the finale of 4 is disturbed by firecrackers, let off by pranksters. Toscanini was completely unfazed.

Mackerras uses forces of the same size as Brahms would have had at his disposal in Meiningen. The smaller numbers remove some of the thick-textured, overweight quality that the strings can produce in Brahms, while retaining their warmth and richness. The SCO strings are often thinned out to single parts at times, and the effect is – strangely enough – enriching. The set includes the very first version of the slow movement of the First Symphony as it was originally performed at Karlsruhe and Cambridge. There are fascinating differences both in the order of the material and, at times, in the harmony. The playing is exemplary and has no lack of warmth, and the same must be said of the recording. Well worth getting.

Ansermet's Brahms is direct, straight-up-and-down, with virtually no distracting mannerisms. Indeed, this clear-sighted view of these works brings its own rewards. One is compelled by the lusty vigour as much as the sensitive pointing of detail, partly due to the recording, and partly due to Ansermet's acute sense of balance; and he never loses a grip in his readings, choosing steady tempi – never allowing the music to run away with him. Of the orchestral fill-ups, the Tragic Overture is astonishingly good – the opening on the timpani is as arresting as the performance is dramatic and intense. The Variations on a Theme by Haydn suffers from some less than exact intonation, especially from the woodwind, but the Academic Festival Overture comes off very well. Of the choral items, both Nänie and Rhapsody for Alto, Chorus and Orchestra are very good indeed. Both are sung by Helen Watts, and her sensitive account of the more famous work is excellent. The German Requiem is less successful. Here Ansermet's 'straight' approach lacks a spiritual quality, not quite made up for by the beautiful quality of the recorded sound, which throughout these four CDs is of astonishingly good quality.

Symphonies 1 in C min., 2 in D, Op. 73 (DVD versions)

Ⓝ 🔑 * Sony DVD 88697202419. Berlin PO, Karajan

🔑  Arthaus DVD 101243. West German RSO, Cologne, Bychkov (V/D: Hans Hadulla)

What amazing sound Karajan draws from his wonderful orchestra! Tonally luxuriant with seamless phrasing and sheer unanimity of purpose, this partnership was peerless. Koussevitzky and Boston, Ormandy and Philadelphia were no less remarkable but even they did not have the subtlety of colour and phrasing that is encountered here. If the sonority is unique, watching Karajan mould the phrasing enhances its impact. The performances were recorded at the Philharmonie in 1986 and 87.

Bychkov never tries to make points or indulge in any interpretative idiosyncrasies. He gives us both symphonies pure and simple, shaping detail sensitively and keeping a firm grip on the flow of the music. Camerawork is unfussy and clearly directed, both in the fine and warm studio acoustic and in the intelligent documentary about the conductor that comes as a bonus.

Symphony 1 in C min., Op. 68 (DVD Version)

Ⓝ ((*)) EMI DVD 50677290. Orch Nat. de l'ORTF, Munch (with CHABRIER: Bourrée Fantasque; FAURÉ: Pelléas suite) – RAVEL: Daphnis et Chloé Suite 2 ***

A Brahms First with a difference from EMI: there is no first movement! An extensive search has failed to bring to light the whole performance given in Tokyo in 1966 on a Japanese tour by the Orchestre National de la Radio-Television Française but the orchestra responds so wonderfully to Munch's inspiring and endearing direction that its appearance on DVD is to be greatly welcomed. He gets great depth of meaning and warmth from the orchestra which was on peak form at this period.

Symphony 1 in C min., Op. 68 (CD Versions)

🔑 Ⓜ * DG (ADD) 447 408-2. BPO, Karajan – SCHUMANN: Symphony 1 ****

Ⓝ  BBC Legends BBCL 4251-2 LPO, Tennstedt – SCHUMANN: Piano Concerto **(*)

Ⓝ (BB) () Naxos 8.111298 Concertg. O, Karajan (with BEETHOVEN: Leonore Overture 3; RICHARD STRAUSS: Salome: Dance of the Seven Veils)

Symphony 1 in C min; Academic Festival Overture; Tragic Overture

(BB)  Naxos 8.557428. LPO, Alsop

Symphony 1; Tragic Overture; (i) Alto Rhapsody

🔑 ❁ Ⓜ * EMI (ADD) 5 67029-2. Philh. O, Klemperer, (i) with Ludwig, Philh. Ch.

Klemperer's 1956–7 Kingsway Hall recording remains among the greatest performances this symphony has ever received on disc. This is Klemperer at his very finest, and his reading remains unique for its authority and power, supported by consistently superb Philharmonia playing. The sound is both clear and full-bodied. The Alto Rhapsody also shows him at his most masterful and Ludwig on fine form: it is a beautifully expressive performance.

Karajan's 1964 recording of Brahms's First Symphony (the conductor's third version of five seems by general consensus to be regarded as his finest. The control of tension in the first movement is masterly, the orchestral playing is of superlative quality and the result is very powerful, with the finale a fitting culmination. The remastering has restored the original, full, well-balanced, analogue sound, with plenty of weight in the bass. The coupling with Schumann's First Symphony makes this a very desirable record indeed.

Recorded live at the Royal Festival Hall by the BBC in May 1990, Tennstedt's reading of the Brahms First Symphony could hardly be more persuasive. He was of the school which allows a fair degree of freedom over tempo, but in this live performance speed changes are all very convincing. After the powerful account of the first movement, the Andante taken at a slow speed and the third movement are warmly relaxed with radiant playing by the LPO strings. The performance culminates in a ripely convincing performance with glorious playing from the LPO horns. The recording is on the dry side with timpani satisfyingly prominent.

This Naxos Concertgebouw record documents a visit to Amsterdam by Karajan in September 1943 at the height of the Nazi occupation of the Netherlands. Mengelberg was still the Concertgebouw's chief conductor but Karajan's personality (his feeling for line and his lyrical intensity) comes through and leaves a strong impression. The Concertgebouw sounds very vivid for the period and the engineers get imposing results. The Dance of the Seven Veils comes off very well indeed in this concert, a portent of Karajan's later recording of the opera.

Marin Alsop conducts the LPO in a strong, thrusting performance of the First Symphony, very well recorded and persuasively paced. After the power of the first movement Alsop brings out the tenderness of the following Andante and the lyrical freedom of the third movement, before unleashing more power in the finale. Only her slowing for the two big statements of the great march theme fails to sound entirely convincing. The two overtures are just as taut and fresh. An excellent start to a projected Brahms cycle.

Symphony 2 in D, Op. 73

🔑 Ⓜ * Cala CACD 0531. Nat. PO, Stokowski – MENDELSSOHN: Symphony 4 ****

Ⓜ () BBC mono BBCL 4099-2. RPO, Beecham – BEETHOVEN: Symphony 2 ()

() Testament mono SBT 1015. BBC SO, Toscanini – MENDELSSOHN: Midsummer Night's Dream: excerpt; ROSSINI: Semiramide: Overture ()

Symphony 2; Hungarian Dances 1, 3, 10, 17–21

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.557429. LPO, Alsop

Symphony 2; (i) Alto Rhapsody

Ⓝ  Solo Deo Gloria SDG 703. ORR, Gardiner with (i) Stutzmann, Monteverdi Choir (with SCHUBERT: An Schwager Kronos; Gesang der Geister über den Wassern; Gruppe aus dem Tyartarus (all arr. BRAHMS))

Stokowski's recording of the D major Symphony was one of the last he made, in London in 1978. It is a performance of warmth and power and, for all his free rubato, the effect is totally spontaneous, with the symphonic structure unimpaired, first-movement exposition repeat included. The concert-hall acoustic adds richness and breadth to the sound and the reading itself grips the listener throughout; after the reprise of the second subject of the finale, the brass ring out to make a thrilling conclusion. The CD transfer is first class and, with its equally impressive Mendelssohn coupling, this is one of Stokowski's very finest later recordings.

John Eliot Gardiner, recorded live, in addition to the Alto Rhapsody has three Schubert items with a special relevance. The Gesang der Geister uses forces very similarly to the Alto

Rhapsody plus two motets for which Brahms did arrangements for orchestra. The Second Symphony comes in a powerful reading with all the attributes of a period-style account – notably little vibrato in the strings, steady speeds and a big dynamic range. Each movement is strongly characterized, with the finale leading to a thrilling coda which enters on a shattering fortissimo. The acoustic of the Salle Pleyel in Paris helps to intensify this impact. The Alto Rhapsody brings rich, creamy singing from Natalie Stutzmann, as does the Schubert Gesang der Geister. An outstanding issue, for anyone wanting period-style in Brahms – Gardiner at his most electrifying.

The radio recording of Brahms's Second Symphony, always a favourite work with Beecham, comes from an Edinburgh Festival performance given in August 1956 which has become legendary. Though the dry Usher Hall acoustic and the bronchial audience prevent it from matching in sound Beecham's stereo recording for EMI (currently withdrawn), the incandescence of the performance makes it magnetic, at once warm and impulsive in the first movement, richly expressive in the second and elegant in the third, leading to the fieriest, most biting account of the finale, with a marked stringendo in the coda and wild cheering from the audience before the last chord has ended. The excitement of the event is vividly caught despite the limited sound.

Toscanini's account with the BBC Symphony Orchestra on Testament, recorded in 1938, will come as a revelation to those who view the legendary Italian as a hard-driving, demonic maestro. Tempi are relaxed, the first movement is unhurried and the mood is sunny and smiling. There is none of the hard-driven momentum and over-drilled intensity that marked his final, NBC version. The sound calls for tolerance, but the playing is worth it.

In its glowing warmth Marin Alsop's Brahms Second makes a strong contrast with her account of the First. She conveys her obvious affection for the work in the way she lyricizes the lower strings, with the central movements particularly mellow. The oboe tune in the Allegretto grazioso is delicate (Beecham used to do it that way). But the finale brings a satisfying conclusion. The Hungarian Dances (in varied orchestrations) offer an attractive bonus. But there would have been room to combine this with 3.

Symphonies 2–3

🔑 * Pentatone Surround Sound SACD PTC 5186 308. Pittsburgh SO, Janowski

🔑  Simax PSC 1204. Oslo PO, Jansons

🔑 Ⓜ  Sony (ADD) 074646447123. Columbia SO, Walter

An outstanding coupling in every respect on Pentatone, and for those with surround sound the very fine recording is very much in the demonstration bracket. Janowski conducts both works with a strong yet warmly lyrical forward thrust, observing both first-movement exposition repeats, then relaxing warmly for the central movements and generating plenty of impetus in the finales, the bold recapitulation of each second subject a highlight. The playing of the Pittsburgh Orchestra reveals a natural feeling for Brahms and they respond to the conductor's flexibility with impressive spontaneity. A first-class recommendation in every way.

Jansons draws incandescent playing from his Oslo Philharmonic in outstanding versions of both symphonies. The refinement of the playing and the subtlety of Jansons's dynamic shading go with an approach which is at once direct and refreshing, with generally steady speeds yet warmly expressive on detail. Whereas in 3 Jansons observes the exposition repeat in the first movement, in 2 he omits it, a justifiable decision when it is very much a question of proportion. These now stand among the very finest versions of both symphonies, a formidable addition to the Simax catalogue, recorded in full, well-detailed sound.

The Bruno Walter coupling of the Second and Third Symphonies is very recommendable indeed. Walter's performance of the Second is wonderfully sympathetic, with an inevitability, a rightness which makes it hard to concentrate on the interpretation as such, so cogent is the musical argument. Walter's pacing of the Third is admirable, and the vigour and sense of joy which imbue the opening of the first movement (exposition repeat included) dominate throughout, with the second subject eased in with wonderful naturalness.

Symphonies 2 & 4 (DVD Version)

Ⓝ (*) Medici Arts DVD 2072138 Boston SO, Bernstein (V/D Robert Englander)

Returning to Tanglewood in the summer of 1972 Bernstein had a 'particularly vivid memory of Koussevitzky' – his mentor – 'conducting Brahms' and so he made these two recordings. Both performances are warmly Brahmsian, beautifully paced and thrillingly alive. The reprise of the secondary theme in the finale of the Second Symphony has an unforgettable passionate warmth, and the string playing in the Andante of the Fourth is Elysian in its combination of purity and rapture. The snag is the recording. The Tanglewood acoustics do not match those of Symphony Hall, Boston and the upper strings sound relatively thin. Glorious performances nevertheless.

Symphonies 2 & 4 (CD Versions)

Ⓝ *() Signum SIGCD 132 (2) Philh. O, Dohnányi

Dohnányi's rare coupling, although very well played, is let down by a disappointingly low-key reading of the Second Symphony which only fully springs to life in the surging finale. The Fourth is another matter, gripping in its lyrical simplicity, with a memorable closing passacaglia, and an excellent recording made in the Queen Elizabeth Hall.

Symphony 3 in F, Op. 90

() Testament mono SBT 1173. Philh. O, Cantelli – MENDELSSOHN: Symphony 4 ()

Symphony 3; Variations on a Theme by Haydn

BB  Naxos 8.557430. LPO, Alsop

Cantelli's 1955 version of Brahms's Third, justly famous in the mono LP era, is among the warmest, most glowing accounts ever put on disc, with Dennis Brain's glorious horn-playing, ripely recorded, crowning the whole incandescent performance. Sadly, in mono, it has been available only rarely in the years since 1955, making this superbly transferred reissue very welcome, particularly when the coupling is an equally unforgettable, previously unissued version of the Mendelssohn.

Marin Alsop in Brahms takes a romantic view in her expressive phrasing, well supported by the LPO, but then she tends to favour steady speeds, getting the best of both worlds. Indeed, tempi are perfectly chosen, with the second movement taken at a flowing Andante. Similar qualities extend to her fine reading of the Haydn Variations, well recorded, the Symphony in the Blackheath Concert Halls, the Variations in the Watford Colosseum.

Symphonies 3–4 (DVD version)

 Arthaus Musik DVD 101245. West German RSO, Bychkov

Bychkov's performances have concentration, imagination and passion to commend them, along with a finely disciplined orchestral response. These are readings of some stature and can be mentioned in the same breath as the classic Karajan and Jochum sets, even if the WDR Orchestra is not quite in the Berlin class. The DVD also includes documentaries about Bychkov and the Cologne Orchestra.

Symphony 4 in E min., Op. 98 (DVD version)

(*) DG DVD 073 4017. Bav. State O, Carlos Kleiber (Producer Harald Gerick) (with BEETHOVEN: Overture Coriolan ) – MOZART: Symphony 33 **(*)

Carlos Kleiber's DVD version is a performance of some distinction, even if the interpretation does not match his earlier, VPO account. In Munich in 1996, while Kleiber did not exert quite the overall grip which made his VPO CD version so memorable a decade earlier, the closing Passacaglia still makes an impressive and satisfying finale. The concert opens with a superbly dramatic account of Beethoven's Coriolan Overture; if the symphony had sustained this degree of tension, it would have been a world-beater.

Symphony 4 in E min., Op. 98 (CD versions)

🔑 Ⓑ  DG (ADD/DDD) 477 5324. VPO, Carlos Kleiber – SCHUBERT: Symphony 8 (Unfinished) (*); WAGNER: Tristan und Isolde: Act III excerpts ***

🔑  Simax PSC 1205. Oslo PO, Jansons – JOACHIM: Overture: Heinrich IV ***

*() BBC BBCL (ADD) 4205-2. New Philh. O, Stokowski (with KLEMPERER: Merry Waltz; NOVÁČEK: Perpetuum mobile) – RAVEL: Rapsodie espagnole; VAUGHAN WILLIAMS: Tallis Fantasia **(*)

Symphony 4 in E min.; Hungarian Dances 2; 4–9

(BB)  Naxos 8.570233. LPO, Alsop

Carlos Kleiber's famous CD version is a performance of real stature and much strength, with the attention to detail one would expect from this great conductor. A gripping and compelling performance, at the opposite end of the scale from Walter's coaxingly lyrical approach. DG have successfully remastered the 1981 sound, which now has more than sufficient weight in the bass and more bloom than before. The violins under pressure still sound somewhat shrill at fortissimo, but this adds to the edge of the performance, and there is room for the strings to expand in the Andante. The finale has tremendous thrust. With its generous new couplings, this carries the strongest recommendation.

Jansons with the Oslo Philharmonic directs a performance which underlines the contrasts between the first two movements, predominantly lyrical and reflective, and the last two, with their sharper impact. As in the rest of Jansons's Brahms series, the playing is polished and refined, the more magnetic for being recorded live. The recording beautifully captures the delicacy of the pianissimo playing of the strings, while offering ample warmth and power in the last two movements. The Joachim overture, Heinrich IV, finer than the earlier Hamlet Overture, makes an apt if not very generous bonus, when it was so admired by Brahms.

Recorded in vivid sound in the Blackheath Concert Hall, with vivid separation heightening the impact of Marin Alsop's clear and direct interpretation, this stands high among recent recordings of the Fourth Symphony, if not perhaps a first choice. However, the bonus Hungarian Dances come in new arrangements by Peter Breiner that are very successful indeed.

One only has to hear the glowing strings to know that Stokowski's magic is in operation in this 1974 performance. This account is thrusting yet totally unforced, and with the tension maintained throughout. The sound is more than acceptable for a live Royal Albert Hall performance. Klemperer's Merry Waltz is captivating (and very merry here indeed!) and the rare Perpetuum mobile of Nováček makes a brilliant and entertaining bonus.

(i) Variations on a Theme of Haydn; (ii) Variations & Fugue on a Theme by Handel, Op. 24 (arr. Rubbra)

 Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD/DDD) 467 608-2. (i) VPO, Kertész; (ii) Cleveland O, Ashkenazy – DVOŘÁK: Symphonic Variations ***

Rubbra's orchestration of the Handel Variations with a vivid orchestral palette becomes ever more imaginative as it goes along; all 25 variations are a delight. Ashkenazy's performance is superb and the digital recording excellent. The more familiar Haydn Variations is warmly recorded and receives a strongly affecting performance under István Kertész.

COMPLETE CHAMBER MUSIC

(i) Cello Sonatas 1–2; (ii; iii) Clarinet Trio, Op. 114; (iv; v) Clarinet Quintet, Op. 115; (iv; v) Clarinet Sonatas 1–2, Op. 120/1–2; (vi) Piano Quartets 1–3; (vii; viii) Piano Quintet, Op. 34; (iii; ix) Horn Trio, Op. 40; (iii) Piano Trios 1–3; (viii) String Quartets 1–3; (x) String Quintets 1–2; String Sextets 1–2; (xi) Viola Sonatas 1–2, Op. 120/1–2; (xii) Violin Sonatas 1–3; (xiii) F. A. E. Sonata: Scherzo

Ⓝ (BB)  Hyp. CDS 44331/42 (12) (i) Isserlis, Evans; (ii) Hosford; (iii) Florestan Trio; (iv) Thea King; (v) Gabrieli Qt; (v) Benson; (vi) Hamelin, Leopold String Trio; (vii) Lane; (viii) New Budapest Qt.; (ix) Stirling; (x) Rafael Ens.; (xi) Power, Crawford-Phillips; (xii) Osostowicz, Tomez; (xiii) with Crawford-Phillips (piano) instead of Tomez

Most of these performances have been praised by us over the years with the contributions of Isserlis, the Florestan Trio, the Rafael Ensemble, Osostowiz and Tomez standing out. A high recording standard throughout ensures that this set can be strongly recommended.

Cello Sonata 1 in E min., Op. 38

() Testament mono SBT 2158. Piatigorsky, Rubinstein – BEETHOVEN: Cello Sonatas; WEBER: Sonata in A ()

Piatigorsky's patrician account of the E minor Sonata with Artur Rubinstein was recorded in Paris in the summer of 1936. It has been out of the catalogue for nearly half a century, and Testament has put matters right with this exemplary transfer.

Cello Sonatas 1 in E min., Op. 38; 2 in F, Op. 99

🔑 * DG 410 510-2. Rostropovich, Serkin

🔑  Hyp. CDA 67529. Isserlis, Hough (with DVOŘÁK: Waldesruhe; Rondo in G min.; SUK: Ballade in D min.; Serenade in A, Op. 3/2 (*))

🔑  Channel CCS 5493. Wispelwey, Komen

The partnership of the wild, inspirational Russian cellist and the veteran Brahmsian, Serkin, on DG is a challenging one. It proves an outstanding success, with inspiration mutually enhanced, whether in the lyricism of Op. 38 or the heroic energy of Op. 99. Good if close recording.

Steven Isserlis's impassioned yet aristocratic accounts are made in a fine partnership with Stephen Hough. This is natural playing, truthful and unadorned, which belongs among the finest. The two Sonatas are separated by some elegantly played Dvořák and Suk miniatures which are a real bonus.

The Dutch partnership, Pieter Wispelwey and Paul Komen, offers something rather different. The cellist plays a 19th-century Bohemian cello and the pianist a Viennese period-instrument: thus theirs is the only version of the sonatas to approximate to the sound Brahms himself might have heard. There is nothing anaemic or academic about their playing, and no sense of scholarly inhibition. These are full-blooded performances, vivid in feeling and passionate, at no time wanting in eloquence.

Clarinet Quintet in B min., Op. 115

🔑  DG 459 641-2. Shifrin, Emerson Qt – MOZART: Clarinet Quintet ***

🔑 (BB)  Warner Apex 0927 44350-2. Leister, Berlin Soloists – MOZART: Clarinet Quintet ***

() Testament mono SBT 1381. B. Walton, L. Music Group – MOZART: Clarinet Concerto ***

(i) Clarinet Quintet; (ii) Clarinet Sonata 2

Ⓜ  Chan. 6522. Hilton, (i) Lindsay Qt; (ii) Frankl

(i) Clarinet Quintet; (ii) Clarinet Trio in A min.

🔑  Hyp. CDA 66107. King, (i) Gabrieli Qt; (ii) Georgian, Benson (piano)

 MDG 307 079-2. (i) Leister; Leipzig Qt

(i) Clarinet Quintet; (ii) String Quintet 2 in G, Op. 111

Ⓑ  HM HMA 1951349. (i) Portal; (ii) Caussé; Melos Qt

David Shifrin's recording of the Brahms Quintet is outstandingly fine. He establishes a natural partnership with the Emersons; the outer movements, while warmly lyrical, are much more characterful and positive than in his earlier version. Yet the Adagio achieves a gentle, ruminative, almost improvisational quality. The recording is admirably balanced and the equally recommendable Mozart coupling has an appealing simplicity.

Thea King and the Gabrieli Quartet give a radiantly beautiful performance of the Clarinet Quintet, as fine as any put on record, expressive and spontaneous-sounding, with natural ebb and flow of tension as in a live performance. The recording of the strings is on the bright side, very vivid and real.

On Apex, Karl Leister's easy-going lyricism does not mean that there is not a firm overall grip on the proceedings, yet in the Elysian slow movement he seems to be tenderly and thoughtfully improvising, and his relaxed warmth is captivating. His supporting Berlin Soloists match his playing serenely and they are well balanced and beautifully recorded. A lovely performance, well matched by the Mozart coupling – and this CD is very inexpensive.

Leister's later performance with the Leipzig Quartet is second to none. The quartet and its distinguished soloist produce impressive results in what is surely Brahms's most serene utterance, and the A minor Quartet also receives an authoritative and musical performance. For those wanting this particular coupling, this disc can certainly be recommended.

Janet Hilton's essentially mellow performance of the Clarinet Quintet, with the Lindsay Quartet playing with pleasing warmth and refinement, has a distinct individuality. Her lilting syncopations in the third movement are delightful. Hilton's partnership with Peter Frankl in the E flat Clarinet Sonata is rather less idiosyncratic and individual; nevertheless, this performance offers considerable artistic rewards.

The warm resonance of the recording gives an almost orchestral richness of timbre to the Melos group, joined by Gérard Caussé, yet they open the Adagio of Op. 111 (which comes first on the disc) with an exquisite delicacy of texture and feeling. The sound in the Clarinet Quintet is equally beguiling and Michel Portal matches the strings with his gently luscious tone in the Clarinet Quintet, with the beautiful slow movement dreamily ruminative and the theme-and-variations finale hardly less delightful. This coupling is highly recommendable in all respects.

Bernard Walton's account of the Quintet is one of the most thoughtful and deeply felt in the catalogue. It emanates from a BBC studio broadcast that was repeated in the year of this artist's death and is a poignant reminder of his stature.

Clarinet Sonatas 1 in F min.; 2 in E flat, Op. 120/1–2

🔑 * Chan. 8563. de Peyer, Pryor

🔑 (BB)  EMI Encore 3 55674-2. de Peyer, Barenboim – BEETHOVEN: Clarinet Trio ***

Superb performances from Gervase de Peyer and Gwenneth Pryor on Chandos, commanding, aristocratic, warm and full of subtleties of colour and detail, but the earlier EMI versions are eminently satisfying performances which stand up well against the competition, especially at bargain price. The 1967 recordings are particularly good and the Beethoven Clarinet Trio is added as a splendid bonus.

Clarinet Sonatas 1–2; (i) Clarinet Trio in A min. Op. 114

 BIS CD/SACD 1353. Fröst, Pöntinen, (i) with Torleif Thedéen.

The young Swedish clarinettist Martin Fröst in the Trio tends to favour speeds on the fast side so that the dramatic bite and purposeful thrust of the outer movements are enhanced. Though the cellist Torleif Thedéen matches the impressive tonal range of Fröst, the pianist Roland Pöntinen is more recessive, largely a question of the recording balance. The backward balance for the piano is even more noticeable in the two sonatas, but Fröst's dedicated playing makes the performances magnetic and the recorded sound is wonderfully lifelike and natural.

(i) Clarinet Sonatas 1–2; (ii) String Quartets 1–3

Ⓑ  Ph. (ADD) Duo 456 320-2 (2). (i) Pieterson, H. Menuhin; (ii) Italian Qt

The Clarinet Sonatas are very well played by George Pieterson and Hephzibah Menuhin, with plenty of light and shade. Vivid recording from 1980 adds to the feeling of boldness. The three String Quartets are marvellously played by the Quartetto Italiano, and the CD transfers are admirably truthful in timbre and balance.

(i) Clarinet Trio, Op. 114; (ii) Horn Trio, Op. 40

(BB)  Warner Apex 2564 61792-2. (i) Portal; Lodeon; (i; ii) Dalberto; (ii) Del Vescovo, Amoyal

A persuasively warm performance of the Clarinet Trio from Michel Portal, whose tone is rich and succulent, Frédéric Lodeon and Michel Dalberto, recorded in a suitably resonant, Brahmsian acoustic. It is joined to an equally fine – if not even finer – account of the Horn Trio from the full-timbred Pierre Del Vescovo, a first-class horn player, and the ever-sensitive Pierre Amoyal. The recording, again in a warm acoustic, is even more vivid and clear. A first-class bargain, if you want both works.

(i) Clarinet Trio; (ii) Horn Trio. Piano Trios 1–3

🔑 * Hyp. CDA 67251/2. Florestan Trio, with (i) Hosford; (ii) Stirling

(i) Clarinet Trio; (ii) Horn Trio; (iii) Piano Trios 1–4

🔑 Ⓑ  Ph. (ADD) Duo 438 365-2 (2). (i) Pieterson; (ii) Orval, Grumiaux, Sebök; (i; iii) Beaux Arts Trio

The Florestan set is among the finest since the Beaux Arts' comparable grouping, in terms of both performance and recording. There is a freshness and spontaneity that rekindles one's own enthusiasm for this music, and such is its dedication that one is left marvelling at the richness and quality of Brahms's inventive resource. The same must be said of the Horn Trio and the late A minor Clarinet Trio. The recorded sound is very natural and lifelike and brings the players into your living room.

George Pieterson is a first-rate artist and his account of the Clarinet Trio with members of the Beaux Arts group offers masterly playing from all three participants. The balance in the Horn Trio is perhaps the most successful on record. The fine horn player, Francis Orval, achieves this without any loss of personality in his playing. As for the Piano Trios, the performances are splendid, with strongly paced, dramatic allegros, consistently alert and thoughtful, and with sensitive playing in slow movements. The sound is first class. The CD transfer has brightened the top a little, but not excessively.

Horn Trio in E flat, Op. 40 (see also above)

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.557471. W. Tomboeck, Inui, J. Tomboeck – BEETHOVEN: Horn Sonata; SCHUBERT: Auf dem Strom; SCHUMANN: Adagio and Allegro in A flat ***

Ⓝ  Tudor TUDOR 771 Tuckwell, Langbein, M. Jones (with BANKS: Horn Trio; KOECHLIN: 4 Petites Pièces ***)

Wolfgang Tomboeck, first horn in the Vienna Philharmonic since 1980, here in all four works demonstrates what a fine artist he is, producing the ripest tones on the Vienna horn. The galloping rhythms of the second and fourth movements of the Brahms have an infectious brilliance and swagger. With Tomboeck's son, Johannes, playing the violin, they have a lift and energy to make some rival versions seem cool, while the Andante first movement is warm and relaxed, freely expressive in a very Viennese way.

Barry Tuckwell's new Tudor recording of the Brahms Horn Trio now replaces his earlier 1968 version with Perlman and Ashkenazy (Decca 475 8246) which, fine as it is, is let down by the poorly focused ADD transfer to CD. The new performance is equally fine, very realistically recorded and balanced in an ideal acoustic. The Banks Trio is a serial work of some distinction, if not melodically memorable; but it could not be better played, and the Four Pieces of Koechlin are quite delightful – a real find.

(i) Horn Trio in E flat; (ii) Piano Quintet in F min., Op. 34

Ⓜ  CRD 3489. Nash Ens. (members); (i) Lloyd; (ii) Brown

The Nash Ensemble's playing is refreshingly unforced, with the Quintet underpinned firmly by the incisive playing of the pianist, Ian Brown. In the Horn Trio Frank Lloyd produces an exceptionally rich tone and helps the group to give a raptly beautiful account of the Adagio; the galloping finale is then performed with joyful panache. Tempos are well chosen and there is great naturalness of phrasing. These players convey the sense of music-making in the home rather than the concert hall, and they have lively, faithfully recorded sound in their favour.

(i-iii) Horn Trio in E flat; (ii-iii) Violin Sonata 1, Op. 78; (iii) 7 Fantasias, Op.116

Ⓝ 🔑 * HMI HMC 90 1981 (i) van der Zwart; (ii) Faust; (iii) Melnikov

Brahms specifically requested that his Horn Trio be played using a natural Waldhorn without valves, and here for the first time we have an inspired performance in which Teunis van der Zwart uses a natural horn from Lorenz, built in 1845. The result is a triumph. It is superbly played by all concerned and the highly individual horn timbre is very telling throughout the register. This is a key performance if ever there was one, and the lovely G major Violin Sonata is also played with much warmth by Isabelle Faust. Alexander Melnikov is a fine partner, although the piano is rather more forwardly balanced than in the Horn Trio and this adds a touch of hardness to the timbre both in the Sonata and Fantasias which are also very enjoyable.

(i) Piano Quartets 1–3. Piano Trio in A, Op. posth.

🔑 Ⓑ  Ph. (ADD) Duo 454 017-2 (2). Beaux Arts Trio, (i) with Trampler

The Beaux Arts set of Piano Quartets is self-recommending at Duo price, with the A major Piano Trio thrown in as a bonus. Thoughtful, sensitive playing in slow movements, lively tempi in allegros, characteristic musicianship plus spontaneity combine to make these recordings highly recommendable throughout.

Piano Quartets 1 in G min., Op. 25; 2 in A, Op. 26; 3 C min., Op. 60

Ⓝ Ⓑ  Virgin Classics 519320 (2). Renaud & Gautier Capuçon, Caussé, Angelich

The Capuçons enjoy the support and patronage of Martha Argerich and their set of the Brahms Piano Quartets with the violist Gérard Caussé and the pianist Nicholas Angelich more than rewards her judgement. These are fresh and interesting performances that hold the listener from first to last, and generate enthusiasm for this magnificent repertoire. However unlike the Beaux Arts they do not include the Op. posth. Piano trio.

Piano Quartets 1 in G min., Op. 25; 3 C min., Op. 60

Ⓝ  Onyx Classics ONYX4029. Nash Ens

Ⓝ  Marquis 81377 Xiayin Wang, Amity Players

The discs from the Nash and Amity Players are recommendable with the considerable proviso that they both omit the Second A major Quartet. The Nash certainly give magisterial accounts of the other two and are accorded sound of comparable quality. Their musicianship and fine sense of colour are much in evidence. Indeed these belong among the very best versions in the catalogue.

An outstanding coupling too from the Canadian Amity Players. Their pianist, Xiayin Wang, although standing out in the virtuosity of the Hungarian finale of No. 1 (and elsewhere), proves a highly musical partner, well integrated into the ensemble. Both performances have a fluent spontaneity, and an enjoyable Brahmsian impetus, but No. 3 is particularly successful in its warmth and vividness, with a truly memorable Andante. Excellent recording. (The CD is available via www.marquisclassics.com).

(i) Piano Quartet 1. 4 Ballades, Op. 10

Ⓜ (*) DG (ADD) 447 407-2. Gilels; (i) with Amadeus Qt

Gilels is in impressive form, and most listeners will respond to the withdrawn delicacy of the Scherzo and the gypsy fire of the finale. The slow movement is perhaps somewhat wanting in ardour, and the Amadeus do not sound as committed or as fresh as their keyboard partner. The DG recording is well balanced and sounds very natural in its new transfer. Moreover, in the Ballades Gilels offers artistry of an order that silences criticism.

Piano Quintet in F min., Op. 34

* Virgin Classics 3 951413-2. Andsnes, Artemis Qt – SCHUMANN: Piano Quintet ****

🔑  BBC (ADD) BBCL 4009-2 (2). Curzon, Amadeus Qt – SCHUBERT: Trout Quintet ***

🔑 Ⓜ  MDG 307 1218-2. Staier (early piano), Leipzig Qt

(BB)  Naxos 8.550406. Jandó, Kodály Qt – SCHUMANN: Piano Quintet ***

A magisterial and compelling account of this great work from Andsnes and the Artemis Quartet that is unlikely to be surpassed. A very natural and vivid recording. A first recommendation.

Clifford Curzon is captured at his most spontaneously expressive in his live performance, recorded at the Royal Festival Hall in 1974. Similarly the Amadeus Quartet are at their most compelling. Ensemble may not be quite as polished as in a studio performance, but the warmth and power are ample compensation, and the bonus disc of Schubert's Trout Quintet makes a very attractive package.

The Leipzig Quartet has an almost unrivalled reputation in the Viennese classical repertoire, and Andreas Staier is unfailingly illuminating and sensitive. He plays a 1901 Steinway which is much lighter in colour and body than the modern concert grand. This version demands to be heard and, though there is no fill-up, it is competitively positioned at mid-price and deserves a strong recommendation. Natural recorded sound.

The fine Naxos account has a great deal going for it, even though it does not include the first-movement exposition repeat. The playing is boldly spontaneous and has plenty of fire and expressive feeling. The opening of the finale also has mystery; overall, with full-bodied recording and plenty of presence, this makes a strong impression. It is certainly a bargain.

(i) Piano Quintet in F min., Op. 34. String Quartets 1–3

 DG 477 6458 (2). Emerson Qt, (i) with Fleisher

Ⓝ (*) HM 198 7074/5 (i) Mehner; Casals Qt

We have sometimes complained that the Emerson Quartet, for all the precision and technical finish of their playing, sometimes seem to concentrate on virtuosity and projection rather than seeking the music's inner core. However, that is not so with their Brahms recordings. Perhaps Leon Fleisher has had an influence in the Piano Quintet for, apart from the sparkling brilliance of the Scherzo, the performance is relatively intimate. The String Quartets are marvellously polished, but have delicacy and deeper feeling too, with No. 3, Op. 67, outstandingly fine. The recording is clear and present and the set is certainly recommendable on its own terms.

The Casals Quartet play with an appealing combination of warmth and refinement, playing which is never heavy-handed, and this is carried through into their account of the Piano Quintet where they are joined by Claudio Mehner, who is an impressive Brahmsian. They are very well recorded. Not a first choice, perhaps, but an enjoyable one.

(i) Piano Quintet in F min., Op. 34. String Quartet 2 in A min., Op. 51/2

* Hyp. CDA 67551. Takács Qt, (i) with Hough

We really are spoilt for choice in this repertoire: Stephen Hough and the Takács are hardly less impressive than Andsnes and the Artemis. They give a superb performance of the Quintet, beautifully balanced, with the piano not too far forward. The first movement is powerfully presented, with Stephen Hough playing magnetically, and with the slow movement taken steadily. Those wanting the glorious A minor Quartet rather than the Schumann need not hesitate, and the recorded quality is extremely fine.

Piano Trio 1, Op. 8

 Daphne DAPHNE 1026. Trio Poseidon – HAYDN: Piano Trio 32; IRELAND: Phantasie ***

Formed in 2002, the Trio Poseidon make an excellent, responsive team, modifying their playing to suit the varying needs of these three very different composers. The Brahms brings warmth and passion in the playing, with no hint at all of self-indulgence and with each player responding to the others' individual phrasing. Above all, one relishes the way that Brahms in this early work (which he revised late in life) creates one superb theme after another, with the second-movement Scherzo rather like a witty dance of death and the third-movement Adagio played with totally sustained concentration, and the finale surging infectiously onwards.

Piano Trios 1 in B, Op. 8; 2 in C, Op. 87; 3 in C min., Op. 101; 4 in A, Op. posth.

Ⓝ Ⓑ  Decca 478 0338 (2) Beaux Arts Trio

🔑 (BB)  Warner Apex 2564 61259-2 (1 & 2); 2564 61690-2 (3 & 4). Trio Fontenay

🔑 Ⓑ  Double Decca (ADD) 448 092-2 (2). Katchen, with (i–ii) Starker; (i; iii) Suk (with Cello Sonata 2; F.A.E. Sonata: Scherzo)

The digital recordings by the Beaux Arts Trio of the Brahms Piano Trios brought the group onto the Decca label, and they bring us close to the artists. The playing is always highly vital and sensitive. There is splendid, finely projected sense of line and the delicate, sensitive playing of Menahem Pressler is always a delight. Now the disc returns to the catalogue as one of the Originals.

Powerful, spontaneous playing with a real Brahmsian spirit, given excellent, modern recording, puts these admirable performances by the Trio Fontenay (now at budget price) at the top of the list.

The Katchen/Suk/Starker performances of the first two Piano Trios are warm, strong and characterful, while the tough C minor Trio and the epic, thrustful Cello Sonata bring a comparably spontaneous response. If the sound of the CD transfers is a little limited in the upper range, the ear is grateful that no artificial brightening has been applied, for it provides a real Brahmsian amplitude which is very satisfying. Highly recommended.

Piano Trio 3 in C min., Op. 101

Ⓝ (*) DUX 0626. Trio Cracovia – BEETHOVEN: Piano Trio Op 1/3 (*); RACHMANINOV: Piano Trio in G min, (Elégiaque) **(*)

Brahms's C minor Trio Op. 101 is the most compact of those he wrote with sharply memorable thematic material, and received a decent enough performance here, though the relative weakness of the cello is a slight drawback.

String Quartets 1 in C min.; 2 in A min., Op. 51/1–2; 3 in B flat, Op. 67 (see also under Clarinet Sonatas)

🔑 Ⓑ  Teldec (ADD) 4509 95503-2 (2). Alban Berg Qt (with DVOŘÁK: String Quartet 13 ***)

🔑  EMI 7 54829-2 (2). Alban Berg Qt

String Quartets 1–3; (i) Piano Quintet in F min., Op. 34

🔑 Ⓜ  Hyp. Dyad CDD 22018 (2). (i) Lane; New Budapest Qt

The analogue Teldec Alban Berg performances were made in the mid-1970s when the quartet was on peak form, highly polished yet completely fresh in their musical responses. This set is strongly recommended and can stand alongside the best in the catalogue, even if the Dvořák coupling is not quite as fine as the Brahms.

The New Budapest Quartet bring warmth and spontaneity to all three scores, responding to their dramatic fervour and lyrical flow in equal measure. Their intonation is altogether impeccable and they are scrupulously attentive to Brahms's dynamic markings, with pleasing results in terms of clarity and transparency. They also offer an excellently shaped and musicianly account of the F minor Piano Quintet, with responsive playing from Piers Lane.

On EMI, the performances have all the finesse and attack one expects from the Alban Berg Quartet, along with impeccable technical address. The A minor has just the right kind of dramatic intensity and the range of colour and dynamics they produce in all three works is impressive. The EMI engineers produced well-detailed, truthful sound. These are all performances of quality and can be recommended even to those who find this ensemble at times a little too glossy.

String Quartets 1–2

 Chan. 8562. Gabrieli Qt

(BB)  Naxos 8.554271. Ludwig Qt

Richly recorded in an agreeably expansive ambience, the Gabrielis give warm, eloquent performances of both the Op. 51 Quartets, deeply felt and full-textured without being heavy; the Romanze of Op. 51, No. 1, is delightfully songful. There are both tenderness and subtlety here, and the sound is first class.

The Naxos issue is an eminently satisfactory bargain. Indeed, it provides more musical pleasure than one might find from more celebrated ensembles, and the recording has good presence and is well balanced.

String Quartet 1, Op. 51/1; (i) String Quintet 2, Op. 111

Ⓝ Ⓑ (*) EMI 2 35712-2 Belcea Qt (i) with Kakushka

The approach of the Belcea Quartet to the Brahms C minor Quartet is less urgent and dramatic than many ensembles: the players' ruminations are gentler, they find both a sense of mystery and a Schubertian grace in its course, and they are consistently imaginative in their approach. In the G minor Quintet they are joined by Thomas Kakushka (their mentor) and they produce a finely shaped, well thought-out and often searching account of the piece. Not perhaps a first recommendation, for there is a touch of self-consciousness about the music-making, but both performances are individual and illuminating. Good recorded sound.

String Quartet 1, Op. 51/1; (i) String Sextet 2 in G, Op. 36

 MDG 307 1261-2. Leipzig Qt, (i) with Rohde, Peter Bruns

This Leipzig Quartet playing is wonderfully civilized and musicianly, and completely free of superficial gloss. The sound that MDG give them is as faithful a recording as we have come to expect from this source.

String Quintets 1 in F, Op. 88; 2 in G, Op. 111

🔑  Hyp. CDA 66804. Raphael Ens.

🔑  MDG 307 1251-2. Leipzig Qt, Rohde

🔑  DG 453 420-2. Hagen Qt, Caussé

With the First Quintet opening seductively, these are fine, vital performances of both works from the Raphael Ensemble. Indeed, these performances are on the same level of distinction as their accounts of the String Sextets and, like that companion Hyperion disc, the recording is very present indeed, which to some ears may seem a minor drawback.

The Leipzig Quartet and the violist Hartmut Rohde give warm and musicianly accounts of these masterpieces. This is music-making in the old style, selfless and totally dedicated. Our first choice in these Quintets has been members of the Raphael Ensemble on Hyperion, but this splendidly recorded version makes an excellent alternative.

The Hagen Quartet and Gérard Caussé also give highly enjoyable accounts of the two Quintets, and the DG engineers give them good recorded sound. No need to say more than that it can also rank alongside the Raphael Ensemble on Hyperion.

String Quintet 2 in G, Op. 111

 Naim CD 010. Augmented Allegri Qt – BRUCH: String Quintet ***

 Nim. NI 5488. Brandis Qt, with Dean – BRUCKNER: String Quintet ***

The second of the two string quintets makes the ideal coupling for the long-buried Bruch Quintet, which was also the product of old age. Very well played and recorded by the Allegri.

The Brandis version of the G major Quintet offers good value in being coupled with Bruckner's F major Quintet. The Brandis are a fine quartet and they give a warm and sympathetic account of this lovely work; the Nimbus recording is natural and lifelike.

String Sextets 1 in B flat, Op. 18; 2 in G, Op. 36

🔑 * Hyp. CDA 66276. Raphael Ens.

* Onyx ONYX 4019. Nash Ens.

🔑  Chan. 9151. ASMF Chamber Ens.

 ASV GLD 4016. Williams, Watkins, Lindsay Qt

 Cal. CAL9369. Talich Qt, with Kluson, Kânka

The Sextets are among Brahms's most immediately appealing chamber works. The Raphael Ensemble are fully responsive to all their subtleties as well as to their vitality and warmth. In short, these are superb performances; the recording is very vivid and immediate, although some ears might find it a shade too present.

The Nash Ensemble – with a particularly strong line-up of violas and cellos (Lawrence Power and Phillip Dukes violas, Paul Watkins and Tim Hugh cellos) – offers superb new versions, crisp and clear, beautifully coordinated, with plenty of light and shade and infectious springing of rhythms. Try the delectable third movement Scherzo of No. 1, beautifully and wittily sprung, one of the gems of Brahms's chamber music.

Eminently enjoyable accounts of these masterpieces come from the Lindsays with Louise Williams and Paul Watkins as second viola and cello, recorded in 2004. They make a more than acceptable alternative to the Raphael Ensemble on Hyperion and can be recommended alongside (though not in preference to) them.

The augmented Talich group offer eloquent performances that will give pleasure. They too can be recommended alongside the Raphael Ensemble on Hyperion, though not in preference to them.

The Chandos alternative is also highly recommendable, with both Sextets again accommodated on one CD without sacrificing the exposition repeats, so that at almost 78 minutes the Academy of St Martin-in-the-Fields offer excellent value for money. Moreover, these well-prepared and musical performances are perceptive and intelligent, and they receive finely detailed and present recording.

Viola Sonatas 1–2; Violin Sonatas 1–3; F.A.E. Sonata: Scherzo

🔑 Ⓜ  Avie AV 2057 (2). Mintz, Golan

Ⓑ  DG Double (ADD) 453 121-2 (2). Zukerman, Barenboim

Shlomo Mintz and Itamar Golan give highly spontaneous performances of all five sonatas, with Mintz obviously equally at home on violin and viola, but creating a different sound-world for each instrument. At times there is a richly ruminative quality in the Violin Sonatas which is very special, and slow movements are most beautifully played, by violinist and pianist alike. These performances have a natural Brahmsian warmth that is second to none. The F.A.E. Scherzo makes a vibrant postlude and, throughout, the recording is of the highest quality.

The Zukerman–Barenboim performances of the Viola Sonatas may be a little sweet for some tastes, but they are easy to enjoy, with the expressiveness never sounding contrived, always buoyant. In the Violin Sonatas, they produce songful, spontaneous-sounding performances that catch the inspiration of the moment. The sound itself is very natural, with good presence. The lively Scherzo in C minor from the F.A.E. Sonata is thrown in for good measure.

Viola Sonatas 1–2; (i) Trio in A min.

 Hyp. CDA 67584. Power, Crawford-Phillips, (i) with Hugh

Lawrence Power is one of the most gifted players of his generation and proves a persuasive advocate in these wonderful examples of late Brahms. There is a concentration and feeling here, and readers who want these pieces in the viola rather than the clarinet version can turn to this finely balanced recording with confidence.

Violin Sonatas 1 in G, Op. 78; 2 in A, Op. 100; 3 in D min., Op. 108

🔑 (BB) * Hyp. Helios CDH 55087. Osostowicz, Tomes

Ⓝ Ⓜ  EMI 2 35717 Kyung-Wha Chung, Peter Frankl

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI 5 66893-2. Perlman, Ashkenazy

Krysia Osostowicz and Susan Tomes give performances of such natural musicality that criticism is almost disarmed. They phrase with great spontaneity yet with apparently effortless care and artistry, and the interplay between the two partners is instinctive. The Hyperion engineers manage the sound and balance with their customary skill, and theirs is certainly to be preferred to some of the more glamorous rivals now on the market. At its new bargain Helios price this goes straight to the top of the recommended list.

Kyung-Wha Chung and Peter Frankl offer all three sonatas at a very competitive price. Their performances can hold their own with the best. They were recorded in 1995 by the late lamented Christopher Raeburn, obviously after he had retired from Decca, and musically and as recorded sound they are distinguished.

Perlman and Ashkenazy bring out the trouble-free happiness of these lyrical inspirations, fully involved yet avoiding underlying tensions. In their sureness and flawless confidence at generally spacious speeds, these are performances which carry you along, cocooned in rich sound.

Violin Sonatas 1 in G, Op. 78; 3 in D min., Op. 108

(BB) () Naxos (mono) 8.119771. Yehudi & Hephzibah Menuhin – SCHUMANN: Sonata 2 ()

The Menuhins recorded the G major Sonata in Australia in 1940 and it radiates the serenity and happiness that the two artists were experiencing then. The D minor was from 1936 and was recorded in London. Spontaneous and lyrical playing that continues to astonish. Impeccable transfers and sound restoration from Ward Marston.

Violin Sonatas (i) 2; (ii) 3

Ⓜ  Warner Elatus 2564 60661-2. Vengerov, (i) Markovich; (ii) Barenboim – ELGAR: Violin Sonata ***

Vengerov's partnership with Alexander Markovich works admirably. They both catch the amabile of the A major Sonata. Yet there is an underlying vitality, and Vengerov rises to the climaxes. The account of the D minor Sonata is also very fine, with Barenboim at the piano also freely spontaneous. Excellent recording and the coupled performance of the Elgar is passionately convincing.

PIANO MUSIC

Piano music for four hands

(i) 21 Hungarian Dances (original version); (ii) 16 Waltzes, Op. 39. Solo Piano: 4 Ballades, Op. 10; 7 Fantasias, Op. 116; 3 Intermezzi, Op. 117; 8 Pieces, Op. 76; 6 Pieces, Op. 118; 4 Pieces, Op. 119; 2 Rhapsodies, Op. 79; Sonata 3 in F min., Op. 5; 16 Waltzes, Op. 39; Variations & Fugue on a Theme by Handel, Op. 24; Variations on a Theme by Schumann, Op. 9; 16 Waltzes, Op. 39

🔑 ❁ (BB) * Regis Vox CD5X 3612 (5). Walter Klien, with (i) Brendel; (ii) Beatriz Klien

As a Brahms pianist, Walter Klien is in the front rank and his recordings can be discussed in the same breath as those of Katchen and Kempff, although his style is nearer to that of the latter than the former. He has a natural sensitivity to Brahms's melodic line and in the shorter Pieces and Intermezzi his gentle touch and subtle control of nuance and colour is magical; always the pianistic textures are fresh and lacking in turgidity. The performance of the F minor Sonata has all the spontaneous buoyancy of youth, and this alone is worthy of the Rosette. Moreover, Klien shows he is as able to bring out the classical power of the Handel Variations as he is willing to evoke the romanticism of the Schumann set. For this reissue, Alfred Brendel joins Klien for equally fine performances of the piano-duo version of the 16 Waltzes, and the original version for piano, four hands, of the Hungarian Dances, and it is unlikely that we shall have a jollier performance of the latter. Fortunately, the Vox engineers excelled themselves, for the the piano-tone is fully convincing and often very beautiful. We must be grateful to Regis for making these fine discs available again.

Hungarian Dances 1–21; 18 Liebeslieder Waltzes, Op. 52a

Ⓑⓑ  Naxos 8.553140. Matthies, Köhn

It makes a generous and very attractive coupling to have all 21 Hungarian Dances in their original form, coupled with the piano-duet version of the first and more popular set of Liebeslieder Waltzes. Crisp, clean ensemble, matched by well-focused sound.

Sonata for 2 Pianos in F min., Op. 34b; Variations on a Theme of Haydn, Op. 56b

Ⓑⓑ  Naxos 8.553654. Matthies, Köhn

What the German duo demonstrates is that the two-piano format brings formidable advantages in bite and attack, as well as some disadvantages. Speeds are sensibly chosen for the sonata, as they are in Brahms's own piano-duet version of the Haydn Variations, again clarified. Bright, clear sound to match.

Solo piano music

4 Ballades, Op. 10; 7 Fantasias, Op. 116; Hungarian Dances 1–10; (i) 11–21. 3 Intermezzi, Op. 117; 8 Piano Pieces, Op. 76; 6 Piano Pieces, Op. 118; 4 Piano Pieces, Op. 119; Piano Sonatas 1 in C, Op. 1; 2 in F sharp min., Op. 2; 3 in F min., Op. 5; 2 Rhapsodies, Op. 79; Variations on a Hungarian Song, Op. 21/2; Variations on a Theme by Paganini, Op. 35; Variations & Fugue on a Theme by Handel, Op. 24; Variations on a Theme by Schumann, Op. 9; Variations on an Original Theme, Op. 21/1; Waltzes, Op. 39

🔑 Ⓑ  Decca (ADD) stereo/mono 455 247-2 (6). Katchen, (i) with J.-P. Marty

Katchen's magisterial survey of Brahms's keyboard music was made for Decca between 1962 and 1965, save for the last three Ballades, which come from the 1950s and are in mono. Those wanting a comprehensive survey need look no further. Katchen is an eminently faithful and sound interpreter who brings refined musicianship and a natural authority to this repertoire; he is given the benefit of Decca recording which was excellent for its period, and remains so. The six CDs are offered at a very low price and, although they are not available separately, they still make a tremendous bargain. In addition to the three Ballades, the following are mono recordings: the Schumann Variations, Nos. 1, 5 and 7 of the Fantasias and Nos. 11–21 of the Hungarian Dances.

4 Ballades, Op. 10

Ⓜ  DG (ADD/DDD) 457 762-2. Michelangeli (with SCHUBERT: Piano Sonata in A min. ; BEETHOVEN: Piano Sonata 4 *)

Michelangeli produces a wonderfully blended tone and fine, mellow sonority. The Ballades are given a performance of the greatest distinction, without the slightly aloof quality that sometimes disturbs his readings; and the 1981 digital recording is excellent. The couplings, alas, are not in the same league.

4 Ballades, Op. 10; 2 Rhapsodies, Op. 79; Variations on a theme of Paganini, Op. 35

🔑  Virgin 3 32628-2. Nicholas Angelich

Nicholas Angelich seems completely attuned to this world and, whether in the virtuosity of the Paganini Variations or the poetic sensibility of the Ballades, he plays with rare authority and conviction. He has received plaudits in both the British and French press, and he deserves them, and the piano-sound is very well captured by the Virgin Classics engineer.

7 Fantasias, Op. 116

🔑  Ottavio OTRC 39027. Cooper – SCHUMANN: Abegg variations, etc. ***

Imogen Cooper's stirring account of the Capriccio which opens the set captures the listener immediately, and the variety of colour and mood gives enormous pleasure throughout. The gentle Intermezzi are most beautiful, for the recording does this memorable playing full justice. The listening experience here is as if one was present at a live recital.

Fantasias, Op. 116; 3 Intermezzi, Op. 117; 6 Pieces, Op. 118; 4 Pieces, Op. 119

Ⓜ (*) DG (ADD) 437 249-2. Kempff

Kempff's style in Brahms is characteristically individual: poetry emphasized rather than brilliance, subtle timbres rather than virtuosity. It follows that Kempff shines in the gentle fancies of Brahms's last period, with his magic utterly beguiling in the Intermezzi in A minor, E major and E minor from Op. 116, and especially in the lovely E flat major Andante of Op. 117.

7 Fantasias, Op. 116; 3 Intermezzi, Op. 117; 6 Piano Pieces, Op. 118; 4 Pieces, Op. 119

Ⓝ  Avie SACD AV 2136 Markus Groh

🔑  EMI 379 3022. Angelich

In a generous eighty-minute recital Markus Groh, the young prize-winning pianist from Germany offers all twenty of the late Piano Pieces of Op. 116 to Op. 119. He plays with a ripe Brahmsian feeling, his style, reflective, often romantically passionate, and in the gentler moments appealingly delicate.

The performances have a natural spontaneity and he is superbly recorded. The acoustic is resonant, but with the back speakers in use, one is given a real concert hall feeling to the music-making.

There are impressive sets of these searching late Brahms masterpieces from both Kempff and Lupu, but these new readings from Nicholas Angelich are second to none and are finer than most. He is a Brahmsian of outstanding quality. Thoughtful, beautifully rounded and natural playing which has the measure of Brahms's depths. Lifelike recording.

7 Fantasias, Op. 116; 8 Pieces, Op. 76; 2 Rhapsodies, Op. 79

(BB)  Naxos 8.550353. Biret

Idil Biret readily captures the graceful intimacy of the A flat and B flat Intermezzi. Of the two Rhapsodies, the second is particularly fine, boldly spontaneous, its dark colouring caught well. The Fantasias, Op. 116, bring some beautifully reflective playing, notably in the three Intermezzi grouped together (in E major and E minor), while the framing G minor and D minor Capriccios are passionately felt, the latter ending the recital strongly. This is all impressively characterized Brahms playing, and the recording does not lack sonority.

3 Intermezzi, Op. 117; 6 Pieces, Op. 118; 4 Pieces, Op. 119; 2 Rhapsodies, Op. 79

🔑  Decca (ADD) 417 599-2. Lupu

Radu Lupu's late Brahms is quite outstanding in every way. There is great intensity and inwardness when these qualities are required, and a keyboard mastery that is second to none. This is undoubtedly one of the most rewarding Brahms recitals currently before the public.

3 Intermezzi, Op. 117; 2 Rhapsodies, Op. 79; Waltzes, Op. 39; Variations on a theme by Handel, Op. 24

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.570290. Jandó

Jandó opens with the Rhapsodies: the first, although marked Agitato, seems just a shade rushed at the opening, but it soon settles down; the Molto passionato of the G minor is well judged. The lovely Intermezzi are sensitively done, but Jandó is at his best in the Waltzes, which have both sparkle and affection. The Handel Variations are well characterized but a little lightweight. Yet this may be partly due to the Hungarian studio acoustic; the recording is truthful and present, but one wants a slightly warmer timbre for Brahms.

Piano Sonatas 1 in C, Op. 1; 2 in F sharp min., Op. 2

🔑 Ⓜ  Decca 4758628 (2). S. Richter

Recorded in Mantua in February 1987, these performances show Sviatoslav Richter at his most commanding. He makes the most heavily chordal piano writing sound totally pianistic and there is exquisite shading of tone and flawless legato. Both slow movements are coloured most subtly and the opening of the finale of the F sharp minor Sonata has a wonderful improvisatory feeling. The playing throughout has the spontaneity of live music-making and the Decca engineers have secured most realistic sound.

Piano Sonata 3; 4 Ballades, Op. 10

🔑 * Hyp. CDA 67237. Hough

Ⓜ  Warner Elatus 0927 49562-2. Barenboim

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550352. Biret

Piano Sonata 3 in F min., Op. 5; 16 Waltzes, Op. 39

🔑  Ondine ODE 1044-2. Siirala

The F minor Sonata and the Ballades, Op. 10, are a young man's music. Stephen Hough gives us a finely conceived, naturally paced and beautifully controlled account of both pieces. The intellect and emotions, the 'classical' Brahms and youthful romanticism are well balanced. The recorded sound is very good and lifelike.

Antti Siirala's Brahms F minor Sonata announces the arrival of a serious artist whose musical armoury, while it has no want of bravura and virtuosity, is profoundly well equipped to deal with the artistic challenges posed by this great work. Siirala's recording is to be ranked along with the very best, and he is hardly less impressive in the Op. 39 Waltzes. First-class piano recording.

Barenboim's Sonata and Ballades are distinguished by an effortless technical command and excellent musical characterization and insight. Although he is not necessarily a first choice, this generally well-recorded account is certainly most impressive. Good value too.

As a pupil of Kempff, Idil Biret has a fine understanding of this repertoire, although her approach is more muscular than Kempff's. The fourth Ballade is gravely beautiful and shows her at her finest. The Sonata opens commandingly and its lyrical side is well balanced. These performances are full of character. Good recording, made in the Heidelberg studio.

Variations & Fugue on a Theme of Handel, Op. 24

🔑 Ⓜ  Warner Elatus 2564 61762-2. Schiff (piano) – HANDEL: Keyboard Suite in B flat (HWV 434); REGER: Variations & Fugue on a Theme of Bach ***

Schiff's splendid performance is made the more attractive by being preceded by the Handel Suite from which Brahms draws his theme. The Reger Variations are also given a first-class, highly imaginative performance of wide dynamic contrasts, lyricism alternating with strength. The (excellent) recording comes from a live recital at the Concertgebouw in 1994.

ORGAN MUSIC

11 Chorale Preludes, Op. 122; Chorale Prelude & Fugue on 'O Traurigkeit, O Herzeleid'; Fugue in A flat min. (original and published versions); Preludes & Fugues: in A min.; G min.

 Nim. NI 5262. Bowyer (organ of Odense Cathedral)

11 Chorale Preludes, Op. 122; Chorale Prelude & Fugue on 'O Traurigkeit, O Herzeleid'; Fugue in A flat min.; Preludes & Fugues: in A min.; G min.

 CRD 3404. Danby (organ)

Kevin Bowyer has the advantage of the splendid Danish organ in Odense Cathedral, which combines a full tone and a warmly coloured palette with a clear profile. Like Nicholas Danby, Bowyer is obviously at home both in the early Preludes and Fugues, in which he produces considerable bravura (helped by the fresh, bright sound of the organ), and in the very late set of Chorale Preludes. He then closes the recital with Brahms's original manuscript forms of the two earliest pieces (which we have already heard in their published formats), the Chorale Prelude and Fugue on 'O Traurigkeit' and the unpolished A flat minor Fugue. The disc is very well documented.

Nicholas Danby, playing the organ of the Church of the Immaculate Conception in London, gives restrained, clean-cut readings which yet have a strong profile. Choice between these two discs might well depend on preference for the type of organ used. The effect on CRD is rather more incisive but has firmness and weight of tone and certainly does not lack amplitude.

LIEDER

Lieder

 DG 429 727-2. von Otter, Forsberg, (i) with Sparf

Anne Sofie von Otter gives these Brahms Lieder the natural freshness of folksong which so often they resemble. She phrases unerringly, holding and changing tension and mood as in a live recital, and her accompanist is strongly supportive. In the Op. 91 settings they are joined by Nils-Erik Sparf, who plays with admirable taste.

Lieder

🔑 Ⓑ * DG (ADD) Double 459 469-2 (2). Norman, Barenboim

This double CD concentrates on Brahms's 'women's songs'. Jessye Norman's tone is full and golden. Her imagination even matches that of Fischer-Dieskau, and no praise could be higher. Her voice is ideally suited to many of these songs, and if occasionally there is a hint of an over-studied quality this is of little consequence, considering the overall achievement. Barenboim's accompaniments are superb, contributing much to the success of this recital. The recording is excellent and this is a real bargain.

Alto Rhapsody, Op. 53

🔑 (BB) () Regis mono RRC 1146. Ferrier, LPO Ch. & O, Krauss – MAHLER: Das Lied von der Erde ()

The Alto Rhapsody was one of Kathleen Ferrier's own favourites among her records, and well it might have been, for the spacious phrases of Brahms's setting of Goethe suited the glorious tonal beauty of her voice to perfection, and the closing section with chorus is particularly moving. The Regis transfer is admirable, bringing out all the vocal warmth and radiance.

Alto Rhapsody

Ⓝ () BBC Legends mono BBCL4243-2. J. Baker, BBC Men's Ch, BBC SO, Boult – MAHLER: Das Lied von der Erde ()

Janet Baker recorded the Alto Rhapsody with Boult conducting around the same period as this live performance (Royal Festival Hall 6 November 1968) with the advantage of stereo, but this BBC Broadcast gains in the extra warmth of expressiveness, and makes a splendid and generous supplement to Mahler's Das Lied with Baker and Mitchinson, conducted by Raymond Leppard.

(i) Alto Rhapsody. Academic Festival Overture

Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 5 62791-2. J. Baker, Alldis Ch., LPO, Boult – SCHUBERT: Symphony 9 ***

Dame Janet Baker's devoted (1970) recording of the Alto Rhapsody with Boult was originally coupled with the Second Symphony. Now it comes equally attractively paired with Schubert. The Brahms remains meditative, even though the tempo is unlingering and the manner totally unindulgent. The warm Abbey Road recording is transferred very successfully to CD.

6 Lieder und Romanzen, Op. 93a; (i) 5 Gesänge, Op. 104; (i) 3 Quartets, Op. 64. Zigeunerlieder, Op. 103. Funeral Ode: Dem dunken Schloss dell'Heil'gen Erde, WoO 20

Ⓝ  Hyp. CDA 67775 Consortium, Andrew-John Smith; (i) Glynn

Apart from his choral music Brahms wrote many vocal quartets, either with piano or a cappella for use as Hausmusik, after the style of the Schubertiades. He was, alas, not personally lucky in love, as the woman he adored and admired, Clara Schumann, was already married to his friend and mentor and never became available, even after her husband Robert died. So it is not surprising that most of these settings have words full of regret for what might have been, of languishing for the unattainable, and many of them touch a chord of nostalgia in the listener. The folksy a cappella Songs and Romances are often more philosophical, even offering practical solutions for the unrequited lover, like the girl encouraged to wash her face in rosewater to tempt her young man to kiss her. The Zigeunerlieder are more cheerfully extrovert, often sentimental, sometimes offering a joyful solution. Dem dunken Schloss (a partsong for mixed voices) makes a gentle epilogue. Consortium sing them all with sensitivity and ardour, with apt accompaniments, where needed by Christopher Glyn. Fine recording, although the piano sound is rather resonant.

Lieder Collection from Broadcasts

() BBC mono BBCL 4200-2. Janet Baker, Ernest Lush or Paul Hamburger

This collection of over two dozen songs was culled from broadcasts made in 1960, 1961 and 1968, when Dame Janet was in her absolute prime. She is well accompanied by Paul Hamburger and Ernest Lush, and every song springs to life in the most electrically communicative way. The recording may be mono but it is very faithful. A disc not to be missed by all admirers of this remarkably individual and inspirational singer.

Lieder

() BBC Legends mono BBCL 4100-2. J. Baker, Lush or Hamburger

It is good to have two further inspired recitals of the young Janet Baker singing Brahms Lieder, one made in 1961, the other in 1968. Though the artistry remains supreme in both, not just the flawless legato and natural sense of stillness and repose, with strong dramatic contrasts, the development in the voice is very clear. The tone is richer and warmer in 1968, more suited to the weightier songs in that recital, notably the culminating song, Von ewiger Liebe, one of Brahms's greatest, here deeply moving with the most powerful climax.

Lieder

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * EMI mono 5 62807-2. Hotter, Moore – BACH: Cantata 82: Ich habe genug **** ✿

Glorious singing from Hans Hotter, wonderfully accompanied by Gerald Moore. A splendid transfer of the 1950 recordings – an indispensable coupling, with two extra songs included that were not on the old Références CD.

Ave Maria, Op. 12; Nänie, Op. 82; Schicksalslied, Op. 54; (i) Triumphlied, Op. 55

🔑  Chan. 10165. Danish Nat. Ch. & SO, Albrecht; (i) with Skovhus

It is fascinating to find Brahms banging the patriotic drum in his Triumphlied, written to celebrate the Prussian victory over the French in 1870 and the establishment of the German empire. Albrecht's performance with the Danish National Choir and Orchestra may be less polished than Sinopoli's DG version, but it is markedly warmer and more idiomatic, well coupled with a devotional reading of Schicksalslied, Song of Destiny (with a Hölderlin text) and the valedictory Nänie. The rare setting of Ave Maria for women's voices, an early work, makes a charming supplement.

Lieder

🔑 Ⓜ * DG 474 856-2. Norman, Barenboim; (i) with Christ

Winner of the Gramophone Solo Vocal Award in 1983, this delightful and strongly contrasted selection from DG's Lieder Box in the Brahms Edition shows Jessye Norman at her finest. For the CD equivalent of an earlier digital LP, the two Songs with Viola have been added to make a highlight of the new recital. The task of recording a complete set of women's songs seems in this instance to have added to the warmth and sense of spontaneity of both singer and pianist in the studio, while Wolfram Christ makes a distinguished contribution to Op. 91. The heroic scale of Der Schmied is superb, as is the open simplicity of Zigeunerlieder, while the gentler songs find the gloriously ample voice exquisitely scaled down. The recording is wonderfully vivid, giving the artists a tangible presence. An outstanding reissue.

Deutsche Volkslieder (42 German folksong settings)

Ⓑ  EMI Gemini (ADD) 5 85502-2 (2). Schwarzkopf, Fischer-Dieskau, Moore

In Brahms's simple folk-settings no singers in the world can match Schwarzkopf and Fischer-Dieskau in their musical imagination and depth of understanding. Gerald Moore as ever is the ideal accompanist, and the recording quality is natural and vivid, with some enchanting conversation pieces between the soloists. However, no translations are included and no attempt is made to explain the meaning of each song.

German Requiem, Op. 45 (DVD versions)

🔑 ✿  DG DVD 0734 4398. Janowitz, van Dam, V. Singverein, VPO, Karajan

(*) EMI DVD 3 8846093. Lear, Stewart, ORTF Ch. & O Philharmonique, Richter (V/D: Andrew Leroux) – WAGNER: Götterdämmerung; Tristan: orchestral excerpts ***

Karajan's DVD of the Brahms Requiem, recorded live at the 1978 Salzburg Easter Festival, with two of his favourite solo singers, sweeps the board. He may keep his eyes closed, but his conducting is very physical, and the cameras reveal him as deeply impassioned in a work that he clearly loved greatly. His two soloists are on splendid form; Gundula Janowitz sings gloriously and José van Dam is both full-toned and boldly dramatic. Karajan's opening may be characteristically refined, but the arresting timpani in Denn alles Fleisch, es ist wie Gras soon shows that this is to be a performance of both fervour and fully revealed detail. The huge chorus visually creates a magnificent backcloth and their singing is increasingly rich and powerful, with the closing section very moving. Karajan himself directed the production and it is fully worthy of him at his finest.

Karl Richter's fine performance was recorded live by French Radio in 1964 and it comes in an excellent black-and-white video with good stereo sound within a warm acoustic which still retains a vivid choral edge. He opens darkly, spaciously and movingly, and soon builds a thrilling choral climax in Denn alles Fleisch, es ist wie Gras, and maintains a high level of tension to the end. He broadens his tempo considerably in the closing Selig sind die Toten, and the large French chorus (which has moments of roughness at times) sings with much feeling and even a touch of radiance from the female voices. Of the two soloists, Thomas Stewart sings well enough but is rather put in the shade by Evelyn Lear's moving contribution to Ihr habet nun Trauerigkeit. Overall this account is worthy of Richter at his best and the cameras are unobtrusively effective.

German Requiem, Op. 45 (CD versions)

🔑 * EMI 3 65393-2. Roschmann, Quasthoff, Berlin R. Ch., BPO, Rattle

🔑 ✿  Ph. 432 140-2. Margiono, Gilfry, Monteverdi Ch., ORR, Gardiner

🔑 (BB)  Warner Apex 8573 89081-2. M. Price, Ramey, Amb. S., RPO, Previn

(N) (BB) () Naxos mono 8.111038. Schwarzkopf, Hotter, Wiener Sangverein, VPO, Karajan

Recorded live in October 2006, Rattle conducts a warm and urgent account of Brahms's German Requiem, bright and fresh, with brilliant recording, heightening the drama in a work which with seven generally measured movements can seem to lack contrast. One early test comes on the words, An die Freude, 'To joy', in the first movement, which here have a rare exuberance. Regularly the dynamic contrasts bring powerful, weighty climaxes, while the two soloists are both excellent, Dorothea Roschmann a pure-toned soloist and Thomas Quasthoff the firmly intense baritone.

Gardiner's 'revolutionary' account of the German Requiem brings a range of choral sound even more thrilling than in the concert hall. With period instruments and following Viennese practice of the time, speeds tend to be faster than usual, though the speed for the big fugue is surprisingly relaxed. Charlotte Margiono makes an ethereal soprano soloist, while Rodney Gilfry, despite a rapid vibrato, is aptly fresh and young-sounding. One could not ask for a more complete renovation of a masterpiece that is often made to sound stodgy and square.

It is the seeming simplicity of Previn's dedicated approach in his earlier, Apex recording, with radiant singing from the chorus and measured speeds held steadily, that so movingly conveys an innocence in the often square writing, both in the powerful opening choruses and in the simple, songful Wie lieblich. The great fugatos are then powerfully presented. Both soloists are outstanding, Margaret Price golden-toned, Samuel Ramey incisively dark. The recording, of high quality, is warmly set against a helpful church acoustic with the chorus slightly distanced.

This was the first complete recording of the Requiem and the first major recording that Walter Legge made after the war with Karajan and the Vienna Philharmonic. The excellence of the 1947 sound, thanks to the expertise of Legge's balance engineer, Douglas Larter, is admirably clear in this transfer. It has been absent from the catalogue for over sixty years and notwithstanding the many fine versions we have had in the intervening years including those from Karajan himself, this deserves a special place in the Brahms discography thanks to its depth and spontaneity of feeling.

German Requiem, Op. 45 (sung in English)

 Telarc CD 80501. Chandler, Gunn, Mormon Tabernacle Ch., Utah SO, Jessop

Craig Jessop directs a dedicated reading of a new translation by Robert Shaw which for English-speaking listeners will communicate warmly, not least thanks to the extra immediacy of the words. The choir, which too often has been recorded mushily, here emerges far fresher than before, and the two soloists are both first rate. Janice Chandler has a warm, creamy soprano, and Nathan Gunn has a youthfully clear baritone which he uses with finesse and passion. Full, warm sound, not always ideally transparent; but this remains a fully worthy tribute to Shaw.

(i) Vier ernste Gesang (4 Serious Songs), Op. 121; (ii) 2 Songs with viola, Op. 91

(BB) () Regis mono RRC 1153. Ferrier, (i; ii) Spurr, Gilbert – MAHLER: Kindertotenlieder, etc. () ✿

This vintage Kathleen Ferrier record brings together a group of the great contralto's early Decca Brahms recordings from 1949–50, showing the richness of the voice and her natural expressive involvement. These recordings are also available elsewhere, notably in Decca's various Ferrier groupings, but these Regis transfers are appealingly smooth and natural, and the recording is inexpensive.

3 Gesänge, Op. 42; (i) 4 Gesänge, Op. 17; 5 Gesänge, Op. 104; (ii) 6 Quartette, Op. 112; Zigeunerlieder, Op. 109

🔑 ✿  Chan. 9806. Danish Nat. R. Ch., Parkman; with (i) Yeats, McClelland, Lind; (ii) Forsberg

The Danish National Radio Choir have already brought us a fine collection of motets, including the Marienlieder (see below). Here they turn their attention to some of the lovely unaccompanied Gesänge, and include also as a highlight of the concert the luscious settings of Op. 17, which have delectable harp accompaniments and obbligatos for one or two horns. Sehnsucht, the first of the six piano-accompanied Quartets which follow, has one of the composer's most seductive melodies, and the robust set of Zigeunerlieder which close the recital, sung with great vigour, show the composer at his most infectiously boisterous.

Liebeslieder Waltzes, Op. 52

 BBC (ADD) BBCB 8001-2. Harper, J. Baker, Pears, Hemsley, Britten & Arrau (piano duet) – ROSSINI: Soirées musicales; TCHAIKOVSKY: 4 Duets ***

Britten was allergic to the music of Brahms, but you would never know that from this magical performance of the Liebeslieder Waltzes. As an inspired accompanist he is joined by Claudio Arrau in a perfect partnership. The soloists make an outstanding and characterful team, whoopsing away throughout, with Janet Baker striking a deeper note in the poignant seventh waltz. Full, clear, radio sound.

Motets

Sacred motets: Ach, arme Welt, du trügest mich, Op. 110; Es ist das Heil uns kommen her, Op. 29; O Heiland reiss die Himmel auf, Op. 74

(*) Paraclete Press GDCG 107. Dei Cantores, Patterson – MENDELSSOHN: Motets **(*)

Brahms's Es ist das Heil owes a debt to Bach in its four-part chorale followed by a five-part fugue, where the part-writing could be more sharply delineated. But the other two works have a simple eloquence which is well caught by these persuasively committed performances, beautifully recorded.

Ave Maria, Op. 12; 3 Fest- und Gedenksprüche, Op. 109; Geistliches Lied, Op. 30; 2 Motets, Op. 29; 2 Motets, Op. 74; 3 Motets, Op. 110; Psalm 13, Op. 27

(BB)  Naxos 8.553877. St Bride's Ch., R. Jones; Morley (organ)

Throughout his composing career, from his Hamburg days onwards, Brahms was devoted to writing choral music, both religious and secular, superbly crafted. In their first recording, Robert Jones and the Choir of St Bride's, Fleet Street, give fresh, clear performances. They are beautifully scaled to give the illusion of church performance, helped by warm, atmospheric recording.

3 Fest- und Gedenksprüche, Op. 109; Marienlieder, Op. 22; 2 Motets, Op. 29; 2 Motets, Op. 74; 3 Motets, Op. 110

 Chan. 9671. Danish Nat. R. Ch., Parkman

The programme from the Danish Radio Choir is made especially attractive by the inclusion of the seven Marienlieder, which include some of Brahms's simplest and most beautiful lyrical inspirations. They are gloriously sung by this justly famous Danish choir, who are on splendid form throughout the disc and are beautifully recorded.

(i) Rinaldo, Op. 50; (ii) Alto Rhapsody. Gesang der Parzen, Op. 89

 Chan. 10215. (i) Stig Andersen; (ii) Larsson; Danish Nat. Ch. & SO, Albrecht

Brahms's cantata, Rinaldo, like operas by Handel and Gluck among others, tells of the crusader Rinaldo, ensnared by the enchantress Armida. His fellow-knights finally rescue him, persuading him to return to the cause. Brahms's setting for tenor soloist, male chorus and orchestra, with a text by Goethe, moves from the ecstasy inspired by Armida to his final mood of resolution, backed up in a stirring final chorus, written long after the rest. It is hardly a dramatic sequence but it is a moving one, here superbly realized by Danish forces under Gerd Albrecht. It is very well coupled with two other Goethe settings by Brahms, the radiant Alto Rhapsody, with Anna Larsson the rich-toned soloist, and the greatest and darkest of his shorter choral works, Gesang der Parzen, 'Song of the Fates'.

Die schöne Magelone (song-cycle)

(*) Orfeo C490 981B. Fischer-Dieskau, S. Richter

Dietrich Fischer-Dieskau has done more than any other singer to bring this once-neglected song-cycle back into the repertory, a love-story from the age of chivalry. This version offers a live Salzburg Festival recording, made in July 1970, and though audience noises occasionally intrude, the thrust and impulse of the reading are irresistible. As a bonus come his three encores of other Brahms songs. No texts are given nor even translations of titles.

BRIAN, Havergal (1876–1972)

(i) Violin Concerto. The Jolly Miller (Comedy Overture); Symphony 18

(BB)  Naxos 8.557775. (i) Bisengaliev; BBC Scottish SO, Friend

The Violin Concerto is a work on the most ambitious scale, obviously with an eye on the Elgar Concerto in the use of a large orchestra as a backcloth. It is an impressive work, and it is played with much feeling by Marat Bisengaliev, who is given powerful support by the BBC Scottish Orchestra under Lionel Friend. The snag is the close-miked recording, which at times brings an edge to the solo violin-timbre and makes the many passionate orchestral tuttis sound thin and over-bright. The Concerto is prefaced by a jolly little overture introducing the folksong, The Miller of Dee, and is followed by a rather good, small-scale symphony, with its three movements all based on march-like themes, ranging over a whole gamut of emotions and ending forcefully. There is very good back-up documentation.

Symphony 1 (Gothic)

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.557418/9. Jenisová, Pecková, Dolžal, Mikulás, Slovak Op. Ch., Slovak Folk Ens. Ch., Lúčnica Ch., Bratislava City Ch. & Children's Ch., Youth Echo Ch., Slovak RSO & PO & Ch., Lénard

The first of the Havergal Brian symphonies here receives a passionately committed performance from Slovak forces. Despite a few incidental flaws, it conveys surging excitement from first to last, helped by a rich recording, which gives a thrilling impression of massed forces. The final Te Deum, alone lasting 72 minutes, brings fervent choral writing of formidable complexity, with the challenge taken up superbly by the Slovak musicians. Originally on Marco Polo, this is now a very real bargain in its Naxos reissue.

Symphony 2; Festival Fanfare

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.570506. Moscow SO, Rowe

Havergal Brian's Second Symphony, scored for no fewer than sixteen horns (though only eight are used here), three sets of timpani, two pianos and organ, was written in 1930–1. The composer later distanced himself from all programmatic associations with the score, merely allowing, in a letter in 1972, that the work represents 'Man in his cosmic loneliness: ambition, loves, battles and death'. Cast in conventional four movements – though, as the composer said, 'very unorthodox inside' – one is helped through this complex score by Naxos's generous cueing points, allied to very helpful notes by Callum MacDonald. Throughout the work, one senses the composer exploring with textures, harmonies – and melody. The ostinato-Scherzo, with its hunting horns, one group after another, is particularly memorable. The finale evokes Siegfried's Funeral March from Götterdämmerung. An excellent performance, even if the orchestra lacks refinement at times, the strings struggling a bit in the demanding passages. The CD opens with the composer's single brass-only work, the short, pithy Festival Fanfare of 1967. Good sound throughout.

Symphony 3 in C sharp min.

(BB) (*) Hyp. Helios CDH 55029. Ball, Jacobson, BBC SO, Friend

The Third Symphony began life as a concerto for piano; this perhaps explains the prominent role given to two pianos in the score. The work is full of extraordinarily imaginative and original touches, but the overall lack of rhythmic variety is a handicap. The playing of the BBC Symphony Orchestra under Lionel Friend is well prepared and dedicated, but the recording does not open out sufficiently in climaxes. Even so, this is well worth considering at Helios price.

Symphonies 4 (Psalm of Victory); 12

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.570308. Valásková, Slovak Philharmonic Ch., Slovak Nat. Op. Ch., Echo Youth Ch., Cantus Mixed Ch., Czech Philharmonic Ch., Brno Slovak RSO, Leaper

The sheer quantity of choral voices required for Havergal Brian's Fourth Symphony can be can seen from the above listing, and that gives a fair indication of the scale of this work. Based on Psalm 68, a text full of apocalyptic and violent temperament with the most extreme of Old Testament passions, it was written in 1932–3 when many forces of evil were indeed gathering. There are many inventive ideas, and the work's impetus is surprisingly consistent, if the drama is a little wearing at times. The Twelfth Symphony, written in 1957, lasts a little over 11 minutes. Inspired by Greek tragedy, the large orchestra is terse and direct, atmospheric and richly orchestrated. The performances are very good and enthusiastic, and they convey the music well. The recording (1992, originally Marco Polo) is decent enough and, at bargain price, well worth exploring. The helpful sleeve-notes take you through the enormous Fourth Symphony track by track, and texts and translations are included.

Symphonies 6 (Sinfonia Tragica); 16

 Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 295. LPO, Fredman – COOKE: Symphony 3 ***

The opening of the Sixteenth Symphony (1960) is quite magical, and one is never unmindful of the presence of a stern and powerful imagination. It is the moments of stillness and tranquillity in Brian's music that leave the strongest impression. Not all the awkwardness is the product of bluntness of utterance, and rhythmically he is not fleet of foot. But both these symphonies have genuine depths, and a wholly personal vision. The Sixth (1948) also withstands the test of time extremely well and will repay familiarity. The performances are excellently played by the LPO under Myer Fredman and the recording has splendid clarity and body, the perspective is most musically judged, but there is no loss of vividness, presence or impact in achieving a concert-hall balance.

BRIDGE, Frank (1879–1941)

Vol. 1: Enter Spring; Isabella; Mid of Night; 2 Poems for Orchestra (Chan. 9950)

Vol. 2: Dance Poem; Dance Rhapsody; 5 Entr'actes; Norse Legend; The Sea (Chan. 10012)

Vol. 3: Coronation March; (i) Phantasm; Sir Roger de Coverley (A Christmas Dance); Summer; There is a willow grows aslant a brook; Vignettes de danse (Chan.10112 (with (i) Shelley))

Vol. 4: Allegro moderato; Lament for String Orchestra; (i) Oration (Concerto elegiaco). Rebus – Overture for Orchestra; (ii) A Prayer (for chorus & orchestra) (Chan. 10188 with (i) Gerhardt; (ii) BBC Nat. Ch. Of Wales)

Vol. 5: 2 Entr'actes; 2 Intermezzi from 'Threads'; 2 Old English Songs; Sir Roger de Coverley (A Christmas Dance); Suite for Strings; Todessehnsucht; Valse Intermezzo à cordes (arr. Hindmarsh); (i) The Hag; 2 Songs of Robert Bridges (Chan. 10246 with (i) Williams)

Vol. 6: Berceuse; Chant d'espérance; The Pageant of London; A Royal Night of Variety; Serenade. (i) Adoration; (ii) Berceuse; (i) Blow out, you bugles; (ii) Day after day; (i) Love went a-riding; (ii) Mantle of blue; Speak to me; (i) Thy hand in mine; Where She lies sleep (Chan. 10310. (with (i) Langridge; (ii) Connolly))

(N)  BBC Nat. O of Wales, Hickox

Richard Hickox's survey of Frank Bridge's orchestral music with the BBC National Orchestra of Wales is one of the highlights of the Chandos Catalogue. Volume 1 begins with his fresh, bracing rhapsody Enter Spring, dating from 1927, while his second tone poem, Isabella (1907), brooding and haunting, fully captures Keats's gruesome story which inspired this Lisztian tone poem. In the longest work on this volume, Mid of Night, Liszt is recalled again, and one has the feeling of a young composer (24) spreading his wings and exploring orchestral colour. The Two Poems for Orchestra (1915), the first chromatically sinuous, and the second, a lively orchestral dance, are also vividly scored.

Volume 2 includes perhaps Bridge's most celebrated piece, the tone poem The Sea, and it here receives a superbly briny performance. The disc opens with an exceptionally lively Dance Rhapsody (1908), again brilliantly orchestrated. The light, but very charming folk-tune inspired 5 Entr'actes comes from the music Bridge wrote for a play, The Two Hunchbacks, while the more experimental Dance Poem, premiered in 1914, is harmonically and melodically more diffuse. This is followed by the short but beautiful Norse Legend, an evocative miniature tone poem, originally written for violin and piano in 1905, but later orchestrated (1938).

Volume 3 begins with stirring Coronation March of 1911 which just misses having a truly memorable big tune. Summer (1915) evokes a summer's day in the country while Phantasm finds Bridge at his most searchingly exploratory. As Paul Hindmarsh writes in the sleeve notes, 'it inhabits a spectral world of dreams and ghostly apparitions'. Howard Shelley is the responsive soloist. There is a willow grows aslant a brook is hauntingly dark and bleak as befits its Shakespearian inspiration, Gertrude's Act IV speech in Hamlet, in which she describes the drowning of Ophelia. The Vignettes de dance are orchestrations of earlier piano pieces, as is the much more famous and hugely enjoyable

Sir Roger de Coverley, which ends this disc in its full orchestral version.

Volume 4 contains perhaps Bridge's finest orchestral work, the Oration for cello and orchestra. Gerhardt's performance can stand alongside the finest earlier accounts. Rarities on this disc include the Rebus Overture, the composer's last completed work (1940) and, although the textures are sparer than his earlier music, the scoring is characteristically original. The Allegro moderato (or Symphony) for String Orchestra, completed by Anthony Pope, shows Bridge at his most deeply eloquent, as does the poignant Lament (1915), written for a young friend who died with her family when the Lusitania was sunk. A Prayer – an anti-war work, completed in orchestrated form in 1918, is Bridge's only setting for chorus and orchestra. Deliberately written to be performed by amateur choral societies, its relatively simple style is direct and affecting. The performance and recording here – and throughout this CD – is excellent.

The highlight of Volume 5, the Suite for Strings (1909) is full of delightful pastoral writing and piquant colour. Of the Two Intermezzi from 'Threads', the second movement, a pastiche of a Viennese dance, is sparklingly toe-tapping. Both the Two Old English Songs, 'Sally in our alley' and 'Cherry ripe' are imaginatively scored, with the former in lush harmonies, and the latter turned into a virtuoso tour-de-force for strings, where the tune only emerges from the hustle and bustle towards the close. Todessehnsucht is an arrangement of Bach (the funeral chorale, Komm Süsser Tod) which is Stokowskian in its sumptuous grandeur. The nostalgic pair of Entr'actes are orchestrated piano works and evoke much warm nostalgia. The Valse Intermezzo à cordes is a stylish early student work, beautifully crafted and surprisingly memorable. Roderick Williams is the superb baritone in the lively setting of Robert Herrick's poem, The Hag, and the Two Songs of Robert Bridges are no less colourfully evocative.

This final volume largely comprises Bridge's orchestral songs, beginning with the stirring Blow out, you bugles, based on Rupert Brooke's most famous war poem. The contrasting Berceuse is also memorable, with again Bridge's orchestral colour very telling. Sarah Connolly sings it most beautifully too, as she does in all her items. Love went-a-riding, with its galloping accompaniment, is very enjoyable with Langridge the most lustily vigorous. The orchestral items here include the colourful suite The Pageant of London for wind orchestra, written for a pageant performed at the Crystal Palace in 1911. These are lively music vignettes of 'Ye Old England', and receive their premiere recording here in their original version. The Berceuse, Chant d'espérance and Serenade are all orchestral miniatures of much pastoral charm. The CD ends with the brief A Royal Night of Variety, written for the BBC in 1934, which starts robustly and ends unexpectedly quietly.

Throughout these six collections the BBC National Orchestra of Wales are on top form. They obviously enjoy the music, Hickox is persuasively idiomatic and spontaneous, and the Chandos recording is first class.

Allegro moderato for Strings; Dance Poem; Dance Rhapsody; 2 Poems (The Open Air; The Story of my Heart); Rebus Overture

 Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 243. LPO, Braithwaite

This anthology spans Frank Bridge's creative career. The most important work here is the Rebus Overture, dating from 1940, spare and original in its scoring – and for that matter in substance. This was his last complete work, but in the year of his death he had also nearly finished the Allegro moderato (or Symphony) for String Orchestra: its inconclusive final cadence surely suggests more music to come, but the final page of the score of what exists has been reconstructed by Anthony Pope from a complete and fairly explicit sketch. These are all valuable additions to Bridge's representation on record, and it would be hard to imagine more responsive and idiomatic orchestral playing than the LPO's under Nicholas Braithwaite or more sumptuous and vivid analogue sound.

(i) Enter Spring; (ii) The Sea

Ⓜ  BBC mono/stereo BBCB 8007-2. (i) New Phil. O; (ii) ECO, Britten – HOLST: Fugal Concerto, etc. BRITTEN: The Building of the House: Overture ***

Benjamin Britten as Frank Bridge's devoted pupil conveys a warmth and depth of understanding which transform two of Bridge's finest, most ambitious orchestral works, both evocative and intensely imaginative, giving them a focus that other interpreters do not always find. The radio recordings have been very well transferred.

Phantasm for Piano and Orchestra

Ⓜ  Dutton CDLX 7223 Stott, RPO, Handley – IRELAND: Piano Concerto *; WALTON: Sinfonia concertante ***

Bridge's curiously titled Phantasm is a large-scale piano concerto, some 26 minutes long, in a single, massive movement. Kathryn Stott, most sympathetically accompanied by Vernon Handley, and the RPO, proves a persuasive, committed interpreter, matching her achievement in the other two works on the disc, and especially the delightful Ireland Piano Concerto. Warm, generally well-balanced (originally Conifer) recording.

Oration: Concerto elegiaco (for cello & orchestra)

* Nim. NI 5763. Wallfisch, RLPO, Dickins – ELGAR: Cello Concerto; HOLST: Invocation ***

Ⓑ  EMI 5 05916-2. Isserlis, City of L. Sinfonia, Hickox – BRITTEN: Cello Symphony ***

Bridge's masterly Oration was written in 1929/30: its ethos is a passionate outcry against the human slaughter of the First World War, which haunted the composer. The work is written in a single movment like an arch, with seven diverse episodes, and the solo cello dominating hauntingly throughout. The work is superbly played by Raphael Wallfisch, movingly accompanied by the RLPO, sensitively directed by Richard Dickins. The recording is beautifully balanced, and of the highest quality. The coupled Elgar and Holst performances are no less distinctive.

Though Isserlis is not always as passionate as Julian Lloyd Webber on the earlier, Lyrita CD (SRCD 244), his focus is sharper, and with Hickox at the helm he brings out the originality of the writing all the more cleanly. It is fascinating to find some passages anticipating the more abrasive side of Britten and specifically the Cello Symphony, with which this is coupled.

The Sea (suite)

🔑 Ⓜ * Chan. 10426X. Ulster O, Handley – BAX: On the Sea-Shore; BRITTEN: Sea Interludes; STANFORD: Irish Rhapsody 4 ****

The Sea receives a brilliant and deeply sympathetic performance from Handley and the Ulster Orchestra, recorded with a fullness and vividness to make this a demonstration disc. The Stanford Rhapsody makes a splendid bonus for this highly desirable reissue.

Suite for String Orchestra

 Chan. 8390. ECO, Garforth – IRELAND: Downland Suite, etc. ***

 Nim. NI 5068. E. String O, Boughton – BUTTERWORTH: Banks of Green Willow, etc.; PARRY: Lady Radnor's Suite ***

Suite for String Orchestra; Summer; There is a willow grows aslant a brook

Ⓜ  Chan. 6566. Bournemouth Sinf., Del Mar – BANTOCK: Pierrot of the Minute; BUTTERWORTH: Banks of Green Willow ***

Summer is beautifully played by the Bournemouth Sinfonietta under Norman Del Mar. The same images of nature permeate the miniature tone-poem, There is a willow grows aslant a brook, an inspired piece, very sensitively managed. The Suite for String Orchestra is equally individual. Its third movement, a Nocturne, is lovely. The CD transfer is excellent and one can relish its fine definition and presence.

The ECO also play well for David Garforth in the Suite for String Orchestra. This performance is extremely committed; it is certainly recorded excellently, with great clarity and presence.

The Nimbus collection is more generous and is certainly well chosen. Here Bridge's Suite again receives a lively and responsive performance, from William Boughton and his excellent Birmingham-based orchestra, treated to ample, sumptuously atmospheric recording, more resonant than its competitors.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Cello Sonata

 Chan. 8499. Raphael & Peter Wallfisch – BAX: Rhapsodic Ballad; DELIUS: Sonata; WALTON: Passacaglia ***

It is a distinctive world that Bridge evokes in the Cello Sonata and one to which Raphael Wallfisch and his father, Peter, are completely attuned, and they are beautifully recorded.

Cello Sonata; Berceuse; Cradle Song; Elegie; Meditation; Melodie; Scherzo; Serenade; Spring Song

 Simax PSC 1160. Birkeland, Anvik – BRITTEN: Cello Sonata ***

The Norwegian partnership of Øystein Birkeland and Vebjørn Anvik is totally inside the Bridge idiom and they give fluent and impressive accounts not only of the Sonata but also of the companion pieces. Sympathetic performances and excellent recorded sound.

3 Idylls for String Quartet

 Hyp. CDA 66718. Coull Qt – ELGAR: Quartet (*); WALTON: Quartet ***

As this superb, purposeful performance by the Coull Quartet shows, the Three Idylls, each marked by sharp changes of mood as a phantasie-form, make up a satisfying whole, a quartet in all but name. Excellent sound.

(i) Piano Quintet. 3 Idylls; String Quartet 4

Ⓝ * Hyp. CDA 67726. (i) Lane; Goldner Qt

The Piano Quintet dates from 1905, but Bridge completely rewrote it in 1912. The passionate energy of the original first movement remains, but it is the memorable secondary theme that all but dominates. The broodingly enticing Adagio frames a sparkling scherzo and the finale reintroduces the main ideas from the first movement at its climax. It is altogether most rewarding, and with Piers Lane leading the Goldner Quartet the performance here has irresistible impetus and responds to the music's rich lyrical feeling.

The Three Idylls, the second of which Britten used for his celebrated Variations, are sheer delight, the first ravishingly delicately sensuous, and the third more animated but no less winning. They are most beautifully played here. The Fourth Quartet (1937), Bridge's last chamber work, is thematically and harmonically much more forward-looking, although it is not atonal. Its atmosphere has a haunted quality, with even the central Quasi minuetto far from conventional. The finale is pithily energetic, and one again Bridge closes with quotations from his first movement. But the work has moments of ethereal beauty that place it among the composer's most deeply felt music.

(i) Phantasie Quartet. Phantasie Trio in C min.; Piano Trio 2

🔑 (BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55063. Dartington Trio, (i) with Patrick Ireland

The playing of the Phantasie Trio by the Dartington Trio is of exceptional eloquence and sensitivity. They are no less persuasive in the Phantasie Quartet. Their account of the visionary post-war Piano Trio 2 of 1929 is completely inside this score. The Hyperion recording is altogether superb, in the demonstration bracket, perfectly natural and beautifully proportioned, and this is even more attractive on the bargain Helios label.

(i) Phantasie Quartet; Piano Trio 2; Miniatures for Piano Trio (Set 3); (ii) String Quartets 3 & 4

 Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 302 (2). (i) Tunnell Trio; (ii) Allegri Qt

If the most haunting work here is the Piano Trio 2 of 1929, the Phantasie Quartet, written 19 years earlier, shows more than just promise. The Miniatures (Valse Russe, Hornpipe and Marche Militaire) are uncomplicated but charming. The Third Quartet of 1927 is a powerful piece, even showing affinities with the Second Viennese school, while the pithier, more rarefied Fourth Quartet equally reveals the questing spirit. All this music is beautifully played and recorded, and is well worth investigating.

Phantasie Trio in C min.; Piano Trio 2; 9 Miniatures for Piano Trio

Ⓝ 🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.570792 Liebeck, Chaushian, Wass

Jack Liebeck and his colleagues, Alexander Chaushian and the sensitive Ashley Wass, provide here a genuinely inspirational collection of Frank Bridge's chamber music with a glorious performance of the visionary Second Piano Trio balanced by the Phantasie Trio and the engaging Nine Miniatures, lightweight and winningly varied, but never trivial. They are splendidly recorded and this inexpensive disc is the ideal way to begin an exploration of Bridge's chamber music.

String Quartets 1 (Bologna); 3

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.557133. Maggini Qt

String Quartets 2 in G min.; 4; (i) Phantasie Quartet in F sharp min. (for piano, violin, viola & cello)

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.557283. Maggini Qt, (i) with Roscoe

The Maggini's complete outstanding cycle, arguably the finest British contribution to quartet literature. The Phantasie Quartet, with Martin Roscoe joining three of the quartet members, in seven sections lasting only 12 minutes, is another striking piece in Bridge's early style. Passionate performances and vivid recording.

String Sextet in E flat

🔑  Kleos KL 5142. Concertante – KORNGOLD: Sextet ***

 Chan. 9472. ASMF Chamber Ens. – GOOSSENS: Concertino, etc. ***

The splendid American string group Concertante are completely at home in this very appealing work of Frank Bridge, fully capturing its underlying, very English nostalgia, which appears in the secondary theme of the first movement and dominates the haunting Adagio (with its central Scherzo) and is felt again in the lyrical essence of the finale, which is to quote the work's opening theme at its close. The performance is warmly persuasive throughout, making this a totally memorable coupling for the similarly unfamiliar Korngold Sextet.

The Academy of St Martin-in-the-Fields Chamber Ensemble also plays with great eloquence.

Piano music (complete)

 Continuum CCD 1016, 1018 & 1019. Jacobs

Peter Jacobs provides a complete survey of the piano music of Frank Bridge, and it proves an invaluable enterprise. The recorded sound is very good indeed: clean, well defined and present, and the acoustic lively. Calum MacDonald's excellent notes tracking Bridge's development over these years are worth a mention too.

Fairy Tale Suite; The Hour Glass; In Autumn; 3 Lyrics; Miniature Pastorals, Set I; 3 Pieces; 3 Poems

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.557842. Wass

Bridge's writing has a pensive simplicity, an almost ingenuous quality which is all his own. The Three Pieces are from 1912, and the first, Columbine, is a deliciously inconsequential portrait in waltz-time, and the third, a Romance, is charmingly and delicately understated but the most concentrated in feeling is the central Ecstasy, gently simmering. Wass's performances are totally sympathetic throughout, he is beautifully recorded, and this programme will give much pleasure.

Piano Sonata; 3 Improvisations for the Left Hand; Lament for Catherine; Moderato; Pensées fugitives I: Andante moderato. 3 Sketches; Scherzettino

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.557921. Wass

Much of this music was influenced by the composer's response to the slaughter of the First World War. The Piano Sonata, written between 1921 and 1924, is a formidable work, with its considerable dissonance arising from bitonal and very chromatic harmony. Reward for the listener then comes in the touchingly beautiful Lament for Catherine (a child drowned in the Lusitania). The three tellingly atmospheric Improvisations for the Left Hand (At Dawn, A Vigil and A Revel) were composed for a pianist who had lost his arm in the war. But the Three Sketches make a charming interlude from violence (looking back nostalgically), and the programme ends with a dazzling Scherzettino which Ashley Wass plays with delicious precision. This is a real showpiece, but he is truly at home in all this music and is admirably recorded.

BRITTEN, Benjamin (1913–76)

The Hidden Heart – A Life of Benjamin Britten and Peter Pears

Ⓝ  EMI DVD 50999 2 16571-9. (Ed. Jake Martin, Exec. Prods: Nicolas Kent, Vanessa Phillips, Producer & Director Teresa Griffiths)

This fine documentary was originally produced for Channel 4 and offers an intimate and sympathetic portrait of the composer and his friend and interpreter, Peter Pears. Those taking part include Pears' niece, and briefly, members of the Britten family, Donald Mitchell and John Evans. The programme is full of valuable documentary and archival material and concentrates on three periods of Britten's life, Peter Grimes from the war's end, with an engaging contribution from the original apprentice, the War Requiem from the 1960s and his last opera, Death in Venice imaginatively pictured and evoked with Robert Tear in the role of Aschenbach, and illuminating commentary by James Bowman and John Amis. It brings both the composer and Peter Pears vividly to life and affords many insights into their achievement.

A Time There Was: A portrait of the composer by Tony Palmer

 Isolde Films Digital Classics DVD DC10017 (Contributions from Benjamin Britten, Janet Baker, Leonard Bernstein, Julian Bream, Heather Harper, Imogen Holst, Peter Pears, Sviatoslav Richter, the ECO, Steuart Bedford)

Tony Palmer uses the title of Britten's last and haunting orchestral suite for his indispensable survey of the composer's life. There are contributions from Britten himself, from Peter Pears and members of the Britten family, and from Imogen Holst, Bernstein, Richter and Janet Baker among many others. The archival material is invaluable and the extracts include Peter Grimes, The Rape of Lucretia, Billy Budd and the Turn of the Screw, as well as the exquisite Nocturne, Sinfonia da Requiem and the GPO film, Night Mail. This portrait is rounded (the assistant producer is Donald Mitchell, so it carries special authority) and sympathetic, and it brings the viewer closer to the unique qualities of Britten's genius.

An American Overture; Ballad of Heroes; The Building of the House; Canadian Carnival; (i) Diversions for Piano (left hand) & Orchestra. Occasional Overture; Praise we Great Men; Scottish Ballad; Sinfonia da Requiem; Suite on English Folk Tunes; A time there was; Young Apollo; (ii) 4 Chansons françaises

🔑 Ⓑ  EMI 5 73983-2 (2). (i) Donohoe; (ii) Gomez, CBSO Ch.; CBSO, Rattle

A valuable compilation, most of it rare. It is good to have the Diversions for Piano (left hand) and Orchestra, with Peter Donohoe as soloist – amazingly, this was the first version in stereo – and the most cherishable item of all is the radiant performance by Jill Gomez of the four Chansons françaises, the remarkable and tenderly affecting settings of Hugo and Verlaine composed by the 15-year-old Britten. This fine collection is most economically priced and as such is unmissable.

An American Overture; Sinfonia da Requiem, Op. 20; Peter Grimes: 4 Sea Interludes & Passacaglia, Op. 33

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.553107. New Zealand SO, Fredman

Myer Fredman conducts warm and purposeful performances of this group of orchestral works from early in Britten's career. Dramatic and atmospheric points are well made with the help of a warm hall acoustic and full-ranging recording. Recommendable at super-budget price.

Canadian Carnival, Op. 19; (i) Violin Concerto, Op. 15. (with LENNOX BERKELEY) Mont Juic, Op. 12

(BB)  Naxos 8.557198 (i) McAslan; ECO, Bedford

Britten's Violin Concerto grows in stature with each hearing, and Lorraine McAslan and the ECO under Steuart Bedford give a particularly intense and sensitive account. It is a most moving account, in some ways even more searching than Mark Lubotsky's with the composer himself conducting, on Decca. The Canadian Carnival is not a major piece and is much influenced by Copland. Mont Juic, a suite of Catalan dances, is a joint composition, the first two movements being by Lennox Berkeley, the last two by Britten. It is witty, colourful and melodious, and the Lament is poignant. Bedford gets impressive results from the ECO, and in the concerto the balance between soloist and orchestra is most realistically and musically judged. A distinguished issue in every way, and a bargain at the price.

The Building of the House: Overture, Op. 79

Ⓜ  BBC mono/stereo BBCB 8007-2. ECO, composer – BRIDGE: The Sea, etc.; HOLST: Fugal Concerto, etc. ***

Ⓜ  BBC BBCL 4140-2. New Philh. Ch. and O, Giulini – SCHUBERT: Symphony 9; WEBER: Der Freischütz: Overture ***

Written for the opening of the Maltings Concert Hall in June 1967, The Building of the House Overture comes in a performance Britten conducted only two days after the première. The excitement of the occasion is carried over, even though the choral entry is initially off-pitch. A historic supplement to Britten's revealing interpretations of Bridge and Holst, well transferred from a radio recording.

Giulini's is a dramatic rather than a polished reading, with the New Philharmonia Chorus brought in to sing the passages from Psalm 127 that distinguish this energetic but relatively lightweight piece.

Clarinet Concerto Movement (orch. Matthews)

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55060. King, ECO, Wordsworth – ARNOLD: Clarinet Concertos 1–2; Scherzetto; MACONCHY: Concertinos ***

Benny Goodman commissioned the young Benjamin Britten to write a concerto for him. Sadly, just before Britten returned to England, Goodman suggested a delay, and the composer never even sorted out the sketches. Colin Matthews, who worked closely with Britten during his last three years, has here fathomed what Britten intended and has orchestrated the result to make a highly attractive short piece, alternately energetic and poetic, with material adroitly interchanged and percussion used most imaginatively. Thea King, as in the rest of the disc, plays the piece most persuasively, making one deeply regret that it was never completed.

(i) Piano Concerto; (ii) Violin Concerto, Op. 15

🔑 Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 473 715-2. (i) Richter; (ii) Lubotsky; ECO, composer

(i; ii) Piano Concerto; (ii) Johnson over Jordan: Suite; (iii) Overture: Paul Bunyan (arr. Colin Matthews)

(BB)  Naxos 8.557197. (i) MacGregor; (ii) ECO; (iii) LSO; Bedford

Richter is almost incomparable in interpreting the Piano Concerto, not only the thoughtful, introspective moments but also the Liszt-like bravura passages. With its highly original sonorities the Violin Concerto makes a splendid vehicle for another Soviet artist of the time, Mark Lubotsky. Recorded in The Maltings, the playing of the ECO under the composer's direction matches the inspiration of the soloists.

Joanna MacGregor's powerful performance of Britten's Piano Concerto has a formidable advantage over rival versions when it includes as a supplement the slow movement from the original (1938) version of the Concerto, which Britten replaced with the impressive Impromptu when he revised the work in 1945. Steuart Bedford is the ever-sympathetic conductor in this and the other two works, the overture for the early opera, Paul Bunyan, with orchestration amplified by Colin Matthews, and the incidental music which Britten wrote in 1939 for J. B. Priestley's Johnson over Jordan, one of his 'time' plays. Written at high speed, the score is most enjoyable and includes one gem in the delightful dance-band parody, The Spider and the Fly.

Violin Concerto in D min., Op. 15

🔑  Warner 2564 60291-2. Hope, BBC SO, Watkins – BERG: Violin Concerto ***

Ⓝ Ⓜ  EMI 2 28525-2 Vengerov, LSO, Rostropovich – WALTON: Viola Concerto

 Chan. 9910. Mordkovitch, BBC SO, Hickox – VEALE: Violin Concerto ***

(i) Violin Concerto, Op. 15; (ii) Symphony for Cello & Orchestra, Op. 68

(BB)  Naxos 8.553882. (i) Hirsch; (ii) Hugh; BBC Scottish SO, Yuasa

(i) Violin Concerto; (ii) Serenade for Tenor, Horn & Strings, Op. 31

Ⓑ  CfP 5 75978-2. (i) Friend; (ii) Partridge, Busch; LPO, Pritchard – TIPPETT: Concerto for Double String Orchestra ***

As in the Berg Concerto, with which his account of the Britten is coupled, Daniel Hope sustains broad speeds in the spacious outer movements, conveying passionate intensity without expressive exaggeration. The slow passacaglia of the finale is particularly moving, from Hope's ethereal first entry to the inner meditation of the closing pages, while fast music finds him playing with sharp clarity of articulation. The cellist Paul Watkins demonstrates his formidable powers as a conductor, drawing comparably warm, sympathetic playing from the BBC Symphony Orchestra, fully and brilliantly recorded.

The unexpected conjunction in English music of the young Maxim Vengerov and the veteran Rostropovich brings the most ravishing string playing, and the greatness of both works is reinforced. The sweetness of Vengerov's playing in the high-lying cantilena of the first movement is nothing short of heavenly, matched by the 'dance of death' rhythms of the exuberant central Scherzo. When a virtuoso so completely masters a challenge, the fun behind the demonic music is evident, and the long Passacaglia finale finds both soloists and conductor so concentrated that each section builds up with unstoppable momentum, while the long epilogue ends on a breathtaking 'inquieto'.

Rodney Friend proves a masterful soloist in the Violin Concerto, magnificently incisive and expressive. As for Ian Partridge, one of the most consistently stylish of recording tenors, he gives a reading, often strikingly new in its illumination, more tenderly beautiful than Peter Pears's classic reading, culminating in a heavenly performance of the final Keats sonnet setting. Excellent recording in both works and a fine Tippett coupling, giving an overall playing time of 79 minutes.

The hushed opening, which can seem just sweet and easy, here conveys mystery and expectation thanks to Mordkovitch, and the tautness and purposefulness of her bravura playing then keep the wayward structure together, helped by warmly responsive playing from the BBC Symphony under Hickox. The opulent Chandos recording, finely detailed, bringing out the richness of Mordkovitch's tone and the high dramatic contrasts of the orchestra, adds greatly to the impact.

Tim Hugh gives a superb reading of Britten's Cello Symphony, strong and purposeful, making light of the formidable technical demands and the gritty double-stopping, with lyrical moments standing out. Rebecca Hirsch gives a spacious reading of the Violin Concerto, her tone clear and fresh rather than warmly romantic. The scherzando writing of the middle movement is full of fun, and the elegiac close of the finale is made poignant by understatement. Full, clear recording, with timpani specially vivid.

(i) Double Concerto in B min. for Violin, Viola & Orchestra. 2 Portraits for Strings; Sinfonietta (version for small orchestra); (ii) Young Apollo (for piano, string quartet & strings), Op. 16

Ⓜ  Warner Elatus 0927 46718-2. (i) Kremer, Bashmet; (ii) Lugansky; Hallé O, Nagano

This striking three-movement Double Concerto for Violin and Viola was left in short score with indications of orchestration, which Colin Matthews had little difficulty in completing. It is stylistically less radical than the Sinfonietta, warmer and more recognizably the work of Britten, with its distinctive melodies and orchestration both spare and striking. It receives a magnetic reading here from the two high-powered Russian soloists, with Kent Nagano and the Hallé Orchestra. The Sinfonietta comes in a version that Britten made in America, for small orchestra rather than solo instruments, and the Two Portraits, written when Britten was 16, offers a vigorous, purposeful picture of a friend and a reflective, melancholy one of himself, with the viola solo beautifully played by Bashmet. A revelatory disc.

(i) Double Concerto for Violin and Viola (ed. Colin Matthews); Variations on a Theme of Frank Bridge, Op. 10; (ii) Les Illuminations, Op. 18

Ⓝ 🔑 Ⓜ * LPO 0037 LPO, Jurowski; with (i) Schoeman, Zemtsov; (ii) Sally Matthews

The Double Concerto brings inspired solo contributions from Pieter Schoeman and Alexander Zemtsov who play with great delicacy of feeling and warmth to reveal this work (in Colin Matthews's completion) among the composer's most memorable. That description certainly applies also to the Variations, which are given a splendidly characterized account under Jurowski which brings much orchestral bravura as well as a rich depth of feeling. The hat trick is completed by Sally Matthews in Les Illuminations, a work which is more often given to a male singer. Here she triumphantly demonstrates how ravishingly the cycle projects on a soprano voice, and besides creating much lyrical beauty, she is arrestingly dramatic in her invocations of 'Towns'. Excellently vivid recording throughout, which confirms this as a key Britten triptych.

(i) Lachrymae, Op. 48a. Movement for Wind Sextet; (ii) Night Mail (end sequence). Sinfonietta; The Sword in the Stone (concert suite for wind & percussion); (iii) Phaedra, Op. 93

 Hyp. CDA 66845. (i) Chase; (ii) Hawthorne; (iii) Rigby; Nash Ens., Friend

Lachrymae, for viola with string accompaniment, is played here with the beauty intensified, thanks to the firm, true playing of Roger Chase. Both the Sinfonietta and the Wind Sextet movement of 1930 reflect the mature Britten style only occasionally. The concert suite for wind and percussion was drawn from music for a radio production of T. H. White's ironic Arthurian piece, The Sword in the Stone, and brings some delightful Wagner parodies. It is also good to have the final sequence from Britten's music for the GPO film documentary, Night Mail, with Auden's rattling verse spoken by Nigel Hawthorne. In the dramatic scena, Phaedra, Jean Rigby sings beautifully but lacks the biting intensity of Janet Baker. Excellent playing from the Nash Ensemble, and first-rate recording.

Lachrymae; Prelude & Fugue for 18-part String Orchestra; Simple Symphony; A time there was . . . (suite on English folk tunes), Op. 90; Variations on a Theme of Frank Bridge; Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra. (i) Song-cycles: Les Illuminations, Op. 18; Nocturne, Op. 60; (i; ii) Serenade for Tenor, Horn & Strings, Op. 31. Gloriana: Courtly Dances. Peter Grimes: 4 Sea Interludes

Ⓑ (*) Nim. NI 1751 (3). E. String O or ESO, Boughton; with (i) Hadley; (ii) Halstead

This inexpensive bargain box will seem to many collectors an admirable way of collecting Britten's key orchestral works plus the three major song-cycles. In the latter, Jerry Hadley is a dramatic and involving soloist; his is not far short of an operatic approach, with the crystal-clear projection of words and histrionic power of his singing compensating for some lack of subtlety in word-colouring. Les Illuminations (in easily colloquial French) is strikingly fresh and spontaneous, and in the Nocturne, which opens magnetically and evocatively, the orchestral playing is full of tension. Anthony Halstead's horn contribution in the Serenade is hardly less impressive. William Boughton shows himself a fine Britten advocate throughout, and the works both for strings and for full orchestra are most sympathetically played and certainly do not lack vitality. The recording (for the most part made in the Great Hall of Birmingham University) is outstandingly rich and resonant in a characteristic Nimbus way, while the powerful evocation of the Peter Grimes Sea Interludes is enhanced by the acoustic of Birmingham's Symphony Hall – one of the first recordings to be made there. Excellent value.

(i) Lachrymae, Op. 48a. Simple Symphony, Op. 4; Suite on English Folk Tunes, Op. 90; (ii) Temporal Variations (orch. C. Matthews); (iii) A Charm of Lullabies, Op. 41 (orch. C. Matthews)

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.557205. N. Sinf., Bedford, with (i) Dukes; (ii) Daniel; (iii) Wyn-Rogers

Steuart Bedford brings the keenest intelligence and intuitive feeling to everything here. The anthology spans the whole of Britten's career. The Temporal Variations of 1936, originally for oboe and piano, are effectively scored for strings by Colin Matthews – as, for that matter is his orchestration of A Charm of Lullabies of 11 years later. The elegiac, valedictory Suite on English Folk Tunes is touching and affecting, and Bedford's is the finest reading of it in the current catalogue. All the soloists are impeccable and the disc fills an important gap in the Britten discography with real distinction, to say nothing of economy.

(i; ii) Lachrymae; (i) Simple Symphony; Variations on a Theme of Frank Bridge; Young Apollo, Op. 16. (iii) Death in Venice: Suite (arr. Bedford); (iv) Peter Grimes: 4 Sea Interludes & Passacaglia

Ⓑ  Chan. 2-for-1 241-2 (2). (i) Montreal I Musici, Turovsky; (ii) Golani; (iii) ECO, Bedford; (iv) Ulster O, Handley

Young Apollo is particularly successful here, with vivid recording capturing the unusual textures with piano and string quartet as well as strings. Rivka Golani is a resonant soloist in Lachrymae, and the Variations and Simple Symphony have similar heft, helped by the rich, upfront recording. Representing Britten's operas, Steuart Bedford's Death in Venice Suite is well worth having, and Handley's Peter Grimes excerpts are second only to Previn's splendid EMI recording, helped by richly atmospheric digital sound of demonstration quality. This is one of the most recommendable of Chandos's two-for-one Doubles.

(i) Matinées musicales; Soirées musicales; (ii; iv) Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra; (iii; iv) Peter Grimes: 4 Sea Interludes & Passacaglia

Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 425 659-2. (i) Nat. PO, Bonynge; (ii) LSO; (iii) ROHCG O; (iv) composer

Bonynge's sparkling versions of the Matinées and Soirées musicales are here reissued, coupled with Britten's accounts of the Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra and the Sea Interludes and Passacaglia.

Occasional Overture; Prelude & Fugue for 18-Part String Orchestra; Variations on a Theme of Frank Bridge; Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra.

(BB)  Naxos 8.557200. LSO or ECO, Bedford

The Occasional Overture is a rumbustious piece that might almost have been written by Malcolm Arnold rather than Britten. All three performances here under Steuart Bedford are of the highest calibre, with superb playing from the strings of the ECO in the Frank Bridge Variations and Prelude and Fugue, and the LSO on top form in the other two works. Excellent recording too. Originally issued by Collins, this is a genuine Naxos bargain.

Prelude & Fugue for 18 Solo Strings, Op. 29; Simple Symphony Op. 4; Variations on a Theme of Frank Bridge, Op. 10

🔑 Ⓑ  ASV Resonance CD RSN 3042. N. Sinf., Hickox

This ASV reissue is notable for an outstandingly fine account of the Frank Bridge Variations which stands up well alongside the composer's own version. Hickox's reading encompasses the widest range of emotion and style; throughout, the string playing is commitedly responsive, combining polish with eloquence, the rich sonorities resonating powerfully in the glowing ambience of All Saints Quayside Church, Newcastle. Even if in the Simple Symphony Hickox does not quite match the composer's rhythmic bounce in the Playful Pizzicato, he finds a strain of nobilmente in the Sentimental Sarabande. The Prelude and Fugue is comparably eloquent, although here the playing is marginally less assured. The 1987 recording is excellent.

The Prince of the Pagodas (Complete Ballet; choreography Kenneth Macmillan)

🔑  Warner DVD 9031-738262. Darcey Bussell, Jonathan Cope, Artists of The Royal Ballet, ROHCG O, Ashley Lawrence (V/D: Derek Bailey). Includes Out of Line (feature on Kenneth Macmillan by Derek Bailey)

The Prince of the Pagodas is a masterly score that repays much repetition, and both the outer Acts are wonderfully inventive. The performances of Darcey Bussell as Princess Rose and Jonathan Cope as the Prince are every bit as impressive as we remembered them, and MacMillan's choreography is, as always, distinguished by imagination and his great musicality. The DVD also includes the feature on MacMillan by Derek Bailey which is full of interest and includes excerpts from some of his other ballets, but seeing MacMillan's choreography greatly enhances the musical experience.

(i) The Prince of the Pagodas (complete ballet: CD version); (ii) Gloriana (Symphonic Suite, Op. 53a)

Ⓑ  EMI 3 52274-2 (2). (i) L. Sinf., Knussen; (ii) Bournemouth SO, Segal

The multicoloured instrumentation of The Prince of the Pagodas – much influenced by Britten's visit to Bali – is caught with glorious richness in Oliver Knussen's complete version of the full-length ballet. The ballet is paired with a suite of music from Gloriana which, by concentrating on the pageant sequence remains enjoyable in its own right when the performance is warmly understanding and vividly recorded, even if the playing of the Bournemouth Orchestra is not quite as crisp in ensemble as in some of its finest records.

Simple Symphony, Op. 4.

🔑 (BB)  Warner Apex 2564 61437-2. RPO, Warren-Green – BUTTERWORTH: Banks of Green Willow; ELGAR: String Serenade; HOLST: St Paul's Suite; VAUGHAN WILLIAMS: Fantasia on a Theme of Tallis ***

A truly outstanding super-bargain anthology. Christopher Warren-Green is an underrated conductor of English music and here he is at his most spontaneously successful. The outer movements of the Simple Symphony sparkle with vivacity, the Playful Pizzicato bounces with joy and the Sentimental Sarabande has never been more touchingly expressive. Excellent sound.

(i) Sinfonia da Requiem; (ii) Symphony for Cello & Orchestra, Op. 68; (iii) Cantata misericordium, Op. 69

Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 425 100-2. (i) New Philh. O; (ii) Rostropovich, ECO; (iii) Pears, Fischer-Dieskau, L. Symphony Ch., LSO; composer

All the performances on the Decca CD are definitive, and Rostropovich's account of the Cello Symphony in particular is commanding. The CD transfers are managed admirably.

Sinfonia da Requiem, Op. 20; Gloriana: Symphonic Suite, Op. 52a; Peter Grimes: 4 Sea Interludes & Passacaglia

(BB)  Naxos 8.557196. LSO, Bedford

Steuart Bedford conducts strong, idiomatic performances of these works, helped by exceptionally vivid recording. The atmosphere of the Peter Grimes Interludes is caught superbly, and the Sinfonia da Requiem, treated expansively, culminates in a radiant account of the final Requiem aeternam.

Sinfonia da Requiem, Op. 20; Peter Grimes: 4 Sea Interludes & Passacaglia

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * EMI 5 62615-2. LSO, Previn – HOLST: Egdon Heath, etc. ***

Previn gives a passionately intense reading of the Sinfonia da Requiem, the most ambitious of Britten's early orchestral works, written after the death of his parents. It is warmer than the composer's own, less sharply incisive but presenting a valid alternative. So too in the Four Sea Interludes, with Previn springing the bouncing rhythms of the second interlude – the picture of Sunday Morning in the Borough – even more infectiously than the composer himself. These superb performances are presented in expansive 1970s recordings of demonstration quality. With its new Holst coupling, this is one of Previn's finest CDs, fully worthy of inclusion among EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century'.

Sinfonietta, Op. 1

 Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 257. ECO, Del Mar – ARNOLD; BERKELEY: Sinfoniettas; RAWSTHORNE; TIPPETT: Divertimentos ***

 BIS CD 540. Tapiola Sinf., Vänskä – Nocturne, etc. ***

Britten's Opus 1 was written when he was in his teens. It has some of the composer's fingerprints, but points uncharacteristically towards central Europe. In the ECO version with full strings, its astringency and assurance are the more convincing, particularly in a performance as fine as this on Lyrita.

The Sinfonietta is also presented on BIS with rare strength and warmth to make it totally convincing. It is very well recorded and comes with an attractive collection of vocal music.

Symphony for Cello & Orchestra, Op. 68

🔑  Virgin 5 45356-2. Mørk, CBSO, Rattle – ELGAR: Cello Concerto ***

Ⓑ  EMI 5 05916-2. Isserlis, City of L. Sinfonia, Hickox – BRIDGE: Oration ***

Ⓝ (*) Signum SIGCD137. Walton, Philh. O, Briger – SHOSTAKOVICH: Cello Concerto 2 (*)

(i) Symphony for Cello & Orchestra, Op. 68. Death in Venice: suite, Op. 88 (arr. Bedford)

Ⓜ  Chan. 10274X. (i) Wallfisch; ECO, Bedford

This is the second recording Truls Mørk has made of the Cello Symphony. He is completely attuned to the Britten sensibility, playing with ardour and vision. Rattle gets a superb response from the Birmingham players and the sound is state-of-the-art, with particularly impressive depth and naturalness of perspective.

Wallfisch and Bedford are purposeful, and the weight and range of the brilliant and full Chandos recording quality add to the impact, with direction even more spacious than the composer's. Steuart Bedford's encapsulation of Britten's last opera into this rich and colourful suite makes a splendid coupling.

With speeds generally a little slower, Isserlis is not quite as taut and electric as his rivals, partly because the recording does not present the solo instrument so cleanly. It remains a powerful, dramatic performance, highly recommendable if the Bridge coupling is preferred.

A welcome and intelligent coupling with an excellent soloist in Jamie Walton but let down by badly balanced recorded sound. Whether played on a simple straightforward set-up or highly sophisticated equipment, it still sounds unpleasing.

Variations & Fugue on a Theme by Frank Bridge; Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra; Peter Grimes: 4 Sea Interludes & Passacaglia

🔑 (BB)  Warner Apex 8573 89082-2. BBC SO, A. Davis

In his admirable British music series, Andrew Davis gives full weight as well as brilliance to these masterpieces from early in Britten's career, making a particularly attractive triptych. The Frank Bridge Variations, set here against the more popular Purcell set, gain particularly from large-scale treatment, with each variation strongly characterized. Excellent recording. This is one of the outstanding bargains among the Warner Classics super-bargain Apex series.

Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra (Variations & Fugue on a Theme of Purcell), Op. 34

 BBC Legends (ADD) BBCL4184-2. Leningrad PO, Rozhdestvensky – PROKOFIEV: Symphony 5; Romeo and Juliet: Death of Tybalt ***

Ⓑ  CfP 586 1752. LPO, Sian Edwards (with DEBUSSY: Children's Corner: 3 Pieces: ECO Wind Ens.) – PROKOFIEV: Peter and the Wolf (*); RAVEL: Ma Mère l'Oye ***

Ⓜ (*) BBC (ADD) BBCL 4005-2. BBC SO, Stokowski – BEETHOVEN: Symphony 7 *(); FALLA: El amor brujo **** ❀

Coupled with a dazzling, high-voltage account of Prokofiev's Fifth Symphony, Rozhdestvensky's Young Person's Guide comes from the Leningrad Orchestra's first visit to these shores at the 1960 Edinburgh Festival. The Britten receives a virtuosic account that still lifts the spirits and sounds extraordinarily vivid.

The underrated Sian Edwards, always impressive in the recording studio, does not press the earlier variations too hard, revelling in the colour of her wind soloists, yet the violins enter zestfully and the violas make a touching contrast. The brass bring fine bite and sonority, and the fugue has plenty of vitality, with the climax spectacularly expansive in the resonant acoustics of Watford Town Hall. The three pieces from Children's Corner, skilfully scored for wind by Graham Sheen, make a pleasing bonus, with the Golliwog's Cake-Walk easily the most effective.

Stokowski's 1962 Prom performance with the BBC Symphony Orchestra is quite spectacular. The whole occasion was highly charged and the quality of the orchestral response pretty breathtaking. Even if the opening is very relaxed, almost lethargic, this is a reading of outstanding personality and intensity, the sound very good for its age.

Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra (with narration)

(BB)  Naxos 8.554170. Everage, Melbourne SO, Lanchbery – POULENC: The Story of Babar  ❀; PROKOFIEV: Peter and the Wolf ***

Ⓜ (*) Decca Phase Four 444 104-2. Connery, RPO, Dorati – PROKOFIEV: Peter and the Wolf, etc. **(*)

Ⓑ  CfP (ADD) 3 82230-2. Richard Baker, New Philh. O, Leppard – PROKOFIEV: Peter and the Wolf; RAWSTHORNE: Practical Cats **

Using her own enthusiastically expanded version of the original commentary, Dame Edna Everage is sure to draw any young possum into the world of the orchestra. Her exuberance offsets any twee moments, and the Melbourne orchestra illustrate vivid instrumental descriptions with splendidly alive and colourful playing. The Naxos recording is excellent and, with its highly enjoyable couplings, this inexpensive triptych is warmly recommendable.

Sean Connery's voice is very familiar and his easy style is attractive. His narration should go down well with young people, even if some of the points are made heavily. The orchestral playing is first rate and the vivid, forwardly balanced recording – with a Decca Phase Four source – is effective enough. The performance has plenty of colour and vitality.

Richard Baker's rather cosy narration seems to hold up the flow of the music. The orchestral playing is lively and the recording vivid, but one feels there are too many words here: this is not a version to stand constant repetition. The great interest of this reissue is the inclusion of Rawsthorne's Practical Cats.

Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra; Peter Grimes: 4 Sea Interludes

🔑 * Telarc CD 80660. Cincinnati SO, Paavo Järvi – ELGAR: Enigma Variations ****

For anyone wanting Britten's two most popular orchestral works, together with Elgar's Enigma, this superbly recorded Telarc disc is an obvious choice. The Cincinnati Orchestra are on their toes throughout, and Järvi produces the most vividly refined detail. In the opening Dawn sequence in the Sea Interludes he creates a magical contrast between the high violins and the deep brass sonorities, and every variation in the Young Person's Guide is vividly projected, against a warmly atmospheric backcloth.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Cello Sonata in C, Op. 65

 Simax PSC 1160. Birkeland, Anvik – BRIDGE: Cello Sonata, etc. ***

(i) Cello Sonata in C; (Unaccompanied) Cello Suites 1, Op. 72; 2, Op. 80

🔑 Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 421 859-2. Rostropovich; (i) with composer

The strange, five-movement Cello Sonata was written especially for Rostropovich's appearance in 1961 at the Aldeburgh Festival. Although technically it demands fantastic feats of the cellist, it is hardly a display piece. It is an excellent work to wrestle with on a record, particularly when the performance is never likely to be outshone. The recording is superb in every way.

On Simax these Norwegian artists give as sympathetic and idiomatic account of the Britten Sonata as any now in the catalogue. Britten and Rostropovich command a special authority, but those wanting an alternative with up-to-date recorded sound need not hesitate.

Cello Suites (Suites for Unaccompanied Cello) 1, Op. 72; 2, Op. 80; 3, Op. 87

 Virgin 5 45399-2. Mørk

 BIS CD 446. Torleif Thedéen

The Norwegian cellist Truls Mørk gives richly eloquent accounts of all three suites. He produces a magnificent sound and has a flawless technique. Even if you have the pioneering Rostropovich set or one of its successors, you will find something new here.

Torleif Thedéen has magnificent tonal warmth and eloquence, and he proves a masterly advocate of these Suites, which sound thoroughly convincing in his hands, if not quite as powerful as Rostropovich in the concertos and sonatas.

(i) Gemini Variations (for violin, flute & piano duet), Op. 73; (ii) 2 Insect Pieces (for oboe & piano); (iii) Russian Festival (for brass); (iv; v) A Birthday Hansel, Op. 92; (iv; vi–viii) Cantata academica, Op. 62; (iv; vii; ix; x) Cantata misericordium, Op. 69; (iv; xi; xii) Canticle II (Abraham and Isaac); (xiii; x) Children's Crusade, Op. 82; (iv; xii) 6 Hölderlin Fragments, Op. 61; (xiv) Poet's Echo

Ⓜ  Decca ADD 468 811-2 (2). (i) Gábor & Zoltán Jeney; (ii) Holliger, Schiff; (iii) Philip Jones Brass, Iveson; (iv) Pears, (v) Ellis; (vi) Vyvyan, Watts, Brannigan, (vii) L. Symphony Ch., LSO, (viii) Malcolm; (ix) Fischer-Dieskau; (x) cond. Burgess; (xi) Procter; (xii) composer (piano); (xiii) Soloists, Wandsworth School Boys' Ch.; (xiv) Vishnevskaya, Rostropovich

This collection is called 'Rarities' and ranges from the Insect Pieces for oboe and piano of 1935 and the sonorous Russian Funeral of 1936 to A Birthday Hansel (a Burns setting celebrating the seventy-fifth birthday of the Queen Mother), completed the year before the composer's death. The Gemini Variations were commissioned by the Hungarian Jeney twins, who perform the piece here. More than anything the Cantata academica, written for Basle University, is an expression of joy and optimism, while in the Cantata misericordium (telling the story of the Good Samaritan) the composer's theme is the resolution of stress in peace and tranquillity which come from within.

The Children's Crusade is darker, a setting of a Brecht poem which in the most direct way, with vivid percussion effects, tells of children lost in Poland in 1939. The Poet's Echo, Britten's setting of Pushkin in the original Russian, was written for Vishnevskaya and with the help of her husband the performance is warm and highly atmospheric. The six Hölderlin Fragments, with Peter Pears responding eloquently, reflect a highly individual response to the German language and the sensitive word-painting of Hölderlin. (Surprisingly for Decca, no translations are included for either of these cycles.)

(i; ii) Lachrymae; (ii; iii; iv) Canticle 3: Still falls the rain, Op. 55; (iii; v) Our Hunting Fathers; (ii; iii) Who are these children?, Op. 84

((*)) BBC mono/stereo BBCB 8014-2. (i) Major; (ii) composer (piano); (iii) Pears; (iv) Brain; (v) LSO, composer

Our Hunting Fathers created something of a scandal when it was first performed, at the Norwich Festival in 1936, thanks to its anti-blood-sports theme, prompted by W. H. Auden. Pears is in superb voice, focused sharply in this rather dry mono BBC studio recording of 1961. In Lachrymae, the playing of Britten at the piano magnetizes the ear almost as in an improvisation, with the viola player Margaret Major characteristically warm in a beautifully sustained reading.

Who are these children? serves to intensify, by contrast, the darkness of the four more substantial war-inspired songs, with both Britten and Pears at their finest. It is good, too, to have this 1956 Aldeburgh Festival account of the Canticle 3 with Dennis Brain as horn soloist, warm even in face of a dry acoustic. The big snag is the absence of texts – particularly serious in the case of the little-known Soutar poems.

(i) 6 Metamorphoses after Ovid; (i; ii) Phantasy Quartet (for oboe, violin, viola & cello), Op. 2; (i; iii) 2 Insect Pieces; Temporal Variations; (iii) Holiday Diary, Op. 5; Night Piece; 5 Waltzes

🔑 (BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55154. (i) Francis; (ii) Delmé Qt (members); (iii) Dussek

Sarah Francis gives strong and distinctive characterizations not only to the six Ovid pieces but also to the early Phantasy Quartet and to the pieces for oboe and piano as well. Michael Dussek proves a magnetic interpreter of the solo piano music, bringing out the sparkle of the boyhood waltzes (or 'Walztes' as Britten originally called them) and the Holiday Diary. He then finds intense poetry and magic in the Night Piece.

String Quartets: in F (1928); in D (1931); 2, Op. 36

 Chan. 9664. Sorrel Qt

String Quartets 1 in D, Op. 25; 2 in C, Op. 36; 3 Divertimenti

(BB)  Naxos 8.553883. Maggini Qt

String Quartet 3, Op. 94; Quartettino (1930); Alla marcia (1933); Simple Symphony

(BB)  Naxos 8.554360. Maggini Qt

String Quartets 1–3; 3 Divertimenti

🔑 (M)  EMI 2 28518-2 (2). Belcea Qt

String Quartet 1 in D, Op. 25; 3 Divertimenti, Op. 36

🔑 ✿  Challenge CC 72106. Brodsky Qt – TCHAIKOVSKY: String Quartet 1  ✿ (Available from www.challengeclassics.com)

String Quartets 2 in C, Op. 36; 3, Op. 94

🔑  Challenge CC 72099. Brodsky Qt

In a compact two-disc package, the Belcea Quartet offer outstanding performances of all Britten's works for string quartet published in the composer's lifetime: the three numbered Quartets plus the brightly inventive Divertimenti of 1936, assembled from pieces written earlier. With the help of warm, full recorded sound, these are performances which from first to last bring out the originality of the timbres which Britten created in all the numbered Quartets.

The spontaneity of the playing of the Brodsky Quartet immediately grips the listener, with the gleamingly luminous opening of the D major Quartet bringing a raptly concentrated pianissimo, and this degree of intensity pervades the whole set of performances. The Three Divertimenti of 1936 are equally vividly characterized, the flimsy central Waltz delectably slight and transparent and full of charm. The recording could hardly be more real and present.

The Maggini give clean, direct performances of the first two numbered quartets, not as intense as some but fresh and thoughtful, well coupled with the three colourful Divertimenti of 1936. The Maggini's second CD is even finer than their first. They give a strongly characterized reading of Op. 94. The Poco adagio of the Quartettino is particularly searching, while the account of the Simple Symphony (which opens the programme) is as sprightly and sparkling as you could wish. First-class recording.

This première recording by the Sorrel Quartet of the F major work of 1928, his first written under the tutelage of Frank Bridge, is strong and confident, with hints of later Britten. The D major Quartet of 1931 was revised by the composer himself not long before he died. Warmly performed, they make a fine coupling for the magnificent Second Quartet, here made to start waywardly, leading to a passionate, concentrated reading, helped by wide-ranging sound.

String Quartet 2 in C. Op. 36

 Testament DVD SBDVD1001. Amadeus Qt – SCHUBERT: Piano Quintet in A (Trout); Quartettsatz ***

The Amadeus made the first recording of the Britten Op. 36 Quartet on seven 78-r.p.m. plum label sides, not long after its composition and their own formation. This performance was telerecorded in Aldeburgh by a team that included John Culshaw, previously of Decca but by then Head of Music at BBC Television. It is superbly and simply directed with totally unobtrusive camerawork and expertly balanced sound, with the legendary Jimmy Burnett in charge.

String Quartet 3, Op. 94

 Testament DVD SBDVD1002. Amadeus Qt – SCHUBERT: String Quintet in C ***

This performance came from the week devoted to Britten and Schubert at a special autumn festival in 1977 and, like its companion issue, was recorded by the same team. The performance is every bit as authoritative as (and even more moving than) the Decca sound recording discussed above and made at much the same time.

VOCAL MUSIC

Advance Democracy; (i) A Boy Was Born, Op. 3; 5 Flower Songs, Op. 47; Sacred and Profane, Op. 91

 Chan. 9701. Finzi Singers; (i) Lichfield Cathedral Choristers, Spicer

Advance Democracy, with its adventurous choral writing, sets the seal on a wide-ranging group of works representing Britten: both early (the nativity cantata, A Boy Was Born, written at the age of 19) and late (Sacred and Profane, dating from 1975, the year before Britten died, which poignantly sets death-obsessed medieval lyrics). The five Flower Songs, written in 1949, demonstrate Britten's gift for writing occasional music, pointful and elegant. Under Paul Spicer the Finzi

Singers give virtuoso performances, vividly caught in the warm and atmospheric Chandos recording.

A.M.D.G.; Chorale after an Old French Carol; 5 Flower Songs; Hymn to the Virgin; Sacred and Profane, Op. 91; Gloriana: Choral Dances

 Hyp. CDA 67140. Polyphony, Layton

Under Stephen Layton the brilliant group, Polyphony, give superb performances of a wide range of Britten's unaccompanied choral music, from the Hymn to the Virgin, written in 1930 when the teenage composer was confined to the school sickbay, to Sacred and Profane, one of his last works, settings of medieval texts both religious and secular, from the delicate Flower Songs to the often lusty dances from the Elizabethan opera, Gloriana, incisively done. A.M.D.G., sensitive settings of poems by Gerard Manley Hopkins was written in 1939 when Britten was in the United States. Finely balanced sound to match the refined beauty of the performances.

Antiphon; Festival Te Deum; Hymn to St Cecilia; A Hymn of St Columba; Hymn to St Peter; Hymn to the Virgin; Jubilate Deo; Missa brevis; Rejoice in the Lamb; Te Deum in C. (Organ) Prelude & Fugue on a Theme of Vittoria

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.554791. St John's College Ch., Robinson

This collection of 11 choral works may omit the much-recorded Ceremony of Carols but as a result it gives a wider view of Britten's achievement in this area, with Barry Holden's excellent notes relating each work to the composer's career and personal associations. The biting attack of these young singers is enhanced by refined recording which thrillingly brings out the wide dynamic contrasts. The Prelude and Fugue for organ with its elaborate counterpoint is also brilliantly done. The booklet includes full texts.

A Boy Was Born; Christ's Nativity; Hymn to the Virgin; Jubilate in C; Shepherd's Carol; Te Deum in C

 Hyp. CDA 66825. Gritton, Wyn-Rogers, Holst Singers, St Paul's Cathedral Choristers, Layton; Goode (organ)

Here is a disc to illustrate Britten's special fascination with the Christmas story, including Christ's Nativity. The writing has many bold and original touches typical of the mature composer, not least in the opening cries of Awake! Stephen Layton conducts a finely controlled performance, full of sharp dynamic and rhythmic contrasts. Despite speeds slower than usual, the performance of the cantata A Boy Was Born, of 1934, has similar merits, with the Jubilate and Te Deum made the more vigorous by the organ accompaniment of David Goode. Atmospheric, spacious choral sound.

A Boy Was Born; Festival Te Deum, Op. 32; Rejoice in the Lamb, Op. 30; A Wedding Anthem, Op. 46

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55307. Corydon Singers, Westminster Cathedral Ch., Best; Trotter (organ)

All the works included here are sharply inspired. The refinement and tonal range of the choirs could hardly be more impressive, and the recording is refined and atmospheric to match.

Canticles 1–5

(BB)  Hyp. Helios 55244. Rolfe Johnson, Chance, Opie, Vignoles, Williams, Thompson – PURCELL, arr. BRITTEN: An Evening Hymn, etc. ***

(M)  Decca (ADD) 425 716-2. Pears, Hahessy, Bowman, Shirley-Quirk, Tuckwell, Ellis, composer

 Virgin 5 45525-2. Bostridge, Daniels, Maltman, Drake, with Brown, Brewer (with 8 Folksongs, arr. Britten)

The Decca CD brings together on a single record all five of the miniature cantatas to which Britten gave the title 'Canticle', plus the Birthday Hansel, written in honour of the seventy-fifth birthday of Queen Elizabeth the Queen Mother, and a Purcell song-arrangement. A beautiful collection as well as a historical document, with recording that still sounds well.

The Hyperion versions make an excellent modern alternative. Rolfe Johnson's tenor is sweeter even than Pears's, most of all in the fifth of the Canticles, The Death of St Narcissus, written with harp accompaniment at the very end of Britten's life. Like the fourth, The Journey of the Magi, it sets a T. S. Eliot poem. The three Purcell realizations are shared among the soloists, one apiece, all representing Purcell at his most beautiful and intense.

Ian Bostridge's heady tenor is also ideally suited to the inflexions of Britten's music, and he gives colourful, vigorously dramatic readings of pieces that can seem wayward, helped by inspired accompaniment from Julius Drake. He is joined by the counter-tenor, David Daniels and Christopher Maltman and the Fifth Canticle, with harp accompaniment, brings ear-tweaking textures. The seven folksong arrangements, including the most popular ones, are shared among the three singers. Excellent recording.

Canticle 1; Four Folksong arrangements: 7 Sonnets of Michelangelo, Op. 22; Winter Words, Op. 52

(BB)  Hyp. CDH 55067. Rolfe Johnson, Johnson

In this 1985 recording, the Michelangelo Sonnets have a freshness and exuberance apt for that earliest of the song-cycles with piano, and the folksongs are deliciously pointed, notably Little Sir William. Even more valuable is the Hardy song-cycle, Winter Words, which contains some of the most striking and atmospheric of all Britten's songs, exactly evoking the world of Hardy. Graham Johnson proves an ideal accompanist. Refined, well-balanced sound.

(i) A Ceremony of Carols. (ii) Deus in adjutorium meum; Hymn of St Columba; Hymn to the Virgin; Jubilate Deo in E flat; Missa brevis, Op. 63

🔑 * Hyp. CDA 66220. Westminster Cathedral Ch., Hill; (i) with S. Williams; (ii) J. O'Donnell (organ)

Particularly impressive here is the boys' singing in the Ceremony of Carols, where the ensemble is superb, the solo work amazingly mature and the range of tonal colouring a delight. Along with the other, rarer pieces, this is an outstanding collection, beautifully and atmospherically recorded.

(i; ii) A Ceremony of Carols; (i; iii) Friday Afternoons, Op. 7; Francie; King Herod and the cock; The oxen; (i) Sweet was the song; (iv) Song: The birds; (iv; v; iii) 3 2-part Settings of Walter de la Mare: The Ride-by-nights; The Rainbow; The Ship of Rio. A Wealden Trio

(BB)  Naxos 8.553183. (i) New L. Children's Ch., Corp; (ii) Kanga; (iii) Wells; (iv) Hopper; (v) Attree; Kenyon

Ronald Corp directs bright, refreshing performances of a delightful collection of Britten choral pieces written for children's voices. The New London Children's Choir is relatively large and is recorded against a lively hall acoustic, but there is no lack of impact, and the tenderness of expression as well as the liveliness is consistently refreshing.

(i) A Ceremony of Carols. Hymn to the Virgin; Shepherd's Carol

 Regent REGCD 243. (i) Christ Church College, Cambridge, Ch., Rowland – LEIGHTON: Carols ***

Christ Church College Choir, directed by David Rowland, give a vivid but warm-hearted account of Britten's cycle and the two equally appealing companion works with first-rate contributions from the unnamed treble soloists. Laurence Pope's contribution is also most sensitive, especially in the Interlude. The ambience of the chapel casts a warm glow over the recording, rather negating any earthy quality in the performance. But of its kind this is first class, as are the Leighton couplings.

(i) A Ceremony of Carols; (ii) St Nicholas

Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 5 65112-2. King's College Ch., Willcocks; with (i) Ellis; (ii) Tear, Russell, Cambridge Girls' Ch.

In St Nicholas, though the balance of the solo voices – the Saint as a boy and a man respectively – is rather too close, the performance is vivid and dramatic, with particularly fine contributions from the trebles of the choir, belying the old idea that their style was too pure to be adapted to rugged modern works. A delightful coupling.

(i) 4 Chansons françaises; (ii) Our Hunting Fathers; (iii) Serenade for Tenor, Horn and Strings

(BB)  Naxos 8.557206. (i) Lott; (ii) Bryn-Julson; (iii) Langridge; ECO, Bedford

In the anti-blood-sports cantata, Our Hunting Fathers, Phyllis Bryn-Julson is refreshingly fluent and agile, and if in the even earlier cycle, 4 Chansons françaises, Felicity Lott could be warmer, the characterful, heady-toned Philip Langridge is superb in the Serenade (horn soloist Frank Lloyd). Bright, forward sound.

Coal Face; The King's Stamp; Men behind the Meters; Negroes; Night Mail; Peace of Britain; The Tocher (Rossini suite); Telegrams; The Way to the Sea; When you're feeling like expressing your affection

 NMC D112. Beale (nar.), Carewe, Birmingham Contemporary Music Group; CBSO Ch.; King Edward's School, Birmingham, Ch., Brabbins

This collects the ingenious scores Britten composed in 1935–6 for various film projects, not all of which were carried through. He was unfailingly inventive, not only in the famous score for Night Mail but in almost all the music he wrote for John Grierson at the GPO Film Unit. A very rewarding issue.

Curlew River (1st parable for church performance)

Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 421 858-2. Pears, Shirley-Quirk, Blackburn, soloists, Instrumental Ens., composer and Tunnard

In Britten's own version, which has its own special character, Harold Blackburn plays the Abbot of the monastery who introduces the drama, while John Shirley-Quirk plays the ferryman who takes people over the Curlew River and Peter Pears sings the part of the madwoman who, distracted, searches fruitlessly for her abducted child. The recording is outstanding even by Decca standards.

Folksong Arrangements: Volumes 1–7 (complete)

Ⓑ  Hyp. Dyad CDD 22042 (2). Anderson, Nathan, MacDougall; Martineau, Lewis, Ogden

Now reissued as a Dyad Double, this is a delightfully varied set, conveniently bringing together the seven volumes of folksong settings, five with piano accompaniment, and one each with guitar and harp. Jamie MacDougall, youthfully fresh and clear, has the majority of the songs, and though he may not be as characterful as Peter Pears, for whom they were written, his directness and clear diction are just as winning, undaunted as he is by singing not just in French but in Welsh for two of the songs in the volume with harp. Lorna Anderson, also fresh and clear, provides contrast in six of the seven volumes, with the second soprano, Regina Nathan, warmer in tone, singing all nine of the Irish songs in the final volume. Much of the success of the collection, certainly its variety, is owed to Malcolm Martineau, who relishes the sharp originality of Britten's piano-writing, making one regret that he wrote so few solo piano pieces. Bryn Lewis on the harp and Craig Ogden on the guitar are equally idiomatic. First-rate sound. Full texts are given in the notes.

Folk Song Arrangements (complete)

(BB)  Naxos 8.557220/21 (Vols 1–5). Lott, Langridge, Johnson (piano); Bonell (guitar); van Kampen (cello)

(i; ii) 8 Folk Song Arrangements for High Voice and Harp; Choral Folk Songs. (i; v) 14 Folksongs with Orchestra (5 French & 9 English)

(BB)  Naxos 8.557222. (i) Langridge, (ii) Ellis; (iii) Feaviour, J. Harris, Kirk, Joly, BBC Singers; (iv) Wenhaston Boys' Ch., Barnet; Norris (piano); (v) T. Allen, N. Sinfonia, Bedford

In this Naxos reissue, the first two CDs are together in a single jewel-case, and the third comes separately. The important extras are 10 unpublished settings, as well as 14 orchestral arrangements. With Philip Langridge, Felicity Lott and Thomas Allen more positively characterful than their opposite numbers on Hyperion, and with Graham Johnson grippingly imaginative at the piano, one appreciates far more here that Britten's folksongs were not simple settings but original art songs. Tantalizingly, no one has yet identified the words for one tenderly beautiful song, superbly performed here on the cello by Christopher van Kampen.

(i) The Golden Vanity; (ii) Noye's Fludde

🔑 Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 436 397-2. (i) Wandsworth School Boys' Ch., Burgess, composer (piano); (ii) Brannigan, Rex, Anthony, East Suffolk Children's Ch. & O, E. Op. Group O, Del Mar

The Wandsworth Boys are completely at home in The Golden Vanity and sing with pleasing freshness. The coupling was recorded during the 1961 Aldeburgh Festival, and not only the professional choristers but the children too have the time of their lives to the greater glory of God. All the effects have been captured miraculously here, most strikingly the entry into the Ark, while a bugle band blares out fanfares, with the stereo readily catching the sense of occasion and particularly the sound of Eternal Father rising above the storm at the climax of Noye's Fludde.

6 Hölderlin-Fragmente; Um Mitternacht; Who are these children?

 Hyp. CDA 67459. Padmore, Vignoles – FINZI: A Young Man's Exhortation; TIPPETT: Boyhood's End ***

Mark Padmore, brilliantly accompanied by Roger Vignoles, here couples four cycles, all undeservedly neglected, on the theme of youth and friendship. In the ease of his fine control of the two Britten works, he even outshines the example of Peter Pears, for whom they were all written. Written in 1969, late in his career, Britten's cycle, Who are these children?, sets 12 brief poems by William Soutar, most of them in the Scots dialect, while the Six Hölderlin Fragments bring Britten's only essay in setting German verse, supplemented here by his setting of Goethe's Um Mitternacht, discovered only after his death.

The Holy Sonnets of John Donne, Op. 35; Harmonia sacra (realizations of Pelham Humfrey): Hymn to God the Father; Lord I have sinned (realization of William Croft): A Hymn on Divine Musick. The Way to the Tomb (incidental music for Ronald Duncan's masque): Evening; Morning; Night. W. H. Auden settings: Fish in the unruffled lakes; Night covers up the rigid land; To lie flat on the back with the knees flexed. Songs: Birthday song for Erwin; Cradle song for Eleanor; If thou wilt ease thine heart; Not even summer yet; The Red Cockatoo; Um Mitternacht; When you're feeling like expressing your affection; Wild with passion

✿  Hyp. CDA 66823. Bostridge, Johnson

In the Donne Sonnet cycle, written when the composer returned in deep shock after playing at the death camp of Belsen at the end of the war, Bostridge makes one concentrate afresh on Britten's powerful response to Donne's grittily uncompromising poems. His voice may be lighter than that of Pears, but in its lyrical beauty it can encompass a wider range of tone and dynamic. The disc also offers inspired performances of 18 of the Britten songs which earlier fell by the wayside: the four Auden settings, which include a provocatively sexual one, a dreamily atmospheric setting of Fish in the unruffled lakes and a jolly cabaret song.

The Holy Sonnets of John Donne, Op. 35; 7 Sonnets of Michelangelo, Op. 22; Winter Words, Op. 52; The Children and Sir Nameless; If it's ever Spring again

(BB)  Naxos 8.557201. Langridge, Bedford

With Steuart Bedford, Britten's long-term collaborator, as accompanist, this reading of the Donne sonnet-cycle is marked by high contrasts of dynamic and tone, so that one hears echoes of Peter Grimes's music. In the other two cycles Langridge is just as expressive but is generally lighter in manner, certainly more than Pears in his recordings. Valuably, Langridge adds two more Hardy settings, originally intended for Winter Words but that neither fit the main pattern nor quite match the rest in imagination.

(i; ii) Nocturne, Op. 60; (iii; iv) Les Illuminations, Op. 18; (i; iv; v) Serenade for Tenor, Horn and Strings, Op. 32

🔑 ✿ * EMI 5 58049-2. Bostridge, BPO, Rattle, with Radek Baborak (horn)

🔑 Ⓜ * Decca (ADD) 436 395-2. Pears; (i) ECO; (ii) wind soloists; (ii–iii) LSO strings, composer; (iii) with Tuckwell

Ⓑ  CfP 575 5632. Mark Ainsley, with (i) Britten Sinf. wind soloists; (ii) Pyatt; Britten Sinf. Strings; Cleobury

Ⓑ  EMI (DDD/ADD) 3 52286-2. (i) Tear; (ii) ECO, Tate; (iii) Harper; (iv) N. Sinfonia, Marriner; (v) with Civil

() Australian Decca Eloquence (mono/stereo) 476 8470. Pears; (i) LSO (members), composer; (ii) New SO, Goossens, (iii) with Brain

Ian Bostridge proves an ideal interpreter of Britten's three often taxing orchestral song-cycles, and here his light, clear tenor makes him an excellent successor to Peter Pears, for whom they were all written. Rattle and the Berlin Philharmonic are persuaded to give totally committed performances of music outside their usual repertoire. With Radek Baborak playing the horn obbligato with wonderful sophistication in the Serenade, the clarity in each of these masterly works is enhanced, with Bostridge's tone at its purest in whatever register. The Tennyson setting of the Hymn to Diana is light, fast and agile, and Bostridge's word-pointing is masterly throughout, matching the example of Peter Pears. The outstanding section of the Nocturne is the Wordsworth setting of The Prelude, describing the French Revolution, ending on the words 'Sleep no more', with the timpani obbligato adding bite. Full texts are included.

With dedicated accompaniments under the composer's direction, these classic Pears versions of Les Illuminations and the Serenade (with its horn obbligato superbly played by Barry Tuckwell) make a perfect coupling, with the Nocturne from 1960 making an ideal addition on CD. Pears, as always, is the ideal interpreter, the composer a most efficient conductor, and the fiendishly difficult obbligato parts are played superbly. The recording is brilliant and clear, with just the right degree of atmosphere, although the transfer of Les Illuminations is brighter than the other two works.

The ideal triptych of Britten's three great orchestral song-cycles finds John Mark Ainsley echoing the example of the inspirer, Peter Pears, in the shading and moulding of each phrase, above all in the Serenade, where the brilliant horn-playing of David Pyatt provides an extra reason for recommending the CfP disc. Mark Ainsley's range of expression is wide, and under pressure the voice grows a little rough, as in the final Shakespeare setting of the Nocturne. But that is contrasted with an exceptionally beautiful use of the head-voice, with total freedom in the upper register, as in the Lyke-Wake Dirge from the Serenade. Warm, immediate recording.

Les Illuminations is headily beautiful with glorious tone from Heather Harper. The couplings both feature Robert Tear, a singer very much in the Aldeburgh tradition created by Peter Pears. Tear yet gives a new and positive slant to each of the lovely songs in the Serenade, with the Jonson Hymne to Diana given extra jollity, thanks partly to the brilliant galumphing of Alan Civil on the horn. In the Nocturne, Britten's wide-ranging cycle on the subject of night and sleep, Tear proves a true succesor to Pears, and the intricate instrumental parts are splendidly managed by members of the ECO under the ever-versatile Jeffrey Tate.

The Australian Decca CD contains the first release of the 1953 recording of the Serenade for Tenor, Horn and Strings and Les Illuminations, conducted by Goossens. Dennis Brain's horn playing is magical, almost ethereal in its beautiful timbre, with Peter Pears superb in both these works, fresher than in the famous stereo versions under the direction of the composer. Goossens's conducting cannot be faulted – it is highly sensitive and strikingly alert – and the Decca sound is exceptionally good for its period; these performances are full of atmosphere. The composer directs the Nocturne in stereo.

Nocturne, Op. 60

Ⓜ (*) BBC (ADD) BBCB 8013-2. Pears, ECO, Britten – SHOSTAKOVICH: Symphony 14 **(*)

Nocturne; Now sleeps the crimson petal; Serenade, Op. 31 (both for tenor, horn & strings)

 BIS CD 540. Prégardien, Lanzky-Otto, Tapiola Sinf., Vänskä – Sinfonietta ***

This vivid live broadcast performance contrasts well with Britten and Pears's studio recording for Decca (see above). Peter Pears here sounds warmer and sweeter, more closely balanced than in the Decca recording, adding to the impact of such a song as the Wordsworth with its terrifying timpani solo, superbly played by James Blades. Sadly, no texts are included.

Osmo Vänskä brings together not only the two best-loved orchestral song-cycles but also the supplementary Tennyson setting intended for the Serenade and the elusive work, the Sinfonietta, which Britten honoured as his Opus 1. Christophe Prégardien has an ideally light and sweet tenor which, even in the high tessitura of the Lyke-Wake Dirge from the Serenade, shows no strain whatever. Though one detects that he is not English, that is a tribute to his articulation, and he is totally in tune with the idiom. Excellent, spacious sound, if with the tenor soloist slightly backward.

(i) Noye's Fludde, Op. 59. A Ceremony of Carols, Op. 28

🔑  Somm SOMMCD 212. (i) Wyn-Rogers, Luxon, Wilson-Johnson; Finchley Children's Music Group, Wilks

Noye's Fludde is here delightfully fresh and energetic, capturing the atmosphere of a live performance very well, with its processions of birds and animals and the off-stage Voice of God. With Benjamin Luxon providing a sonorous Voice of God, David Wilson-Johnson a characterful Noye and Catherine Wyn-Rogers a fruity Mrs Noye, all the other roles are performed sharply and incisively by members of the group. A Ceremony of Carols, given with comparable freshness and confidence, makes an ideal coupling, also well recorded.

On This Island; Folksong arrangement: The Salley Gardens

Ⓜ  BBC (ADD) BBCB 8015-2. Pears, composer – SCHUBERT: 7 songs; WOLF: 7 Mörike Lieder  (with ARNE: Come away death; Under the greenwood tree; QUILTER: O mistress mine; TIPPETT: Come unto these yellow sands; WARLOCK: Take, O take those lips away ***)

Britten's early song-cycle, set to poems by his friend W. H. Auden, is especially valuable, as he did not otherwise record it, and typically it brings a bitingly dramatic reading. Inspired performances of the Lieder by Schubert and Wolf, as well as the sharply contrasted Shakespeare settings by a wide range of British composers.

Our Hunting Fathers, Op. 8

(BB)  LPO LPO 0002. Harper, LPO, Haitink – ELGAR: Enigma Variations, etc. ***

Heather Harper in this live (1979) recording, made during the Proms at the Royal Albert Hall, is at her peak, commandingly impressive even in the tricky song, Rats Away. Well coupled with noble accounts of the two Elgar works.

Purcell realizations: Orpheus Britannicus: The knotting song; 7 Songs (1947); 6 Songs (1948); O Solitude; 5 Songs (1960); Celemene; 6 Duets (1961). Harmonia sacra: The Blessed Virgin's expostulation; The Queen's Epicedium; Saul and the Witch of Endor; 3 Divine Hymns (1947); 2 Divine Hymns & Alleluia (1960). Miscellaneous songs (1971): Dulcibella; When Myra sings

 Hyp. CDA 67061/2 (2). Lott, Gritton, S. Walker, Bowman, Mark Ainsley, Bostridge, Rolfe Johnson, Jackson, Keenlyside; Johnson

With an outstanding team of soloists and with Graham Johnson as the inspired pianist, this collection stands as a monument to the devotion of one English master to another. The first disc, drawn from the Orpheus Britannicus collection, includes songs like Fairest isle, better known in the context of King Arthur or other entertainments. The second, from Harmonia sacra, has darker, weightier and more extended items, notably the magnificent scena, Saul and the Witch of Endor, involving three singers and with side-slipping chromatics as daring as any Purcell ever imagined. The tenor Ian Bostridge displays high mastery and Simon Keenlyside sings magnificently in the dark, bass items like Job's curse and the late Let the dreadful engines. Excellent, well-balanced sound.

(i) The Rescue of Penelope; (ii) Phaedra

Ⓜ  Warner Elatus 0927 49010-2. (i) Hagley, Wyn-Rogers, Mark Ainsley, Dazeley, Baker (narrator); (ii) Hunt; Hallé O, Nagano

Drawn from the complete score, The Rescue of Penelope is compressed into a 36-minute cantata. The most important role is that of the narrator, here masterfully taken by Dame Janet Baker to bring the story vividly to life despite the stylized classical language. The commentaries, beautifully sung, regularly add to the atmospheric beauty of the piece. Lorraine Hunt's performance of Phaedra, Britten's last vocal work, characteristically spare, may not quite match that of the dedicatee, Dame Janet, in conveying the heroine's agony, but the portrait of a deranged woman is chillingly powerful, with singing comparably beautiful and intense.

Saint Nicolas, Op. 42

Ⓜ () Decca Heritage mono 475 6156. Pears, Hemmings, Girls' Ch. of Sir John Leman School, Boys' Ch. of Ipswich School Preparatory Dept, Aldeburgh Festival Ch. & O, composer

St Nicolas; Hymn to St Cecilia

 Hyp. CDA 66333. Rolfe Johnson, Corydon Singers, St George's Chapel, Windsor, Ch., Girls of Warwick University Chamber Ch., Ch. of Christ Church, Southgate, Sevenoaks School, Tonbridge School, Penshurst Ch. Soc., Occasional Ch., Edwards, Alley, Scott, ECO, Best

With rare exceptions, Britten's first recordings of his own works have a freshness and vigour unsurpassed since. Saint Nicolas was recorded in 1955 and possesses both those qualities, as well as atmosphere in abundance, all sounding uncannily vivid in this Decca Heritage transfer. While the use of the original cover is a big plus point, the minuscule facsimile of the LP notes is not.

For the first time in a recording, the congregational hymns are included in Matthew Best's fresh and atmospheric account of St Nicolas, adding greatly to the emotional impact of the whole cantata. Though the chorus is slightly distanced, the contrasts of timbre are caught well, with the waltz-setting of The birth of Nicolas and its bath-tub sequence delightfully sung by boy-trebles alone. The Hymn to St Cecilia is also beautifully sung, with gentle pointing of the jazzy syncopations in crisp, agile ensemble and with sweet matching among the voices.

(i) Spring Symphony, Op. 44. Peter Grimes: 4 Sea Interludes

🔑 Ⓜ * EMI (ADD) 7 64736-2. (i) Armstrong, J. Baker, Tear, St Clement Dane's School Boys' Ch., L. Symphony Ch.; LSO, Previn

Previn makes this above all a work of exultation, a genuine celebration of spring; but here, more than in Britten's recording, the kernel of what the work has to say comes out in the longest of the solo settings, using Auden's poem, Out on the lawn I lie in bed. With Janet Baker as soloist it rises above the lazily atmospheric mood of the opening to evoke the threat of war and darkness. The Four Sea Interludes, which make a generous bonus, are presented in their concert form, with tailored endings.

(i) Tit for Tat; (ii) Folksong arrangements: Bird scarer's song; Bonny at morn; David of the White Rock; Lemady; Lord! I married me a wife!; She's like the swallow

 Mer. CDE 84119. Shirley-Quirk; (i) Ledger; (ii) Ellis – 6 Metamorphoses, etc. ***

John Shirley-Quirk is unrivalled in the sharp yet subtle way he brings out the irony in these boyhood settings of De la Mare poems. It is also good to have him singing the six late folk-settings with harp accompaniment, here played by Osian Ellis, for whom they were originally written.

War Requiem, Op. 66

🔑 Ⓜ * Decca (ADD) 475 7511 (2). Vishnevskaya, Pears, Fischer-Dieskau, Bach Ch., L. Symphoy Ch., LSO, composer

 LPO 0010 (2). Brewer, Griffey, Finley, Tiffin Boys' Ch., Chamber O, Creed, LPO, Masur

🔑 Ⓜ  BBC (ADD) BBCL 4046-2. Woytowicz, Pears, Wilbrink, Wandsworth School Boys' Ch., Melos Ens., New Philh. Ch. O, Giulini

(i) War Requiem; (ii) Ballad of Heroes, Op. 14; Sinfonia da Requiem, Op. 20

🔑 * Chan. SACD CHSA 5007 (2); CD: Chan. 8983/4. (i) Harper, Langridge, Shirley-Quirk; (ii) Hill; St Paul's Cathedral Choristers, L. Symphony Ch., LSO & CO, Hickox

Britten's own 1963 recording of the War Requiem comes near to the ideal and it has been splendidly remastered for this first reissue at mid-price, to take an honoured place among Universal's new series of Originals (which now include Decca and Philips recordings alongside the present DG list). Full documentation is included.

Richard Hickox's Chandos version rivals even the composer's own definitive account in its passion and perception. Hickox thrusts home the big dramatic moments with unrivalled force, helped by the weight of the Chandos sound. The boys' chorus from St Paul's Cathedral is exceptionally fresh. Heather Harper is as golden-toned as she was at the very first Coventry performance, fearless in attack. Philip Langridge and John Shirley-Quirk bring many subtleties to their interpretations. Adding to the attractiveness of the set come two substantial choral works, also in outstanding performances. The recording is now also available on Compatible SACD with multi-channel surround sound.

Masur's version of the War Requiem has arguably the finest trio of soloists since the original performance under the composer. Christine Brewer, Gerald Finley, and Anthony Dean Griffey are all superb in their clean focus, pure and clear of tone, and the chorus is incisive throughout. The recording too is exceptionally vivid for one made in the Royal Festival Hall, with powerful timpani and ample weight. The final Owen setting, Strange meeting, ends most movingly with Finley singing the line 'I am the enemy, you killed my friend' bringing a big climax. Masur did not seem the most likely choice to direct a recording of this work, yet in the event he rivals all those who have gone before him.

Recorded live by the BBC in 1969, this thrilling BBC account of the War Requiem finds Giulini as the principal conductor bringing the sort of biting, even wild intensity and deep dedication to Britten's score that marked his readings of the Verdi Requiem. The spacious Albert Hall acoustic enhances the electric atmosphere, while Britten himself conducts the Melos Ensemble just as dramatically in the Wilfred Owen settings. Peter Pears as tenor soloist is matched by the fresh, clear Dutch baritone, Hans Wilbrink, while Stefania Woytowicz is the bright, incisive soprano, alongside the New Philharmonia Chorus at its most brilliant. A bargain squeezed on to a single disc at rather more than mid-price.

OPERA

(i) Albert Herring; (ii) Billy Budd; (iii) Owen Wingrave; (iv) Peter Grimes

Ⓑ  Decca 475 6020 (8). (i; iv) Pears; (i; iii) ECO; (ii) Glossop, Amb. Op. Ch., LSO; (iii) Luxon; (iv) ROHCG Ch. & O; all cond. composer

An indispensable set, an obvious basis for any collection, large or small, offering the composer's definitive performances, admirably recorded between 1959 and 1971, and since unsurpassed. The documentation is sparse but adequate, including cued synopses.

Albert Herring (DVD version)

🔑 * Warner DVD 5046 78790-2. Graham-Hall, Kerns, Johnson, Palmer, Hammond-Stroud, Van Allan, Gale, Oliver, Opie, Rigby, Glyndebourne Ch., LPO, Haitink (V/D: Peter Hall)

If all opera DVDs were as successful as this 1985 Glyndebourne production of Albert Herring, a DVD guide would hardly be necessary. John Gunter's sets are imaginatively, charmingly real, and the casting could hardly be improved on. John Graham-Hall in the title-role is splendidly offset by Patricia Kerns's portrayal of his dominating mother, Patricia Johnson's pompous but believable Lady Billows almost but not quite an amusing caricature, and Felicity Palmer a whimsically idiosyncratic Florence Pike. The rest of the cast sing splendidly and take their roles as to the manner born, and the whole show is conducted marvellously by Bernard Haitink. Moreover Peter Hall's direction is unerringly prescient. Excellent sound too.

Albert Herring (complete; CD versions)

🔑  Chan. 10036 (2). Gilchrist, Stephen, Williams, Bullock, Burgess, Opie, Tear, City of L. Sinfonia, Hickox

(BB)  Naxos 8.660107/08 (2). Gillett, Taylor, Finley, Barstow, Palmer, Savidge, Kale, N. Sinfonia, Bedford

Ⓝ 🔑 (*) Nimbus NI 5824/6 (3). Pears, Cross, Parr, Kraus, Ashton, Evans, Lawson, English Opera Group, composer

(*) Decca (ADD) 421 849-2 (2). Pears, Fisher, Noble, Brannigan, Cantelo, ECO, Ward, composer

Richard Hickox more than any rival brings out the fun of Britten's comic chamber opera, lifting rhythms in an infectious way. The result is warm and welcoming, helped by a full, rich Chandos recording. In the title-role of the hapless Albert, James Gilchrist is outstanding, with a tenor light enough to sound wimpish in the first half of the opera, and then to convey the anger of the character in the monologue that marks his change of heart at the end of Act II. Pamela Helen Stephen as Nancy and Roderick Williams as Sid, the two lovers, are also the more convincing for having relatively light voices, and the line-up of village characters, all of them larger than life, is taken by an excellent team, even if Susan Bullock as Lady Billows sounds rather young for such a battle-axe of a woman.

On Naxos, Christopher Gillett in the title-role has a clear, youthful-sounding tenor. As Lady Billows, Josephine Barstow, with rasp in the voice, is every bit as formidable as Sylvia Fisher was before, and Felicity Palmer is wonderfully characterful as her prim housekeeper, Florence Pike. What seals the set's success is the way that in the ensembles Bedford secures such crispness, wittily lifting rhythms, making the music swagger. At the Naxos reissue price this is a phenomenal bargain and, like full-price sets, this one includes a full libretto.

This lively Nimbus performance of Albert Herring cuts through any sonic limitation of this 1949 broadcast, conducted by the composer at the Theatre Royal, Copenhagen on 15 September 1949. Indeed, it surpasses the composer's studio Decca recording in sparkle and life made in the 1960s, with this cast largely comprising members of the first performance of this work. Pears here seems ideally suited as the gormless Albert Herring, but the entire cast is pretty flawless (Otakar Kraus as Mr Gedge, the vicar, is a delight), and the excellence of the performance is reflected in the (unobtrusive) laughter from the audience. Britten's electrifying conducting keeps the story rattling on with an exhilarating deftness and lightness of touch but all sharply characterized. The booklet gives a fascinating, personal history of the opera by Nigel Douglas and a complete libretto is included. At the end, the composer thanks the audience in a short but charming speech, quoting Albert's key line, 'Thank you very much', and we thank Nimbus very much for making this performance available once again. No admirer of this opera should be without this set.

Britten's own 1964 recording of the comic opera, Albert Herring, remains a delight. Peter Pears's portrait of the innocent Albert was caught only just before he grew too old for the role, but it is full of unique touches. Sylvia Fisher is a magnificent Lady Billows, and it is good to have such a wide range of British singers of the 1960s presented so characterfully. The recording, made in Jubilee Hall, remains astonishingly vivid.

Billy Budd (original four-act version; DVD versions)

Ⓝ  Decca DVD 074 3256. Pears, Glossop, Langdon, Shirley-Quirk, Bowman, Tear, Kelley, Ambrosian Op. Ch., LSO, Mackerras. (Producer: Cedric Messina; Director: Basil Coleman)

🔑  Arthaus DVD 100278. Allen, Langridge, Van Allan, Howlett, ENO Ch. & O, Atherton (Dir: Albery; V/D: Gavin)

This marvellous film version conducted by Mackerras dates from 1966, and immediately this black and white film starts there is a compelling intensity to this performance which is almost unsettling. Peter Pears was a definitive Edward Fairfax Vere, a role to which he is inextricably linked. With a supreme cast, including Peter Glossop as a superb Billy Budd and Michael Langdon as the sinister Claggart, the performance could hardly fail – and it doesn't. The performance crackles with intensity with superb direction and an excellent production. Mackerras secures plenty of electricity from the orchestra, with all the interjections from the brass heard crisply on the soundtrack.

Tim Albery's production of Billy Budd with Thomas Allen powerful in the title-role was one of the classic English National Opera presentations of the 1980s. This 1988 video version, made originally for BBC Television, with an introduction by Michael Berkeley, vividly captures the intense atmosphere. It is helped by the bare, stylized sets of Tom Cairns and Antony McDonald and by David Cunningham's clever lighting. The performance under David Atherton is outstanding, with Philip Langridge as Captain Vere, interpreting the role in a strikingly different way from Peter Pears, for whom it was written, but just as magnetically. Thomas Allen may in 1988 have seemed rather old for the role of the innocent Billy, but the power not just of his singing but of his acting too, with the voice clear and fresh, makes his performance deeply moving. Just as striking is the venomous figure of Claggart, superbly taken here with terrifying intensity by Richard Van Allan in one of his very finest recorded performances. Barrie Gavin's direction for video adds to the power of the performance with imaginative camerawork. The DVD is provided with plentiful index-points.

Billy Budd (CD version of original score)

 Erato 3984 21631-2 (2). Hampson, Rolfe Johnson, Halfvarson, Manchester Boys' Ch., Hallé Ch. & O, Nagano

Billy Budd (revised version; complete)

🔑  Chan. 9826 (3 for 2). Keenlyside, Langridge, Tomlinson, Opie, Bayley, Best, L. Symphony Ch., LSO, Hickox

 Decca (ADD) 417 428-2 (3). Glossop, Pears, Langdon, Shirley-Quirk, Wandsworth School Boys' Ch., Amb. Op. Ch., LSO, composer (with Holy Sonnets of John Donne; Songs & Proverbs of William Blake ***)

Hickox's brilliant Chandos version of Billy Budd, with the finest cast of principals yet assembled, uses the revised two-Act score. In Philip Langridge the role of Vere has found its most thoughtful interpreter yet, so that from the start his self-searching is the key element in the whole work. Comparably magnetic is John Tomlinson's Claggart, the personification of evil, chillingly malevolent in every inflexion, oily in the face of authority. Equally, Simon Keenlyside as Billy gains over all rivals in the fresh, youthful incisiveness of the voice, movingly shaded down to a rapt half-tone for the lyrical monologue sung by Billy about to die. Helped by sound of spectacular quality.

On Erato we have a complete recording of Britten's original, four-Act version of Billy Budd, above all urgent and intense, more dramatic, less reflective than Britten's own recording for Decca of the revised, two-Act version. Not only that, Thomas Hampson brings to the title-role an extra beauty alongside heroic power. It also provides a thrilling fortissimo close to the original Act I, superbly achieved in Kent Nagano's powerful performance with the Hallé Orchestra and Choir. Set against the velvet-toned Hampson, Anthony Rolfe Johnson as Vere has some grit in his voice, creating a believable character at once rugged and introspective. Eric Halfvarson as the evil Claggart is not as sinister as some of his predecessors but, apart from some roughness in the upper register, it is a forceful, incisive performance, matching the urgency of Nagano's approach.

On Decca, Britten himself has an outstanding cast, with Glossop a bluff, heroic Billy and Langdon a sharply dark-toned Claggart, making these symbol-figures believable. Magnificent sound, and the many richly imaginative strokes – atmospheric as well as dramatic – are superbly managed. The extravagant layout on three CDs begins with the John Donne Holy Sonnets (sung by Pears) and the Songs & Proverbs of William Blake (sung by Fischer-Dieskau), with the Prologue and Act I of the opera beginning thereafter. They are equally ideal performances.

(i) Death in Venice; (ii) Gloriana; (iii) A Midsummer Night's Dream; (iv) Phaedra (Dramatic Cantata); (v) The Rape of Lucretia; (vi) The Turn of the Screw

Ⓑ  Decca (ADD/DDD) 475 6029 (10). (i) Shirley-Quirk, Bowman; (i; v; vi) Pears; (ii) Barstow, Langridge, Della Jones, Opie, Van Allan; (iii) Deller, Harwood, Terry, Shirley-Quirk, Brannigan; (iv) J. Baker; (v) Harper, Shirley-Quirk, Luxon; (vi) Vyvyan, Hemmings, Dyer, Cross; (i; iv) ECO, Bedford; (ii) Welsh Nat. Op. O, Mackerras; (iii) LSO, composer; (v–vi) ECO, composer

Decca's second bargain box of Britten's operas perhaps may not be of such universal appeal as the first, but the set remains an essential bargain investment for collectors drawn to this repertoire. As before, the documentation includes cued synopses.

Death in Venice (complete; CD versions)

🔑  Chan. 10280 (2). Langridge, Opie, Chance, BBC Singers, City of L. Sinf., Hickox

 Decca (ADD) 425 669-2 (2). Pears, Shirley-Quirk, Bowman, Bowen, Leeming, E. Op. Group Ch., ECO, Bedford

Richard Hickox's superb account of Death in Venice, the composer's last opera, matches and in many ways even outshines the fine model of the original recording conducted by Steuart Bedford (instead of the ailing Britten himself), with Peter Pears in the central role. Philip Langridge proves an inspired interpreter of the role of Ashenbach, more passionate than Pears, and in his death scene he is even more poignant. Even so, he fails to convey quite the same agony of self-realization as Pears at the end of Act I on the whispered line I love you! Equally, Alan Opie makes a more robust figure than John Shirley-Quirk in the seven contrasted portraits of the tormenting figures who beset Aschenbach on his fatal trip to Venice, varying them vividly. The countertenor Michael Chance sings even more eerily as the Voice of Apollo, helped by distancing by the engineers, while the recording throughout is even more open and vividly atmospheric than the original Decca, fine as that is. Add to that Hickox's powerful, finely timed pacing of a work which is largely meditative, and the result is totally magnetic.

Peter Pears's searching performance in the central role of Aschenbach is set against the darkly sardonic singing of John Shirley-Quirk in a sequence of roles as the Dionysiac figure who draws Aschenbach to his destruction and, though Steuart Bedford's assured conducting lacks some of the punch that Britten would have brought, the whole presentation makes this a set to establish the work outside the opera house.

Gloriana (DVD versions)

 Opus Arte DVD OA 0955. Barstow, Randle, Soloists, Opera North Ch., E. N. Philh. O, Daniel (film by Phyllida Lloyd)

 Arthaus DVD 102 097. Walker, Rolfe Johnson, Rigby, Van Allan, Vaughan, Opie, ENO Ch. & O, Elder (V/D: Bailey)

Although Britten's coronation opera was not well received at Covent Garden in 1953, it came into its own when it was revived ten years later to celebrate the composer's fiftieth birthday. This 1999 production by Opera North, filmed for the BBC the following year, is a compelling and powerful one. Josephine Barstow's portrayal of Queen Elizabeth I could not be more magisterial and Tom Randle's Essex is hardly less convincing. A very strong cast with a strong sense of dramatic purpose and a first-class orchestral response under Paul Daniel. There is some irritating behind-the-scenes 'business' but, this apart, the performance is first class, camerawork otherwise unobtrusive and the recording vivid and well balanced. Hugely enjoyable and rewarding.

Recorded in 1984 in good, bright sound, the alternative Arthaus DVD presents a production by Colin Graham, with sets by himself reflecting the layout of an Elizabethan theatre. With an ideal cast, led by Sarah Walker as Elizabeth I and Anthony Rolfe Johnson as Essex, both in superb form, it offers one musical jewel after another, with Britten's melodic writing at its most winning. Sarah Walker sings and acts powerfully, with her final signing of Essex's death warrant at once vehement yet regretful. Even the small roles are splendidly taken.

Gloriana: Choral Dances

 Hyp. CDA 66175. Hill, Owen, Holst Singers & O, Davan Wetton – BLISS: Lie strewn the white flocks; HOLST: Choral Hymns from the Rig Veda ***

The composer's own choral suite, made up of unaccompanied choral dances linked by passages for solo tenor and harp, makes an excellent coupling for the equally attractive Bliss and Holst items. Excellent, atmospheric recording.

A Midsummer Night's Dream (DVD version)

🔑  Warner DVD 0630 16911-2. Cotrubas, Bowman, Appelgren, Buchen, Ryland Davies, Duesing, Lott, Bryson, LPO, Haitink (Producer: Peter Hall; TV Director: Dave Heather)

Recorded at Glyndebourne in 1981, the Warner DVD offers a magical production of Britten's fairy opera based on Shakespeare. The atmospheric sets of John Bury brilliantly exploit the limited space of the Glyndebourne stage in the old theatre, with forest trees manipulated by wood spirits amid mists, with moonlight adding to the mystery, and with fantastic costumes for the fairy characters. Peter Hall, as ever at Glyndebourne, is an inspired director, capturing the unique mixture of fantasy, comedy and downright farce with the surest hand, and with Bernard Haitink adding to the fun in his conducting, when in the final play scene with the Rude Mechanicals he brings out the parodies of Berg (in the music for Wall), Verdi (for Bottom) and Donizetti (for Flute). The cast is a vintage one, with James Bowman as Oberon and Ileana Cotrubas as Tytania unsurpassed, and with Felicity Lott, Ryland Davies and Dale Duesing outstanding among the lovers. Curt Appelgren is rightly dominant among the Rude Mechanicals as Bottom, both imposing and funny, with Patrick Power comic in his embarrassment as Flute. A fine memorial to traditional stage values in opera.

A Midsummer Night's Dream (complete; CD versions)

 Decca (ADD) 425 663-2 (2). Deller, Harwood, Harper, Veasey, Watts, Shirley-Quirk, Brannigan, Downside and Emanuel School Ch., LSO, composer

Ⓑ  EMI 3 818322-8 (2). Bowman, Watson, Graham-Hall, Herford, D. Jones, Gomez, Bailey, Walker, Maxwell, Trinity Boys' Ch., City of L. Sinfonia, Hickox

Britten again proves himself an ideal interpreter of his own music and draws virtuoso playing from the LSO. Peter Pears has shifted to the straight role of Lysander. The mechanicals are admirably led by Owen Brannigan as Bottom; and among the lovers Josephine Veasey (Hermia) is outstanding.

Deller, with his magical male alto singing, is the eerily effective Oberon.

Britten's own version set standards all round that were almost impossible to surpass, yet Richard Hickox in his 1990 recording provides an alternative which in significant ways is preferable. With a chamber orchestra rather than the LSO, the scale is more intimate and the full EMI recording captures the sound just as vividly as John Culshaw's vintage Decca. Hickox too, with his smaller band, points jazzy syncopations more infectiously, yet only in the 'Pyramus and Thisbe' play does the comedy of the rude mechanicals come over as it did under Britten. Donald Maxwell sings the role of Bottom with a clear, virile directness, but he does not have the sense of fun of Owen Brannigan in the composer's set. Conversely, the two pairs of lovers on the EMI set capture more pointedly than their predecessors the element of melodramatic parody in the mismatching of partners caused by Puck's machinations. John Graham-Hall as Lysander and Henry Herford as Demetrius are both aptly fresh and young-sounding. Among the others, Lilian Watson makes a bright Tytania, less beautiful in tone than Elizabeth Harwood on Britten's set but more clearly an other-worldly spirit; while central to the success of Hickox's performance is the masterly characterization of Oberon by James Bowman (who also sings on the later, DVD version), far more telling and mysterious than Alfred Deller's original. What makes the set indispensable is that it includes a brief 90-second sequence, intensely poetic, in the scene of the lovers' awakening in Act III, where Britten's own recording observes a cut as made in the original Aldeburgh staging. The reissued set comes with a synopsis and a separate listing of items and is well worth seeking out.

Owen Wingrave; The Hidden Heart (DVD Versions)

 Arthaus DVD 100 372. Finley, Hellekant, Hill, Savidge, Barstow, Dawson, Gale, Marlton, Westminster Cathedral Ch., Deutches SO, Berlin, Nagano (DVD Dir: Margaret Williams)

This television production presents the piece evocatively and convincingly in a setting updated to 1958, with khaki battledress for the soldiers, with Gerald Finley singing and acting superbly. The unsympathetic fiancée, Kate, also seems a more complex character than before, well taken by Charlotte Hellekant, and the gallery of disagreeable family-members is strongly cast too, notably Martyn Hill as the old, unforgiving Sir Philip Wingrave and Josephine Barstow as Miss Wingrave. Peter Savidge sings well in the role of the tutor, Spencer Coyle, the lone voice of sanity, with Anne Dawson as Mrs Coyle and Hilton Marlton as the wimpish Lechmere. Set mainly in the Wingrave country house, the result is nicely evocative, with the misty ghost scenes sufficiently creepy. With the orchestral score evidently recorded separately by the Deutsches Symphony Orchestra of Berlin under Kent Nagano, the musical results are still well coordinated.

What makes this issue especially valuable is that it also contains as an extra the moving film, The Hidden Heart, made for Channel 4 by Teresa Griffiths. Subtitled 'A Love Story in Three Pieces', this hour-long film gives a striking portrait of Benjamin Britten from the 1930s onwards, centring on his lifelong love for the tenor, Peter Pears. It consistently comes out that Britten and Pears were in many ways deeply conventional figures, 'like two prep-school masters' as the counter-tenor James Bowman says, with Britten even described as 'strait-laced'.

Owen Wingrave (CD Version)

Ⓝ  Chan. 10472 (2). Coleman-Wright. Opie, Connell, Watson, Stephen, Leggate, CLS Hickox

Owen Wingrave is nowhere near as effective dramatically as Britten's finest operas, largely the fault of the plot dependent on Owen's dilemma as a pacifist in a military family. Though the libretto gives positive roles for each character, they hardly react with each other convincingly, with barely a single sympathetic character. This new version from Richard Hickox and the City of London Sinfonia may not have the advantage of featuring the original singers chosen by the composer, but the singing is equally powerful, in some ways even stronger, notably in the casting of James Gilchrist as Lechmere, Owen's fellow student, a clear advantage. Otherwise the casts are evenly matched with Peter Coleman-Wright a strong Owen and Alan Opie as Spencer Coyle, Owen's teacher. Pamela Helen Stephen as Owen's fiancé does not have so warm a voice as the original Janet Baker, but that is more apt for a largely unsympathetic character. First-rate atmospheric sound, apt in a ghost story.

Paul Bunyan (complete; CD versions)

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ  Virgin VCD7 59249-2. Lawless (spoken part), Dressen, Comeaux, Nelson, Soloists, Ch. & O of Plymouth Music Series, Minnesota, Brunelle

 Chan. 9781 (2). Gritton, Streit, Robinson, Egerton, Broadbent, White, Coleman-Wright, Graham, Royal Opera Ch. & O, Hickox

Aptly, this first recording of Britten's choral operetta comes from the state, Minnesota, where the story is set. When the principal character is a giant who can appear only as a disembodied voice, the piece works rather better on record or radio than on stage. Musically, Britten's conscious assumption of popular American mannerisms does not prevent his invention from showing characteristic originality. Well cast and recorded in clean, vivid sound, with Philip Brunelle a vigorous conductor, this excellent first recording deserves all the prizes it won in its original issue on Virgin Classics.

The much-admired Covent Garden production of Paul Bunyan was recorded live at the Sadler's Wells Theatre in 1999. Though there are intrusive stage noises, the Chandos sound vividly captures the dramatic atmosphere of this ballad opera with its witty libretto by W. H. Auden. Hickox directs a warmly idiomatic reading which gains over the only previous version in featuring such fine singers as Susan Gritton as Tiny and Kurt Streit as Johnny Inkslinger. The Chandos sound is more open and atmospheric than the studio recording for Virgin, which yet in many ways gains from the closeness of the voices.

Peter Grimes (DVD versions)

Ⓝ 🔑 * Decca DVD 074 3261. Pears, Harper, Drake, Brannigan, Bainbridge, Gomez, Tear, Ambrosian Op. Ch., LSO, Composer. (Producer: John Culshaw; V/D: Brian Large)

🔑  Arthaus DVD 100 382. Langridge, Cairns, Opie, Howard, Orton, ENO Ch. & O, Atherton (V/D: Barrie Gavin)

 Warner DVD 0630 16913-2. Vickers, Harper, Bailey, ROHCG Ch. & O, C. Davis (Dir: Elijah Moshinsky; V/D: John Vernon)

Ⓝ (*) EMI DVD 50999 2 17414 9 4 (2). Griffey, Palmer, Racette, Grove, Michaels-Moore, Ratu Rhodes, Met Ch & Orch, Runniles (Director: John Doyle. Sets: Scott Pask. TV Director: Halvorson)

At last, the BBC's 1969 recording of Peter Grimes has been released on DVD, in excellent sound and a decent colour picture. Filmed at Snape Maltings, this performance is self-recommending. Pears is a superb Grimes, every bit as compelling as in his classic Decca recording, though naturally a decade or so older here. What makes this performance so compelling is the excellence of the cast in general: from the beauty of Heather Harper's Ellen Orford, to the superb characterizations of Ann Robson's Mrs Sedley – all the roles here are superbly done, and everything about the production and direction brings top quality. A classic and a must for all Britten fans.

Tim Albery's darkly intense production of Peter Grimes for ENO, updated to the interwar period, makes a powerful impression on DVD, thanks not just to the outstanding performance and production but also to Barrie Gavin's television presentation. One does not see David Atherton and the orchestra; instead, seascapes are shown during the important orchestral interludes. As for the principals, their singing, vivid and characterful from first to last, can hardly be faulted, with Philip Langridge even more moving as Grimes than on CD, thanks to his deeply involved acting, with his big solos, notably the one in his hut in Act II and the final mad monologue, bringing the most powerful climaxes. Janice Cairns makes a touching Ellen, clear and firm throughout, with just a touch of the stiffness of a schoolmistress adding to the effectiveness of her acting. Alan Opie is an ideal Balstrode, even more than usual emerging as a central figure in the action, and the individual characters from the Borough are all vividly drawn, notably the Mrs Sedley of Susan Orton and the Auntie of Ann Howard. The women's quartet in Act II is radiantly sung, and the option on DVD of having English subtitles even with an opera in English adds powerfully to the impact of the piece.

Though the composer himself disapproved, Jon Vickers's radical portrayal of the role of Grimes in this unforgettably powerful Covent Garden production by Elijah Moshinsky was generally acclaimed as both musically inspired and powerfully convincing. With Vickers such a solo as What harbour shelters peace brings a sudden transformation from an agonized mood into one of fleeting hope, and Vickers rises superbly to the challenge of the final monologue, with paranoia tipped over into madness. Heather Harper is equally moving as Ellen Orford, unsurpassed in the role, with Norman Bailey powerful as Balstrode. The other characters are also colourfully portrayed, with fine singing all round. Colin Davis, as on his Philips audio recording, proves an inspired interpreter, taut in control as well as warmly expressive, drawing vividly atmospheric playing from the orchestra to supplement the brilliantly effective sets, minimal but wonderfully evocative in their dark picture of the Borough. Irritatingly, no cast list is given on the box, only at the very end of the film.

In this EMI DVD designed for television, the Met presents the March 2008 production of Britten's atmospheric opera. Much of the mystery of more realistic productions is missing thanks to the heavily stylized sets of Scott Pask and the neutral, anonymous costumes of Ann Hould Ward, but in the openness and simplicity they never get in the way of a fine performance, powerfully conducted by Donald Runnicles. In the title role Anthony Dean Griffey matches that power – important in so large a house as the Met – with a tenor that is confidently firm and precise, matching his fine acting as a lumbering figure. Though Patricia Racette as Ellen Orford starts rather shrilly, her voice warms up and focuses far better during the performance, while Felicity Palmer as Mrs Sedley is vividly characterful. The other roles are very well defined in this gallery of strongly defined characters, with Anthony Michaels-Moore as Balstrode and Teddy Ratu Rhodes as Ned Keene particularly powerful in their singing and acting.

Peter Grimes (CD versions)

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * Decca (ADD) 475 7712 (2). Pears, C. Watson, Pease, Nilsson, Brannigan, Evans, ROHCG Ch. & O, composer

 Chan. 9447/8 (2). Langridge, J. Watson, Opie, Connell, Harrison, Opera London, L. Symphony Ch., City of L. Sinf., Hickox

Ⓑ  EMI 509156-2 (2). Rolfe Johnson, Lott, Allen, Ch. & O of ROHCG, Haitink

Ⓑ  Ph. (ADD) Duo 462 847-2 (2). Vickers, Harper, Summers, Bainbridge, Cahill, Robinson, Allen, ROHCG Ch. & O, C. Davis

The Decca recording of Peter Grimes was one of the greatest achievements of the early analogue stereo era. Few opera recordings can claim to be so definitive, with Peter Pears, for whom it was written, in the name-part. While there are now two outstanding DVD versions, the Decca CD recording (newly transferred here) is so atmospheric that one hardly misses the visual effects. The reissue in Universal's Originals series now includes full documentation, including text.

The rhythmic spring which Hickox gives this colourful score harks back to the composer's classic set, and Chandos backs him up with an exceptionally rich recording, with bloom on the voices and full, immediate orchestral sound. The casting of Philip Langridge in the title-role is central to the set's success. As on stage, he is unrivalled at conveying the character's mounting hysteria, and the result is chilling. Janice Watson makes a most touching Ellen Orford, younger and less maternal than her rivals, but all the more tender, with the golden tones of the voice well caught. The others make a superb team, with Alan Opie an outstanding Balstrode and John Connell commanding as lawyer Swallow at the start.

On EMI, Anthony Rolfe Johnson brings out the inward intensity of Grimes, singing most beautifully, hardly troubled by the high tessitura. Felicity Lott makes a tenderly sympathetic Ellen Orford, and Sarah Walker is unforgettable as Mrs Sedley, the laudanum-taking gossip. Thomas Allen is a wise and powerful Balstrode, making the Act III duet with Ellen an emotional resolution. The Covent Garden Chorus and Orchestra benefit from the extra range and vividness of EMI's digital recording and this adds to the impact.

Sir Colin Davis takes a fundamentally darker, tougher view of Peter Grimes than the composer himself. Jon Vickers's powerful, heroic interpretation sheds keen new light on what arguably remains the greatest of Britten's operas. Heather Harper as Ellen Orford is most moving, and there are fine contributions from Jonathan Summers as Captain Balstrode and Thomas Allen as Ned Keene. The recording is full and vivid, with fine balancing. Now reissued as a Duo, this is a genuine bargain.

Peter Grimes: Four Sea Interludes

 Atma SACD 2 2549. Montreal Met. O, Nézet-Séguin – DEBUSSY: La Mer, Prélude à l'après-midi d'un faune; MERCURE: Kaléidoscope ***

The Metropolitan Orchestra of Montreal may not be as well known outside Canada as the great Montreal Symphony Orchestra, but here under its Music Director, Yannick Nézet-Séguin, it shows what a formidable band it is, offering performances both incisive and clean-cut, with transparent textures.

Peter Grimes: 4 Sea Interludes & Passacaglia

Ⓜ * Chan. 8473. Ulster O, Handley – BAX: On the Sea-shore; BRIDGE: The Sea; STANFORD: Irish Rhapsody 4 ***

Handley draws brilliant, responsive playing from the Ulster Orchestra in readings that fully capture the atmospheric beauty of the writing, helped by vivid recording of demonstration quality.

The Rape of Lucretia (complete; DVD Version)

(*) Arthaus DVD 101 021. Rigby, Smythe, Van Allan, Opie, Owens, Pope, Rolfe Johnson, Harries, ENO, Friend (Director: Michael Simpson)

The English National Opera production from Arthaus, recorded in 1987, offers an effective presentation of an imaginative if rather bald production in modern dress by Michael Simpson. So at the start, Kathryn Harries and Anthony Rolfe Johnson as the Female and Male Choruses, both singing strongly, appear in severe grey costumes, and the set for the main action might have been devised for Madam Butterfly with its sliding translucent panels like Japanese shosees. At least the visual side of the production does not distract from the excellence of the singing and acting, led by Jean Rigby, steady as a rock as Lucretia; darkening her tone for her response to Tarquinius's assault with a powerful chest register. Opposite her as Bianca, Anne-Marie Owens makes a splendid foil, while the male cast is well led by the Tarquinius of Russell Smythe, with Richard Van Allan equally positive as Collatinus. One of the few oddities is that Rolfe Johnson's narration for the actual rape is whispered, not spoken, making it less characterful.

The Rape of Lucretia (complete; CD Version)

 Chan. 9254/5. Rigby, Robson, Pierard, Maxwell, Miles, Rozario, Gunson, City of L. Sinf., Hickox

(i) The Rape of Lucretia (complete); (ii) Phaedra, Op. 93

🔑  Decca (ADD) 425 666-2 (2). (i) Pears, Harper, Shirley-Quirk, J. Baker, Luxon, ECO, composer; (ii) J. Baker, ECO, Bedford

In combining on CD The Rape of Lucretia with Phaedra, Decca celebrates two outstanding performances by Dame Janet Baker, recorded at the peak of her career. Among other distinguished vocal contributions to the opera Peter Pears and Heather Harper stand out, while Benjamin Luxon makes the selfish Tarquinius into a living character. The seductive beauty of the writing – Britten then at his early peak – is caught splendidly, the melodies and tone-colours as ravishing as any he ever conceived.

Jean Rigby as Lucretia may lack the warmth and weight of Baker, but she gains from having a younger-sounding voice. Equally, the timbre of Nigel Robson as the Male Chorus, rather darker than Peter Pears's, adds to the dramatic bite of his characterization, virile in attack. Catherine Pierard as the Female Chorus has a more sensuous voice, making it a more involved commentary. Quite apart from its unique authority, Britten's Decca set (also at full price) comes with a valuable fill-up in Phaedra, the work he wrote for Janet Baker; but the Chandos rival gives an equally strong, in some ways more dramatic, view of a masterly opera.

The Turn of the Screw (DVD versions)

 Opus Arte DVD OA 0907D. Milne, Padmore, Wyn Davies, Montague, Kirby Johnson, Wise, City of L. Sinfonia, Hickox (TV Director: Katie Mitchell)

(*) Arthaus DVD 100 198. Field, Davies, Greager, Obata, Stuttgart RSO, Bedford (Dir: Michael Hampe. V/D: Claus Viller)

What Katie Mitchell has devised is a highly evocative film to go with a performance of The Turn of the Screw. The result is very different from a conventional staging, with the singers, for much of the time, acting out their roles without being seen singing. The performance itself is excellent, with Richard Hickox drawing taut playing from the City of London Sinfonia in support of a first-rate cast. Lisa Milne (as the Governess) and Diana Montague make an impressive duo, vocally outstanding, though the small, buxom Milne and the tall, statuesque Montague are visually the wrong way round. Mark Padmore is superb as Peter Quint and as the Prologue, establishing himself as the most mellifluous of Britten tenors, while Catrin Wyn Davies sings with a rich mezzo as Miss Jessel. The children both sing and act beautifully, very well cast, genuinely youthfully exuberant. A distinctive version with many great qualities, most of all in presenting the full horror of the story, set against an eerie background.

The hero of this Arthaus DVD production is Steuart Bedford, who gets vibrant singing and playing from all concerned. Helen Field is a thoroughly convincing Governess and the cast is in every respect excellent, even if Machita Obata looks a little too mature for Flora. A good production, very atmospheric, and with generally unobtrusive video direction.

The Turn of the Screw (CD versions)

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.660109/10. Langridge, Lott, Pay, Hulse, Cannan, Secunde, Aldeburgh Festival Ens., Bedford

Ⓜ () Decca mono 425 672-2 (2). Pears, Vyvyan, Hemmings, Dyer, Cross, Mandikian, E. Op. Group O, composer

Bedford, who took over from Britten himself when the composer could no longer conduct his own recordings, here presents a similarly idiomatic performance with a comparable sharpness and magnetism that, thanks to the spacious recording, brings out the eerie atmosphere of the piece. The recording also allows one to appreciate the sharp originality of the instrumentation in what by any standards is the tautest of Britten's operas. The singers too have been chosen to follow the pattern set by the original performers. Langridge here, like Pears before him, takes the double role of narrator and Peter Quint, echoing Pears's inflexions, but putting his own stamp on the characterization. Felicity Lott is both powerful and vulnerable as the Governess, rising superbly to the big climaxes which, thanks to the recording quality, have a chilling impact, not least at the very end. Sam Pay is a fresh-voiced Miles, less knowing than David Hemmings in the Britten set, with Eileen Hulse bright and girlish as Flora. Nadine Secunde is a strong Miss Jessel, and Phyllis Cannan matches up to the strength of her predecessor, Joan Cross. An outstanding set.

Though the recording is in mono only, the very dryness and the sharpness of focus give an extra intensity to the composer's own incomparable reading of his most compressed opera. Peter Pears as Peter Quint is matched superbly by Jennifer Vyvyan as the Governess and by Joan Cross as the housekeeper, Mrs Grose. It is also fascinating to hear David Hemmings as a boy treble, already a confident actor. Excellent CD transfer.

Collection

'The World of Britten': (i–ii) Simple Symphony; (iii; ii) Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra; (iv–v) Folksong arrangements: Early one morning; The Plough Boy; (vi) Hymn to the Virgin; (iv; vii; iii; ii) Serenade for Tenor, Horn & Strings: Nocturne. Excerpts from: Ceremony of Carols; Noye's Fludde; Spring Symphony; Billy Budd; Peter Grimes

Ⓜ  (ADD) Decca 436 990-2. (i) ECO; (ii) cond. composer; (iii) LSO; (iv) Pears; (v) composer (piano); (vi) St John's College Ch., Guest; (vii) Tuckwell; & various artists

The Britten sampler is well worth having for the composer's own vibrant account of the Variations on a Theme of Purcell and the Simple Symphony, where the Playful Pizzicato emerges with wonderful rhythmic spring and resonance (in the warm Maltings acoustics). The Pears contributions are very enjoyable too, notably the haunting Nocturne from the Serenade, with Barry Tuckwell in splendid form. Excellent sound throughout, although the tuttis in the Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra could with advantage have had a more expansive sonority.

BROWNE, John (c. 1490)

O Maria salvatoris; O regina mundi clara; Salve regina I; Stabat iuxta; Stabat mater

Ⓜ  Gimell 2-CD CD-GIM 219-2 (2). Tallis Scholars, Phillips – CORNYSH: Motets; TAVERNER, TYE: Western Wind Mass ***

We know very little about John Browne except that he was ahead of his time, both in the richness of sonorities he created and in the remarkable length of his melodic lines. The beauty is self-evident in these superb performances from the Tallis Scholars, recorded in the sumptuous acoustic of the Church of St Peter and St Paul, Salle, Norfolk. All this music is to be found in the earlier folios of the Eton Choirbook, dating from about 1490 to 1500, alongside more pieces that are lost. The richness of the soaring treble texture is immediately striking in the opening Salve regina, but the radiant antiphon O Maria salvatoris, is even more remarkable. This is the longest work and the climactic piece in this programme, written in the most lavish eight-part polyphony. It was so celebrated in its day that it was given pride of place as the opening item in the Choirbook. It is an extraordinary piece, in its time a work almost as unprecedented as Tallis's 40-part motet, Spem in alium, although its means are more modest.

BRUCH, Max (1838–1920)

Double Concerto in E min., for Clarinet, Viola & Orchestra, Op. 88

Ⓑ  Hyp. Dyad CDD 22017 (2). King, Imai, LSO, Francis (with Concert ***)

 Sup. SU 3554-2. Peterkova, Besa, Prague Philh., Bělohlávek – MENDELSSOHN: 2 Concert Pieces; ROSSINI: Introduction, Theme and Variations, etc. ***

Bruch's Double Concerto is a delightful work with genuinely memorable inspiration in its first two lyrical movements and with a roistering finale making a fine contrast. Clarinet and viola are blended beautifully, with melting phrasing from Thea King. The recording is excellent. This is part of an excellent two-disc set, including other attractive concertante works by Mendelssohn, Crusell, Spohr and other, less familar names.

With the viola-player, Alexander Besa, as an inspired partner, the Czech clarinettist, Ludmila Peterkova, includes the Double Concerto in a delightfully off-beat collection of neglected clarinet music, warmly accompanied by Jiri Bělohlávek and the Prague Philharmonia. She is an artist who is not only warmly expressive, but sparkles in everything she plays.

(i) Double Concerto in E min.; (ii) Romance for Violin & Orchestra; (iii) 8 Pieces for Clarinet, Viola & Piano

🔑 (BB)  Warner Apex 8573 89229-2. Caussé, (i; iii) Meyer; (i; ii) Lyon Op. O, Nagano; (iii) Duchable

The performance of the Double Concerto from Paul Meyer and Gérard Caussé is affectionately mellow, yet does not miss the lilt of the lively finale. Caussé then goes on to give a richly romantic account of the Romance, another work with an endearing melodic flow. The Eight Pieces are full of charm, their romanticism pastel-shaded, but they are by no means insubstantial (No. 3 extends to nearly eight minutes). These highly sympathetic performances are beautifully recorded, and this Apex reissue makes a fine bargain.

Double Piano Concerto in A flat min., Op. 88a

 Chan. 9711. Güher and Süher Pekinel, Philh. O, Marriner – MENDELSSOHN: Double Concerto; MOZART: Double Concerto ***

The Max Bruch Double Concerto is well worth hearing in a performance as strong, sympathetic and well recorded as the one on Chandos. With some attractive themes it makes a welcome rarity, whatever its limitations.

Violin Concertos: 1 in G min.; 2 in D min., Op. 44; 3 in D min., Op. 58; Serenade for Violin & Orchestra, Op 75; Scottish Fantasy, Op. 46

Ⓑ  Ph. (ADD) Duo 462 167-2 (2). Accardo, Leipzig GO, Masur

This Philips Duo gathers together Bruch's three Violin Concertos, plus two other major concertante works. Although no other piece quite matches the famous G minor Concerto in inventive concentration, the delightful Scottish Fantasy, with its profusion of good tunes, comes near to doing so, and the first movement of the Second Concerto has two soaringly lyrical themes. The Third Concerto brings another striking lyrical idea in the first movement and has an endearing Adagio and a jolly finale. The engagingly insubstantial Serenade was originally intended to be a fourth violin concerto. Throughout the set Accardo's playing is so persuasive in its restrained passion that even the less inspired moments bring pleasure. With the soloist balanced rather close, the orchestral recording is full and spacious.

Violin Concerto 1 in G min., Op. 26

🔑 ✿ * Telarc CD 80507. McDuffie, SCO, Swensen – MENDELSSOHN: Violin Concerto ***

🔑  Sony SK87740. Midori, BPO, Jansons – MENDELSSOHN: Concerto ***

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI 5 03410-2. Chung, LPO, Tennstedt – BEETHOVEN: Concerto ***

Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 5 66906-2. Menuhin, Philh. O, Susskind – MENDELSSOHN: Concerto ***

Ⓜ  DG 477 6349. Mintz, Chicago SO, Abbado (with KREISLER: Caprice Viennoise; Liebesleid; Liebesfreud with Benson, piano) – MENDELSSOHN: Violin Concerto **(*)

Ⓜ  DG 463 641-2. Mutter, BPO, Karajan – MENDELSSOHN: Concerto ***

 Pentatone SACD PTC 5186. Grumiaux, Philh. O, Wallberg – BEETHOVEN: Violin Concerto ***

The American violinist Robert McDuffie opens the work gently and tenderly, with bewitching phrasing and the most beautiful tone, never pressing too hard. The hushed opening of the beautiful Adagio again finds a tenderness that gives a magical frisson. Throughout the concerto, the interchanges between soloist and orchestra have the natural flowing spontaneity of live music-making and the finale bounces off spiritedly, with the bold orchestral tuttis in a stimulating balance with the dancing soloist. The Telarc recording, full-blooded and with a believable perspective, is well up to the high standards of the house, and the Mendelssohn coupling is also outstandingly fine.

Midori's first entry in the Bruch is also musingly reflective, with the recording heightening contrasts between soloist and orchestra, even though the violin is placed relatively close. The panache of her performance of the first movement is followed by a rapt account of the second. The finale again benefits from bold orchestral playing, with high contrasts setting off the sparkle of the soloist. Here we have a disc that – in the face of formidable competition – remains a clear winner.

Compared with her earlier, Decca recording (see below), Kyung-Wha Chung's expressive rubato in her EMI version is more marked, with her freedom vividly conveying magic such as you find in her live performances, and the finale is again impulsive in its bravura. An exceptionally attractive version.

Menuhin's performance with Susskind, now reissued as one of EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century', has long held an honoured place in the catalogue. The performance has a fine spontaneity, the work's improvisatory quality very much part of the interpretation, and there is no doubting the poetry Menuhin finds in the slow movement or the sparkle in the finale. The bright, forward sound of the 1960 recording has transferred vividly and naturally to CD.

Shlomo Mintz's compelling playing makes the listener hang on to every phrase. The vibrato is wide, but his approach is so distinctive and interesting that few listeners will resist. The Chicago Symphony Orchestra plays with great brilliance and enthusiasm, and Abbado's direction is most sympathetic. The vivid recording has transferred splendidly to CD. Mintz's version is coupled with the Mendelssohn Concerto, and now with three favourite Kreisler encores, beautifully played, for good measure.

In Anne-Sophie Mutter's hands the concerto has an air of chaste sweetness, shedding much of its ripe, sensuous quality, but retaining its romantic feeling. There is a delicacy and tenderness here which is very appealing and, although the tuttis have plenty of fire, Karajan sensuously scales down his accompaniment in the lyrical passages to match his soloist. The digital recording provides a natural balance and a vivid orchestral texture.

Grumiaux's version with Wallberg has never been counted an obvious first choice; he does not wear his heart on his sleeve as some violinists do. But it offers a refreshingly different view, warm and civilized, and Grumiaux brings all his beauty of tone and expressive technique to the music-making, with the famous slow movement totally memorable. He is very well accompanied, and the 1973 Philips recording sounds wonderfully natural in this superb Pentatone SACD transfer, whether or not ones uses the back speakers.

Jaime Laredo's budget version, fresh and delightfully direct (Regis RRC 1152) and Nigel Kennedy's unsentimental view (EMI 5 181173-2) are both highly individual but not first choices.

Violin Concerto 1 in G min.; Romance, Op. 85

 Decca 465 7692. Jansen, Leipzig GO, Chailly – MENDELSSOHN: Violin Concerto ***

Janine Jansen here adds as an important and rare extra: Bruch's Romance, Op. 85, one of his many neglected concertante works. In that work, demonstrating her versatility, Jansen takes up the viola, revealing equal facility on the larger instrument. Her violin tone is distinctive, clear and bright, not at all fruity in a conventional way, encouraging her to take a light, athletic view of allegros, adopting daringly fast speeds in the finales of both concertos, while the slow movement is movingly tender, taken at a flowing Andante.

Violin Concerto 1 in G min., Op. 26; Scottish Fantasy, Op. 46

🔑 Ⓜ * Decca (ADD) 460 976-2. Chung, RPO, Kempe – MENDELSSOHN: Concerto ***

Ⓜ  RCA SACD 82876 71622-2. Heifetz, New SO of London, Sargent – VIEUXTEMPS: Violin Concerto 5 ***

The magic of Kyung-Wha Chung, always a spontaneously inspired violinist, comes over beguilingly. Chung goes straight to the heart of the famous G minor Concerto, finding mystery and fantasy as well as more extrovert qualities. Just as strikingly in the Scottish Fantasy she transcends the episodic nature of the writing to give the music a genuine depth and concentration, above all in the lovely slow movement. Kempe and the RPO accompany sympathetically, well caught in a glowing recording.

Heifetz plays with supreme assurance, and the slow movement shows this fine artist in masterly form. Heifetz's panache and the subtlety of his bowing and colour also bring a striking freshness to Bruch's charming Scottish whimsy. Sargent accompanies sympathetically and, though the soloist is balanced much too closely, there is never any doubt that he can produce a true pianissimo. The new SACD transfer adds body to the sound, and the violin is vividly real.

Violin Concertos 1; 3 in D min., Op. 58

 Warner 0927 45664-2. Hanslip, LSO, Brabbins (with – SARASATE: Navarra ***)

Warm and confident as she is in 1, Hanslip tends to underline phrasing rather heavily, where in the expansive 3 she is fresher, more imaginative and more individual. With clean attack, flawless intonation and crisp double-dotting, she gives a winningly spontaneous-sounding reading, revelling in the beauty of the violin writing and its range of expression, while Martyn Brabbins draws incisive playing from the LSO. The Sarasate showpiece – in which Hanslip is joined in duet by Mikhail Ovrutsky – with its jaunty Spanish dance rhythms makes a delightful supplement.

Violin Concerto 2 in D min., Op. 44

🔑  Delos DE 3156. Hu, Seattle SO, Schwarz – GOLDMARK: Concerto ***

Violin Concerto 2; Scottish Fantasy, Op. 46

(*) EMI 7 49071-2. Perlman, Israel PO, Mehta

(i) Violin Concerto 2. Symphony 3 in E, Op. 51

 Chan. 9738. (i) Mordkovitch; LSO, Hickox

Nai-Yan Hu is ideally balanced and well accompanied by Schwarz and the Seattle orchestra. Hu's soaring lyrical lines underline the music's warmth and consistent melodic inspiration. Though Perlman strikes a high profile in his EMI version, the sympathetic warmth of this Hu/Schwarz partnership and the concert-hall fullness of the Delos recording is preferable.

In the Second Violin Concerto, Lydia Mordkovitch gives a raptly intense reading, making the long, slow first movement (in sonata form) into a deeply reflective meditation, punctuated by virtuoso flurries, readily justifying her spacious speeds. In the Third Symphony Hickox takes an affectionate view of the work. Speeds are broad in the first three movements, markedly so in the Adagio, with the chorale theme spacious and dedicated, and the surging theme which opens the finale has a hint of English folksong.

In his later, Israel recording, Perlman may be less intimately reflective in both works than he was when he recorded this coupling with the New Philharmonia, but in the fast movements there are ample compensations in the sharp concentration from first to last.

(i) Violin Concerto 3 in D min., Op. 58. Symphony 1 in E flat, Op. 28

🔑  Chan. 9784. (i) Mordkovitch; LSO, Hickox

The Third Violin Concerto is laid out spaciously; yet Bruch characteristically allows himself plenty of lyrical lingering, which inspires Lydia Mordkovitch to playing of rapt intensity down to magical pianissimos, before the vigorous moto perpetuo finale. Symphony 1, written soon after the popular Violin Concerto in G minor, is also based on striking material. Hickox is a warmly expressive but never self-indulgent interpreter, and the Chandos recording is full and atmospheric.

(i) Double Concerto for Violin & Viola, Op. 88. Kol Nidrei, Op. 47; Romance for Viola & Orchestra, Op. 85

🔑  RCA 09026 63292-2. Bashmet, LSO, Järvi; (i) with Tretyakov – WALTON: Viola Concerto ***

Bruch's fund of melodic invention, usually a youthful gift, stayed with him well into his seventies, as the Double Concerto and the Romance winningly demonstrate. The latter work for viola and orchestra of 1912 harks straight back to the slow movement of the G minor Violin Concerto. It is a radiant piece and draws a heartfelt performance from Bashmet, as does the well-known Kol Nidrei, made the more poignant with viola taking the place of cello. The Double Concerto brings extra sensuousness, thanks also to the pure-toned playing of Viktor Tretyakov, a perfect foil for the resonant Bashmet.

Kol Nidrei, Op. 47

🔑  Virgin 5 45664-2. Truls Mørk, French RPO, Paavo Järvi – BLOCH: Schelomo; SCHUMANN: Cello Concerto ***

🔑 * EMI 5 56126-2. Chang, LSO, Rostropovich – FAURÉ: Elégie ; SAINT-SAËNS: Cello Concerto 1 ; TCHAIKOVSKY: Rococo Variations *** ✿

Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 457 761-2. Fournier, LOP, Martinon – BLOCH: Schelomo; LALO: Cello Concerto; SAINT-SAËNS: Cello Concerto 1 ***

Ⓜ (*) Mercury 432 001-2. Starker, LSO, Dorati – DVOŘÁK: Concerto; TCHAIKOVSKY: Rococo Variations **(*)

Like Bloch's Schelomo, Bruch's Kol Nidrei is a Jewish rhapsody, even though the composer was not Jewish himself. It suits Mørk's freely expressive style just as well as the Bloch, resulting in a deeply concentrated reading, with pianissimo playing magically refined.

Han-Na Chang catches the intense atmosphere of Bruch's Hebrew melody with a natural sensitivity, spontaneous in her dynamic contrasts; and indeed the extraordinary poise and assurance of this playing, matched by her ability to touch the listener, reminds one of the young Yehudi Menuhin. Her mentor accompanies her with great sympathy and the Abbey Road recording is beautifully balanced.

If Fournier's performance lacks the last degree of romantic urgency, it makes up for it in the beauty and style of the solo playing, and he is well supported by Martinon's Lamoureux Orchestra.

Starker's Mercury recording is transformed by the new transfer, warm and glowing. The performance may lack romantic urgency but it has a relaxed, ruminative quality which is very endearing. Dorati accompanies most persuasively, providing a highly sympathetic orchestral backcloth.

Scottish Fantasy (for violin & orchestra), Op. 46

🔑 Ⓑ  Decca (ADD) 476 7288 (2). D. Oistrakh, LSO, Horenstein – MOZART: Sinfonia concertante, etc. (*); HINDEMITH: Violin Concerto ***

Ⓑ * CfP 575 8022. Little, RSNO, Handley – LALO: Symphonie espagnole ***

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.110940. Heifetz, LPO, Barbirolli – BRAHMS: Double Concerto; GLAZUNOV: Violin Concerto

The extrovert 1962 Oistrakh/Horenstein performance of the Scottish Fantasia owes nearly as much to the conductor as to the soloist. The expansive dignity of the opening of the brass shows immediately how fine the orchestral contribution is going to be, and Oistrakh's playing throughout is ravishing, enhancing the stature of the work immeasurably.

Tasmin Little takes a ripe, robust and passionate view of both works, projecting them strongly, as she would in the concert hall. In this she is greatly helped by the fine, polished playing of the Scottish Orchestra under Vernon Handley, a most sympathetic partner. The recording is superb, with brass in particular vividly caught. Little plays the Guerriero finale absolutely complete.

Bruch's Scottish Fantasy was always a favourite work with Heifetz, and although his pioneering 1947 version cannot quite match his stereo remake with Sargent and the LSO in thoughtful intensity, the passion and brilliance of the playing are most compelling, with the songful Adagio section even more moving in its simpler, more flowing manner, hushed and dedicated. Generously coupled with the powerful Brahms performance and the exuberant account of the Glazunov, another first recording. Good Naxos transfers, if with audible surface hiss.

Scottish Fantasy, Op. 46; Serenade, Op. 75

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.557395. Fedotov, Russian PO, Yablonsky

It is good to have one of Bruch's rarer concertante pieces for violin coupled with the colourful Scottish Fantasy. In warm, thrustful performances Maxim Fedotov may be a little short on the subtler qualities of mystery and tenderness, but the bravura of his playing, helped by full-blooded accompaniment from Dmitry Yablonsky and the Russian Philharmonic, makes the results compelling enough. The Serenade, Op. 75, dating from 1900, 20 years after the Fantasy, belies its lightweight title in its breadth and weight over four substantial movements.

Octet in B flat (for strings), Op. posth.

(BB)  Naxos 8.557270. Kodály & Auer Qts – MENDELSSOHN: Octet ***

Bruch's ripely romantic late Octet (scored for 4 violins, 2 violas, cello and double bass) may not be as melodically inspired as its Mendelssohn coupling, but it has a genuine romantic sweep and has much of Mendelssohn's infectious exuberance. It is played with persuasive warmth and conviction by the combined Kodály and Auer Quartets and is a thoroughly worthwhile addition to the Bruch discography.

String Quintet in A min., Op. posth.

 Naim CD 010. Augmented Allegri Qt – BRAHMS: String Quintet 2 ***

Bruch's A minor Quintet was one of two he wrote for sheer joy at the age of eighty. It is an unashamed throwback in idiom to Beethoven and Brahms, but the freshness of ideas and argument is most winning. Like the Brahms G major

Quintet, with which it is ideally coupled, it is very well performed and vividly recorded.

BRUCKNER, Anton (1824–96)

Symphonies 0; 00; 1–9; Symphony 4: Volksfest finale (1878)

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.501101 (11). RSNO, or Nat. SO of Ireland, Tintner

Symphonies 0; 1–9

Ⓑ (*) Decca (DDD/ADD) 448 910-2 (10). Chicago SO, Solti

Symphonies 1–9 (complete)

🔑 Ⓑ  DG (ADD) 477 7580-2 (9). BPO, Karajan

Ⓑ  EMI (ADD) 5 73905-2 (9). Dresden State O, Jochum

Ⓑ  DG (ADD) 469 810-2 (9). BPO or Bav. RSO, Jochum

Symphonies 1–9; (i) Helgoland

🔑 (BB) * Warner 2564 61891-2 (9). BPO, Barenboim, (i) with Berlin R. Ch., Ernst Senff Ch.

Recorded between 1990 and 1997, Daniel Barenboim's cycle of the Bruckner Symphonies is among his finest achievements with the Berlin Philharmonic. These are powerful, concentrated performances, with tension and impact heightened by the fact that all but two of them, 4 and 7, were recorded live in concert. They also gain in competition with direct rivals – certainly in the super-bargain category – by enjoying spectacular sound, with Barenboim's preference for extreme dynamics fully and thrillingly caught, even though the extremes may be too great for easy domestic listening for some. The cycle rises to a climax with Barenboim's masterly readings of the last two symphonies. 8 in the full Haas edition is dedicated in all four movements. 9 is equally dedicated, ending on a noble account of the finale so satisfying that one has no regrets that Bruckner failed to complete a finale. The symphonic chorus for male voices and orchestra, Helgoland, makes a valuable supplement as a fill-up for 1. The nine discs come in a convenient compact box with full notes in a booklet.

The reappearance of Karajan's magnificent cycle recorded between 1976–1978, long a yardstick by which others were measured – and at mid-price – must be warmly welcomed. We have sung the praises of these recordings loud and long, and in their new format they are outstanding value.

Jochum's DG cycle was recorded between 1958 (5) and 1967 (2), all but four (2, 3, 5 and 6) with the Berlin Philharmonic. No apology need be made for either the performances or the quality of the recorded sound, which wears its years lightly. One of the finest is the 1957 Fifth, in which Jochum brought a unique sense of mystery and atmosphere to Bruckner, and it more than compensates for the occasional freedom he permitted himself. The set now comes economically packaged and priced and well documented in DG's Collector's Edition and can be thoroughly recommended.

Eugen Jochum's second Bruckner cycle was recorded in Dresden with the magnificent Staatskapelle between 1975 and 1980 in the last days of analogue recording. There is little difference in his approach here when compared to his earlier, DG set: he always favoured the Nowak editions, but the Dresden set has the richer, more opulent sound. Jochum had wisdom and nobility as well as a sense of vision, and his lifelong feeling for Bruckner's music and his grasp of its architecture shine through in every bar. At a bargain price, this is very competitive indeed.

There are few more persuasive Bruckner conductors than Georg Tintner, and his symphonic cycle on Naxos is uniquely complete in including not only Die Nullte and the 'Study Symphony', but also the 'Volksfest' Finale of 4. The performances are very well played by the Royal Scottish National Orchestra, the readings dedicated and intense, often inspired, and the recordings are full, atmospheric and clear. The Naxos Box includes admirably extensive documentation, and this set must receive the strongest recommendation, quite irrespective of its modest cost.

Solti had previously recorded the Eighth with the VPO for John Culshaw in the Sofiensaal as early as 1966. With the Chicago Symphony Orchestra he recorded the whole cycle between 1979 (6) and 1995 (5). The two early symphonies are very impressive, but the Third is the one failure, relatively crude and coarse. Otherwise, the Seventh, with refined playing, lacks tension in the outer movements, but the series culminates in an inspired account of the Eighth and the Ninth, similarly spacious, with the music given full time to breathe.

Symphony 00 in F min.; Overture in G min.

Ⓜ  Oehms OC 208. Saarbrücken RSO, Skrowaczewski

Skrowaczewski's is a fine performance, very well recorded, making an outstanding bargain. The Overture in G minor from the same period makes an ideal fill-up with its mysterious slow introduction leading to a light, Mendelssohnian Allegro.

Symphony 00 in F min. (Study Symphony); String Quintet: Adagio (arr. for strings)

 Ondine ODE 920-2. German SO, Berlin, Ashkenazy

Symphony 00 in F min. (Study Symphony); Symphony 4: Volkfest Finale (1878)

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8. 554432. RSNO, Tintner

With excellent playing and recording – as in the rest of the series – Tintner could not be more persuasive; as a welcome bonus he adds the very rare second version of the finale of the Fourth Symphony, which Bruckner entitled Volksfest, 'Festival of the People'. Strikingly different, particularly at the start, from the 1880 version of that movement, which is generally performed, it is well worth hearing in a fine performance like this, even if it hardly displaces the usual version.

Ashkenazy conducts his Berlin orchestra in a strong and purposeful reading. His speeds are consistently fast, his manner direct but still expressive, so that he brings out the inner intensity of the fine slow movement. The lovely Adagio of the String Quintet in string orchestra format brings just as dedicated a performance, an excellent bonus. Full, warm sound. However, the Naxos version has a considerable price advantage.

Symphonies 0 in D min. (Die Nullte); 8 in C min. (1887 Nowak edition)

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.554215/6. Nat. SO of Ireland, Tintner

In a moving note Georg Tintner passionately argues the case for Bruckner's original (1887) version of 8, fresh and spontaneous. The result is an intense, keenly concentrated reading, with total dedication in the playing, which rises to supreme heights in the long Adagio slow movement, where the refined pianissimo playing of the Irish orchestra is magically caught by the Naxos engineers. Even for those with rival versions, this makes a very necessary recommendation, particularly when the two-disc package brings so generous and revealing a coupling as the D minor Symphony (Die Nullte) in a very good performance. Tintner powerfully brings out the Brucknerian qualities in embryo, and again he is served very well by the Irish orchestra.

Symphony 1 in C min.

🔑 (M)  Oehms OC 210. Saarbrücken RSO, Skrowaczewski

Skrowaczewski draws dedicated, tautly sprung playing from the Saarbrücken orchestra in what remains a problematic work. At speeds on the fast side, this is a fresh and urgent reading, which yet brings out the hushed intensity of the spacious second movement Adagio. Beautifully recorded in a helpful acoustic, it is a match for any version at whatever price.

Symphonies 1 in C min. (1866 version, revised Carragan); 3 in D min.: Adagio (1876)

(BB)  Naxos 8.554430. RSNO, Tintner

Georg Tintner opts for the earliest version of the Symphony 1. The principal differences here are in the finale, which brings angular writing and orchestration that is more radical than in the revisions. Tintner in his dedicated performance, with refined playing from the Scottish orchestra, amply justifies his choice, powerfully bringing out the bald originality of the writing. The generous makeweight also offers a rare text, a version of the slow movement of Symphony 3, which was composed in 1876. Again the intensity and refinement of the performance sustain the expansiveness compellingly.

Symphony 2 in C min. (original, 1872 score)

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.554006. Nat. SO of Ireland, Tintner

Georg Tintner here opts for the edition of the original (1872) score, presenting the work at its most expansive and with the middle two movements in reverse order from usual. The Scherzo has an extra repeat, but more important is the expansion of both the slow movement and the finale, here presented in concentrated performances that feel not a moment too long. The coda of the Andante brings a horn solo at the very end (substituted by Herbeck in 1876), challenging to the player, which is more strikingly beautiful than the clarinet solo with which Bruckner replaced it. Excellent, refined playing from the Irish orchestra and full, rich sound, with the brass gloriously caught.

Symphony 3 in D min. (original, 1873 version)

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553454. RSNO, Tintner

With characteristic boldness, Georg Tintner opts here to record the very rare first version, far more expansive than the final, revised version normally heard. Tintner holds the vast structure together masterfully; even though his speeds in the three expanded movements are daringly slow the concentration of the performance, with dynamic contrasts heightened, never falters for a moment. The slow movement too is rapt and dedicated, with pianissimos of breathtaking delicacy. The Scherzo is then fast and fierce, before the spacious account of the finale. Tintner in every way justifies his daring and revelatory choice of text.

Symphony 3 in D min. (1877 version)

 Hyp. CDA 67200. BBC Scottish SO, Vänskä

The key point about Vänskä's version, given a brilliant and refined performance by the BBC Scottish Symphony, is that he uses a long-buried text for the Adagio slow movement, more expansive, with more quotations from Wagner included. The liner-notes clarify these points, making an excellent case for preferring this text. Vänskä effectively heightens the Wagnerian qualities of the score, while drawing a ripe, Brucknerian sound from his players, helped by full, atmospheric recording.

Symphony 3 (1890 version)

(M)  Oehms OC212 Saarbrücken RSO, Skrowaczewski

Skrowaczewski offers a mid-priced version of the Third, which in both performance and recording rivals any more expensive version. Unlike Tintner he opts for the usual text, following Bruckner's final reworking in his third version of the work. As in Skrowaczewski's other Bruckner recordings on the Oehms label, the playing of the Saarbrücken Orchestra is strong and intense, with opulent sound to match. So the slow movement is sweet and warm in its lyrical flow, and the finale glows with resplendent brass.

Symphonies 3 in D min. (1877 version); 8 in C min.

🔑 (BB)  Ph. Duo 470 534-2 (2). VPO, Haitink

Haitink's is a performance of enormous breadth and majesty, and Philips give it a recording to match. The playing of the VPO is glorious throughout. No less enticing is the recording of the Eighth Symphony, with the same formidable combination of conductor and orchestra, and first-rate engineering (by the doyen of Philips engineers, Volker Strauss), and the results are outstanding. The VPO play with great fervour and warmth, and the recorded sound is sumptuous. It is still among the most satisfying versions available. In short, these two symphonies make a remarkable bargain on the Philips Duo label.

Symphony 4 in E flat (original, 1874 version)

(BB) (*) Warner Apex 2564 61371-2. Frankfurt RSO, Inbal

Like the Third, there are three versions of the Romantic Symphony, and no one had recorded the original version before Inbal. The Scherzo here is a completely different and more fiery movement, and the opening of the finale is also totally different. Inbal's performance is good, with a genuine feeling for the Bruckner idiom, paying scrupulous attention to dynamic refinements. The recording is well detailed, though the climaxes almost (but not quite) reach congestion. A fascinating issue, and especially attractive at budget price.

Symphony 4 in E flat (Romantic)

🔑 * RCA 09026 68839-2. BPO, Wand

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.554128. RSNO, Tintner

Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 475 8403. VPO, Boehm

Symphony 4 in E flat; Overture in G min.

() Testament mono/stereo SBT 1050. Philh. O, von Matačič

Günter Wand's Berlin version of the Fourth Symphony crowns his achievement as one of our greatest Bruckner conductors. The recording derives from a concert at the Philharmonie in Berlin and conveys a sense of occasion so often missing in the studio. Wand knows what this music is about and has the command of its architecture and space, with consistently warm textures from the Berlin Philharmonic. Keenly dramatic, capped by towering climaxes, it offers full, rich sound, if with pianissimos not quite as hushed as they might be.

There are not many versions as fine as Georg Tintner's on Naxos, at whatever price. With extreme pianissimos magically caught, full of mystery, this is an exceptionally spacious reading, deeply reflective and poetic, which brings out the Schubertian qualities in Bruckner, sweet and songful as well as dramatic. The playing of the Royal Scottish National Orchestra is as refined as the recording, with subtly terraced dynamics beautifully clear.

There are many who admire Boehm's Bruckner, and he certainly controls the lyrical flow of the fourth symphony convincingly, helped by first-rate playing from the VPO, and vintage Decca sound from 1973, with the advantage of the spacious acoustics of the Sofiensaal. The balance provides splendid detail and a firm sonority. Boehm's sobriety was also his strength; in every bar he gives the impression that he knows exactly where he is going and, choosing the Nowak edition, he shapes the structure compellingly.

Skrowaczewski's reading of Bruckner's most popular symphony is characteristically strong and refined, with extreme dynamic contrasts heightened by the excellent recording, so that the crescendo at the start of the finale is exceptionally powerful. Only in the third movement Scherzo does he adopt a tempo at all out of the ordinary, challenging the horns in daringly fast hunting calls, which yet are finely disciplined. (Oehms 01213)

Symphonies (i) 4 in E flat; (ii) 8 in C min.

(BB)  EMI Gemini 3 81761-2 (i) BPO; (ii) LPO; Tennstedt

Tennstedt's Fourth is a reading that combines concentration and a degree of ruggedness, less moulded than with Karajan or Jochum in their very different ways. Here plainness goes with pure beauty and natural strength in the first two movements. The Scherzo is urgent, the finale resplendent. Tennstedt's plainness and beauty are again heard at their finest in his impressive account of the Eighth. The inwardness and hushed beauty of the great Adagio in particular are superbly projected in unforced concentration. Where in 4 he prefers the Haas Edition, here he is in favour of Nowak, without the additional material in the recapitulation. Fine, well-balanced recording in EMI's No. 1 studio.

Symphony 5 in B flat

🔑 Ⓜ ✿  DG 469527-2. Dresden State O, Sinopoli

🔑  BBC (ADD) BBCL 4033-2. BBC SO, Horenstein

Sinopoli's reading is characterful and strong in a positive, even wilful way distinctively his. The Dresden Staatskapelle responds with playing of incandescent intensity, totally allied with the conductor in silencing any stylistic reservations. This is a live recording, and the inspiration of the moment comes over at full force. The energy of the Scherzo and the passion of the slow movement complete the picture of an exceptionally high-powered reading, recorded in glowing sound.

Horenstein's magisterial account of the Fifth Symphony with the BBC Symphony Orchestra has the advantage of relatively rich and vivid sound and comes from a 1971 Prom. It is an eloquent and compelling performance of a symphony which Horenstein (to the best of our knowledge) never recorded commercially.

Symphonies 5 in B flat; 7 in E (both ed. Nowak)

Ⓝ Ⓜ (*) EMI 5 20943-2 LPO, Welser-Möst

The LPO plays well for Welser-Möst and in both symphonies are very responsive. 5 was recorded in the Konzerthaus, Vienna, in late May–early June 1993, before an attentive and silent audience, whose presence emerges only at the very end. Their applause is deserved. There are some potentially disruptive agogic touches, but he succeeds in persuading you that they have some logical motivation. The LPO create an impressive eloquence and radiance of texture. The Seventh comes from a 1991 Prom and so again enjoys a warmer ambience than most studio performances. The LPO produce a real Bruckner sound, save perhaps at the bottom end of the spectrum. Welser-Möst again shows a natural feel for Bruckner's spacious lyricism and audience noise is minimal, save at the very end, when it is anything but!

Symphony 6 in A

 HM HMC 90 1901. Deutsches SO, Berlin, Nagano

🔑 (BB)  LSO Live LSO 0022. LSO, C. Davis

Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 5 62621-2. New Philh. O, Klemperer (with Overtures: GLUCK: Iphigénie en Aulide; HUMPERDINCK: Hänsel und Gretel **)

 Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD) 476 2745. VPO, Stein – WEBER: Overtures ***

Nagano's new version with the Deutsches Symphony Orchestra goes fairly readily to the top of the list. It has something of the strength and directness of Klemperer's account, with the first movement spontaneously flowing and the slow movement having a powerful gravitas. The finale is comparatively episodic in its control of tempo, but it still holds together as part of an impressive overall interpretation. The recording, made in the Philharmonie, is full-bodied, well balanced and clear.

Sir Colin Davis's live recording of the Sixth, made in February 2002, is above all warm and purposeful. The high contrasts of the outer movements are superbly caught, with weighty resonant string-tone bringing incandescent climaxes. The weight of strings adds to the slow-paced moment of the expansive slow movement too, inexorably building up over long paragraphs, with the second subject treated con amore. The conductor's concentration finally brings sharp coherence to the wayward structure of the finale, with the engineers confirming their mastery over the Barbican acoustic in full-bodied sound.

Klemperer's 1964 version remains a characteristically strong and direct reading. It is disarmingly simple rather than overly expressive in the slow movement (faster than usual) but is always concentrated and strong, and the finale is held together particularly well. Splendid playing from the New Philharmonia Orchestra, and the Kingsway Hall recording is clear and bright, but even more full-bodied in the present remastering. The two overtures are earlier (1960) and feature the Philharmonia: Hänsel und Gretel is richly atmospheric, but the Gluck is heavy-going.

Horst Stein's is a nobly wrought account of the Sixth Symphony with the Vienna Philharmonic. The slow movement has genuine eloquence and gravity, and the performance of the other three is refreshingly free of eccentricity, striking the right degree of breadth and dignity. Stein brings both imagination and feeling to this score, and he is excellently recorded in vintage (1973) Decca sound.

Symphony 7 in E (original version)

(BB)  Warner Apex 0927 40817-2. Frankfurt RSO, Inbal

For excellence of orchestral playing and vividness of recording, Inbal's Seventh is well up to the standard of his Bruckner series, using the original scores; but the performance itself, although not lacking an overall structural grip, is without the full flow of adrenalin that can make this symphony so compulsive.

Symphony 7 in E (DVD versions)

🔑  EMI DVD 3 101909. O Nat. de France, Jochum (with WAGNER: Tristan and Isolde, Prelude and Liebestod; MOZART: Le Nozze di Figaro: Overture ())

 TDK DVD WW COWAND8. NDR SO, Wand (V/D: Hugo Käch)

Jochum was one of the finest Brucknerians of his day and this beautifully prepared and subtly executed reading of the Seventh Symphony is magnificent. The Orchestre National de France is in responsive form and play with great sensitivity and feeling. Recorded in the Théâtre des Champs-Elysées, Paris, in 1980, along with the Tristan Prelude and Liebestod. As a bonus we have a black-and-white Figaro Overture with the French Radio Orchestra, well played, though not the lightest in touch. But this is easily the best Bruckner we have had yet on DVD. Unobtrusive and intelligent camerawork, and it is very compelling.

Like its companions in this series Günter Wand and the NordDeutscher Rundfunk Orchester are recorded in the excellent acoustic of the Musik- und Kongresshalle in Lübeck during the 1999 Schleswig-Holstein Festival. The performance is dedicated and completely straightforward, without a trace of ego. Hugo Käch's video direction serves us well.

Symphony 7 in E (CD versions)

🔑 * Teldec 3984 24488-2. VPO, Harnoncourt

🔑 Ⓑ  EMI 4 76888-2. BPO, Karajan

🔑 Ⓜ  BBC (ADD) BBCL 4123-2. Philh. O, Giulini (with FALLA: Three-Cornered Hat (excerpts); MUSSORGSKY: Khovanshchina: Prelude ***)

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.554269. RSNO, Tintner

Harnoncourt's outstanding performance of the Seventh was recorded live in the Sofiensaal and is one of his very finest records. The sound is magnificent: the Viennese strings have a radiant sheen and the brass is gloriously sonorous. The performance could hardly be more compelling. In the slow movement the cymbal crash at the climax is omitted, but even this does not spoil its impact, and in the beautiful coda Harnoncourt draws out the resemblance in the valedictory overlapping horn parts to Wagner's Das Rheingold. This is very highly recommendable in its own right. Harnoncourt admirers need not hesitate.

Karajan's outstanding early EMI version, recorded in the Jesus Christus Kirche in 1971, remains among the very finest. The reading shows a special feeling for the work's architecture, and the playing of the Berlin Philharmonic is gorgeous. The sound has striking resonance and amplitude. This EMI reading, generally preferable to his later, digital recording for DG, has a special sense of mystery.

Giulini's account with the Philharmonia Orchestra comes from the BBC's 1982 Prom season, a performance totally dedicated from beginning to end, so that climaxes are all the more thrilling, and the sound achieved by the BBC engineers is very fine indeed, natural in perspective and finely balanced. The Falla fill-up comes from an earlier Prom season (1963) and the Khovanshchina Prelude from an Edinburgh Festival concert at the Usher Hall. Strongly recommended.

Like his other Bruckner recordings for Naxos, Tintner's account of 7 brings a performance both subtle and refined, concentrated from first to last, often at spacious speeds. The glow of Brucknerian sound is caught beautifully, with the full nobility of the slow movement brought out. The Scherzo is not as rugged as it can be but, with sprung rhythms, the dance element is infectious. An outstanding bargain to rival any version.

Symphony 8 in C min. (DVD version)

🔑  TDK DVD DV-COWAND3. NDR SO, Wand (V/D: Barrie Gavin)

Günter Wand has great musical integrity and is a totally dedicated Brucknerian. He conveys a genuine sense of mystery, though ultimately he does not surpass the finest CD versions. The performance is very fine, however, and Barrie Gavin's camerawork places the viewer at the best vantage point. The orchestral sound is very well balanced.

Symphonies 8 in C min.; 9 in D min.; (i) Te Deum (DVD version)

* DG DVD 073 4395 (2). VPO, Karajan, (i) with Tomowa-Sintow, Baltsa, Rendall. Van Dam, Wiener Singverein

The present Eighth with the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra was recorded in St Florian, Linz, in 1979, six months or so after the celebrated DG record made in the Grosser Saal of the Philharmonie. The performance is equally exalted, though Karajan takes a more leisurely view of the slow movement and a brisker one of the finale. The Ninth and the Te Deum are recorded in the Musikverein in May 1978 and are hardly less impressive. Very good sound and discreet camerawork.

Symphony 8 in C min. (CD versions)

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * DG 427611-2. VPO, Karajan

Ⓑ  EMI (ADD) 4 76901 (2). BPO, Karajan (with Overtures: WEBER: Der Freischütz; MENDELSSOHN: Fingal's Cave; WAGNER: Der fliegende Holländer; NICOLAI: The Merry Wives of Windsor ***)

 DG 459 678-2. VPO, Boulez

Karajan's last version of the Eighth Symphony is with the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra and is the most impressive of them all. The sheer beauty of sound and opulence of texture is awe-inspiring but never draws attention to itself: this is a performance in which beauty and truth go hand in hand. The recording is superior to either of its predecessors in terms of naturalness of detail and depth of perspective.

The new transfer of Karajan's early (1957) Berlin Philharmonic recording is also remarkably successful. The EMI sound is spacious and, if the sonorities are not quite as sumptuous as we would expect today, the strings have substance and the brass makes a thrilling impact. The performance has much in common with Karajan's later (mid-price) version for DG, and has compelling power. The slow movement is very fine indeed, conveying dark and tragic feelings, and the finale makes a real apotheosis. While Karajan's last VPO version remains special, this is very worthwhile and the Overtures are all splendidly played and recorded, with Der fliegende Holländer standing out.

With taut control Pierre Boulez directs a tough, intense reading of this most expansive of the Bruckner symphonies, one which is also warmly expressive in the great Bruckner melodies, helped by glowing playing from the Vienna Philharmonic. The great slow movement proceeds magnetically, in Boulez's hands a powerful symphonic structure rather than a visionary statement. The finale – using the more expansive text of the Haas Edition – is then rugged and bitingly dramatic, with Boulez's use of rubato warmly idiomatic.

Symphonies (i) 8 in C min.; (ii) 9 in D min.

 BBC (ADD) BBCL 4017-2 (2). (i) LSO; (ii) BBC SO; Horenstein

These BBC recordings of performances at the Royal Albert Hall in 1970 reveal the genius of Jascha Horenstein more tellingly than almost any of his studio recordings. Though he draws out the warm expressiveness in Bruckner's lyrical writing, moulding phrases, he takes a rugged view of the overall structure, not least in his rapt account of the great Adagio in Symphony 8. Fine as the LSO is in that symphony with its brighter string-tone, the performance of the Ninth with the BBC Symphony brings even finer playing, strong and purposeful. Warm, atmospheric, radio sound.

Symphony 9 in D min. (DVD versions)

🔑  EuroArts DVD 2072197. VPO, Bernstein (V/D: Humphrey Burton)

🔑  TDK DVD DV-COWAND4. N. German RSO, Wand – SCHUBERT: Symphony 8 (Unfinished) ***

Although he had recorded Mahler symphonies with his much-loved Vienna Orchestra, Bernstein was slow to turn to Bruckner, believing that Karajan's recordings of them could hardly be surpassed. Now, some years after Bruckner's death and only a year before his own, he performed the Ninth at the Grosser Musikvereinsaal during a week in late February and early March, and this record is a compilation of these. A powerful document, which will make a special appeal to admirers of this remarkable partnership and this great work. Unobtrusive camerawork, which invariably places the listener-viewer where he would wish to be.

Günter Wand recorded this coupling of two unfinished symphonies at the 2001 Schleswig-Holstein Festival in Lübeck at the Musik-und-Kongreßhalle when he was 89. The present account with the NDR Orchestra has great majesty and a magnificent string sonority; the wind players are very fine, as indeed are the brass. Hugo Käch's camera direction is exemplary and never draws attention to itself. In all, a satisfying reading and, as always with Wand, selfless and free from idiosyncrasy.

Symphony 9 in D min. (CD versions)

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ (*) Sony 518812-2 (Stereo-mono). Columbia SO, Walter (with Te Deum: Yeend, Lipton, Lloyd, Harrell, Westminster Ch., NYPO, Walter)

(BB)  Naxos 8.554268. RSNO, Tintner

 Profil-Medien PH 4058. Stuttgart RSO, Wand

Ⓜ  Warner Elatus 0927 46746-2. BPO, Barenboim

Bruno Walter's 1959 account of Bruckner's Ninth Symphony represents the peak of his achievement during his Indian summer in the CBS recording studios just before he died. His mellow, persuasive reading leads one on through the leisurely paragraphs so that the logic and coherence seem obvious where other performances can sound aimless. Some may not find the Scherzo vigorous enough to provide the fullest contrast, but the final slow movement has a nobility which suggests that after this, anything would have been an anticlimax.

For the reissue Sony have added Walter's fine (1959) Carnegie Hall mono recording of the Te Deum, a characteristically spacious account with a well-matched team of soloists and an excellent contribution from the Westminster Choir. The transfer of the very good mono recording is well managed, but the four stars are for the symphony.

Like others in his Bruckner series, Georg Tintner's Naxos recording of the Ninth Symphony is a match in every way for the finest rival versions, whatever the price. The refinement of pianissimos brings out the full mystery of the massive outer movements, while the delicate fantasy of the Scherzo is brilliantly touched on at high speed, with a touch of wildness. The final Adagio builds up in exultation: this may not have been planned as the finale, but here it becomes the most deeply satisfying conclusion. The playing of the Royal Scottish National Orchestra is superb, with recording at once transparent and refined, as well as weighty.

Günter Wand's Stuttgart account with the SüdWestfunk Orchestra is a live performance in the opulent acoustic of the Benedictine Monastery of Ottobeuren, which the Stuttgart engineers manage with real mastery; it offers a glorious, satisfying sound, rich and sonorous. This ranks high among Bruckner Nines both interpretatively and as sound.

Daniel Barenboim's Berlin account has depth and strength, with the advantage of superb orchestral playing, and the recorded sound has splendid body and transparency. One of the strongest of newer recommendations.

CHAMBER MUSIC

String Quintet in F

 Nim. NI 5488. Brandis Qt, with Dean – BRAHMS: String Quintet 2 ***

 Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD) 476 2455. VPO Quintet, with H. Weiss – SCHMIDT: Piano Quintet ***

String Quintet in F; Intermezzo for String Quintet

(*) Hyp. CDA 66704. Raphael Ens. – R. STRAUSS: Capriccio: Sextet *

Bruckner's beautiful Quintet dates from 1878, immediately after the revision of the Third and Fourth Symphonies. It is music of substance and depth, and this superb account by the Vienna Philharmonic Quintet remains an excellent way of getting to know this fine work. The rich (1974) Decca/Sofiensaal sound – full and sweet – retains its qualities on CD.

The Brandis version of the Quintet offers a splendid coupling in Brahms's G major Quintet, Op. 111, and their playing stands up well alongside the current competition. They are well recorded and have a natural feeling for the space and pacing of this piece. For those attracted by the coupling, this could well be a first choice.

The Raphael Ensemble, coupling their performance with the Intermezzo in D minor and the opening Sextet from Strauss's Capriccio, are ardently full-blooded in an eloquent account and have the benefit of rich recorded sound.

VOCAL MUSIC

Masses (i) 1 in D min.; 2 in E min.; (ii) 3 in F min.

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 447 409-2 (2). (i) Mathis, Schiml, Ochman, Ridderbusch; (ii) Stader, Hellman, Haefliger, Borg; Bav. R. Ch. & O, Jochum

Bruckner composed his three Masses between 1864 and 1868, although all three works were revised two decades later. Each contains magnificent music. Eugen Jochum is surely an ideal interpreter, finding their mystery as well as their eloquence, breadth and humanity. The Kyrie of the E minor swelling out gloriously from its gentle opening is breathtaking, while the fervour of the passionate F minor work is extraordinarily compelling, with the intensity and drive of an inspirational live performance. Throughout all three works, the scale and drama of Bruckner's inspiration are fully conveyed, and in these newest transfers the warmly atmospheric analogue recordings from the early 1970s are given remarkable vividness and presence.

Masses 1–3; Aequalis 1 & 2; Motets: Afferentur regi virgines; Ave Maria; Christus factus est; Ecce sacerdos magnus; Inveni David; Locus iste; Os justi; Pange lingua; Tota pulchra es, Maria; Vexilla regis; Virga Jesse; Libera me. Psalm 150; Te Deum

Ⓜ  Hyp. CDS 44071 (3). Soloists, Corydon Singers and O; ECO Wind Ens., Best; T. Trotter (organ)

It makes good sense to assemble all of the Bruckner choral music that the Corydon Singers and Matthew Best have recorded during the last few years in one three-CD set. They are very fine indeed and make a splendid modern alternative to Jochum; when eloquent and natural, Best's direction is imaginative and he achieves a wide tonal range.

Mass 2 in E min.; Mass in C

 Chan. 9863. Kuznetzova, Golub, Russian State Symphonic Cappella, Russian State SO, Polyansky

There is something seraphic about the E minor Mass. It may not have the grandeur and majesty of the later symphonies, but there is a simplicity of invention and an elevation of feeling that are affecting, particularly when it is recorded so beautifully and performed with the eloquence of Polyansky and his Russian forces on Chandos. The early C major Mass is a most welcome coupling.

(i) Mass 2 in E min. Motets: Ave Maria; Christus factus est; Os justi; Locus iste; Pange lingua; Vexilla regis; Virga Jesse floruit

* Hyp. CDA 67629. Polyphony, Layton; (i) with Britten Sinfonia

Glorious singing from Polyphony under Stephen Layton, especially in the Credo and Sanctus of the Mass, which in his hands have all the exultant power you could wish for, yet the work's gentler qualities are well displayed in the Benedictus and Agnus Dei. The motets are for the most part more seraphic and are beautifully sung. The music-making is projected within the richly resonant acoustics of Ely Cathedral, which surely is perfect for Bruckner, with the climaxes soaring with a moving ecclesiastical rapture.

Motets: Afferentur regi; Ave Maria; Christus factus est; Ecce sacerdos; Iam lucis orto sidere; Inveni David; Libera me; Locus iste; Os justi; Pange lingua; Salvum fac populum tuum; Tantum ergo; Tota pulchra es; Vexilla regis; Virga Jesse

(BB)  Naxos 8.550956: St Bride's Church Ch., Jones

(i) Motets: Afferentur regi; Ave Maria; Christus factus est; Ecce sacerdos; Locus iste; Os justi; Pange lingua; Tota pulchra es; Vexilla regis; Virga Jesse. (ii) Psalm 150; Te Deum

(M)  DG (ADD) 457 743-2 (2). (i) Bav. R. Ch.; (ii) Stader, Wagner, Haefliger, Lagger, German Op. Ch., Berlin, BPO; Jochum

This Naxos disc is the first commercial recording of the St Bride's Church Choir, and very impressive it is, for with crisp, clear ensemble and fresh tone from boyish-sounding sopranos they give warmly sympathetic performances of these fine Bruckner motets, an excellent selection covering most of the best known. The recording is full and vivid, set against a helpful church acoustic which does not obscure detail.

On DG, the ten motets are sung superbly and are among Jochum's most distinguished recordings. With excellent soloists, the performances of the two larger-scale works here have fine eloquence and admirable breadth and humanity and no lack of drama and, with some fine singing from Maria Stader and Ernst Haefliger, as well as superbly loving orchestral support from the Berliners, this has a special eloquence. The original recordings tended to be distanced; in making the sound more present and clear the remastering is undoubtedly fresher and brighter.

Requiem in D min.; Psalms 112 & 114

(*) Hyp. CDA 66245. Rodgers, Denley, M. Davies, George, Corydon Singers, ECO, Best; T. Trotter (organ)

Matthew Best here tackles the very early setting of the Requiem which Bruckner wrote at the age of 25. The quality of the writing in the Psalm settings also varies; but with fine, strong performances from singers and players alike, including an excellent team of soloists, this is well worth investigating by Brucknerians. First-rate recording.

Te Deum

(M)  EMI 2 12718-2 Pashley, Finnila, Tear, Garrard, New Philh. Ch. & O, Barenboim – MOZART: Requiem ***

(BB)  Warner Apex 8573 89128-2. Spreckelsen, Ankerson, Adalbert Kraus, Moll, Bielefeld Musikverein Ch., Philh. Hung., Stephani – VERDI: Te Deum ***

Bruckner's Te Deum is an unexpected coupling for Mozart's Requiem, but by the dynamism which Barenboim injects in both works there is an unexpected link of style. The Bruckner, like the Mozart, receives a vivid, very lively performance, relying not so much on massive choral effects (the recording was done with a comparatively small choir in a smallish church) as on rhythmic energy. Barenboim's approach to Bruckner proves warmly enjoyable and this disc is an excellent choice if the coupling suits.

Another outstanding account of Bruckner's 1884 setting of the Te Deum from Martin Stephani, vibrantly direct and gripping, with an excellent team of soloists and very fine choral singing over a wide range of dynamic. Stephani is fully sympathetic to the composer's deeply felt religious feeling. The well-balanced recording provides a warm acoustic while giving the chorus bite and amplitude. Text and translation are included. A bargain.

BRUSA, Elisabetta (born 1954)

Adagio; Favole; Firelights; Requiescat; Suite grotesque; Wedding Song

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.555267. Nat. SO of Ukraine, Mastrangelo

Elisabetta Brusa was born in Milan and studied at the Conservatoire, before moving on to participate at Dartington and Tanglewood. The glittering Scherzo, Firelights, is characteristic of her orchestral skill, but the expressive eloquence of the following 16-minute Adagio would not be out of place in almost any late 20th-century symphony, and the engagingly rhapsodic Wedding Song is memorable in a lustrously romantic way,

The yearning Requiescat for large orchestra ends with a soaring solo soprano voice adding to the passionate celebration of the coda. The Suite grotesque might be regarded as a sinfonietta, with its slightly weird opening Scherzo, a darkly atmospheric slow movement, and a vigorous finale that gathers together the themes of the preceding movements 'in quadruple counterpoint', to reach a very positive apotheosis.

In the Fables Brusa uses the same orchestral identifications as did Prokofiev in Peter and the Wolf, so the listener has no trouble in identifying the characters. Most imaginative are Hans Andersen's The Real Nightingale and the Mechanical One, and the innocently poignant portrait of The Ugly Duckling. Most picaresque is La Fontaine's The Ant and the Grasshopper (a saxophone), but The Philosophical Fly (Aesop) meets his end spectacularly, and Perrault's Puss in Boots is given a jolly royal march, with a winningly jaunty main theme. First-class performances and a splendidly vivid recording, with the only real reservation being the unflattering sound of the Ukrainian upper strings.

Fanfare; Florestan (orchestral portrait); Nittemero Symphony; Messidor (fantasy); La Triade (symphonic poem)

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.555266. Nat. SO of Ukraine, Mastrangelo

Messidor is the most immediately attractive work here, an orchestral fantasy inspired by 'A Midsummer Night's Dream'. Florestan (1997) evokes Schumann's imaginary character. 'Rain pours down incessantly' in La Triade (1994), an orchestral 'curtain of water', its scenario drawn both by an Aesop fable (with a fox and snake the central characters) and by Leonardo da Vinci's description of 'The Deluge'. The Nittemero ('Night and Day') Symphony (1985–8) is scored for 14 players, and again the ear is immediately struck by the composer's vivid orchestral world. The three-movement work is cyclic, depicting the 24 hours, from midday to midday. The performances here are bold and committed and generally well recorded, except that the Ukrainian violins sound thin in their upper range. But this is a promising début, and worth sampling at Naxos price.

BULL, John (c. 1562–1628)

Keyboard Music: 'Dr Bull's Jewel': for Clavichord & Harpsichord

* Lyrichord LEMS 8060. Kathryn Cok (harpsichord & virginal)

An aptly named collection, for Kathryn Cok really does make a jewel out of Bull's piece of that name, and she is equally imaginative in picturing The King's Hunt. She opens invitingly with Bull's Goodnight, the virtuoso divisions of Walsingham and the embroidery of the In nomine are encompassed with flair, and Bonny Peg of Ramsey has proper wit. This is a very attractive collection indeed, and the recording of the harpsichord is remarkably clear and present.

BUSH, Alan (1900–95)

Cello Sonata, Op. 120; 3 Contrapuntal Studies for Violin and Viola, Op. 13; Phantasy for Violin and Piano, Op. 3; Piano Quartet, Op. 5

🔑 Ⓜ  Dutton CDLX 7130. London Piano Qt

The Cello Sonata was written in 1989, sixty years after the other works here, and it shows the mature composer at his finest in such a sympathetic performance as this by David Kennedy and Philip Fowke. The Piano Quartet (1924, revised 1929) is also highly inventive and full of character, its warm underlying lyricism ensures the music's ready communication throughout. The equally appealing Phantasy for Violin and Piano (1923) is similarly lavish in its melodic flow and it brings matching rhythmic freedom, while the three Contrapuntal Studies are as aurally enticing as they are skilfully contrived. All these performances from members of the London Piano Quartet are deeply felt and show how well these four fine artists identify completely with the composer. The recording too, is very lifelike, to make this a most rewarding collection.

(i; ii) Concert Piece for Cello & Piano, Op. 17; (i–iii) 3 Concert Studies for Piano Trio, Op. 31; (i; ii) 2 Easy Pieces for Cello & Piano; (ii; iii) 2 Melodies, Op. 47; Sonatina, Op. 88 (both for viola & piano); (i; ii) Summer Valley for Cello & Piano

 Mer. CDE 84458. (i) Spooner; (ii) C. Summerhayes; (iii) A. Summerhayes

The instrumental programme on Meridian is stimulating and includes the other key work in the composer's output, the riveting Concert Piece for cello and piano of 1936, written prophetically as war clouds were gathering in Europe. The balm of the Viola Sonatina with its pastoral feeling and the lovely, very English evocation of a Summer Valley (both ravishingly played here) offer genuine solace. The two charming Easy Pieces for cello, and the pair for viola (both with piano) show Bush's disarming melodic gift.

(i) 3 Concert Studies For Piano Trio, Op. 31; (ii) (Piano) 2 Ballads of the Sea, Op. 50: The Cruel Sea Captain. Suite, Op. 54: Galliard; Air. Corentyne Kwee-Kwe, Op. 75

(*) Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 256. (i) Bean, Croxford, Parkhouse; (ii) composer – BERKELEY: Sextet; Sonatina; RAWSTHORNE: Clarinet Qt *

Alan Bush's Concert Studies are not quite as successful as the Berkeley and Rawsthorne couplings: their content is not wholly in harmony with their dimensions, and the composer's piano playing is not as completely assured as one would like. However, this is still well worth having.

(i) Lyric Interlude, Op. 26; Meditation on a German Song (The Trooper's Pledge), Op. 22; Le quatorze juillet: esquisse, Op. 38; Preludes & Fugues 1–2, Op. 108; Serenade and Duet, Op. 111; Song and Dance, Op. 117a. 3 Raga Melodies for Unaccompanied Violin, Op. 59

🔑  Mer. CDE 844481. Adam Summerhayes; (i) Catherine Summerhayes

Alan Bush's splendid four-movement Lyric Interlude (1944) shows the composer at his most appealingly melodic. Its intensity of feeling derives from the tragic death of one of his daughters in a road accident. The Meditation on a German Song of 1848 perhaps expresses the composer's feelings about death even more tellingly. Le quatorze juillet, both jaunty and reflective, is a very French tribute to the wartime Résistance. The Three Raga Melodies (1961), for solo violin, although written in classic Raga styles, still have a surprisingly Western feeling. Apart from the concentration of the writing, there is little Bachian influence in the two late Preludes and Fugues (1986) and the connecting rhapsodic 'Interlude' emphasizes the lyricism of the composer's style. With the Serenade and Duet, Op. 111, and the delightful miniatures of Op. 117a Bush finally moves into a distinctly English modal style and an appealing personal simplicity of utterance. Altogether this is a first-class survey. Adam Summerhayes proves a committed, accomplished and understanding advocate, admirably partnered by Catherine, and the Meridian balance and recording cannot be faulted.

BUSH, Geoffrey (born 1920)

Symphonies (i) 1; (ii) 2 (Guildford); (iii) Music for Orchestra; (iv) Overture Yorick

 Lyrita (ADD/DDD) SRCD 252. (i) LSO, Braithwaite; (ii) RPO, Wordsworth; (iii) LPO; (iv) Philh. O; (iii–iv) Handley

The vigorous Yorick Overture (1949), written in memory of the comedian Tommy Handley, opens this concert most invitingly. It has all the exuberance of a Walton overture and is an immensely jolly piece. The first of the two symphonies dates from 1954 and is a positive, three-movement structure centring on an elegiac slow movement with blues overtones, written in memory of Constant Lambert. The Second Symphony is outgoing, too. This is no formal exercise but a warm statement of personal feeling. Music for Orchestra (1967) is also designed to be played continuously. It is, in the composer's words, 'a miniature symphony', with the string parts carefully written to be playable by amateur performers, yet with plenty of opportunities for bravura offered to the wind and brass. Ample percussion and a piano add to the vividness. All the performances and recordings are outstandingly good, notably that of the Symphony No. 2, conducted by Barry Wordsworth.

Farewell, Earth's Bliss; 4 Hesperides Songs; A Menagerie; (i) A Summer Serenade

 Chan. 8864. Varcoe, Thompson, Westminster Singers, City of L. Sinfonia, Hickox, (i) with Parkin

The delightful Summer Serenade of seven song-settings has long been Bush's most frequently performed work, and this first recording glowingly brings out the sharp contrasts of mood within and between the songs, with instrumentation just as felicitous as the choral writing. It is well coupled with a solo song-cycle of comparable length, Farewell, Earth's Bliss, with Stephen Varcoe the baritone soloist; four songs from Herrick's Hesperides, also for baritone and strings; and three for unaccompanied voices, including an insistently menacing setting of Blake's Tyger. The tenor Adrian Thompson, not ideally pure-toned, contributes to only two of the Serenade songs; otherwise these are near-ideal performances in warm, open sound.

BUSONI, Ferruccio (1866–1924)

Berceuse élégiaque, Op. 42; (i) Concertino for Clarinet & Small Orchestra. Geharnischte Suite; 2 Studies for Doktor Faust, Op. 51; Tanz Walzer

 Chan. 9920. (i) Bradbury; BBC PO, Järvi

The Geharnischte Suite is the rarity here, and although not top-drawer Busoni, it is still rewarding and inventive. Neeme Järvi and the BBC Philharmonic produce sumptuous performances of the moving, dream-like Berceuse élégiaque, written on the death of the composer's mother, and the inspired Sarabande and Cortège, the Studies for Doktor Faust. The Tanz Walzer also found their way into Doktor Faust, where they were used to depict festivities at the Court of Parma. The BBC Philharmonic play with evident commitment, and John Bradbury is the elegant and sensitive soloist in the Concertino for Clarinet and Small Orchestra. The sound is first class and in the best traditions of the house.

Berceuse élégiaque; 2 Studies for Doktor Faust; Turandot Suite, Op. 41

Ⓑ () Naxos 8.555373. Hong Kong PO, Wong

The Turandot Suite has all the qualities of melodic appeal (its fifth movement quotes Greensleeves), resourceful invention and brilliant orchestral colour that should ensure its popularity. The two Studies, the Sarabande and Cortège, written in preparation for his opera, Doktor Faust, remain the composer's masterpiece, highly searching and imaginative music that can claim to be profound, as, indeed, can the Berceuse élégiaque. Both performances and recording are very good, and this disc serves as an admirable and inexpensive introduction to a fascinating and underrated master.

Elegien 1–7; Fantasia after Bach; Toccata; BACH: Prelude and Fugue in D, BWV532 (arr. Busoni)

Ⓝ Ⓑ  Naxos 8.570543 Wolf Harden

The Elegies (1907) show the subtle, visionary and inward-looking side of Busoni's personality and the Seventh from 1909 is the exploratory piece that Busoni was to expand after the war as Berceuse élégiaque for orchestra. This CD, part of Naxos's survey of Busoni's piano music, is the most important and essential buy for collectors. Wolf Harden, well known for his playing in the Trio Fortenay, is a thoughtful and perceptive exponent of this repertoire and readers should lose no time in investigating his artistry for themselves. Other Volumes include the Tanzwalzer, Dance Pieces, Ballet Scenes and Indian Diary, Book I (8.570249); and the Opus 16 Etudes, 6 Pieces, Op. 33b and the Variations on Chopin's C minor Prelude (8. 555699).

Piano Concerto, Op. 39

🔑  Hyp. CDA 67143. Hamelin, CBSO Ch., CBSO, Elder

Ⓜ  Telarc CD 80207. Ohlsson, Cleveland O & Ch., Dohnányi

Busoni's Piano Concerto is arguably the most formidable in his repertory, but in such an inspired reading as Hamelin's it emerges as a genuine Everest of a work. The challenge it presents has already sparked off an impressive list of recordings, but Hamelin's is the finest yet. Even before the piano enters, the opening tutti, four minutes long, establishes the rapt, glowing intensity of the performance, thanks to Mark Elder's dedicated conducting of the Birmingham Orchestra, with radiant recording to match. Above all, Hamelin and Elder bring out the warmer, more colourful qualities behind the five massive movements, the dedication of the long Pezzo serioso beautifully sustained.

With extra prominence given to the solo instrument, Garrick Ohlsson's bravura display is very exciting, and the pianist's own pleasure in virtuosity enhances his electricity and flair. However, in the choral finale the CBSO Chorus on Hyperion has more impact than the Cleveland Orchestra Chorus, creating a more impressive culmination.

(i) Indianische Fantasie, Op. 44. Lustspiel Overture, Op. 38; Gesang vom Regen der Geister; Die Brautwahl: Suite

 Chan. 10302. (i) Goerner; BBC PO, Järvi

Starting attractively with the sparkling Lustspiel Overture there is much to enjoy here, not least in the two works built on 'Indian' themes, the music of Native Americans, not from the subcontinent. The Indian Fantasy is in effect a piano concerto in a single movement of eight contrasted sections, and Nelson Goerner copes brilliantly with the virtuoso writing that Busoni designed for himself. On a much smaller scale Gesang vom Regen der Geister, 'Song of the Spirit Dance', involves equally colourful use of similar ideas, for strings, wind and timpani. Die Brautwahl, 'Bridal Choice', was Busoni's first opera, based on a story by E. T. A. Hoffmann, and in this suite he puts together an atmospheric sequence of segments from it, with instruments taking over vocal lines in vivid orchestration, with an element of grotesquerie. Brilliant playing under Järvi and vivid recording.

Violin Sonatas 1–2; in C (1876), BN52

 Finlandia 2564 61078-2. Lev, Raekallio

These Finlandia performances are coupled with an early sonata, written when Busoni was ten. This playing is utterly compelling and has an authenticity of feeling and dedication that is completely persuasive, and these fine players serve it to perfection. Very natural recorded sound.

SOLO PIANO MUSIC

An die Jugend: Giga bolero e variazione. Elegies: All'Italia; Berceuse; Turandots Frauengemach. Exeunt omnes; Fantasia nach J. S. Bach; Indianisches Tagebuch (Red Indian Diary), Book I; Sonatinas 2; 6 (Kammerfantasie on 'Carmen'); Toccata. Transcription of BACH: Prelude & Fugue in D, BWV 532

 Chan. 9394. Tozer

This collection is thoroughly worthwhile. The Chandos disc assembles nearly 80 minutes of Busoni's piano music and makes an admirable and well-chosen introduction to it. Most pieces come off very well indeed, and often brilliantly, from the Exeunt omnes and the Elegien to the Indianisches Tagebuch and the attractive Turandots Frauengemach. This is an excellent CD, very well recorded and thoroughly recommendable.

4 Elegies; Sonatina seconda; Toccata; arr. of BACH: Toccata & Fugue in D min., BWV 565; Chorales: Ich ruf' zu dir, Wachet auf

 MDG 312 0436-2. Tanski

Claudius Tanski proves a most persuasive Busoni interpreter. He plays four of the Elegies, Nos. 3–6. Both in Busoni's visionary pieces and in the transcriptions of the Bach, he is more than equal to the technical and imaginative challenges this music presents. Artistically this is three-star playing and, though the recording is not in the demonstration bracket, it is superior.

Fantasia contrappuntistica; Fantasia after J. S. Bach; Toccata

(*) Altarus (ADD) AIR-2-9074. Ogdon

Ronald Stevenson calls Busoni's remarkable Fantasia contrappuntistica a masterpiece and, listening to John Ogdon's performance, one is tempted to agree. The Fantasia after J. S. Bach was written a year earlier and is among Busoni's most concentrated and powerful piano works. The balance places Ogdon rather far back and, as the acoustic is somewhat reverberant, the piano sounds a little clangy.

OPERA

Doktor Faust (DVD Version)

 Arthaus DVD 101 283 (2). Hampson, Groissböck, Kunde, Trattnigg, Zurich Op. Ch. & O, Jordan

A rarity in the opera house and the recording studio, and in this respect this first DVD set does not prove a major disappointment. Fischer-Dieskau is memorable in the title role, Thomas Hampson is in good voice, and particularly noteworthy is the Mephistopheles of Gregory Kunde, marvellously characterized and vocally no less distinguished. Philippe Jordan opts for the edition by Busoni's pupil, the composer Philipp Jarnach, and does justice to the mysterious sonorities, the magical atmosphere and complex invention. Jarnach did not have access to all the surviving sketch material, which did not surface in the public domain until Antony Beaumont's edition. Such is the quality of this work that, whatever the shortcomings of this version and the flaws of the production, it is still worth having.

Doktor Faust (complete)

(*) Erato 3984 25501-2 (3). Henschel, Begley, Hollop, Jenis, Kerl, Fischer-Dieskau, Lyon Op. Ch. & O, Nagano

Kent Nagano and his Lyon Opéra forces fill an important gap in the catalogue with this first really complete recording of Busoni's masterpiece, using the score as completed after Busoni's death by his pupil, Philipp Jarnach. The set seeks to get the best of both worlds by also offering the extended realization of the closing scenes prepared by Anthony Beaumont with the help of newly discovered extra sketches. Fischer-Dieskau here recites the opening and closing superscriptions, normally omitted in stage productions. Dietrich Henschel may not be a searching or weighty interpreter, but the clarity and incisiveness of his singing are most impressive, leading to a noble account of the death scene, one of the passages expanded in the Beaumont version. He is well contrasted with the powerful Mephistopheles of Kim Begley, a tenor role that is Wagnerian in its demands. The rest of the cast is first rate, with voices well forward; but the impact of the performance is slightly blunted by the backward balance of the orchestra, distanced in a more spacious acoustic.

BUTTERWORTH, Arthur

(born 1923)

(i; ii) Viola Concerto. Symphonies (iii) 1; (ii) 4

Ⓝ Ⓜ  Dutton stereo/mono CDLX 7212. (i) RSNO, Butterworth with (ii) Bradley; (iii) Hallé O, Barbirolli

Arthur Butterworth's Sibelian First Symphony is powerfully argued and arresting, the product of a resourceful mind. Barbirolli gave the work its prèmiere and here he directs a performance from the Proms in 1958. The performance has a compelling intensity (the opening of the slow movement is magical) which overcomes the sonic limitations of the mono sound. The Fourth symphony, completed in 1986, and composed in Yorkshire, is again Sibelian in atmosphere. There is much beauty found in the often wind-swept writing – the slow movement is particularly haunting and atmospheric, and the finale bold and dramatic. It receives a first-rate performance under the direction of the composer and the Dutton sound is superb. Butterworth's Viola concerto (1988–92) is another example of a contemporary composer able to write romantically inspired music of top quality yet without sounding contrived. The opening theme floats out of the combination of timpani strokes and a passage for two horns which begins the first movement and the music, rather melancholy in nature, unfolds with imagination and inspiration. As often with this composer, he provides a striking slow movement, intense and beautiful, and the finale, as the composer says, 'is another kind of moto perpetuo, which makes its relentless way to a violent conclusion'. Superb performances and recording. This CD also includes a fascinating 30-minute talk by the composer about his life and work.

Summer Music, Op. 77

Ⓜ  ASV CD WHL 2132. Salvage, Royal Ballet Sinfonia, Sutherland (with Collection of Bassoon Concertos and Concertinos ***)

Although a concertante piece, led by the soliloquizing bassoon, Arthur Butterworth's unforgettably atmospheric triptych is more like a three-part symphonic poem, organically whole in the way of Sibelius, yet reflecting not Nordic scenery but the North Yorkshire moors, which, as the composer tells us, 'despite the exhilaration of sun and wind on the high hills in summertime' (tellingly evoked in the finale), 'there ever seems to be a faint indefinable air of lonely melancholy brooding'. This is imaginatively caught by the soloist here; and Butterworth's subtly vivid use of orchestral colour increases the music's evocation and intensity. The performance is altogether first class and so is the recording. It comes within an attractive collection of more lightweight bassoon concertos and the disc is well worth investigating.

Symphony 1, Op. 15

🔑  Classico CLASSCD 274. Munich SO, Bostock – GIPPS: Symphony 2 ***

How is it possible for a symphony of this quality to be so neglected by the British musical establishment? It is powerful, imaginative and atmospheric. Arthur Butterworth comes from Manchester and played in the Hallé and Scottish National Orchestras. His First Symphony is a large-scale, 40-minute work which Sir John Barbirolli premièred in 1957. Sibelian in outlook (but none the worse for that) and with an innate feeling for the landscape of northern England and Scotland, it is powerfully argued and arresting – the product of a resourceful musical mind. It resonates in the memory, and Douglas Bostock and the Munich Orchestra capture both its sombre mood and its stormy climaxes; the composer had the desolate Cape Wrath in mind in the last movement, where the music's whirlwind energy is splendidly conveyed. The recording is excellent, spacious and full-bodied.

MUSIC FOR BRASS

3 Impressions for Brass, Op. 36; Passacaglia on a Theme of Brahms, Op. 87; Sinfonia concertante, Op. 111; arr. for brass of BRAHMS: Variations on a Theme of Handel, Op. 24

 Doyen DOYCD 130. Black Dyke Band, Childs

With the moorlands of northern England for his inspiration, Arthur Butterworth's Three Impressions for Brass draws a parallel with Malcolm Arnold's nostalgic Cornish Dances, although moving northeast to reflect the 19th-century industrial heritage of Northumberland. A direct association with Brahms then brings a brilliant Passacaglia on (an inverted version of) the main theme of the final movement of that composer's Fourth Symphony, itself a Passacaglia, with Brahms's original chorale emerging thrillingly to dominate the climax.

The confidently structured Sinfonia concertante, with tenor horn and (brass) baritone as soloists, moves from a pastoral first movement (with distinct echoes of Vaughan Williams's Fifth Symphony) through a brilliant Scherzo, and a slow movement called Night Music, where there are darker, even sinister, undercurrents, and on to an excitingly ebullient closing Rondo.

For the final item the band offers Butterworth's brilliant transcription for brass of Brahms's Variations and Fugue on a Theme of Handel, Op. 24. The playing of the Black Dyke Band is pretty marvellous throughout, and in the notes the composer expresses his own praise for the conductor of what he calls 'these magnificent and stunning performances'. The recording is excellent.

Piano Trios 1, Op. 73; 2, Op. 121; Viola Sonata, Op. 78

Ⓜ  Dutton CDLX 7164. Terroni Piano Trio (members)

The fully mature First Piano Trio has associations with Sibelius's Sixth Symphony and is the highlight of the disc; its confident opening movement, surging forward lyrically, and the lighter, engaging Allegretto finale are used to frame a hauntingly atmospheric central Adagio, translucent in texture, which the composer tells us recalls a radiant summer evening crossing the Baltic. The Second Trio, much more recent (2004), again has a nostalgic Adagio as its lyrical kernel, and an energetically driven finale suggestive of a 'cor de chasse'. The Viola Sonata, written in the early 1980s, brings 'a faint whiff of the Celtic twilight of Bax'. It is a comparatively robust and lively work in which the piano takes a major role, and it is the finale, marked Lento penserosiamente, which is more characteristic of the viola's usual darker, nostalgic role. Performances here are strong and spontaneous, persuasive in their expressive eloquence, and the recordings are first class and most realistically balanced.

BUTTERWORTH, George
(1885–1916)

The Banks of Green Willow

🔑 (BB)  Warner Apex 2564 61437-2. RPO, Warren-Green – BRITTEN: Simple Symphony; ELGAR: String Serenade; HOLST: St Paul's Suite; VAUGHAN WILLIAMS: Fantasia on a Theme of Tallis ***

 Chan. Compatible SACD CHSA 5001; CD CHAN 9902. LSO, Hickox – VAUGHAN WILLIAMS: London Symphony (Original Version) ***

Ⓜ  Chan. (ADD) 6566. Bournemouth Sinf., Del Mar – BANTOCK: The Pierrot of the Minute: overture; BRIDGE: Summer, etc. ***

The Banks of Green Willow; 2 English Idylls; A Shropshire Lad (rhapsody)

 Nim. NI 5068. E. String O, Boughton – BRIDGE: Suite; PARRY: Lady Radnor's Suite ***

The RPO, woodwind and strings alike, play most beautifully in Christopher Warren-Green's idyllic performance which brings out the music's pastoral colouring as well as its rapture. The recording is first class, and the couplings are equally recommendable.

Butterworth's idyll makes a warmly atmospheric coupling for Vaughan Williams, and it is available additionally in multi-channel sound, where it sounds even more richly atmospheric.

Boughton secures from his Birmingham-based orchestra warm and refined playing in well-paced readings. In an ample acoustic, woodwind is placed rather behind the strings.

On Chandos, Del Mar gives a glowingly persuasive performance, which comes as part of another highly interesting programme of English music devoted also to Butterworth's somewhat older contemporaries, Bantock and Frank Bridge. The digital transfer of a 1979 analogue recording has the benefit of even greater clarity without loss of atmosphere.

A Shropshire Lad (rhapsody)

Ⓜ () Cala mono CACD 0528. NBC SO, Stokowski – ANTHEIL: Symphony 4; VAUGHAN WILLIAMS: Symphony 4 ()

Stokowski in this evocative Butterworth tone-poem draws ravishing, sensuous sounds from the NBC Orchestra, notably the strings, unrecognizable as Toscanini's players. Sadly, the 1944 radio recording, cleanly focused and well transferred, is marred by some 'wow' on the tape.

Love Blows as the Wind (3 songs)

Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 7 64731-2. Tear, CBSO, Handley – ELGAR; VAUGHAN WILLIAMS: Songs ***

These three charming songs (In the year that's come and gone, Life in her creaking shoes, Coming up from Richmond), to words by W. E. Henley, provide an excellent makeweight for a mixed bag of orchestral songs based on the first recording of Vaughan Williams's On Wenlock Edge in its orchestral form. The sound is clear, yet enjoyably warm and atmospheric.

BUXTEHUDE, Dietrich
(c. 1637–1707)

7 Trio Sonatas, Op. 1, BuxWV 252–8

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.557248. Holloway, Mortensen, Ter Linden

 HM HMC 901746. Kraemer, Quintama, Roberts, Börner

 Hyp. CDA 67236. Wallfisch, Tunnicliffe, Nicholson

7 Trio Sonatas, Op. 2, BuxWV 259–65

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.557249. Holloway, Mortensen, Ter Linden

Buxtehude was nearly sixty when he published his Sonatas, Op. 1 and Op. 2. Each contains seven works and together they ambitiously explore all the major and minor keys, beginning with F major and omitting only F minor and B flat minor. What is immediately striking about both Op. 1 and Op. 2 is not just the variety of invention, but the way Buxtehude heightens the contrasting vitality of his allegros by introducing them with Lentos or Adagios of considerable expressive intensity. With John Holloway a very stylish leader, the performances on Naxos are expert, fresh and alive, using period instruments brightly without edginess or unattractive linear squeezing. The group is very well balanced and the recording immediate and real.

Of the other sets of Op. 1, the Hyperion recording is rather more intimate than the Harmonia Mundi version. Much depends on the lead violin in these works, and Manfredo Kraemer's virtuosity and strong instrumental personality are reminiscent of Andrew Manze, although of course Elizabeth Wallfisch who leads the Hyperion group certainly does not lack a strong profile and she and her colleagues make an impressive team. But Kraemer is especially appealing both in the lyrical writing, and in his witty pointing of the rhythmic snaps which are a feature of the splendid Ciaconna Vivace which opens the Fourth Sonata. The volatility of tempo is a splendid example of Buxtehude's stylus fantasticus which so impressed Bach and which is particularly well handled by Kraemer and his colleagues. In short, both these sets of performances are first class, but to us the Harmonia Mundi disc is marginally the more appealing, and it is very well recorded. But the Naxos complete set is first choice.

KEYBOARD MUSIC

Aria: La Capricciosa (32 Variations), BuxWV 250; Aria: More Palatino (12 Variations), BuxWV 247; Courant simple in A min., BuxWV 245 (7 Variations); Preludium manualiter in G min., BuxWV 163; Suites: in C, BuxWV 226, 228, 230, 231; in D, BuxWV 232; in D min., BuxWV 233 & 234; in E min., BuxWV 235; in F BuxWV 238 ; in G min., BuxWV 242; in A, BuxWV 243. Suite in D min (ed. E. Roger)

🔑 ✿  Chall. CC 72240 (2). Koopman (harpsichord)

Ton Koopman's survey of Buxtehude's keyboard music is very distinguished indeed. He uses two instruments by Willem Kroebergen, preferring a copy of a Flemish two-manuel Ruckers for most of the repertoire here, but offering variety by also using an Italian copy of a single-manual instrument after Giusti. They are splendidly recorded and he plays throughout with imagination and spontaneity, always holding the listener's interest. He includes three key sets of variations, the remarkably varied La Capricciosa, which almost certainly proved a model for Bach's Goldberg set, the Aria, More Palatino (12 often virtuosic variations on a 17th-century folk tune), and the hardly less demanding Courant simple, with seven variations. But the bulk of the collection is made up of 12 Suites in the French style, full of attractive invention.

Aria with 2 Variations in A min., BuxWV 249; La Capricciosa (32 Variations on the Bergamasca), BuxWV 250; Chorale Partita: Auf meinen lieben Gott, BuxWV 179; Praeludia in G & G min., BuxWV 162 & 163; Suite in G min., BuxWV 241; Toccata in G, BuxWV 165

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.557413. Wilson

An outstanding recital to show the full range and scope of Buxtehude's keyboard writing. The two Praeludia are written in the very free style known as stylus fantasicus. The Suite in G minor is particularly attractive, while the Chorale Partita is in a hybrid format, using the same four dance movements to characterize the variants of the chorale theme. Wilson plays with great flair, and in addition provides excellent back-up documentation. He uses a modern copy of a 1626 Ruckers, which is vividly if somewhat resonantly recorded; this means that one needs to set not too high a volume in the opening virtuoso G major Toccata.

ORGAN MUSIC

Complete Organ Music, Volume 1

 dacapo 8.226002. Bryndorf (Elsinore Chapel organ)

Complete Organ Music, Volume 2

(*) dacapo 8.226008. Bryndorf (organ of St Mary's Church, Elsinore)

Complete Organ Music, Volume 3

 dacapo 8.226023. Bryndorf (organ of St Mary's Church, Helsingborg)

Complete Organ Music, Volume 4

 dacapo 6.220514. Bryndorf (organ of German Church, Stockholm)

A collaboration between Danish Radio and dacapo, these four issues are part of a complete survey of the organ works, using different organs. The discs are authoritatively annotated with details of registration, and with music-type illustrations for the choral harmonization. Bine Bryndorf studied in Vienna, Boston and Paris, and collected various prizes in Bruges and Innsbruck. Listening to these vividly recorded and expertly balanced programmes leaves no doubt as to her artistry and intelligence, and the discs provide an admirable start to the series. These discs reaffirm the quality of Buxtehude's musical invention (which had a profound influence on Bach) and imagination.

Complete Organ Works, Volume I: includes 2 Chorale Fantasias; 4 Chorale Preludes; 2 Chorale Variations; Canzona in D min.; Ciaccona in G min.; Fuga in C; Preludes in A, G min., & G; Toccata in F

Ⓝ  Hyp. CDA 67666 Herrick (organ of Helsinger Cathedral, Denmark)

The Helsinger Cathedral organ seems to be highly suitable for Buxtehude's music and Christopher Herrick's new survey, of which this is the first instalment, now seems to be shaping up as first choice for this repertoire. Not surprisingly the Hyperion recording is first class.

VOCAL MUSIC

Cantatas: An filius non est Dei, BuxWV 6; Dixit Dominus Domino meo, BuxWV 17; Herr, nun läßt du deinen Deiner, BuxWV 37; Jesu dolcis memoria, BuxWV 57; Jesu, komm, mein Trost und Lachen, BuxWV 58; Lobe den Herrn, meine Seele, BuxWV 71; Das neugebor'ne Kindelein, BuxWV 13; Nichts soll uns scheiden von der Liebe Gottes, BuxWV 77; Quemadmodum desiderat cervus, BuxWV 92

 Chan. 0723. Kirkby, Chance, Daniels, Harvey, Augmented Purcell Qt

This further selection of Buxtehude's cantatas follows on naturally from the first (Chan. 0691, see below), with its star-studded cast, individual voices which yet blend beautifully together, stylish accompaniments and a recording which is again attractively warm and intinate.

Sacred Cantatas: Cantata Domino, BuxWV 12; Herr, wenn ich nur dich hab, BuxWV 38; Ich habe Lust abzuscheiden, BuxWV 47; Ich halte es dafür, BuxWV 48; Jesu meine Freude, BuxWV 60; Salve, Jesu, Patris gnate unigenite, BuxWV 94; Jesu dulcis memoria, BuxWV 56; Mein Herz ist bereit, BuxWV 73. (Organ) Fugue in C, BuxWV 174

🔑 * Chan. 0691. LeBlanc, Kirkby, Harvey, Purcell Qt; Woolley

A wholly admirable collection in which Emma Kirkby, although given prime billing, takes second place to the similarly light-timbred Canadian soprano, Suzie LeBlanc. Their voices match admirably in the many delightful passages of imitative part-writing that Buxtehude writes so deftly, never more so than in the lovely Jesu dulcis memoria and Salve Jesu. Harvey also has his own confidently affirmative solo cantata, Mein Herz ist bereit, and Suzie LeBlanc enjoys both a memorable duet cantata with the bass, Ich halte es dafür and a brief solo cantata, Herr, wenn ich nur dich hab. The Purcell Quartet accompany beautifully, and are usually given an introductory sonata to open the proceedings. As an interlude Robert Woolley plays the C major 'Gigue' Fugue, which provided the inspiration for Bach's G major Fugue, BWV 577. The recording is warm and intimate, and this collection cannot be too highly recommended.

Sacred Cantatas and Arias: Fried und freudenreich Hinfahrt; Organ Contrapuncti I–III; Klag-Lied, BuxWV 76. Gen Himmel zu dem Vater main, BuxWV 98; Herr, wenn ich nur dich hab, BuxWV 38; O dulcis Jesu, BuxWV83; O fröliche Stunden, BuxWV84; Schaff in mir, Gott, BuxWV95; Sicut Moses exaltavit serpentem, BuxWV97; Singet dem Herrn, BuxWV98; Was mich auf dieser Welt betrübt, BuxWV105

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.557251. Kirkby, Holloway, Kraemer, Ter Linden, Mortensen

Buxtehude wrote his Fried und freudenreich Hinfahrt at the time of his father's death in 1674. The three Contrapuncti (used here effectively as interludes) were probably intended to manifest the learning of the deceased, but the Klag-Lied is a poignant strophic song of mourning, sung here with infinite tenderness. Yet the programme opens with the delightfully jubilant aria, O fröliche Stunden ('Oh Happy Hours'), which is then followed by the beautiful sacred concerto (or cantata), O dulcis Jesu, in which Emma Kirkby alternates expressive richness with a more florid, arioso style. Was mich auf dieser Welt betrübt is another simple aria of great charm. But the most ambitious work here is Singet dem Herrn (a setting of the first four verses of Psalm 98) in which the soprano voice duets delightfully with a solo violin, while the closing Herr, wenn ich nur dich hab is in the form of a chaconne. With Kirkby in freshest voice, this is a wholly enjoyable disc. But the contribution of organist Lars Mortensen, who also doubles on harpsichord, is hardly less musical and pleasing. Full texts and translations are included.

Sacred Cantatas: In te, Domine, speravi, BuxWV 53; Jesu meine Freude, BuxWV 59; Jubilate Domino, BuxWV 64; Sicut Moses, BuxWV 97; Was frag'ich nach der Welt, BuxWV 104; Wenn ich, Herr Jesu, habe dich, BuxWV 107; Wir schmeckt es so lieblich und wohl, BuxWV 108

(BB)  Naxos 8.557041. Hill, White, Graindlay, Artia Ens., Mallon

Buxtehude's sacred cantatas are in no way laden with heavy religious symbolism but are remarkably fresh. The opening Was frag'ich nach der Welt ('What is the world to me') has a pastoral character, and the following Jesu meine Freude is full of joy. Wenn ich, Herr Jesu, habe dich, which follows the measured string Passacaglia, is more sombrely expressive in feeling, but Jubilate Domino (a solo cantata, nimbly sung here by the counter-tenor, Matthew White) demands considerable virtuosity. The concerted Wie schmeckt es so lieblich und wohl ('How lovely and good the saviour') is full of light-hearted praise. The performances here are pleasingly intimate, well sung (Katherine Hill, the soprano soloist in Sicut Moses, particularly fresh) and truthfully recorded. Full texts and translations are included, plus excellent documentation.

Membra Jesu nostri, BuxWV 75

🔑  BIS CD 871. Hida, Midori Suzuki, Yanagisawa, Anazawa, Mera, Sakurada, Ogasawara, Bach Coll., Japan, Masaaki Suzuki

(BB)  Naxos 8.553787. Trogu, Invernizzi, Balconi, Cecchetti, Carnovich, R. Svizzera (Lugano) Ch., Sonatori de la Gioiosa Marca, Treviso, Accademia Strumentale Italiana, Verona, Fasolis (with ROSENMULLER: Sinfonia XI ***)

Membra Jesu nostri, BuxWV 75; Fried und freudenreich Hinfahrt, BuxWV 76

🔑  Channel Classics SACD CCS SA 4006. Grimm, Zomer, De Groot, Tortise, Ramselaar, Netherlands Bach. Soc., van Veldhoven

The Membra Jesu nostri is a cycle of seven cantatas, each addressed to a different part of the body of the crucified Christ, all of a simple and dignified expressive power that movingly makes the strongest impression. Yet although each cantata is prefacd by a Bible motto, the cycle was not intended for liturgical use.

On BIS, Suzuki's Japanese ensemble bring a remarkably authentic feeling for period to this lovely work (Masaaki Suzuki worked with Ton Koopman for many years) and, although the recording is made in a rather reverberant acoustic environment, this does not seriously diminish the pleasure this set gives. However, unlike both its competitors, it is without a coupling.

The Netherlands performances under Jos van Veldhoven are very beautifully sung within an ideal acoustic, warmly resonant, yet with everything clearly detailed. The accompanying instrumental group which provides the sonatas and interludes is just as impressive. The disc is rounded off with another solo cantata, Fried und freudenreiche Hinfahrt, in which the closing Lamentation is beautifully sung by Johannette Zomer. This is a very successful collection indeed, which can hardly be praised too highly.

The performance from the Swiss–Italian Radio and ensembles from Verona and Treviso under Diego Fasolis is marginally less polished and accomplished vocally, but it has feeling and depth. They are most expertly balanced and the sound is excellent in every way. Those wanting a bargain need not hesitate.

BYRD, William (1543–1623)

The Byrd Complete Edition, Volume I: Early Manuscript Works

 Gaudeamus CDGAU 170.

Cardinall's Musick are putting us in their debt by providing (in new editions by David Skinner) a complete recorded survey of the vocal music of William Byrd. Volume I commences the series with a programme of the early manuscript works, which are used to frame the three Gradualia for the Lady Mass in Advent. At a centre point in each group of motets, a recorder consort provides two contrasting instrumental pieces. Most of this music is virtually unknown: it is all sung with great conviction, richly blended and convincingly paced. The recording was made in the Fitzalan Chapel at Arundel Castle, which provides an ideal acoustic, resonant yet never blurring detail.

The Byrd Complete Edition, Volume II: Christmas Music

 Gaudeamus CDGAU 178

Volume 2 is, if anything, even more stimulating than Volume 1, including as it does O salutaris hostia with its extraordinarily plangent harmonic clashes – the most musically daring work in the composer's whole output. The Propers for Christmas and the three associated Gradualia provide the central core of the recital.

The Byrd Complete Edition, Volume III

 Gaudeamus CDGAU 179

In Volume 3, Cardinall's Musick turn to rare music, mainly pieces which Byrd left unpublished. Most moving of all is the culminating item, an eight-part setting of four verses from Psalm 136, reflecting the trials of a recusant Catholic in Elizabeth I's England, with the poignant message (in Latin), 'How shall we sing the Lord's song in a strange land?'

The Byrd Complete Edition, Volume IV: Cantiones sacrae, Book I (1575): complete

 Gaudeamus CDGAU 197.

Byrd published the first of his three collections of Cantiones sacrae in conjunction with his teacher and mentor, Thomas Tallis, contributing 17 motets to this initial collection, and the performances are beautifully blended, while Andrew Carwood's tempi move the music on at what seems a natural pacing.

The Byrd Complete Edition, Volume V: (i) Masses for 3, 4 & 5 Voices; (ii) Organ Fantasia in C & D min.; Voluntary a 3

❀  Gaudeamus CDGAU 206.

Byrd's three great Masses were written for recusant private performance in English country houses. The three organ voluntaries which act as introductions and interludes are taken from My Ladye Nevell's Booke and are admirably played on an appropriate (modern) chest organ by Patrick Russill.

The Byrd Complete Edition, Volume VI: Music for Holy Week and Easter (1605 & 1607)

 Gaudeamus CDGAU 214.

Shortly after publishing his three Masses Byrd began his comprehensive anthology of Gradualia (Mass Propers for the Church Year). The First Book was published in 1605, the Second Book in 1607; all the music in this collection comes from these two books.

The Byrd Complete Edition, Volume VII: Cantiones sacrae (1589) 1–8: Propers for Lady Mass from Christmas to the Purification (1605)

 Gaudeamus CDGAU 224.

By the time Byrd came to publish what he described as his own first Book of his Cantiones sacrae in 1589, the position of practising Catholics in Protestant England had become extremely vulnerable and dangerous, and in his Cantiones sacrae expresses the anguish of his fellow Catholics. These beautiful motets are used to frame Byrd's first volume of Gradualia.

The Byrd Complete Edition Volume VIII: Cantiones sacrae (1589) 8–15: Propers for the Feast of the Purification

 Gaudeamus CDGAU 309.

Volume VIII concludes the 1589 Cantiones Sacrae, written to be sung at domestic devotions against the background of the increasing Catholic oppression. The message of the texts is cryptic: Vigilate ('Keep watch, for you know not when the Lord of the House will come'), which surely has an underlying message to the faithful that deliverance might be at hand.

The Byrd Complete Edition Volume IX: Propers for Ascension; Pentecost; Corpus Christi. Devotions to the Blessed Sacrament

 Gaudeamus CDGAU 332.

In 1605 and 1607 Byrd published two books of Gradualia, propers to punctuate the Roman Catholic Mass settings for three main festivals of the church year. As Andrew Carwood points out in his notes, they are mainly short, are madrigalian in character and with considerable variety of style, those for Ascension and Pentecost well laced with 'Alleluias'.

The Byrd Complete Edition Volume X: Cantiones sacrae (1591); Gradualia for Lady Mass in Eastertide (1605)

 Hyp. CDA 67568.

For Volume X the Cardinall's Musick have moved to Hyperion but continue to record in the Fitzalan Chapel, Arundel Castle, while Martin Haskell remains the recording engineer, so quality is unchanged. The collection here is particularly rich in Byrd's finest settings. Among the memorable Easter Gradualia the Introit, Salve sancta parens, leads to a succession of 'Alleluias' praising the Virgin Mary, while Domine, exaudi orationem meum inclina has a peaceful serenity, and by contrast Laudibus in sanctis makes a radiantly fresh conclusion.

The Byrd Complete Edition, Volume XI: Cantiones sacrae (1591); Gradualia (1607)

Ⓝ  Hyp. CDA 67653

Volume 11 continues the survey of the Cantiones sacrae of 1591 which show their composer in his more plangent writing very much involved with the problems of his fellow recusant Catholics. The seven motets included here all have great intensity of feeling, not least Haec dicit Dominus and the melancholy Circumdederunt me, although none are without hope for a more positive future. The Gradualia, of course, are more affirmative in character, for instance Tu es Petrus is very clear: 'You are Peter, and on this rock I will build my church'. As throughout the series, the documentation is excellent, and the performances, besides relishing all the many felicities of Byrd's heartfelt settings, are dedicated and often movingly beautiful. The recording too is first class.

OTHER RECORDINGS

Music for Consorts and Virginals

🔑  Astrée E 8611. Capriccio Stravagante, Sempé

Skip Sempé and his colleagues play every note with that authenticity of feeling which is so often missing from period performance. Sempé has poetic feeling, an astonishing keyboard flair and rare artistry. Browning has the alternative title of The leaves be green and consists of divisions on a popular song, while the Fantasia a 6 which closes the concert is a masterly compression of ideas into a fluid structure as powerful as Purcell's famous Chaconne. The sound of his Skowroneck harpsichord is vividly reproduced. One of the best CDs of its kind to have appeared in recent years, and a splendid introduction to the composer.

Music for viols

 Lyrichord LEMS 8015. (i) Bagger; (ii) Crout; (iii) Lipnik; NY Cons. of Viols

The New York Consort of Viols play with an attractive blend of timbre, and everything they play is thoroughly alive. The harpsichordist, Louis Bagger, plays with great bravura when Ut re mi fa sol la becomes more and more florid as it proceeds. The two vocal soloists work well together, especially in the rustic dialogue song, Who made thee, Hob, forsake the plough? Tamara Crout sings with great charm in her solo numbers: with the lightest touch in the charming song about the 'murdered' pet dog, and very expressively in Rejoice unto the Lord and the touching Ye sacred muses. In every way this is a most rewarding programme, excellently balanced and recorded.

Consort, keyboard music, anthems and songs: Fantasia for 4 viols; Fantasia 2 for 6 viols; Fantasia 3 for 6 viols; Galliard; Have mercy upon me, O God; In nomine 2 for 4 viols; In Nomine 5 for 5 viols; Pavane; (i) (Keyboard) John, come kiss me now; Pavan in A min.; Qui passe (for my Ladye Nevell). (Vocal) (ii) Christ rising again; Fair Britain Isle; In angel's weed; Rejoice unto the Lord; Susanna fair; Triumph with pleasant melody

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.550604. Rose Consort, Red Byrd; (i) Roberts (harpsichord or virginals); (ii) Bonner

Here is a useful and inexpensive cross-section of Byrd's secular output that gives a good idea not only of its artistic riches but of its sheer variety. Both the ensembles recorded here, the Rose Consort of viols and Red Byrd, are in good form, and Timothy Roberts and Tessa Bonner are sensitive and expert exponents of this repertoire. The recorded sound is eminently clean and well balanced, and there is plenty of space round the aural image, which greatly enhances the undoubted attractions of a pleasant anthology.

Complete keyboard music

Ⓜ  Hyp. CDA 66551/7. Moroney (harpsichords, muselar virginal, organ, chamber organ, clavichord)

Davitt Moroney's impressively comprehensive Gramophone award-winning undertaking includes also the organ music played on the highly suitable Ahrend organ of L'Eglise-Musée des Augustins, Toulouse. To add maximum variety, he also uses a number of keyboard instruments based on north European 17th-century models, including a clavichord by the estimable Thomas Goff, a chamber organ by Martin Goetz and Domenic Gwynn, and harpsichords by Hubert Bédard and Reinhard von Nagel. The most fascinating of these instruments is the so-called muselar virginal (by John Philips of Berkeley after a 1650 Couchet), which has a remarkably rich timbre. This instrument is heard at its finest and most spectacular (on Disc 7) in Byrd's description of The Battel, with its introductory Marche and a Galliard for the Victorie. Quite as fascinating aurally are the five items with which Moroney closes his programme. Four different versions of the Praeludium to the Fancie from Book 12 are given, each heard on a different instrument, and he concludes with the Fantasia from Book 13, one of the composer's most complex and original pieces, presented with considerable flair. Throughout, the playing is committed, authoritative and nicely embellished, if at times a shade didactic. The recording is most realistic, though it is important not to set the volume level too high. The accompanying notes are as thorough as they are scholarly and comprehensive. The set is offered at a special price: seven discs for the cost of five.

Keyboard music: The Battell: Marche; The Trumpets; The Bells; The Carman's Whistle; Christe qui lux; Fantasia; Galliard; Galliard for the Victorie; Galliard to Johnson's Delighte; Go from my window; A Grounde; Miserere I & II; Have with yow to Walsingham; My Ladye Nevell's Grownde; O quam gloriosum est regnum; 7th Pavan; A Pavion; Praeludium to the Fancie; Ut, re, mi, fa, sol, la

 Hyp. CDA 66558. Moroney (harpsichords, muselar virginal, organ, chamber organ, clavichord)

A well-chosen 78-minute programme from Davitt Moroney's distinguished survey, including favourite items like the hypnotic portrayal of The Bells, the jolly Carman's Whistle (on chamber organ), and The Trumpets from The Battell, to demonstrate the extraordinary sound of the muselar virginal (here sounding something like a highly amplified jew's harp!), but given a less bizarre image in the following Galliard for the Victorie. In complete contrast the pair of delicate Misereres are played on a small clavichord, so you will have to be careful with the volume control. As with the complete set, the documentation is first class.

VOCAL MUSIC

Anthems

🔑 Ⓜ  Coll. CSCD 507. Cambridge Singers, Rutter

John Rutter brings a composer's understanding to these readings, which have a simple, direct eloquence, the music's serene spirituality movingly caught; and the atmospheric recording is very faithful, even if detail could be sharper. The programme is divided into four groups: Anthems; then Motets: of penitence and prayer; of praise and rejoicing; and for the Church year.

Cantiones sacrae (1589 & 1591) & Gradualia (1607): Pentecost propers (excerpts)

 HM Surround Sound SACD HMU 807463. Stile antico – TALLIS: Psalm Tunes ***

To enhance their effect, under the titles 'Heavenly harmonies' this collection intersperses Byrd's motets with Tallis's deceptively simple Psalm tunes. Beautifully sung and recorded, this is a disc which by its very variety is most stimulating. The surround sound recording really gives one the sense of being in the unnamed cathedral (or abbey) where the recording was made; but on ordinary CD equipment the quality is still most impressive.

The Great Service (with anthems)

 Hyp. CDA 67533. Westminster Abbey Ch., O'Donnell; Quinney (organ)

 Gimell CDGIM 011. Tallis Scholars, Phillips

Collectors wanting these famous settings for Matins and Evensong in a resonant, cathedral-type acoustic can now turn to the Choir of Westminster Abbey, under James O'Donnell, which is very well recorded on Hyperion. They have the advantage of boy trebles, a larger complement of singers who can offer greater contrast between solo and full verses, and an excellent organ contribution from Robert Quinney. The recording includes five extra anthems, four used in pairs to frame each service, plus two organ voluntaries, and a final anthen, Sing Joyfully, to end the proceedings jubilantly.

Peter Phillips and the Tallis Scholars give a lucid and sensitively shaped account of Byrd's Great Service. Theirs is a more intimate performance than one might expect to encounter in one of the great English cathedrals; they are fewer in number and thus achieve greater clarity of texture. The recording is quite excellent: it is made in a church acoustic (the Church of St John, Hackney) and captures detail perfectly. It includes three other anthems.

Lamentations: Tenebrae for Good Friday. Mass for 4 Voices

Ⓜ  CRD 3499. Clerks of New College Oxford, Ch., Higginbottom – TALLIS: Lamentations I & II, etc. ***

Only one set of Lamentations by Byrd survives: the first lesson at Tenebrae on Good Friday. Deeply felt, radiant in its simplicity, Byrd's setting of Jeremiah's lament on the destruction of Jerusalem undoubtedly had a double significance for its composer, a devout Catholic, deploring the reformation of the English church. The Mass in four parts, written for private performance, has a similar combination of simplicity and deep feeling. The closing Agnus Dei is particularly intense, with the closing words 'dona nobis pacem' ('grant us peace') given a gentle, musical emphasis. The Clerks of New College, Oxford, 16 in number, give admirably scaled performances, richly recorded in an ideal acoustic.

Masses for 3, 4 and 5 Voices; Ave verum corpus; Diffusa est gratia; Magnificat (Great Service); Nunc dimittis; Prevent us, O Lord; Tristitia et anxietas; Vigilate (DVD Version)

 Gimell DVD GIMDP 901. Tallis Scholars, Phillips

Tudor and Renaissance music is not well represented in the DVD catalogue (understandably so, perhaps) but this, a model of its kind, may encourage others to explore early music. Some of these performances (the Missa a 3, and many of the remaining items) are recorded in Tewkesbury Abbey and beautifully filmed by candlelight, while the two remaining Masses were (appropriately enough, given the period) filmed in the Chapel of Merton College, Oxford. As one expects from the Tallis Scholars, these are expert performances, impeccable in intonation and tonal blend. In addition, there is a feature on Byrd. Time was when the BBC would have turned to a leading authority on the music of the period to present such a programme, but this 70-minute feature is fronted by Charles Hazlewood. However, many viewers respond positively to him and the feature is undoubtedly informative.

Mass for 3 Voices; Mass for 4 Voices; Mass for 5 Voices; Ave verum corpus; Diffusa est gratia; The Great Service (with anthems); Infelix ego; Ne irascaris, Domine; Prevent us, O Lord; Tristitia et anxietas; Vigilate

Ⓜ  Gimell CDGIM 218 (2). Tallis Scholars, Phillips

Peter Phillips is a master of this repertoire; undoubtedly these performances of the three Masses have more variety and great eloquence, so that when the drama is varied with a gentle mood, the contrast is the more striking. The collection has now been expanded to include an intimate, sensitively shaped account of the Great Service and other items also included on the DVD above. The sonority created by the Tallis Scholars, whether in Merton College, Oxford, Tewkesbury Abbey or St John at Hackney, is most beautiful, warm and fresh, and there is full documentation.

Mass for 4 Voices; Mass for 5 Voices; Infelix ego

(BB)  Naxos 8.550574. Oxford Camerata, Summerly

This coupling from the Oxford Camerata represents one of Naxos's most enticing bargains. The full-throated singing has spontaneous ardour but no lack of repose in the music's more serene moments. Summerly offers the motet, Infelix ego, as a bonus. These readings are distinctive in a different way from those by the Tallis Scholars. The recording is outstandingly vivid.

SONGS

Consort Songs

🔑  Hyp. CDA 67397. Blaze, Concordia

Robin Blaze, with the natural beauty of his vocal colouring, stands out among contemporary counter-tenors as being ideal for illuminating these lovely, expressive songs of sadness, like O dear life, when may it be (with lute accompaniment) and the two Funeral Consort Songs for Sir Philip Sydney, Come to me, grief, for ever, and O that most rare breast, and the song of pietie, How vain the toils that mortal man do take. Of course there are lighter songs here too, including the jaunty Who likes to love (again with lute), while the opening Rejoice unto the Lord is full of confidence. But the gem of the collection is also one of the earliest and most extended. My sweet little Baby dates from that collection of 1588, and is an entirely delightful Christmas lullaby. With highly pleasing accompaniments, beautifully balanced, this is a record to treasure and draw upon, though not to play all at once.

Consort Songs

 Globe GLO 5159. Cordier, Royal Consort – GIBBONS: Fantasias; In nomines ***

Although there is a pervading atmosphere of dolour, these fine Byrd songs, interspersed with Fantasias and In Nomines of Orlando Gibbons, make a highly rewarding programme when this Dutch gamba group play with such warmth, sensibility and refinement. Moreover, the counter-tenor David Cordier has just the right delicacy of timbre for these Elizabethan songs, which he sings with spirit and deep expressive feeling (especially Byrd's poignant elegy for the Prince of Wales and the touching Ah, silly soul). First-class recording.

Consort Songs: Pavan a 6; Fantasia a 4 (for Viols)

 HM HMU 907383. Emma Kirkby, Fretwork

Emma Kirkby's voice is as fresh as ever and her singing is full of charm. Here she is authentically accompanied by a consort of six viols, who also provide interludes. In songs as varied as O Lord how vain, My mistress has a little dog, The noble famous Queen and O that most rare breast (not belonging to a lady, but an elegy for Sir Philip Sidney) she is equally eloquent in different ways. Unless you do not respond to the viol's sonority, this collection, nicely varied and generous (75 minutes), is self-recommending and very well recorded.

Consort Songs

 Simax PSC 1191. McGreevy, Partridge, Phantasm

Geraldine McGreevy dominates this attractive recital, opening with the lovely La Verginella, and very touching in the surprisingly melancholy Fair Britain Isle and the poignant Lullaby, though perking up for Susanna fair and Though Amaryllis dance in green. Ian Partridge is in good voice too, although his contribution is perhaps less striking. These are all songs in which the vocal line is part of the polyphonic texture of the viol accompaniment, which Phantasm handle admirably, as they do their three solo consort pieces. Excellent recording with no edginess on the string timbres.

CACCINI, Giulio (1551–1618)

Le Nuove Musiche (1602): Complete solo madrigals

Ⓝ (*) SOMMCD 083 La Nuova Musica, Bates (with MONTEVERDI: Madrigals, Books 3–5; KAPSBERGER & PHILIPS: Harpsichord pieces)

A well planned collection. Caccini's solo madrigals are individual and often have a touching melancholy; but to provide variety David Bates has interspersed them with polyphonic madrigals by Monteverdi and a pair of instrumental Toccatas (by Kapsberger and Frescobaldi). Although the solo singing is eloquent, it is not always of a star quality, but the group madrigals make a successful contrast. Curiously, translations are provided for only twelve of the twenty-one vocal items. But this is still worth exploring.

CAGE, John (1912–92)

Concerto for Prepared Piano & Chamber Orchestra (1950/1); The Seasons (ballet); Seventy-Four (for orchestra), Versions I & II; Suites for Toy Piano (original and orchestral version, scored by Lou Harrison)

 ECM 465 140-2. (i) Tang (prepared piano; toy piano); American Composers' Orchestra, Russell Davies

Seventy-Four, hypnotic in atmosphere, is nevertheless remarkably static. The Seasons is, in the composer's own words, 'an attempt to express the traditional Indian view as quiescence (winter), creation (spring), preservation (summer), and destruction (fall)'. It is not easy to follow, but certainly has plenty of movement, and its textures are exotic. The simplistic Suite for Toy Piano has also been ingeniously scored by Lou Harrison and most listeners will respond to the vividly contrasting sonorities of this instrumental version, which has instant appeal. The performances here are dedicated and of the highest calibre, and the recording excellent.

Piano Sonatas (for prepared piano) 1–16 with 4 Interludes

Ⓜ  Explore (ADD) EXP 004. Tilbury

This is among the most persuasive CDs of Cage's music yet issued, sensitively performed and very well recorded, with the peculiar sounds of Cage's prepared piano vividly caught. The sonatas follow each other in groups of four, each group separated by an interlude, but the results tend to be hallucinatory, as eastern music can be. Sympathy with Indian music, the composer has explained, lies behind this music, which he wrote in 'controlled improvisation'. It may be just a twitter, but it is an agreable twitter.

CAMILLERI, Charles (1931–2009)

(i) Piano Concertino 4 (Summer Nights in Malta) for 2 Pianos; Il-Weghda: Intermezzo. Knights of Malta (Ballet Suite); Malta Suite; (ii) 4 Legends. Overture Classique

* Divine Art dda 24126. Bournemouth SO, Schembri; with (i) Micallef & Inanga; (ii) Mifsud

Malta is not a venue one first thinks of as a source of concert music, but now Charles Camilleri has certainly put it on the map, for this compilation is one of the most delectable collections of new twentieth-century music we have encountered in a long time. True it is lightweight, but it is all elegantly crafted, colourfully scored, hauntingly tuneful and memorable from beginning to end. Much of it is vividly descriptive, and the result is far more rewarding than many a more ambitious work of our time. The expressive writing for the strings is very touching, while elsewhere there is wit and high spirits in abundance. These performances from Brian Schembri and the excellent Bournemouth Symphony Orchestra could not be more stylish or persuasively spontaneous, and the vividly atmospheric recording is first rate. A CD not to be missed.

CANTELOUBE, Marie-Joseph (1879–1957)

Dans le montagne (for Violin & Piano)

 Hyp. CDA 67427. Graffin, Devoyon – with BREVILLE: Violin Sonata 1

It is good to have an instrumental work from Canteloube, a work of great charm. Canteloube loved the mountains and lived among them in his early years. Altogether this is as delightful and ingenuous as the more famous songs, and it is most persuasively performed here, and excellently recorded.

Songs of the Auvergne: Series 1–5 (complete)

🔑  Erato 0927 44656-2 (2). Upshaw, Lyon Op. O, Nagano – EMMANUEL: Chansons bourguignonnes ***

Ⓑ  Double Decca 444 995-2 (2). Te Kanawa, ECO, Tate – VILLA-LOBOS: Bachianas brasileiras 5 ***

(BB)  Naxos 8.557491 & 8.570338. Gens, O. Nat. de Lille, J.-C. Casadesus (with 6 Chants de France; Triptych)

Dawn Upshaw sings with tenderness and character in a style less sensuous than that of Kiri Te Kanawa (notably so in the fresh, open account of the famous Baïlèro, where she uses greater variety of dynamic, with an echo effect). Her line in the lyrical numbers is often very beautiful, while in the quirkier items her manner is nearer to the more folksy idiom of Natania Davrath. She is persuasively accompanied by Kent Nagano and the Lyon Opera Orchestra, with their distinctly French colouring. What makes this Erato set particularly enticing is the inclusion of a half-dozen rather similar and no less charming arrangements of Burgundian songs by Maurice Emmanuel. Full translations are provided, if in minuscule print.

Véronique Gens gives performances that bring out the folk qualities far more than usual. Gens gives them an authentic French timbre, whether in the melismatic phrases of Baïlèro, always a favourite item, or the vigour of the two sets of Bourrées. Jean-Claude Casadesus conducts the excellent Lille Orchestra in similarly idiomatic performances, atmospherically recorded. To fill out the second disc, Gens includes six excerpts from the Chants de France, another winning collection derived from folk material, and also the Triptych, three memorable and original settings of the poems of Roger Frêne, rather in the style of Chausson. Full texts and translations make this a genuine bargain.

In Dame Kiri Te Kanawa's recital the warmly atmospheric Decca recording brings an often languorous opulence to the music-making. In such an atmosphere the quick songs lose a little in bite, and Baïlèro, the most famous, is taken extremely slowly. With the sound so sumptuous, this hardly registers and the result remains compelling, thanks in large measure to sympathetic accompaniment from the ECO under Jeffrey Tate. There is also a paired CD/DVD combined with a DVD filmed in the Auvergne countryside (Decca 475 6145). However, the photography is pleasing but unmemorable.

Chants d'Auvergne (excerpts)

Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 5 66978-2. De Los Angeles, LAP, Jacquillat

 Auvidis V 4811. Bayo, Tenerife SO, Perez (with 5 Chants de Pays Basques)

🔑 ✿ Ⓑ  CfP 575 1382. Gomez, RLPO, Handley – FAURÉ: Masques et bergamasques; Pavane ***

The warmth and sweetness of Victoria De Los Angeles's tone when her own pioneering recordings were made (1973 and 1975) match the allure of Canteloube's settings, bringing them into the concert hall. In the lighter numbers, the Bourrées for instance, the singing combines sparkle with a natural feeling for the folk idiom, and elsewhere De Los Angeles can be ravishing with her fine-spun vocal timbre, as in La Delissádo or the gentle Lou Boussu, while Lou coucut speaks for itself.

María Bayo is a most engaging artist and has just the temperament to sing her selection of favourites idiomatically (Lo Fiolairé is deliciously done), and yet in Baïlèro and La Delaïssádo her line and timbre are ravishing. Víctor Pablo Perez directs the accompaniments with sultry Mediterranean warmth and real character. What makes this collection especially attractive is the bonus of five Chants de Pays Basques. Full translations are included.

Jill Gomez's selection of these popular songs makes for a memorably characterful record which, as well as bringing out the sensuous beauty of Canteloube's arrangements, reminds us, in the echoes of rustic band music, of their genuine folk base. The inclusion of the charming Fauré works makes this reissue more attractive than ever.

CAPLET, André (1878–1925)

(i) Conte fantastique: La Masque de la mort rouge. Divertissement; Les Prières; Septet; 2 Sonnets

Ⓑ  HM Musique d'abord HMA 1951497. Coste, Piau, Deguy, Ens. Musique Oblique; (i) with Laurence Cabel (harp)

Although his idiom is strongly Debussian, André Caplet possessed fastidious craftsmanship and a refined sensibility of distinctive quality. His best-known work is the Conte fantastique for harp and strings, based on Edgar Allan Poe's Masque of the Red Death, a work strong on evocative menace. The present Harmonia Mundi version offers the more intimate chamber version of the score and makes a strong challenge to previous versions, for the accompanying programme is well chosen and serves to flesh out a portrait of Caplet himself. It is very well played and balanced, and is well worth its modest cost.

CARDOSO, Frei Manuel (c. 1566–1650)

Lamentatio; Magnificat secundi toni

(BB)  Naxos 8.553310. Ars Nova, Bo Holten – LÔBO: Motets; MAGALHAES: Missa O Soberana luz, etc.  (with Concert of Portuguese polyphony ***)

Cardoso's serene, flowing polyphony with its forward-looking use of augmented chords is heard at its most striking in the Magnificat, while his Lamentatio for six voices is touchingly beautiful. Remarkably eloquent singing from this fine Danish choir and good recording in a suitably ecclesiastical acoustic. The rest of the programme is hardly less stimulating.

Requiem (Missa pro defunctis)

🔑 Ⓑ * Gimell CDGIM 205 (2). Tallis Scholars, Philips – Duarte LÔBO: Requiem; Alonso LÔBO: Motets; VICTORIA: Requiem, etc. ****

(BB)  Naxos 8.550682. Oxford Schola Cantorum, Summerly – LÔBO: Missa pro defunctis ***

Requiem; Magnificat; Motets: Mulier quae erat; Non mortui; Nos autem gloriari; Sitivit anima mea

🔑  Gimell (ADD) CD GIM 021. Tallis Scholars, Phillips

Cardoso's Requiem opens in striking and original fashion. The polyphony unfolds in long-breathed phrases of unusual length and eloquence, and both the motets, Mulier quae erat ('A woman, a sinner in that city') and the short Nos autem gloriari ('Yet should we glory'), are rich in texture and have great expressive resplendence. Cardoso's use of the augmented chord at the opening of the Requiem gives his music some of its distinctive stamp. The Tallis Scholars sing with characteristic purity of tone and intonation, and they are splendidly recorded. A glorious issue. The new bargain-priced Double links it to music by Lôbo and Victoria which is equally desirable.

In Summerly's Naxos account, Cardoso's Missa pro defunctis is not as dramatic in its contrasts as the coupled setting of Duarte Lôbo. As with the Lôbo coupling, a solo treble makes a brief but effective introduction for each movement, a device which works very touchingly. The performance by Oxford Schola Cantorum is beautifully paced and the calibre of the singing itself is very impressive indeed, as is the Naxos recording.

CARISSIMI, Giacomo (1605–74)

Cantatas: Ahi, non torna; Piangete, ohimè piangete; Si dia bando, alla speranza; Siam tre miseri piangente; Va dimanda al mio pensiero. Motets: Benedictus Deus et Pater; Exulta gaude, filia Sion; O dulcissimum Mariae nomen; Omnes gentes gaudate cum victore; Surrexit pastor bonus (with keyboard interludes by FRESCOBALDI; KAPSBERGER; ROSSI)

(*) Signum SIGCD 040. Concerto delle Donne

All but three of the cantatas and motets here are settings for two or (mainly) three soprano voices, the remainder are solo works. There is plenty of musical variety; Carissimi's invention is unflagging and the contrapuntal interplay of the three voices is appealing when all three soloists have fine, rich voices which match well together and there are no wobblers. Each of the three soloists, Donna Deam, Gill Ross and Elin Thomas, has a solo work, but Donna Deam, the leader of the team, is allotted the most striking, Piangete, ohimè, piangete, with its melancholy semitone droops (which gives its name to the collection), while the duet cantata which follows, Si dia bando, is delightfully fresh. The instrumental accompaniments are stylishly managed and vocal works are interwoven by keyboard interludes, intimately played by Alastair Ross. Full texts and translations are included.

Damnation lamentatio; Felicitas batorum; Historia di Jephte

 Naïve OP 30296. Franzetti, Hernandez, Halimi, Van Dyck, Dordolo, Imboden, Le Parlement de Musique, Gester (with Lelio COLISTA: Sinfonia in D min.) – FRESCOBALDI: Motets & Partita ***

A first-class programme which attempts to re-create a sacred concert in Rome in the middle of the 17th century. Carissimi's Jephte is comparatively well known, and it is beautifully and dramatically sung here. Excellent documentation and full texts and translations make this a very attractive compilation.

Historia di Abraham et Isaac; Historia di Ezechias (Oratorios). Mass for 8 Voices; Motets: O vulnera doloris; Salve, salve, puella

Ⓜ  Erato 2564 60590-2. Soloists, Lisbon Gulbenkian Foundation Ch. & O, Corboz

The History of Hezekiah is a memorably concise oratorio with superb choral writing, splendidly sung here. Resourcefully, Carissimi sets King Hezekiah's plea for divine mercy in the minor key, while God's music is always in the major. The narrator's role is given to two sopranos and then to the final chorus. The story of Abraham's willingness to sacrifice his son at God's command makes for another compressed but dramatic setting. The three Mass movements (which may not be authentic) offer rich polyphony, with the serene Kyrie contrasted with the vigorous settings of the Gloria and Credo. This is a very stimulating collection, well sung and recorded, but it is let down by the lack of documentation.

The Story of Jephtha; The Story of Jonah; Dai piu riposti abissi

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.557390. Consortium Carissimi, Zanon

The Story of Jephtha has interlacing solos, some for characters in the story, others involving narration (Historicus) in free arioso. Punctuating this crisp telling of the story come four choruses in six parts, and a duet for two sopranos. They add to the attractive variety of the piece in madrigal-like numbers, ending with the longest and most impressive. The Story of Jonah follows a similar pattern, with the dialogue between Jonah and the Sailors playing an important part, and ending with a fine eight-part chorus for the people of Nineveh, We have sinned Lord. Described as a Serenade, the third work is equally mellifluous, involving more chordal writing. It is here given with the top lines taken by two tenors instead of two sopranos. The brilliant singers of Consortium Carissimi – with the director, Vittorio Zanon, only indicated in small print at the end of the long list of artists – give magnetic performances, beautifully recorded. In this outstanding bargain issue full texts are given.

De Tempore interfecto Sisar; Dialogo del Gigante Golia; Diluvium Universale (Dialogo del Noe); Regina Hester (Oratorios)

 CPO 999 983-2. Mauch, Backes, Carmignani, Jochens, van der Kempe, Musica Fiesta., La Capella Ducalle, Wilson

This enterprising disc gathers together four contrasted oratorios, hitherto thought to have been lost. Most striking among them are The Dialogue of the Giant Goliath, and the Dialogue of Noah. In the former, Harry van der Kempe, from his very opening aria, is lugubriously sinister as the deep-voiced Goliath, and Constanze Backes a contrastingly fresh-voiced David. Van der Kempe then transforms himself into a warmly sympathetic Noah, to plead with an unrelenting God (Wilfried Jochens), and it is the choral interplay which represents the rushing winds and the downpour of rain, until finally the future covenant is established and a peaceful future promised. The singing here is fresh, the ornamentation impressive and the vigorous rhythmic articulation has plenty of vigour, while the expressive music is most sympathetically sung. The recording is very good and full translations are included.

CARLSSON, Mark (born 1952)

Nightwings

 Crystal CD 750. Westwood Wind Quintet – BARBER: Summer Music; LIGETI: Bagatelles; MATHIAS: Quintet ***

In Nightwings the flute assumes the persona of a dreamer, the taped music may be perceived as a dream-world, and the other four instruments appear as characters in a dream. On this evidence, however, the conception is in some respects more interesting than the piece itself. Excellent playing and recording.

CARMINA BURANA

(c. 1300)

Carmina Burana (Songs from the Original Manuscript)

 Decca 475 9106, Bott, George, New London Consort, Pickett

This was the collection on which Carl Orff drew for his popular cantata. To quote Philip Pickett: 'In view of the lewd and offensive nature of part of the collection, it is miraculous that the manuscript survived at all.' The performances on this (originally L'Oiseau-Lyre) CD, reissued in its original livery with full notes, texts and translations, have the merit of excellent singing from Catherine Bott and Michael George and sensitive playing from the instrumentalists under Pickett. The engineering is excellent and strikes a virtually ideal balance between voices and instruments. There is a pleasing acoustic ambience.

CARPENTER, John Alden

(1876–1951)

Adventures in a Perambulator; Symphonies 1–2

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.558065. Nat. SO of Ukraine, McLaughlin Williams

John Alden Carpenter came from a wealthy Illinois family. His musical training included study under Elgar and this shows in his confident handling of the orchestra. Adventures in a Perambulator (which includes encounters with Dogs, Dreams, The Lake, The Hurdy-Gurdy and The Policeman) is charmingly scored and pleasantly tuneful. The First Symphony, a well-planned single-movement work, divided into five linked sections, is hardly more ambitious. But again its invention is warmly attractive and its nostalgic atmosphere holds the listener in its undemanding spell. The Second opens more dramatically, but similarly it does not probe any depths, seeking mainly to divert, especially the jolly, boisterous finale. The Ukraine Orchestra obviously enjoy this music and play it very well indeed. The Naxos recording is first class and the documentation includes the composer's own notes for Adventures in a Perambulator.

String Quartet; (i) Piano Quintet; (i; ii) Violin Sonata

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.559103. Vega Qt; (i) Posnak; (ii) Chen

These three immediately attractive chamber works are a splendid way of experiencing and enjoying the calibre of Carpenter's music. The early Violin Sonata (1912) is a delightfully spontaneous piece, sweetly lyrical but by no means slight, with striking ideas throughout all four traditional movements. The String Quartet of 1927 is altogether more nostalgic and chromatically searching; the Piano Quintet of a decade later is more extrovert. First-class performances and fine recording make this a very enjoyable programme indeed.

CARTER, Elliott (born 1908)

(i; ii) Oboe Concerto; (iii) Esprit rude; (ii) Penthode (for 5 groups of instruments); (iv; ii) A Mirror on Which to Dwell

(BB)  Warner Apex 8573 89227-2. (i) Holliger; (ii) Ens. InterContemporain; (iii) Cherrier, Troutet; (iv) Bryn-Julson, Boulez

The Oboe Concerto was written for Heinz Holliger, who gives a superb performance of a work which is underlyingly lyrical and appealing. Esprit rude ('rough breathing') is an even less predictable duet for flute and clarinet, and the atmospheric Penthode ('concerned with the experiences of connectedness and isolation') written for five groups of four players, is no more easy to unravel.

In the song-cycle, setting poems of Elizabeth Bishop, one cannot but admire the expertise of Phyllis Bryn-Julson, accurately leaping from note to note against often bizarre accompaniments, and producing a remarkably expressive line of real tonal beauty. The recording is admirable, clear and well balanced. A classic and indispensable reissue.

Concerto for Orchestra; (i) Violin Concerto. 3 Occasions for Orchestra

Ⓜ  EMI 2 06629-2 L. Sinf., Knussen; (i) with Ole Bohn

The Concerto for Orchestra is inspired by a sequence of poems, Vents ('Winds') by St John Perse and Carter's response is to divide the orchestra into four groups with conflicting interplay between them. Needless to say Knussen creates a brilliant effect with members of the London Sinfonia. Ole Bohn commissioned the Violin Concerto himself and plays it with great dedication, even though it cannot be described as an immediately appealing work. The Three Orchestral Occasions complete a commanding triptych for those who respond to this extraordinarily unconventional composer who never makes for easy listening.

(i) Piano Concerto. Holiday Overture; Symphony 1

🔑 (BB) (*) Naxos 8.559151. Nashville SO, Schermerhorn; (i) with Wait

Both the Holiday Overture (1945) and the Symphony 1 (1942) are fresh and open in Carter's earlier manner. The Symphony is rewarding, close in idiom to Copland and Piston. Its material is interesting and the feeling for form strong. The disc is worth having for this alone, particularly in this strong, understanding and well-recorded performance, culminating in a sparkling account of the finale. The Piano Concerto is pretty rebarbative, highly intricate rhythmically, its ideas firmly embedded in barbed wire and its spikey charms eminently resistible. In short, it is deeply unappealing. First-rate sound, if with the piano balanced rather too forwardly.

(i) Piano Concerto; Variations for Orchestra

 New World (ADD) NW 347. (i) Ursula Oppens; Cincinnati SO, Gielen

Michael Gielen directs strong, purposeful readings, very well played, of this taxing music, clarifying the thornily complex arguments with Ursula Oppens a powerful soloist. The Variations is an inventive and fascinating work, splendidly played by the Cincinnati forces. The recording was made at concert performances and is excellent.

String Quartets 1 & 5

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8.559362 Pacifica Quartet

String Quartet 2

 Testament SBT 1374. Juilliard Qt – BERG: Lyric Suite; SCHUMAN: Quartet 3 ***

The Julliard gave the first performance of Elliott Carter's Second Quartet and their recording comes from 1960. They play it superbly, but the Pacifica Quartet seem even more completely at home in the dynamism and high tension of this music with its fair share of tough writing and barbed wire. The Variations of No. 1 are a highlight. The recording too is very fine.

Piano Sonata; 90+; 2 Diversions; Matribute; Night Fantasies; 2 Thoughts about the Piano (Intermittences; Caténaires)

 Cedile CDR 90000 108. Ursula Oppens

Ursula Oppens's collection gives us all Carter's piano music to date, centring on her breathtakingly powerful account of the Sonata, which the composer himself described, with considerable understatement, as 'very advanced'. It is logically structured in two movements, with the finale built on four different time signatures, and a fugue as its centrepiece. The work, overall, is one of the most remarkable of the twentieth century and Oppens's continually arresting performance is fully worthy of it. There is currently another new version by Peter Seivewright (on Divine Art dda 15052) coupled with a Sonata by Rózsa and the Fourth Sonata of MacDowell. This is also impressive, but is less taut, with a playing time eight minutes longer than the Oppens account which seems ideally paced and has great intensity.

The other works here include 90+, built around ninety accented regular notes, Retrouvailles (using a motto based on the letters of the name of its dedicatee, Boulez), an interrupted sequence of Night Fantasies, the fragmentary fast figurations of Matribute, a continuous chain of notes with no chords (Caténaires) and the brusque 'jump-cuts' and unpredictable pauses of Intermittences. This is all formidable stuff, but Carter enthusiasts will not be disappointed.

CARWITHEN, Doreen
(1922–2003)

(i) Concerto for Piano & Strings. Overtures: ODTAA ('One damn thing after another'); Bishop Rock; Suffolk Suite

Ⓜ  Chan. 10365X. (i) Shelley; LSO, Hickox

The two overtures in their vigour and atmospheric colour relate readily to Doreen Carwithen's film music, the one inspired by John Masefield's novel, ODTAA, the other inspired by the rock in the Atlantic that marks the last contact with the British Isles, stormy in places, gently sinister in others. The charming Suffolk Suite uses melodies originally written for a film on East Anglia. Much the most ambitious work is the Concerto for Piano and Strings, with powerful virtuoso writing for the piano set against rich-textured strings. A deeply melancholy slow movement – in which the piano is joined by solo violin – leads to a strong finale which in places echoes the Ireland Piano Concerto. Howard Shelley is the persuasive soloist, with Richard Hickox and the LSO equally convincing in their advocacy of all four works. Warm, atmospheric sound.

CASTELNUOVO-TEDESCO, Mario (1895–1968)

Guitar Concerto 1 in D, Op. 99

(BB)  Naxos 8.550729. Kraft, N. CO, Ward – RODRIGO; VILLA-LOBOS: Concertos ***

On Naxos a first-class version of this slight but attractive concerto, which is well suited by the relatively intimate scale of the performance. The recording is well balanced and vivid, and the soloist, Norbert Kraft, has plenty of personality; and the accompaniment is fresh and polished. Typically excellent Naxos value.

Cello Sonata, Op. 50; Notturna sull'acqua, Op. 82a; Scherzino, Op. 82b; I Nottambuli (Variazione fantastiche), Op. 47; Paraphrase on Rossini's 'Largo al factotum'; Toccata, Op. 83; Valse on the Name of Gregor Piatigorsky

 Biddulph LAW 024. Green, Moyer

Castelnuovo-Tedesco's Cello Sonata is a splendid work, opening with a striking main theme (marked Arioso e sereno) followed by a highly inventive Aria with Variations to act as slow movement and finale combined. The two nocturnal pieces are full of Mediterranean atmosphere. Nancy Green is in full sympathy with this repertoire and she plays very persuasively indeed, with excellent support from her partner, Frederick Moyer.

SOLO GUITAR MUSIC

Aranci in fiore, Op. 87a; Capriccio, Op. 195/18; Escarramán, Op. 177/1-5; La guarda cuydadosa, Op. 177/6; 3 Preludi mediterranei, Op. 176; Variations à travers les siècles, Op. 71; Variations plaisantes sur un petit air populaire, Op. 95; Tarantella, Op. 87b

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.554831. Micheli

Lorenzo Micheli refrains from duplicating the familiar Villa-Lobos or Sor repertoire and concentrates on rarities by his countryman, Castelnuovo-Tedesco. The music is slender in substance but appealing. Artistically this is first rate, as Micheli plays with assurance and elegance, but he is balanced very closely.

CASTILLON, Alexis de
(1838–73)

Piano Quartet in G min., Op. 7

(BB)  Virgin 2x1 4 82061-2 (2). Kandinsky Qt – CHAUSSON; LEKEU; SAINT-SAËNS: Piano Quartets ***

Like Chausson and Lekeu, with whom he shares this two-CD set, Alexis de Castillon was a pupil of César Franck. His Op. 7 Piano Quartet of 1869 is an engaging piece, much indebted to Schumann. The performance, like the others in this coupling, comes from the early 1990s and is expert and well recorded.

CATALANI, Alfredo (1854–93)

La Wally* (opera; complete)

🔑 Ⓜ  Double Decca (ADD) 475 8667 or 460 744-2 (2). Tebaldi, del Monaco, Diaz, Cappuccilli, Marimpietri, Turin Lyric Ch., Monte Carlo Op. O, Fausto Cleva

The title-role of La Wally prompts Renata Tebaldi to give one of her most tenderly affecting performances on record, a glorious example of her singing late in her career. Mario del Monaco begins coarsely, but the heroic power and intensity of his singing are formidable, and it is good to have the young Cappuccilli in the baritone role of Gellner. The sound in this late-1960s recording is superbly focused and vividly real.

CAVALLI, Francesco (1602–76)

Messa Concertata; 4 Canzonas; Motets: O bone Jesu; O quam suavis et decora

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55193. Hyde, Carwood, Seicento, Parley of Instruments, Holman

Much of Cavalli's church music was published in his Musica Sacre of 1656. It begins with a concerted setting of the Messa Concertata, and that is what Peter Holman has recorded here. He follows the custom at St Mark's at the time of interspersing the five movements of the Ordinary with offertory and communion motets and ensemble sonatas, sonorously but modestly scored. The Mass uses two four-part choirs of voices, with two violins, three trombones and continuo, reflecting Monteverdi's Magnificat setting of 1641, which tends to confirm that Cavalli was the latter's pupil. His own music, with its jolly three-bar dactylic rhythms and rich chording for voices and brass, is extrovert and vigorous, although the soprano Philippa Hyde's contribution to the two motets shows the depth of his touching lyrical writing. Cavalli is no carbon copy of his mentor but a fine composer in his own right. The performance, with excellently blended voices and instruments, is most appealing and is very well recorded. Full texts and translations are included.

OPERA

La Calisto (DVD version)

 HM DVD HMD 9909 001/2 (2). Bayo, Lippi, Kamerer, Pushee, Winter, Visse, Oliver, Concerto Vocale, Jacobs

Unlike the classic Glyndebourne production by Peter Hall with a score prepared by Raymond Leppard, Jacobs is much more faithful to Cavalli's text, with the result that, where at Glyndebourne the love of Diana and Endimione (Endymion) was central to the action, here it is the love of Giove (Jupiter) for the nymph La Calisto which is central. So Giove, when he is wooing Calisto, appears in drag, singing falsetto; the other characters too appear comically in drag, the irrepressible Dominique Visse as Furia and Alexander Oliver as Linfea. Though the fun is extreme, it can be argued that it follows period practice, and the sets with their elaborate trapdoors and gods descending from the heavens have a 17th-century flavour. There are also echoes of the commedia dell'arte, with Mercury a clown and Endimione a Harlequin figure. The sets dotted with nymphs are pretty and atmospheric.

Arias and Duets from: Calisto; Didone; Egisto; Giasone; Ormindo

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.557746. Banditelli, Frisandi, Abbandanza, Doro, Cecchetti, Mediterraneo Concento, Vartolo

Here is a well-planned and ideally documented aural window opening on to five of Cavalli's key operas, very well sung by a fine cast who are obviously at home in this repertoire. If there are no stellar names in the cast list, there was no star system in Cavalli's time, and the vocal acting here is at one with the melodramatic (and sometimes sexually explicit) story-lines. The accompaniments are most stylishly managed, and the conductor, Sergio Vartolo, is also to be praised for his sensitive accompaniments at the harpsichord.

Gli amori d'Apollo e di Dafne (The Loves of Apollo and Daphne)

(BB) (*) Naxos 8. 660187/8 (2). Zeffiri, Pizzolato, Mateu, Galicia Youth SO, Zedda

This was the second of Cavalli's operas, using a libretto by Busenello, and, like Cavalli's better-known, lighter-hearted La Calisto, it deals with an illicit love of Jupiter, this time not for Diana but for Daphne, with Daphne finally escaping his attentions by transforming herself into a tree. This live performance brings some odd balances, but the performance is most enjoyable. At bargain price, well worth investigating.

CHABRIER, Emmanuel

(1841–94)

Bourrée fantasque; España (rhapsody); Joyeuse marche; Suite pastorale; Gwendoline: Overture. Le Roi malgré lui: Danse slave; Fête polonaise

🔑  Mercury (ADD) 434 303-2. Detroit SO, Paray – ROUSSEL: Suite **(*)

This finely played and idiomatically conducted Mercury collection of Chabrier's best orchestral pieces does not disappoint. Paray's whimsically relaxed and sparkling account of España gives great pleasure and his rubato in the Fête polonaise is equally winning. The Suite pastorale is a wholly delightful account, given playing that is at once warm and polished, neat and perfectly in scale, with the orchestra beautifully balanced. The Joyeuse Marche was recorded in Detroit's Old Orchestral Hall, the quality now enhanced on SACD. The Roussel coupling makes an excellent and imaginative bonus.

España; Gwendoline Overture

((*)) BBC mono BBCL 4113. RPO, Beecham (with spoken introduction) – BERLIOZ: The Trojans: Royal Hunt and Storm; DEBUSSY: L'Enfant prodigue: Cortège et air de danse; DELIUS: Brigg Fair; MASSENET: La Vierge: Le Dernier Sommeil de la vierge; SAINT-SAËNS: Le Rouet d'Omphale (with MOZART: Divertimento in D, K.131: excerpts) ((*))

España; Habanera; Joyeuse marche; Lamento; Prélude pastorale; Suite pastorale; Le Roi malgré lui: Danse slave; Fête polonaise

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.554248. Monte-Carlo PO, Niquet

Beecham's BBC recording of España comes from a 1956 live broadcast concert of 'Lollipops', and enjoyable though it is, it does not quite match his earlier studio recording with the LPO, partly because the sound has less range and sparkle. However, it does have a spoken introduction from the conductor, and the Gwendoline Overture, recorded a year earlier, does not lack either charm or gusto. The excerpts from the Mozart Divertimento were part of the main concert and bring some predictably fine string and horn playing.

A very well-recorded programme on Naxos, played with considerable idiomatic flair if without always the very last degree of finesse (Sous-bois, for instance, could be more delicate in the bass).

España; Joyeuse marche; Gwendoline Overture

🔑 Ⓜ () EMI mono 3 79986-2. LPO, RPO, Fr. Nat. RO or RPO, Beecham – BIZET: Carmen Suite 1; Patrie Overture; Roma: Carnaval à Roma; FAURÉ: Dolly; SAINT-SAËNS: Le rouet d'Omphale ***

All these pieces are supercharged, although the Gwendoline Overture has much charm, too. Beecham's LPO España is, of course, mono, yet it remains the highlight, both for its unique exuberance and for the amazingly realistic recording, produced by Walter Legge at Abbey Road in 1939.

España; Suite pastorale

 Chan. 8852. Ulster O, Y. P. Tortelier – DUKAS: L'Apprenti sorcier; La Péri **(*)

Yan Pascal Tortelier and the excellent Ulster Orchestra give an altogether first-rate account of Chabrier's delightful Suite pastorale, distinguished by an appealing charm and lightness of touch. There is a spirited account of España, too.

PIANO MUSIC

Aubade; Ballabile; Bourrée fantasque; Caprice; Feuillet d'album; Habanera; Impromptu; 10 pièces pittoresques; Ronde champêtre

🔑 * Hyp. CDA 67515. Hewitt

This is a model collection of pieces by one of the most engaging of all 19th-century French composers, showing what sparkling inventiveness he brings to any idea. The 18 pieces here are all beautifully realized by Hewitt, with exquisite control of the widest tonal range and ever-persuasive control of rubato. Beautifully recorded.

Aubade; Ballabile; Caprice; Feuillet d'album; Impromptu; Pièces pittoresques; Ronde champêtre; (i) 3 Valses romantiques

(BB)  Regis RRC 1133. Stott; (i) with Burley

For those wanting a representative bargain selection, Kathryn Stott provides the ideal answer. She plays this long-neglected but rewarding repertoire with intelligence, wit and elegance.

VOCAL MUSIC

Mélodies (complete); Folksong arrangements

 Hyp. CDA 67133/4. Lott, Burden, Varcoe, Spence, Johnson, McGreevy, Polyphony, Layton

These two generously filled discs, appropriately sub-titled 'Musique adorable!' offer a wide-ranging selection of Chabrier's songs, as well as the Ode à la musique (sung by Geraldine McGreevy with the choral group, Polyphony), and a curious duo for a programme-seller at the Opéra Comique and an assistant at the Bon Marché department store. That jokey piece, with each section ending in a Swiss yodelling song, demonstrates the humorous side of Chabrier. Yet many of these songs are deeply expressive, even some of those which date from 1862 when he was only 21. As always in his song recordings for Hyperion, Graham Johnson greatly adds to one's enjoyment, not only with his ever-sensitive playing but in his comprehensive, scholarly notes. Felicity Lott, Geraldine McGreevy, William Burden and Toby Spence are all in fine voice, singing stylishly.

OPERA

Briséïs (complete)

✿  Hyp. CDA 66803. Rodgers, Padmore, Keenlyside, Harries, George, BBC Scottish SO, Jean-Yves Ossonce

Starting with a ripely seductive sailors' chorus, few operas are as sensuous as Briséïs. On disc it matters little that this is a torso. The writing is not just sensuous but urgent, a warm bath of sound that is also exhilarating. Casting is near ideal, with Joan Rodgers in the title-role rich and distinctive, and with Mark Padmore as the sailor, Hylas, equally warm, producing heady, clear tenor tone. Symbolizing the forces of Christian good, Simon Keenlyside as the Catechist and Kathryn Harries as the mother of Briseis, cured through faith, both sing with character and apt resonance. Full, atmospheric sound.

CHADWICK, George (1854–1931)

Aphrodite; Angel of Death; Overtures: Euterpe; Melpomene; Thalia

(BB)  Naxos 8.559117. Nashville SO, Schermerhorn

Although an American composer, George Chadwick still relates to the world of Brahms and Dvořák, if with an attractive transatlantic flavour in the manner of the New World Symphony. But these tone-poems and (symphonic) overtures, although they have engaging invention, do not always fully sustain their length. The three overtures are each named after one of the muses. Thalia (the muse of comedy) highlights Chadwick's particular skill at writing wittily and light-heartedly; the more substantial Melpomene (the muse of tragedy) was one of the composer's most often performed works during his lifetime, its opening almost Tristanesque, while Euterpe (the muse of music), is enjoyably colourful.

Symphonies 2 in B flat; 3 in F

 Chan. 9685. Detroit SO, Järvi

Chadwick's Second Symphony dates from the early 1880s, though its delightful Scherzo was premièred two years ahead of the rest of the work. When this was first heard it had to be encored, which is hardly surprising. It has an engaging, cheeky quality and Järvi makes the very most of it. The Third Symphony is hardly less fresh and appealing. It breathes much the same air as Brahms, Dvořák and Svendsen; it is very compelling in so persuasive a performance as is given here by Järvi and his Detroit Orchestra. Absolutely first-class recording too.

CHAGRIN, Francis (1905–72)

Helter Skelter (Concert Overture)

* Lyrita SRCD 318. LPO, Pritchard (with Henry PIERSON. Macbeth; David MORGAN: Contrasts ) – ARNOLD: Beckus the Dandipratt; RAWSTHORNE: Cortèges; WARLOCK: Serenade for Strings ****

This delightfully whimsical overture derives from a film of the same name involving an heiress with hiccups. The film is long forgotten but the overture certainly should not be, a winning piece using memorably quirky themes in the most engaging way. It is splendidly played and recorded here.

CHARPENTIER, Gustave (1860–1956)

Louise* (gramophone version conceived and realized by the composer)

Ⓜ () Nim. mono NI 7829. Vallin, Thill, Pernet, Lecouvreur, Gaudel, Ch. Raugel & O, Eugène Bigot

These substantial excerpts from Louise were recorded in 1935 under the 75-year-old composer's supervision; they feature two ideally cast French singers as the two principals, Ninon Vallin enchanting in the title-role and the tenor, Georges Thill, heady-toned as the hero, Julien. The original eight 78-r.p.m. records are fitted neatly on to a single CD, and – in the selection of items, made by the composer himself – just the delights and none of the longueurs of this nostalgically atmospheric opera are included. The voices are caught superbly in the Nimbus transfers, but with an early electrical recording like this the orchestral sound becomes muddled. Yet even Nimbus has rarely presented voices as vividly as here.

CHARPENTIER, Marc-Antoine (1643–1704)

Les Antiennes 'O' de l'Avent, H.36–43,* with Noëls pour les instruments, H.534; Canticum in nativitatem Domini nostri Jésus Christ, H.416; Pastorale sur la naissance de Notre Seigneur Jesus Christ, H.482 (HMX 2908141). Canticum in nativitatem Domini nostri Jésus Christ, H.414; Pastorale sur la naissance de notre Seigneur Jésus Christ, H.483 (HMX 2908140). Litanies de la Vierge, H.83; Missa Assumpta est Maria, H.11; Te Deum, H.146 (HMX 2908144). Méditations pour le Carême; Le Reniement de St Pierre (HMX 2908143). Les Arts Florissants (opéra et idylle en musique). (HMX 2908142)

Ⓑ  HM (ADD) HMX 2908140/44 (5). Les Arts Florissants, Christie

These two pioneering collections from William Christie and his Arts Florissants of the music of Charpentier, made over two decades, are complementary, the Harmonia Mundi compilation being recorded between 1981 and 1989 and the Warner Classics box between 1995 and 2001. Charpentier wrote numerous works in celebration of Christmas, and he set the words of the Canticum in nativitatem Domini four times, only one of which (H.416) is included in both compilations.

The solemn 'O' Antiphons on the first disc listed here are so called because of their opening invocation: O salutaris hostia, O Sapientia, etc. Charpentier explained in his manuscript that custom demanded that Noëls were performed between them when they were sung on the days preceding the Nativity. The musical delights are considerable and the same high standards of performance and recording that are found here prevail throughout the box.

Christie's performance of the Te Deum is among the finest in the catalogue. The disc also includes the much less familiar but no less beautiful Missa Assumpta est Maria and the more restrained Litanies de la Vierge. Framed by a Kyrie and closing Agnus Dei, the seven movements each radiantly describe one of the Virgin's mystical attributes, followed by an intercessionary prayer.

The Méditations pour le Carême are a sequence of three-voice motets for Lent with continuo accompaniment (organ, theorbo and bass viol) that may not have quite the same imaginative or expressive resource as their coupling, but they are full of nobility and interest. Le Reniement de St Pierre, however, is one of Charpentier's most inspired and expressive works, and its text draws on the account in all four Gospels of St Peter's denial of Christ. The performance and recording maintain the high standards of this series.

Les Arts Florissants is a short entertainment in five scenes; the libretto tells of a conflict between the Arts, who flourish under the rule of Peace, and the forces of War, personified by Discord and the Furies. This and the little Interlude that completes the music include some very invigorating and fresh ideas, performed very pleasingly indeed. The five CDs come in a box, each in an elegantly illustrated cardboard inner, and there is an excellent booklet, including full texts and translations.

Concert for viols in 4 Parts, H.545; Il faut rire et chanter: Dispute de bergers, H.484; La Pierre Philosophale, H.501.* Airs: Ah! laissez-moi rêver; Ah! qu'ils sont courts les beaux jours; Ah! qu'on est malheureux d'avoir eu des désirs; Auprès du feu l'on fait l'amour; Ayant bu du vin claire; Charmantes fleurs, naissez; En vain rivaux assidus; Fenchon, la gentille Fenchon; Non, non, je ne l'aime plus; Quoi! Je ne verrai plus; Quoi! rien ne peut vous arrêter?; Rentrez, trop indiscrets soupirs; Tristes déserts, sombre retraite. Chaconne: Sans frayeur dans ce bois (3984 25485-2) (with Daneman, Petibon, Eikenes, Agnew, Sinclair, Piolino, Le Monnier, Ewing). Canticum in nativitatem Domini, H.416; Messe de Minuit pour Noël, H.9; 4 Noëls sur les instruments (8573 85820-2) (with soloists). (i) Amor vince ogni cosa (pastoraletta); (ii) Les Plaisirs de Versailles; (iii) 3 Airs on Stanzas from 'Le Cid' (0630 14774-2) (with (i) Petibon, Lallouette; (i; ii) Daneman, Piolino; (ii) Károlyi, Duardin, Gardeil; (i; iii) Agnew). La Descente d'Orphée aux Enfers (chamber opera; complete). (0630 11913-2) (with Agnew, Daneman, Zanetti, Petibon, Károlyi, Gardeil)

Ⓑ  Warner 2564 61758-2 (4). Les Arts Florissants, Christie

The first disc in the later, Warner Classics box, described as 'Divertissements and Airs et Concert', shows something of the range of Charpentier's instrumental and secular vocal writing. The programme is framed by a dramatic setting, the first, La Pierre Philosophale (1681) and all we are left with is eight minutes of charmingly scored music. Its choruses of Four Elements glorify the victory of love, while the central arias are sung by a gnomide celebrating her forthcoming wedding, and a Marquis (disguised as a sylph) who seeks her hand, though wishing she were taller. The union of such opposites is appropriately acclaimed by a duet of Fire and Water, and the marquis is then astonished at the metamorphosis of his bride into a voluptuous, full-sized beauty!

The centrepiece of the programme is a collection of chansonettes and airs sérieux. These are then followed by the more successful amours experienced after a glass or two of wine. The songs are made the more appealing for being interspersed with attractive movements from Charpentier's Concert pour quatre parties de violes. The programme ends with Il faut rire et chanter: Dispute de Bergers, a miniature pastoral chamber-opera. The arguments are about the winter weather, which is then banished and spring celebrated. The performance is splendidly sung and played, and the recording is full of atmosphere.

Christie's apt coupling of the beautiful Canticum in nativitatem Domini, H.416, and its interpolated instrumental Noëls, with the Messe de Minuit pour Noël, seems made in heaven, and the whole work is a marvellous example of simple means used to maximum musical effect.

Amor vince ogni cosa is a charming pastoral conversation-piece (with shepherds' chorus) about unrequited love. Les plaisirs de Versailles is a 'mini-opera' in which the characters are Music, Conversation, Le Jeu, Comus and Un Plaisir. They engage in a vociferous dialogue which is in turns lyrical, dramatic and bizarrely humorous. Finally the protagonists are reconciled and the piece ends with a happy chorus. The three ardent airs from Corneille's Le Cid make a passionate central interlude. Throughout, the solo singing is delightful and full of lively and charming characterization, while Charpentier's orchestration is equally diverting when Christie provides such sparkling accompaniments.

La descente d'Orphée aux enfers starts with lightweight, sparkling movements in dance rhythms, but then dramatically changes tone with the death of Euridice, a moment superbly interpreted by Sophie Daneman. The following lament for Orphée is just the first of his moving and expressive solos, each of them brief but intense, beautifully sung by Paul Agnew. They culminate in a sequence when he seeks to charm Pluton in the Underworld, finally succeeding. The work ends with the lamenting of Pluton's subjects at losing Orphée and his musical magic. The four discs come in their original jewel cases in a sleeve, and throughout there is excellent documentation, plus full texts and translations.

Motets

Ⓑ  HM (ADD) HMA 1951149. Concerto Vocale

Half of the motets on this record are for solo voice and the others are duets. Among the best and most moving things here are O vos omnes and Amicus meus, which are beautifully done. Another motet to note is Magdalena lugens, in which Mary Magdalene laments Christ's death at the foot of the Cross. Expressive singing from Judith Nelson and René Jacobs, and excellent continuo support.

Motets

 Astrée E 8598. Les Demoiselles de Saint-Cyr, Mandrin

In the mid-1680s, Charpentier composed several works 'for Port Royal'. The music is scored for female voices only and is generally austere in style. The main work, after which the record is titled, is the Messe pour le Port-Royal for three soloists, chorus and organ. This is supplemented by various other pieces, psalm settings and the fine Magnificat, also written for the convent. This is reposeful music, predominantly meditative in character, and very persuasively performed by Les Demoiselles de Saint-Cyr under Emmanuel Mandrin, with Michel Chapuis providing the solo organ interludes. A rewarding issue.

Canticum in nativitatem Domini, H.393; In nativitatem Domini canticum, H.314; In nativitatem Domini canticum: Chanson, H.416; In nativitatem Domini Nostri Jesus Christi, H.414; 9 Noëls

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.554514. Aradia Ens., Mallon

In this Christmas disc with a difference, the talented Canadian group, the Aradia Ensemble, warmly recorded, present the nine charming sets of simple variations Charpentier wrote on French Christmas carols, or Noëls. Standing out from the rest is the minor-key Or nous dites Marie, with chromatic writing like Purcell's. These instrumental pieces are set alongside a sequence of lively vocal motets on a Christmas theme, culminating in a miniature Nativity oratorio.

Canticum in nativitatem Domini, H.416; Dialogus inter angelos et pastores Judeae in nativitatem Domine, H.420; Noël: Un flambeau, Janette, Isabelle (3 versions), H.460

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.557036. Smith Bessette, Stelmacovitch, Nortman, Streetman, Aradia Ens., Mallon

Here is a natural and equally beguiling follow-up to the Aradia Ensemble's first Naxos collection of Christmas music, including Noëls. The two cantatas both use the same text from St Luke, telling of the angel's dialogue with the shepherds. Each then creates a nocturnal atmosphere, followed by the shepherds' joyful 'awakening', devotion and exultation. The innocence of the pastoral scene is richly conveyed in Charpentier's simple but inspired settings. The three versions of the Nöel (the first for soloists and organ, the second for choir, the third instrumental) act as prelude, intermezzo and postlude in the most effective way, so that the concert makes a perfect whole. Singing, playing and recording are of high quality and so is the documentation.

Canticum in Nativitatem D. N. J. C., H.414; Pastorale sur la naissance de N. S. Jésus-Christ, H.483

🔑 Ⓜ * HM HMX 2971082. Les Arts Florissants, Christie

Charpentier wrote numerous works in celebration of Christmas and he set the words of the Canticum in nativitatem Domini four times involving recitatives for the Evangelist and an Air and chorus for the shepherds. In both works the music's charm and grace continue to win one over to this eminently resourceful composer. One thing that will immediately strike the listener is the delicacy and finesse of the scoring. This series undertaken by William Christie seems almost self-recommending, so high are the standards of performance and so fertile is Charpentier's imagination. The reissue is handsomely presented in silver livery and includes full texts and translations.

Canticum in nativitatem Domini Nostri Jesus Christi, H.416; Pastorale sur la naissance de notre Seigneur Jésus Christ, H.482

 HM (ADD) HMC 905130. Les Arts Florissants Vocal & Instrumental Ens., Christie

The cantata, a finely balanced edifice in two complementary halves, is separated by an instrumental section, an eloquent evocation of the night. The little pastorale was written in the tradition of the ballet de cour or divertissement. This is enchanting music, elegantly played and excellently recorded.

Canticum pro pace, H.392; Josué, H.404; Mors Saülis et Jonathae, H.403; Praelium Michaelis Archangeli factum in coelo cum dracone, H.410; Quam dilecta tabernacula tua, H.167; Troisième Leçons de ténèbres du mercredi, du jeudi et du vendredi Saint, H.135/7

(BB) (*) Warner Apex 2564 61744-2 (2). Schlick, Wessel, Prégardien, Mertens, Kooy, Zijlstra, Visse, Van Berne, Amsterdam Bar. O, Koopman

Curiously, Charpentier often wrote for double choir in a warlike ambience, and the Canticum pro pace (1674–6), which opens with a Prelude suggesting 'the clamour of war', probably celebrated the successful outcome of one of Louis XIV's battles with the Dutch. Josué and Mors Saülis et Jonathae are motet/oratorios based in Old Testament stories, and the latter is very theatrical, almost operatic, opening with an even more dramatic orchestral Rumor bellicus ('Noise of War'). The chorus (often in very lively fashion) both narrates the story and takes part in the action, making a lively contrast to the dialogues between Saul, David and the Soldier who kills the lamenting Saul at his own request. There is a memorably expressive aria for the Witch, and the closing section with David's Air and a choral lament is very touching. The performances here, with a first-class group of soloists who join together for the choruses, are in every way excellent, and the recording is of equal excellence. The one snag is that, while full texts and translations are included, there is only a single cue for each work, which makes finding one's way very difficult.

Canticum Zachariae: Benedictus, H.345; Mass, H.1; Te Deum, H.147

(BB)  Naxos 8.553175. Le Concert Spirituel, Niquet

The Canticum Zachariae dates from 1687, and its lovely six-part Benedictus shows Charpentier in characteristically fluent lyrical and contrapuntal form. The four-part Mass – the first of the composer's eleven settings – which opens simply, extends to six voices in the Sanctus, with the spirited Hosanna extended to double choir. But it is the short Agnus Dei, serenely beautiful, that haunts the memory.

The Te Deum was the composer's last setting, written not too long before his death. If without the instrumental spectacle of his most famous setting, it is supremely confident in its variety of style, superbly written, ending exultantly. The performances here are splendid, not inflated, but in every way satisfying. The recording is excellent and there is full documentation.

Elévation; In obitum augustissimae nec non piissimae gallorum Reginae lamentum; Luctus de morte augustissimae Mariae Theresiae Galliae

🔑 (BB)  Warner Apex 2564 61743-2. Degelin, Verdoodt, Smolders, Crook, Vandersteene, Widmer, Namur Chamber Ch., Musica Polyphonica, Devos

All three works here lament the death of the queen, Marie Thérèse. Clearly the event moved Charpentier deeply, and each reflects the paradox of the Christian faith in contrasting grief with joy and hope in the life hereafter. Here Devos's performances could hardly be bettered, bringing out all the music's drama, joy, and depth of feeling. The recordings, both made in spacious acoustics, are also first class and this Apex reissue is highly recommended.

Judicium Salomonis (The Judgement of Solomon); Motet pour une longue offrande

 Virgin 3 59294-2. Agnew, Aruhn-Solén, Davies, Fernandes, Les Arts Florissants, Christie

Judicium Salomonis is a grand dramatic motet, one of the kind called by the French 'histoire sacrée', dating from 1702. It is above all a happy work. The first part celebrates the peace and piety of Israel under Solomon, who appears to bless the Lord for his goodness, and the chorus echoes his praise jubilantly. Then comes a magical orchestral interlude suggesting Solomon's dream, and a duet in which he asks God for wisdom. More vigorous celebrations, and the third part brings the famous judgement (after an agitated dialogue), and the work ends in jubilation. All this shows Charpentier at his most resourceful and imaginative, especially in orchestral colour, and this is again apparent in the following motet, which is again elaborate and no less grand. The performances here, with fine soloists, eloquent choral singing and some beautiful orchestral playing is another triumph for Christie and his Arts Florissants, who are beautifully recorded.

Leçons de ténèbres for Maundy Thursday

🔑 (B)  HM (ADD) HMC 901006. Jacobs, Nelson, Wieland Kuijken, Verkinderen, Christie, Concerto Vocale, Jacobs

Charpentier's melismatic setting is sung with great eloquence by René Jacobs. Yet one must remember that this music was written for nuns (the names of the sisters who sang them are known) and Charpentier observed that the leading soprano should possess a 'voix touchante' rather than a 'voix brillante'. So it is here, in the second and third lessons, with Judith Nelson's dolce leading the small female group, accompanied (as the composer suggested) by a continuo of bass viol, organ and theorbo. They are beautifully recorded and this reissue is a real bargain.

Leçons de ténèbre for Maundy Thursday & Good Friday

Ⓝ ⒷⒷ  Virgin 2x1 5 22021-2 (2) Piau, Mellon, Lesne, Seminario Musicale

The Leçons de ténèbre for Maundy Thursday and Good Friday from Il Seminario Musicale offer music of great variety and beauty, featuring soloists naturally attuned to this repertoire. The accompaniments are provided by a varied instrumental group, and their use is consistently imaginative and refreshing to the ear. The Psalms are sung by a smaller choral group. The effect is warm yet refined, the lyrical melancholy of much of this music is quite haunting, and the acoustic of L'Abbaye Royale de Fontevraud is ideal for the music. The reissued CDs are inexpensive and any collector attracted to this remarkable and inspired composer should consider them.

Mass for 4 Choirs & Orchestra

ⒷⒷ (*) Warner Apex 2564 61745-2. Mellon, Poulenard, Brett, Aubin, Elwes, Laplenie, Cantoe, Gardell, Regional Ch. of N. Pas-de-Calais, Jean Bridier & Françoise Herr Vocal Ensembles, Gabrieli Ch., Grande Ecurie et la Chambre du Roy, Malgoire (with BOYVIN: Organ Pieces ***)

Charpentier wrote his Mass for Four Choirs when he returned to Paris in the early 1670s after spending three years in Italy, where he would certainly have encountered such multi-chorus antiphonal works. Though these were not part of the French tradition, he adapted them to the style of the French organ mass, interspersing organ interludes between the Propers. For the present live performance, Jean-Claude Malgoire has used – to great effect – organ pieces by Jacques Boyvin (1646–1707) whose characterful music is exactly contemporary with that of Charpentier. The performance here is of high quality, but the 1990 recording, made in the Abbaye of Saint-Michel en Thiérache, although providing a richly atmospheric ambience does not give clear separation between the various choral groups. Nevertheless, this is a thoroughly worthwhile disc, with Latin text included.

Messe de minuit pour Noël (Midnight Mass for Christmas Eve); Dixit Dominus; Te Deum

🔑 ⒷⒷ  Naxos 8.557229. Aradia Ens., Mallon

Kevin Mallon and his excellent Canadian group, the Aradia Ensemble, give bright, clear readings of two of the most popular of Charpentier's choral works. This period performance of the Prélude for the Te Deum is very different from the one that used to introduce Eurovision programmes; it is altogether lighter and more joyful, with an exuberant display of timpani at the start and with bright trumpet flourishes throughout. In the Christmas Mass Mallon equally brings out the joy of the writing, giving more prominence than usual to the carols that punctuate the Kyrie, and springing rhythms infectiously in writing that in many sections offers a thoughtfully original setting of the liturgy. The Dixit Dominus, with its unexpectedly gentle minor-key introduction, makes an attractive extra item. Clear, well-balanced sound.

Miserere, H.219; Motets: Pour la seconde fois que le Saint Sacrament vient au même reposoir, H.372; Pour le Saint Sacrement au reposoir, H.346; Motet pour une longue offrande, H.434

Ⓑ  HM HMA 195 1185. Mellon, Poulenard, Ledroit, Kendall, Kooy, La Chapelle Royale, Herreweghe

All four works on the disc are powerfully expressive and beautifully performed. The recording, made in collaboration with Radio France, is most expertly balanced.

Te Deum; Grand Office des Morts (reconstructed by John S. Powell from the Messe et Motet pour les trépassés and the Pose des morts)

🔑  Virgin 5 45733-2. Soloists, Les Arts Florissants, Christie

William Christie and his Arts Florissants here give a splendid account of the Te Deum, heralded by a spectacular opening flourish of drums and Philidor's Marche de timbals as part of the Prélude. But it is the coupling that is the main interest here, a reconstruction of the Grand Office des Morts from three works which almost certainly were never performed together in the composer's lifetime. It works remarkably well, and the entry of the Dies Irae in the Pose des morts sequence is a truly dramatic moment, while the Sanctus, Pie Jesu and Benedictus of the Messe pour les trépassés make a beautiful following group, and the closing triple Agnus Dei is wonderfully serene. The performance, as always from this group, is spiritually intense and dedicated, made the more so by the live recording, in the Cité de la Musique, Paris, which is wonderfully atmospheric.

OPERA AND THEATRE MUSIC

Médée (complete)

✿  Erato 4509 96558-2 (3). Hunt, Padmore, Delétré, Zanetti, Salzmann, Les Arts Florissants, Christie

In his second recording of this rare opera, again with his group, Les Arts Florissants, Christie was glad to be able to open out the small cuts that were made before so as to fit the LP format. The success of his new interpretation is readily borne out in the finished performance, which easily surpasses the previous one in its extra brightness and vigour, with consistently crisper and more alert ensembles, often at brisker speeds, with the drama more clearly established. The casting is first rate, with Lorraine Hunt outstanding in the tragic title-role. Her soprano has satisfying weight and richness, as well as the purity and precision needed in such classical opera; and Mark Padmore's clear, high tenor copes superbly with the role of Jason, with no strain and with cleanly enunciated diction and sharp concern for word-meaning. The others follow Christie's pattern of choosing cleanly focused voices, even if the tone is occasionally gritty.

CHAUSSON, Ernest (1855–99)

Poème for Violin & Orchestra, Op. 25 (Original Version)

Ⓜ  Avie AV 2091. Graffin, RLPO, Handley – ELGAR: Violin Concerto ***

Graffin has an ideal silvery tone for this work, and his performance is richly rhapsodic, with totally idiomatic support from Handley, whose atmospheric opening sets the scene magnetically for his gentle entry. The recording, made in Philharmonic Hall, Liverpool, is warmly full-bodied and very naturally balanced, and the solo violin rides the passionate climax impressively.

Poème for Violin & Orchestra

🔑 Ⓜ * Decca (ADD) 460 006-2. Chung, RPO, Dutoit – DEBUSSY; FRANCK: Violin Sonatas **** ✿

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI 5 62599-2. Perlman, O de Paris, Martinon (with MASSENET: Thaïs: Méditation: Abbey Road Ens., Foster) – RAVEL: Tzigane; SAINT-SAËNS: Introduction and Rondo capriccioso, etc. ***

Ⓜ (*) DG 477 7113. Perlman, NYPO, Mehta – ELGAR: Violin Concerto **

Chung's performance is deeply emotional, if not as opulent as Perlman's; but, with committed accompaniment from the RPO and excellent (1977) recording, this makes an apt bonus for superb performances of the Debussy and Franck Violin Sonatas.

Perlman's 1975 account of Chausson's beautiful Poème, with the Orchestre de Paris under Martinon, is a classic account by which all newcomers are measured. A luscious account of the Thaïs Méditation, recorded digitally two decades later, has now been added.

Perlman's digital remake, although certainly a fine performance, is not quite its equal. Martinon displayed more subtle feeling for the atmosphere of the piece, while Perlman sounds slightly more detached on DG.

Heifetz too is recorded very closely, as if in the glare of a spotlight, and the performance is robbed of much of its subtlety. Even so, the playing itself is quite remarkable. (09026 61753-2)

Nigel Kennedy's version of the Poème, unusually expansive and sensuous, with ripe and powerful build-up of climaxes, comes as a welcome, if not very generous, coupling for his warmly romantic reading of the Tchaikovsky Concerto, recorded in similarly rich, full sound. (CfP 585 6192)

(i) Poème for Violin & Orchestra; (ii) Poème de l'amour et de la mer

 Chan. 8952. (i) Y. P. Tortelier; (ii) Finnie; Ulster O, Tortelier – FAURÉ: Pavane, etc. ***

Yan Pascal Tortelier's brings consistent beauty of timbre and, what is more important, refinement of feeling. In the Poème de l'amour et de la mer Linda Finnie can hold her own with the very best; her feeling for the idiom is completely natural.

Symphony in B flat, Op. 20

🔑 * Pentatone SACD Surround Sound PTC 5186 078. SRO, Janowski – FRANCK: Symphony ***

 Universal Accord 476 8069. Liège PO, Langree – FRANCK: Symphony ***

Symphony in B flat; Soir de fête, Op. 32; La Tempête, Op. 18; Viviane, Op. 5

🔑  Chan. 9650. BBC PO, Y. P. Tortelier

Janowski gets very impressive results indeed from the Suisse Romande Orchestra, which offers a much weightier and more opulent string sonority here than in earlier recordings, especially for listeners who have the surround sound facility. Indeed this is now the most impressive account of this symphony available, the finest since Monteux, and is a clear first choice for this marvellous work.

Yan Pascal Tortelier and the BBC Philharmonic give thoroughly idiomatic and well-played accounts of all these Chausson pieces. They more than hold their own against any of the competitors and, given the excellence of the sound, may well be a first choice for collectors wanting an up-to-date recording of the Symphony.

Louis Langree draws a persuasive, totally idiomatic performance from his finely drilled Belgian Orchestra, opting for a flowing speed in the central slow movement, marked Tres lent, very slow, but never sounding at all rushed. The clarity and immediacy of the sound adds to the impact and, as in the Franck, Chausson's syncopated rhythms come over most persuasively.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Andante & Allegro (for clarinet and piano); Piano Trio in G min., Op. 3; Pièce for Cello & Piano, Op. 39; Poème Op. 25 (arr. for violin, string quartet & piano)

 Hyp. CDA 67028. Neidlich, Devoyon, Hoffman, Graffin; Chilingirian Qt

The Poème appears here in a newly discovered arrangement by the composer. There is a complete naturalness and conviction about this performance in which Graffin is a wonderfully persuasive soloist. The remaining pieces, including the early Piano Trio, come off well and can hold their own against any rival. The rich acoustic environment enhances the appeal of these dedicated performances.

(i) Concerto for Violin, Piano & String Quartet, Op. 21; Piano Quartet, Op. 30; Piano Trio, Op. 3. String Quartet, Op. 35

 Talent DOM 381 006/007 (2). Sharon Qt, (i) with Ouziel

The four major chamber works on this two-disc set neatly encompass the full span of Chausson's all-too-short composing career. The Piano Trio is a teenage work, written when Chausson was still a student. At the other end of Chausson's career, he failed to complete his String Quartet, and it was with the greatest difficulty that his heirs were persuaded to allow Vincent d'Indy to complete the few bars needed to round off the third of the four projected movements. The Piano Quartet receives a strong, warm and purposeful performance from the Sharons, with Dalia Ouziel the excellent, agile pianist. Best known of Chausson's chamber works is the so-called Concerto for the unusual combination of piano, violin and string quartet. This version is most persuasive, with hushed tension in the slow movement and winning agility in the finale. Dalia Ouziel at the piano plays with dazzling brilliance and clarity of articulation.

Piano Quartet in A, Op. 30

 Aeon AECD 0540. Favre, Schumann Qt – FAURÉ: Piano Quartet 1 ***

BB  Virgin 2x1 4 82061-2 (2). Kandinsky Qt – CASTILLON; LEKEU; SAINT-SAËNS: Piano Quartets ***

The first thing that strikes you on the Aeon version is the bright, full sound of Christian Favre's piano at the start of the Chausson, and the excellent recorded sound generally adds to the brilliance and persuasiveness of these performances. The precision of ensemble adds greatly to the impact of the strongly rhythmic passages. What seals the quality of the Schumann Quartet's performance is their superb reading of the slow movement, marked Très calme. From the tender and hushed opening the players build up the argument into a towering climax. Well coupled with the Fauré, this is very recommendable.

The Chausson Piano Quartet is the centrepiece of this rewarding Virgin two-CD compilation, and the performance from the early 1990s is most alive and satisfying.

Piano Trio in G min., Op. 3

 HM HMC 1951967. Trio Wanderer – RAVEL: Piano Trio ***

The Chausson Trio is rarely encountered in the recital room or, for that matter, on records. The Trio Wanderer give a refined and well-shaped account that does justice to this elegant and neglected piece, and they are very well recorded.

Poème (for violin and piano) Op. 25

 New Note Quartz QTZ 2002. Liebeck, Apekisheva – PROKOFIEV; SAINT-SAËNS; YSAŸE: Violin Sonatas ***

Katya Apekisheva's piano introduction prepares the way for Jack Liebeck's entry very seductively and his playing is full of passionate feeling. There may be more subtle accounts of Chausson's Poème on record, but none more deeply felt or ardent. The balance places the violin vividly forward, but with this degree of passionate advocacy one is swept away, and the close of the piece is exquisitely gentle. The rest of this enterprising début programme is not less stimulating.

String Quartet in C min., Op. 35 (completed d'Indy)

 Hyp. CDA 67097. Chilingirian Qt. – D'INDY: String Quartet 1 ***

BB  Naxos 8.553645. Quatuor Ludwig – FRANCK: Piano Quintet ***

This superb disc from the Chilingirians, sensitively played and beautifully recorded, is a revelation. Chausson's work, completed by Vincent d'Indy after the composer's tragic death, has echoes of his teacher, Franck, touched in with point and elegance.

The Quatuor Ludwig also play it with conviction and aplomb. The recording is excellent.

VOCAL MUSIC

Mélodies (complete)

 Hyp. CDA 67321/2. Lott, Murray, Trakas, Greevy, Johnson; Chilingirian Qt

These two superb, revelatory discs contain all the regularly published songs of Chausson, plus five songs drawn from manuscript sources. Beautifully performed, they come with the same kind of scholarly notes that Johnson provides for his Schubert and Schumann series, plotting the composer's development from his student years to his untimely death in a cycle accident. What consistently comes out far more than in Chausson's instrumental music is his gift of tunefulness, fresh and memorable. Not that they are lacking refinement in any way, and the piano accompaniments, particularly in the early songs, from the sparkling first item, Les papillons, are models of refinement and imagination, consistently inspiring Johnson as accompanist.

(i) Chanson perpétuelle, Op. 37; (ii) Poème de l'amour et de la mer, Op. 19; (iii) Mélodies: Le Charme; Le Colibri; La Dernière Feuille; Sérénade italienne; Les Papillons

BB  Warner Apex 0927 48992-2. Norman; (i) Monte Carlo Qt; (ii) Monte Carlo PO, Jordan; (i; iii) Dalberto

Although Jessye Norman's account of the glorious Poème de l'amour et de la mer does not wholly eclipse memories of Dame Janet Baker's version, it is still very recommendable in its own right. The orchestral texture is splendidly opulent and atmospheric, and Jessye Norman makes an impressive sound throughout. Even if the playing time (45′) is comparatively short, this is a real bargain at Apex price.

Poème de l'amour et de la mer, Op. 19

 Warner 2564 61938-2. Graham, BBC SO, Yan Pascal Tortelier – DEBUSSY: Poèmes de Charles Baudelaire; RAVEL: Shéhérazade ***

Susan Graham is in her element in Chausson's lovely song cycle, phrasing with a natural sensuous charm and producing an unstrained beauty of line. She is very sensitively accompanied and beautifully recorded. But the great interest of this triptych is the Debussy coupling, re-orchestrated by John Adams.

Le roi Arthus (complete)

 Telarc CD-80645 (3). Schroeder, Bullock, O'Neill, Le Roux, Okulitch, McIntyre, Apollo Voices, BBC SO, Botstein

Recorded in association with BBC Radio 3, the Telarc version of Le roi Arthus, Chausson's opera based on the Arthurian legend, brings out the sensuality of this piece which is much influenced by Wagner. Chausson aimed to transcend that influence, and with sumptuous sound and a passionate approach to the score Leon Botstein clearly demonstrates that this is not just a Wagnerian imitation but a work that brings out Chausson's distinctive voice. In its ripe melodic writing it is moving in a way that reminds one that Puccini too was much influenced by Wagner. The dreamy beauty of the first big love duet between Queen Guinevere (in French Genièvre) and Lancelot brings the clearest echoes of the Act II love duet from Tristan und Isolde, and the love-triangle, with Arthur himself the rejected husband, directly reflects the situation in Tristan.

CHERUBINI, Luigi (1760–1842)

Anacréon Overture

() BBC BBCL mono 4016-2 (2). BBC SO, Toscanini – BEETHOVEN: Missa solemnis; Symphony 7 ((*)); MOZART: Symphony 35 (Haffner) ()

Cherubini's fine Anacréon Overture enjoyed considerably more exposure in the 1930s and 1940s. (At the time of writing there is no modern recording at all!) Toscanini's account comes from 1935 and finds the BBC Symphony Orchestra at its most responsive and alert. For a 1930s broadcast the sound, though not the highest of fi, is really very good indeed.

Symphony in D; Overtures: Faniska; Lodoïsa; Médée

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 557908. Sanremo SO, Bellugi

Cherubini's music was greatly admired by Beethoven, and this fine symphony readily explains why. Its invention is consistently appealing and its structure no less impressive. The layout of the three overtures (again with attractive themes) is said to have influenced Beethoven. They once featured regularly in concert programmes but are now (like the Symphony) almost never performed. Fortunately the Orchestra Sinfonica di Sanremo is a first-class ensemble and their conductor, Pieri Bellugi, provides dramatic and cultured performances of all this music, very well recorded. So this disc cannot be recommended too highly.

String Quartets 1–6

🔑 Ⓜ  CPO 999 949-2 (3). Hausmusik

String Quartets 1 in E flat; 2 in C

🔑  BIS CD 1003. David Qt

String Quartets 3 in D min.; 4 in E

 BIS CD 1004. David Qt

Cherubini's quartets are of very high quality and it is good to have outstanding new recordings of them. Listening to them makes one realize the justice of Beethoven's admiration for the composer, for Cherubini's melodic inspiration is often distinguished and instinctive, there is always a fine musical intelligence at work and polished craftsmanship is always in evidence.

The first four works bring an exhilarating response from this excellent BIS group, who are superb individual players yet perfectly integrated tonally. They are thoroughly at home in Cherubini's sound-world. In short these modern-instrument performances could hardly be bettered, and the recording, as one expects from this label, is in every way first class.

The performances by Hausmusik on period instruments are also of the very highest quality. Although textures are less ample, inner detail is wonderfully clear, there is no lack of warmth and the playing itself is highly eloquent. In short, except for those allergic to period instruments, this set leads the field, and the recording is strikingly vivid and present.

6 Keyboard Sonatas (1783)

🔑 Ⓝ ✿ * RCA 88697057742 Bachetti (piano)

Andrea Bacchetti has given us several outstanding new recordings in the present volume (including an impressive DVD of Bach's Goldberg Variations), but none is more valuable than this set of Cherubini's Six Keyboard Sonatas, published in 1783 but probably written earlier (perhaps 1780). They are most engaging two-movement works, with a strong flavour of early Mozart, but with gallant touches to add charm. Their invention is consistently diverse and in these captivating performances one is drawn to return to them often. They are beautifully recorded and this is a disc to be snapped up before it disappears. Highly recommended indeed.

(i) Coronation Mass in A for King Charles X; March religieuse; (ii) Solemn Mass in G for the Coronation of Louis XVIII; (iii) Requiem in C min.

🔑 Ⓑ  EMI Rouge et Noir 5 85258-2 (2). (i) Philh. Ch. & O; (ii) LPO Ch. & O; (iii) Amb. S., Philh. O; Muti

The G major Mass was finished in 1819, but meanwhile Louis XVIII had postponed his coronation a number of times, and in the end it never took place, so Cherubini's music remained unperformed and the full score was prepared for publication only recently. As is so often the case with Cherubini, the musical inspiration is not only dignified but noble – and, on occasion, inspired. Muti seems persuaded of its distinction and performs the work with dedication and conviction.

The Coronation Mass for Charles X dates from 1825 and there are signs in the Gloria that Cherubini was influenced by both Beethoven's Fidelio and the Ninth Symphony, and in the Incarnatus and Crucifixus by the Missa solemnis. But Cherubini's church music has a character of its own, beautifully crafted, with moments of real memorability, such as the closing bars of the Kyrie. Muti presents the music with an intensity to hide any limitations, and both chorus and orchestra respond superbly. There is an instrumental appendix in the form of a Marche religieuse, a very fine piece. The C minor Requiem was praised extravagantly by Berlioz with the claim that 'no other production of this great master can bear any comparison with it for abundance of ideas, fullness of form and sustained sublimity of style'.

Mass 2 in D min.

🔑 ✿  Häns. CD 98.325. Coburn, Kallisch, Thompson, Will, Stuttgart Gächinger Kantorei & Bach Collegium, Rilling

Cherubini began composing his D minor Mass in 1811, but added a newly composed Sanctus in 1822. Thus it was contemporary with Beethoven's Missa solemnis, and it has much of that work's lyrical gravitas and depth. This outstanding Hänssler recording by the Gächinger Kantorei and Stuttgart Bach Collegium is fully worthy of this glorious work.

Missa Solemnis in E; Motets: Antifona sul canto fermo; Nemo Gaudeat

 EMI 3 94316-2. Ziesak, Pizzolato, Lippert, Abdrazakov, Bav. R. Ch. & O, Muti

This latest in Muti's survey of the music of Cherubini is every bit as successful as previous recordings. Cherubini's music is never less than entertaining, even if it might be said that it is effect over spirituality. The fugato on 'Amen' which ends the Credo is more reminiscent of the opera house than the church, but it is very exciting. Similarly, in that section a series of jabbing heartbeat strokes on the strings leading on to Et resurrexit is strikingly dramatic and operatic. The two Motets are slighter works, gentle in nature and beautifully sung, making a fine bonus. The Mass was recorded live but has been atmospherically and vividly captured, and the audience is very quiet.

Requiem in C min.

(BB)  EMI Gemini 5 86239-2 (2). Ambrosian Ch., Philh. O, Muti – VERDI: Requiem ***

The C minor Requiem was called by Berlioz 'the greatest of the greatest of his [Cherubini's] works'. Muti directs a tough, incisive reading, underlining the drama. The digital recording is excellent.

CHOPIN, Frédéric (1810–49)

DG Complete Chopin Edition

Ⓑ (*) DG (DDD/ADD) 463 047-2 (17)

To commemorate the 150th anniversary of Chopin's death in 1999, DG assembled for the first time the complete works of Chopin – even making several new recordings to fill in the gaps. There are many outstanding Chopin recordings here notably from Argerich, Pollini and Zimerman, but almost all of these are available separately. However there are several where DG might have made a better choice, the Waltzes and Mazurkas, for instance. At a bargain price and with a lavishly illustrated booklet, this is still good value, especially for those beginning a Chopin collection. These discs are no longer available separately.

Idil Biret Complete Chopin Edition

Piano Concerto 1, Op. 11; Andante spianato et Grande Polonaise brillante, Op. 22; Fantasia on Polish Airs, Op. 13

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550368 (with Slovak State PO, Stankovsky)

Piano Concerto 2, Op. 21; Krakowiak; Variations on Mozart's 'Là ci darem la mano'

(BB)  Naxos 8.550369 (with Slovak State PO, Stankovsky)

Ballades 1–4; Berceuse; Cantabile; Fantaisie; Galop marquis; Largo; Marche funèbre; 3 Nouvelles études

(BB)  Naxos 8.550508

Mazurkas, Op. posth.: in D; A flat; B flat; G; C; B flat; Rondos, Op. 1, Op. 16 & Op. 73; Rondo à la Mazurka, Op. 5; Souvenir de Paganini; Variations brillantes; (i) Variations for 4 Hands. Variations on a German Theme; Variations on Themes from 'I Puritani' of Bellini

(BB)  Naxos 8.550367 ((i) with Martin Sauer)

Nocturnes 1–21

(BB)  Naxos 8.550356/7 (available separately)

Polonaises 1–6; 7 (Polonaise fantaisie)

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550360

Polonaises 8–10, Op. 71; in G min.; B flat; A flat; G sharp min.; B flat min. (Adieu); G flat, all Op. posth.; Andante spianato et Grande Polonaise in E flat, Op. 22 (solo piano version)

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550361

Piano Sonatas 1, Op. 4; 2 (Funeral March); 3, Op. 58

(BB)  Naxos 8.550363

The Turkish pianist, Idil Biret, has all the credentials for recording Chopin. Among others, she studied with both Cortot and Wilhelm Kempff. She has a prodigious technique and the recordings we have heard so far suggest that overall her Chopin survey is an impressive achievement. Her impetuous style and chimerical handling of phrasing and rubato are immediately obvious in the First Concerto, and she makes a commanding entry in the F minor Concerto; in the Larghetto, too, the solo playing brings a gently improvisatory manner, and the finale really gathers pace only at the entry of the orchestra (which is recorded rather resonantly throughout). Of the other short concertante pieces, the opening of the Andante spianato is very delicate and there is some scintillating playing in the following Grande Polonaise and Fantasia on Polish Airs – and a touch of heaviness, too, in the former. The introductory Largo of the Mozart Variations is a bit too dreamy and diffuse but, once the famous tune arrives, the performance springs to life. Similarly, the introduction to the charming Krakowiak Rondo hangs fire, but again the Rondo sparkles, with the rhythmic rubato nicely handled, though the orchestral tuttis could ideally be firmer.

The Ballades bring impetuously romantic interpretations where the rubato at times seems mannered; the Berceuse is tender and tractable, the Fantaisie in F minor begins rather deliberately but opens up excitingly later; though the playing is rather Schumannesque, it is also imaginative; the three Nouvelles études, too, are attractively individual.

The disc called Rondos and Variations (8.550367) is worth anyone's money, showing Biret's technique at its most prodigious and glittering. Much of the music here is little known and none of it second rate. The Nocturnes are a great success in a quite different way: the rubato simple, the playing free and often thoughtful, sometimes dark in timbre, but always spontaneous. The recording is pleasingly full in timbre. The Polonaises demonstrate Biret's sinewy strength: the famous A major is a little measured but the A flat is fresh and exciting and the whole set commanding, while the Polonaise fantaisie shows imaginative preparation yet comes off spontaneously like the others. The recital ends with a fine account of the solo piano version of the Andante spianato (quite lovely) and Grande Polonaise, which is more appealing than the concertante version.

The three Sonatas are fitted comfortably on to one CD and, irrespective of cost, this represents one of the finest achievements in Biret's series so far.

OTHER RECORDINGS

Concertos and concertante music

Andante spianato et Grande polonaise, Op. 22

() BBC mono 4031-2. Richter, LSO, Kondrashin – LISZT: Piano Concertos 1–2, etc. ()

Both in the Andante and the Polonaise, Richter is at his most magical, not just brilliant but intensely poetic too, the more moving in a live performance. The playing has great delicacy and bravura.

Piano Concertos (i) 1; (ii) 2; (i) Krakowiak Rondo in F, Op. 14; Ballade 3 in A flat, Op. 47; Barcarolle, Op. 60; Berceuse, Op. 57; Impromptus 1–3 & Fantaisie-impromptu; 4 Mazurkas, Op. 41; Nocturnes 1–20; Polonaises 1–7; Polonaise-Fantaisie; 24 Preludes, Op. 28; Scherzos 2 in B flat, Op. 31; 3 in C sharp min., Op. 31 Sonatas 2 (Funeral March) & 3; Waltzes 1–14

Ⓑ (*) DG stereo/mono 477 5242 (7). Askenase, with (i) Hague Residentie O, Otterloo; (ii) BPO, Lehmann (with MOZART: Sonata 17, K.570; LISZT: Liebestraum 3; Valse oubliée 1; MENDELSSOHN: Songs without Words, Op. 19/1–2; Op. 67/4; Scherzo in E min., Op. 16/2. SCHUBERT: Medley of Ländler, Waltzes & Valses sentimentales (arr. Askenase). SMETANA: 4 Polkas)

Stefan Askenaze was DG's key Chopin recording artist in the early days of LP, and his recording career stretched for two decades, from 1951 to 1971. Many of his finest records were made during the mono era, but the quality of DG piano recording in the 1950s was of such a high standard that all these records sound very well indeed. So, while DG have chosen here his stereo recording of the First Piano Concerto plus the charming Krakowiak Rondo, they have preferred the mono version of the Second because of the highly sympathetic accompaniment from the Berlin Philharmonic under Fritz Lehmann. The Waltzes (1951), with which this survey opens, were long regarded as a gramophone classic in their Heliodor LP format.

The Second and Third Sonatas (also 1951), 24 Preludes (1953) and Nocturnes (1954) are also all mono recordings, although one would hardly guess it from the quality of the sound. The Sonatas are outstanding, showing Askenase to be a magician among Chopin pianists. The 24 Preludes are hardly less impressive and are played with great sympathy and insight. In the Nocturnes his finely graded colours and great sensitivity to dynamic are again admirably enhanced by the excellent recording.

Characteristically, there is no barnstorming in the Polonaises (again mono, 1951/2). As always, Askenase relies on subtlety and imagination rather than sheer volume, and, being a Pole, he seems naturally to inflect the polonaise rhythms with an infectious lift. The Barcarolle, Berceuse, Ballade 3, Scherzi, Impromptus, Op. 41, and Mazurkas are among his later recordings and the stereo shows him still on top form.

Piano Concerto 1 in E min., Op. 11

Ⓑ () Archipel mono ARPCD 0373. Rubinstein, Barbirolli – SUPPÉ: Overtures ()

Rubinstein's magical 1937 (originally EMI) recording of the E minor Concerto is offered as an extraordinary 'bonus' for Barbirolli's zestful 1957 collection of Suppé Overtures. It is a bonus indeed, for the transfer is absolutely faithful and few apologies have to be made for the sound: if the tutti violins are a bit thin, the piano is reproduced most faithfully.

(i) Piano Concertos 1–2. Ballades 1–4; Barcarolle; Fantasia in F min.; Impromptus 1–4 (Fantaisie-impromptu); Nocturnes 1–21; Preludes 1–28; Scherzos 1–4; Waltzes 1–19.

Ⓑ (*) Ph. (ADD) 468 391-2 (7). Arrau; (i) with LPO, Inbal

Arrau's survey was recorded over a decade in the 1970s. The two piano concertos came first and set the seal on his approach: immaculately aristocratic, but with personal touches of rubato which will not convince everybody. The Préludes followed in 1974, with each and every one bearing the imprint of a strong personality to which not all listeners respond. Yet these performances appear to spring from a strong inner conviction. The Ballades, too, are particularly impressive and, as always with the Philips recordings of this artist, there is unfailing beauty of tone. Some of the rubato Arrau adopts in the Nocturnes may again strike some listeners as a shade too personal, but his artistry is unique and he is eminently well served by the engineers.

Piano Concertos 1 in E min.; 2 in F min.

🔑 ❀ * MDG 340 1267-2. Zacharias, Lausanne CO

🔑 Ⓜ  RCA (ADD) SACD 82876 67902-2. Rubinstein, London New SO, Skrowaczewski, or Symphony of the Air, Wallenstein

Ⓜ  EMI 5 03412-2. Argerich, Montreal SO, Dutoit

(BB)  Regis RRC 1096. Tirimo, Philh. O, Glushchenko

Zacharias directs the Lausanne Chamber Orchestra from the keyboard, and the opening tuttis of both first movements have never been more commandingly full of life and grace. Zacharias finds new insights in both works and notably in the development section of the F minor Concerto. Both slow movements are magical and the finales sparkle, without putting virtuosity before musical values. The sound is well up to MDG standards. A disc to treasure.

Rubinstein's shaping of the main theme of the E minor Concerto is memorable and in the Larghetto his control of colour and rubato are inimitable. Again in the F minor Concerto, although the Carnegie Hall acoustic proved less than ideal, Rubinstein's contribution is an object lesson in the delicate playing of Chopin's poetic moments; his rubato is so natural that the music sounds as if it were extemporized and the new SACD transfer makes the very most of the sound.

In Martha Argerich's newest EMI coupling her pianism remains as mercurial and her virtuosity as incandescent as ever; indeed, she has rarely sounded as captivating or characterful. Charles Dutoit gets good playing from the Montreal Orchestra.

Martino Tirimo's readings often bring exquisite delicacy and they are totally without barnstorming, yet there is spontaneity in every bar, and both slow movements bring playing where one has an impression of musing reverie. In outer movements passagework is scintillatingly alive, and finales have a beguiling rhythmic lift.

Piano Concerto 1 in E min., Op. 11

🔑 * DG 477 640-2. Li, Philh. O, A. Davis – LISZT: Piano Concerto 1 ****

Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 449 719-2. Argerich, LSO, Abbado – LISZT: Concerto 1 ***

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550292. Székely, Budapest SO, Németh – LISZT: Concerto 1 **(*)

(i) Piano Concerto 1. Ballade 1; Nocturnes 4 & 5, Op. 15/1–2; 7, Op. 27/1; Polonaise 6, Op. 53

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 5 67548-2. Pollini, (i) Philh. O, Kletzki

(i) Piano Concerto 1. Berceuse; Fantaisie in F min., Op. 49; Fantaisie-impromptu

 DG 457 585-2. Pires, (i) COE, Krivine

Yundi Li won the Chopin Warsaw competition in 2000 when he was still a teenager. Thus he is in the lineage of Pollini, Argerich and Zimerman, and he lives up to it in this, his debut concerto disc. His playing is so fresh and natural and his virtuosity is worn so lightly.

Pollini's classic recording still remains among the best available of the E minor Concerto. This is playing of such total spontaneity, poetic feeling and refined judgement that criticism is silenced. The additional items come from Pollini's first EMI solo recital, and the playing is equally distinguished, the recording truthful.

Maria João Pires's concerns centre on the more inward-looking side of Chopin rather than its incandescence or brilliance, but this is a performance of substance and she is given eminently responsive support from the Chamber Orchestra of Europe and Emmanuel Krivine. The solo pieces are thoughtful, sensitive accounts and there are no quarrels with the DG recording.

With persuasive support from Abbado, Martha Argerich provides some lovely playing, especially in the slow movement. Perhaps in the passagework she is rather too intense, but this is far preferable to the rambling style we are sometimes offered.

Piano Concerto 2 in F min., Op. 21

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.110612. Cortot, O, Barbirolli – SCHUMANN: Concerto ()

(i) Piano Concerto 2. Ballades 1–4; Barcarolle, Op. 60; Berceuse (2 versions); Chants polonais (trans. Liszt); Etudes, Op. 10/1–12 (2 versions); Op. 25/1–12 (2 versions); Nouvelles études; Impromptus, Op. 29, 36; Nocturnes Op. 9/2; 15/1–2; 27/1; 55/1–2; 24 Preludes; Prelude in C sharp min., Op. 45; Piano Sonatas 2; 3; Waltzes 1–14

Ⓜ () EMI mono 7 67359-2 (6). Cortot, (i) with O, Barbirolli

Cortot, who recorded so much Chopin between the wars and for so many embodied the spirit of Chopin at that period, never committed the E minor Concerto to disc. The Second, recorded in 1935 at the Abbey Road Studios, sounds wonderfully fresh and is as individual as one would expect from this great artist. Mark Obert-Thorn gets a very good sound from the shellac originals.

Cortot's spontaneity, poetic feeling and keyboard refinement are also heard to prodigal effect on the six EMI CDs.

Les Sylphides (ballet; orch. Douglas)

🔑 ✿ Ⓑ * DG (ADD) 459 645-2 (2). BPO, Karajan (with DELIBES: Coppélia: suite; OFFENBACH: Gaîté parisienne: excerpts and music by GOUNOD; PONCHIELLI; TCHAIKOVSKY)

Karajan conjures consistently beautiful playing from the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, and he evokes a delicacy of texture which delights the ear throughout. The sound is full and atmospheric, and this is one of Karajan's very finest recordings. The couplings are hardly less impressive.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Cello Sonata in G min., Op. 65; Grand duo concertante in E on Themes from Meyerbeer's 'Robert le Diable'; Nocturne in C sharp min., Op. posth. (arr. Piatigorsky); Etudes: in E min., Op. 25/7; D min., Op. 10/6 (arr. Glazunov; ed. Feuermann); Waltz in A min., Op. 34/3 (arr. Ginsburg)

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553159. Kliegel, Glemser

Fresh and ardent performances of the Sonata and the remaining two pieces that comprise Chopin's complete output for cello and piano. These gifted and accomplished young artists are very well recorded indeed.

Cello Sonata, Op. 63. Etudes: Op. 10/3; Op.10/5 (trans. Glazunov). Op. 23/7; Introduction & Polonaise Brillante, Op. 3; Nocturnes: 16, Op. 35/2; 19, Op. 72/1 (arr. Mørk/Stott); 20, Op. posth. Preludes: 4 (arr. Mørk/Stott); 6. Waltz 3, Op. 14/2

 Virgin Classics 385784-2. Mørk, Stott

This collection of cello music centres on the two original cello works that Chopin wrote, one from either end of his career, the very early Introduction and Polonaise brillant, written when he was still in his teens, and the Cello Sonata, which was one of his last works, much influenced in its dark intensity by the break-up of his deep relationship with the novelist George Sand. It would be hard to imagine a more powerful account of the Sonata than this one from the superb Norwegian cellist, Truls Mørk, well matched by the pianist Kathryn Stott. There is similar rhythmic resilience in Mørk's performance of the Andante and Grande Polonaise brillante, with a delicious spring in the main polonaise theme, and with a thrilling speeding-up in the final coda. The cello transcriptions that make up the rest of the programme are also very effective. Most haunting is the Valse melancolique which the Waltz, Op, 14, No. 2 becomes. The recording helps, made in collaboration with Norwegian Radio in the warm acoustic of Ostre Fredikstad Church in Norway, which suggests a substantial scale in the cello sound.

Cello Sonata in G min., Op. 65

Ⓝ * Hyp. CDA 67624. Gerhardt, Osborne – ALKAN: Cello Sonata ***

Ⓑ  EMI Debut 3 59645-2. Harwood, Berner (with GLAZUNOV: Chant du Ménestral; POPPER: Elfentanz.; OFFENBACH: Les Larmes de Jacqueline ) – BEETHOVEN: Cello Sonata 3 ***

Ⓑ  EMI 5 74333-2 (2). Tortelier, Ciccolini – FAURÉ; MENDELSSOHN; RACHMANINOV: Cello Sonatas ***

A lovely, rapt, beautifully played and recorded account of Chopin's surprisingly complex Cello Sonata on Hyperion. Both soloist and accompanist seem to perform as one and both artists' immaculate phrasing amazes. The rare coupling makes this disc especially appealing and the sleeve notes by Kenneth Hamilton are fascinating.

Richard Harwood, one of the outstanding young cellists of his generation, gives a compelling reading of the Chopin Cello Sonata, bringing out the qualities which – perhaps surprisingly – link it with the Beethoven Sonata, which provides the principal coupling. His expressive rubato is never excessive, yet the warmth of the inspiration is carried over strongly, with incisive attack in the Allegros.

Tortelier's recordings of the Chopin and Rachmaninov Sonatas, which were made in the 1960s in the Salle Wagram, come up sounding fresh. They occupied a commanding position in the catalogue during the early 1970s, and rightly so!

Piano Trio in G min., Op. 8

(BB)  Warner Apex 0927 40822-2. Trio Fontenay – SMETANA: Piano Trio **

The Trio Fontenay give a vividly characterized and well-projected account of the Piano Trio, written when Chopin was 18 and not exactly one of his greatest works. Good, clear recording.

PIANO MUSIC

Vladimir Ashkenazy Chopin Edition

Albumblatt in E; Allegro de concert in A, Op. 46; Barcarolle; Berceuse; Boléro in A min., Op. 19; 2 Bourrées; Cantabile in B flat; Fugue in A min.; Galop marquis; Hexameron: Variation in E min.; Largo in E flat; 3 Nouvelles études; Rondo in E flat, Op. 16; Souvenir de Paganini; Tarantelle in A flat, Op. 43; Variations brillantes in B flat, Op. 12; Wiosna (Spring) from Op. 74/2. Ballades 1–4; Scherzi 1–4. 12 Etudes, Op. 10; 12 Etudes, Op. 25. Impromptus 1–3; 4 (Fantaisie-impromptu). 24 Preludes, Op. 28; Preludes: in C sharp min., Op. 45; in A flat. Mazurkas 1–29; 30–68 (including 2 versions of Op. 68/4). Nocturnes 1–12; 13–21. Polonaises 1–6; 7, Polonaise-fantaisie; 8–16. Sonatas 1–3; Contredanse in G flat; 3 Ecossaises; Marche funèbre in C min., Op. 72/2; Rondos: in C min., Op. 1; à la Mazur in F, Op. 5; in C, Op. 73; Variations on a German National Air; Variations in D (for piano duet – with Vovka Ashkenazy). Sonatas; Fantaisie in F min. Waltzes 1–19

Ⓑ  Decca (ADD/DDD) 443 738-2 (13)

Ashkenazy made his Chopin recordings for Decca over a decade from 1974 to 1984, using seven different locations, yet the recorded sound is remarkably consistent, always natural in colour and balance and with a good presence, whether from an analogue or a digital source. Consistently persuasive, these readings combine poetry with flair and (as in the Ballades) often bring a highly communicated warmth. The bravura brings genuine panache, whether in the large-scale, virtuoso pieces like the Scherzi or in the chimerical approach to a miniature like the Souvenir de Paganini. At bargain price this set makes an unbeatable investment.

Allegro de concert, Op. 46; Etudes, Opp. 10 & 25; 3 Nouvelles Etudes

Ⓜ () EMI (mono) 3 79888-2. Arrau

Immaculately cultured playing distinguishes these celebrated 1956 recordings which well deserve their legendary status. Remarkably fresh sound.

Andante spianato & Grande Polonaise brillante, Op. 22; Ballades 1–4; Mazurkas, Op. 24/2; Op. 56/3; Op.

59/1–3; 3 Nouvelles Etudes; Nocturne in B, Op. 62/1; Polonaise fantaisie, Op. 61; Scherzos 1–3

Ⓜ  RCA 82876 72554-2 (2). Ax

Emanuel Ax is much less well-known in England than he is in the USA, where he has the highest reputation, especially in the music of Chopin. This two-disc recital shows why. Although recorded at different times, between 1975 and 1987, and at different venues, the playing has the vibrant projection of a live recital, with a consistent flow of spontaneous feeling, only very occasionally affected by touches of self-consciousness. The recording is at times a little hard, but the piano is given striking presence and realism.

Andante spianato & Grande Polonaise brilliante; Barcarolle in F sharp; Berceuse in D flat; Nocturnes 1–19; Scherzi 1–4; Waltz in A flat, Op. 34/1

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ () EMI (mono) 5 09668-2 (2). Rubinstein

Just as Rubinstein's later RCA stereo set of Nocturnes have (temporarily, we hope) vanished from the British catalogue, EMI have chosen to reissue some of his earlier Chopin recordings, made between 1928 and 1937, as (rightly) one of their 'Great Recordings of the Century'. They are indeed the lynchpin of the recorded Chopin repertoire and many of these performances have not been equalled or surpassed, even by Rubinstein himself. The current remastering by Andrew Walter has removed almost all the background noise, and the mono piano recording is miraculously real and vivid.

(i) Andante spianato & Grande Polonaise brillante; (ii) Polonaises 1–7; (iii) 3 Polonaises, Op. 71; 6 Polonaises, Op. posth.; Album Leaf in E; 2 Bourrées; Cantabile in B flat; Fugue in A min.; Galop marquis in A flat; Largo in E flat

Ⓜ  DG (DDD/ADD) 2-CD 477 5430 (2). (i) Argerich; (ii) Pollini; (iii) Ugorski

This is a straight reissue of Volume 5 from DG's Chopin Edition. Pollini offers magisterial playing, in some ways more commanding than Rubinstein (and better recorded) though not more memorable. Argerich's Andante spianato (1974) is everything it should be: wonderfully relaxed to start with and extrovertly sparkling in the Grande Polonaise. Ugorski fills in the gaps with some of Chopin's early works: interesting to hear, sometimes entertaining, but containing only glimpses of the greatness that was to emerge. Excellent value.

Ballades 1–4, Op. 23; Op. 38; Op. 47; & Op. 52; Barcarolle, Op. 60; Fantasia, Op. 49; Scherzo 2 B flat min., Op. 31; Nocturne F sharp, Op. 15/2

Ⓝ  DG DVD 40 073 4449. Krystian Zimerman – SCHUBERT: 4 Impromptus, D. 899 ***

Krystian Zimerman's pianism has exceptional control and tonal subtlety and his account of the Ballades has an aristocratic polish and an authority that silences criticism. Flawless playing which to quote Jeremy Siepman, 'never courts the listener with effects'. The recital comes from February 1987 and is directed by Humphrey Burton and Horant Holfelt without recourse to any eccentric camera angles or other visual gimmicks that detract from the musical effects. They are unafraid to leave the camera angle in the same place for as long as the eye requires. The sound has clarity and presence. The Schubert Impromptus are every bit as distinguished as the Chopin.

Ballades 1–4; Barcarolle; Fantaisie in F min.

🔑  DG 423 090-2. Zimerman

Ballades 1–4; Nocturnes 1–21 (complete)

Ⓑ  Double Decca (ADD) 452 579-2 (2). Ashkenazy

Ballades 1–4; Scherzi 1–4

🔑 Ⓜ  RCA SACD (ADD) 82876 61396-2. Rubinstein

 Hyp. CDA 67456. Hough

Ballades 1–4; Scherzi 1–4; Prelude, Op. 45

🔑 Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 466 499-2. Ashkenazy

Krystian Zimerman's impressive set of the Ballades and the other two works on this disc are touched by distinction throughout and have spontaneity as well as tremendous concentration to commend them, and the modern digital recording is of fine DG quality.

However, Rubinstein's readings are unique and the digital remastering has been highly successful. The performances of the Ballades are a miracle of creative imagination, with Rubinstein at his most inspired. The Scherzi, which gain most of all from the improved sound (they were originally very dry), are both powerful and charismatic, and the recording is further enhanced on SACD.

Among present-day pianists, Stephen Hough has not only the keyboard virtuosity but also the vision and poetic insight this music calls for. His playing serves as a reminder of just what an original master Chopin was and how vital was his genius. One of the best modern versions of either sets of pieces.

Ashkenazy's readings of the Ballades are thoughtful and essentially unflashy; the rubato arises naturally from his personal approach to the music. The intimacy of the recording allows him to share this with the listener. The recording is admirably natural and satisfying. The Nocturnes were recorded over a decade, from 1975 to 1984. The playing is splendidly imaginative and atmospheric.

Those wanting the alternative coupling with the Scherzi will find the reissue in Decca's 'Legends' series equally attractive. In the Scherzi the playing is chimerically dazzling, and the isolated Op. 45 C sharp minor Prelude, a pianistic tone-poem in its own right, makes an ideal interlude before the B minor Scherzo bursts in on the listener. Very good recording, particularly impressive in the Scherzi, which have a fine depth of sonority.

Berceuse; Fantaisie in F min.; Scherzi 1–4

 Chan. 9018. Shelley

Howard Shelley has the advantage of a sympathetic recording. But there is freshness and tenderness about his approach and, though he is obviously totally inside this music, he manages to convey the feeling that he is discovering it for the first time.

(i) Berceuse in D flat, Op. 57; (ii) Cantabile in B flat; Contredanse in G flat; (iii) Etudes, Op. 10/1–10; Op. 25/1–10; (iv) 3 Nouvelles Etudes; (v) Impromptus 1–3; Fantaisie impromptu, Op. 66; 19 Waltzes

(BB)  EMI Gemini (ADD/DDD) 3 50874-2 (2). (i) Barenboim; (ii) Barto; (iii) Gavrilov; (iv) Laval; (v) Anievas

Gavrilov's Etudes bring an exuberant virtuosity that it is impossible to resist, even if some of the tempi are breathtakingly fast. Yet the sustained legato of the famous 3 in E major is lovely, and Gavrilov's poetic feeling, both here and in 6 in E flat minor, is indisputable. For the three Nouvelles Etudes EMI turn to Danielle Laval, who is less extrovert than Gavrilov but no less convincing.

Anievas gives us all the Waltzes. His playing is quite different from Gavrilov's and has a mellower, beautiful, analogue piano recording to match. Yet his technique is absolutely secure, and there is much to enjoy. He is also very successful in characterizing the three Impromptus, and the Fantaisie-impromptu (which is used to open the second disc) certainly does not lack panache. The two miniatures, Cantabile and the Contredanse in G flat, which come at the end of the recital, are inconsequential, but Tzimon Barto brings out their guileless charm, and the second disc ends with a simple, poetic account of the lovely Berceuse from Daniel Barenboim, very naturally recorded.

24 Etudes, Op. 10 & Op. 25

Ⓝ Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 478 0350 Ashkenazy

Etudes, Op. 10/1–12; Op. 25/1–12; 3 Nouvelles études

🔑 ✿ * Erato 8573-80228-2 (2). Lugansky

🔑 (BB)  Warner Apex 8573 89083-2. Berezovsky

 Chan. 8482. Lortie

Etudes, Op. 10/1–12; Op. 25/1–12; Impromptus 1–3; Fantaisie-impromptu

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ  Sony SK61885. Perahia

 DG (ADD) 413 794-2. Pollini (Études only)

Etudes, Op. 10/1–12; Op. 25/1–12; Fantaisie in F min., Op. 49; Sonatas 1–3

🔑 (BB)  Double Decca (ADD) 466 250-2 (2). Ashkenazy

Murray Perahia's expressive range, variety of keyboard colour and musical imagination are of exceptional quality. His virtuosity is totally self-effacing, so that the listener's engagement with Chopin's world is complete. The value of the set is further enhanced by the outstanding quality of the recorded sound.

Nikolai Lugansky produces a beautiful sound at every dynamic and is unconcerned with showmanship or high-voltage display. He is a real artist with consummate delicacy of fingerwork and fluidity of phrasing. A most distinguished and valuable recording.

Ashkenazy recorded his Chopin survey as far as possible in chronological order. The sets of Etudes from 1975 offer playing of total mastery and are also available separately (478 0 350). The C minor Sonata (No. 1) is an early work (1827) and not deeply characteristic. Ashkenazy's account (1976) enjoys classic status. His 1980 performance of the Funeral March Sonata (No. 2) is no less dazzling than his earlier live recording of 1972 and in some respects surpasses it. It has wonderful panache. The B minor Sonata, recorded a year later, is also memorable and involving. An authoritative account of the F minor Fantasy provides an excellent makeweight in very realistic sound.

Marvellous playing, too, from the 23-year-old Boris Berezovsky in 1991. Just try the dazzling Op. 10/2 or the gentle poetry of the famous E major Etude which follows, while the three final Studies of Op. 25 show his wide range of dynamic, natural sensitivity and compelling power. In short this is a thrilling disc, and would be highly recommendable even if it cost far more.

Louis Lortie's set of the 24 Etudes can also hold its own with the best. His playing has a strong poetic feeling and an effortless virtuosity. He is beautifully recorded at The Maltings, Snape (the acoustics of which occasionally cloud the texture).

Pollini's record comes from 1975 and sounds splendidly fresh in its digitally remastered form. These are vividly characterized accounts, masterly and with the sound eminently present, although not as full in sonority as the more recent versions.

(i) Études, Opp. 10 & 25; (ii) 24 Preludes, Op. 28; (iii) Sonata 2 in B flat min., Op. 35

 BBC/Opus Arte DVD OA 0893 D. (i) Freddy Kempf; (ii) Perl; (iii) Hewitt

The Preludes were recorded by Alfredo Perl in Hopetoun House, Edinburgh, Kempf's Etudes in France at Château de Neuville, Gambais, and Angela Hewitt's Op. 35 at Wimbledon Theatre. In all three instances the performances are of quality and are free from any intrusive idiosyncrasies. Moreover, the camerawork in each location is of the old school, never fussy or wanting to draw attention to itself, but managed with discretion and taste. This DVD is very modestly priced, given the amount of music offered, and will give much pleasure.

Etudes, Op. 10/6; Op. 25/3–4, 10–11; 4 Mazurkas, Op. 17; Piano Sonata 3 in B min., Op. 58

Ⓑ  Virgin 4 82120-2. Andsnes

Andsnes proves as impressive an interpreter of Chopin as he is of Grieg, and here he has the advantage of state-of-the-art piano-sound. The programme here is arbitrary, but every piece is illuminatingly played.

Etudes, Op. 25/1–12; 24 Preludes, Op.28; Sonata 2 in B flat min., Op. 35 (Funeral March)

 Opus 111 OP 30-289 (2). Sokolov

Grigory Sokolov's electrifying playing of the Etudes, Op. 25, and of the Second Piano Sonata is something of a must: he is a virtuoso whose technique is matched by real insight.

Fantasy in F min., Op. 49; Piano Sonata 3, Op. 38

Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 5 62884-2. Arrau (with MENDELSSOHN: Andante and Rondo capriccioso; WEBER: Konzertstück)

Arrau was on his finest form in 1960 when he recorded the B minor Sonata and the forthright reading of the Fantasy in F minor. In the Sonata he evokes a dreamy quality in the quieter music – the Largo is especially beautiful – yet he can find plenty of vigour for stronger writing. This is a very fine performance indeed and he is very seductive in the delightful fairy world of Mendelssohn's Andante and Rondo capriccioso, an excellent mono recording from 1951.

Mazurkas 1–59, Op. 6/1–4; Op. 7/1–5; Op. 17/1–4; Op. 24/1–4; Op. 30/1–4; Op. 33/1–4; Op. 41/1–4; Op. 50/1–3; Op. 56/1–3; Op. 59/1–3; Op. 63/1–3; Op. 67/1–4; Op. 68/1–4 & Op. 68/4 (revised version); 60–68, Op. posth.

🔑 Ⓑ  Double Decca DDD/ADD 448 086-2 (2). Ashkenazy

As can be seen, Ashkenazy's survey of Chopin's Mazurkas is the most comprehensive available. They are finely articulated, aristocratic accounts and he includes all the posthumously published Mazurkas. The Decca recordings (often digital) are more modern and more natural than that afforded to Rubinstein.

Nocturnes 1–21

🔑  DG 447 096-2 (2). Pires

(BB)  Arte Nova 74321 82185-2 (2). Castro

Ⓑ  DG 453 022-2 (2). Barenboim

Nocturnes 1–21; Barcarolle; Fantaisie in F min.

Ⓜ  Ph. (ADD) 464 694-2 (2). Arrau

Nocturnes 1–21; Impromptus 1–3, 4 (Fantaisie-impromptu)

 Hyp. CDA 67371/2. Hewitt

Pires gives performances of great character, her playing often bold as well as meltingly romantic and brings the right poetic feel to this music. Hers is the art that conceals art, and that serves the composer to perfection. She uses the widest dynamic range and is recorded with a brilliant presence as well as a basically warm sonority. A well chosen selection is also available (477 7583).

Angela Hewitt is so established in the public consciousness as an eminent Bach interpreter that the idea of her playing anything else seems as unlikely as it was with Rosalyn Tureck. This Chopin is no less authentic in feeling and magisterial in accomplishment. A very satisfying collection and beautifully recorded too.

Ricardo Castro offers a series of performances to compete with almost any in the catalogue. The degree of concentration and thoughtful simplicity of approach is consistent throughout both discs, his nuancing and rubato managed with convincing spontaneity. The recording, made in two quite different venues, is of high quality, clear and natural.

Barenboim recorded the Nocturnes in 1981 and he was very beautifully recorded. Phrasing is beautifully moulded, seemingly spontaneous, thoughtful and poetic, and becoming really impetuous only in the music's more passionate moments.

Arrau's approach creates tonal warmth coupled with inner tensions of the kind one expects in Beethoven and this is a very compelling cycle, full of poetry, the rubato showing an individual but very communicable sensibility. Although Arrau's Chopin is seldom mercurial, it is never inflexible, and it has its own special insights.

Nocturnes 1–21; 24 Preludes, Op. 28; Preludes 25–6

(BB) (*) EMI Gemini (ADD) 5 86507-2 (2). Ohlsson

Garrick Ohlsson recorded the Polonaises, then the Preludes (in 1974), and between 1977 and 1979 the Nocturnes, all at Abbey Road. He is thoughtful and often engagingly poetic. He is always at the service of the composer and is seldom wilful. The penultimate Prelude in C sharp minor, Op. 45, is particularly beautiful; then he throws off the brief, posthumous A flat work to make a neat conclusion. He is at his very best in the Nocturnes, played with pleasing flexibility and control of colour, the rubato spontaneous and nicely judged. He is well recorded, with the sound in the Nocturnes often very good indeed.

Nocturnes 1–19; Scherzi 1–4

(BB) ((*)) Naxos mono 8.110659/60. Rubinstein

The Naxos transfers are of Rubinstein's London recordings made at Abbey Road in 1932 (the Scherzi) and 1937 (the Nocturnes). They are transferred from 78-r.p.m. originals (in excellent condition) by Stuart Rosenthal, with some backgound noise still present at times. One also feels that in the Nocturnes a little more space could have been allowed between each piece. But although the sound is less impressive, not as wide-ranging as EMI's own transfers, this is fair value at the Naxos price.

Nocturnes in E flat, Op. 9/2; F, F sharp & G min., Op. 15/1–3; C sharp min., Op. 27/1; B, Op. 32/1; G, G min., Op. 37/1–2; C min., F sharp min., Op. 48/1–2; F min., Op. 55; E, Op. 62/2; E min., Op. 72/1 (posth.)

Ⓜ  DG Entrée 471 743-2. Barenboim

This well-chosen collection of 13 Nocturnes drawn from Barenboim's 1980 complete survey is eminently recommendable. But Ricardo Castro offers all 21 on Arte Nova – see above – for the same cost, and his admirably recorded performances are every bit as enticing as these.

Polonaises 1–16, Op. 26/1–2; Op. 40/1–2; Op. 44; Op. 53; Polonaise-fantaisie, Op. 61; Op. 71/1–3; Op. posth./1–6. Albumblatt; Allegro de concert, Op. 46;

Barcarolle; Berceuse; 2 Bourrées; 3 Nouvelles études; Fugue in A min.; Galop marquis; Tarantelle in A flat; Wiosna (arr. from Op. 74/2)

🔑 Ⓑ  Double Decca ADD/DDD 452 167-2 (2). Ashkenazy

Polonaises 1–7; Andante spianato et Grande Polonaise brillante

🔑 Ⓜ  RCA (ADD) 09026 63048-2. Rubinstein

🔑  DG SACD 471 648-2; Ⓜ CD 457 711-2. Pollini

Ashkenazy's performances of the Polonaises are of the highest calibre and the recording is of Decca's best. The second CD contains some items that are quite short (the piano transcription of Chopin's song Wiosna lasts for barely a minute, but it is very fetching). But there are substantial works too: the Barcarolle and Berceuse, the latter meltingly done, and the Allegro de concert and Nouvelles études also show Ashkenazy at his finest. At Double Decca price this pair of CDs is self-recommending.

Master pianist that he was, Rubinstein seems actually to be rethinking and re-creating each piece, even the hackneyed Military and A flat works, at the very moment of performance in this recording, made in Carnegie Hall. His easy majesty and natural sense of spontaneous phrasing give this collection a special place in the catalogue, and the Andante spianato and Grande Polonaise obviously inspire him.

Pollini's set offers playing of outstanding mastery as well as subtle poetry, and the DG engineers have made a satisfactory job of the new transfer, although the hardness on top remains something to which the ear must adjust.

24 Preludes, Op. 28; Ballades 1 G min. Op. 23; 2 F, Op. 38; 3 A flat, Op. 47; 4 F min., Op. 52. Fantaisie-impromptu in C sharp min., Op. 66

Ⓝ (BB) () Naxos mono 8.111118 Moiseiwitsch

24 Preludes, Op. 28; Preludes 25–26; Scherzi 1–4; Waltzes 1–19

🔑 Ⓑ  Double Decca (ADD) 460 991-2 (2). Ashkenazy

24 Preludes, Op. 28; Prelude in C sharp min., Op. 45. Andante spianato et Grande Polonaise, Op. 22; Polonaise-fantaisie in A flat, Op. 61

🔑  Chan. 9597. Lortie

24 Preludes, Op. 28; Scherzi 1–4

 Naim NAIMCD 028. Gimse

26 Preludes; Berceuse in D flat; Polonaise-fantaisie, Op. 61; Souvenir de Paganini; Introduction & Variations on a theme from Herold's Ludovic

Ⓝ Ⓑ  CfP (ADD) 5 21849-2 Barenboim

Ashkenazy's 1979 set of the Preludes combines drama and power with finesse and much poetic delicacy when called for. The Waltzes were recorded over the best part of a decade. There is an impressive feeling for line throughout, an ability to make each waltz seem spontaneous and yet as carefully wrought as a tone-poem. The Scherzi have characteristic panache, the playing imbued with imaginative insights and spontaneity. Again excellent recording.

Louis Lortie's expertly recorded account of the Preludes is among the best we have had in recent years. He has poetic feeling, character and finesse in equal measure. Not all his interpretative decisions will convince everyone, but on the whole this is enjoyable and distinguished Chopin playing.

Håvard Gimse is a cultured player whose talent is primarily lyrical. He is at his best in the self-communing, poetic side of these wonderful pieces but there is no want of fire, though perhaps more could be made of the dramatic and dynamic contrasts in the B minor Scherzo. The Sofienberg Church in Oslo offers an excellent acoustic and the recording is pleasingly natural.

Moiseiwitsch's Chopin was issued on plum-label 78 rpm discs but there is nothing here that is anything other than top-drawer. The Preludes were recorded in 1948–9 and the first three Ballades in 1939 and the last in 1948. The Fantaisie-impromptu which he often programmed, comes from 1952. Ward Marston gets exemplary results and gets freshness and colour into the sound. There are excellent and well-researched notes by Jonathan Summers, a model of their kind. Not to be missed.

Recorded in 1976, Barenboim's account of the Preludes is thoroughly satisfying, even if it does not quite match Ashkenzay or Lortie, and the two rarities which complete the disc are sparklingly played. Excellent value

Scherzi 1–4; Introduction & Variations on a German Air; Variations on 'Là ci darem la mano', Op. 2

(BB) (*) Hyp. Helios CDH 55181. Demidenko

Nikolai Demidenko plays with magisterial keyboard authority and command of colour. There are narcissistic and idiosyncratic touches to which not all listeners will respond; all the same, there is still much that will (and does) give pleasure.

Scherzi 1–4; Preludes; Op. 28/2; 4–10; 11; 19; 21 & 23

🔑 ❀ (BB) * Regis RRC 119. Sviatoslav Richter

This Regis coupling derives from two separate Richter recitals of 1977 and 1979, originally published by Olympia. There is some marvellous playing in the Préludes. These obviously derive from a public concert, as there is applause at the end. He is distinctly ruminative and wayward at times, but always poetically so. As for the Scherzi, they are inspired: there are no more imaginatively spontaneous performances in the catalogue. Everywhere there are fresh insights that seize the listener by the ear, none more frisson-creating than the centrepiece of the Third Scherzo, when simple chords are answered by a magical filigree in the right hand. This is Chopin playing of a truly remarkable calibre, and fortunately the remastering by Paul Arden-Taylor is of a high order: the piano quality is very real, full and immediate.

Scherzi 1–4; Piano Sonata 2 (Funeral March)

🔑 Ⓜ * EMI 5 18171-2. Trpceski

The brilliant young Macedonian pianist Simon Trpceski offers dazzling performances of the Second Sonata as well as all four of Chopin's Scherzos, adopting extreme speeds which may initially seem too hectic but which, thanks to the pianist's virtuosity and his charismatic presence, are most compelling. His feeling for rubato is natural and spontaneous-sounding, in performances which consistently convey the sense of live communication. Excellent sound.

Piano Sonatas 1 in C min., Op. 4; 2 in B flat min. (Funeral March), Op. 35; 3 in B min., Op. 58

Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 448 123-2. Ashkenazy

Ashkenazy's accounts enjoy classic status, and they are certainly well recorded, with very vivid sound. They are also available as part of a Double Decca combined with the Etudes and Fantasy in F minor – see above.

Piano Sonata 2 in B flat min., Op. 35

Ⓜ  DG 463 678-2. Pogorelich – PROKOFIEV: Sonata 6; RAVEL: Gaspard ***✿

() Testament mono SBT 1089. Gilels – MOZART: Sonata 17; SHOSTAKOVICH: Preludes & Fugues 1, 5 & 24 ()

Ivo Pogorelich possesses an outsize personality and a keen awareness of colour. He is a commanding artist of undoubted charisma, and his playing has temperament and fire in abundance. There are many wilful touches here and some agogic mannerisms that will not have universal appeal. All the same, these are performances to be reckoned with, and he went on a year later to record the outstanding Prokofiev and Ravel couplings. Here the balance is close and probably does not do full justice to the quality of his pianissimo tone, which nevertheless sounds remarkable.

Gilels's account of the B flat minor Sonata was recorded in New York and first appeared in 1984. The passage of time has not dimmed its classic status or its poetic intensity and, although some allowances have to be made for the recorded sound, they are few.

Piano Sonatas 2 in B flat min. (Funeral March); 3

 DG (ADD) 415 346-2. Pollini

Pollini's performances are commanding; his mastery of mood and structure gives these much-played Sonatas added stature. The slow movement of Op. 35 has both drama and atmosphere, so that the contrast of the magical central section is all the more telling. Both works are played with distinction, but the balance is just a shade close.

Piano Sonata 2 in B flat min., Op. 35; Fantaisie-impromptu, Op. 66; Polonaises 3 in A, Op. 30/1; 5 in F sharp min., Op. 44; 6 in A flat, Op. 53; 7 (Polonaise-fantaisie), Op. 61; Scherzo 1 in B min., Op. 20

🔑  Sony (ADD) 82876 78769-2. Horowitz

A stunning recital by any standards, assembled from various CBS/Sony collections recorded over a decade between 1962 and 1972, when the great pianist was still at the very peak of his form. The playing is dazzling; its virtuosity is enormously refreshing and is illuminated by the sense of poetry and fine musical judgement that Horowitz so abundantly commanded. The Fantaisie-impromptu was recorded at a Carnegie Hall recital, the rest in the studio.

Piano Sonata 3; Barcarolle; Impromptus 1–3; Fantaisie-impromptu

 Chan. 9175. Shelley

Piano Sonata 3; Mazurkas: in A min., Op. 17/4; in B flat min., Op. 24/4; in D flat, Op. 30/3; in D, Op. 33/2; in G; in C sharp min., Op. 50/ 1 & 3; in C, Op. 56/2; in F sharp min., Op. 59/3; in B; in F min.; in C sharp min., Op. 63/1–3; in F min., Op. 68/4

🔑  RCA 09026 62542-2. Kissin

Piano Sonata 3; Prelude in C sharp min., Op. 45; Scherzo 4 in E, Op. 54

() BBC mono/stereo BBCL 4138-2. Perlemuter

Evgeny Kissin plays not only with an effortless mastery but with a naturalness and freshness that silence criticism. His sense of poetry and his idiomatic rubato are combined with impressive technical address and impeccable taste.

An outstanding Chopin recital from Howard Shelley, whose interpretative powers continue to grow in stature. His playing has poetic feeling and ardent but well-controlled temperament. Very good sound.

Considering his standing in the musical world, Vlado Perlemuter made relatively few commercial recordings. The Sonata comes from a 1964 recital and is mono, while the E major Scherzo and the Prelude (both stereo) are from the early 1970s, when Perlemuter was already in his late sixties. There is some wonderfully perceptive music-making here and the musical importance of this disc is enhanced by exceptionally good notes by Jeremy Siepmann. Strongly recommended.

Waltzes 1–14; Impromptus 1–4 (Fantasie-impromptu)

🔑 Ⓜ  RCA (ADD) 82876 59422-2. Rubinstein

Waltzes 1–14; Barcarolle; Mazurka in C sharp min., Op. 50/3; Nocturne in D flat, Op. 27/2

✿ Ⓜ () EMI mono 5 66904-2. Lipatti

Rubinstein's performances of the Waltzes have a chiselled perfection, suggesting the metaphor of finely cut and polished diamonds, and his clear and relaxed accounts of the Impromptus make most other interpretations sound forced by comparison. The digital remastering has softened the edges of the sound-image, and there is an illusion of added warmth.

Dinu Lipatti's classic performances were recorded by Walter Legge in the rather dry acoustic of a Swiss Radio studio at Geneva in the last year of Lipatti's short life, and with each CD reincarnation they seem to have grown in wisdom and subtlety.

RECITAL COLLECTIONS

Andante spianato et Grande Polonaise brillante, Op. 22; Ballade 1 in G min., Op. 23; Berceuse in D flat, Op. 57; Fantasia in F min., Op. 49; Mazurkas: in D flat, Op. 30/3; in B min., Op. 33/4; in A min., Op. 68/2; Scherzo 2 in B flat min., Op. 31; Sonata 2 in B flat min., Op. 35; Waltzes: in A flat, Op. 34/1; in A flat, Op. 69/1; in E flat, Op. posth.

Ⓝ  Opus Arte DVD OA6904 D. Michelangeli

This is in black-and-white, taking from a live 1962 RAI recital in Turin, the colour being provided by the playing! Michelangeli is, as always, aloof and totally absorbed in his music making. But with immaculate pianism and compelling artistry, this casts a strong spell.

Allegro de Concert in A, Op. 46; Berceuse in D flat, Op. 57; Boléro in A min., Op. 19; 6 Polonaises, Op. posth.; Tarantella in A flat, Op. 43

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55183. Demidenko

Most of these pieces are early works: the Polonaises in G minor and B flat major (with which he frames the recital) date from 1817, that in G sharp minor from 1822, the G flat major from 1829 and the Boléro from 1833, while the Allegro de Concert and Tarantella were composed at the beginning of the 1840s. The two masterpieces, the Berceuse and Polonaise-fantasy (both superbly played) date from 1843–4 and 1846; so here Nikolai Demidenko demonstrates Chopin's progress from youthful precociousness to genius. Yet he plays the earliest pieces with such winning affection and idiomatic feeling.

Andante spianato et Grande Polonaise brillante; Fantaisie-impromptu; 3 Mazurkas, Op. 59; Nocturne in E flat, Op. 9/2; Piano Sonata 3

🔑  EMI 5 57702-2. Lim

Dong-Hyek Lim's range of colour and command of dynamic nuance are masterly and he has a strong and individual musical personality. Apart from his effortless technical fluency, he brings a rich poetic imagination to this music and, in the Sonata, no mean command of structure. This signals the arrival of an outstanding and exciting pianistic talent. EMI give him an excellent and very natural recording.

Ballades 1 & 4; Barcarolle; Etudes: Op. 10/5; Op. 25/7; Nocturnes: Op. 9/2–3; Op. 15/1; Op. 27/1; Polonaise-fantaisie; Waltz in A flat, Op. 16/1

(BB)  RCA stereo/mono 74321 68008-2. Horowitz

All these performances derive from live recitals. The Nocturnes (in E flat major, Op. 23/2, and C sharp minor Etude, Op. 25/7) are in excellent mono from 1957, with the rest coming from between 1979 and 1982. The performances are fabulous; to the end of his career Horowitz's technique was transcendental and his insights remarkable. There is much excitement, but even more that is unforgettably poetic, and not a bar that is predictable. With the sound so realistic, his presence is very tangible.

Ballade 1; Mazurkas: 19 in B min., 20 in D flat, Op. 30/2–3; 22 in G sharp min., 25 in B min., Op. 33/1 & 4; 34 in C, Op. 56/2; 43 in G min., 45 in A min., Op. 67/2 & 4; 46 in C; 47 in A min., 49 in F min., Op. 68/1–2 & 4; Prelude 25 in C sharp min., Op. 45; Scherzo 2

(*) DG (ADD) 477 7563. Michelangeli

Although this recital somehow does not quite add up as a whole, the performances are highly distinguished. Michelangeli's individuality comes out especially in the Ballade and is again felt in the Mazurkas, which show a wide range of mood and dynamic. The Scherzo is extremely brilliant, yet without any suggestion of superficiality. The piano tone is real and lifelike.

Ballade 2 in F, Op. 38; Impromptu 2 in F sharp, Op. 36; 4 Mazurkas, Op. 33; Sonata 2 in B flat min. (Funeral March), Op. 35; 3 Waltzes, Op. 34

Ⓝ * DG 477 7626 Pollini

Pollini recorded this outstanding studio recital in the Munich Herculessaal in 2008. The playing is dazzling and poetic by turns, astonishingly live and spontaneous as if an audience were present which it is not. Chopin-playing of a very high calibre indeed. Not to be missed.

Ballade 3 A flat, Op. 47; Sonata 2 (Funeral March), Op. 35; Nocturne E flat, Op. 9/2; Waltzes in C sharp min., Op. 64/2; A flat, Op. 64/3; E min., Op. posth. Chants polonais 1 & 6* (arr. LISZT)

Ⓝ (BB) () Naxos mono 8.112020. Rachmaninov – SCHUMANN: Carnaval, Op. 9; Spanisches Liederspiel ()

Most of this repertoire was recorded in the mid-to-late 1920s (the Spanisches Liederspiel and the Chants polonais come from 1942, the year before Rachmaninov's death). Ward Marston produces very fine results in his transfers and brings presence to these unique performances.

Ballades 3–4; Mazurkas 1–3, Op. 59/1–3; Op. 63; in F min., Op. 68/4; Polonaises 5 in F sharp min., Op. 44; 6 in A flat

🔑  Virgin 5 45620-2. Anderszewski

Piotr Anderszewski's Chopin recital along with Dong-Hyek Lim's recital discussed above has the right blend of sensibility and poetic feeling with classical finesse. Anderszewski is obviously an artist of quality, whose Chopin has a sense of real flair and vision as well as splendid control.

Ballade 3; Barcarolle; Berceuse; Etudes 13 in A flat; 21 in G flat, Op. 25/1 & 9; Fantaisie in F min.; Impromptu 1 in A flat; Mazurka 13 in A min., Op. 17/4; Nocturnes 5 in F sharp min., Op. 15/2; 20 in C sharp min., Op. posth.; Preludes: in A flat & C min., Op. 28/17 & 20; Scherzo 2 in B flat min., Op. 31; Waltzes 5 in A flat, Op. 42; 14 in E min. (op. posth.)

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.555799. Idil Biret

Idil Biret's impetuosity and brilliance both combine to make the E minor Waltz which opens this recital arresting in its bravura, but she plays with both character and poetry in the Barcarolle and the two Ballades, while the Berceuse has a touching simplicity worthy of a young pupil of Wilhelm Kempff ('Uncle Kempff' as she called him). Indeed, overall this admirably planned recital demonstrates what a natural feeling Biret has for Chopin. The recording is excellent, with a real sense of presence.

Ballade 4; Berceuse; Etudes: Opp. 10/3, 8 & 9; 25/1–3; Fantaisie in F min.; Mazurka in A min., Op. 68/2; Nocturne: in E flat, Op. 9/2; D flat, Op. 27/2; Polonaise in A, Op. 40/1; A flat, Op. 53; Waltzes: in A flat, Op. 42; E min., Op. posth.

((*)) Testament mono SBT 1030. Solomon

This anthology affords ample proof of Solomon's power to distil magic in pretty well whatever composer he touched. Most of these 78-r.p.m. recordings were made between 1942 and 1946; the F minor Fantaisie is pre-war (1932), a wonderfully searching account, and the sheer delicacy and poetry of the playing shine through the often frail recorded sound. Good transfers.

Barcarolle in F sharp min., Op. 60; Berceuse in D flat, Op. 57; 2 Nocturnes, Op. 27; Piano Sonatas 2 (Funeral March) & 3

Ⓝ  Hyp. CDA 67706 Hamelin

Marc-André Hamelin's opening Berceuse is appealingly gentle, and the pair of Nocturnes are beautifully played, particularly the D flat. The Barcarolle finds a well-judged balance between poetry and intensity of feeling. Both Sonatas are bold, direct interpretations, with the Marche funèbre felt but gently withdrawn. There is some dazzling playing in the Presto finale of No. 2 and in the Scherzo and Finale of No. 3. If sometimes one feels Hamelin presses a little hard, as in the opening movement of the B flat minor Sonata, overall the readings of the Sonatas are very impressive, as is the recording.

Barcarolle. Op. 60; Etudes Op. 10/4 & 5; Op. 25/1 & 5; Impromptu in G flat, Op.51; Sonata 2 (Funeral March) Polonaises in A flat, Op. 53; in F sharp min., Op. 64; Waltz in A min., Op. 34/2

Ⓝ () Medici Arts DVD 3078458 Artur Rubinstein (with DEBUSSY: Ondine; SCHUMANN: Des Abends; VILLA-LOBOS: Polichinelle)

Here is the historic Moscow recital Rubinstein gave in the Grand Hall of the Conservatoire on 1 October, 1964. The bulk of the great pianist's records were made in the studio so it is particularly valuable to see him live under recital conditions interacting with a highly responsive audience. In addition to his Chopin he includes among his encores, two that were great favourites with him, the Debussy Ondine from the Second Book of Preludes and Villa-Lobos's exuberant O Polichinelle. The monochrome picture betrays its age and is very grainy and wanting in sharp focus. The camera work is fairly static which is not a bad thing but it is stiff and the sound is primitive. The 'bonus' offers two fragments of silent film from 1929 which are also monochrome. Recommendable only to hardened Rubinstein enthusiasts.

Etudes: in G flat, Op. 10/5; in G sharp min.; in C sharp min., Op. 25/6–7; 3 Ecossaises, Op. posth. 72/3; Fantasy in F min.; Impromptu in A flat, Op. 29; Sonata 3; Waltzes: in A flat; A min., Op. 34/1–2; in E min., Op. posth.

 DG 453 456-2. Pletnev

Opening with the great F minor Fantasy and closing with the B Minor Sonata, both superbly done, Pletnev's well-planned recital has all the hallmarks of a live recital, plus the technical advantage of studio recording. Such is his command of tonal colour elsewhere that one is scarcely aware of the piano's hammers even in fortissimo passages. But interpretatively things are less straightforward and he is often wilful. His rubato in the B minor Sonata is at times intrusive. The G flat and G sharp minor Etudes are dazzling, as is the famous E minor Waltz (written when the composer was twenty); and the Ecossaises, which are even earlier, are deliciously frothy. Yet the C sharp minor Etude takes the listener into a wholly different world and is very touching, as is the slow movement of the Sonata. For all one's reservations about the personal element, this is very distinguished playing indeed.

Fugue in A min., Op. posth.; Lento con gran espressione in C sharp min., Op. posth.; Nocturnes: in E flat, Op. 9/2; in C min., Op. posth.; Polonaise in B flat min., Op. posth.; Waltzes: in A min., Op. 34/2; in A min.; in E min.; in F sharp min., Op. posth.

(*) Etcetera KTC 1231. Antoni – FIELD: Largo; Nocturnes, etc. *

The primary purpose of this CD is to make a direct comparison with similar works, written even earlier, by John Field, who invented the nocturne in the year Chopin was born. Helge Antoni plays simply and poetically, and this serves to point up his comparisons. He is naturally recorded in a pleasing acoustic.

VOCAL MUSIC

Songs: The bridegroom; Drinking song; Faded and vanished; Reverie (Dumka); Handsome lad; Hymn from the tomb; Lithuanian song; The maiden's wish; Melodia (Elegy; Lamento); The messenger; My darling; Out of my sight; The ring; Sad river; Spring; There where she loves; The two corpses; The warrior; Witchcraft. Songs arr. Pauline Viardot from Chopin Mazurkas: Berceuse (from Op. 33/3); Faible cœur (from Op. 7/3); La Danse (from Op. 50/1); La Fête (from Op. 6/4); Plainte d'amour (from Op. 6/1)

✿ (BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55270. Kryger, Spencer

Chopin wrote these songs for relaxation, just to please himself, never publishing them, and that may explain why the Polish flavour is so strong. He was reflecting his own early background, and the results are charming. Mazurka rhythms abound, as in the haunting Handsome lad, with the collection rounded off in the one song which goes deeper, Melodia, the heartfelt lament of an exile. Urszula Kryger, with her vibrant Slavonic tone well controlled, makes the most sympathetic interpreter, sensitively accompanied by Charles Spencer.

CILEA, Francesco (1866–1950)

Adriana Lecouvreur (DVD version)

🔑  Opus Arte DVD OA LS 3011 D. Freni, Dvorský, Mingardo, Cossotto, La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, Gavazzeni

Recorded in 1989, when Lamberto Puggelli's lavish production was new, this version of Adriana Lecouvreur from La Scala is far more successful than the recording of the same production made for TDK 11 years later. That is largely because the original cast is so much more assured and vocally well focused than the later replacements, and the veteran Gianandrea Gavazzeni is a masterly conductor in this music. Mirella Freni in the title-role as the great singing actress might easily have been overparted, but her projection is strong and positive, with the tenderness of her two big arias well caught. Peter Dvorský is first rate as Maurizio, strong, firm and unstrained, and Fiorenza Cossotto with her rich mezzo makes a splendid foil for Freni. Visually, with Brian Large as video director, the extravagance of the elaborate and ultra-realistic sets and costumes is wonderfully brought out.

Adriana Lecouvreur (CD version)

🔑 Ⓜ * Decca 475 7906 (2). Sutherland, Bergonzi, Nucci, d'Artegna, Ciurca, Welsh Nat. Op. Ch. & O, Bonynge

On CD Sutherland's performance in the role of a great tragic actress could not be warmer-hearted. She impresses with her richness and opulence in the biggest test, the aria Io son l'umile ancella, an actress's credo, and her formidable performance is warmly backed up by the other principals, and equally by Richard Bonynge's conducting, not just warmly expressive amid the wealth of rich tunes, but light and sparkling where needed, easily idiomatic.

CIMAROSA, Domenico (1749–1801)

Piano Sonatas, Volumes I–III, 1–62 (complete)

 Arcobaleno AAOC 93672 (2). Crudelli

Cimarosa's sonatas have a good deal in common with Scarlatti's sonatas, offering considerable variety of mood and style, although they are not as searching. Crudelli uses a modern piano and plays stylishly with crisp, clear timbre and articulation. But there is charm as well as scholarship in her advocacy. The recording gives the piano a clean, clear image so that these performances are both authentic and spontaneous and it is a pity that the documentation is so limited.

18 Keyboard Sonatas, R. 1–18

Ⓝ (BB) * Naxos 8.570718 Sangiorgio (piano)

Cimarosa's keyboard sonatas are a real find, and they sparkle delightfully in the hands of Victor Sangiorgio. As presented here, each is in three (or occasionally two) brief sections. Sometimes all three are brisk, at others there is a central Andante, with each work adding up to about three minutes of music in total. We'll say no more, but urge readers to discover them by acquiring this highly rewarding disc for themselves.

Il Maestro di Cappella

Ⓜ * Decca 2-CD (ADD) 475 8490 (2). Corena, ROHCG O, Quadri – DONIZETTI: Don Pasquale ***

Corena's classic assumption of the role of the incompetent Kapellmeister makes a most welcome return to the catalogue after being unavailable for far too long. The Decca stereo allows his orchestral rehearsal to come over most vividly, with the poor man dashing first to the left then to the right, to one instrument after another, trying to keep each in order. Corena shows complete mastery of the buffo bass style, and he is so little troubled by the florid passages that he can relax and bring out the fun. The vintage 1960 recording is clear and atmospheric, with the directional effects naturally conveyed.

Dixit Dominus

(*)CPO 999 988-2. Rizzone, Rottensteiner, Bonfatti, Coro I Musici Cantori de Trento & Voci Roveretane, Orchestra Haydn di Bolzano e Trento, Pirona

The tuneful, bubbling invention we know from Cimarosa's operas and concertos is also found in his appealing Dixit Dominus, from 1796. The performance is reasonably well done, but a sharper sound would have given it more impact.

CLEMENS NON PAPA, Jacob (c. 1510/15–c. 1555/6)

Missa and Motet: Ecce quam bonum. Motets: Accesserunt ad Jesum; Carole, magna est; Job tonso capite; Pascha nostrum; Veni electa mea

 Signum SIGCD 045. Brabant Ens., Rice

Jacob Clement or Clemens non Papa was jokingly known as Clement-not-the-Pope, so as to distinguish him from either Pope Clement VII or the Flemish poet, Jacobus Papa. However, we know very little about him. It seems likely that he was in Bruges from 1544–5, and he certainly spent most of his life in the Low Countries. However, he was very prolific and much respected in his time (over a dozen of his Masses have survived, over 200 motets and many chansons).

Based on the composer's own motet, the Mass Ecce quam bonum is in five parts, extended to six from the Sanctus onwards, and is an essentially joyful celebration of the unity of the church, and God's benediction on those who lead a peaceful life. Glorious singing throughout and outstandingly fine recording in the chapel of Merton College, Oxford, where the impressive conductor of the Brabant Ensemble is based; and it is he who provides the notes. Full texts and translations are provided.

Missa Pastores quidnam vidistis; Motets: Pastores quidnam vidistis; Ego flos campi; Pater peccavi; Tribulationes civitatum

❀ * Gimell CDGIM 013. Tallis Scholars, Phillips

The beauty of line and richness of texture in the masterly Missa Pastores quidnam vidistis are unforgettable in this superb performance by the Tallis Scholars. The programme opens with the parody motet associated with the Mass, which has a glorious eloquence. Of the other motets, Pater peccavi, solemnly rich-textured, is especially memorable; but the whole programme is designed to reveal to modern ears another name hitherto known only to scholars. The recording is uncannily real and superbly balanced.

CLEMENTI, Muzio (1752–1832)

Symphonies: 1; in B flat & D, Op. 18/1–2

 Chan. 9234. LMP, Bamert

Symphonies: 1 in C; 2 in D; 3 in G (Great National Symphony); 4 in D

(BB)  Warner Apex (ADD) 2564 62762-2 (2). Philh. O, Scimone

Six of Clementi's 20 symphonies survive. The four numbered works are all scored for much larger forces than the Op. 18 set and even include trombones. Their musical content explains Clementi's high reputation in his lifetime as a composer for the orchestra, not just the piano. If the Great National Symphony is the most immediately striking, with God save the King ingeniously worked into the third movement, the other works are all boldly individual.

Bamert's performances are on a chamber scale and are refreshingly alive and polished. They are given top-class Chandos sound.

Scimone's Philharmonia performances are both lively and sympathetic, the recording is excellent, and this set is well worth its modest cost.

PIANO MUSIC

Capriccio in B flat; Fantasia with Variations on 'Au clair de la lune', Op. 48; Preludio 1 alla Haydn in C; Preludio 1 alla Mozart (both from Op. 19); Sonatas: in F min., Op. 13/6; in F, Op. 33/11; in G min., Op. 34/11

🔑 Ⓜ  Warner Elatus 2564 60676-2. Staier (fortepiano)

The reissue of Andreas Staier's splendid recital gives it a fair claim to being the most desirable introduction to the music of Clementi in the catalogue. The anticipation of Beethoven appears in nearly all this music. The Sonatas are all considerable works, and Staier's flexibility of style brings out their individuality strongly.

6 Piano Sonatas, Op. 1; in G, WoO 14 (Alternative first movement for Op. 1/2); 3 Sonatas, Op. 2; 3 Sonatas, Op. 7; 3 Sonatas, Op. 8; Sonatas: in A flat, WoO 13

Ⓑ * Hyp. CDA 67632 (2). Shelley

3 Piano Sonatas, Op 9; 3 Sonatas Op. 10; Sonata Op. 1; Sonatas, Op 12/1-4; Toccata, Op. 11/2

Ⓝ Ⓑ  Hyp. CDA 67717 (2). Shelley

3 Piano Sonatas, Op. 13; Sonata in C, Op.20; 3 Sonatas, Op. 23; 2 Sonatas, Op. 24; in F, WoO 3

Ⓝ Ⓑ  Hyp CDA 67729 (2). Shelley

Howard Shelley includes here the Sonata in A flat, WoO 13, composed in Rome when Clementi was only 13, but he begins the collection with Opus 1, where the opening allegro of the first of the set immediately shows the music's attractively spontaneous early style, with its flavour of Mozart. The layout then follows the approximate order of composition. Shelley's performances are full of life and sparkle, the virtuosity effortless, the developing character and expressive range of the later works of Opus 7 and 8 fully realized. Not surprisingly, the Hyperion recording is in the demonstration bracket. Each of these pairs of CDs is offered for the price of one. Throughout this series Shelley's artistry and finesse are heard to fine effect and readers can invest in the set with confidence.

Piano Sonatas in A, Op. 2/4; G min., Op. 8/1; B flat, Op. 8/3; F min., Op. 13/6; G, WO14

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.555808. Alexander-Max (piano)

The American pianist, Susan Alexander-Max, gives magnetic performances of five sparkling and original early sonatas by Clementi, on what one hopes is the start of a series from Naxos.

Piano Sonatas: in F min., Op. 13/6; in B flat, Op. 24/2; in F sharp min., Op. 25/5; in G, Op. 37/1

 Accent ACC 67911D. van Immerseel (fortepiano)

Very fleet and brilliant performances from Jos van Immerseel. The slow movements of these Sonatas have considerable expressive depth, and the outer ones are full of a brilliance that is well served by this eminently skilful and excellent artist.

Piano Sonatas: in B flat, Op. 24/2; in G; in F sharp min., Op. 25/2 & 5; in D, Op. 37/2; 6 Progressive Sonatinas, Op. 36

(BB)  Naxos 8.550452. Szokolay

Balázs Szokolay's Naxos anthology is very successful and his playing inspires enthusiasm. Decent recording; excellent value.

Piano Sonatas, Op. 24/2; Op. 25/5; Op 40/2–3

🔑 (BB) * Hyp. Helios CDH 55227. Demidenko (piano)

The spirit of Beethoven undoubtedly hangs over the dramatic opening of the D major Sonata, Op. 40/3, with which Demidenko begins his recital, and his performances of both this and the closing Op. 40/2 (both published in 1802) are very arresting. The Molto adagio sostenuto, which acts as a prelude to this B minor Sonata, is played with moving serenity, and both the central Largo mesto e patetico and the Lento patetico of the F sharp minor, Op. 25/5, are very beautiful in Demidenko's hands. The Allegro confuoco of Op. 40/2 brings dazzling virtuosity, while he provides his own cadenza for the first movement of Op. 24/2. Recorded at the Snape Maltings, Aldeburgh, in 1994, this reissue is a fine bargain.

Piano sonatas: in D, Op. 25/6; in A, Op. 33/1; in A, Op. 50/1; in G min. (Didone abbandonata), Op. 50/3

(M)  CRD 3500. Roscoe

Martin Roscoe makes a very persuasive case for playing these sonatas on a modern instrument. He is particularly searching in the Adagio sostenuto of the late A major Sonata, Op. 50/1, and how impressively he pedals in the dolorous Introduzione (Largo patetico e sostenuto) of the G minor Sonata (Didone abbandonata), then presenting the Adagio dolente most touchingly and finding plenty of drama in the agitated finale. Yet the gallant early D major work is joyfully spirited and full of charm. The recording is very natural, well up to the high standard we expect from this label.

Piano Sonatas in G; B min.; D, Op. 40/1–3

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553500. de Maria

Pietro de Maria's account of the three sonatas of Op. 40 is impeccable not only in terms of virtuosity but in musicianship and artistry. He is accorded first-class sound, fresh and present.

CLIFFE, Frederic (1857–1931)

Symphony 1 in C min., Op. 1; Cloud and Sunshine (Orchestral Picture)

✿  Sterling CDS 1055-2. Malmö Opera O, Fifield

Frederic Cliffe was born in Bradford in 1857 and is thus contemporary with Elgar. On the staff of the Royal College of Music, he suddenly came to the fore when his First Symphony was premièred in 1889, receiving enthusiastic plaudits from every quarter. The symphony is indeed an astonishing achievement for a young composer and gives absolutely no impression of inexperience. It is readily comparable in warmth and constructional skill with, for instance, the First Symphony of Gounod, but it has a much greater affinity with the early symphonies of Dvořák. The orchestration throughout is vivid, showing a natural flair, especially in its richly Wagnerian scoring for the horns and brass. In short, this is a remarkably inventive and fluent work, which one returns to with much pleasure.

The orchestral picture of Cloud and Sunshine is equally confident in its pictorial evocation, if not as memorable thematically as the symphony. Both are played with zest, warmth and spontaneity by the fine Malmö orchestra, under their dedicated and understanding conductor, Christopher Fifield.

CLIFFORD, Hubert (1904–59)

Serenade for Strings

 Dutton CDLX 7174. BBC Concert O, Wordsworth – HARRISON: Brendon Hill; Worcestershire Suite, etc. ***

Hubert Clifford's Serenade for Strings was written in 1943 for the BBC Empire String Orchestra. The first movement became well known in its own right as a popular light encore, but the other movements are no less appealing. Both the Scherzo and the Molto Allegro finale are certainly lively, but they always possess a light touch which is very pleasing; the slow movement has just the right amount of depth and is memorable. This makes an original and enjoyable bonus following on from Julius Harrison's delightful music (see below).

String Quartet in D

(M)  Dutton CDLX 7163. Locrian Ens. – BAINTON: String Quartet ***

Born in Australia, Hubert Clifford came to Britain in 1930 to study with Vaughan Williams and never returned home. The String Quartet in D comes from 1935 and was broadcast twice in the following year and again (twice) in 1946. It is a well-fashioned piece whose discourse is civilized and pleasing, very much pre-war in feeling. There is some Gallic influence and evidence of his Irish origins, some generations back. The material does not quite sustain its length, but all the same it is well served by the Locrian Ensemble, and the Dutton recording is very truthful.

COATES, Eric (1886–1957)

(i) By the Sleepy Lagoon; (ii) Calling all Workers: March; (iii) Cinderella (Phantasy); From Meadow to Mayfair: Suite; London Suite; London Again Suite; (i) The Merrymakers Overture; (iii) Music everywhere: March; (iii; iv) Saxo-Rhapsody; (i) The Three Bears (phantasy); (ii) The Three Elizabeths: Suite; (i) The Three Men: Man from the Sea (only); (iii) Wood Nymphs (valsette)

🔑 (B)  CfP (ADD) 3 52356-2 (2). RLPO, Groves; CBSO, Kilbey; or LSO, Mackerras

It is good to welcome back this key collection of the music of Eric Coates, 'the man who writes tunes', much loved by orchestral players as he also writes so gratefully for their instruments, being an ex-orchestral player himself. On the whole, Groves, who has the lion's share of the repertoire here, proves a persuasive advocate, although occasionally his approach is slightly bland. Jack Brymer is the excellent soloist in the Saxo-Rhapsody; and the other piece with a diluted jazz element, Cinderella, also goes with a swing. However, not surprisingly, the performances from Sir Charles Mackerras and the LSO are even more lively, and there are also several really outstanding ones from the CBSO under Reginald Kilbey. He proves the ideal Coates conductor, with a real flair for catching the sparkle of the composer's leaping allegro figurations, notably in the first movement of The Three Elizabeths, where also his shaping of the central, slow movement – one of the composer's finest inspirations, dedicated to the late Queen Mother – has an affectionate grace. The marches are splendidly alive and vigorous.

Ballad; By the Sleepy Lagoon; London Suite; The Three Bears (phantasy); The Three Elizabeths (suite)

Ⓜ  ASV CDWHL 2053. East of E. O, Nabarro

Malcolm Nabarro has the full measure of Coates's leaping allegros and he plays the famous marches with crisp buoyancy. The Three Bears sparkles humorously, as it should; only in By the Sleepy Lagoon does one really miss a richer, more languorous string-texture. Excellent, bright recording, and the price is right.

Cinderella (Phantasy); Dam Busters March; Joyous Youth (Suite); London Suite; Miniature Suite; The Selfish Giant (Phantasy); The Three Bears (Phantasy)

🔑 ✿  Chan. 9869. BBC PO, Gamba

It is a joy to hear his imaginatively coloured orchestration on a full-sized orchestra with an ample string-group splendidly served by these superb performances and Chandos's demonstration-worthy recordings. The finest of the three Phantasies is The Three Bears, with its opening rhythmic phrase, 'Who's been sleeping in my bed?' and its later, utterly beguiling waltz theme. Cinderella boasts another richly romantic example, and two more, both deliciously lightweight, close the Joyous Youth Suite and the Miniature Suite, which shows the composer at his most elegant and graceful. More robust is the London Suite, with its vigorous, pacy evocation of the old Covent Garden Market, followed by a romantic portrayal of Westminster, complete with chimes. The Knightsbridge March finale was famous as a signature tune for the BBC. The programme ends appropriately with The Dam Busters. All orchestral musicians love playing Coates's music and this is conveyed by the orchestra throughout this wonderfully enjoyable CD.

Cinderella (Phantasy); Footlights (Concert Waltz); London Again Suite; The Selfish Giant (Phantasy); Summer Days Suite; Three Men Suite; TV March

 Avie AV 2070. RLPO, Wilson

The Liverpool Phil. have not recorded Eric Coates since the days of Sir Charles Groves, but they have not lost their touch, and under the excellent John Wilson they play this attractively tuneful music with verve and affection. How well Coates builds the introduction to the Footlights Waltz before the beguiling tune arrives, and how effectively Wilson and his players respond! Alongside the waltz, the engaging Three Men Suite (as distinct from the catchy finale) and the charmingly scored lightweight Summer Days are new to the CD catalogue and they are most winningly played and recorded here.

The Dam Busters: March. From Meadow to Mayfair: Suite. The Merrymakers: Overture. Summer Days: Suite. Three Bears (Phantasy); Three Elizabeths Suite: March

 Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 246. New Philh. O or LPO, Boult (with GRAINGER: Over the Hills and Far Away; DELIUS: Marche Caprice; WALTON: Hamlet: Funeral March; VAUGHAN WILLIAMS: The Wasps: March past of the Kitchen Utensils; ROSSINI, arr. BRITTEN: Soirées musicales: March; HOLST: Suite in E flat, Op. 28/1: March)

As ever, Coates's music has great craftsmanship as well as good tunes and, lightweight though it is, it lies firmly within the English tradition. Here Boult finds its affinities with Elgar in delicacy of scoring and hints of nostalgia. Summer Days, written in the summer of 1919, was the first work that Coates composed as an ex-orchestral player. It includes a justly famous waltz, At the Dance, graciously elegant and with hardly any Viennese influence. The lollipops added for this reissue are equally welcome, particularly The March past of the Kitchen Utensils, the hit number from Vaughan Williams's incidental music for The Wasps. The late-1970s recording is splendid, matching Lyrita's predictable high standard.

Dancing Nights (Concert Waltz); The Enchanted Garden (Ballet); Footlights (Concert Valse); The Four Centuries (Suite): Rhythm (20th Century). London Bridge March; 2 Symphonic Rhapsodies: Pitch my Lonely Caravan; Birdsongs at Eventide/I heard You Singing; The Three Men: Suite; Summer Afternoon (Idyll)

🔑  Lyrita SRCD 213. LPO, Wordsworth

A fine vintage collection from the LPO, directed with élan by Barry Wordsworth, is shrewdly chosen to include some less familiar repertoire, notably the inventively tuneful ballet score, The Enchanted Garden (at 21 minutes the composer's longest single movement, it includes, of course, a foxtrot theme among more traditional rhythms). Other highlights include the finale of the Three Men Suite with its witty quotation of 'Johnny come down from Hilo'. Fine, lively performances, the orchestra obviously enjoying themselves, and vivid recording.

COLERIDGE-TAYLOR, Samuel (1875–1912)

4 Characteristic Waltzes, Op. 22; Gipsy Suite, Op. 20; Hiawatha Overture, Op. 30; Othello Suite, Op. 79; Petite Suite de concert, Op. 77; Romance of the Prairie Lilies, Op. 39

 Marco 8.223516. Dublin RTE Concert O, Leaper

Coleridge-Taylor wrote much delightful orchestral music, the most famous being the charming Petite Suite de concert. The composer's feeling for the genre is also apparent in the Four Characteristic Waltzes. Each is nicely coloured: there is a nostalgic Valse bohémienne, a countrified Valse rustique (the oboe so easily conjuring up the countryside), a stately Valse de la reine, and a lively Valse mauresque. The Gipsy Suite is a piquantly coloured four-movement work of considerable appeal, while the Othello Suite, beginning with a lively dance, has an engaging Willow Song and ends with a stirring Military March. Performances and recording are excellent, and this is altogether a winning if essentially lightweight collection, perhaps more for aficionados than for the general collector.

Violin Concerto in G min., Op. 80

 Hyp. CDA 67420. Marwood, BBC Scottish SO, Brabbins – SOMERVELL: Violin Concerto in G ***

Violin Concerto in G min., Op. 80; Legend, Op. 14; Romance in G, Op. 39

🔑 ✿ * Lyrita SRCD 317. McAslan, LPO, Braithwaite (with HARRISON: Bredon Hill ****)

Coleridge-Taylor's beautiful Violin Concerto was one of the great discoveries of the Lyrita catalogue, although, recorded in 1994, it was not issued until 2007 (after two other versions had appeared). Lorraine McAslan's warmly lyrical performance is fully worthy of it and Nicholas Braithwaite and the LPO give her passionate support. McAslan provides poetic performances of the Legend and Romance, both with memorable main themes, the Legend especially captivating. Then for a valuable bonus we are given the richly atmospheric Bredon Hill rhapsody of Julius Harrison, a lovely piece, obviously influenced by Vaughan Williams's Lark Ascending, but also by Butterworth, another memorable performance, admirably recorded.

Anthony Marwood is an accomplished advocate and a convincing exponent of this worthwhile score. The BBC Scottish Orchestra is polished, although perhaps it could do with greater fervour. But the Lyrita CD is the one to go for.

African Dances, Op. 58; Hiawatha Sketches, Op. 16; Petite suite de concert, Op. 77; Violin Sonata, Op. 28

Ⓜ  Dutton CDLX 7127. Juritz, Dussek

Coleridge-Taylor's Violin Sonata of 1897 (premièred by Albert Sammons) has much of the easy melodic facility of the Violin Concerto with a readily appealing central Larghetto. The engaging Petite suite de concert, familiar from its orchestral version, works just as well in this format. The Hiawatha Sketches, also inspired by Longfellow, pre-date the famous cantata by two years, and are pleasing light music, as are the later African Dances. All agreeable music, very well played by David Juritz and Michael Dussek, while the Dutton recording balance cannot be faulted.

Ballade in C min., Op. 73; Clarinet Quintet in F sharp min., Op. 10; Piano Quintet in G min., Op. 1

* Hyp. CDA 67590. Nash Ens.

The Piano Quintet, written at the age of 18, is an astonishingly precocious work. It brims with assurance in its melodic sweep, and it is remarkable that this is probably its first performance since its première in 1893. Both Schubert's and, especially, Dvořák's influence can clearly be heard in this work. The Clarinet Quintet, written shortly afterwards, is perhaps the greater work. Again, the influence of Dvořák is most apparent. The Ballade is a later work, written for the violinist Michael Zacherewitsh and first performed in Leeds in 1907. It is a wonderfully romantic, brooding work, with the spirit of Tchaikovsky (whom Coleridge-Taylor admired) and even of Rachmaninov. It is all masterfully performed by the Nash Ensemble, whose unforced yet vital performances are a constant source of joy. Immaculate recording.

(i–iii) Hiawatha's Wedding Feast. (ii; iv) Petite Suite de Concert, Op. 77 (v) La Bamboula (Rhapsodic Dance)

🔑 Ⓑ  CfP 587 0242. (i) Richard Lewis & Royal Choral Soc. (ii) Philh. O; (iii) Sargent; (iv) Weldon; (v) Bournemouth SO, Alwyn

HMV's budget reissue of Sargent's splendid 1961 Abbey Road recording of just Hiawatha's Wedding Feast, with the Royal Choral Society is a real success, including of course Richard Lewis's stylish performance of Onaway! Awake, Beloved! The CD transfer is not sharply focused, but the sound remains warmly atmospheric. The Petite Suite de Concert is the composer's best-known orchestral work a salon pastiche of great charm. George Weldon's polished Philharmonia performance is wholly sympathetic and not in the least sentimental, and it is given first-class sound. La Bamboula, which the composer wrote for his third visit to the USA in 1910, is a 'series of evolutions' on a West Indian dance also used by Gottschalk, and it makes an attractive encore.

COLLINS, Anthony (1893–1963)

Eire; Festival Royal Overture; The Lady with the Lamp; Louis XV Silhouettes; Symphony 1 for Strings; The Saga of Odette; Santa Cecilia; Vanity Fair; Victoria the Great

✿ Ⓜ * Dutton CDLX 7162. BBC Concert O, Wilson

Anthony Collins was the ideal recording conductor, as he was able to bring music vividly to life in the studio, and his Decca Sibelius cycle was a classic of the post-war LP era. This is the first CD devoted to his own highly enjoyable music. It opens with the patriotic Festival Royal Overture (first performed in 1956) and, while it uses such obvious quotations as God save the Queen and the 'Big Ben' chimes, it builds its own themes into a most entertaining work. The same patriotic spirit pervades his music to the 1937 film Victoria the Great.

Ear-tickling colours run through the delightful pastiche, Louis XV Silhouettes. The three-movement suite, Eire, based on Irish folk-tunes, is equally attractive, especially the toe-tapping final Reel, Fluter's Hooley. Valse Lente is a short and nostalgic evocation, originally used in the 1950 film Odette; and from the 1951 film The Lady with the Lamp the composer extracted the title theme and the music from the ball scenes to produce the Prelude and Variations included here. In the Symphony for Strings (1940), Collins's penchant for pastiche is to the fore. His most famous piece of all is the disarmingly simple Vanity Fair. First performed in 1952, this is the composition he most wanted to be remembered for, and indeed it is an exquisite little miniature of the sort that cheers you up every time you hear it.

John Wilson and the BBC Concert Orchestra play all his music with great affection and style, and they are well supported by Dutton's engineering team.

CONFREY, Edward (1895–1971)

African suite; Amazonia; Blue Tornado; Coaxing the Piano; Dizzy Fingers; Fourth Dimension; Jay Walk; Kitten on the Keys; Meandering; Moods of a New Yorker (suite); Rhythm Venture; Sparkling Waters; Stumbling Paraphrase; 3 Little Oddities; Wisecracker Suite

 Marco 8.223826. Andjaparidze

Older collectors will surely remember Kitten on the Keys and perhaps Dizzy Fingers and Coaxing the Piano (all dazzlingly played here). Confrey established his international fame as a precocious virtuoso pianist/composer in the early 1920s. His music has a witty charm and is clearly influenced by French impressionism as well as by Gershwin and the Scott Joplin rags. The Georgian pianist Eteri Andjaparidze gives engagingly sparkling performances of the bravura pieces, including the ingenious closing Fourth Dimension with its amazingly virtuosic cross-hand accents, and she is equally at home in the more relaxed ragtime of Jay Walk, Stumbling and the sauntering gait of Meandering. But she also relishes the atmosphere and charm of the gentler pieces among the Oddities and the suites (two of the Moods of a New Yorker recall the tranquil simplicity of MacDowell's To a wild rose). A most entertaining collection, given excellent piano recording.

COOKE, Arnold (1906–2005)

Clarinet Concerto

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55069. King, Northwest CO of Seattle, Francis – JACOB: Mini-Concerto; RAWSTHORNE: Concerto ***

Arnold Cooke's music contains an element of Hindemithian formalism, carefully crafted, but the slow movement of this Concerto soars well beyond. Thea King makes a passionate advocate, brilliantly accompanied by the Seattle Orchestra in excellent (1982) analogue sound, faithfully transferred.

Symphony 1; Concerto in D for String Orchestra; Jabez and the Devil (Ballet Suite);

 Lyrita SRCD 203. LPO, Braithwaite

The first symphony may not break new ground, but on record it can provide genuine refreshment. The expansive first movement has a swinging 9/8 theme and a neatly managed false ending; the slow movement is a deeply expressive elegy which turns into a touching processional, and the finale is festive with fanfares. The Concerto for Strings is neo-classical, somewhat lean-textured but never dry, with a pensive slow movement and a bouncing finale. The ballet from which the suite is taken was written for the Royal Ballet in 1961 and is both atmospheric and colourful. Performances and recording are excellent: Braithwaite really feels this music and the LPO responds committedly.

Symphony 3 in D

 Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 295. LPO, Braithwaite – BRIAN: Symphonies 6 & 16 ***

This is also a well-made, highly enjoyable symphony which deserves more than the occasional airing. If there is, as in his other works, a whiff of Hindemith in his writing, there is far more of Cooke himself, confident and positive in theme and argument. Performances and recording are excellent and the coupling, too, is well worth exploring.

(i) Cello Sonata 2; (ii) Viola Sonata; (iii) Violin Sonata 2

 British Music Soc. BMS 432CD. Terroni, with (i) Wallfisch; (ii) Goff; (iii) Stanzelett

The Viola Sonata of 1936/7 is comparatively sinewy, yet has a deeply felt Andante, and plenty of vitality in the finale. The Cello Sonata was written in 1979/80 (and received its concert première by Raphael Wallfisch and Raphael Terroni on 4 November 2006, the centenary of the composer's birth). The Lento, improvisatory in feeling, has a touching lyricism, and the jolly, very rhythmic finale bounces along with great confidence.

But undoubtedly the most attractive of these three works is the Violin Sonata of 1980, which sets off with a buoyant main theme and a skipping impetus, and has a yearning melody for its Andante. The finale, with its cross-rhythms, also has an underlying lyrical impetus and is capped by a neatly managed fugato. All three performances are most persuasive and truthfully recorded, if lacking a little in resonant warmth.

Clarinet Quintet

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55105. King, Britten Qt – HOLBROOKE: Eilean Shona; HOWELLS: Rhapsodic Quintet; FRANKEL; MACONCHY: Clarinet Quintets ***

Like his Clarinet Concerto, Arnold Cooke's Quintet has a slightly sinewy lyrical flow in the manner of Hindemith, but, though the composer does not always seek to 'charm', Thea King's playing is so seductive in the Andante that the listener is aurally cajoled. The first movement is characteristically unpredictable in line and flow, but the performance here finds its slightly wan melodic appeal and the perky finale is most winning. Excellent recording.

COPLAND, Aaron (1900–90)

Appalachian Spring (complete recording of full score); Billy the Kid (ballet suite); Rodeo: 4 Dance Episodes

🔑 ❀ Ⓜ * RCA 82876 65840-2. San Francisco SO, Tilson Thomas

It was Eugene Ormandy who in 1954 persuaded Copland to score the complete Appalachian Spring – hitherto available only in its original chamber version – for full orchestra. It is still not in print, existing only in manuscript, but Michael Tilson Thomas's superb recording confirms Ormandy's view that the work would expand magnificently. In the ballet the variations on Simple Gifts which form the climax are presented in, and interrupted by, an additional episode in which a revivalist appears and warns the central couple in the story of what Copland called 'the strange and terrible aspects of human fate'.

The complete ballet here runs to 36 minutes, and in this magnificently played and very moving performance is revealed as a 20th-century masterpiece to rank alongside the three key Stravinsky ballets, including The Rite of Spring. The opening is wonderfully serene, and Tilson Thomas finds infinite detail and colour throughout, while creating a richly evocative tapestry of great beauty, helped by a recording of extraordinary breadth. The performances of the two cowboy ballets are similarly imaginative and compelling, giving the impression of coming to the music for the first time. This is not to be missed, even if you already have other versions of this vivid music.

Appalachian Spring (ballet) Suite

Ⓑ  DG 477 6352-2. LAPO, Bernstein – BARBER: Adagio for Strings ; GERSHWIN: Rhapsody in Blue **(*)

Bernstein's DG version of Appalachian Spring was recorded at a live performance, and the conductor communicates his love for the score in a strong yet richly lyrical reading and the compulsion of the music-making is obvious. The recording is close but not lacking in atmosphere, and it sounds extremely vivid, reissued in DG's Critics' Choice series.

Appalachian Spring (ballet) Suite; Billy the Kid: Suite; Fanfare for the Common Man; Rodeo (4 Dance Episodes)

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550282. Slovak RSO (Bratislava), Gunzenhauser

(i) Appalachian Spring (ballet) Suite; (ii) Billy the Kid (suite); Rodeo (4 Dance Episodes)

(*) Telarc SACD 60648 or CD 80078. Atlanta SO, Lane – HINDEMITH: Symphonic Metamorphoses on Themes of Weber **(*)

The Bratislava orchestra play with such spontaneous enjoyment in Rodeo and Billy the Kid that one cannot help but respond. If some of the detail in Appalachian Spring is less sharply etched than with Bernstein, the closing pages are tenderly responsive. The recording is admirably colourful and vivid, with a fine hall ambience, and the spectacle of the Fanfare for the Common Man is worth anybody's money. A bargain.

Louis Lane's performances on Telarc were given recording of demonstration quality. Lane's account of Appalachian Spring, without missing the score's lyrical qualities, has an attractive feeling of the ballet theatre about it. Rodeo is not as bitingly dramatic as with Bernstein, but it is folksy and enjoyable. The recording is very slightly enhanced on the SACD, and this includes the – not particularly appropriate – Hindemith coupling. The CD version, with little loss of fidelity, is at mid-price. But both are upstaged by the Tilson Thomas RCA collection.

(i) Appalachian Spring (ballet) Suite; (ii) Ceremonial Fanfare; (iii) Dance Symphony; El salón México; (i) Fanfare for the Common Man; (i; iv) Lincoln Portrait; (v) Music for Movies; (vi) Quiet City; (iii) Rodeo: 4 Dance Episodes; (vii) Old American Songs (excerpts): Simple gifts; Ching-a-ring-chaw; Long time ago; I bought me a cat; At the river

🔑 Ⓑ  Double Decca ADD/DDD 448 261-2 (2). (i) LAPO, Mehta; (ii) Philip Jones Brass Ens.; (iii) Detroit SO, Dorati; (iv) Peck; (v) L. Sinf., Howarth; (vi) ASMF, Marriner; (vii) Horne, ECO, C. Davis

Mehta's performance of Appalachian Spring is one of the most distinguished of several fine recordings he made for Decca in the late 1970s, which also included the spectacular Fanfare for the Common Man and the Lincoln Portrait, with Gregory Peck a comparatively laid-back narrator who speaks Lincoln's prose with dignity and restraint. Dorati's performances of the Dance Symphony, El salón México and Rodeo are notable for their bright, extrovert brilliance, and the only reservation is that, somewhat surprisingly, Dorati's treatment of jazzy syncopations is rather literal. The evocative opening picture of the New England Countryside occupies the same musical world as Appalachian Spring. Again, fine playing from the London Sinfonietta under Elgar Howarth, and vivid recording. Marriner's account of Quiet City is second to none, but the highlight of the second CD is Marilyn Horne's delightful performances of five Old American Songs. Excellent value.

(i) Appalachian Spring; (ii) El salón México; (iii) Fanfare for the Common Man; (iv) Old American Songs

Ⓝ Ⓜ  EMI 2 06634-2 (i) Saint Louis SO, Slatkin; (ii) Dallas SO, Mata;(iii) Mexico PO, Bátiz; (iv) Hubbard, O of St Luke's, Russell Davies

A first-class collection. Slatkin is naturally at home in Appalachian Spring and the sound is first class. Bátiz's orchestra doesn't have the technical excellence of Slatkin's but he is a lively and persuasive interpreter of Copland. Mata's Dallas performance of El sálon México is as good as any – brilliant playing in demonstration sound, and Hubbard is a fine folksy exponent of the attractive American Songs.

Appalachian Spring (original chamber version); Nonet for Strings; 2 Pieces for String Quartet

Ⓝ Ⓜ  Nimbus NI 2506 St Luke's Chamber Ens (or Qt.) Russell Davies

(i) Clarinet Concerto. Music for Movies; Music for the Theatre; Quiet City

Ⓝ Ⓜ  Nimbus NI 2522 (i) Blount; O of St Luke's, Russell Davies

Apart from Appalachian Spring (beautifully played and very balletic), glowing in its original version, and the atmospheric Quiet City, most of this music is lesser-known Copland. William Blount is a rich-toned soloist in the Clarinet Concerto, languid in the first movement, but contrasting with the roisterous jazzy finale. The vibrant Music for the Theatre with its brash Prologue and Dance and ironic Burlesque nicely offsets the mellower New England evocations of Music for Movies, although here Sunday Traffic makes another lively contrast and the Threshing Machines are very busy too. The Nonet is more demanding, more severe, with the first three chords generating most of its melodic and harmonic material. But it rewards the listener who returns to it. These excellent performances directed by Dennis Russell Davies come from the MusicMasters Catalogue and were very well recorded at the end of the 1980s.

Billy the Kid (excerpts); Down a Country Lane; (i) Old American Songs (Sets 1–2); (ii) 8 Poems of Emily Dickinson

🔑 (BB)  Warner Apex 2564 62089-2. St Paul Chamber O, Wolff, with (i) Hampson; (ii) Upshaw

Hugo Wolff and his fine St Paul Chamber Orchestra are completely at home here, and it is good to have the composer's own scoring of Down a Country Lane (originally a piano piece). However, the highlights are the two superbly sung song-cycles. In the Old American Songs, Thomas Hampson is in a special class, and he includes both sets. So is Dawn Upshaw's eloquent set of the Emily Dickinson Poems, now easily the finest version on record.

Billy the Kid (Ballet) Suite & Waltz; Rodeo: 4 Dance Episodes & Honky Tonk Interlude

(*) RCA SACD (ADD) 82876 67904-2. O, Gould – GROFÉ: Grand Canyon Suite **(*)

Although you would never guess it from the richness of the sound of this new Living Presence SACD, Morton Gould's recordings of Copland's two cowboy ballets (in three-track stereo) date from 1957. Gould's performances are vividly characterized and full of vitality, and the expressive music (the Corral Nocturne in particular) has a romantically luxuriant languor, all this emphasized by the warmly atmospheric recording. While Bernstein's versions have a more idiomatic, abrasive bite, Gould's vigour and his natural affinity (as a ballet composer himself) with Copland's rhythmic style is infectious, and he includes the Honky Tonk piano sequence and Saturday Night Waltz in Rodeo. The technicolor sound is gorgeous, if perhaps a shade over-resonant for music designed for the ballet pit.

Clarinet Concerto

(BB)  ASV COE CD COE 811. Hosford, COE, Fischer – MOZART: Clarinet Concerto; R. STRAUSS: Duet Concertino ***

 Chan. 8618. Hilton, SNO, Bamert – NIELSEN: Concerto; LUTOSŁAWSKI: Dance Preludes ***

Richard Hosford's performance of Copland's masterly concerto is second to none, with the strings and harp of the Chamber Orchestra of Europe warmly and seductively atmospheric at the opening, while the jazzy syncopations of the work's second section are vibrantly pointed, with the witty clarinet contribution which follows quite delectable. Excellent, atmospheric recording too, and highly recommendable couplings. A true bargain.

Janet Hilton's performance is soft-grained and has a light touch, yet she finds plenty of sparkle for the finale and her rhythmic felicity is infectious. She is at her very finest, however, in the gloriously serene opening, where her tender, poetic line is ravishing.

(i) Clarinet Concerto. Dance Panels; Music for Theatre; Quiet City

Ⓝ Ⓜ  EMI 2 34439-2. NY Chamber Symphony, Schwarz with (i) David Shifrin

David Shifrin's account of the Clarinet Concerto is among the best, the opening radiant in timbre and showing a natural fluency of phrasing, the later jazzy elements also well caught. What makes this collection especially attractive, apart from the beautifully played and evocative account of Quiet City, is the inclusion of the rare Dance Panels. Those, who enjoy Appalachian Spring, will surely respond to this inspired and diverse score, which typically moves with great ease from lyric tonal painting to jazzy dance rhythms. The Music for the Theatre has comparable contrasts, The performances are of a high standard and the recording vivid and with a particularly attractive ambience. Now offered at mid-price.

(i) Piano Concerto; The Tender Land (opera): Suite; (ii) Old American Songs, Volumes 1–2

Ⓝ (BB) * Naxos 8.5529297 (i) Benjamin Pasternack; (ii) St Charles Singers, Elgin SO, Hanson

Benjamin Pasternack is a persuasive soloist in the Piano Concerto, a fine performance contrasting the lyrical first section with a glittering account of the jazzy finale. The Tender Land Suite (which stands up well, independently from the opera) moves from the characteristically atmospheric Introduction and Love music to a boisterous party scene and back to the lyrical finale, The Promise of Living. But the highlight of the disc is the full set of Old American Songs which sound even more captivating in their choral versions, which especially suit Simple Gifts, At the River, I Bought me a Cat and the superb pay-off number, Ching-a-ring Chaw.

Letter from Home; Prairie Journal; The Red Pony (film score): Suite; Rodeo: 4 Dance Episodes

🔑 ✿ (BB) * Naxos 8.559240. Buffalo PO, Falletta

A Copland collection not to be missed, for it contains much rare and inspired music, notably the nostalgic wartime Letter from Home and Prairie Journal, commissioned by the Columbia Broadcasting Network in 1936, predating Billy the Kid and Rodeo, and just as evocative of the Western landscapes. But even more valuable is Copland's enchanting score for the 1948 film of John Steinbeck's The Red Pony about life on a Californian ranch. JoAnn Falletta is totally in tune with the Copland ethos and the excellent Buffalo Philharmonic play all this music with a natural understanding of the idiom: they are wonderfully boisterous in the Hoe Down from Rodeo. Splendidly vivid and atmospheric recording, too. Not to be missed.

Quiet City

🔑 Ⓜ * Decca 475 8237 – ASMF, Marriner – BARBER: Adagio; COWELL: Hymn & Fuguing Tune; CRESTON: A Rumor; IVES: Symphony 3 ****

Marriner's 1976 version is both poetic and evocative, and the playing of the trumpet and cor anglais soloists is of the highest order. The digital remastering has brought about added clarity without loss of atmosphere.

Quiet City; (i) 8 Poems of Emily Dickinson

🔑 (BB)  EMI Encore 3 45287-2. (i) Hendricks; LSO, Tilson Thomas – BARBER: Adagio, etc. ***

This is an intensely beautiful disc that in deep thoughtfulness belies the conventional idea of American culture being brash. Quiet City is memorable with solo trumpet and cor anglais (superbly played by Maurice Murphy and Christine Pendrill) adding atmospheric intensity. Copland himself orchestrated eight of his twelve settings of Emily Dickinson poems for chamber orchestra for his seventieth birthday concert, and Tilson Thomas as a young conductor was in charge. The freshness and sharp imagination of the accompaniments are enhanced in support of vocal lines lovingly matched to Dickinson's distinctive poetic style. Radiant singing from Barbara Hendricks, and equally sensuous sounds from the orchestra.

Clarinet Sonata; Nocturne for Clarinet and Piano

Ⓝ (BB) 🔑 * Naxos 8.572240 Emma Johnson, Lenahan – BERNSTEIN: Sonata; DANKWORTH: Suite for Emma; Picture of Jennie ****

The opening four-note figure immediately and indelibly reveals the identity of the composer of this very appealing sonata. The 'singing simplicity' of the opening melts into busy dancing, but there is still more folksy melody to come and in the slow movement the clarinet soliloquizes against a repeated serene scalic piano figure. The finale is jazzily high spirited, but the first movement is recalled before the close. This is a masterwork and should be much better known. It is superbly played here, followed by the nostalgically gentle, sleepy Nocturne.

PIANO MUSIC

Piano Fantasy

 Mode 93. Laimon – IVES: Piano Sonata 3 ***

Sara Laimon certainly seems to be right inside this initially intractable work, following the composer's continually changing directives as written on the score with apparent spontaneity, right through to the reflective closing pages. She is very well recorded, so if you are musically adventurous you might try this example of Copland's music, which could not be further removed from Billy the Kid! (The disc can be obtained from Mode, PO Box 1262, New York 10009 or www.mode.com)

Piano Fantasy; Passacaglia; Piano Sonata; Piano Variations

Ⓜ  Divine Art 25016. Clarke

Raymond Clarke opens with the early Passacaglia, composed in 1921–2 while the composer was in Paris and dedicated to Nadia Boulanger. It is a self-consciously serious work, easy to follow, and in Clarke's hands attractively diverse. The 'craggy' Piano Variations of 1930 follow on naturally after it (even the keys are related). Clarke then proves completely at home in the Sonata. The Fantasy is handled with equal understanding, especially in its changes of mood and tempo, and the recording is outstandingly vivid and realistic, with a full sonority in the bass. A most satisfying and rewarding collection.

Piano Sonata; 4 Piano Blues; Scherzo humoristique: The Cat and the Mouse

 Nim. NI 5585. Anderson – GERSHWIN: 3 Preludes; Arrangements of Songs; An American in Paris ***

Mark Anderson also gives an outstanding account of the Piano Sonata, making it seem emotionally warmer and texturally and harmonically less spare than usual. His reading will surely make new friends for the work; it is 'freely expressive' (as the first movement is marked by the composer) and with the restless rhythmic mood of the central Vivace spontaneously caught, with even a brief jazz inflexion. The Four Piano Blues are in Copland's easily accessible style and are also very well characterized, while the witty portrait of Le Chat et la souris makes a brilliant encore for what is a live recital in Nimbus's own concert hall.

VOCAL MUSIC

(i) In the Beginning. Help us, O Lord; Have mercy on us, O my Lord; Sing ye praises to our King

 Hyp. CDA 66219. (i) Denley; Corydon Singers, Best – BARBER: Agnus Dei; BERNSTEIN: Chichester Psalms ***

In the Beginning is a large-scale, 15-minute motet for unaccompanied chorus and soprano solo, written in 1947, and the long span of the work is well structured with the help of the soprano soloist, here the fresh-toned Catherine Denley. The chorus is just as clear and alert in its singing, not only in the big motet but also in the three delightful little pieces which come as an appendix. Vivid recording, full of presence.

(i) In the Beginning. 5 Old American Songs; Motets: Have mercy on us; Help us, O Lord; Sing ye the Praises to our King; Thou, O Jehova

 Gloriae Dei Cantores GDCD 029. (i) Bybee; Gloriae Dei Cantores, Patterson – VIRGIL THOMSON: Hymns; Mass, etc. ***

An outstanding account of In the Beginning with warmly expressive singing from this splendid choir, based in Cape Cod, Massachusetts. The mezzo, Luretta Bybee, is an eloquent, full-voiced soloist, though her vibrato is somewhat intrusive. Five favourite American Songs follow. Then come four equally diverse miniature motets, ending with the joyful Sing ye the praises, which show the choir at their very finest. Excellent recording, and an even more imaginative Virgil Thomson programme as coupling, make this a very desirable issue indeed.

(i; ii) Old American Songs (Sets I & II); 12 Poems of Emily Dickinson. (ii) 4 Piano Blues

🔑  Black Box BBM 1074. (i) Chilcott; (ii) Burnside

Susan Chilcott's superb collection of Copland songs, bringing together 25 of his most approachable pieces, plus the Four Piano Blues, is beautifully recorded as well as masterfully performed. Though the Old American Songs with their open-air, folk-based inspiration are more readily suited to a man's voice, Chilcott is strong and magnetic in each one, and she equally relishes the touching simplicity of the Emily Dickinson Poems, with Burnside the ideal accompanist, crisp and pointed in the songs as well as in his solo pieces.

CORELLI, Arcangelo (1653–1713)

Ciaconna, Op. 2/12; Concerto grosso, Op. 6/5; Sonate da chiesa, Op. 1/9–10; Op. 2/4; Op. 3/5; Op. 4/2; Trio Sonata, Op. 5/3

(BB) (*) Virgin 2x1 4 82097-2 (2). L. Bar. – PURCELL: Fantasias & In nomines **(*)

The London Baroque collection mixes church and chamber sonatas with an impeccable feeling for the style of the period and a continuo which includes archlute and organ, appropriately. Ornamentation is judicious and intonation is secure. The Abbey Road recording is admirably transparent and vivid.

Concerti grossi, Op. 6/1–12

🔑 Ⓑ  Hyp. Dyad CDD 22011 (2). Brandenburg Consort, Goodman

🔑 Ⓜ  DG 459 451-2 (2). E. Concert, Pinnock

🔑  Naïve OP 30-147 and 30-155. Europa Galante, Biondi

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.550402/3. Capella Istropolitana, Krechek

Corelli's glorious set of Concerti grossi, Op. 6, is now very well represented in the catalogue in all price-ranges. For those who prefer period performances there is plenty of choice. Roy Goodman and the Brandenburg Consort use 17 string players plus harpsichord continuo, archlute and organ; however, there is a sense of style and a freshness of approach in the Goodman version that is very persuasive. The recorded sound is first class.

Pinnock and his English Concert bring not only an enthusiasm for this music but a sense of grandeur. They are entirely inside its sensibility, and the playing of the concertino group (Simon Standage, Micaela Comberti and Jaap ter Linden) is wonderfully fresh-eyed and alert, yet full of colour.

But the newest set, from the appropriately named Europa Galante, is as fine as any. The chamber-sized ripieno of period instruments (2,2,2,1,1) offers crisp detail yet no feeling of any lack of sonority, and the elegant playing is alert and vital yet smiles pleasingly: these musicians are obviously enjoying the music, and so do we. The soloists are excellent, as is the recording.

For those preferring the richer textures of modern instruments, the Naxos set by the Capella Istropolitana under Jaroslav Krechek represents very good value indeed.

Oboe Concerto (arr. Barbirolli)

Ⓑ  Dutton Lab./Barbirolli Soc. CDSJB 1016. Rothwell, Hallé O, Barbirolli – HAYDN; MARCELLO: Oboe Concertos  (with Recital C. P. E. BACH; LOEILLET; TELEMANN: Sonatas, etc. **)

Barbirolli's Concerto is cunningly arranged from a Trio Sonata and in its present form it makes one of the most enchanting works in the oboe repertoire. The performance here is treasurable and the clear, natural recording projects the music admirably.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Sonate da chiesa, Op. 1/1–12; Op. 3/1–12; Sonate da camera (Trio Sonatas), Op. 2/1–12; Op. 4/1–12

 Chan. 0692 (4). Purcell Qt

The admirable Purcell Quartet (joined by Catherine Weiss in Op. 4), with a continuo from Jakob Lindberg, theorbo and archlute, plus Robert Woolley (organ in Opp. 1 and 3 and harpsichord in Opp. 2 and 4) surveys all Corelli's Sonatas of Opp. 1–4. Their playing is vibrant and stylish, and expressive in slow movements, and in that respect, although allegros are admirably spirited, makes somewhat less of the lighter character of the Sonate da chiesa, than Medlam and the London Baroque, although the difference is hardly consequential. The Chandos recording is first rate, and this complete set is highly recommendable.

Trio Sonatas, Op. 1/9; Op. 2/4 & 12 (Ciacona); Op. 3/12; Op. 4/3; Op. 5/3, 11 & 12 (La Folia)

🔑  Hyp. CDA 66226. Purcell Qt

The Hyperion disc is one of six designed to illustrate the widespread use in the 18th century of the famous La Folia theme. It includes a varied collection of sonate da chiesa and sonate da camera. Excellent performances from all concerned, and recording to match.

Violin Sonatas, Op. 5/1–12

🔑 ✿  HM HMU 907 298.99 (2). Manze, Egarr

(BB)  Naxos 8.557165 (1–6); 8.557799 (7–12) (available separately). Fernandez, Wilson

Corelli's twelve Violin Sonatas, Op. 5, were published in 1700. Nos. 1–5 are in five-movement sonata la chiesa form, Nos. 7–11 are sonate da camera, usually in four movements, although Nos. 10 and 11 each includes a brief additional section. Corelli's invention is inexhaustible and the set closes with perhaps the most celebrated set of variations on the traditional La Folia theme. Andrew Manze is in his element here. Dazzling playing on a baroque instrument, with slow movements touchingly lyrical, full of subtle detail, and plenty of gusto and character in allegros, yet with unwanted acerbities banished. Richard Egarr is a true partner, and there are countless felicities. The balance is natural, with the violin obviously dominating, yet the harpsichord comes through.

The performances by François Fernandez (playing a baroque violin – a Guarneri) and Glen Wilson (using a Dutch copy of a Ruckers harpsichord), are also stylish, fresh and spirited and very well recorded, and make an admirable bargain alternative.

CORIGLIANO, John (born 1938)

Circus Maximus (Symphony 3 for Large Wind Ensemble); Gazebo Dances for Band

(N) (BB) (*) Naxos 8.559601 University of Texas Wind Ens., Junkin

Circus Maximus is scored for a very large wind ensemble and as it pictures the famous venue in ancient Rome it is meant to be performed with the players positioned surrounding the audience, and in all sections of the hall. This is not possible without surround sound but the Naxos recording does quite well with a normal stereo effect. In between the big climaxes come Night Music and Prayer Music, but the resulting spectacle is hardly subtle. The Gazebo Dances are much more rewarding, particularly the closing jolly Tarantella.

3 Hallucinations. (i) Mr Tambourine Man: Seven Poems of Bob Dylan

(N) (BB)  Naxos 8.559331. Buffalo PO, Falletta with (i) Plitmann

Written at the request of Sylvia McNair, who wanted a song cycle for Carnegie Hall, she asked that only American texts were used. In the end, Corigliano used the texts from Bob Dylan's songs – without having heard Dylan's musical treatment. The songs were subsequently orchestrated and performed by Hila Plitman – an 'amplified' soprano in 2003. Corogliano's style suits the imagination of Dylan's texts very well, and the opera-cum-music-theatre style of the singing admirably fits the style of the music. 'Blowin' in the Wind' is particularly haunting number but it is all enjoyable, even if it doesn't really plumb any great emotional depth. The 3 Hallucinations derive from Ken Russell's film Altered States (1980), three colourful and atmospheric pieces in a somewhat horror-music style. It is all vividly performed and recorded, and full texts are included.

(i) The Red Violin Concerto; (ii) Violin Sonata

 Sony/BMG 82876 88060-2. Bell, with (i) Baltimore SO, Alsop; (ii) Jeremy Denk

John Corigliano wrote the film score for The Red Violin (about a violin travelling through three centuries) and he had Joshua Bell as the 'voice' of the violin. He then decided to transform the Chaconne of the film score, first into a concert piece for violin and orchestra, then later to expand it into a full-length concerto by adding a wild pianissimo Scherzo, with the soloist playing 'high, ethereal and dance-like'. A lyrical Andante flautando follows, with the soloist joining in a duet with the orchestra flute. The finale is 'a rollicking race in which the opposed forces of soloist and orchestra vie with each other' against extraneous non-musical sounds. There is a melancholy lyrical counterpart, before the Chaconne returns to complete the work. It is an unpredictable but fascinating work, and it could surely not be presented more excitingly than by Joshua Bell with Marin Alsop and the excellent Baltimore Orchestra. The recording is extremely vivid. The Violin Sonata, written much earlier (in 1962/3) is even more unpredictable, rhythmic patterns constantly changing, with two central slow movements framed by outer allegros. The performance here is again surely definitive.

The Red Violin: Chaconne

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.559302. Hanslip, RPO, Slatkin (with WAXMAN: Tristan Fantasia) – ADAMS: Violin Concerto **(*)

The 17-minute Chaconne which John Corigliano has fashioned from the main theme of his film score opens seductively, reaches an explosive climax and, after a cadenza, ends decisively. The performance and recording here can hardly be faulted.

Symphony 2; (i) The Red Violin: Suite from the film

 Chan. SACD CHSA 5035. I Musici de Montréal, Yuli Turovsky, (i) with Eleonora Turovsky & Ch.

Symphony 2 for String Orchestra; The Mannheim Rocket

 Ondine ODE 1039-2. Helsinki PO, Storgårds

John Corigliano's Second Symphony, commissioned by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, draws on his 1996 String Quartet, but the adaptation involved rewriting three of the five movements. The opening Prelude combines synchronous threads of sound which oscillate hauntingly, leading to a climax and a serene chordal apotheosis. The Scherzo is slashingly aggressive, but the middle section is gentle, bearing a lyrical passacaglia. The Nocturne opens ethereally and creates a richly sustained string tapestry to picture a serene Moroccan night, interrupted by a pattern of muezzin calls from the city's many mosques. Then comes a complex Fugue, which the composer describes as 'anti-contrapuntal'. He uses a single theme in separate voices moving at different tempi; the work closes with a Postlude in valedictory mood, with a high solo violin 'meant to impact a feeling of farewell'. The synchronous sound threads of the Prelude return, and the symphony ends as it began, fading into silence. It is a remarkably imaginative piece, not nearly as difficult to follow as it sounds.

The Mannheim Rocket is a phantasmagorical orchestral picture of Baron von Munchausen's Wedding Cake Rocket taking off, but it is also a pun on a musical term made famous by the Mannheim orchestra in the 18th century to describe a rising musical sequence that speeded up and grew louder as it went higher. The performances here are first class and so is the spectacular recording. This is all real music and well worth trying.

The alternative Chandos version is also very well played and recorded under the composer's supervision. Those with SACD facilities will find the sound very impressive indeed. The suite drawn from the composer's music for the François Giraud film, The Red Violin, is in 11 brief sections, in effect a violin concerto, with the solo violin emerging ever more prominently in writing both brilliant and lyrical, with a gypsy cadenza towards the end. The Suite is rounded off with a beautiful development of the main theme, representing the heroine Anna, not just on the violin and the orchestra but briefly with a wordless chorus (unidentified on the disc). Whether you choose this coupling or The Mannheim Rocket on Ondine, the symphony itself is well worth having.

The Red Violin Caprices (for violin solo); (i) Sonata for Violin & Piano

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8.559364 Quint; (i) with Wolfram – v. THOMSON: Portraits ***

The Caprices for solo violin are yet another extension of music from the film of that name and they are brilliantly and expressively played by Philippe Quint. The Sonata (where William Wolfram also participates expertly) is more unpredictable but certainly inventive.

A Dylan Thomas Trilogy: (i) Author's Prologues; (ii) Fern Hill; (iii) Poem in October; (ii) Poem on his Birthday

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8.559394. Nashville Symphony Co. & O, Slatkin with (i) Allen; (ii) Jackson; (iii) Tessier

Written over many years, the Dylan poems Corigliano chose reflected the circumstances of his own life, from the relatively untroubled poem of youth which is Fern Hill, to his 'crisis' of turning thirty in Poem in October, to the far darker Poem on his Birthday (age thirty-five) and the three were thus presented in 1976. However, Corigliano felt the trilogy was not quite complete and Dylan's Author's Prologue was added, heard at the beginning and in between Fern Hill and Poem in October. The result is a rather compelling 'three ages of man' story, with bold, imaginative orchestrations and Corigliano's music skilfully reflecting the nuances of the texts. It is hard to imagine better performances than the superb ones they receive here and the recording is excellent. The sleeve notes are by the composer and texts are included.

CORNYSH, William (c. 1468–1523)

Ave Maria, mater Dei; Gaude, virgo, mater Christi; Salve regina

🔑 ❁ Ⓑ * Gimell 2 CD CDGIM 209 (2). Tallis Scholars, Phillips – BROWNE: Motets; TAVERNER, TYE: Western Wind Mass ***

Cornysh's music is quite unlike much other polyphony of the time and is florid, wild, complex and, at times, grave. The Tallis Scholars give a magnificent, totally committed account of these glorious pieces – as usual their attack, ensemble and true intonation and blend are remarkable. Excellent recording.

Ave Maria, mater Dei; Gaude, virgo, mater Christi (motets); Magnificat; Salve regina

 Gaudeamus CDGAU 164. Cardinall's Musick, Carwood – TURGES: Magnificat; PRENTES: Magnificat ***

In his survey of early Tudor polyphony, Andrew Carwood, with his keenly responsive group, Cardinall's Musick, here presents all four of Cornysh's surviving liturgical works, including a fine Magnificat and a radiant Salve regina, alongside even more elaborate Magnificats by two composers far less well-known but just as inspired. Complex and beautiful, the Magnificat of Turges is the most expansive of all, while Prentes's Magnificat, closely following Cornysh's, even outshines that model in both scale and sublimity.

COUPERIN, Armand-Louis (1725–89)

(i) Violin Sonata 3. Pièces de clavecin, Book 1: Suites in B flat & G: excerpts

🔑 (BB)  Virgin 3 85806-2 (2). Curtis; (i) Lucy van Dael (with Claude-Bénigne BALBASTRE: Pièces de clavecin ) – François COUPERIN: Pièces de clavecin ***

This two-disc set is especially attractive and valuable in including music by both Armand-Louis and François Couperin, plus four attractive pieces from the First Book of Claude-Béninge Balbastre (1725–99) of which La Courteille is particularly winning. All the items by Armand-Louis are well chosen for variety and character and Alan Curtis plays them with flair. He is joined by Lucy van Dael in the Sonata. The recording is first class.

Pièces de clavecin: excerpts

 Chan. 0718. Yates (harpsichord)

Armand-Louis Couperin was distantly related to both François and Louis. His Pièces de clavecin were published in 1751 in two books, and here we are offered a good selection of 21 pieces, almost all with sobriquets. Some, such as the Allemande and La Grégoire, show a debt to Rameau; but others, such as L'Affligée and La Chéron, are more forward-looking. Sophie Yates is an admirable exponent, using a copy by Andrew Garlick of a Parisian Goujon harpsichord dating from 1749. The recording is fairly resonant, so it is important to get the volume setting right – not too loud and not too soft – and then the results are very impressive.

Pièces de clavecin: L'Affligée; La du Breüil; Les Tendres Sentimens

(*) BIS CD 982. Hirosawa (harpsichord) – François COUPERIN; Louis COUPERIN: Pièces de clavecin **(*)

Another thunderous harpsichord so closely balanced that immediate action is called for to reduce the level setting. No quarrels however with Asami Hirosawa's playing, which has great expressive feeling. Her account of L'Affligée has greater poignancy than Harald Hoeren's, and if the volume is turned down a satisfactory result can be secured.

COUPERIN, François
(1668–1733)

Les Apothéoses: L'Apothéose composé à la mémoire immortelle de l'incomparable M. de Lully; La Parnasse ou l'Apothéose de Corelli

🔑 Ⓜ  Astrée ES 9947. Hespèrion XX, Savall

Couperin's two great linked instrumental works, both called Apothéoses, between them ardently espouse the virtues of the conflicting French and Italian influences on early 18th-century music. The composers Lully and Corelli are thus united in the Elysian fields, with the French and Italian muses playing each other's music. It is a delightful concept. Each work has a sequence of stylized classical vignettes. L'Apothéose de Lully is programmatic and evokes Apollo and Mercury; L'Apothéose de Corelli is an eloquent Trio sonata, but also with titled movements, grave, expressive and lively by turns. The performances by Savall and Hespèrion XX have splendid life, grace and refinement of feeling.

Concerts royaux 1 in G; 2 in D; 3 in A; 4 in E min.

🔑  Alia Vox SACD AVSA 9840. Le Concert des Nations, Savall

 ASV CDGAU 101. Trio Sonnerie

The Concerts royaux can be performed in a variety of forms. On the ASV Gaudeamus disc, the Trio Sonnerie give them in the most economical fashion (violin, viola da gamba and harpsichord) and the contribution of all three musicians is unfailingly imaginative. Excellent recording.

However, the Trio Sonnerie are upstaged by Jordi Savall (bass viol and director) whose period-instrument ensemble, Le Concert des Nations, includes flute, oboe, violin, bassoon and continuo. They play this music delightfully, with warmth and spirit, and the recording has an ideal ambience and fine presence. On four-channel SACD, the illusion of sitting in the concert hall is very real.

Les Nations, Vol. 1: Première Ordre (La Français); Deuxième Ordre (L'espagnole); Concerts royaux: Deuxième Concert à deux violes ou autres instruments à lunisson; La Sultana

 Chan. 0684. Purcell Qt

Les Nations, Vol. 2: Troizième Ordre (L'Impériale); Quatrième Ordre (La Pièmontoise); L'Art de Toucher le Clavecin: 2nd & 3rd Préludes. Concerts royaux: Treizième Concert à deux instruments à l'unisson

 Chan. 0729. Purcell Qt

These four collections, published in 1726, were composed over a considerable period. Their fusion of French and Italian styles proves greatly rewarding in what are essentially greatly varied collections of dance movements. The period performances by these excellent players are as stylish as one could wish, and they fill out the two discs appropriately with duets from the Concerts royaux. An important addition to the catalogue.

Pièces de violes: Les Goûts Réunis (1724): excerpts: 10th, 12th & 13th Concerts; 2 Suites (1728)

 Avie AV 2132. Luolajan-Mikkola, Perkola, Häkkinen

This expert Finnish trio (two bass violists and a harpsichordist) offer here a collection of what they call 'private music', written for the French court. Of the two mature Suites the first has the expected layout of Prélude, Allemande, Courant, Sarabande grave, Gavotte gracieusement, Gigue gayment, finishing with a spirited Passacaille; the second is in four movements, with the noble and dignified third named Pompe funèbre, perhaps in memory of Marais, who had died the year the Pièces were published. The music from the earlier Les Goûts Réunis is equally varied, and its movement titles often convey their character: Air Tendre, La Tromba, Sarabande tendrement, Air agréable and so on. The performances are authentic and very responsive to the music's expressive moods; but the viola da gamba timbre is something of an acquired taste, so this is perhaps a disc to approach with a degree of caution. The recording is certainly real and present.

KEYBOARD MUSIC

Livres de pièces de clavecin 1–4; Ordres 1–27

Ⓑ  Warner 2564 64176 (10). Baumont

For his magisterial traversal of the 27 Ordres, the French harpsichordist Olivier Baumont has used five different instruments and has elected to record each Ordre on the same harpsichord, giving the full details of each in his eminently scholarly and thorough notes. The recordings were made at various times in the 1990s, mostly in the studios of Radio France. He penetrates the soul of this music and conveys his love for it. (A worthwhile selection is available on Apex 2564 62089.)

Harpsichord Suites, Book 1: Ordre 1; Concerts royaux 1–2

ⒷⒷ  Naxos 8.550961. Cummings (harpsichord)

Harpsichord Suites, Book 3: Ordre 13

(*) BIS CD 982. Hirosawa (harpsichord) – ARMAND-LOUIS COUPERIN; LOUIS COUPERIN: Pièces de clavecin **(*)

Laurence Cummings plays a modern instrument by Michael Johnson modelled on a Taskin, and he produces pleasing and musical results.

Asami Hirosawa couples the marvellous Treizième ordre with two of Louis Couperin's Suites and three pieces by Armand-Louis. She is thoroughly inside the French style and shows a natural feeling for its rhythmic flexibility. A very close microphone-balance produces pretty deafening results, but a drastic reduction of volume makes for more satisfactory listening.

Harpsichord Suites, Book 3 (excerpts)

🔑 (BB)  Virgin 3 85806-2 (2). Curtis (with Lucy van Dael, Brüggen, Haynes) (with Claude-Bénigne BALBASTRE: Pièces de clavecin ) – Armand-Louis COUPERIN: Sonata; Pièces de clavecin ***

Alan Curtis provides a splendid survey of Couperin's Book 3 and is joined by Frans Brüggen (recorder) in Le Rossignol-en-amour, Double du Rossignol and La Juilliet, by Lucy van Dael (violin) in La Létville and by Bruce Haynes (baroque oboe) in the two Musettes with drone basses. Excellently recorded, and with its enterprising couplings this stands out among Couperin collections.

Harpsichord Suites, Book 2: Ordres 6 & 8; Book 3: Ordre 18

 Hyp. CDA 67440. Hewitt (piano)

Having had a great success with Bach's keyboard music, Angela Hewitt now turns to Couperin, and the present disc is the first of three in which she has chosen music that she feels is best suited to the piano. In her admirable accompanying notes she comments on the composer's extensive and explicit ornaments: 'Leaving them out is not an option! It is all related to gesture: ornamentation is there for an expressive purpose, to emphasize one note, to make you wait for another. It is all part of the melodic line.' Certainly, in her hand the ornamentation is both crisply decorative and flexible and always inherent in the music's forward flow. In short, this playing is endlessly diverting and the piano is most naturally recorded.

Harpsichord Suites, Book 3: Ordre 13: Les Lis naissans; Les Rozeaux; L'Engagement; Les Folies françoises ou Les Dominos; L'âme-en-peine; Ordre 14: Le Rossignol-en-amour; La Linote-éfarouchée; Les Fauvètes plaintives; Le Petit-rien; Ordre 15: Le Dodo, ou L'amour au Berceau; Ordre 16: La Distraite; L'Himen-amour; Ordre 19: La Muse-Plantine (with excerpts from Books I and II)

🔑 * Hyp. CDA 67520. Hewitt (piano)

Angela Hewitt centres her third Couperin collection on the Treizième Ordre of Book III, which she considers one of Couperin's finest suites. It includes Les Folies françoises ou Les Dominos, a miniature theme-and-variations on the famous La Folia bass, with each variation depicting a different character arriving at a masked ball in an invisible cloak (domino).

Harpsichord Suites, Book 4, Ordres 21, 24–7

 Hyp. CDA 67480. Hewitt (piano)

Angela Hewitt's selection from Book 4 (with the Ordres not played consecutively) is even more enticing than her first collection from Books 2 and 3. All the pieces have intriguing titles and not all of them are obviously reflected in the mood of the music. Among the most enigmatic are Les Ombres errantes ('Wandering souls'), the rondeau L'Epineuse ('The Thorny One'), which in the event is most engaging, and the poised and friendly representation of the composer's own name, which may or may not be intended as a self-portrait. The four pieces from the 17th Ordre (all in the key of B minor) are kept until last and make a splendidly satisfying closing set. Splendid alive and sensitive performances, really fine recording and excellent documentation.

ORGAN MUSIC

Messe des Paroisses; Messe des couvents

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.557741/42. Robin (organ of Poitiers Cathedral)

Couperin's pair of Organ Masses each consist of 21 versets, which are intended to alternate with the text of the Mass, sung in plainchant. Only in two, for the Offertory and Deo Gratias, could the composer expand himself, and Couperin chooses to do this only in the Offertory. His Masses have been recorded in the past with the sung plainchant included, but the organ versets stand up well independently, and the recording here has dispensed with the plainchant. Jean-Baptiste Robin's splendid performances of just the Masses, given magnificent, modern, digital recordings, will be an obvious choice.

VOCAL MUSIC

Laudate pueri Dominum; Motet à Sainte Suzanne; 4 Versets d'un Motet composé de l'ordre du Roy (1703); 7 Versets d'un Motet composé de l'ordre du Roy (1704); 7 Versets d'un Motet composé de l'ordre du Roy (1705); Verset du motet de l'année dernière: Qui dat nivem

🔑 (BB)  Virgin 2x1 5 62419-2 (2). Piau, Pelon, Fouchécourt, Corréas, Les Talens Lyriques, Rousset – HENRI DU MONT: Motets ***

Although the overall standard of solo singing and instrumental playing here is high, Sandrine Piau is the star of the occasion. She takes the place of her agile and apparently ethereal-voiced predecessor, Marguerite-Louise, Couperin's cousin, for whom the music was written, and is the leading soloist in the first of the psalm versets (1702) 'composed by order of the King'. Here in the exquisite 'Adolescent sum ego' she is in duet with the hardly less impressive Caroline Pelon and a pair of celestial flutes, but she also contributes to the other versets and the closing Laudate pueri Dominum (the earliest of Couperin's motets written for the Chapel Royal). But perhaps the finest work of all here is the joyful Motet à Sainte Suzanne, written much later and showing the composer's mature style at its most persuasive. With first-class recording this is an outstanding disc in every way, and it is linked inexpensively to a rewarding collection of music by Couperin's much lesser-known predecessor, Henry du Mont.

Leçons de ténèbres pour le Mercredi Saint 1–3

🔑  BIS CD 1575. Kirkby, Mellon, Medlam, Charlston – DELALANDE: Leçons de ténèbres ***

Leçons de ténèbres pour le Mercredi Saint, 1–3; 4 versets du motet

🔑  Erato 0630 17067-2. Daneman, Petibon, Les Arts Florissants, Christie

Of available performances, Sophie Daneman, Patricia Petibon and Les Arts Florissants must probably rank highly. The first two Leçons are divided between the two sopranos, who join together for the last. As the Trois leçons de ténèbres take less than 40 minutes, the Quatre versets du motet (eight minutes) make an ungenerous fill-up. However, these are exquisite performances and are beautifully recorded.

Yet Emma Kirkby and Agnès Mellon also blend the voices together with sweetness and light, and their performances are hardly less delightful, with Charles Medlam and Terence Charlston (organ) providing admirable continuo support. The BIS recording too is first class, and the coupling with Delalande's equally beautiful settings is substantial, giving more than twenty minutes extra music.

COUPERIN, Louis (c. 1626–61)

Pièces de clavecin: Galliarde in G; 5 Pièces in D; 6 Pièces in C; Preludes in F, A, G & F sharp min.; Preludes (Toccades) in A min. & D min.; Tombeau de M. Blancrocher

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.555936. Wilson

Louis Couperin wrote far less than his celebrated nephew, but his small output is of great quality. And indeed there is a greater eloquence and more feeling in many of these miniatures than in much of the comparable output of François. These are intimate and often inward-looking pieces, and Glen Wilson, who has recently published a reconstruction of Couperin's lost Préludes non mesurés, brings us totally inside their world. He plays a copy of a 1628 instrument by Rückers the Younger and is expertly recorded. This fine disc leaves one wondering whether it is not Louis who deserves to be called 'le-grand'.

Harpsichord suites: in A min.; in C; in D; in F (including Le Tombeau de M. Blancrocher)

(BB)  Naxos 8.550922. Cummings (harpsichord)

Pièces de clavecin: Suites in A min. & C

(*) BIS CD 982. Hirosawa (harpsichord) – Armand-Louis COUPERIN; François COUPERIN: Pièces de clavecin **(*)

Laurence Cummings plays a modern copy of a Rückers, which is very well recorded by Naxos. His selection is generous and he arranges his own groupings. His decoration is convincing and he plays with much spontaneity and flair. The CD offers some 75 minutes of music and is one of Naxos's best bargains.

Asami Hirosawa couples two of Louis Couperin's suites with pieces by Armand-Louis, and the Treizième ordre by Couperin-le-grand. She is an impressive advocate, admirably flexible in such pieces as the Prélude à l'imitation de M. Froberger. We occasionally felt the need for greater variety of colour, though in this respect she is not helped by a very close microphone-balance.

COUPERIN, Marc Roger Normand (1663–1734)

Livre de tablature de clavecin (c. 1695): complete

 Hyp. CDA 67164. Moroney (harpsichord)

Marc Roger Normand's book contains 57 pieces – many attributed to other composers, including Chambonnières, Le Bègue and Lully. His choice is unerringly perceptive. Virtually all these miniatures are very personable, especially those by Paul de la Pierre and members of his family. Normand was a first cousin of François Couperin and was clearly a first-rate musician. Apart from his own works he includes an extended set of variants (27 couplets) on the famous Folies d'Espagnes. Moroney is a persuasive advocate. He plays with style and spontaneity and consistently entertains the listener. He uses a splendid Italian virginal dating from the 17th century, which is beautifully recorded, and this collection can be very highly recommended.

COWELL, Henry (1897–1965)

Hymn & Fuguing Tune

🔑 (M) * Decca 475 8237. ASMF, Marriner – BARBER: Adagio; COPLAND: Quiet City; CRESTON: A Rumor; IVES: Symphony 3 ****

The likeable Hymn and Fuguing Tune, by a composer otherwise little known, is well worth having, and it is superbly played and recorded here.

CRESTON, Paul (1906–85)

A Rumor

🔑 (M) * Decca 475 8237. ASMF, Marriner – BARBER: Adagio; COPLAND: Quiet City; COWELL: Hymn & Fuguing Tune; IVES: Symphony 3 ****

A Rumor is a witty and engaging piece and it is played here with plenty of character by Marriner's Academy. It completes a thoroughly rewarding and approachable disc of 20th-century American music that deserves the widest currency. The sound is first class.

Symphonies 1, Op. 20; 2, Op. 35; 3 (Three Mysteries), Op. 48

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.559034. Ukraine Nat. SO, Kuchar

Paul Creston was among the most approachable of American symphonists. The First is exuberantly colourful and strongly rhythmic, with clean-cut themes. The titles of the four compact movements – With Majesty, With Humour, With Serenity and With Gaiety – reflect the openness of the emotions. 2 is much darker, with each of its two substantial movements moving from darkness towards a lightened mood. 3 outlines the life of Christ with a peaceful opening, almost pastoral, representing the Nativity and leading to a joyful allegro. The second movement, representing the Crucifixion, is a heartfelt lament, avoiding bitterness and anger, before the Resurrection finale, where Creston is at his most specifically American, almost Copland-like, with jagged syncopations leading to a triumphant close. The Ukraine Orchestra, very well rehearsed, plays with warmth and an idiomatic flair surprising from a non-American band, and it is very well recorded.

Symphony 2, Op. 35

 Chan. 9390. Detroit SO, Järvi – IVES: Symphony 2 ***

Järvi's well-recorded and excellently performed Chandos version of 2 can be recommended if the Ives coupling is desired.

Symphony 5, Op. 64; Invocation and Dance, Op. 58; Out of the Cradle, Op. 5; Partita, Op. 12; Toccata, Op. 68

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.559153. Seattle SO, Schwarz

The Toccata from 1957 has much of the same vitality and rhythmic flair as the symphonies, and the wild clarinet solos we recall in the Second Symphony resurface here, calling to mind the Danse générale from Daphnis et Chloé. The Fifth Symphony (1956) is a three-movement work, exuberant and full of spirit, and as expertly fashioned as most of Creston's music. Readers who respond to Barber and Copland will find themselves at home in Creston's world. Splendid performances and recording.

String Quartet, Op. 8

() Testament mono SBT 1053. Hollywood Qt – DEBUSSY: Danse sacrée, etc.; RAVEL: Introduction & Allegro; TURINA: La oración del torero; VILLA-LOBOS: Quartet 6 ()

The String Quartet, Op. 8, is a pleasing, well-fashioned piece, slightly Gallic in feeling. The Adagio unfolds with eloquence. It could not be better served than it is by the Hollywood Quartet, recorded in 1953: the playing is stunning, and the recording, too, is very good for its period, even if the acoustic is on the dry side.

CROSSE, Gordon (born 1937)

(i) Ariadne: Concertante for solo oboe and 12 Players, Op. 31; (ii) Changes

 Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 259. (i) Francis, LSO Ens., Lankester; (ii) Vyvyan, Shirley-Quirk, Orpington Junior Singers, Highgate School Boys' Ch., L. Symphony Ch., LSO, Del Mar.

Ariadne is in effect a sustained one-movement oboe concerto, vividly dramatic in its eventful span, with an implied programme to illustrate the legend, the invocation of the Cretan caves of the Minotaur, atmospherically recaptured. The performance by Sarah Francis, for whom the work was written, is superb, helped by brilliant, committed playing from the LSO Ensemble. The title of the coupled work, Changes, is a pun, referring not merely to the transience of nature but to the tolling of bells. This is a work which can be appreciated at different levels, whether by children or by sophisticated listeners. A good piece to have on record, particularly when it is so well performed and recorded.

Purgatory (opera): complete

Ⓝ  Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 313. Bodenham, Hargreaves, Royal Northern College of Music Ch. & O, Lankester

Yeats's grim dialogue of the murderous father confessing his crimes to his son is set by Crosse with a simple devotion to the text. It is less effective dramatically on CD than in the theatre, but this student performance rises far above what you would expect from young performers – splendidly conveys the concentration of this retrained score. Both the soloists use their voices most intelligently and the recording (originally Argo), from 1975, emerges with great vividness on CD. Worth exploring.

CROSSLEY-HOLLAND, Peter (1916–2001)

Symphony in D

Ⓝ Ⓜ  Dutton CDLX 7215. RSNO, Yates (with GOOSSENS: Variations on Cadet Rousselle; IRELAND: Bagatelle, Cavatina etc. ())

Peter Crossley-Holland was a respected BBC administrator and from the late 1950s until 1963 in charge of music for the Third Programme. In 1969 he became a professor in the music faculty of the University of California, Los Angeles. This rather overshadowed his creative output even though he was a prolific composer. After embarking on medicine at Oxford, he changed course and studied with John Ireland, Mátyás Seiber and Edmund Rubbra. The Symphony occupied him from 1988 to 1994 and is a four-movement work lasting some thirty-seven minutes. The writing has the breadth of a symphonist, the ideas unfolding inevitably and organically. The idiom is distinctly diatonic but there is individuality and a real sense of purpose. He writes well for the orchestra and always holds the listener. The John Ireland pieces and Sir Eugene Goossens'

Variations on Cadet Rousselle, once a popular feature of BBC programmes, make excellent makeweights. Very good playing from the Royal Scottish National Orchestra under Martin Yates.

CRUSELL, Bernhard (1775–1838)

Clarinet Concertos in E flat. Op. 1. F min., Op. 5; B flat, Op. 11

Ⓝ* BIS-SACD1723 Martin Fröst, Gothenburg SO, Okku Kamu

The Swedish clarinettist, Bernhard Crusell was considered a supreme virtuoso/composer of his time and he left us three highly appealing and very tuneful concertos for his instruments. They are most elegantly played by the young Swedish clarinettist, Martin Fröst and the fine Gothenburg Orchestra under Okku Kamu. There have been previous excellent versions by Emma Johnson (ASV), Antony Pay on a period instrument (Virgin) and a dazzling virtuoso account by Kari Kriikku (Ondine). All are highly enjoyable but this new BIS SACD seems to trump the others (except perhaps for Emma Johnson). Strongly recommended.

CURZON, Frederick (1899–1973)

The Boulevardier; Bravada (Paso doble); Capricante (Spanish Caprice); Cascade (Waltz); Dance of an Ostracised Imp; Galavant; In Malaga (Spanish Suite); Punchinello: Miniature Overture; Pasquinade; La Peineta; Robin Hood Suite; (i) Saltarello for Piano & Orchestra; Simonetta (Serenade)

 Marco 8.223425. (i) Cápová; Slovak RSO (Bratislava), Leaper

The best-known piece here is the Dance of an Ostracised Imp, a droll little scherzando. But the Galavant is hardly less piquant and charming, the delicious Punchinello sparkles with miniature vitality, and the Simonetta serenade is sleekly beguiling. Curzon liked to write mock Spanishry, and several pieces here have such a Mediterranean influence. Yet their slight elegance and economical scoring come from cooler climes further north. The performances throughout are played with the finesse and light touch we expect from this fine Slovak series, so ably and sympathetically conducted by Adrian Leaper. The recording is admirable.

CZERNY, Carl (1791–1857)

Piano Sonatas 5 in E, Op. 76; 6 in D min., Op. 124; 8 in E flat, Op. 144; 9 in B min., Op. 145; Nocturne in E flat, Op. 647

Ⓝ* Nimbus NI 5832/3 Martin Jones

Carl Czerny has the reputation of an educational pedagogue of the piano. Yet, as this Nimbus set demonstrates, he was an excellent composer in his own right and these Sonatas are full of attractive ideas. A torchbearer at Beethoven's funeral, he was famous as an interpreter of the latter's piano music. His own certainly has a Beethovenian flavour at times, but moves between a late classic and early romantic styles. His Sonatas each have five or six movements and comparable diversity. The pleasing Adagio con sentimento, brilliant Scherzo and diverting closing Rondo of the E flat Sonata are good examples of his stature and the Andantino and Variations which ends the E major work is another example of his ready musical imagination. Martin Jones is a splendid advocate of his music, plying with ideal simplicity of style and ready virtuosity. He is very well recorded and this Volume I is highly recommendable. We hope more will follow.

DALE, Roger (1885–1943)

(i; ii) English Dance (arr. Bowen); (i; iii) Introduction & Andante for 6 Violas, Op. 5; (i; ii) Phantasy for Viola & Piano; Suite for Viola & Piano, Op. 2

Ⓝ Ⓜ Dutton CDLX 7204. (i) Chase with (ii) Otaki; (iii) Shaw, Opie, Beer, Cvetkov, Cininx

Roger Dale was a London born pianist/composer who, from 1900, studied at the RAM where, for the last 35 years of his life, he was on the staff. His music received some strong support during his life, with Lionel Tertis championing the Suite for Viola and Piano, often making the central Romance one of his encores. It is indeed a lovely piece, with gorgeous lyrical melodies, and is flanked by a highly expressive first movement and a finale of much virtuoso brilliance. Tertis commissioned the Introduction and Andante, another highly appealing work with all the individual parts beautifully weaving around one another. The Phantasy for Viola and Piano is in a single movement, but offers a great variety of mood with its essentially folk-like theme running through the score. The English Dance is a delightfully nostalgic piece, heard here in the arrangement by York Bowen for the first time. Superb recordings and performances and Lewis Foreman's sleeve notes are typically informative.

DAMASE, Jean-Michel
(born 1928)

Piano Music: Apparition; Introduction et Allegro; 8 Etudes; Sonate; Sonatine; Thème et Variations

Ⓜ Somm SOMMCD 034. Unwin

Damase's piano music is witty, elegant and, above all, unpredictable, with the Apparition opening in a vision of delicacy and, after constantly shifting visions and textures, closing a little less enigmatically. The Etudes are chimerical. The Sonata too, with its gruff opening toccata, moves from the bell-like sonority of the Andante to a turbulent finale which suddenly changes gear in midstream, to end reflectively. The Sonatine epitomizes the composer's finest features, neatly crafted and unostentatiously charming, especially the winningly debonair finale. The Theme and (15) Variations alternate beween slow and fast variants very engagingly. All in all, a delectable cocktail of French pianistic bon-bons, played with affection and nimble dexterity by a pianist who always anticipates the surprises around the corner.

DANCLA, Jean Baptiste Charles (1817–1907)

Petite Ecole de la mélodie, Op. 123

Ⓝ  Chan. 10510. Rimonda, Canziana – SAINT-SAËNS: Violin Sonata 1; MASSENET: Méditation from Thaïs ***

Charles Dancla has the reputation of being the last exponent of the classical French tradition of violin-playing and these 12 trifles make a delightful rarity, with Rimonda and Canziona, talented young artists playing with such rhythmic zest it could easily have listeners dancing. This is light music at its most attractive, with the pieces nicely varied.

DANKWORTH, John

(born 1927)

Suite for Emma; Picture of Jeannie

Ⓝ (BB) * Naxos 8.572240. Emma Johnson, Lenehan – BERNSTEIN: Sonata; COPLAND: Sonata; Nocturne ***

A leading figure in the jazz world for fifty years, (Sir) Johnny Dankworth shows his skill in writing 'straight' music for Emma, the clarinettist he so rightly admires. The five pieces include a charmingly nostalgic Waltz and a gentle Pavane, and then the music takes off with a catchy Scherzo which sits astride both 'classical' and jazz idioms. The finale fully exploits the virtuosity of both his soloists.

DANZI, Franz

(1763–1826)

(i) Wind Quintets, Op. 56/1–3; Wind Sextet in E flat, Op. 10; (ii) Wind Quintets, Op. 67/1–3; Horn Sonata 1, Op. 28; (iii) Wind Quintets, Op. 68/1–3; Horn Sonata 2, Op. 44

(BB)  Naxos (i) 8.553076; (ii) 8.553570; (iii) 8.554694. Michael Thompson Wind Quintet; Thompson (horn), Fowke (piano)

Wind Quintets, Op. 56/1–3; Op. 67/1–3; Op. 68/1–3; (i) Piano & Wind Quintets, Op. 41; Op. 53; Op. 54

Ⓜ  BIS-CD 1581/2. BPO Wind Quintet; (i) with Derwinger

Danzi was one of the first composers to cultivate the wind quintet; these diverting pieces offer unexpected pleasure. On Naxos the horn soloist Michael Thompson has gathered round him a superbly balanced group of London's leading wind players and they combine to give polished and beautifully blended performances. The Wind Sextet is in the tradition of wind Harmoniemusik and is fluently appealing. The second disc also includes Danzi's First Horn Sonata, probably modelled on Beethoven's similar work, although the style is more romantic. The Second Sonata is even more lyrically gallant, particularly in the theme and variations finale. But any one of these three discs will give much enjoyment.

The reissued BIS collection which costs about the same, is also played with much distinction and recorded with great clarity and presence. Although the Piano Quintets are less substantial, they are rather delightful all the same.

DAQUIN, Louis-Claude

(1694–1772)

12 Noëls for Organ

🔑 * Hyp. Helios CDH 55319. Herrick (organ of Church of St Rémy, Dieppe, France)

If you haven't discovered Daquin's Douze engaging Noëls before now, you are in for a treat. These 12 brief chorales are charmingly diverse in invention, from the buoyant imitation of Le Noël en duo to the piquant colouring of Noël sur les flutes and the lively closing Noël Suisse. Christopher Herrick registers them piquantly on this perfectly chosen French organ with its true Gallic accent, and plays with great spirit. The Hyperion recording could hardly be bettered.

DARNTON, Christian (1905–81)

Piano Concertino in C

(BB)  Naxos 8.557290. Donohoe, Northern Sinfonia – ROWLEY; GERHARDT; FERGUSON: Piano Concertos ***

Warmly lyrical, with a touch of Stravinskian neoclassicism and a dash of Shostakovich, and ending with a bravura display in the finale, Christian Darnton's Concertino for piano and strings makes a valuable addition to this imaginative collection of four British concertos, superbly performed by Peter Donohoe directing the Northern Sinfonia from the keyboard.

D'ASTORGA, Emanuele

(c. 1680–1757)

Stabat Mater

✿ Ⓜ  DHM/BMG 82876 60145-2. Monoyios, Mammel, Happel, Balthazar-Neumann Ch., Freiburg Bar. O, Hengelbrock – DURANTE: Magnificat in B flat; PERGOLESI: Confitebor tibi Domine *** ✿

 Hyp. CDA 67108. Gritton, Bickley, Agnew, Harvey, King's Consort Ch., King's Consort, King – BOCCHERINI: Stabat Mater ***

D'Astorga's setting was justly renowned in its time for its intensity of lyrical feeling and its broad flow of lyrical melody, notably in the solos and duets. Yet, unusually, it ends exultantly, celebrating Christ's 'victory' over the cross, with a lively if unadventurous extended final chorus. The German performance here is in every way persuasive, beautifully sung and played, and directed with much spirit by Hengelbrock. The recording is first class, and texts and translation are included.

Emanuele d'Astorga's Stabat Mater predates Boccherini's – with which it is coupled on Hyperion – by nearly a century and, unlike that work (and the Pergolesi setting on which it is based), is written like a miniature oratorio with soloists and chorus. The chorus opens and closes the work – the opening with touching melancholy, but the closing Christe quam sit hinc exire much more upbeat. In between, the various solos and duets are expressively quite intense, and overall this is a remarkably accomplished and rewarding piece, especially when sung as eloquently as it is on Hyperion, with excellent soloists and a fine choral contribution, all very well recorded.

DAVIES, Sir Henry Walford (1869–1941)

Everyman (oratorio; complete)

Ⓜ  Dutton CDLX 7141. Putnins, Staples, Ferrari, Johnston, London Oriana Ch., Kensington SO, Drummond

Written in 1904, Everyman follows the progress of Everyman from earth to heaven, a theme which echoes Elgar's Dream of Gerontius of four years earlier in a more homespun way. The impact of this performance is greatly enhanced by the clarity of the words, both from the four excellent soloists and from the vigorous chorus. It is true that Davies makes Death, a tenor-role, into rather too amiable a figure, and the melodic material could be more striking, but this is a powerful piece that richly deserves revival, here well directed by David Drummond in full, brilliant sound.

DAVIS, Carl (born 1936)

Aladdin (ballet; complete)

(BB)  Naxos 8.557898/9. Malaysian PO, composer

Carl Davis's score was written for the London Contemporary Dance Company in the 1990s, intended as a Christmas ballet. The music is colourful and melodic, somewhat after the style of film music, but it certainly doesn't lack inventive imagination. It is very well played by the Malaysian Philharmonic Orchestra and the composer ensures plenty of sparkle and expressive warmth. Very good recording, too. We hope there may be a DVD, which would be even more enjoyable.

DEBUSSY, Claude (1862–1918)

Concertante and Orchestral Music (almost complete)

Ⓑ  Chan. X10144 (4). Queffélec, Masters, Bell, King, McChrystal, Ulster O, Y. P. Tortelier

Chandos have now assembled Debussy's orchestral music (previously coupled with Ravel) in a bargain box of recordings which generally reflect the state of the art. There are excellent soloists in the concertante works. The subtlety and atmosphere of La Boîte à joujoux are captured splendidly, and the concertante works are equally sensitive. Not all the performances are a first choice, but the shorter works come off particularly well.

(i) Berceuse héroïque; (ii; iii) Danses sacrée et profane (for harp and strings); (ii) Images; Jeux; Marche écossaise; La Mer; (ii; iv) Nocturnes; (ii) Prélude à l'après-midi d'un faune; (ii; v) Première Rapsodie for Clarinet & Orchestra

🔑 ✿ Ⓑ * Ph. Duo (ADD) 438 742-2 (2). Concg. O, (i) Van Beinum; (ii) Haitink; with (iii) Badings; (iv) Women's Ch. of Coll. Mus.; (v) Pieterson

This Duo ranks as probably the finest Debussy collection in the CD catalogue. Although the programme as a whole is directed by Haitink, it is good that his distinguished predecessor, Eduard van Beinum, is remembered by the opening Berceuse héroïque, played with great delicacy and a real sense of mystery, with the early (1957) stereo highly effective. For the Danses sacrée et profane Haitink takes over, with elegant playing from the harpist, Vera Badings, who is excellently balanced. Haitink's reading of Images is second to none and is beautifully played by the wonderful Dutch orchestra; this applies equally to Jeux, while in the Nocturnes the choral balance is judged perfectly, and few versions are quite as beguiling and seductive as Haitink's. His La Mer is comparable with Karajan's 1964 recording. The hazily sensuous Prélude à l'après-midi d'un faune and the undervalued Clarinet Rhapsody are also played atmospherically, although the former is more overtly languorous in Karajan's hands. Again, the Philips recording is truthful and natural, with beautiful perspectives and realistic colour, a marvellously refined sound.

Berceuse héroïque; Images; Jeux; Marche écossaise; La Mer; Musiques pour le Roi Lear; Nocturnes; Prélude à l'après-midi d'un faune; Printemps

(BB)  EMI Gemini (ADD) 3 65235-2 (2). Fr. R. & TV Ch. & O, Martinon

Martinon's is a very good Images, beautifully played, with the orchestral detail vivid and glowing. Jeux is also very fine, with the sound attractively spacious. La Mer enjoys the idiomatic advantage of fine French orchestral playing, even if it does not quite match Karajan or Haitink. The Musiques pour le Roi Lear is a real rarity; the colourful Fanfare remains impressive, and Le Sommeil de Lear is highly evocative. The Nocturnes are beautifully played, as indeed is Printemps, with Martinon penetrating its charm. At budget price these are competitive recommendations, and the current transfers are warmly atmospheric; even if the upper end of the range is rather brightly lit, there is plenty of depth in the sound.

Berceuse héroïque; 3 Etudes (arr. Jarrell); (i) 3 Nocturnes; Pelléas et Mélisande: Symphonic Suite (arr. Constant). Suite bergamasque: Clair de lune (arr. Caplet)

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8.570994. Lyon Nat O, Märkl; (i) with Leizig R. Ch.

The two major items here are the set of three Nocturnes, central in Debussy's output, and the substantial Symphonic Suite from the opera, Pelléas et Mélisande, which Marius Constant put together using almost entirely the evocative orchestral interludes from the opera. Märkl's performances are warm and idiomatic, and the only reservation is that almost inevitably there is rather a lack of contrast in the opera suite which moves slowly. The three Nocturnes are the high-spot of the whole collection. The passage in Fêtes where one hears a procession from afar on muted trumpets is magically achieved, while Sirènes brings a vital yet languorous contribution from the Leipzig Radio Choir. The Caplet orchestration of Clair de lune is probably the best-known item, sumptuously wrought and the Berceuse héroïque, written as a tribute to King Albert of the Belgians in the First World War, is similarly evocative. The orchestration of the 3 Etudes, made by Michael Jarrell as recently as 1991, represents a different approach to orchestration, a degree sharper, appropriate enough in some of Debussy's more advanced music. Altogether a rewarding collection, immaculately recorded, showing Märkl as a sensitive Debussian.

La Boîte à joujoux; Children's Corner (orch. Caplet); Danse (orch. Ravel); (i) Danses sacrée et profane; (ii) Fantaisie for Piano & Orchestra; La Plus que lente; Khamma; Petite suite (orch. Büsser); (iii) Première rapsodie for Clarinet & Orchestra; (iv) Rapsodie for Saxophone

(BB)  EMI Gemini (ADD) 3 65240-2 (2). Fr. R. & TV O, Martinon; with (i) Jamet; (ii) Ciccolini; (iii) Dangain; (iv) Londe

Children's Corner and La Boîte à joujoux contain much to enchant the ear, as does the tuneful Petite suite. The rarity here is Khamma. This and the two Rapsodies are underrated and, although there are alternative versions of all these pieces, none is more economically priced. The performances are sympathetic and authoritative, and the recordings have been remastered successfully. The sound is full and spacious, with an attractive ambient glow. A bargain.

La Boîte à joujoux (orch. Caplet); La Mer; Prélude à l'après-midi d'un faune; 3 Préludes: Ce qu'a vu le vent d'ouest; Feuilles mortes; Feux d'artifice (orch. Colin Matthews)

❀ Ⓑ * EMI 5 58045-2. (i) BPO, Rattle

Recorded live, with all the extra tension that brings, this is one of Sir Simon Rattle's most outstanding CDs. The Prélude à l'après-midi d'un faune opens with a deliciously translucent flute solo, and Rattle brings a richly sensuous allure and a warm flexibility of phrasing to its central climax that is quite irresistible. La Boîte à joujoux is quite magical in its subtle rhythmic feeling and luminous detail, quite the finest account in the catalogue, with all the quotations wittily observed. La Mer is unforgettable, and again unsurpassed, not even by Karajan. The opening is extraordinarily atmospheric, the play of the waves shimmering in the sunlight, and the closing dialogue between wind and sea gathers in tension to produce a thrillingly ferocious closing storm. Colin Matthews's Debussian scoring in his orchestration of the three piano Préludes is uncannily accurate: Feuilles mortes is hauntingly evocative and Feux d'artifice, with its spluttering sparkle, all but trumps the piano original. Throughout the disc, the recording, balanced by Mike Clements, is very much in the demonstration bracket. (The contents of this CD, plus the contents of the Encore disc over the page (Images; Jeux and Le Roi Lear), have also been reissued in a five-CD bargain boxed set, coupled with a Ravel programme – EMI 5 14565-2 – see under the coupling, below.) But the present disc is unmissable on its own.

Children's Corner (orch. Caplet); Jeux; La mer; Prélude à l'après-midi d'un faune

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8.570759 Lyon Nat. O, Märkl

If anything, Märkl's second Debussy collection is even finer than the first. Once again he proves a natural Debussian, and the Lyon auditorium's warmly glowing acoustics are ideal for the music. La mer is placed seductively in southern climes, yet the force of the wind in the finale is not diminished. The Prélude à l'après-midi d'un faune really captures the sensuous afternoon rapture of the faune, and the sensuous playing from strings and woodwind alike also illuminates Jeux. Debussy's Poème danse is expertly paced, the forward momentum most tellingly controlled, the luminous orchestral colouring very seductive, while the climax evolves passionately. The orchestra then clearly relishes Caplet's vivid scoring of Children's Corner and captures all its considerable charm, with the Golliwog's Cakewalk ending the programme vigorously.

Danse (Tarantelle styrienne); Sarabande (orch. Ravel)

(*) Australian Decca Eloquence 476 2452. Concg. O, Chailly – RAVEL: Boléro; MUSSORGSKY: Pictures at an Exhibition **(*)

Ravel's orchestrations of two Debussy piano pieces, the Sarabande from the suite Pour le piano, and Danse, an arrangement of the early Tarantelle styrienne, make delightful and comparatively rare items in Chailly's disc demonstrating Ravel's genius as an orchestrator. Ripely brilliant recording.

Danse sacrée et danse profane (for harp and string orchestra)

() Testament mono SBT 1053. Mason Stockton, Concert Arts Strings, Slatkin – CRESTON: Quartet; RAVEL: Introduction & Allegro; TURINA: La oración del torero; VILLA-LOBOS: Quartet 6 ()

Felix Slatkin and his Hollywood colleagues give as atmospheric an account of the Danse sacrée et danse profane as any on record, and Anne Mason Stockton is the excellent harpist. The mono recording dates from 1951 but is uncommonly good. This comes as part of a remarkably fine anthology of Hollywood Quartet recordings.

Danses sacrée et profane; Images; Jeux; Prélude à l'après-midi d'un faune

Ⓜ  Sup. (ADD) SU 3478-2 011. Czech PO, Baudo (with Patras)

Jeux is clothed in richly glowing colours, with ravishingly seductive string-textures, while Baudo displays a subtle feeling for the music's ebb and flow. He also lets the famous Prélude unfold with a natural progress and the central climax of the piece flowers quite spontaneously. At the very opening of Images the piquant oboe solo is ear-catching. Les Parfums de la nuit waft languorously in the evening breeze, and the opening of Le Matin d'un jour de fête is hauntingly evocative before the orchestra blazes into life. This, like the Danses sacrée, was recorded a decade later with comparable success.

(i) Danses sacrée et profane; (ii) 3 Ballades de François Villon; Le Jet d'eau

 DG 471 614-2. Cleveland O, Boulez, with (i) Wellbaum; (ii) Hagley – RAVEL: Menuet antique, etc. ***

An evocative account of the Danse sacrée et danse profane, ideal listening to cool you on a summer evening, perfectly done by Lisa Wellbaum and the Cleveland Orchestra. Alison Hagley, the Mélisande in Boulez's Welsh National Opera DVD of Pelléas, gives highly appealing accounts of the Baudelaire setting, Le Jet d'eau and the Trois Ballades de François Villon. Altogether a lovely recital.

6 Epigraphes antiques (orch. Ansermet); Jeux

() Testament mono SBT 1324. SRO, Ansermet – SAINT-SAËNS: Danse macabre; – DUKAS: L'Apprenti Sorcier, etc. **(*)

Ansermet's scoring of the Six Epigraphes Antiques is most felicitous. The performances have great atmosphere and real style; and it is good to have the Ansermet account of his own transcription, whose tempi are so perfectly judged and textures so perfectly balanced, back in circulation. Very decent mono sound. A most winning reissue, well worth investigating.

6 Epigraphes antiques (orch. Ansermet); Estampes: Pagodes (orch. André Caplet); Printemps (suite symphonique; original (1887) choral version, reconstructed Emil de Cou); Prélude: La puerta del vino (orch. Henri Büsser); Suite bergamasque (orch. Gustave Cloez & André Caplet)

(*) Ara. Z 6734. San Francisco Ballet O, De Cou; (i) with soloists and Ch.

A fascinating disc, and most fascinating of all is the original choral version of Printemps, which sounds positively voluptuous in this superbly rich recording. The result will intrigue all Debussians and its seductive impact will surely thrill all listeners. The orchestrated piano pieces are also very successful. The fastidiously scored Epigraphes antiques are very beguiling; and the whole set is made to sound lustrous in its impressionistic colouring. The San Francisco Ballet Orchestra plays very well indeed, and the spacious acoustic provides an impressively full and naturally balanced sound-picture.

Fantaisie for Piano & Orchestra

🔑 (BB)  Warner Apex (ADD). 8573 89232-2. Queffélec, Monte Carlo Op. O, Jordan – RAVEL: Piano Concertos ***

The Warner Apex disc offers an inexpensive coupling of the major works for piano and orchestra by both Debussy and Ravel, and in Anne Queffélec's hands the Fantaisie makes a very pleasing impression indeed and is very well recorded.

(i) Fantaisie for Piano and Orchestra. Solo Piano Music

Ⓝ 🔑 * Ph. 475 7301 (4) Kocsis; (i) Budapest Fest. O, Ivan Fischer – RAVEL: Piano Concertos ()

Kocsis's recital of some of Debussy's shorter pieces (included here) won the Gramophone 1990 instrumental award. Now his subsequent recordings have been added to make up this cherishable complete survey. It is in every way outstanding. The recording of the piano is still among the most realistic we have ever heard and artistically this collection is even more distinguished in terms of pianistic finesse, sensitivity and tonal refinement.

Images: Ibéria (only)

🔑 Ⓜ  Telarc CD 80574. Cincinnati SO, López-Cobos – TURINA: Danzas fantásticas etc. ***

Images: Ibéria. La Mer; (i) Nocturnes. Prélude à l'après-midi d'un faune

Ⓜ  RCA SACD 82876 66374-2. Boston SO, Munch – RAVEL: Boléro, etc.

Ⓜ  Ph. (ADD) 464 697-2. Concg. O, Haitink; (i) with female Ch.

Images; Jeux; Le Roi Lear (incidental music)

(BB)  EMI Encore 5 75218-2. CBSO, Rattle

Images; La Mer; Nocturnes: Nuages; Fêtes (only); Prélude à l'après-midi d'un faune

Ⓜ  RCA (ADD) 82876 59416-2. Boston SO, Munch

Images; La Mer; Prélude à l'après-midi d'un faune

Ⓑ *() DG Entrée 477 5014. Santa Cecilia Nat. Ac. O, Bernstein

Images; (i) Nocturnes; Le Martyre de Saint-Sébastien: (symphonic fragments); La Mer; Prélude à l'après-midi d'un faune; Printemps (orch. Büsser)

(BB)  Universal 476 5882(2). Montreal SO, Dutoit; (i) with chorus

Images; (i) Nocturnes; Prélude à l'après-midi d'un faune

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI 3 91967-2. LSO, Previn; (i) with Amb. Ch.

Haitink's magical performances and recordings (from the mid- to late-1970s), extracted from Haitink's Duo above, have stood the test of time and remain unsurpassed. Indeed, the allure of the orchestral sound as remastered here is quite unforgettable. An admirable choice for Philips's set of '50 Great Recordings'.

Previn's account of Images was the first EMI digital record to appear, and every colour and sonority, however subtle, registers. There is much to admire in Previn's performance, too. Dynamic nuances are carefully observed; there is much felicitous wind playing and no want of intelligent and musical phrasing, and the Prélude à l'après-midi d'un faune is equally vividly captured by the engineers. The Nocturnes, recorded five years later, also have great spontaneity. Some might feel that the Sirènes are too voluptuous, but this matches Previn's extrovert approach. The spectacular qualities of the EMI sound-picture certainly provide comparably clear definition and no lack of ambient atmosphere. This reissue is certainly an apt candidate for EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century'.

Jesus López-Cobos manages the colour nuancing impressively in Ibéria, and if he is not quite a match for Reiner, he finds a fragrant allure in Les parfums de la nuit and plenty of glitter in Le matin d'un jour de fête. The warm ambience of Cincinnati Music Hall is splendidly caught in the first-class Telarc recording, the balance wholly natural. With outstanding Turina couplings, this disc can certainly be recommended in its new mid-price format.

In Images Rattle is memorably atmospheric, while in Jeux he is just a touch more expansive than most rivals and also more evocative. The King Lear excerpts sound splendid. First-rate recording, very vivid but beautifully balanced. At Encore price this is a truly remarkable bargain.

Munch's vintage accounts of Debussy were transformed on CD, with the acoustic now casting a wonderfully warm aura over the orchestra, the sound gloriously expansive and translucent. Munch's inclination to go over the top may not appeal to all listeners, but the results are compelling and the orchestral bravura is thrilling. The Prélude à l'après-midi d'un faune makes a ravishing interlude, expanding to a rapturous climax. As can be seen, Ibéria has been reissued separately in SACD format, coupled with Ravel's Boléro, Rapsodie espagnole and La Valse, with the sound even more glamorous, but losing something in the upper range.

In Images and the Nocturnes Dutoit is freer than some with rubato, as well as in his warm, expressive moulding of phrase. His sharp pointing of rhythm, as in the Spanish dances of Ibéria or the processional march in Fêtes, is also highly characteristic of his approach to French music. By contrast, the remaining works are strong rather than evocative. However the documentation is non-existent.

A recording from 1989 which we have not discovered before shows Bernstein at his most atmospherically seductive in Images, alluring in Les parfums de la nuit, glittering elsewhere. However, the account of the Prélude à l'après-midi d'un faune must be the longest on record, beautifully played, especially at the opening and close, but indulgently expanded. He attempts a Canute too on La Mer, and undoubtedly is more successful than the king in wilfully controlling the ocean's behaviour, especially in the closing section. The concentration of the playing is undoubtedly gripping, but this is not an ideal choice for DG's Entrée label designed for inexperienced listeners.

Jeux; La Mer; Nocturnes: Nuages, Fêtes (only)

() Testament mono SBT 1108. St Cecilia Ac., Rome O, De Sabata – RESPIGHI: Fountains of Rome ()

Victor de Sabata's 1947 account with his Rome orchestra of Jeux brings great character and atmosphere to this wonderful score. Although the two purely orchestral Nocturnes first appeared on record in 1948, de Sabata's account of La Mer did not; it makes its first appearance now, but it is still music-making of quality that deserves a place in any Debussy collection.

(i) Jeux; (ii) La Mer; 24 Préludes (arr. & orch. Colin Matthews)

Ⓝ Ⓜ * Hallé (i) CDHLL 7518; (ii) CDHLL 7513 Hallé O, Elder

These are highly compelling Hallé accounts of Jeux and La Mer, both played with subtle rubato, infinitely varied dynamic and much seductive atmosphere. Tension is high throughout both works while the transparent acoustic of Manchester's splendid Bridgewater Hall brings diaphanous atmospheric detail and helps climaxes to expand superbly. The same comments apply to Colin Matthews's highly imaginative orchestration of Debussy's piano Préludes, which have shimmering textures and are, if anything even more impressionistic than the piano originals. Only Feux d'artifice and the rather pompous S. Pickwick Esq are less than ideally transcribed, but Danseuses de Delphes, Des pas sur la neige and Les fée sont d'exquises danseuses (on CDHLL 7518) and Le vent dans la plaine, Les sons et les parfums, and Feuilles mortes (on CDHLL 7513) are magically evoked, with Andrew Keener's balancing skill ensuring a first class sound balance. The two CDs are available separately.

Jeux; Prélude à l'après-midi d'un faune; (i) La Chute de la maison Usher (ed. & orch. Robert Orledge; DVD version)

 Cap. DVD 93517. Dancers, VSO, Foster, (i) with Soloists

Here is an interesting production from the Bregenz Festival of 2006. Debussy toyed for some 15 years with plans for two Poe operas, The Devil in the Belfry (which came to nothing) and The Fall of the House of Usher, on which he worked between 1908 and 1917, but which he never finished. Robert Orledge has prepared a remarkably effective performing version of the score (he is a brilliant orchestrator). The present highly imaginative staging assigns the four main roles not only to singers but also to some dancers of the Royal Ballet. It casts a strong spell, as do the performances of Prélude à l'après-midi d'un faune and Jeux in the choreography of Kim Brandstrup. Generally fine playing from the Vienna Symphony Orchestra, even if they are not always successful in producing a really idiomatic Debussy sonority.

Le Martyre de Saint-Sébastien: La Cour des lys; Danse extatique (DVD version)

 Arthaus DVD 100 314. Rotterdam Philh. O, Gergiev (V/D: Bob van den Burg) – PROKOFIEV: Scythian Suite; STRAVINSKY: Piano Concerto, etc. ***

This DVD shows something of the breadth of Gergiev's musical sympathies (and, in the rehearsal sequences, his charm, which persuades his players to give of their best). He has a genuine feeling for Debussy and we can imagine him directing a distinguished Pelléas.

Le Martyre de Saint-Sébastien (symphonic fragments); Prélude à l'après-midi d'un faune (DVD version)

 MDG Audio DVD 9371099-5; CD 337 1099-2. Orchester der Beethovenhalle, Bonn, Soustrot – RAVEL: Ma Mère l'Oye; La Valse ***

Soustrot gives highly atmospheric, slightly understated but not under-characterized accounts of these scores, with no exaggerated nuances, only unforced music-making. The recorded sound is beautifully balanced too, with the details emerging with both clarity and subtlety. Altogether a most distinguished coupling. It sounds particularly real in its Audio DVD format – this is one of the finest Debussy recordings in the catalogue.

La Mer (DVD version)

Ⓝ (*) EuroArts DVD 2050136. Chicago SO, Barenboim (with BOULEZ: Notations I – IV) – FALLA: El sombrero de tres picos

A fluent, lucid account of La Mer from the Chicago Orchestra captured during their European tour in April 2000 and recorded in the Philharmonie in Cologne. Expert camera work and excellent sound. The DVD also includes a twenty-minute conversation between Barenboim and Pierre Boulez, whose Notations I–IV opens the programme.

La mer; Prélude á l'après-midi d'un faune (DVD version)

Ⓝ * Sony DVD 88697202449 Berlin PO, Karajan – RAVEL: Daphnis et Chloë –Suite 2 ****

Glorious performances of both masterpieces which would be difficult to surpass. Perhaps Karajan's DG recordings on LP during the mid-1960s are even more sumptuous but these superbly controlled accounts are both beautifully recorded and expertly directed for the cameras. The performances were recorded at the Philharmonie in 1987, two years before Karajan's death.

La Mer (CD versions)

🔑 Ⓜ * RCA (ADD) 82876 71614-2. Chicago SO, Reiner – RESPIGHI: Fountains & Pines of Rome ****

🔑 Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 447 426-2. BPO, Karajan – MUSSORGSKY: Pictures; RAVEL: Boléro ***

🔑 Ⓜ  RCA SACD (ADD) 82876 61387-2. Boston SO, Munch – IBERT: Escales ; SAINT-SAËNS: Symphony 3 in C min. *** ✿

Ⓝ Ⓜ  RCO 08001. Concg. O, Jansons – DUTILLEUX: L'Arbre des Songes; RAVEL: La Valse ***

 Naïve V 4946. O. Nat. de France, Svetlanov – SCRIABIN: Poème de l'extase ***

La Mer; Nocturnes

✿ Ⓜ  EMI 5 62746-2 . Philh. Ch. & O, Giulini – RAVEL: Alborada; Daphnis et Chloé: Suite 2 *** ✿

La Mer; (i) Nocturnes; Prélude à l'après-midi d'un faune; Printemps

(BB)  Regis RRC 1177. LSO; (i) L. Symphony Ch.; Frühbeck de Burgos (without Printemps)

La Mer; Nocturnes: Nuages; Fêtes (only); Le Martyre de Saint-Sébastien (symphonic fragments); Prélude à l'après-midi d'un faune

() Testament mono SBT 1011. Philh. O, Cantelli

La Mer; Prélude à l'après-midi d'un faune

🔑 Ⓜ * DG (ADD) 477 7161. BPO, Karajan – RAVEL: Boléro, etc. ***

 Atma SACD 2 2549 Metropolitan O of Montreal, Nezet-Seguin – BRITTEN: Four Sea Interludes ; MERCURE: Kaleidoscope ***;

The Metropolitan Orchestra of Montreal may not be so well known outside Canada as the great Montreal Symphony Orchestra, but here under its Music Director, Yannick Nézet-Séguin it shows what a formidable band it is, offering performances both incisive and refined, notably in the two evocative Debussy masterpieces, reflecting the acoustic of the Church of Saint-Nom-de-Jesus in Montreal, the recording venue. Woodwind solos are clean and atmospheric, with the warm flute soloist in L'après-midi specially named, Marie Andrée Benny.

Reiner's 1960 recording has all the atmosphere that makes his version of Ibéria, recorded at the same time, so unforgettable. Of course the marvellous acoustics of the Chicago Hall contribute to the appeal of this superbly played account: Reiner's record gives great pleasure: the effect is just a bit more lustrous than Karajan's remastered DG version, although the upper range is more brightly lit.

After more than four decades Karajan's 1964 account of La Mer is still very much in a class of its own. It enshrines the spirit of the work as effectively as it observes the letter, and the superb playing of the Berlin Orchestra, for all its virtuosity and sound, is totally self-effacing. It is now available, coupled with Karajan's outstanding (1966) record of Mussorgsky's Pictures at an Exhibition and a gripping account of Ravel's Boléro, but we prefer the original coupling of the Prélude à l'après-midi d'un faune and Ravel's Daphnis et Chloé, which are equally unforgettable.

Munch's account of La Mer dates from 1956, yet this new transfer makes it sound better then ever, incredibly vivid for its period (or any period, for that matter). Even though the sound is close-miked, the Boston acoustic provided plenty of atmosphere to match the performance's undoubted excitement. Outstanding couplings and expanded sound on offer to those with SACD systems.

Largely thanks to the Concertgebouw acoustic and the richness of the orchestra's string section the opening of La Mer in Jansons' recording is exceptionally warm, and it is only with the second section that the chill of the English Channel is conveyed in Debussy's magical orchestral effects. The final section, the dialogue of the wind and the sea, brings a thrilling final build-up.

Giulini's early stereo recordings of Debussy (from 1962) remain very distinguished indeed. It would be difficult to fault his reading of La Mer, and the Nocturnes are played with great delicacy of feeling and refinement of detail, with a fine contribution from the Philharmonia Chorus, which gives the final movement great allure. Both works here are beautifully recorded. The Ravel coupling is equally fine, and this CD is fully worthy of its inclusion among EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century'.

Cantelli's account of the four symphonic fragments from Le Martyre de Saint-Sébastien is one of the most beautiful performances he ever committed to vinyl; the textures are impeccably balanced and phrases flawlessly shaped. Its atmosphere is as concentrated as that of the legendary first recording under Coppola. La Mer and the Prélude à l'après-midi d'un faune are hardly less perfect, and the transfers are excellent.

Although strong in Mediterranean atmosphere, Frühbeck de Burgos's account of La Mer has an underlying grip, so he can concentrate on evocation at the opening and continue to lead the ear on spontaneously. Overall there is plenty of excitement and much subtlety of detail, both here and in the Nocturnes, where textures again have the sensuousness of southern climes, and no lack of glitter. The Prélude à l'après-midi d'un faune brings lovely, delicate flute-playing from Paul Edmund-Davies and a richly moulded string climax. If these are not conventional readings, they are full of impulse and are superbly recorded.

Svetlanov obviously has an intuitive feeling for Debussy's La Mer, and he established excellent rapport with these fine players. A very atmospheric account, which is finely paced and superbly played. This is a performance of stature, as is that of the Scriabin. An excellent note by Marc Vignal and very good sound.

Prélude à l'après-midi d'un faune; La Cathédrale engloutie (orch. Stokowski)

Ⓜ ((*)) Cala mono CACD 0526. NBC SO, Stokowski – GOULD: 2 Marches for Orchestra; HOLST: The Planets ()

The Prélude à l'après-midi d'un faune derives from an NBC broadcast dating from March 1943. Apart from a couple of blemishes (the opening has a fair amount of swish), the sound is acceptable, but the performance is more than that: it is individual and compelling, with the faun's reverie celebrated with some particularly lush string-playing. The same comments apply to Stokowski's superb account of his transcription of La Cathédrale engloutie, dating from a February 1944 broadcast but sounding rather shrill. There are some technical faults: a sudden brief drop in level quite early on, some pitch fluctuation, etc., but the magnetism of the performance is never in doubt. Two attractive fill-ups for an individual account of The Planets.

COLLECTIONS

Orchestral Transcriptions & Arrangements: Children's Corner; Clair de lune (2 versions: by André Caplet & Stokowski); Danse (Ravel); 6 Épigraphes antiques (Ansermet); Estampes: La Soirée dans Grenade; Petite Suite (Henri Büsser); Sarabande (Ravel)

(*) ATMA Surround Sound SACD SACD2 2377. Quebec SO, Talmi

Yoav Talmi and his fine Orchestre Symphonique de Québec present these arrangements with rich, sensuous feeling, especially effective in Stokowski's luscious arrangement of Clair de lune, where by contrast André Caplet's simple scoring hardly alters its original character; both versions are beautifully played. The Six Épigraphes antiques, alluring in their atmospheric warmth, are also without quite the clarity of detail Ansermet brought to them himself. The two Ravel transcriptions are among the highlights, the noble Sarabande and the colourful Danse. This is vivaciously performed but might have had more sparkle; this can be partly attributed to the recording, the empty-hall effect obvious if you bring in the back speakers (very subtly) and then luxuriate in the glowing string and woodwind sounds. Undoubtedly this is a beguiling collection, but its voluptuousness may not suit all tastes.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Cello Sonata in D min.

Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 475 8239 Rostropovich, Britten – SCHUBERT: Arpeggione Sonata (*); SCHUMANN: 3 Stucke in Volkston ***

(BB)  Warner Apex 0927 40599-2. Noras, Rigutto – FRANCK; FAURÉ: Cello Sonatas ***

(*) ASV CDDCA 796. Gregor-Smith, Wrigley – BRIDGE; DOHNANYI: Sonatas **(*)

The classic version by Rostropovich and Britten leads the field. It has a clarity and point which suits the music perfectly and the recording is first class.

From Arto Noras and Bruno Rigutto comes as fine a performance of the Cello Sonata as any in the catalogue (excepting Rostropovich and Britten). Noras was recorded in 1995, and the sound is good. At the price it is a real bargain.

Bernard Gregor-Smith and Yolande Wrigley play with great refinement and authority, as well as much sensitivity. They are perhaps too closely balanced but this does not prevent their record being highly desirable.

Le Petit Nègre; Petite pièce; Première rapsodie; Rapsodie for Cor Anglais; Rapsodie for Saxophone; Sonata for Flute, Viola & Harp; Syrinx

Ⓜ  Cala CACD 1017 (2). Bennett, Daniel, Campbell, Gough, Watkins, Haram, Tapping, Jones – SAINT-SAËNS: Chamber Music ***

The Rapsodie for Cor Anglais, with which this Cala Duo opens, is more familiar in its form for alto saxophone; it was originally to have been called Rapsodie mauresque. Nicholas Daniel plays it with great sensitivity. It is also heard in its alternative form, splendidly played by Simon Haram. The performance of the Sonata for Flute, Viola & Harp is also highly sensitive.

Piano Trio in G (1880)

🔑  Hyp. CDA 67114. Florestan Trio – FAURÉ; RAVEL: Piano Trios ***

Debussy's Piano Trio, a product of his teenage years, may reveal few signs of his mature style but it makes a very apt and delightful coupling for the Ravel and Fauré works. With personnel led by the pianist Susan Tomes, the Florestans follow up the success of their prize-winning Schumann disc for Hyperion in a strong and urgent reading, at once highly polished and flexibly expressive. Vivid sound.

The Joachim Trio (coupled with Ravel) play with consistent sensitivity and finesse. This is a thoroughly musical account and beautifully recorded; but it would not necessarily be a first choice, though the attractive price-tag (and the agreeable Schmitt bonus) makes it competitive. (Naxos 8.550934)

String Quartet in G min., Op. 10

🔑 Ⓜ  Ph. 464 699-2. Italian Qt – RAVEL: Quartet ***

Ⓑ  EMI 3 66557-2. Formosa Qt – MOZART: String Quartet 14 in G; SCHUBERT: Quartettsatz; WOLF: Italian Serenade ***

Ⓜ  Biddulph WH 0012. Ysaÿe Qt – FAURÉ: String Quartet; STRAVINSKY: Concertino 3 Pieces; Double Canon ***

(i) String Quartet; (ii) Syrinx

🔑 Ⓑ * CfP (ADD) 3 82231-2. (i) Chilingirian Qt; (ii) Philippa Davies – RAVEL: Introduction and Allegro; String Quartet ****

The Chilingirian coupling is in every way competitive. They give a thoroughly committed account with well-judged tempi and very musical phrasing. The Scherzo is vital and spirited, and there is no want of poetry in the slow movement. The recording has plenty of body and presence and has the benefit of a warm acoustic. The coupling is now made triply attractive by the inclusion of not only a fine account of Syrinx for solo flute, which opens the disc, but also an outstanding version of Ravel's intoxicating Introduction and Allegro, making this Classics for Pleasure reissue a bargain of the highest order and sounding very good indeed.

It need hardly be said that the playing of the Quartetto Italiano is outstanding. Perfectly judged ensemble, weight and tone still make this a most satisfying choice and, even if it is rather short measure, the Philips recording engineers have produced a vivid and truthful sound-picture. However, it has now been promoted from bargain to mid-price.

The Formosa Quartet Taiwan, give masterly performances of all four items on their disc in EMI's Debut series. The Debussy develops into a searchingly intense performance, with the third movement Andantino hushed and with an inner depth that makes it the emotional centre of the work. Refined and polished playing in all four movements that yet captures the tensions of live performance. Excellent sound.

The Ysaÿe Quartet, captured in 2005 and 2006, are noted interpreters of the Debussy, and their Fauré and Stravinsky couplings are hardly less satisfying.

As we know from their Haydn recordings, the Kodály Quartet are an excellent ensemble, and they too give a thoroughly enjoyable account. This music-making has the feel of a live performance; these players also have the benefit of a generous fill-up and very good recorded sound. Excellent value. (Naxos 8.550249)

Syrinx; Bilitis (arr. Lenski); (i) La Plus que lente

 EMI 5 56982-2. Pahud; (i) Kovacevich – PROKOFIEV: Flute Sonata; RAVEL: Chansons madécasses ***

Syrinx has rarely sounded more erotic or other-worldly. The Bilitis is a transcription by Karl Lenski of the Six épigraphes antiques for piano duet (1914). Emmanuel Pahud is sensitive both to every nuance and dynamic subtlety and to the spirit of this highly effective transcription. Stephen Kovacevich gives a beautifully characterized account of Debussy's satire of a salon waltz, La plus que lente, as good as any and better than most.

Violin Sonata

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * Decca (ADD) 460 006-2. Chung, Lupu – FRANCK: Violin Sonata * ✿ ; CHAUSSON: Poème ****

Ⓜ  DG 477 5448 (2). Mintz, Bronfman (with Recital of Encores by ALBÉNIZ; COUPERIN; GLAZUNOV; GRANADOS; KREISLER; WEBER; WIENIAWSKI) – FAURÉ; FRANCK; RAVEL: Violin Sonatas ***

 DG 445 880-2. Dumay, Pires – FRANCK: Violin Sonata; RAVEL: Berceuse, etc. ***

Ⓑ  CfP 575 80422. Little, Lane – POULENC: Violin Sonata; RAVEL: Violin Sonata, etc. ***

Kyung-Wha Chung plays with marvellous character and penetration, and her partnership with Radu Lupu could hardly be more fruitful. Nothing is pushed to extremes and everything is in perfect perspective. The recording sounds admirably real.

Shlomo Mintz gives a performance which gives much pleasure. This can be recommended alongside – though not in preference to – Chung and Lupu. However, Mintz and Bronfman have the additional advantage of offering fine accounts of the Fauré and Ravel Sonatas and a magnificent one of the Franck, with an attractive collection of encores thrown in for good measure.

Augustin Dumay and Maria João Pires give as idiomatic and sensitive an account of the Debussy Sonata as one could wish for, and those wanting their particular coupling with Franck and Ravel need not really hesitate.

Tasmin Little and Piers Lane also give a highly dedicated performance which tautly holds together the often fragmentary argument, making the result sound spontaneous in its total concentration. Excellent sound and a first-rate coupling.

Violin Sonata; Nocturne et Scherzo; Beau soir; La fille aux cheveux de lin; Minstrels; Il pleure dans mon coeur

 Avie AV 2059. Graffin, Désert – ENESCU: Impressions d'enfance; RAVEL: Sonata; Tzigane ***

The performance of the Violin Sonata from Philippe Graffin and Claire Désert is delightfully chimerical, sensitively small-scaled. But this very musical partnership offers also the early Nocturne et Scherzo. The other transcriptions are by Arthur Hartmann, except Minstrels, which Debussy himself arranged in 1914. The recording throughout has an attractive intimacy, and the couplings are all well worth having.

PIANO MUSIC

Music for Piano Duet and Two Pianos

Danses sacrée et profane; En blanc et noir; Lindaraja; Nocturnes (trans. RAVEL); Prélude à l'après-midi d'un faune

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55014. Coombs, Scott

Stephen Coombs and Christopher Scott made an outstanding début with this fine recording, which leads the field in this repertoire. Very highly recommended.

6 Épigraphes antiques; Marche écossaise sur un thème populaire; La Mer; Petite Suite; Symphonie in B min.

 Quartz QTZ 2048. Piano Four Hands (Tong & Hasegawa)

La Mer comes off here with astonishingly effective brilliance. Of course Debussy finished it first in a four-handed piano arrangement, and although the orchestration obviously adds a great deal, it stands up well in the present format, with remarkable inner detail, and the exciting performance by Joseph Tong and Waka Hasegawa makes a vivid impact. The delightful Petite Suite (more familiar in Büsser's elegant orchestral transcription) is an equal success. But the entirely uncharacteristic Symphonie has little to recommend it. The clumsily thick-textured opening is unrecognizable as Debussian; only the more lyrical central section offers any degree of interest. The Marche écossaise is exuberant and the Six Épigraphes antiques are mysterious in their delicate evocation. Altogether an excellent collection, played with persuasively spontaneous feeling, and well (if fairly resonantly) recorded.

Solo piano music

2 Arabesques; Ballade; Berceuse héroïque; Children's Corner; Danse; Danse bohémienne; D'un cahier d'esquisses; Estampes; 12 Etudes; Hommage à Haydn; Images 1–2; L'Isle joyeuse; Masques; Mazurka; Nocturne; Le Petit Nègre; La plus que lente; Pour le piano; Préludes, Books 1–2; Rêverie; Suite bergamasque; Valse romantique. (i) Fantaisie for piano & orchestra

🔑 Ⓜ () EMI mono 5 65855-2 (4). Gieseking; (i) with Hessischen R. O, Schröder

The two sets of Préludes date from 1953 and 1954, as indeed do most of the recordings collected here. The earliest is Children's Corner from 1951, which is also the date of the Frankfurt recording of the Fantaisie. The latter calls for some (albeit not great) tolerance, but the remaining performances sound better than ever. Gieseking's artistry is too well known to need further exegesis or advocacy. A marvellous set which all pianists should investigate.

Complete Works for Solo Piano

* Decca 452 022-2 (2) (Volume 1); 460 247-2 (2). Thibaudet

Beautifully recorded, Jean-Yves Thibaudet's wide range of tone and dynamic is used with great imagination, and his playing often suggests an improvisatory quality. The music's subtlety of colour, with half-lights as well as sudden blazes of light (as in the stunning Feux d'artifice), is fully understood by this fine artist, and there is no question as to the spontaneity of his playing. The Préludes are among the finest on record.

But most impressive are the Etudes, unsurpassed on record in their strong characterization, flair and virtuosity – not even by Mitsuko Uchida's famous Philips set – and, with Decca's recording so real and immediate, they project with vivid spontaneity as at a live recital. These four CDs make a clear first choice among modern digital recordings of this totally absorbing repertoire.

2 Arabesques; Ballade; Children's Corner; Estampes; Mazurka; Le Petit nègre; La Plus que lente; Suite bergamasque

🔑  Onyx ONYX 4018. Rogé

Pascal Rogé is now embarking on a second survey of this repertoire for Onyx. He has already given us a superb set of the Préludes (see below) and this follow-up disc is every bit as fine. This is playing of real distinction, equally impressive in its articulation and in the control of colour, phrasing and dramatic projection; in this latter respect he surpasses his early, Decca series. The recording is very real indeed: he might be in the room with you.

2 Arabesques; Ballade; Danse bohémienne; Danse (Tarantelle styrienne); Mazurka; Nocturne; Pour le piano; Rêverie; Suite bergamasque; Valse romantique

 Simax PSC 1297. Austbø

Haakon Austbø concentrates on the (for the most part) slighter pieces which are less readily found in single-disc collections of Debussy's piano music. There are obvious exceptions, including the Suite bergamasque (where Austbø plays the Clair de lune gently and exquisitely) and the closing Passpied, which has appealing elegance, and Pour le piano, where the performance is as fine as any available. Altogether this is a persuasively played recital, full of Debussian insights, and showing that Austbø has a natural affinity with this repertoire. He is truthfully recorded in a well-chosen acoustic.

2 Arabesques; Berceuse héroïque; Children's Corner; Danse bohèmienne; Élégie; Hommage à Haydn Mazurka; Morçeau de coucous; Nocturne; Pages d'album; Le Petite Nègre; La plus que lente; Rêverie; Suite bergamasque

Ⓝ 🔑 * Chan. 10467. Bavouzet

Ballade; D'un cahier d'esquisses; Estampes; Images oubliées; L'isIe joyeuse; Masques; Pour le piano; Tarantelle styrienne; Valse romantique.

* Chan. 10443. Bavouzet.

Etudes, Books I & II; Images, Series I & II

Ⓝ 🔑 * Chan 10497. Bavouzet

Préludes Books; 1 & 2.

* Chan. 10421 (2). Jean-Efflam Bavouzet.

Although there have been many outstanding Debussy recitals over the years from the likes of Zoltan Kocsis, Pascal Rogé, Noriko Ogawa and Jean-Philippe Collard, Jean-Efflam Bavouzet's survey lives up to the promise of the first two issues. Indeed we are inclined to consider it as a first choice were it not for the fact that the claims of rival versions are so strong. But Debussy playing does not come any better than this, and anyone collecting this excellently recorded Chandos series need not really look any further.

2 Arabesques; Children's Corner; Clair de lune; Images: Books 1 & 2; L'Isle joyeuse

Ⓜ  EMI 5 00272-2. Simon Trpčeski

This remarkable player goes from strength to strength. His is individual and intelligent Debussy that grips the listener throughout. As one expects from the acoustic of Potton Hall, Suffolk, the recorded sound is excellent. EMI have recorded a feature on this artist and his home town, Ohrid in Croatia, which can be accessed on a website to which the booklet directs us.

2 Arabesques; Children's Corner; Estampes; Images, Books 1–2; L'Isle joyeuse; Pour le piano; Préludes, Book 1; Rêverie; Suite bergamasque

Ⓑ  Double Decca (ADD) 443 021-2 (2). Rogé

Pascal Rogé's playing is distinguished by a keen musical intelligence and sympathy, as well as by a subtle command of keyboard colour, and this Double Decca set must receive the warmest welcome. Children's Corner is played with neat elegance and the characterization has both charm and perception, while the Suite bergamasque, Pour le piano and Images are no less distinguished. In Estampes there are occasional moments when the listener senses the need for more dramatic projection, but Rogé brings genuine poetic feeling to the first book of the Préludes. The CD transfers are clear and firm.

2 Arabesques; Children's Corner; Estampes; L'Isle joyeuse; Le Petit Nègre; La Plus que lente; Rêverie; Suite bergamasque: Clair de lune

 Chan. 9912. Tabe

Among newer recordings of Debussy piano music Kyoko Tabe's recital is eminently successful. She has a good feeling for atmosphere and a keen musical intelligence. This is a fine issue on every count.

Berceuse héroïque; La Boîte à joujoux; Elégie; Pièce pour l'oeuvre du Vêtements du blessé; Préludes, Book II (complete)

 BIS CD 1355. Ogawa

Children's Corner; D'un cahier d'esquisses; Hommage à Joseph Haydn; Morceau de concours; Le Petit Nègre; La Plus que lente; Préludes, Book 1

 BIS CD 1205. Ogawa

6 Epigraphs antiques; Etudes, Books I & II; Etude retrouve'e; Intermède; Les soirs illuminées par l'ardeur du Charbon

Ⓝ * BIS CD 1655. Ogawa

Estampes; Images, Books 1–2; Images oubliées; L'Isle joyeuse; Masques pour piano

 BIS CD 1105. Ogawa

Noriko Ogawa has an unerring feeling for the Debussy sound world and the delicacy and refinement of touch to do it full justice. This Japanese pianist is the equal of Thibaudet, and her elegance and finesse are matched by a magnificent sense of atmosphere. The recorded sound is in the best tradition of the house, and the accompanying notes by Leif Hasselgren are first class. Strongly recommended.

Bruyères; Canope; Children's Corner; Images, Books I & II (DVD version)

 Opus Arte DVD OA 0941 D. Arturo Benedetti Michelangeli (plus documentary: 'Maestro di Maestri')

This recital was filmed and recorded by RAI at Turin in 1962 and is in black-and-white. The playing is anything but. Michelangeli plays with an amazingly wide range of colour and refinement of dynamics and touch. His concentration, sense of atmosphere and pianism are at their finest. Forget the feeble documentary of 1959 – not for the hagiography, but for the crass questions of the self-satisfied interviewer. However, it does give us a glimpse of the pianists who take part in the annual festival in Arrezo, including Adam Harasiewicz, who had won the Chopin Prize a few years earlier. But, as Debussy playing, Michelangeli's performances take some beating.

Children's Corner Suite

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550885. Biret – SCHUMANN: Kinderszenen; TCHAIKOVSKY: Album for the Young ***

Idil Biret takes the opening movement very briskly and impetuously, but the performance then settles down and is sensitive and well characterized, especially the closing Golliwog's Cakewalk. Good recording and recommendable couplings too.

Children's Corner; Images, Books 1–2; Préludes, Books 1–2

(*) DG (ADD) 449 438-2 (2). Michelangeli

There is no doubt that these performances of Children's Corner and the two sets of Images are very distinguished. The Préludes undoubtedly bring piano playing which is pretty flawless. At the same time, it is very cool and detached and, although Book 2 excited enormous enthusiasm in some quarters, both Books here will strike many as somewhat glacial and curiously unatmospheric.

Children's Corner; Estampes; L'Isle joyeuse; Images I & II; La Plus que lente; Suite bergamasque

🔑 Ⓜ () EMI mono 5 62798-2. Gieseking

A self-recommending disc, drawing on Walter Gieseking's four-disc survey listed above. The mono recordings are of excellent quality.

Etudes, Books 1–2

🔑 ❁ Ⓜ * Ph. 475 7559. Uchida

Etudes, Books 1–2; Estampes; L'Isle joyeuse

(BB)  Regis RRC 1091. Tirimo

12 Etudes; Images, Books 1–2

 Warner 8573 83940-2. Aimard

Mitsuko Uchida's remarkable account of the Etudes on Philips is not only one of the best Debussy piano records in the catalogue and arguably her finest recording, but also one of the best ever recordings of the instrument. It is even more attractive at mid-price and is certainly worthy of inclusion as one of Philips's Originals.

Debussy playing of some stature from Pierre-Laurent Aimard, though his playing does not project the mists and atmosphere of this music so much as its extraordinary colour, inner vitality and originality. The Images are vibrant and as good as any in the catalogue, and the musical and technical challenges of the Etudes are surmounted with magisterial aplomb. This holds its own even alongside the wonderful Uchida set. Crystalline, clean recording that is in the demonstration category.

Martino Tirimo offers not only the Etudes, played with imagination and much subtlety of colour, but he also includes a set of Estampes and L'Isle joyeuse, neither quite as impressive, but still worth having. He is very well recorded and this Regis reissue is very competitive in the cheapest price-range.

Hommage à Rameau

Ⓜ ((*)) BBC mono BBCL 4064-2. Michelangeli – BEETHOVEN: Sonatas 4 & 12 (*); RAVEL: Gaspard de la nuit ()

The Debussy Hommage à Rameau is beautifully delivered and controlled. It comes with an almost miraculous account of Ravel's Gaspard, which alone is worth the price of the disc. The notes by William Robson, Michelangeli's BBC producer, serve to bring the whole occasion vividly to life.

Préludes, Books 1–2 (complete)

🔑 ❁ Ⓜ (*) EMI mono 5 67233-2. Gieseking

 Hyp. CDA67530. Osborne

 Onyx 4004. Rogé

(BB)  Regis RRC 1111. Tirimo

Gieseking's classic set of both Books of the Debussy Préludes takes its rightful place as one of EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century' and now has proper documentation. The current remastering again confirms the natural realism of the 1953–4 Abbey Road recording.

Steven Osborne has a real feeling for keyboard colour, a keen imagination and an effortless technique. A very well-balanced recording from the Henry Wood Hall.

When Pascal Rogé embarked on his Debussy recordings for Decca in the 1970s, he did not include the Second Book of Préludes. He is among the finest exponents of this inexhaustible and fascinating repertoire now before the public, and his expertly recorded performances are totally gripping.

No grumbles about value for money or quality from Martino Tirimo on Regis. His playing is very fine indeed and can withstand comparison with most of his rivals – and, apart from the sensitivity of his playing, the recording is most realistic and natural.

VOCAL MUSIC

Le Martyre de Saint-Sébastien; (i) 3 Ballades de François Villon

() Testament mono SBT 1214. Collart, Collard, Gayraud, Falcon; (i) Plantey; French R.O & Ch., Inghelbrecht

Inghelbrecht's performance is totally dedicated and refreshingly wanting in glamour, and such is the sense of authenticity it communicates that its want of finish seems of no account. Readers who really care about Debussy should seek this out.

Early Songs: Poèmes de Théodore de Banville

 Deux-Elles DXL 1052. Keith, Lepper

Gillian Keith proves a sensitive interpreter of these early Debussy songs. Keith with her fine control of dynamic does wonders in shading her tone in songs which demand subtlety above all. There is a sensuous element even in Debussy's earliest songs, and this generous selection gets one marvelling at the range and finesse of the composer even in his teens.

3 Ballades de François Villon

() Testament mono SBT 1312. Souzay, Bonneau – DUPARC: Chanson triste; Elégie, etc.; CHAUSSON: Songs; RAVEL: Don Quichotte à Dulcineé ()

The Villon Ballades are heard in their orchestral form (Le Promenoir des deux amants and La Grotte in the orchestration by Louis Beydts) although, as in the Ravel Don Quichotte, the balance is not ideal. Souzay is very close to the microphone and masks some of the orchestral detail. But this is superb singing by a master of this repertoire, and Jacqueline Bonneau is an ideal partner.

3 Ballades de François Villon; Fêtes galantes (2nd series); Fleur des blés; Mandoline; 3 Mélodies; Nuit d'étoiles; 5 Poèmes de Baudelaire; Voici que le printemps

 Hyp. CDA 67357. Maltman, Martineau

Christopher Maltman proves himself equal to the challenges of Debussy, Verlaine and Baudelaire, and in no small measure the success of his recital resides in the superb support of Malcolm Martineau. This is a most successful and enjoyable recital.

3 Chansons de Charles d'Orléans

 Ph. 438 149-2. Monteverdi Ch., ORR, Gardiner – FAURÉ: Requiem; RAVEL; SAINT-SAËNS: Choral Works ***

With Gardiner and his period forces bringing out the medieval flavour of these charming choral settings, this adds to a generous and unusual coupling for Gardiner's expressive reading of the Fauré Requiem.

La Damoiselle élue

() Testament mono SBT 3203 (3). De los Angeles, Boston SO, Munch – BERLIOZ; Les Nuits d'été; MASSENET: Manon ***

The combination of Munch's purposeful understanding of this wayward work, together with the charm of Victoria de los Angeles, make this an exceptional performance, even though in limited (1955) mono sound. As in the Berlioz song-cycle, the RCA recording may not capture the full golden beauty of the singer's voice, but these two works make a valuable bonus for the classic Monteux version of Massenet's Manon.

4 Poèmes de Charles Baudelaire (orch. John Adams)

 Warner 2564 61938-2. Graham, BBC SO, Yan Pascal Tortelier – CHAUSSON: Poème de l'amour et de la mer; RAVEL: Shéhérazade ***

It was surely an extraordinary venture of John Adams to orchestrate four of these songs; he omits La mort des amants. The result is to give the words an entirely new atmosphere, a richer background patina, and in Recueillement he even brings in horns, apparently to suggest a Wagnerian ethos. Certainly Susan Graham responds to this new backcloth, so different from a piano, and she sings tenderly and often very beautifully indeed. A fascinating and daring experiment, well brought off by conductor and singer alike.

OPERA

Pelléas et Mélisande (DVD versions)

 DG DVD 073 030-9. Hagley, Archer, Maxwell, Cox, Walker, Welsh Nat. Op. Ch. & O, Boulez (V/D: Peter Stein)

Boulez's account of Pelléas with the Welsh National Opera was much acclaimed at the time, and, judging from the 1992 DVD recording, rightly so. Boulez produces much greater atmosphere than he did in his CD version. The soloists are impressive; Alison Hagley's Mélisande especially is both good to look at and to listen to. Her vocal and stage characterization are excellent, and she conveys an appealing sense of innocence. Neill Archer's Pelléas is no less intelligently projected, and Kenneth Cox's Arkel is splendidly sung and finely acted. Peter Stein's production is effective, simple and beautifully lit. This is infinitely more satisfying than the alternative Lyons production with its perverse setting.

Pelléas et Mélisande (CD versions)

🔑  DG 435 344-2 (2). Ewing, Le Roux, Van Dam, Courtis, Ludwig, Pace, Mazzola, Vienna Konzertvereingung, VPO, Abbado

Ⓜ  Naïve Radio FranceV4923 (3). Von Otter, Holzmair, Naouri, Schaer, Vernhes, Couderc, R. France Ch. & Nat. O, Haitink

(BB)  Naxos 8.660047-9 (3). Delusch, Theruel, Arapian, Bacquier, Jessoud, Ch. Regional Nord/Pas de Calais, O Nat. de Lille, J.-C. Casadesus

Ⓝ Ⓜ (). Glyndebourne Festival Opera GFOCD 003-63. Duval, Wilbrink, Roux, Glyndebourne Ch., RPO, Gui

Claudio Abbado's outstanding version broadly resolves the problem of a first CD recommendation in this opera, which has always been lucky on record. If among modern versions the choice has been hard to make between Karajan's sumptuously romantic account, almost Wagnerian, and Dutoit's clean-cut, direct one, Abbado satisfyingly presents a performance more sharply focused than the one and more freely flexible than the other, altogether more urgently dramatic. The casting is excellent, with no weak link.

Haitink even in the opening prelude establishes the dedication of his reading, spacious, capturing an intensity that unmistakably evokes a great live event. Holzmair is a fresh, lyrical Pelléas, believably ardent in his obsession with Mélisande, and with von Otter also characterizing superbly, tender and subtle, not just an innocent. The Golaud of Laurent Naouri is the more moving when with his youngish baritone he is such a believable lover, not merely a predator. The others too are first rate, with firmness and clarity the keynote, with the soprano of Florence Couderc fresh and bright if obviously feminine in this young boy's role. The CD index points are limited to the beginnings of scenes, not even separating the preludes and interludes, so that the third disc, containing just Act V, has only a single index point.

Casadesus's Naxos set is most compelling, with fresh, young voices helping to make the drama more involving. Mireille Delusch is a bright and girlish Mélisande, well matched against the high baritone of Gérard Theruel as a boyish Pelléas. The others are first rate too, including the veteran, Gabriel Bacquier, aptly sounding old as Arkel. The orchestra, with a modest band of strings, adds to the chamber-scale intimacy. The libretto comes in French only, but with good notes and a synopsis in English. An outstanding bargain nevertheless.

The 1963 Glyndebourne performances of Pelléas is particularly treasurable for the beautifully characterized Mélisande of Denise Duval and the elegant Pelléas of Hans Wilbrink. The Golaud of Michel Roux is no less powerfully projected as indeed was the Arkel of Guus Hoeckman. Above all it is the atmosphere which Vittorio Gui distilled from the LPO that makes this account so special. His tempi are very broad and spacious, and the singers are well integrated into the sound balance. Naturally the orchestral texture is not transparent and the sound is typical of broadcast relays, even if this is Glyndebourne's own and not necessarily the BBC's balance. The presentation is very handsome with the 200-page libretto flanked by the discs themselves. Devotees of Pelléas should not miss this.

Pelléas et Mélisande (excerpts from the opera, arr. Marius Constant)

Ⓜ  Sup. SU 3899-2 (2). Czech PO, Baudo – FAURÉ: Pelléas Suite; SCHOENBERG: Pelleas: Tone poem; SIBELIUS: Pelléas: Suite ***

In order to make a quartet of works inspired by Pelléas et Mélisande Baudo has included Marius Constant's tone-poem using music from the opera in a continuous flowing stream. Those who know the opera well will recognize his sources, and certainly it is beautifully played and recorded here and makes a fascinating novelty.

Rodrigue et Chimène (opera; completed Langham Smith; orch. Denisov)

 Erato 4509 98508-2 (2). Brown, Dale, Jossoud, Van Dam, Bastin, Le Texier, Lyon Op. Ch. & O, Nagano

In the years immediately before he started work on his masterpiece, Pelléas et Mélisande, Debussy all but completed this opera to a much more conventional libretto, telling the story of El Cid. Richard Langham Smith reconstructed the rest, and Edison Denisov did the inspired orchestration, adding music from other sections to fill in a few gaps. The best comes first, with radiant singing from Laurence Dale, ideal as Rodrigue, and the fresh and expressive soprano, Donna Brown, as Chimène. Atmospheric off-stage choruses are distinctive too, but little of Act III gives much clue as to the identity of the composer, enjoyable though it is. Kent Nagano's superb recording brings vividly atmospheric sound. José van Dam sings strongly and clearly as the heroine's father, Don Diègue, with the veteran, Jules Bastin, in splendid voice as Don Gomez.

DECAUX, Abel (1869–1943)

Clairs de lune

 Hyp. CDA 67513. Hamelin – DUKAS: Piano Sonata ***

These four extraordinarily forward-looking and imaginative pieces by Decaux are the only works of his that are known, though sketches for a fifth, La forêt, exist. They make a fascinating makeweight for Marc-André Hamelin's masterly account of the Dukas Sonata.

DELAGE, Maurice (1879–1961)

4 Poèmes hindous

() Testament mono SBT 1135. Micheau, Fr. R. O, Cluytens – STRAVINSKY: Le Rossignol *** ✿

The Quatre Poèmes hindous make an ideal coupling for Le Rossignol. These four songs are very much in the received post-Debussian tradition and are exquisitely sung by Janine Micheau. While the mono sound is less transparent than is ideal, the recording is expertly transferred and gives great pleasure.

DELIBES, Léo (1836–91)

Complete ballets: (i) Coppélia; (ii) Sylvia; (iii) La Source (CD versions)

🔑 Ⓑ  Decca (ADD/DDD) 460 418-2 (4). (i) Nat. PO; (ii) New Phil. O; (iii) ROHCG O Bonynge

Bonynge's digital Coppélia recording sparkles from start to finish. There is tremendous energy in the many vigorous numbers and the contribution of the woodwind is a continual delight. Not as consistently inspired as Coppélia, Sylvia is more serious and symphonic in approach but there are many exciting set-pieces, much piquant colouring and a haunting leitmotif which runs throughout. The New Philharmonia play with tremendous energy and style, and the 1972 recording is as brilliant as you could wish. La Source was the composer's first ballet, though he wrote only Acts II and III. The complete ballet is given here, with Acts I and IV written by Minkus, whose contribution is rather more melancholy than Delibes's but is well written and enjoyable. The ROHCG Orchestra plays with great style and the digital recording is warm and detailed – well up to the house standard. At bargain price, this set is exceptional value.

Coppélia (ballet; complete)

Ⓑ  Double Decca (ADD) 444 836-2 (2). SRO, Bonynge – MASSENET: Le Carillon ***

Coppélia (ballet; complete); La Source: Suites 2 & 3; Intermezzo: Pas de fleurs

(BB)  Naxos 8.553356/7. Slovak RSO (Bratislava), Mogrelia

On the Double Decca reissue of his earlier (1969) analogue set, Bonynge secures a high degree of polish from the Suisse

Romande Orchestra, with sparkling string- and wind-textures, and with sonority and bite from the brass. The Decca recording sounds freshly minted and, with its generous Massenet bonus, little-known music of great charm, this set remains competitive.

The Bratislava orchestra plays with characteristic finesse and grace and with glowing lyrical feeling. Other versions may have more surface brilliance, but most lovers of ballet music will enjoy the naturalness of perspective and the attractively smooth string-quality. La Source comes off equally well. The Pas de fleurs grande valse is a real lollipop and in the two suites the music (selected rather arbitrarily) has plenty of colour and rhythmic life.

Coppélia (ballet; highlights)

🔑 (BB)  Warner Apex 2564 60365-2. Lyon Opéra O, Nagano

A very generous and comprehensive selection from Delibes's delightful score for Coppélia, which Tchaikovsky admired so much. Every bar of the music-making is of the highest quality, and the recording with its nicely judged acoustic is as attractive as the playing. Self-recommending, unless you want the complete score, which costs twice as much.

Coppélia: extended excerpts; Sylvia: extended excerpts

🔑 Ⓑ  EMI (ADD) 5 69659-2 (2). Paris Op. O, Mari

Jean-Baptiste Mari uses ballet tempi throughout, yet there is never any loss of momentum, and the long-breathed string-phrasing and felicitous wind solos are a continual source of delight. Mari's natural sympathy and warmth make the very most of the less memorable parts of the score for Sylvia (and they are only slightly less memorable). Seventy-five minutes are offered from each ballet. The sound is fresh.

Coppélia: suite; Kassya: Trepak; Le Roi s'amuse: suite; La Source: suite; Sylvia: suite

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550080. Slovak RSO (Bratislava), Lenárd

An attractive hour of Delibes, with five key items from Coppélia, including the Music for the Automatons and Waltz, four from Sylvia, not forgetting the Pizzicato, and four from La Source. Perhaps most enjoyable of all are the six pastiche ancient 'airs de danse', provided for a ballroom scene in Victor Hugo's play, Le Roi s'amuse. They are played most gracefully, and the excerpts from the major ballets are spirited and nicely turned. Vivid sound.

Sylvia (ballet): complete (CD version)

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553338/9. Razumovsky Sinfonia, Mogrelia – SAINT-SAËNS: Henry VIII Ballet Music ***

Mogrelia's performance of Sylvia is above all spacious, bringing out the music's pastel-shaded lyricism yet finding plenty of weight for the more vigorous music depicting the hunters. The performance as a whole, glowing sentience takes precedence over vitality, and some might find the atmosphere a little sleepy at times. Excellent, naturally balanced recording.

OPERA

Lakmé (complete)

Ⓑ  Double Decca 460 741-2 (2). Sutherland, Berbié, Vanzo, Bacquier, Monte Carlo Op. Ch. & O, Bonynge

(BB) ((*)) Naxos (mono) 8.111235/6. Robin, De Luca, Disney, Borthayre, Collart, Ch. & O of Opéra Comique, Sébastien (with additional arias sung by Villabella, Couzinou & Ben Sedira)

Ⓜ () Decca mono 475 6793 (2). Robin, De Luca, Disney, Collart, Lemaître, Luca, Borthayre, Jansen, Perriat, Opéra Comique O, Sébastien – BELLINI: Arias from: La sonnambula; PROCH: Theme & Variations, Op. 164, Deh, torna mio bene (LPO, Fistoulari)

The performance on Decca seizes its opportunities with both hands. Sutherland swallows her consonants, but the beauty of her singing, with its ravishing ease and purity up to the highest register, is what matters; and she has opposite her one of the most pleasing and intelligent of French tenors, Alain Vanzo. Excellent contributions from the others too, spirited conducting and brilliant, atmospheric recording. The reissue as a Double Decca makes a splendid bargain and the new-style synopsis will prove especially helpful for newcomers to this opera.

The Sébastien performance dates from 1952 and the voices – very much in front of the orchestra – are warmly and vividly caught by Decca (John Culshaw was the producer). Mado Robin's highly individual timbre is certainly affecting and her amazing vocal agility and freak high notes are used to predictably impressive effect in the Bell Song. The rest of the cast, if not outstanding, are characterful and, with French forces, it sounds vividly theatrical. The bonus material is well worth having, with Robin's speciality, final high notes – and they have to be heard to be believed – as startling as ever! Highlights are available on 475 6158.

However, Ward Marston's Naxos transfer restores all the bloom of John Culshaw's original excellent sound-balance, including that on Mado Robin's voice. This set is well worth having at budget price, more especially as the bonus is a trio of arias splendidly sung by famous French singers from the late 1920s and early 1930s. These include Miguel Villabella's honeyed Prendre le dessin d'un bijou . . . Fantaisie aux divins mensonges (1931), Robert Couzinou's ardent and very French Lakmé, ton doux regard se voile (1927), and another spectacular Bell Song from Leila Ben Sedira (1929). The transfers are again very real and vivid.

DELIUS, Frederick (1862–1934)

(i) Air & Dance; (ii) Florida Suite; North Country Sketches; (iii) 2 Aquarelles; Fennimore & Gerda: Intermezzo; Hassan: Intermezzo & Serenade; Irmelin: Prelude; Late Swallows; On Hearing the First Cuckoo in Spring; A Song before Sunrise; Summer Night on the River; (iv) In a Summer

Garden; A Village Romeo & Juliet: Walk to the Paradise Garden

Ⓜ  Chan. (ADD/DDD) 2x1 241-37 (2). (i) LPO; (ii) Ulster O; (i–ii) Handley; (iii) Bournemouth Sinf., Del Mar; (iv) Bournemouth SO, Hickox

A splendidly comprehensive collection from three fine Delians. Handley includes the comparatively rare Florida Suite (written in America) and the North Country Sketches (which evoke the seasons on the Yorkshire moors). Del Mar then creates a mood of serene, atmospheric evocation – into which Eric Fenby's arrangement of Late Swallows from the String Quartet fits admirably; then Hickox takes over flexibly. In a Summer Garden is both ardent and luxuriant in its shimmering summer heat haze and the Bournemouth Symphony Orchestra play passionately for him in the Walk to the Paradise Garden.

2 Aquarelles (arr. Fenby); Brigg Fair; Dance Rhapsodies 1-2 (ed. Beecham); Florida Suite; In a Summer Garden; North Country Sketches; On Hearing the First Cuckoo in Spring; Summer Night on the River (both edited Beecham); The Walk to the Paradise Garden

Ⓑ (*) Double Decca 460 290-2 (2). Welsh Nat. Op. O, Mackerras

Mackerras is just as warmly sympathetic in these Delius orchestral pieces as in his complete opera recording, A Village Romeo and Juliet. The Dance Rhapsodies, music which is far from rhapsodic, here receive fresh, taut performances. In the shorter works Mackerras is warmly sympathetic, with the woodwind playing particularly excellent. But the recording, made in the Brangwyn Hall, Swansea, is less spacious, less sensuous than the Austrian-made one of the opera, lacking Delian mystery. The massed strings in particular have too much brightness; one requires more lambent textures in this music.

Brigg Fair

Ⓜ ((*)) BBC mono BBCL 4113. RPO, Beecham – BERLIOZ: The Trojans: Royal Hunt and Storm; CHABRIER: España; Gwendoline Overture; DEBUSSY: L'Enfant prodigue: Cortège et Air de danse; MASSENET: La Vierge: Le dernier sommeil de la vierge; SAINT-SAËNS: Le rouet d'Omphale (with MOZART: Divertimento in D, K.131: excerpts ((*))

Beecham's BBC recording of Brigg Fair comes from a live broadcast concert of 1956. The playing of Gerald Jackson (flute), Terence MacDonagh (oboe), Jack Brymer (clarinet) and Gwydion Brooke (bassoon) ensures its evocative delicacy, but the recording itself leaves something to be desired, and the EMI stereo version is preferable.

(i) Brigg Fair; La Calinda (arr. Fenby); In a Summer Garden; Fennimore and Gerda: Intermezzo. Hassan: Intermezzo and (iii) Serenade (arr. Beecham); (ii) Irmelin: Prelude; (i) Late Swallows (arr. Fenby); On Hearing the First Cuckoo in Spring; A Song before Sunrise; (ii) A Song of Summer; (i) Summer Night on the River; (ii) A Village Romeo and Juliet: Walk to the Paradise Garden (arr. Beecham); (i; iv) Appalachia (with brief rehearsal sequence)

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 5 65119-2 (2). (i) Hallé O; (ii) LSO; (iii) with Tear; (iv) Jenkins, Amb. S; all cond. Barbirolli

Sir John Barbirolli shows an admirable feeling for the sense of light Delius conjures up and for the luxuriance of texture his music possesses. The gentle evocation of La Calinda contrasts with the surge of passionate Italianate romanticism at the climax of the Walk to the Paradise Garden. Barbirolli's style is evanescent in repose and more romantic than the Beecham versions but, with lovely playing from both the Hallé and the LSO, the first-rate analogue sound from the mid- to late-1960s adds to the listener's pleasure. Appalachia is given an admirably atmospheric reading that conveys the work's exotic and vivid colouring.

Brigg Fair; Dance Rhapsody 2; Fennimore and Gerda: Intermezzo (arr. Fenby); Florida Suite: Daybreak - Dance (La calinda) (revised & edited Beecham); Irmelin: Prelude; On Hearing the First Cuckoo in Spring; Sleigh Ride; Song before Sunrise; Summer Evening (arr. Beecham); Summer Night on the River

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * EMI 5 67552. RPO, Beecham

The further remastering of Beecham's stereo Delius recordings, made at Abbey Road at the end of the 1950s, continues to demonstrate a technological miracle. The result brings these unsurpassed performances into our own time with an uncanny sense of realism and presence. The delicacy of the gentler wind and string textures is something to marvel at, as is the orchestral playing itself. Beecham's fine-spun magic, his ability to lift a phrase is apparent from the very opening of Brigg Fair, which shows Delius at his most inspired and Beecham's orchestra at their most incandescent. The admirable documentation is by Lyndon Jenkins. Sheer magic, and fully worthy to be included in EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century'.

(i) Brigg Fair; Eventyr; In a Summer Garden; (ii) A Song before Sunrise; (i) A Song of Summer; (ii) Summer Night on the River; A Village Romeo and Juliet: Walk to the Paradise Garden

Ⓑ  CfP (DDD/ADD) 575 3152. (i) LPO; (ii) Hallé O, Handley

Vernon Handley's beautifully played Hallé performances were recorded in 1981, and the digital sound is of EMI's best quality, matching clarity of definition with ambient lustre and rich colouring. This very generous reissue adds three hardly less fine LPO performances recorded in the Henry Wood Hall three years earlier, where the analogue quality is very nearly as good.

Brigg Fair; In a Summer Garden; On Hearing the First Cuckoo in Spring; Paris (The Song of a Great City); Summer Night on the River; A Village Romeo and Juliet: Walk to the Paradise Garden

🔑 (BB) * Warner Apex 8573 89084-2. BBC SO, A. Davis

A superb disc. Beecham may be very special in these lovely scores but it is good to have state-of-the-art modern recordings, admirably spacious and atmospheric and with an excitingly wide dynamic range. In short this is post-Beecham Delius with a new approach from a conductor who feels this music in his very being.

La Calinda; In a Summer Garden; Irmelin Prelude; Song of Summer; A Village Romeo & Juliet: Walk to the Paradise Garden

🔑 Ⓜ * EMI (ADD) 3 79983-2. LSO, Barbirolli – BAX: Tintagel; IRELAND: London Overture ****

These are richly romantic rather than delicately subtle performances. Sir John Barbirolli does not provide here the limpid, evanescent textures for which Beecham was famous, but brings instead his almost Italianate feeling to Delius's passionate arching string-phrases. Lovely playing throughout, and first-rate, analogue (mid-1960s) sound.

(i) Caprice & Elegy; (ii–iii) Piano Concerto; (iv–v) Violin Concerto; (vi–iii) Hassan: Intermezzo & Serenade; Koanga: La Calinda; (v) On Hearing the First Cuckoo in Spring; (vii) Legend for Violin & Piano

() Testament mono SBT 1014. (i) Harrison, CO, Fenby; (ii) Moiseiwitsch, Philh. O; (iii) Lambert; (iv) Sammons; (v) Liverpool PO, Sargent; (vi) Hallé O; (vii) Holst, Moore

The greatest treasure is the first ever recording of the Violin Concerto, made in 1944 and featuring the original soloist, Albert Sammons, arguably the most eloquent and moving account of the work ever committed to disc. Moiseiwitsch's recording of the Piano Concerto, also the first ever, is hardly less powerful, making a very good case for this warm but less cogent piece. The other items range from the 1930 recording of the Caprice and Elegy by Beatrice Harrison, the dedicatee, with suspect intonation and plentiful portamento, to Sargent's 1947 recording of the First Cuckoo, very warm and free in its rubato. Constant Lambert is also a first-rate interpreter of Delius, as the Hassan and Koanga excerpts show. This transfer has higher surface-hiss than later issues on this label, but the disc must be strongly recommended.

Cello Concerto

 EMI 5 55529-2. du Pré, RPO, Sargent (with Recital) ***

The EMI disc offers what was du Pré's first concerto recording, and the recital is a transfer of the material mainly from her very first EMI sessions in 1962 which gave such clear promise of glories to come. Most recommendable, although readers will note that it remains at full price.

(i) Cello Concerto; (ii) Double Concerto for Violin & Cello; Paris (The Song of a Great City)

Ⓑ  CfP 575 8032. (i; ii) Wallfisch; (ii) Little; RLPO, Mackerras

This superb recording of the Double Concerto, with soloists who easily outshine their predecessors on record (however distinguished), confirms the strength of a piece which establishes its own logic, with each theme developing naturally out of the preceding one. Raphael Wallfisch is just as persuasive in the Cello Concerto, and Mackerras proves an understanding interpreter of the composer in the big tone-poem, Paris, The Song of a Great City. The recording is comparably full and atmospheric.

Piano Concerto in C min.

Ⓑ  CfP 575 9832. Lane, RLPO, Handley – FINZI: Eclogue; VAUGHAN WILLIAMS: Piano Concerto ***

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.110689. Moiseiwitsch, PO, Lambert (with solo pieces by DEBUSSY; GODOWSKY; GRANADOS; IBERT; POULENC; PROKOFIEV; RAVEL; STRAVINSKY ())

Piers Lane gives a masterly performance of the Delius Piano Concerto, weighty without pomposity, which effectively counters ideas of being 'sub-Grieg', early though it is. Lane's measured, concentrated reading of the slow movement is particularly compelling.

Benno Moiseiwitsch was a keen advocate of the Piano Concerto. It is not the greatest Delius but has wonderful moments, which Moiseiwitsch plays with great sensitivity and imagination.

Violin Concerto

(BB) ((*)) Naxos mono 8.110951. Sammons, Liverpool PO, Sargent – ELGAR: Violin Concerto ((*))

Albert Sammons's première account of the Delius Violin Concerto, recorded in 1944, is by general consent still unsurpassed even by the likes of Ralph Holmes and Tasmin Little, except in terms of recording quality and readers may now turn with confidence to the Naxos transfer.

Fennimore and Gerda: Intermezzo; Irmelin: Prelude; Koanga: La Calinda (arr. Fenby); On Hearing the First Cuckoo in Spring; Sleigh Ride

Ⓑ  CfP (ADD) 575 3162. LPO, Handley – VAUGHAN WILLIAMS: Lark Ascending; Wasps Suite, etc. ***

These five favourite Delius items belong to the same 1977 Henry Wood Hall sessions as the LPO items included in the companion Handley collection above. The playing is equally sensitive and the warm, spacious analogue recording is most attractively transferred. The Vaughan Williams items are hardly less attractive.

Florida Suite; Idylle de printemps; Over the Hills and Far Away; La Quadroone; Scherzo; (i) Koanga: Closing Scene

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.553535. E. N. Philh. O, Lloyd-Jones; (i) with Glanville, Lees, Evans, Francis, Peerce, Thomas

Several of the works here are new to disc, including the Idylle de printemps, fresh and charming, leading to an ecstatic climax. La Quadroone and Scherzo were originally planned as movements in a suite. Lloyd-Jones has clearly learnt from Beecham's example in his glowing and intense readings of the other three works, with the orchestra's woodwind soloists excelling themselves in delicate pointing, not least in the haunting La Calinda, included in the Florida Suite. Over the Hills and Far Away, raptly done, is richly evocative too, and the epilogue to the opera, Koanga, rounds off a generously filled disc with music both sensuous and passionate, featuring six female vocal soloists from Opera North, three sopranos and three mezzos.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Cello Sonata

 Chan. 8499. R. and P. Wallfisch – BAX: Rhapsodic Ballad; BRIDGE: Cello Sonata; WALTON: Passacaglia ***

In the Chandos version of the Cello Sonata the performers give as strong and sympathetic an account as is to be found. They are also excellently recorded.

(i) Cello Sonata; (ii) String Quartet

(*) Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD) 442 9486. (i) Isaac, Jones; (ii) Fitzwilliam Qt – SIBELIUS: String Quartet *

The Quartet is rarely heard, either in the concert hall or on record. The Fitzwilliam Quartet make a very convincing case for it and their performance is committed and imbued with evident affection. The 1978 recording is superb. As one might expect, Delius's Cello Sonata, written in 1916, is a flowing, endlessly lyrical work. It is good to have this version restored to the catalogue, even though George Isaac and Martin Jones interpret it not so much with love as with literal freshness. The 1971 sound is not as sumptuous as for the Quartet, but is more than acceptable.

String Quartet

 ASV CDDCA 526. Brodsky Qt – ELGAR: Quartet ***

In this music, the ebb and flow of tension and a natural feeling for persuasive but unexaggerated rubato is vital; with fine ensemble but seeming spontaneity, the Brodsky players consistently produce that. First-rate recording.

PIANO DUET

Dance Rhapsodies 1 & 2; In a Summer Garden; North Country Sketches; On Hearing the First Cuckoo in Spring; A Song before Sunrise; Summer Night on the River (arranged for piano, four hands, by Peter Warlock)

 BIS CD 1347. Ogawa, Stott

Noriko Ogawa and Kathryn Stott have formed a most sensitive duo partnership. Summer Night on the River, acquires an attractive freshness transferred to the piano, as does In a Summer Garden with its flickering imitations of birdsong. Generally the more rhythmic the writing the more effective it is in piano transcription, as in the 6/8 of A Song before Sunrise. When it comes to the North Country Sketches, which Warlock transcribed somewhat later in 1921, these arrangements sound like original piano music.

VOCAL MUSIC

(i) Appalachia; Sea Drift; (ii) A Song before Sunrise; Koanga: La Calinda

 Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD) 467 601-2. (i) Shirley-Quirk, L. Symphony Ch., RPO, Hickox; (ii) ASMF, Marriner

Hickox's 1977 LP of Appalachia and Sea Drift is an early example of this conductor's natural affinity with Delius. These are fresh and dedicated performances, urgent in their expressiveness rather than lingering. John Shirley-Quirk sings with characteristic sensitivity, and the chorus is outstanding. The trusty Marriner items are always good to hear, and the sound throughout this generous CD is superb. Texts are included in this Eloquence release, as are excellent notes by Christopher Palmer.

(i) An Arabesk; A Mass of Life: Prelude. (ii) Songs of Sunset, Parts 1-7; (iii) Part 8; Songs: (iv) I-Brasil; Le ciel est pardessus le toit; Cradle Song; Irmelin Rose; Klein Venevil; The Nightingale; Twilight Fancies; The Violet; Whither

Ⓜ () Somm mono BEECHAM 8. (i, ii) Henderson, L. Select Ch.; (ii) Haley; (iii) Evans, Llewellyn, BBC Ch.; (iv) Labbette; LPO or RPO, Beecham (or (iv) Beecham, piano)

In the live recording of the Songs of Sunset Beecham conveys a virile thrust and energy in the writing, partly by opting for faster speeds. Both in this, with its seven linked sections, and in the single span of An Arabesk, the line of the argument is clarified. Roy Henderson is the clean-cut, sensitive baritone soloist in both, sounding very English, with Olga Haley a fresh, bright mezzo soloist in the Songs of Sunset. The test pressings sadly lack the final section, but a substitute is provided for that section, taken from a 1946 recording with Nancy Evans and Redvers Llewellyn which Beecham initially rejected. The ends of 78-r.p.m. sides tend to have a noisy surface, but there is ample body in the sound. Dora Labbette is the enchanting soprano soloist in all the separate songs. Four of the ten come in the beautiful orchestral versions, with the rest accompanied at the piano by Beecham himself. He may have been only a good amateur pianist, but his natural magnetism still shines out.

(i) A Mass of Life (sung in German); (ii) Requiem

🔑  Chan. 9515 (2). (i) Rodgers, Rigby, Robson; (ii) Evans; (i-ii) Coleman-Wright; Waynflete Singers, Bournemouth Ch. & SO, Hickox

Hickox gives a glowing account of this ambitious setting of a German text drawn from Nietzsche's Also sprach Zarathustra. He is helped by excellent singing and playing from his Bournemouth forces, and by fine solo singing, notably from the soprano, Joan Rodgers. The full and atmospheric Chandos recording confirms the primacy of this version even over the excellent previous recordings. The Requiem, half an hour long, makes the ideal coupling, emerging as a fine example of Delius's later work, not as distinctive in its material as the Mass, but with an element of bleakness tempering the lushness of the choral writing.

Here too – with Rebecca Evans this time as soprano soloist – Hickox conducts a most persuasive performance, ripely recorded.

(i) Sea Drift; Songs of Farewell; (i; ii) Songs of Sunset

🔑  Chan. 9214. (i) Terfel; (ii) Burgess; Bournemouth Symphony Ch., Waynflete Singers, Southern Voices, Bournemouth SO, Hickox

In this second recording of Delius's masterpiece Hickox finds even more magic, again taking a spacious view – which keeps the flow of the music going magnetically. Bryn Terfel adds to the glory of the performance, the finest since Beecham, as he does in the Songs of Sunset, with Sally Burgess the other characterful soloist. The Songs of Farewell, helped by incandescent choral singing, complete an ideal triptych, presented in full and rich Chandos sound.

(i) The Song of the High Hills; Hassan: Intermezzo & Serenade; Irmelin: Prelude; (ii) Koanga: Final Scene; (ii; iii) A Village Romeo and Juliet

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.110982-3 (2). RPO, Beecham, with (i) Hart, Jones, Luton Ch. Soc.; (ii) RPO Ch.; (iii) Dyer, Soames, Dowling, Sharp, Ritchie, Bond

In 1946 Beecham made an important first recording of Delius, The Song of the High Hills. Written in 1911, it is one of his most ambitious choral works, very evocative in its use of wordless chorus to represent man in nature, while expressing the composer's 'joy and exhilaration one feels in the Mountains'. That is a spirit which Beecham captures perfectly, again never letting the music meander.

A Village Romeo and Juliet was recorded two years later. René Soames was a tenor with a very English sound; to say the least, he does not sound sufficiently ardent, and his dry, thin tone is somewhat uningratiating, making his portrayal of Sali seem a little stiff, though musically the clarity and precision are impressive. Lorely Dyer as Vreli is fresh and bright, but she has a small voice and her intonation at the beginning of Scene 4 is vulnerable. However, the Naxos transfer captures the voice better than the 1992 EMI transfer of this historic Beecham recording, with less emphasis on her rapid vibrato. It is also good to hear such vintage singers of the period as Dennis Dowling and Frederick Sharp as the respective fathers of the hero and heroine, with an excellent line-up of soloists in the many incidental roles. The extra items are very welcome too.

OPERA

Fennimore and Gerda (complete)

🔑  Chan. 9589. Stene, Howarth, Tucker, Coleman-Wright, Danish Nat. R. Ch. & SO, Hickox

Fennimore and Gerda, the sixth and last of Delius's operas, may suffer from a lopsided libretto but it has some of his most inspired vocal music. Using the original German, Hickox's reading is aptly sensuous – far warmer than the only previous recording on EMI, conducted by Meredith Davies – with fresh-voiced principals headed by Randi Stene as Fennimore, Judith Howarth as Gerda and Peter Coleman-Wright and Mark Tucker as rivals in this very Scandinavian love-tangle.

(i) Koanga (opera; complete); (ii) Song of the High Hills

Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 5 85142-2 (2). (i) Holmes, Lindsay, Herincx, Erwen, Allister, Estes, Alldis Ch., LSO; (ii) RLPO & Ch., Groves

With big Verdian ensembles and Puccinian ariosos (the style is still unmistakably Delian) Koanga is a big, red-blooded opera, which makes a striking impact on record. The recording uses a revised libretto, much more effective than the original. When it first appeared in 1974, Groves's powerful reading plus excellent singing from the whole cast makes this reissue uniquely valuable. The splendid analogue recording has transferred most vividly and atmospherically to CD, and the set is well documented. The Song of the High Hills, with its wordless chorus, was recorded in the same year, and is perceptively interpreted, but here Groves is inclined to understatement.

A Village Romeo and Juliet (complete)

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 5 75785-2 (2). Luxon, Mangin, Harwood, Tear, John Alldis Ch., RPO, M. Davies (includes illustrated talk by Eric Fenby)

Meredith Davies's great quality is his inspired pacing of a score that can easily stagnate. Davies sets the love-duets in dramatic contrast to the vigorous writing, above all in the lively fair scene. The plot is made to unfold with a feeling of inevitability. Elizabeth Harwood and Robert Tear are both excellent as Vreli and Sali, winningly characterful and clearly focused, with the role of Sali as a boy in the opening scene taken by a bright treble, Corin Manley, against the fresh soprano of Wendy Eathorne for Vreli as a child. Benjamin Luxon and Noel Mangin can hardly be bettered as the warring fathers, dark and incisive, while John Shirley-Quirk in the equivocal role of the Dark Fiddler – representing the spirit not of evil but of raw nature – is firm and forthright with an apt hint of the sinister. Eric Fenby provides a very detailed synopsis and (as a supplement on the second disc) the recorded talk on Delius and his career.

(i) A Village Romeo and Juliet (complete); (ii) Songs of Sunset

Ⓜ () Somm mono BEECHAM 12 (2). (i) Soames, Hambleton, F. Smith, Sharp, Clinton, Terry, Davies; (ii) Haley, Henderson; BBC Theatre Ch., RPO, L. Select Ch.; LPO, Beecham

Beecham's radio recording of Delius's opera, A Village Romeo and Juliet, was made for the BBC Third Programme only a week before he went to the EMI studio to record the opera with substantially the same cast. The wonder is how different it is interpretatively. The timing alone provides an indication of the contrast, with the studio recording some 11 minutes shorter than the radio recording in an opera lasting under two hours. Surprisingly, the more expansive radio recording is the one which sounds more passionate at almost every point, with the spontaneity of the live performance far outweighing any advantages of precision and balance in the studio version. Though the studio recording is better balanced, it is the radio version which, despite flaws, is the more atmospheric, with more air round the voices. The revised version of Beecham's 1934 Leeds Festival performance of the Songs of Sunset makes a welcome bonus on the second disc, an astonishingly vivid and atmospheric live performance of these sensuous settings of poems by Ernest Dowson, with Olga Haley and Roy Henderson the excellent soloists.

DEL TREDICI, David

(born 1937)

Paul Revere's Ride

 Telarc CD 80638. Plitmann, Clement, Polegato, Atlanta Ch. & SO, Spano (with BERNSTEIN: Lamentation from Symphony 1) – THEOFANIDIS: The Here and Now **(*)

David Del Tredici's dramatic – indeed thrilling – setting is fully worthy of Longfellow's much-loved poem describing a legendary event that took place at the very beginning of the American War of Independence, here most vividly pictorialized. This première performance is fully worthy of Del Tredici's splendidly spontaneous piece, with Hila Plitmann a most eloquent soloist, with a lovely voice, alongside a superb choral and orchestral response. It will surely be a hit wherever it is performed in the USA. The recording is spectacular, although the richly resonant chorus could be more sharply focused.

DEVIENNE, François

(1759–1803)

Clarinet Sonata 1

 EMI 3 79787-2. Meyer, Maisenberg – MILHAUD: Scaramouche; POULENC; SAINT-SAËNS: Sonatas ***

François Devienne belongs to the last half of the 18th century. He was a celebrated flautist (and published a treatise for the one-key instrument), but he wrote equally well for the clarinet, the C clarinet in this instance. His style anticipated Weber but was rather more amiably classical, certainly virtuosic and pleasing, but not truly memorable. However, Sabine Meyer makes a persuasive case for this agreeable work, well partnered by Oleg Maisenberg, and their couplings are all much more characterful. Excellent recording.

DIAMOND, David (1915–2005)

(i) Violin Concerto 2. The Enormous Room; Symphony 1

🔑 BB  Naxos 8.559157. Seattle SO, Schwarz, (i) with Talvi

The First Symphony was composed after the outbreak of war had forced Diamond to abandon his studies with Nadia Boulanger in Paris and return to America, and the piece is undoubtedly an auspicious beginning to his impressive symphonic portfolio. The lyrical Second Violin Concerto (1947) is a bit Stravinskian with a dash of Walton. It is finely played by the Finnish-born Ilkka Talvi; and the fantasia, The Enormous Room (1948), takes its inspiration from the e. e. cummings description of his incarceration in a French detention camp in 1918. Diamond's score is rhapsodic in feeling, with orchestral textures of great luxuriance; it is both imaginative and atmospheric, and throughout he is well served by Gerard Schwarz, the Seattle Orchestra and the Delos team who originally recorded it. Indeed, the recording is outstanding.

(i) Kaddish for Cello & Orchestra. Psalm; Symphony 3

BB  Naxos 8.559155. (i) Starker; Seattle SO, Schwarz

The Third Symphony is a four-movement work of no mean power. This and the Psalm show Diamond as a real man of the orchestra; and the Seattle Orchestra proves an eloquent advocate. Kaddish is a more recent piece and is played here by its dedicatee, János Starker. A highly recommendable Naxos reissue.

Symphonies 2 & 4

BB  Naxos 8.559154. Seattle SO, Schwartz

The Fourth Symphony is very diatonic, tonal, impeccably crafted and sophisticated. The Second Symphony is a large-scale work, lasting nearly three-quarters of an hour, written in 1942–3 at the height of the war, and it has great sweep and power. It is beautifully crafted and evinces a continuity of musical thought that defines the real symphonist. These excellent performances, at bargain price, with such dedicated and expert playing, all set in a spacious and well-balanced, ventilated acoustic (though some may find it too reverberant), represent good value at the asking price.

Symphony 8; Suite 1 from the Ballet, Tom; (i) This Sacred Ground

BB  Naxos 8.559156. Seattle SO, Schwarz; (i) with Parce, Seattle Girls' Ch. & NorthWest Boychoir

The First Suite from the Ballet, Tom inhabits much the same musical world as Aaron Copland. The Eighth Symphony makes use of serial technique but will still present few problems to those familiar with Diamond's earlier music, for it remains lyrical and thought-provoking. It culminates in a double fugue of considerable ingenuity. This Sacred Ground is a short setting for soloist, choirs and orchestra of the Gettysburg Address, and it may not travel so well. Committed performances and excellent, natural, recorded sound.

Piano Sonata

() VAI mono VAIA 1124. Tureck – DALLAPICCOLA: 2 Studies for Violin & Piano (); SCHUMANN: Piano Concerto (*())

David Diamond wrote his Sonata especially for Rosalyn Tureck, bearing in mind her special experience in contrapuntal playing which was to prove very telling in the double fugue of the powerful finale. But her light, clear articulation gives a splendid sparkle to the Scherzo, which comes as the centrepiece of the highly expressive Adagio. This is the work's world première performance, in front of an audience in New York's Town Hall, and it has great intensity and power. The recording is very close and is hard in fortissimo, but acceptable. Miss Tureck especially requested that her CD should be included in our Guide, and understandably so.

DITTERSDORF, Carl Ditters von (1739–99)

Double-Bass Concertos 1 in D; 2 in D (Krebs 171/2)

 Hyp. CDA 67179. Nwanoku, Swedish CO, Goodwin – VANHAL: Double-Bass Concerto in D ***

The double-bass can make a cumbersome concerto soloist, but Chi-Chi Nwanoku, regular member of distinguished ensembles ever since her student days, makes light of any problems in these concertos. She is amazingly agile and incisive in allegros, well tuned and expressive in lyrical slow movements. The Vanhal is charming enough, but the two Dittersdorf works are more distinctive, making up an ideal coupling, very well recorded.

Harp Concerto in A (arr. Pilley)

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * Decca (ADD) 425 723-2. Robles, ASMF, Brown – BOIELDIEU; HANDEL: Harp Concertos, etc. **** ✿

Dittersdorf's Harp Concerto is a transcription of an unfinished keyboard concerto with additional wind parts. It is an elegant piece, thematically not quite as memorable as the Boieldieu coupling, but captivating when played with such style.

6 Symphonies after Ovid's Metamorphoses

(*) Chan. 8564/5 (2). Cantilena, Shepherd

All the Ovid Symphonies have a programmatic inspiration and relate episodes from the Metamorphoses of Ovid, such as The Fall of Phaeton, which are vividly portrayed. The Rescue of Andromeda by Perseus is a particularly effective work (it has an inspired Adagio) and the slow movement of the D major, The Petrification of Phineus and his Friends, is a delight. The Transformation of the Lycian Peasants into Frogs could hardly be more graphic and is full of wit. This is inventive and charming music that will give much pleasure, and it is generally well served by Cantilena under Adrian Shepherd. There is also a set on Naxos (8.553368/9) acceptably performed by the Failoni Symphony Orchestra under Hanspeter Gmür, but the Chandos versions have much more character and are worth the extra cost.

Symphonies in A; D; & E flat

(BB)  Naxos 8.570198. Lisbon Metropolitan O, Cassuto

These symphonies are every bit as enjoyable as those associated with Ovid and clearly have a good deal in common with Haydn and Mozart, with surprise reminders of both those composers. They are well crafted and neatly scored, and these well-recorded performances do them full justice.

DOHNÁNYI, Ernst von (1877–1960)

(i) Harp Concertino, Op. 45; (ii) Piano Concerto 2 in B min., Op. 42; (iii) Violin Concerto 2 in C min., Op. 43

 Chan. 10245. (i) Lantaff; (ii) Shelley, (iii) Ehnes; BBC PO, Bamert

The latest issue in the ongoing Chandos series brings the Second Piano Concerto, played with great panache by Howard Shelley, and the soloists in the other works are hardly less fine; the Harp Concertino is a most engaging work in Lantaff's hands. Chandos and the BBC team at Manchester provide excellently balanced sound.

Piano Concertos 1 in E min., Op. 5; 2 in B min., Op. 42

 Hyp. CDA 66684. Roscoe, BBC Scottish SO, Glushchenko

These concertos are well wrought, with a melodic warmth that fails to be indelible, but they provide bravura for the soloist and contrast for the orchestra. The present performances are surely unlikely to be surpassed for their commitment, and the playing is finished as well as ardent; the recording, too, is excellent.

Piano Concerto 1 in E min., Op.5; Ruralia Hungarica

 Chan. 9649. Shelley, BBC PO, Bamert

Howard Shelley magnetically sustains the massive length of the outer movements of the First Piano Concerto relishing the Lisztian fluency of the improvisatory writing and bringing a natural gravity to the chorale theme of the Bruckner-like central Andante. As an attractive coupling Bamert conducts the five movements of the orchestral version of Ruralia Hungarica, just one of the five folk-based works to which he gave this title. Full, vivid recording, not always ideally clear on detail.

Konzertstück for Cello & Orchestra, Op. 12

 Chan. 8662. Wallfisch, LSO, Mackerras – DVOŘÁK: Cello Concerto ***

Dohnányi's Konzertstück has many rich, warm ideas, not least a theme in the slow movement all too close to Pale hands I loved beside the Shalimar, and none the worse for that. Wallfisch's performance, as in the Dvořák, is strong, warm and committed, and the Chandos sound is first rate.

Violin Concertos 1 in D min., Op. 27; 2 in C min., Op. 43

Ⓝ (BB) * Naxos 8.570833. Ludwig, RSNO, Falletta

It is remarkable that these two rewarding concertos are not more familiar. Admittedly the D minor Concerto (1915) is perhaps a shade over extended, with four movements and a playing time of 41 minutes. But after its Brahmsian opening it produces memorable lyrical secondary material, and has a most eloquent slow movement. This is followed by a dashing scherzo and a variations finale in which the main theme of the first movement returns strikingly before the close. The Second Concerto written much later (1949) has Hungarian influences, a warm molto sostenuto Adagio and a memorably catchy giocoso finale (the best movement). Michael Ludwig's performances combine virtuosity and a rich lyrical feeling, at times producing exquisitely gentle playing. It is good to see Naxos have taken up JoAnn Falletta, another outstanding young American female conductor, who has established herself, following alongside the success of Marin Alsop, and she provides admirably sensitive accompaniments. The Naxos recording, too is first class.

Serenade in C, Op. 10

 Hyp. CDA 67429. Leopold String Trio – MARTINŮ; SCHOENBERG: Trios ***

This delightful Trio with its overtones of Brahms and Dvořák always gives pleasure. Its famous première recording with Heifetz, Primrose and Feuermann has never been equalled or surpassed, but this superb account by the Leopold Trio will do very nicely. They play with great conviction and convey much pleasure in their music-making.

Symphony 1; American Rhapsody, Op. 47

 Chan. 9647. BBC PO, Bamert

Dohnányi's First Symphony is something of a find. It is not just accomplished; the scoring shows real flair. A large-scale piece, some 55 minutes in duration, it reveals a strong sense of form. Matthias Bamert directs both works impressively and has the advantage of the BBC Philharmonic and excellent engineering from the BBC/Chandos team. You will find this most rewarding music.

Symphony 2, Op. 40; Symphonic Minutes, Op. 36

 Chan. 9455. BBC PO, Bamert

Dohnányi's Symphonic Minutes are richly inventive and have enormous charm. The Second Symphony is a generally well-argued and finely crafted piece and is well worth getting to know, even if (at nearly 50 minutes) it rather outstays its welcome. The playing of the BBC Philharmonic under Matthias Bamert is vital and sensitive, and the Chandos recording is in the best traditions of the house.

Variations on a Nursery Tune, Op. 25; Suite in F sharp min., Op. 19; The Veil of Pierrette: Suite, Op. 18

🔑  Chan. 9733. Shelley, BBC PO, Bamert

For all their popularity, Dohnányi's variations on 'Twinkle, twinkle, little star', with their witty parodies, have been meanly treated on disc. The brilliant version with Howard Shelley the sparkling soloist is especially welcome when it offers two other examples of Dohnányi the charmer. The Wedding Waltz from the mimed entertainment, The Veil of Pierrette, was once well known, dashingly Viennese, as are the other three movements, previously unrecorded, including a Merry Funeral March which parodies Mahler. The Suite too is engagingly colourful. Brilliant performances, sumptuously recorded.

Piano Quintets 1; 2 in E flat min., Op. 26; Serenade in C, Op. 10

 Hyp. CDA 66786. Schubert Ens. of London

(i-ii) Piano Quintets 1-2; (i) Suite in the Old Style, Op. 24

 ASV CDDCA 915. (i) Roscoe; (ii) Vanbrugh Qt

Dohnányi wrote the first of his two Piano Quintets when still in his teens; it is ripely Brahmsian, built strongly on memorable themes. The Second Quintet, dating from 20 years later, just after the Nursery Variations, is sharper and more compact, with Hungarian flavours more pronounced, if never Bartókian. The Suite in the Old Style, for piano alone, is an amiable example of pre-Stravinsky neoclassicism, again beautifully written for the instrument. The Vanbrugh Quartet is well matched by Martin Roscoe in keen, alert performances, warmly recorded.

The Schubert Ensemble give us in addition the Serenade for String Trio. A clear three-star recommendation for the Hyperion disc and their excellent pianist, William Howard.

Serenade for String Trio

Ⓑ  Virgin 2x1 5 61904-2 (2). Domus – MARTINŮ: Piano Quartet 1, etc.; DVOŘÁK: Bagatelles; KODÁLY: Intermezzo; SUK: Piano Quartet ***

The Dohnányi Serenade for String Trio comes from 1902. The three players from the Domus team meet its demands with admirably alert and sensitive playing. This performance comes as part of a rewarding and inexpensive programme from Domus which has an eminently natural recorded sound.

Serenade for String Trio; Sextet

🔑 ✿ (BB)  Naxos 8.557153. Spectrum Concerts Berlin, Dodge

The Serenade for String Trio is Dohnányi's most popular chamber work but the Sextet is even more distinctive, with a strong first movement prominently featuring the horn, and a slow movement which builds up powerfully, before the two lighter movements which follow. The delicately pointed Scherzo leads to an exuberant finale, with jagged cross-rhythms, comic false entries and deliciously surreal waltz-references. It is played here breathtakingly fast, with the waltz parodies wittily highlighted, and the fun of the final 'wrong-key' cadence nicely pointed under the direction of the cellist, Frank Sumner Dodge. Brilliant, full-bodied sound to match.

Violin Sonata in C sharp min., Op. 21; Andante rubato (Ruralia Hungarica)

(*) Biddulph LAW 015. Shumsky, Lipkin – WEINER: Violin Sonatas 1 & 2 **(*)

Oscar Shumsky and Seymour Lipkin were recorded in New York in 1993 and they make an excellent case for this neglected but fine sonata. Shumsky's playing is not quite as polished or masterly as it was in the early 1980s, but it is still supremely musical. A worthwhile addition to the catalogue.

PIANO MUSIC

6 Concert Etudes, Op. 28; Pastorale; Ruralia Hungarica, Op. 32a; Variations on a Hungarian Folk Song, Op. 29

🔑 ✿ (BB)  Naxos 8.553332. Pawlik

The Six Concert Etudes, Op. 28, of 1916 are among the most technically demanding pieces in the repertoire. Markus Pawlik was still in his twenties when he recorded these pieces, and his playing is remarkable for its dazzling virtuosity, sensitivity, finesse and good taste. His dexterity and wonderful clarity of articulation in the D flat Etude are exceptional. His is a formidable talent, and we hope to hear much more of him. Decent recorded sound. Recommended with all enthusiasm.

DONIZETTI, Gaetano
(1797–1848)

(i) Clarinet Concertino in B flat; (ii) Cor Anglais Concertino in G; (iii) Flute Concertino in C min.; (iv) Oboe Concertino in F; (v) Double Concertino in D min. for Violin & Cello; (vi) Sinfonia a soli instrumenti di fiato in G min. Sinfonia in D min; per la Morte di Capuzzi

🔑 ✿ (BB) * Naxos 8.557492. (i) B. Kovács; (ii) Girgás; (iii) I. Kovács; (iv) J. Kiss; (v) A. Kiss, J. Kiss Domonkos; (vi) Soloists, Budapest Camerata, L. Kovács

All these concertos are most winning, as elegant as they are inventive, and all the expert soloists (several of whom seem to be interrelated) smilingly convey the music's Italian sunshine. The concertos are framed by two contrasting Sinfonias. Both are played very persuasively, and throughout the collection László Kovács and his Budapest Chamber Orchestra provide supportive and stylish accompaniments. The recording could hardly be bettered, and the result is a collection which will give great and repeated pleasure. Now at Naxos price it is a great bargain.

Overtures: Linda di Chamounix; Maria di Rohan; Marino Faliero; Les Martyres; Don Pasquale

(BB)  Warner Apex (ADD) 2564-62418-2. Monte Carlo Op. O, Scimone – CIMAROSA: Il fanatico per gli antichi romani; Il matrimonio segreto: Overture (*); MERCADANTE: Sinfonia sopra i motive dello Stabat mater di Rossini ***

These sprightly performances of Donizetti overtures make an attractive and entertaining collection. Both the lightness and the energy of the writing are presented with flair, with Donizetti's melodies and his rumbustious brand of drama enjoyably conveyed. The characteristic Monte Carlo acoustic adds to the theatricality of the music.

CHAMBER MUSIC

String Quartets 7–9

 CPO 999 170-2. Revolutionary Drawing Room

Introduzione for Strings; String Quartets 10 in G min.; 11 & 12 in C

Ⓜ  CPO 999 279-2. Revolutionary Drawing Room

String Quartets 13 in A; 14 in D; 15 in F

Ⓜ (*) CPO 999 280-2. Revolutionary Drawing Room

String Quartets 16 in B min.; 17 in D; 18 in E min.

Ⓜ  CPO 999 282-2. Revolutionary Drawing Room

This excellent CPO series reveals Donizetti to be a considerable contributor to the string quartet medium, offering works that in their craftsmanship and quality of invention can stand comparison with all but the very finest of Haydn. These six and the following four, Nos. 13–16, all date from around 1821, when the composer was in his early twenties. They are very much Haydn-influenced (in the best sense). These players are completely at home on their period instruments: their execution is fresh, vital and expressive, without any linear eccentricities.

No. 14 in D is programmatic, and we hear the storm gathering immediately at the opening: its full force is soon sweeping through the music. The hushed Adagio sadly contemplates the havoc left behind, but the genial Minuet suggests that life goes on, with repairs carried out in the Trio, while the hammering workmen sing to themselves.

Finest of the whole series is the mature E minor Quartet of a decade later, splendidly assured in its light-hearted first movement, which the composer used as a basis for his Linda di Chamounix Overture. It is splendidly played; indeed, the performances throughout this CD are among the finest in the series, and the recording is first class, too.

String Quartet 13 in A

Ⓜ  CRD 3366. Alberni Qt – PUCCINI: Crisantemi; VERDI: Quartet ***

This is an endearing work with a Scherzo echoing that in Beethoven's Eroica and with many twists of argument that are attractively unpredictable. It is given a strong, committed performance and is well recorded.

ORATORIO

Il diluvio universale (oratorio; complete)

(*) Opera Rara ARC 31. Palazzi, Cullagh, Lee, Custer, Geoffrey Mitchell Ch., LPO, Carella

Donizetti's rare oratorio tells the story of Noah and the Flood in operatic terms. Recorded in Conway Hall, the sound is a little dry, but clearly separated. The vocal cast is strong, with Mirco Palazzi in the role of Noah a light-voiced bass, though surprisingly Donizetti does not give him an aria to sing. The rest of the cast make a good team, but the work relies on the strong chorus, who contribute one of the main sources of enjoyment.

OPERA

Anna Bolena (complete)

🔑 Ⓜ * Decca 475 7910 (3). Sutherland, Ramey, Hadley, Mentzler, Welsh Nat. Op. Ch. & O, Bonynge

Ⓜ ((*)) EMI mono 5 66471-2 (2). Callas, Simionato, Rossi-Lemeni, G. Raimondi, Carturan, La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, Gavazzeni

In this 1987 recording of Anna Bolena Joan Sutherland crowns her long recording career with a commanding performance. Dazzling as ever in coloratura, above all exuberant in the defiant final cabaletta, she poignantly conveys the tragedy of the wronged queen's fate with rare weight and gravity. Samuel Ramey as the king is outstanding in a fine, consistent cast. Excellent recording, and this reissue includes a full libretto.

The Callas recording was made live at La Scala in 1957, with the great diva at her most searingly magnetic. Gavazzeni proves a most sympathetic conductor and, though the rest of the cast is no match for Callas, there is characterful if rather inflexible singing from Simionato as Giovanna and a fresh, clear contribution from Gianni Raimondi in the relatively small tenor role of Percy, here made the smaller by cuts. Nicola Rossi-Lemeni as Henry VIII is positive but gritty of tone in a less than convincing characterization. The radio sound is dry and limited and with occasional interference, but for Callas fans this is well worth hearing.

L'assedio di Calais (complete)

 Opera Rara (ADD) OR 9 (2). Du Plessis, D. Jones, Focile, Serbo, Nilon, Platt, Glanville, Smythe, Treleaven, Harrhy, Bailey, Mitchell Ch., Philh. O, Parry

The Opera Rara set is one of the most invigorating of all the complete opera recordings made over the years by that enterprising organization. With Della Jones and Christian du Plessis in the cast, as well as a newcomer, Nuccia Focile, as Queen Eleanor, David Parry conducts the Philharmonia in a fresh, well-sprung performance which gives a satisfying thrust to the big ensembles. The one which ends Act II, including a magnificent sextet and a patriotic prayer for the chorus, brings the opera's emotional high point. When, in Act III, Edward III's big aria turns into a sort of jolly waltz song, the music seems less apt.

Dom Sebastien, Roi de Portugal

🔑  Opera Rara ORC33 (3). Kasarova, Filianoli, Miles, Keenlyside, Caruso, ROHCG O, Elder

Recorded at live concert performances in 2005, this Opera Rara recording of Donizetti's last completed opera, first heard in 1943, gives the lie to the idea that his powers of invention faded as his health deteriorated. It is not only his last opera, but his most ambitious, adopting the five-act form that was coming to be popular in Paris, thanks to Meyerbeer. Not only is there a fine sequence of arias for each character, the ensembles are generally superb, often based on tunes that could easily be mistaken for early Verdi. Mark Elder conducts a vigorous and thrustful performance, with an excellent cast, led by the mezzo, Vesselina Kasarova, as a Zayda with a very Slavonic timbre, and the high Italian tenor, Giuseppe Filianoli, as Sebastien, coping very well with some of the stratospheric writing, and with Alastair Miles as the Grand Inquisitor and Simon Keenlyside as Abayaldo both outstanding. Carmelo Corrado Caruso sings the incidental role of the poet, Camoens, author of the great Portuguese poem, the Lusiad.

Don Pasquale (complete; DVD versions)

🔑 * Arthaus DVD 101 303. Desderi, Giordano, Gatell, Cassi, Teatro Municipale di Piacenza Ch., Luigi Cherubini O, Muti (Dir: Andrea De Rosa; V/D: Gabriele Cazzola)

🔑  TDK DVD DVWW-OPDPSC. Furlanetto, Focile, Kunde, Gallo, La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, Muti

Ⓝ  Decca DVD 074 3202. Raimondi, Flórez, Rey, Widner, Zurich Opera Ch. & O, Santi (Dir: Grischa Asagaroff; V/D Felix Breisach) (with La fille du régiment Ⓑ  Decca 074 3287 (3))

Both Muti's performances are very enjoyable indeed. But the Arthaus version, a live recording from the 2006 Ravenna Festival, is rather special. First, it includes an unforgettable characterization of Don Pasquale himself from the veteran buffo, Claudio Desderi, now in his sixties but still in fine voice, warm-toned in lyrical passages and with wonderful articulation in the famous patter-duet with the excellent Dottore Malatesta, Mario Cassi, at the end of Act III. Norina (Laura Giordano, who studied with Maria Chiara) enters the action as a demure, pretty young thing, but becomes increasingly formidable as the opera progresses. But she is fully equal to the vocal bravura demanded of her, particularly in the closing scene. Francisco Gatell is her very convincing lover: he has a pleasingly light tenor voice which is heard at its finest in the nocturnal serenade of the last Act. But the opera is dominated by Desderi's dignified portrayal of Pasquale, and it is given greater pathos than usual by his touching dismay at his increasingly untenable position, especially after Norina has slapped him. The Ravenna production is handsome, traditional in the best sense, and Muti keeps the action alive through every moment of Donizetti's miraculous score, which seems to get better and better as the opera proceeds. The recording and camerawork cannot be faulted.

As a more consistently light-hearted version, with delightful La Scala sets and colourful costumes, the 1994 TDK Don Pasquale will also be hard to beat. Visually it is a joy, and with three outstanding principals the performance sparkles from start to finish. By not seeming too old, Ferruccio Furlanetto's portrayal of Don Pasquale is the more convincing, but he has no chance against Nuccia Focile's minx of a Norina and one certainly feels sorry for him at his discomfiture. Gregory Kunde is an appropriately ardent Ernesto; his voice isn't creamy but he sings passionately and has good comic timing, and Lucio Gallo enters into the spirit of the story as a wily Dottore Malatesta. But once more it is Muti's direction that keeps the action fizzing and the ensembles sparkling, and ensures that the resolution of the plot takes its natural course. Again excellent sound and camerawork.

It is Juan Diego Flórez (on top form) as the hero, Ernesto, who dominates the Decca Zurich set, rather than Ruggero Raimondi's somewhat nonplussed Don Pasquale. Moreover Isabel Rey is hardly a deliciously pretty Norina, and although her coloratura is brilliant enough, some of her top notes are inclined to be squally. Indeed she is obviously not young and would seem to be a more suitable wife for Pasquale than for Ernesto who is too obviously much more youthful than her. Oliver Widmer is very convincing as Dottor Malatesta, the opera's staging cannot be faulted with a superb circular triple set, and Santi conducts with brio. But even though this performance is given as a free bonus with a fine set of La fille du regiment it is far from a first choice among available DVD versions.

Don Pasquale (complete; CD versions)

 EMI 7 47068-2 (2). Bruscantini, Freni, Nucci, Winbergh, Amb. Op. Ch., Philh. O, Muti

(M)  Decca 2-CD (ADD) 475 8490 (2). Corena, Sciutti, Oncina, Krause, V. State Op. Ch. & O, Kertész – CIMAROSA: Il maestro di cappella ****

Muti's is a delectably idiomatic-sounding reading, one which consistently captures the fun of the piece. Freni is a natural in the role of Norina, both sweet and bright-eyed in characterization, excellent in coloratura. The buffo baritones, the veteran Bruscantini as Pasquale and the darker-toned Leo Nucci as Dr Malatesta, steer a nice course between vocal comedy and purely musical values. Muti is helped by the beautifully poised and shaded singing of Gösta Winbergh, honey-toned and stylish as Ernesto. Responsive and polished playing from the Philharmonia, and excellent studio sound.

Kertész's performance with the Vienna State Opera Chorus and Orchestra brings moments that suggest operetta rather than Italian opera, but it is full of high spirits, with much laughter and jollity expressed along with the singing. Fernando Corena is an attractive buffo, even if his voice is not always well focused enough to sing semiquavers accurately. Juan Oncina sounds rather strained, not least in his serenade, but he captures the spirit of the piece; and Tom Krause makes an incisive Malatesta. Graziella Sciutti is charming from beginning to end, bright-toned and vivacious, and remarkably agile too. The 1964 Decca recording is excellent, with plenty of atmosphere as well as sparkle, and the Originals reissue includes full documentation.

Don Pasquale (complete; in English)

(M)  Chan. 3011 (2). Shore, Dawson, Banks, Howard, Mitchell Ch., LPO, Parry

David Parry and a lively team of soloists, using Parry's own translation, deliver a well-paced, jolly and amiable performance. The interplay of characters is caught well and the celebrated patter–duet between Don Pasquale and Dr Malatesta, wonderfully articulated, brings none of the traditional comic wheezing at the end – on the whole, an advantage. Andrew Shore and Jason Howard are good buffo singers, characterful if a little gruff, with Howard's Malatesta rather younger-sounding than usual, a believable brother of Norina. Lynne Dawson is fresh, sweet and agile as the heroine, and Barry Banks is a clear and unstrained Ernesto. Full sound, atmospheric enough to give warmth to the voices without obscuring words. If your preference is for opera in English, you can't go wrong with this.

L'elisir d'amore (complete; DVD versions)

🔑  Decca DVD 074-103-9. Gheorghiu, Alagna, Scaltriti, Alaimo, Lyon Op. Ch. & O, Pido

(*) Decca DVD 074 3226. Blegen, Pavarotti, Ellis, Bruscantini, Met. Opera Ch. & O, Rescigno

Updated to the 1920s with jolly sets in primary colours, Frank Dunlop's production for Lyon Opéra on Decca makes an attractive DVD, very well produced by Brian Large, involving the same cast as on the excellent Decca CD recording, also made in 1996. Angela Gheorghiu as Adina emerges in Act I brandishing a riding-crop, more than a match for Belcore, let alone Nemorino, and singing enchantingly. As Belcore Roberto Scaltriti is young and virile, with Dulcamara equally impressive, arriving in a vintage Rolls-Royce drawing a streamlined caravan. Under Evelino Pido the comedy of the piece fizzes winningly, with something of a circus atmosphere created by the staging.

Pavarotti takes the role of Nemorino fairly boisterously; one cannot think that he won't get the girl in the end. He sings ardently, although Una furtiva lagrima is bold rather than especially sweet-voiced. Similarly, Judith Blegen is an appealing Adina, if a little mature for the role, but her Prendi, per me sei libero is still impressive. Brent Ellis is a suitably bumptious Belcore, and the old hand Sesto Bruscantini is a characterful Dr Dulcamara. The stage direction is often very busy, with the big Met. area bustling with the chorus, who sing well enough; but the direction of Nicola Rescigno is not as vivacious as one might ideally want; the recording too could be more sharply focused. Altogether enjoyable, but not really distinctive, apart of course for Pavarotti.

L'elisir d'amore (CD versions)

🔑 (M)  Erato 4509 98483-2 (2). Devia, Alagna, Spagnoli, Praticò, Tallis Chamber Ch., ECO, Viotti

🔑 (M)  Decca 475 7514 (2). Sutherland, Pavarotti, Cossa, Malas, Amb. S., ECO, Bonynge

(M)  Sony (ADD) 827969645826 (2). Cotrubas, Domingo, Evans, Wixell, Watson, Rohcg Ch. & O, Pritchard

(B) (*) Double Decca (ADD) 443 542-2 (2). Gueden, Di Stefano, Corena, Capecchi, Mandelli, Maggio Musicale Fiorentino Ch. & O, Molinari-Pradelli

(BB) () Naxos mono (ADD) 8.110125/26 (2). Sayao, Tagliavini, Valdengo, Baccaloni, Lenchner, Met. Op. Ch. & O, Antonicelli (with excerpts from LEONCAVALLO: Pagliacci; PUCCINI: La Bohème ())

The mid-priced Erato set is a light, generally brisk account of the score, and it provides an ideal modern alternative to Richard Bonynge's version. Mariella Devia cannot match

Sutherland for beauty of tone in the warmly lyrical solos but she sparkles more, bringing out what a minx of a heroine this is. Roberto Alagna's tenor timbre was then lighter, if not quite so firm, and, like Devia, he brings out the lightness of the writing delectably. His performance culminates in a winningly hushed and inner account of the soaring aria, Una furtiva lagrima. Rounding off an excellent cast, Pietro Spagnoli is a fresh, virile Belcore, and Bruno Praticò a clear, characterful Dr Dulcamara, an excellent buffo baritone, making the very most of a voice on the light side. The sound is first rate. Highlights are available on an Apex disc (2564 61496-2) which makes a good sampler.

Joan Sutherland makes Adina a more substantial figure than usual, full-throatedly serious at times, at others jolly like the rumbustious Marie; in the key role of Nemorino, Luciano Pavarotti proves ideal, vividly portraying the wounded innocent. Spiro Malas is a superb Dulcamara, while Dominic Cossa is a younger-sounding Belcore, more of a genuine lover than usual. Bonynge points the skipping rhythms delectably and the recording is sparkling to match, with striking presence. Now reissued in Decca's series of Originals, it is offered at mid-price for the first time, with full text and translation.

Originating from a successful Covent Garden production recorded at Abbey Road, this newly remastered Sony reissue centres very much on the delectable Adina of Ileana Cotrubas. Quite apart from the delicacy of her singing, she presents a sparkling, flirtatious character to underline the point of the whole story. Plácido Domingo by contrast is a more conventional hero and less the world's fool than Nemorino should be. Sir Geraint Evans gives a vivid characterization of Dr Dulcamara, though the microphones sometimes bring out roughness of tone. Ingvar Wixell is an upstanding Belcore; the stereo staging is effective, and the remastering has plenty of atmosphere. Alas, the lack of a printed libretto is a drawback. The only way to obtain this is via a computer CD-ROM drive. Otherwise full marks.

With Hilde Gueden at her most seductive, the very early (1955) Decca stereo recording offers a delightful, spontaneous-sounding performance. Not just Gueden but the other soloists too are strikingly characterful, with Giuseppe di Stefano at his most headily sweet-toned, singing with youthful ardour, Fernando Corena a strong and vehement Dulcamara and Renato Capecchi well contrasted as Sergeant Belcore, though not quite so firm of tone, but both splendidly comic. Even without a libretto it makes a good bargain, with two CDs offered for the price of one.

Bidu Sayao on Naxos is perfectly cast here as Adina, giving a sparkling portrayal opposite the young, golden-toned Tagliavini as Nemorino. Like all Italian tenors of his generation, he has his unstylish habits, but echoing Gigli he gives a winningly delicate account of Una furtiva lagrima, as well as entering into the fun of the piece. Giuseppe Valdengo could hardly be stronger as a firm, powerful Belcore, and the veteran, Salvatore Baccaloni, in traditional buffo bass style milks every comic point as the quack, Dulcamara, with Antonicelli timing the comedy to a nicety. Clear, if limited, mono sound. As a supplement come two delightful live recordings of Sayao: Nedda's communing with the birds in Pagliacci and the Bohème duet, O soave fanciulla, with Giuseppe di Stefano.

The Elixir of Love (complete; in English)

Ⓜ (*) Chan. 3027 (2). Banks, Plazas, Holland, Shore, Williams, Mitchell Ch., Philh. O, Parry

This lively account in English under David Parry brings out the high spirits of the piece, even if inevitably there are resulting echoes of Gilbert and Sullivan. Central to the performance's success is the vivacious Adina of Mary Plazas, sparkling and sweet-toned, guaranteed to ensnare any man around. Barry Banks gives a forthright performance as the innocent hero, Nemorino, even if the tone is not really Italianate enough for this music, whatever the language. Ashley Holland as Sergeant Belcore and Andrew Shore as Dr Dulcamara are lively and characterful, agile in rapid patter, even if their voices could be more sharply focused.

Elvida (complete)

 Opera Rara ORC 29. Massis, Spagnoli, Larmore, Ford, LPO, Allemandi

Written in 1826, when Donizetti was still in his twenties, Elvida is his only serious one-Act opera. The one-Act format was dictated by the royal timetable, and it results in a delightfully compact dramma per musica, involving the conflict of Castilian and Moorish forces in Spain. With a cast of principals identical to those in Opera Rara's recording of François di Foix, the performance is similarly strong and lively under the direction of Antonello Allemandi. Annick Massis is again outstanding in the title-role. Though the invention is not quite as striking as that in François di Foix, there are many delightful passages, such as the galloping 6/8 stretta which rounds off the Act I duet of Elvida and Zeidar.

Emilia di Liverpool (complete); L'eremitaggio di Liverpool (complete)

🔑  Opera Rara (ADD) OR 8 (3). Kenny, Bruscantini, Merritt, Dolton, Mitchell Ch., Philh. O, Parry

The very name, Emilia di Liverpool, makes it hard to take this early opera of Donizetti seriously. In this set, sponsored by the Peter Moores Foundation, we have not only the original version of 1824 but also the complete reworking of four years later, which was given the revised title noted above. Such a veteran as Sesto Bruscantini makes an enormous difference in the buffo role of Don Romualdo in Emilia, a character who speaks in Neapolitan dialect. His fizzing duet with Federico (the principal tenor role, sung superbly by Chris Merritt) sets the pattern for much vigorous invention. With fresh, direct conducting from David Parry, this is a highly enjoyable set for all who respond to this composer.

La favorita (complete)

Ⓜ (*) Decca (ADD) 430 038-2 (3). Cossotto, Pavarotti, Bacquier, Ghiaurov, Cotrubas, Teatro Comunale Bologna Ch. & O, Bonynge

La favorita may not have as many memorable tunes as the finest Donizetti operas, but red-blooded drama provides ample compensation. Fernando is strongly and imaginatively sung here by Pavarotti. The mezzo role of the heroine is taken by Fiorenza Cossotto, formidably powerful if not quite at her finest, while Ileana Cotrubas is comparably imaginative as her confidante, Ines, but not quite at her peak. Bacquier and Ghiaurov make up a team which should have been even better but which will still give much satisfaction. Bright recording.

La Fille du régiment (DVD versions)

Ⓝ 🔑 ✿ * Virgin DVD 5 19002-9. Dessay, Flórez, Corbelli, Palmer, Maxwell, ROHCGO, Campanella; (Dir: Laurent Pelly; V/D Robin Lough)

Ⓝ  Decca DVD 074 3146. Ciofi, Flórez, Ulivieri, Franci, Benini, Ch. & O of Teatro Carlo Felice di Genova, Frizza ; Director Emilio Sagi (with Don Pasquale Ⓑ  Decca 074 3287 (3))

(*) TDK DVD DV-OPLFDR. Devia, Kelly, Podles, Pratico, La Scala Ch. & O, Renzetti (Dir. Crivelli, TV Dir. Protasoni)

Virgin and Decca each offer a DVD of La fille du régiment which feature today's star tenor, Juan Diego Flórez as the opera's hero, Tonio. He sings and acts superbly in both sets, throwing off his famous nine repeated high Cs in 'Pour mon âme' effortlessly and in the Decca version even singing an encore. He creates an appealing lover-figure for both Natalie Dessay at Covent Garden, and the boyish Patrizia Ciofi in Geneva. They are both attractive heroines and each creates an individual personality for the characterization of the regiment's adopted daughter. Both are live performances and the Decca Geneva set brings the action forward to the final days of World War II and dresses the soldiers in American uniforms, even though their dialogue and choruses continue to suggest they are French! However this typical director's whim is harmless enough as the action is unaffected. What makes this production especially effective is the singing and acting of Nicola Ulivieri as a fatherly Sulpice and Francesca Franci is a suitably aristocratic Marquise de Berkenfield. The chorus is excellent in depicting their ingenuous admiration and support for the heroine, and Patrizia Ciofi takes her famous role with personality and vocal virtuosity. The overall result is certainly enjoyable and the set comes with a free documentary disc (about the opera, the theatre and with a portrait of Flórez) in a two-for-one package with Don Pasquale – also starring Flórez.

But Ciofi is no match for Natalie Dessay who establishes her star quality from her very first entry and vivaciously dominates the opera throughout. She is deliciously funny, and often audacious in her various comic business – and she sings both brilliantly and movingly too. In short she is an unforgettably enchanting Marie, unlikely to be surpassed. Moreover Laurent Polly's production and staging is full of imaginative detail without making the comedy too broad. Coupled with unexpectedly original sets, excellent costuming and splendidly alive musical direction from Bruno Campanella this version is for DVD what the famous Sutherland/Pavarotti version is for CD.

Recorded live at La Scala, Milan, in June 1996, the DVD of La Fille du régiment is taken from a film for Italian television (RAI) with pretty sets and costumes by Franco Zeffirelli using flat, bright colours echoing those in an 18th-century print. The performance centres round the characterful Marie of Mariella Devia, a diminutive figure, bossy in a military way, who, defying her size, sings with a loud, penetrating voice, agile up to the highest register but not very steady in the middle. Opposite her, the Tonio of Paul Austin Kelly is a handsome roly-poly figure, sporting a great cushion of fuzzy hair. What matters is that he has a clear, firm, lyrical tenor, with a formidably unstrained top register, so that he copes superbly with the notorious arietta, Pour mon âme, in the finale of Act I with its clutch of high Cs. Eva Podles is magnificent in the character role of the Marquise de Berkenfield, commanding both in her singing and in her acting, completely dominating the compliant Sulpice of Bruno Pratico in Act II. The ensembles both with and without the chorus are brilliantly done, though the reunion trio, Tous les trois réunis, is taken absurdly fast. Otherwise the conducting of Donato Renzetti is warm and idiomatic. Note that nowadays even La Scala prefers the French text of this opera to the Italian version of Donizetti's score.

La Fille du régiment (CD version)

🔑 Ⓜ * Decca (ADD) 478 1366 (2). Sutherland, Pavarotti, Sinclair, Malas, Coates, ROHCG Ch. & O, Bonynge

It was with the Decca cast that La Fille du régiment was revived at Covent Garden, and Sutherland immediately showed how naturally she takes to the role of Marie, a vivandière in the army of Napoleon. She is in turn brilliantly comic and pathetically affecting, and Pavarotti makes an engaging hero. Monica Sinclair is a formidable Countess in a fizzing performance of a delightful Donizetti romp that can confidently be recommended both for comedy and for fine singing. Recorded in Kingsway Hall, the CD sound has wonderful presence and clarity of focus. This set now returns to the catalogue as one of Decca's 'Originals'.

François di Foix (complete)

🔑  Opera Rara ORC 28. Massis, Spagnoli, Larmore, Ford, Antoniozzi, LPO, Allemandi

Patric Schmid of Opera Rara has produced a splendid account of one of Donizetti's one-Act operas, 75 minutes long, François di Foix, described as a melodramma giocoso. This story of the Countess mistreated by her husband inspired Donizetti to write a sparkling sequence of numbers which never outstay their welcome, with one bright idea leading on to another, including a chorus which anticipates one in L'elisir d'amore. The piece ends, after many duets and ensembles, in a big tournament scene. This first recording, well paced by the conductor, Antonello Allemandi, is also notable for bringing forward an outstanding young coloratura soprano, Annick Massis, who takes the title-role, wonderfully bright and agile, rising up to the challenge of her big numbers. Jennifer Larmore sings warmly as the Page, with the bass, Alfonso Antoniozzi, aptly gritty as the malicious Count, the tenor, Bruce Ford, lyrical as the attendant Duke, and Pietro Spagnoli magisterial as the King.

(i) Gabriella di Vergy (1838 version); (ii) Scenes from 1826 version

(*) Opera Rara ORC 3 (2). (i) Andrew, du Plessis, Arthur, Tomlinson, J. Davies, Winfield; (ii) Harrhy, Jones; RPO, Francis

Dating from 1979 and transferred well to CD, this Opera Rara set of Gabriella di Vergy (not to be confused with Gemma di Vergy) presents the rediscovered score, written in the composer's hand, of a piece which Donizetti himself never heard with its many sparkling cabalettas and superb Act II finale. The cast is a capable one, with Alun Francis, as ever, a sympathetic conductor; it is interesting to hear John Tomlinson early in his career, slightly miscast. It is fascinating to have as appendix three excerpts from the original, 1826 score, with Della Jones taking the role of the hero, Raoul, later rewritten for tenor.

Linda di Chamonix (complete; DVD version)

 TDK DVD DV-OPLDC. Gruberová, Van der Walt, Will, Ariostini, Kallisch, Zurich Opera Ch. & O, A. Fischer (V/D: A. Bernard-Leonardi)

With Edita Gruberová still in reasonably good voice in the coloratura, undoubtedly touching in the Mad Scene, this is an impressive if uneven performance, and of course Gruberová hardly looks like a young country girl. But Deon van der Walt looks good as Carlo and he sings ardently, and the rest of the cast are vocally reliable, Jacob Will as the Marquis and Cornelia Kallisch as Pieretto much more than that. The staging with its drapes is not too distracting and the video direction is acceptable. Best of all is the splendid contribution of chorus and orchestra, stylishly and vividly directed by Adam Fischer and very well recorded. A stopgap, perhaps, but a generally enjoyable one.

Lucie de Lammermoor (complete; in French; DVD version)

 TDK DVD DV OPLDL. Ciofi, Alagna, Tezier, Laho, Cavallier, Saelens, Lyon Op. Ch. & O, Pidò (V/D: Don Kent)

It was bold of the Lyon Opéra to revive the French version of Lucia di Lammermoor that Donizetti originally prepared for Paris. The differences from the original are not great, but for the Donizetti devotee they provide a new insight into the working of the composer, with even some of the passage-work in Lucia's Mad Scene modified. Patrizia Ciofi is a bright, agile heroine who sings brilliantly. Roberto Alagna as Edgard is outstanding and Ludovic Tezier is impressively dark and firm as Henry, with the rest of the cast generally reliable. The production has traditional costumes, set against darkly sinister backgrounds, with the Video Director tending to steal attention with his odd camera effects. Evelino Pidò controls the ensembles well but lets the Mad Scene move on rather slowly. However it is thrillingly sung by Ciofi.

Lucia di Lammermoor (complete)

🔑  Decca (ADD) 410 193-2 (2). Sutherland, Pavarotti, Milnes, Ghiaurov, Davies, Tourangeau, ROHCG Ch. & O, Bonynge

🔑 () Royal Opera House ROH (mono) Sl002 (2). Sutherland, Gibin, Shaw, Rouleau, MacDonald, Elkins, ROHCG O & Ch., Serafin

🔑 Ⓑ  Double Decca (ADD) 460 747-2 (2). Sutherland, Cioni, Merrill, Siepi, St Cecilia Ac., Rome, Ch. & O, Pritchard

(BB) () EMI mono 5 86197-2 (2). As below, with Callas, Di Stefano, Gobbi, Serafin

🔑 Ⓜ () EMI mono 5 66438-2 (2). Callas, Di Stefano, Gobbi, Arie, Ch. & O of Maggio Musicale Fiorentino, Serafin

(*) EMI 5 56284-2 (2). Callas, Tagliavini, Cappuccilli, Ladysz, Philh. Ch. & O, Serafin

(i) Lucia di Lammermoor (complete); (ii) Highlights (from Historical Recordings)

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.110131/2. (i) Callas, Di Stefano, Gobbi, Arie, Ch. & O of Maggio Musicale Fiorentino, Serafin; (ii) Merrill, Pinza, Vellicci (1952); Galli-Curci, Schipa (1928); Barrientos, Hackett, Stracciari, Mardones, Meader, Noé, Pinza (1920); Dal Monte (1926); Gigli (1925); McCormack (1910)

Though some of the girlish freshness of voice which marked the 1961 recording had disappeared by the 1971 set, Sutherland's detailed understanding was intensified. Power is there as well as delicacy, and the rest of the cast is first rate. Pavarotti, through much of the opera not as sensitive as he can be, proves magnificent in his final scene. The sound-quality is superb on CD. In this set the text is absolutely complete.

Rarely has the Royal Opera House seen quite so historic an occasion as the overnight emergence of Joan Sutherland as a superstar in February, 1959. This live recording captures the thrill of the occasion vividly, with Sutherland not only fresh and bright throughout, but technically flawless, with crisp trills and coloratura and seamless legato. Not only that, her vocal acting is magnetic, not least in Lucia's two big scenes, the Fountain Scene in Act I as well as in the Mad Scene. Gibin may not be an ideal Donizetti singer, too heavyweight, but he is capable, and both Joseph Rouleau as Raimondo and John Shaw as Enrico, stalwarts of the company, are first rate. Serafin is wonderfully vigorous and supremely understanding of the Donizetti style.

The 1961 Sutherland version of Lucia is a bargain in Double Decca format. Though consonants were being smoothed over, the voice is obviously that of a young singer, and dramatically the performance was close to Sutherland's famous stage appearances of that time, full of fresh innocence. Her coloratura virtuosity remains breathtaking, and the cast is a strong one, with Pritchard a most understanding conductor. The reissue has Decca's new-style synopsis, with a 'listening guide' for newcomers to the opera.

Callas's earlier, mono set dates from 1953. The diva is vocally better controlled than in her later, stereo set (indeed some of the coloratura is excitingly brilliant in its own right), and there are memorable if not always perfectly stylish contributions from Di Stefano and Gobbi. As in the later set, the text has the usual stage cuts, but the remastered sound is impresssive. This (5 66438-2) has been newly remastered for the reissue. However, EMI have brought out an alternative budget version (5 86197-2) to compete with Naxos; it comes without libretto but with an acceptable booklet with a cued synopsis. Naxos (who also include a cued synopsis) offer not only the complete opera but seven fascinating historical recordings. Among the historical recordings, the Galli-Curci/Tito Schipa duet and Toti Dal Monte's pristine Mad Scene stand out, and it is always a pleasure to hear Gigli's golden tenor. The famous Sextet was recorded primitively in New York in 1920, and is for aficionados of acoustic recordings only! Comparison with the budget EMI transfer reveals a somewhat smoother upper focus on Naxos, both on voices and on orchestra, which we are inclined to prefer, although some might think that Callas is given slightly more presence on EMI.

The Callas stereo version was recorded in Kingsway Hall in 1959, with her edgy top notes cleanly caught. Her flashing-eyed interpretation of the role of Lucia remains unique, though the voice has its unsteady moments. One instance is at the end of the Act I duet with Edgardo, where Callas on the final phrase moves sharpwards and Tagliavini – here past his best – flatwards. Serafin's conducting is ideal, though the score, as in Callas's other recordings, still has the cuts which used to be conventional in the theatre. An hour of highlights from this set is available on EMI 5 66664-2.

Lucrezia Borgia (complete)

🔑 Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 421 497-2 (2). Sutherland, Aragall, Horne, Wixell, London Op. Voices, Nat. PO, Bonynge

Sutherland is in her element here. Aragall sings stylishly too, and although Wixell's timbre is hardly Italianate he is a commanding Alfonso. Marilyn Horne in the breeches role of Orsini is impressive in the brilliant Brindisi of the last Act, but earlier she has moments of unsteadiness. The recording is characteristically full and brilliant.

Maria Padilla (complete)

(*) Opera Rara (ADD) ORC 6 (3). McDonall, Jones, Clark, Du Plessis, Earle, Caley, Kennedy, Davies, Mitchell Ch., LSO, Francis

Maria Padilla even matches Lucia di Lammermoor in places, with the heroine ill-used by the prince she loves, Pedro the Cruel. When the obligatory mad scene is given not to the heroine but to her father, even a tenor such as Graham Clark – future star in Bayreuth – can hardly compensate, however red-blooded the writing and strong the singing. In the title-role Lois McDonall is brightly agile, if at times a little raw. Alun Francis directs the LSO in a fresh, well-disciplined performance and, as ever with Opera Rara sets, the notes and commentary contained in the libretto are both readable and scholarly.

Maria Stuarda (DVD versions)

Ⓝ Ⓑ  Naxos Dynamic DVD 2.110268. Piscitelli, Polverelli, De Biasio, Alberghini, Cassi, Marchigiana Ch. & O, Frizza (Dir: Lier Luigi Pizzi; V/D: Davide Crescendi)

Ⓝ  Arthaus DVD 101 361. Antonacci, Devia, Meli, Alberghini, Terranova, La Scala, Milan Ch. & O, Fogliani (V/D: Carlo Tagliabue)

Why is it that operatic stage designers want to mount colourful operas against such austere staging? Pier Luigi Pizzi's set for the 2007 Marchigiano production offers a combination of ramps, plus a bare set of steps, centre stage. Fortunately the costumes are pleasingly colourful (Elisabetta's headdress in Act I is impressive), and reasonably in-period and the performance itself more than compensates. The cast is dominated by Maria Pia Piscitelli's moving portrayal of the condemned Queen Maria. She sings with much lyrical beauty and is a true star, all but matched by Laura Polverelli's imperious portrayal of Elisabetta. The men are good too, especially Roberto de Biasio's Conte di Leicester, and the many male/female duets are very telling. The big scene when the queens meet, with its splendid quintet, and Maria's furious denunciation of Elisabetta as a bastard, is a thrilling highlight. Riccardo Frizza directs throughout with plenty of vitality, yet gives the singers persuasively lyrical support. All in all a considerable success, although not visually entrancing.

The minimalist but undistracting La Scala stage design, a mixture of grilles and grids, highlight the superb costumes in Fogliani's excellent performance dating from 2008. Mariella Devia, at the age of 60, shows remarkably few signs of her age and she makes a compelling Maria Stuarda, whilst Anna Caterina Antonacci makes an excellent Elisabetta, both coping well with their high-flying coloratura. The great confrontation between the queens at the climax of Act I is superbly dramatic, while the men, particularly Francesco Meli in the role of Leicester, are very good indeed. There are some textual differences in this score, some slighter than others, than the versions we are used to with Bonynge and Mackerras, (the finale in Act I, as well as the final aria, for example). Excellent conducting, chorus and orchestra, expert camera-work and a sharp picture complete the package. A backstage documentary is included as a bonus.

Maria Stuarda (CD version)

🔑 Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 425 410-2 (2). Sutherland, Tourangeau, Pavarotti, Ch. & O of Teatro Comunale, Bologna, Bonynge

In the Decca set of Donizetti's tellingly dramatic opera on the conflict of Elizabeth I and Mary Queen of Scots, the contrast between the full soprano Maria and the dark mezzo Elisabetta is underlined by some transpositions, with Tourangeau emerging as a powerful villainess in this slanted version of the story. Pavarotti turns Leicester into a passionate Italian lover, not at all an Elizabethan gentleman. As for Sutherland, she is at her most fully dramatic too, and the great moment when she flings the insult Vil bastarda! at her cousin brings a superb snarl; Richard Bonynge directs an urgent account of an unfailingly enjoyable opera. Unusually for Decca, the score is slightly cut. The recording is characteristically bright and full.

Mary Stuart (in English)

🔑 * Warner DVD 50467 8028-2. Baker, Plowright, Rendall, Tomlinson, Opie, ENO Ch. & O, Mackerras (V/D: Peter Butler)

Ⓜ  Chan. 3017 (2). Baker, Plowright, Rendall, Tomlinson, Opie, ENO Ch. & O, Mackerras

Dame Janet Baker chose this opera for her farewell to the operatic stage in London in 1982, understandably when the role of the tragic queen was one of her most powerful assumptions. Her deeply moving performance, with her voice ringing gloriously, is well known from the audio version, but this video greatly intensifies the experience. John Copley's inspired production, with evocative sets and costumes by Desmond Heeley, makes the perfect background for her brilliant acting. The joyful mood of her first aria is powerfully transformed into anger as she confronts Queen Elizabeth. That leads to resigned dedication as she sings her prayer in the last scene. Rosalind Plowright in her prime makes an excellent, statuesque foil as Elizabeth, and the other principals are first rate too – the young John Tomlinson as Talbot, David Rendall a ringing tenor as Leicester and Alan Opie characterful as Cecil. Sir Charles Mackerras as conductor strongly underlines the drama of the piece.

Poliuto (complete)

🔑 Ⓜ () EMI mono 5 65448-2 (2). Callas, Corelli, Bastianini, Zaccaria, La Scala Ch. and O, Votto

In 1960 Maria Callas returned to La Scala, having missed the two previous seasons, and had a triumph. This live recording, made at the time, demonstrates the scale of that triumph, with Callas's musical imagination and intensity of communication at their very peak. Corelli gives a heroic performance, noticeably subtler and more sensitive in scenes opposite Callas than when he is on his own. Bastianini and Zaccaria complete the top Scala team of principals and, though the chorus is often rough, Votto heightens the dramatic impact in his conducting. Variable and limited mono sound, now effectively remastered.

Roberto Devereux (complete)

(*) Opera Rara ORC24 (2). Miricioiu, Bros, Ganassi, Frontali, ROHCG Ch. & O, Benini

Central to the success of this new set is the singing of the Romanian, Nelly Miricioiu, as Elizabeth, a fine, characterful soprano who has been unjustly neglected on disc. With a voice far warmer than Sills', yet just as flexible in coloratura, she gives a most moving account of the key role of the Queen, and she is well matched by the fresh, young tenor, José Bros, as Essex, who, instead of belting his words out like his predecessor on disc, shades his tone with a delicacy all too rare with tenors today in this repertory. The contrast of youth and maturity is equally effective in the casting of the clear-toned Sonia Ganassi as Sara, while Maurizio Benini draws warmly dramatic, idiomatic singing and playing from the Covent Garden Chorus and Orchestra. The only snag of this live performance is that the audience is so enthusiastic that wild applause punctuates the performance all too often. As usual with Opera Rara, the booklet is a model of scholarship, with profiles and portraits of great singers of the past who have sung the principal roles, though curiously nothing about the present cast except their photos.

Rosmonda d'Inghilterra (highlights)

🔑  Opera Rara ORR 214. Fleming, Ford, Miricioiu, Miles, Montague, Philh. O, Parry

It was in 1994, just before her spectacular rise to international superstar status, that Renée Fleming contributed to Opera Rara's splendid recording of this long-neglected Donizetti opera. Shrewdly that company here offers 76 minutes from the opera, covering substantially all the vocal high spots involving the heroine. The result is a formidable demonstration of Fleming's art, with her sumptuous voice then at its freshest. With starry casting for the other characters too, the quality of her contribution, far from being dimmed, is enhanced still further, with Nelly Miricioiu and Diana Montague nicely contrasted, and with Bruce Ford and Alastair Miles ideally cast. Strong, purposeful direction from David Parry and full, vivid sound. Unlike most Opera Rara issues, this one does not provide texts, only a summary of plot for each item.

Ugo, conte di Parigi (complete)

 Opera Rara (ADD) (3). D. Jones, Harrhy, J. Price, Kenny, Arthur, du Plessis, Mitchell Ch., New Philh. O, Francis

The 1977 recording of Ugo, conte di Parigi was the result of formidable detective work, revealing in this early opera of 1832 a strong plot and some fine numbers, including excellent duets. Matching such singers as Janet Price and Yvonne Kenny, Maurice Arthur sings stylishly in the title-role with a clear-cut tenor that records well. Della Jones and Christian du Plessis, regular stalwarts of Opera Rara sets, complete a stylish cast. Reissued on CD, thanks to the Peter Moores Foundation, it offers a fresh and intelligent performance under Alun Francis, and the scholarly, readable notes and commentary, as well as libretto and translation, are models of their kind.

Collection: 'Donizetti Divas': excerpts from: (i) Alfredo il Grande; (ii) L'assedio di Calais; (iii) Chiara e Serafina; (iv) Dom Sébastien de Portugal; (v) Emilia di Liverpool; (vi) Gabriella di Vergy; (vii) Maria De Rudenz; (viii) Maria Padilla; (ix) Rosmonda d'Inghilterra; (x) Ugo, Conte di Parigi; (xi) Zoraisa di Granata

🔑  Opera Rara (ADD) ORR 213. (i; iii) D. Jones; (ii) Focile, du Plessis; (iii; v) Kenny; (iii) Davies; (iv) Elkins; (vi) Andrew; (vii; ix) Miricioiu; (vii) MacFarland, Ford; (viii) McDonall; (ix) Fleming; (x) Price, Harrhy; (xi) Cullagh, Montague; with variations orchestras & conductors

Recorded with various singers and orchestras between 1977 and 1990, this collection of Donizetti rarities brilliantly exploits the sparkling style of Della Jones as exponent of Donizetti. The various items have been compiled from earlier recordings from Opera Rara, complete operas as well as the earlier volumes of the '100 Years of Italian Opera' series, yet in sound and above all in vocal quality the results are splendidly consistent. Anyone looking to explore the neglected side of Donizetti's vast output without venturing into complete operas will find this most illuminating.

Arias from: (i; ii) Belisario; (ii; iii) Gemma di Vergy; (i) Parisina d'Este. Torquato Tasso

Ⓜ  RCA (ADD) 82876 62309-2 (2). Caballé, Amb. Op. Ch., LSO, Cillario, with (i) Elkins; (ii) McDonnell; (iii) Fyson, Mauro – ROSSINI; VERDI: Arias ***

Three famous LP recital 'rarities' discs are generously brought together here for the first time. Caballé's conviction as well as her technical assurance makes for highly dramatic results in these still rare Donizetti scenas. The placing of the voice in the Belisario item is superbly assured, as is the control of tone, with never a hint of forcing, even in the most exposed fortissimo. The cabaletta from Torquato Tasso goes equally impressively, helped by Cillario's sympathetic conducting; and there is much elsewhere to enjoy, for these late-1960s recordings display some of Caballé's finest qualities. The recording is full and vivid, though there is some minor distortion when the voice presses hard. Texts and translations included.

DOVE, Jonathan (born 1959)

The Adventures of Pinocchio (DVD version)

Ⓝ  Opus Arte DVD OA 101 D2 (2). Simmonds, Summers, Plazas, Bottone, Broadbent, Clayton, Chorus & Orch of Opera North, Parry (Dir: Martyn Duncan. Sets and Costumes, Francis O'Connor)

Jonathan Dove with his librettist, Alasdair Middleton, in this operatic version in two substantial acts, gives a much fuller idea of the story of Pinocchio, as told by Carlo Collodi, starting with the moment when Geppetto the woodman finds a talking log in the forest. Geppetto is about to chop it up, when it speaks to him demanding that he preserve it, later demanding that he should bring out the secret it contains, nothing less than the puppet, Pinocchio, who kicks him as his legs appear.

Generally the scenes follow the development of Pinocchio from rebellious puppet to kind and considerate boy. One important detail in the story, much exploited by Disney, that the opera ignores completely is the varying length of Pinocchio's nose, depending on the lies he is telling: in the opera, no doubt for the convenience of the costume department, Pinocchio's nose remains long from beginning to end.

Dove's writing characteristically is colourful and vigorous, with inventive instrumentation and the sharp jazzy syncopations add to the attractions of the writing, which is generally easily lyrical. The performance, filmed live is excellent, and conducted very ably by David Parry. Victoria Simmonds is excellent in the title role, wearing a very convincing costume, with Jonathan Summers as Geppetto. A very welcome issue of a most attractive new opera.

DOWLAND, John (1563–1626)

CONSORT MUSIC

Consort music

 Hyp. CDA 66010. Extempore String Ens.

The Extempore Ensemble's technique of improvising and elaborating in Elizabethan consort music is aptly exploited here in an attractively varied selection of pieces by Dowland; on record, as in concert, the result sounds the more spontaneous. Excellent recording.

Consort music, lute solos and songs

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553326. Rose Consort of Viols, with Heringman and King

Catherine King's fresh voice and simplicity of line are all her own and she is very touching in the melancholy songs. The Rose Consort, lively enough in the galliards, also show their sensitivity to Dowland's doleful moods, notably in the famous Semper Dowland semper dolens, but also in the lament for Oliver Cromwell (not the famous Oliver Cromwell), played sombrely on bass viol and lute. The two lute solos, very well played by Jacob Heringman, offer further contrast, and the whole programme is recorded most naturally.

Consort Pieces; Lute Fancies and Lute Songs

Ⓝ * Sony/BMG 88697225022. Dorothy Mields, Santana (lute), Herl (viola da gamba), Sirius Viols

This is a particularly successful and rewarding collection entitled 'The Seven Shades of Melancholy'. Yet it has no lack of variety and there are songs (Clear or Cloudy and Time Stands Still, for instance) which are only on the edge of melancholy. Dorothy Mields, who introduces the programme herself, has a particularly rich and lovely soprano voice, and sings with great sensitivity. In between come beautifully played consort items by the Sirius Viols (a sextet) and the whole programme is framed by two lute solos by Lee Santana. The disc is handsomely packaged and well documented. Recommended.

Lachrimae, or Seaven Teares

 BIS CD 315. Dowland Consort, Lindberg

Jakob Lindberg and his consort of viols give a highly persuasive account of Dowland's masterpiece. The texture is always clean and the lute clearly present.

Lachrimae: 7 Passionate pavans. (ii) Consort settings

🔑  Virgin 5 45005-2. Fretwork, with Wilson

This is a reissue of Fretwork's 1989 recording of excerpts from the Lachrimae, for which the 'passionate' pavans serve as introduction. They are distinguished also by their pervading melancholy but are followed by a newly recorded collection of Dowland's own galliards, so one can choose to move over to more cheerful music at any time. All the performances are of undoubted merit and are well recorded.

(i) Lachrimae: 7 Passionate Pavans. Consort settings

(*) HM HMU 907275. (i) The King's Noyse, Douglass; (ii) Hargis, O'Dette (lute)

The King's Noyse also give a very affecting performance of the Lachrimae, plus a generous programme of other pieces for viols. In a similarly dolorous mood, Ellen Hargis contributes just five lute songs, which she sings touchingly and beautifully, and they are expertly accompanied by Paul O'Dette. They are interspersed with the instrumental music, and one could have wished that the balance was more even between vocal and instrumental items. However, the recording is most natural and full texts are included.

Complete Solo Lute Music (Collection)

Ⓝ 🔑 Ⓑ * BIS-SACD 1724. Jacob Lindberg (8-course or 10-course lute or 8-course orpharion)

(BB)  Naxos 8.557586 (Vol.1); 8.557862 (Vol.2); 8570449 (Vol.3); 8570284 (Vol.4). Nigel North (lute)

Jacob Lindberg, a superb lutenist now provides us with the complete solo lute and orpharion music of John Dowland including two closing Pavans from J. D. Mylius's Thesaurus gratiarum which he has only recently discovered. The orpharion, a flat-backed wire-strung instrument, is used to atmospheric effect in the 11 works for which it was intended. This music can be dipped into at pleasure for it is offered on a single SACD with a playing time of four-and-a-quarter hours (achieved apparently by using DVD technology for an audio-only SACD). Lindberg's playing is peerless and the result is totally realistic. One can pick out any one of the 92 items virtually instantaneously. A remarkable achievement, very well documented. We feel that this ease of access gives Lindberg a lead over his competitors.

Nigel North has also just completed a comprehensive coverage of this repertoire for Naxos. He plays with perception and skill and no lack of spontaneity and is given fine presence by the recordings. Volume 1 tends to concentrate on the livelier pieces; Volume 2 includes the famous Lachrimae Pavan and the Semper Dowland semper dolens although the programme offers sprightly numbers too. Volume 3 concentrates on the three principal Elizabethan dances movements - almains, galliards and pavans of which the Melancholy Galliard and Pavana doulant are most typical of the composer's melancholy, even in dance forms. In the fourth and final volume North combines dances, including many favourite galliards, plus some transcribed songs. This coverage is altogether excellent and will suit those who may not want to have the whole collection, but would prefer to enter Dowland's world a disc at a time.

VOCAL MUSIC

Ayres (with viols); Lute Solos and Songs

(BB) * Hyp. Helios CDH 55241. Bowman, King's Consort or D. Miller (lute) – CAMPION; FORD; JOHNSON; DANYEL; FERRABOSCO; HUNNIS: Ayrs; Lute Songs & Solos ***

A particularly attractive collection, offering maximum variety. James Bowman has exactly the right alto voice for this repertoire and he sings very beautifully, while the lutenist David Miller (who introduces four different lutes during the course of the programme) and the quartet of viols from the King's Consort are equally memorable. The recording is well up to Hyperion's usual high standard. A true bargain.

Lute songs, Book I (1597); Book II (1600)

 Metronome METCD 1010. Agnew, Wilson

Lute songs, Book III (1603); Book IV (1610); Book V (1612)

 Metronome METCD 1011. Agnew, Wilson

Paul Agnew's tenor voice has a certain darkness of colouring in the middle range that seems just right for the dolour of such songs as Come ye heavie states of night and Flow not so fast ye fountaines, or the despondent If that a sinners sighes be angels foode (a lovely performance), yet he can lighten it attractively for lively numbers like What if I never speede or Fine knacks for ladies. Christopher Wilson's intimate accompaniments could not be more gently supportive, and the recording balance is admirable within a pleasingly atmospheric acoustic. Each disc is handsomely presented with a beautifully printed booklet containing full texts and illustrations, all within a slipcase.

First Booke of Songes (1597)

 Decca O/L (ADD) 475 9114. Consort of Musicke, Rooley

Here Rooley and the excellent Consorte of Musicke have recorded all the contents of the First Booke of Songes in the order in which they are published, varying the accompaniment between viols, lute and bass viol, but also offering voices and viols, and even voices alone. There is hardly any need to stress the beauties of the music itself, which is eminently well served by this stylish ensemble, and beautifully recorded. This L'Oiseau-Lyre disc returns to the catalogue using the original logo and artwork and including full texts.

Four-part lute songs

(*) Lyrichord LEMS 8031. Saltire Singers, Dupré

The Saltire Singers are a superb vocal group from the early 1960s. Patricia Clark and Edgar Fleet were both performers with Deller's Consort, and Desmond Dupré was Deller's lutenist. The vocal blend here is ravishing. Seldom have individual singers matched their voices more richly in this repertoire, with Patricia Clark leading with a sweet, soaring soprano, her gentle touch of vibrato ideal for Dowland's melodic lines. The choice of songs too is admirable, offering some of Dowland's very finest inspirations. The extended Tell me true love brings opportunities for lovely solo contributions from each member of the team; but most touching of all is the melancholy Wherever sin sore wounding, which shows Dowland at his most profound. The recording of the voices could hardly be bettered, except that at times they tend to overwhelm the lute. The only other small caveat is the relatively short measure (44 minutes), but the quality of the singing more than compensates. Full texts are provided.

Lute Songs

Ⓑ (*) Virgin 2x1 5 62410-2 (2). Kirkby, Rooley – JONES: Lute Songs ***

Emma Kirkby seldom disappoints, and she sings these songs with simple beauty, often touching. But her white, pure timbre does not always find quite enough variety of colour and intensity in Dowland's more poignant expressions of dolour. Anthony Rooley accompanies very supportively on either his lute or a 7-course orpharion. What makes this inexpensive double especially attractive is the coupled selection of songs by Robert Jones, which suit Kirkby's voice very persuasively. Excellent balance and truthful recording.

Lute Songs

(*) BIS SACD 1475. Kirkby, Rooley (lute)

If you enjoy the freshness of Emma Kirkby's singing, with its total freedom from artifice, this programme can certainly be recommended, with its naturally balanced and beautifully played accompaniments from Anthony Rooley. But, as with the earlier Virgin collection with Rooley, Kirkby does not find quite enough variety of expression to uncover the fullest depth of some of these songs. The recording is enhanced on surround sound SACD: if the back speakers are judiciously balanced, the sense of presence is very natural.

Elizabethan Lute Songs

 RCA 886970 49272. Pears, Bream (with Songs by MORLEY; ROSSETTER & FORD)

The selection of Dowland's songs dominates this recital, which Peter Pears sings with his usual blend of intelligence and lyrical feeling. His very individual timbre readily identifies with the underlying melancholy which characterizes so many Elizabethan songs, and Bream accompanies impeccably on the lute. The recordings were made in 1963 in London's Wigmore Hall and 1969 in the Conway Hall.

Lute Songs & Lute Solos

 Hyp. CDA 67648. Padmore , Kenny – BRITTEN: Nocturnal after John Dowland: Ogden, guitar ***

Mark Padmore's tenor voice is rich-timbred as well as deeply expressive, and he can sparkle too (sample Sorrow stay, followed immediately by Away with these self-loving lads). Elizabeth Kenny plays her solo items just as beautifully as she accompanies the singer. The disc is very well planned so that as a centrepiece the lute solo, Sleep, wayward thoughts, is followed by the song Come heavy sleep to introduce Britten's guitar Nocturnal (Reflections on 'Come, heavy sleep') with its eight fascinatingly diverse variations, including an extended closing Passacaglia – brilliantly and imaginatively played by Craig Ogden. The programme then ends with eight more well-chosen items from Padmore and Kenny.

Lute Songs and Lute Solos (with Galliards by Mary, Queen of Scotts. Attrib. FRANCIS CUTTING: Greensleeves (Divisions). Anon.: Bonny Sweet Robin; Callino; Kemp's Jig)

🔑 Ⓑ  Naxos 8.553381. Rickards, Linell (lute)

Steven Rickards has a light, precise counter-tenor voice which he uses very imaginatively in this sequence of 19 songs, including many of Dowland's finest. There are also well-chosen lute solos from Dorothy Linell, supplementing her excellent accompaniments. The recording, made in New York, is clear and well balanced. Full texts and good notes are provided.

Lute Songs

🔑  Lyrichord (ADD) LEMS 8011. Oberlin, Iadone (lute)

One can hardly believe that this recital was recorded in 1958, so fresh and vivid is the sound. Russell Oberlin's very special counter-tenor timbre is beautifully caught. I saw my lady weep is most moving, while Flow my tears soars; but most touching of all is the closing In darkness let me dwell. Joseph Iadone contributes two of Dowland's most famous instrumental pieces. The only drawback to this disc is the comparatively short playing-time of 48 minutes.

DRAESEKE, Felix (1835–1913)

Piano Concerto in E flat., Op. 36

Ⓝ  Hyp. CDA 67636. Becker, Berlin RSO, Michael Sanderling – JADASSOHN: Piano Concertos 1 & 2 ***

Draeseke is hardly a household name these days, but in his day, he did acquire a certain reputation. His Piano Concerto of 1885–6 is Beethovenian in scope and Lisztian in spirit. Its exceptionally lively and colourful outer movements make for entertaining listening, along with the colourful orchestrations, though the music lacks melodic memorability.

DREYSCHOCK, Alexander (1818–69)

Piano Concerto in D min., Op. 137

 Hyp. CDA 67086. Lane, BBC Scottish SO, Willén – KULLAK: Piano Concerto in C min. ***

This is one of the very finest of Hyperion's 'Romantic Piano Concerto' series. Piers Lane rises to the occasion with glittering dexterity and fine romantic flair, while the orchestra provides enthusiastic support, introducing the endearing main theme of the Andante with affectionate warmth. The splendidly balanced recording presents the polished dialogue between solo piano and the often flamboyant orchestra in an ideal perspective.

DUFAY, Guillaume (c. 1400–74)

Sacred Music from the Bologna Manuscript

🔑  Signum SIGCD 023. Clerks' Group, Wickham

Edward Wickham and his excellent Clerks' Group here explore the Bologna Manuscript, Q15, which is one of the great surviving collections of fifteenth-century music. Their selection aims to show the changes in Dufay's style. The Clerks'

Group always seem completely at home in this repertoire and Wickham's pacing is always convincing. A fine and beautifully recorded collection.

Ave regina celorum; Missa Puisque je vis (attrib.)

 Hyp. CDA 67368. Binchois Cons., Kirkman – LOYSET COMPÈRE: Omnium bonorum plena; ANON.: Concede nobis domine; Salve maris stella

The Missa Puisque je vis has, for some half a century, been thought to have been written by Dufay, and recent scholarship has all but confirmed the attribution. It may well date from about the same time as the better-known Missa Ecce ancilla domini. It is based on a rather engaging courtly song about an unattainable lady, of which the text can be read to have a double meaning. It makes a useful basis for the Mass as its melody remains in the mind. It is sung here simply and beautifully by this group of eight singers. However, it does not match the richness of Dufay's Ave regina celorum, which was his own personal intercession with the Virgin, and he requested that it should be sung at his bedside at the moment of his death. The anonymous Salve maris stella is also impressive and Loyset Compère's motet, Omnium bonorum plena, flows agreeably, as does Concede nobis domine, but none of these motets, though sympathetically performed, matches the quality of the two Dufay works, authentic or not. The recording, made in All Saints, Tooting, is first class.

Missa L'homme armé; Motet: Supremum est mortalibus bonum

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553087. Oxford Camerata, Summerly

Jeremy Summerly and his Oxford Camerata give a powerfully expressive and wholly convincing account of Dufay's masterly cyclic Mass using a Burgundian chanson as its basis. We hear this sung first in its original format as an introduction, and its message, 'The armed man should be feared', makes a dramatically appropriate contrast with the motet, Supremum est mortalibus, which is a peace song. The latter was written some 30 years earlier, yet it shows just as readily the remarkable inventiveness and eloquence of this 15th-century French composer. The Mass movements are interspersed with plainchant in the same Dorian mode. With vivid yet atmospheric recording this can be given the strongest recommendation.

Missa Santi Anthoni de Padua. Motet: O proles Hispaniae / O sidus Hispaniae

Ⓑ  Hyp. Helios CDH 55271. Binchois Cons., Kirkman

Through clever detective work this fine 10-movement plenary Mass (with four sections of the Ordinary – Introit, Gradual, Alleluia and Offertory – added to the Proper) is now attributed with fair confidence to Dufay. Sensitive singing from the six singers of the Binchois Consort under Andrew Kirkman, and a splendid coupling in the five items by Dufay's contemporary, Gilles Binchois, all very well recorded. The Binchois Consort also performs a motet with two texts associated with St Anthony. The recording is first class and the disc is highly recommendable.

Mass for St James the Greater. Motets: Apostolo glorioso; Balsamus et munda cera; Gloria; Credo; Rite majorem Jacobum canamus/Arcibus summis miseri reclusi

Ⓝ (BB) * Hyp. Helios CDH 55272. Binchois Consort, Kirkman

St James the Greater was remembered as an important mystical figure in medieval times. Closely associated with Christ and the Virgin Mary, brother of St John the Evangelist, he was the first Bishop of Jerusalem and martyred by Herod Agrippa. The 9-part Mass he inspired is one of Dufay's most ambitious, eloquently beautiful and stylistically varied, created from the richness of the melodic chants the composer drew on. The accompanying contemplative Rite majorem is linked with the Mass, but the other motets here have different associations, and provide further variety in one of the finest examples of Dufay's genius on disc. This CD has rightly been highly praised, for Kirkman's performances with the Binchois Consort are very compelling and beautifully recorded.

Mass Se la face ay pale (with Propers from the end of the 1440s); Ballade Se la face ay pale. Motets: O tres piteux; Magnanime gentis

Ⓝ * Hyp. CDA 67715. Binchois Consort, Kirkman

For their recording of the most famous of Dufay's masses, being a celebrated example of one of the earliest works to use a unified cantus firmus structure. But here it is presented as it would have been performed in its time, with a set of Propers from the same period (found in manuscript of the late 1450s). Kirkman also offers as a postlude the ballad which supplied the composer with his cantus firmus for the Mass, plus two motets of the same period. Thus the overall sequence is one a considerable variety of music of striking expressive depth and as usual with this superb group, the performances could not be more eloquent and dedicated.

DUKAS, Paul (1865–1935)

L'Apprenti sorcier (The Sorcerer's Apprentice)

🔑  DG 419 617-2. BPO, Levine – SAINT-SAËNS: Symphony 3 ***

() Testament mono SBT 1017. Philh. O, Cantelli – CASELLA: Paganiniana; FALLA: Three-Cornered Hat; RAVEL: Daphnis et Chloé: Suite 2 ()

Ⓜ (*) Chan. 6503. SNO, Gibson – ROSSINI (arr. Respighi): La Boutique fantasque; SAINT-SAËNS: Danse macabre **(*)

Levine chooses a fast basic tempo, though not as fast as Toscanini (who managed only two 78 sides), but achieves a deft, light and rhythmic touch to make this a real orchestra Scherzo. Yet the climax is thrilling, helped by superb playing from the Berlin Philharmonic. The CD has an amplitude and sparkle which are especially telling.

Cantelli's 1954 mono account still remains one of the very best performances ever recorded, and it is splendidly transferred.

Gibson secures excellent playing from the SNO, if without the sheer panache of some of his competitors. The recording (made in City Hall, Glasgow, in 1972) is less overtly brilliant than Levine's but has plenty of atmosphere. The Chandos disc, however, is ungenerous in playing time (37 minutes).

L'Apprenti sorcier (The Sorcerer's Apprentice) (with spoken introduction)

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.554463. Morris (nar.), Slovak RSO, Jean – RAVEL: Ma Mère l'Oye  ; SAINT-SAËNS: Carnival of the Animals **(*)

In this Naxos triptych clearly aimed at young children, Johnny Morris provides a concise and effective narrative introduction. The performance is alive and well paced; it takes a while to generate the fullest tension, but any child should respond to this imagery. The recording is excellent, spacious and vivid.

L'Apprenti sorcier; La Péri

(*) Testament SBT 1324. Paris Conservatoire O, Ansermet – SAINT-SAËNS: Danse macabre; DEBUSSY: Jeux; 6 Epigraphes antiques, etc. ()

L'Apprenti sorcier; La Péri: Poème dansé (with Fanfare); Symphony in C

🔑 (BB)  Warner Apex 0927 48725-2. (i) Nouvel PO; (ii) SRO, Jordan

L'Apprenti sorcier; La Péri (with Fanfare); Polyeucte: Overture

Ⓜ  Sup. (ADD) SU 3479-2 011. Czech PO, Almeida

The super-bargain Apex disc offers a reissue of what were the first accounts of the Dukas Symphony and La Péri to reach CD, and the 1985 recording sounds splendid in this new transfer, especially in La Péri, which is spectacular, atmospheric and clear. Jordan's reading of the Symphony has both vitality and musical conviction, and he is equally sensitive to the richly languorous evocation of La Péri, while building a thrilling climax. An outstanding bargain: indeed this would be recommendable if it cost far more.

Almeida's Dukas collection, made in 1973, is hardly less successful. Almeida's performance of La Péri is sensuous and gripping, and the orchestral playing has both intensity and allure. Polyeucte, an early work with Wagnerian echoes, is also extremely successful, especially the closing Andante tranquillo. But what makes this Supraphon disc very competitive is the sparkling L'Apprenti sorcier, the main theme winningly jaunty and ideally paced, and reaching a brilliant climax, with superb roistering horns and the whole orchestra on its toes.

Ansermet's 1954 recording of La Péri with the Paris Conservatoire Orchestra, which was originally coupled with Rachmaninov's Isle of the Dead, omits the Fanfare. The sound, in this transfer of the experimental stereo master (made alongside the mono but never released at the time), is obviously more detailed, and the earlier version is a reading of great breadth and style. L'Apprenti sorcier is also very successful, and there is an added bonus of Saint-Saëns's Danse macabre. Well worth investigating.

(i) L'Apprenti sorcier; La Péri (with Fanfare); (ii) Polyeucte Overture; Symphony in C; (iii) Piano Sonata; La Plainte, au loin, du faune; Prélude élégiaque

🔑 Ⓑ  Chan. 2 for 1 241-32. (i) Ulster O; (ii) BBC PO, Y. P. Tortelier; (iii) Fingerhut

Yan Pascal Tortelier gives a very good performance of La Péri, with plenty of atmosphere and feeling, and L'Apprenti sorcier is equally successful. Tortelier's account of the Symphony is a clear primary recommendation, as is Polyeucte, an early piece with Wagnerian echoes. Excellent Chandos rcording in all four works ensures their success.

Margaret Fingerhut's collection of the piano music is recommendable too, a distinguished survey, with the large-scale Sonata particularly authoritative. The Prélude élégiaque, and La Plainte, au loin, du faune both move into the world of Debussian impressionism. They are both played very evocatively. Again very good sound.

La Péri (with Fanfare)

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.557274. Nat. O de Lille-Région Nord, Jean-Claude Casadesus – BERLIOZ: Nuits d'été; CHAUSSON: Poème **(*)

Jean-Claude Casadesus with his fine Lille Orchestra conducts a warmly atmospheric reading of Dukas's 'poem for orchestra', introduced (as it should be) by the fanfare written as a brief prelude. The recording is both warm and clear, with the brass beautifully caught. Not perhaps a first choice, but an excellent supplement to the two vocal pieces.

Piano Duet

L'Apprenti sorcier (arr. for 2 pianos)

(BB) (*) EMI Gemini (ADD/DDD) 5 86510-2 (2). Collard, Béroff – DEBUSSY & RAVEL: Music for piano, 4 hands & 2 pianos; BIZET: Jeux d'enfants **(*)

The composer's own piano-duet transcription of his most famous work is surprisingly successful, particularly the opening and closing pages; but Collard and Béroff are spirited throughout and the digital recording is fully acceptable.

Piano Sonata in E flat min.

🔑  Hyp. CDA 67513. Hamelin – DECAUX: Clairs de lune ***

(BB) (*) Warner Apex 0927 48996-2. Hubeau

The Dukas Sonata has always hovered on the periphery of the catalogue. However, with this mighty performance by Marc-André Hamelin, earlier versions are all but swept aside. Hamelin has the full measure of this extraordinary work and he is blessed with first-rate recorded sound from the Henry Wood Hall by Simon Eadon and Andrew Keener.

Ariane et Barbe-Bleu (opera; complete)

 Telarc CD-80680 (2). Lori & Peter Phillips, Bardon, Rose, BBC SO, Botstein

Originally broadcast on BBC Radio 3, this account of Dukas's exotic opera about Bluebeard is strong and sympathetic. Lori Phillips sings with bright, fresh tone as Ariane and, though Peter Phillips's baritone is hardly sinister in the role of Bluebeard, it is a strong, cleanly focused performance. This fills an important gap very effectively.

DU MONT, Henry (1610–84)

Allemande à 3; Pavane à 3; Saraband à 3; Symphonie à 3 (for 2 violins & continuo); Allemande en tablature; Allemande grave; Allemande sur les anches (all for organ); Pavane pour clavecin; Dialogue motets: Dialogue angelis et peccatoris; Dialogus de Anima; In lectulo meo; In te Domine; Litanies à la Vierge

🔑 (BB)  Virgin 2x1 5 62419-2 (2). Les Talens Lyriques, Rousset – COUPERIN: Motets ***

Rousset, in his diverse collection with Les Talens Lyriques, introduces some of the chamber and instrumental music, in which a noble expressive gravity predominates, although there are engaging dance-like interludes. The harpsichord Pavane with which Rousset closes the concert himself is one of its highlights, and the other is the echo motet, In lectulo meo, in which Sandrine Piau shines radiantly in a duet with herself. But the most important and striking of these dialogue motets is the ambitious Dialogus de Anima – almost an oratorio – for five singers, in which God, a sinner and an angel converse, with the piece ending with a splendid five-part chorus. This is most vividly performed and recorded, and with full texts and translations this Virgin bargain Double can be recommended highly.

DUNHILL, Thomas (1877–1946)

Symphony in A min., Op. 48.

Ⓜ  Dutton CDLX 7195. RSNO, Yates – ARNELL: Lord Byron ***

Thomas Dunhill was a pupil of Stanford in the 1890s and became best known for his light music and as a song composer. His Symphony was written in 1914–16 and first given in 1922 in Belgrade, and again in Bournemouth in 1924. It fell out of the repertoire and this is its first revival since the 1930s. The three stars are for the excellent performance and recording; the work itself is genial and likeable enough but wanting in individuality and cogency.

DUNSTABLE, John (d. 1453)

Missa Rex seculorum. Motets: Albanus roseo rutilat – Quoque ferundus eras – Albanus domini Laudus; Ave maris stella; Descendi in ortum meum; Gloria in canon; Preco preheminence – Precursor premittur – textless – Inter natos mulierum; Salve regina mater mire; Specialis Virgo; Speciosa facta es; Sub tuam protectionem; Veni sancte spiritus – Veni creator spiritus

🔑 * Metronome METCD 1009. Orlando Cons.

The Orlando Consort present their generous, 74-minute survey with an impressive combination of direct, impassioned feeling and style. If the splendid Missa Rex seculorum is of doubtful attribution, every piece here, motets and antiphons alike, is clearly by a major composer with a highly individual voice. The recording is excellent in every way and this CD, which won the Gramophone's Early Music Award in 1996, offers the collector an admirable and highly rewarding entry into this composer's sound-world.

Mass movements: Kyrie; Gloria a 4; Credo a 4; Gloria Jesus Christi Fili Dei (2 settings); Sanctus; Credo: Da gaudiorum premia; Agnus Dei; Quam pulchra es; Veni sancte spiritus; Gloria in Canon (arr. Pitts)

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.557341. Tonus Peregrinus, Pitts

Dunstable's most famous piece (and justly so) is the isorhythmic motet, Veni sancte spiritus, in which a comparatively enigmatic formal structure becomes totally dwarfed by the music's expressive beauty. But the Mass movements here are, if anything, more beautiful. The eight singers of Tonus Peregrinus sing all this music with richly blended tone and deep feeling, and Antony Pitts, their director, has arranged a little encore with a performace of Dunstable's four-part Gloria in Canon to which he has added a two-part canon underneath, as 'in the original work there must have been some kind of harmonic support'. Altogether a superb disc, fully worthy of a great but still little-known musician from the distant past.

DUPARC, Henri (1848–1933)

Mélodies (complete)

🔑  Hyp. CDA 66323. Walker, Allen, Vignoles

The Hyperion issue is as near an ideal modern Duparc record as could be. Roger Vignoles is the ever-sensitive accompanist, and the recording captures voices and piano beautifully, bringing out the tang and occasional rasp of Sarah Walker's mezzo and the glorious tonal range of Thomas Allen's baritone.

Mélodies

🔑 () Testament mono SBT 1312. Souzay, Bonneau – RAVEL: Don Quichotte à Dulcineé; DEBUSSY: 3 Ballades  ; CHAUSSON: Mélodies ()

 Nim. (ADD) NI 5736/7 (2). Cuénod, Parsons – FAURÉ: Mélodies ***

Souzay's recordings of 12 of Duparc's 16 songs, made with Jacqueline Bonneau for Decca, comes from 1953 and is superior, both vocally and interpretatively, to his 1970 set for HMV. The voice has a wonderful freshness and bloom, and the monaural sound is also remarkably good – and not just for its period. The balance is well judged and every syllable registers. Some of the songs have never been surpassed, even by Bernac or Panzera. These are very special performances and exquisitely accompanied.

Hugues Cuénod was already 70 when he made these recordings, though this hardly shows: the voice is light and steady, and his sense of style impeccable. Both the accompanists (the documentation does not indicate who accompanies what) are highly sensitive and match the refined intelligence that this great artist brings to this repertoire.

DUPRÉ, Marcel (1886–1971)

ORGAN MUSIC

6 Chorales, Op. 28; 2 Chorales, Op. 59; 24 Inventions, Op. 50; 4 Modal Fugues, Op. 63

(BB)  Naxos 8.553862. Biery

The 24 Inventions, Op. 50, which are divided to begin and end this CD, are, like Bach's Well-Tempered Clavier, composed in all the major and minor keys. They are distinguished by fastidious craftsmanship and considerable imagination, as are the 6 Chorales, Op. 28 (1930). The Chorales, Op. 59, and the Four Modal Fugues come from the 1960s. James Biery is an excellent advocate and the recording, made on the Casavant organ of the Cathedral of Saints Peter and Paul, in Providence, Rhode Island, is splendidly lifelike and has great clarity and definition. A rewarding issue.

Choral et Fugue, Op. 57; Cortège et Litanie, Op. 19/2; 3 Esquisses, Op. 41; Évocation, Op. 37; Allegro deciso. Preludes & Fugues, Op. 7/1–3; Le Tombeau de Titelouse: Te lucis ante terminum; Placare Christie servuli, Op. 38/6 & 16; Symphonie 2; Symphonie-Passion; Variations sur un vieux Noël, Op. 20

🔑 Ⓜ  Hyp. Dyad CDD 22059 (2). Scott (organ of St Paul's Cathedral)

John Scott's recording of this collection on the organ of St Paul's Cathedral is one of the most impressive reissues of recent times. His playing is more spontaneous and convincing than many of the composer's own recordings in the past. Dupré's music is revealed as reliably inventive and with an atmosphere and palette all its own. Scott is a splendid advocate and the St Paul's Cathedral organ is unexpectedly successful in this repertoire.

DURUFLÉ, Maurice (1902–86)

COMPLETE ORGAN MUSIC

Chant Donné (Hommage à Jean Gallan); Fugue sur le thème du Carillon des Heures de la Cathédral de Soissons, Op. 12; Méditation; Prélude, Adagio et Choral varié sur le thème du 'Veni Creator', Op. 4; Prélude sur l'Introit de l'Épiphanie, Op. 13; Scherzo, Op. 2; Suite, Op. 5

🔑  CPO compatible Surround Sound SACD 777 042-2. Flamme (Mülheisein organ, Stiftskirche, Bad Gandersheim)

(BB)  Naxos 8.557924. Fairs (organ of Notre-Dame d'Auteuil, Paris)

Previous recordings of Duruflé's organ music are now upstaged by this superb new CPO SACD, in surround sound. If a suitable player is available, linked to back speakers, one has the extraordinary feeling of sitting in the Stiftskirche, where the recording was made. Not only is the climax of the Op. 5 Toccata overwhelming but in the gentler music the pedals still make their presence felt, even on a normal CD playback. Friedhelm Flamme plays a magnificent new organ, installed in 2000, for which the manufacturer d'orgue, Mülheisein, was awarded the Meilleurs Ouvriers de France prize. Flamme's playing is highly sensitive, and he can articulate with great delicacy when needed, as in the Scherzo and the Prélude, Op. 4, while he creates a fine climax for the Carillon des Heures. Very highly recommended.

Henry Fairs has twice won the Prix Maurice Duruflé at Chartres, so he is well fitted for this repertoire. He plays a restored Cavaillé-Coll organ – impressively pictured, although not described here. It can be heard at its most spectacular in the Toccata from the Suite, Op. 5, but its colour palette is impressive and is well handed by Fairs. This is not as spectacular a survey as Flamme's on CPO, but Fairs is very well recorded and this Naxos CD is well worth its modest cost.

Danse lente, Op. 6/2; Prélude et Fugue sur le nom d'Alain, Op. 7

 Chan. 10315. Whitehead (organ of Saint Étienne Cathedral, Auxerre, France) – ALAIN: Aria; Danses, etc. ***

The well-known Prélude et Fugue weaves the name, Alain, into both sections and even quotes from the composer's Litanies at the conclusion of the Prélude. The transcribed Danse lente is the middle movement of Duruflé's orchestral Trois Danses, and almost turns the organ into an orchestra in its own right. In this spendidly played recital, both pieces are interwoven with a highly stimulating programme of music by Alain on an organ ideal for this repertory.

Organ Music: Fugue sur le carillon des heures de la Cathédrale de Soissons, Op. 12; Méditation, Op. posth.; Prélude, adagio et choral varié sur le 'Veni Creator', Op. 4; Prélude et fugue sur le nom d'Alain, Op. 7; Prélude sur l'introit de l'Epiphanie; Scherzo, Op. 2; Suite, Op. 5

 BIS CD 1304. Fagius

Hans Fagius uses the four-manual 89-stop 1928 Frobenius organ of Aarhus Cathedral in Denmark for his recital, and a particularly fine instrument it is. Apart from his good musicianship and taste, Fagius has the additional advantage of authority, since he also studied with the composer. Fagius's liner-notes are also exemplary and he has the additional advantage of superbly realistic BIS recording.

Requiem, Op. 9

🔑 Ⓜ  Warner Elatus 0927 49001-2. Larmore, Hampson, Amb. S., Philh. O, Legrand – FAURÉ: Requiem ***

Ⓑ  Decca Eclipse 448 711-2. Palmer, Shirley-Quirk, Boys of Westminster Cathedral Ch., L. Symphony Ch., LSO, Hickox – FAURÉ: Pavane; POULENC: Gloria ***

Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 3 79994-2. Baker, Roberts, King's College, Cambridge, Ch., Butt, Ledger – FAURÉ: Requiem; Pavane ***

Requiem, Op. 9; Messe Cum jubilo, Op. 11; 4 Motets sur les thèmes grégoriens, Op. 10; Notre père, Op. 14 (both for a cappella choir)

 Chan. 10357. Trinity College, Cambridge, Ch., Marlow; with Wilkinson; Herford; Williams (organ)

(i; ii; v) Requiem, Op. 9; (iii; iv; v) Messe cum jubilo, Op. 11; (iii) 4 Motets on Gregorian Themes, Op. 10; (v) (Organ) Prélude et fugue sur le nom d'Alain, Op. 7

🔑 (BB) * Warner Apex 2564 61139-2. (i) Bouvier, Depraz, Philippe Caillard Ch., LAP; (ii) Stéphane Caillat Ch.; (iii) Soyer; (iv) O Nat. de l'ORTFM; all cond. composer; (v) Duruflé-Chevalier (organ)

Requiem, Op. 9 (3rd version); 4 Motets, Op. 10

 Hyp. CDA 66191. Murray, Allen, Corydon Singers, ECO, Best; Trotter (organ)

(i–iii) Requiem. Op. 9; (ii) 4 Motets, Op. 10; (iii) (Organ) Prélude et fugue sur le nom d'Alain

Ⓑ  Double Decca (ADD) 436 486-2 (2). (i) King, Keyte; (ii) St John's College, Cambridge, Ch.; (iii) Cleobury (organ); Guest – FAURÉ: Requiem, etc.; POULENC: Messe, etc. ***

Duruflé wrote his Requiem in 1947, overtly basing its layout and even the cut of its themes on the Fauré masterpiece. A clear first choice is almost impossible to make; however, the Apex budget reissue is particularly valuable as it offers a spontaneously dedicated performance under the direction of the composer that blossoms into great ardour at emotional peaks. The less familiar but no less beautiful Messe cum jubilo receives a comparatively inspirational account, its gentler passages sustained with rapt concentration, with beautiful playing from the French Radio Orchestra. The soloists in both works rise to the occasion, and the choral singing combines passionate feeling with subtle colouring. The composer proves a splendid exponent of his own works, as does his daughter playing the Prélude et Fugue on the organ of Soissons Cathedral. The spaciously atmospheric recordings were made between 1959 (the Requiem) and 1971. Not to be missed.

Michel Legrand uses the full orchestral version and makes the most of the passionate orchestral eruptions in the Sanctus and Libera me. He strikes a perfect balance between these sudden outbursts of agitation and the work's mysticism and warmth. The Ambrosian Choir sing ardently yet find a treble-like purity for the Agnus Dei and In Paradisum, while Jennifer Larmore gives the Pie Jesu more plangent feeling than its counterpart in the Fauré Requiem. The recording, made in Watford Town Hall, is spacious and most realistically balanced.

Using the chamber-accompanied version, with strings, harp and trumpet – a halfway house between the full orchestral score and plain organ accompaniment – Best conducts a deeply expressive and sensitive performance. With two superb soloists and an outstandingly refined chorus, it makes an excellent recommendation, well coupled with the motets, done with similar freshness, clarity and feeling for tonal contrast. The recording is attractively atmospheric yet quite clearly focused.

Hickox tempers the richness of the orchestral version by using boys' voices in the choir. He relishes the extra drama of orchestral accompaniment with biting brass at the few moments of high climax. Felicity Palmer and John Shirley-Quirk sing with deep feeling and fine imagination, if not always with ideally pure tone. The recording has a pleasantly ecclesiastical ambience, which adds to the ethereal purity of the trebles, and the stereo spread is wide.

Philip Ledger's 1980 version of the Requiem uses organ rather than orchestral accompaniment. Yet such is the clarity of the recording and the sense of atmosphere engendered by the performance (and enhanced by the King's acoustic) that one scarcely misses the additional dimension of colour that the orchestra provides. The singing is splendid and the grave beauty and emotional restraint of Duruflé's music is movingly conveyed. Many will find this version satisfying, as it is so beautifully recorded.

The (originally Argo) St John's version also uses boy trebles instead of women singers, even in the solo of the Pie Jesu – exactly parallel to Fauré's setting of those words, which was indeed first sung by a treble. The alternative organ accompaniment is used here, not as warmly colourful as the orchestral version, but very beautiful nevertheless. The 1974 recording is vividly atmospheric. To this have been added the Four Motets, on plainsong themes, which are also finely sung. The organ piece, another sensitive example of Duruflé's withdrawn genius, makes a further bonus, especially when one realizes that this generous pair of CDs includes also the Mass and Salve Regina of Poulenc.

The Chandos CD collects together Duruflé's complete choral works, including the touching setting of Notre père which the composer dedicated to his wife. The three major works are well represented on CD, but the Trinity College Choir sing very responsively, and Richard Marlow has the advantage of a very wide-ranging Chandos recording, which creates warmly atmospheric, seemingly distanced choral pianissimos and highly dramatic climaxes. Those who are satisfied with the organ version and who enjoy the high drama which such contrasts bring will find this very satisfying, for the soloists are excellent and Clare Wilkinson's contribution to the Pie Jesu is most affecting.

DUSSEK (Dusik), Jan Ladislav (1760–1812)

Piano Sonatas, Op. 9/1-3; Op. 77 (L'Invocation)

Ⓝ  CPO 777 323-2. Becker

Dussek holds only a peripheral place in the catalogue. Andreas Staier has been his champion on the fortepiano in the past. Meanwhile Markus Becker offers us three early sonatas, first published in 1789 and his last, somewhat Beethovenian sonata, Op. 77 written twenty years later. Very much of their period, they are always interesting and inventive, with classicism making way for romanticism. They are well played here (especially the prestissimo finale of Op. 7/3) and well recorded.

DUTILLEUX, Henri (born 1916)

Cello Concerto (Tout un monde lointain)

🔑 * EMI (ADD) 5 67867-2. Rostropovich, O de Paris, Baudo – LUTOSŁAWSKI: Cello Concerto ***

(i) Cello Concerto (Tout un monde lointain); (ii) Métaboles; (iii) The Shadows of Time

Ⓜ  Warner Elatus 0927 49830-2. (i) Noras, Finnish RSO, Saraste; (ii) O Nat. de France, Rostropovich; (iii) Boston SO, Ozawa

(i) Cello Concerto. Métaboles; Mystères de l'instant

 Chan. 9565. (i) Pergamenschikov; BBC PO, Y. P. Tortelier

The Cello Concerto is intense in feeling and rich in those glowing timbres and luminous textures which he is so successful in creating. Rostropovich plays the work with enormous virtuosity and feeling; the Orchestre de Paris under Serge Baudo gives splendid support, while the 1975 recording is immensely vivid, with Rostropovich looming larger than life but given great presence. This has now rightly been reissued as one of EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century'.

The Finnish cellist, Arto Noras, is a committed and authoritative soloist and is given excellent support from Saraste and the Finnish Radio Orchestra. Both performances and recordings of the Métaboles and The Shadows of Time have been recommended in earlier editions of the Guide and make an excellent coupling.

Boris Pergamenschikov rises to the challenge and, although Rostropovich's remains an almost mandatory recommendation, thanks to the composer's authority, the excellence of the orchestral playing under Yan Pascal Tortelier and the Chandos recording earn it a three-star grading. The Métaboles and the Mystères de l'instant are played expertly and persuasively.

(i) Cello Concerto (Tout un monde lointain); Symphony No. 1; Timbres, espace, mouvement (La Nuit etoilée)

(BB) (*) Arte Nova 74321 92413-2. O Nat. Bordeaux Aquitaine, Graf; (i) with Queyras

A fine performance of the Cello Concerto, too, from Jean-Guihen Queyras and the sound is most vivid and present; this can certainly be recommended and is well worth acquiring, even at the risk of duplication.

(Violin Concerto) L'Arbre des Songes

Ⓝ Ⓜ  RCO 08001. Sitkovetsky, Concg. O, Jansons – DEBUSSY: La Mer; RAVEL: La Valse ***

L'Arbre des Songes, the 'Tree of Dreams', is Dutilleux's unconventional violin concerto in four main sections with three important Interludes. Dmitri Sitkovetsky proves the most persuasive soloist, with Jansons masterly in his shaping of the accompaniment, bringing out the beauty of the scoring, helped by the unique quality of the Concertgebouw's different sections, notably the incomparable strings. It is good to have the orchestra promoting live recordings of this quality, though it seems a pity that such a disc does not appear on one of the regular international labels.

(i) (Violin Concerto) L'Arbre des songes; (ii) La Geôle; 2 Sonnets de Jean Cassou; Mystère de l'instant

🔑 (BB)  Arte Nova 82876 63825-2. O Nat. Bordeaux Aquitaine, Graf, with (i) Charlier; (ii) Le Roux

In L'Arbre des songes Charlier has commanding authority and unforced eloquence, shaping every phrase and balancing each texture to perfection, and this newcomer with the Orchestre National Bordeaux Aquitaine is very recommendable. New to the catalogue is La Geôle, composed in 1944 during the war to a text by Jean Cassou, two of whose sonnets he set 10 years later. Good sound and excellent value.

(i) Violin Concerto (L'Arbre des songes); Timbres, espace, mouvement; (ii) 2 Sonnets de Jean Cassou

 Chan. 9504. (i) Charlier; (ii) Hill, N. Davies; BBC PO, Y. P. Tortelier – ALAIN: Prière ***

In terms of artistry and musicianship Charlier yields nothing to his rivals, and Yan Pascal Tortelier gives us the Timbres, espace, mouvement (La Nuit étoilée) from 1979 as a makeweight. The Deux Sonnets de Jean Cassou come in Dutilleux's own orchestral transcription, in which Martyn Hill and Neal Davies are effective soloists.

Métaboles

🔑 (BB)  Warner Apex (ADD) 0926 48686-2. O Nat. de l'ORTF, Munch – HONEGGER: Symphony 4 ***

Métaboles was commissioned in 1964 by the Cleveland Orchestra and only three years later taken into the studio by Charles Munch, one of Dutilleux's most notable champions. In its day (1967) it was a state-of-the-art recording, and though there are many more recent accounts, it still sounds vivid and exhilarating. Munch's account of the Honegger symphony is also outstanding.

Métaboles; The Shadows of Time; Symphony 2 (Le Double)

(BB) (*) Arte Nova 74321 80786-2. O Nat. Bordeaux Aquitaine, Graf

The Bordeaux Orchestra play with finesse and sensitivity throughout this disc and those above, though in the two symphonies (which are separated on Arte Nova) they do not supersede the performances by the BBC Philharmonic under Yan Pascal Tortelier on Chandos. However, given the price and the excellence of the recorded sound, they make a perfectly valid alternative recommendation, and the other orchestral works are impressive too.

Sur le même accord

Ⓜ  DG 477 5376. Mutter, O Nat. de France, Masur – BARTÓK: Violin Concerto 2; STRAVINSKY: Violin Concerto in D ***

Dutilleux's Sur le même accord is a short work (under nine minutes) and was commissioned for Mutter by Paul Sacher when she was 16; she was in her thirties when the score finally arrived. This performance was recorded at its Paris première in 2003, and very fine it is too. Sur le même accord is 'on the same chord' and the music is derived from the six plucked notes heard at the beginning. Like all Dutilleux's music, it is highly imaginative and atmospheric, and makes a welcome addition to his growing discography.

Symphonies 1–2

🔑 ✿ * Chan. 9194. BBC PO, Y. P. Tortelier

Marvellously resourceful and inventive scores, which are given vivid and persuasive performances by Yan Pascal Tortelier and the BBC Philharmonic Orchestra. The engineers give us a splendidly detailed and refined portrayal of these complex textures – the sound is really state-of-the-art.

Ainsi la nuit (String Quartet)

🔑 Ⓑ  EMI Début 5 74020-2. Belcea Qt – DEBUSSY, RAVEL: String Quartets ***

The Belcea accounts of the Debussy and Ravel quartets are pretty impeccable, and their Dutilleux is hardly less sensitive. One's first impression of Ainsi la nuit is of fragmentation and delicate wisps of texture, but gradually its power and logic emerge. The Belcea players are extraordinarily sensitive to its dynamic range and produce a performance of great finesse. At budget price and with good sound, this enjoys a strong competitive advantage.

Piano music: Au gré des ondes; Bergerie; Blackbird; Mini-Prélude en éventail; Petit air à dormir debout; 3 Preludes; Resonance; Sonata; Tous les chemins mènent a Rome

(BB)  Naxos 8.557823. Chen

The Piano Sonata of 1948 was one of the composer's first works to attract wide attention, and it remains the most important, thoughtful and beautifully written. Yet each of the smaller pieces makes its mark crisply and without inflation, consistently inventive, with intriguing titles adding to their charms. Chen's playing is magnetic and well controlled, but giving the impression of a pianist improvising. There have been excellent accounts of these pieces before, including one of the Sonata by its dedicatee, Geneviève Joy, the composer's wife, but this is now a first recommendation. Very good sound.

DVOŘÁK, Antonín (1841–1904)

'Deo Gratias': A documentary on the life of Dvořák (written and directed by Martin Suchanek)

 Sup. DVD SU 7007-9. (includes performances of the composer's music by various Czech artists)

Dvořák's own final comment on his life was 'Deo Gratias', 'Thanks be to God'. That makes an apt title for this admirably direct and informative documentary surveying the composer's career. It is fascinating to find that Dvořák's reports from his first music school were unflattering, with the exception that he was 'strong on counterpoint'; that in London he would get up at 6 a.m. to wander round the city; and that the salary he received in New York as Director of the Conservatoire was 30 times higher than what he was getting at home.

The biography is illustrated with a sequence of performances, filmed live, single movements rather than complete works. The selection is fair enough, with Vaclav Neumann warmer in his conducting than he has often been in his studio recordings. Those items – the finale of the New World Symphony and the first movement of the Cello Concerto with Gustav Rivinius as soloist – are vintage recordings, but the brilliantly played finale of the Piano Concerto dates from only three years ago, from the same performance (with Martin Kasik as soloist and with Jiri Kout conducting) that Supraphon has also issued complete on CD.

American Suite, Op. 98b

 Sup. SU 3882-2. Prague Philh., Hrusa – SUK: Scherzo fantastique; Serenade for Strings ***

Jakob Hrusa draws superb playing, polished, refined and intense, from the Czech Philharmonia Orchestra, which Bělohlávek founded. He directs a magical performance, utterly charming in all five movements of Dvořák's American Suite, one of his last orchestral works. Well coupled with the two Suk pieces, it comes in full, clear sound.

Warner 100th Anniversary Edition: (i) American Suite in A, Op. 98b; (ii) Carnival Overture; (iii) Czech Suite; (iv) The Golden Spinning Wheel; (ii) In Nature's Realm, Op. 91; (i) Legends, Op. 59a; (ii) Othello, Op. 93; (iv) The Noon Witch, Op. 108; The Water Goblin, Op. 107; The Wild Dove, Op. 110; Symphonies: 7; 8; 9 (New World)

(BB)  Warner 2564 61530-2 (5). (i) Rochester PO, Zinman; (ii) NYPO, Masur; (iii) Lausanne CO, Jordan; (iv) Concg. O, Harnoncourt

The collection here is not altogether predictable, with the American and Czech Suites especially welcome. With Harnoncourt conducting the last three symphonies (including a first-class account of the New World) and the four key symphonic poems, this is certainly excellent value, and the standard of recording is high.

(i) American Suite, Op. 98b; (ii) Czech Suite, Op. 39; Nocturne for Strings in B, Op. 40; Polka for Prague Students in B flat, Op. 53a; Polonaise in E flat; Prague Waltzes; (i) Slavonic Dances 1–16, Op. 46/1–8, Op. 72/1–8; (ii) Slavonic Rhapsody 3, Op. 45

Ⓑ  Double Decca (DDD/ADD) 460 293-2 (2). (i) RPO; (ii) Detroit SO; Dorati

Dvořák's American Suite has clear influences from the New World. Dorati has its measure and the RPO are very responsive. The Kingsway Hall recording balance suits the scoring rather well, but the Slavonic Dances, recorded at the same time (1983), are not so sweet here in the upper range of the strings, although otherwise the sound is full and pleasing. Dorati's performances have characteristic brio, the RPO response is warmly lyrical when necessary and the woodwind playing gives much pleasure. The Czech Suite can sometimes outstay its welcome, but certainly not here. The other items too have the brightness and freshness that mark out the Slavonic Dances, especially the Polka and Polonaise with their attractive rhythmic spring. The most charming piece of all is the set of Waltzes, written for balls in Prague – Viennese music with a Czech accent – while the lovely Nocturne with its subtle drone bass makes a winning interlude. The Slavonic Rhapsody, with its opening suggesting a troubadour and his harp, makes a vivacious end to what the documentation rightly describes as 'two-and-a-half hours of Dvořák's most tuneful orchestral music'.

(i) American Suite, Op. 98b; (ii) Czech Suite, Op. 39; Overtures: (i) Carnival, Op. 92; (ii) In Nature's Realm, Op. 91; My Home, Op. 62; Otello, Op. 93; (i) Scherzo capriccioso, Op. 66; The Wild Dove (symphonic poem), Op. 110

🔑 (BB)  Virgin 2x1 3 49943-2 (2). (i) RLPO, or (ii) Czech PO; Pešek

The Czech Philharmonic always have something individual to say in Dvořák's music, and their playing here, especially in the lyrically jubilant My Home Overture, and the five folk-influenced pastoral movements of the Czech Suite, is very appealing.

It must remembered that Pešek was also for a decade Musical Director of the Royal Liverpool Philharmonic Orchestra, and he left an idiomatic Czech character on their woodwind playing which one can hear in the central movements of the American Suite, and a certain rhythmic freshness that is very obvious in the Carnival Overture, with its dazzling close, and again in the sparkling Scherzo capriccioso, in which he observes the central repeat. Excellent recording throughout makes this a very attractive collection.

American Suite; 7 Interludes for Small Orchestra; (i) Mazurka for Violin & Orchestra. Nocturne in B; Polka in B flat; Polonaise in E flat; 5 Prague Waltzes; (ii) Rondo for Cello & Orchestra; Silent Woods for Cello & Orchestra

(BB)  Naxos 8.557352. (i) Trostianski; (ii) Yablonsky; Russia PO, Yablonsky

This is a tidying-up compilation, offering just short of 80 minutes of lesser-known Dvořák. The highlight is the American Suite. The Seven Interludes were written much earlier, in 1867: they are agreeable enough, but very slight. The Mazurka (1879) for violin and orchestra has something of the flavour of the Slavonic Dances. The dance movements are jolly and infectious, the Polonaise suitably boisterous. The performances here are all of good quality, as is the recording, and with good documentation the disc earns its three stars for enterprise as well as enjoyment.

Cello Concerto in B min., Op. 104 (CD versions)

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * DG (ADD) 447 413-2. Rostropovich, BPO, Karajan – TCHAIKOVSKY: Rococo Variations **** ✿

🔑 Ⓝ  Virgin 50999 510 035 2 7. Gautier Capuçon, Frankfurt RSO, Paavo Järvi – HERBERT: Cello Concerto 2 ***

 BBC (ADD) BBCL 4156-2. Du Pré, RLPO, Groves – IBERT: Cello and Wind Concerto ***

 Chan. 8662. Wallfisch, LSO, Mackerras – DOHNANYI: Konzertstück ***

Ⓜ  RCA SACD 82876 66375-2. Piatigorsky, Boston SO, Munch – WALTON: Concerto ***

 Teldec 8573-85340-2. Du Pré, Swedish RSO, Celibidache – SAINT-SAËNS: Cello Concerto 1 ***

The intensity of lyrical feeling and the spontaneity of the partnership between Karajan and Rostropovich ensures the position of their DG disc at the top of the list of recommendations for this peer among 19th-century cello concertos. The orchestral playing is glorious. Moreover, the analogue recording, made in the Jesus-Christus-Kirche in September 1969, is as near perfect as any made in that vintage analogue era, and the CD transfer has freshened the original.

This coupling of the Dvořák Cello Concerto with the second and finer of Victor Herbert's Cello Concertos is specially apt when it prompted Dvořák to write his masterpiece in America. Gautier Capuçon gives a distinctive, characterful and intense performance, well supported by Paavo Järvi and the Frankfurt Orchestra – the fruity-toned Frankfurt horn gives a beautiful account of the great second subject. It is Capuçon's gift to play with warm intensity while keeping a relatively steady pulse. As in the Herbert the slow movement is deeply elegiac, while the incisive finale leads to a dedicated account of the beautiful epilogue. Altogether a version of this much-recorded work which stands comparison with any in the catalogue, made the more attractive by the coupling.

On the BBC Legends label comes a live broadcast recording, made in July 1969 at the Proms, which thrillingly captures Jacqueline du Pré's astonishing range of expression and tone-colour in this masterpiece, with Charles Groves warmly supportive. There are some magical things and a liberal use of portamento. This may have fallen out of fashion now, but hers is a big-hearted reading, full of passion and sensitivity; her natural freedom sounds totally spontaneous and persuasive, bringing out a poignancy in the work to tug at the heart. The lightweight Ibert Concerto, recorded in 1962, with the cello the first among many soloists, makes a welcome coupling, a work that du Pré never otherwise recorded.

Rafael Wallfisch's is also an outstanding version, strong and warmly sympathetic, masterfully played. The excitement as well as the warmth of the piece comes over as in a live performance, and Wallfisch's tone remains rich and firm in even the most taxing passages. The orchestral playing, the quality of sound and the delightful, generous and unusual coupling all make it a recommendation which must be given the strongest advocacy.

Piatigorsky's superb (1960) recording is praised below in its normal CD coupling with the Eighth Symphony. But in the new SACD transfer, the orchestral sound is transformed, richer and fuller in colour, worthy of the composer's vivid scoring. Of course the balance of the cello remains too forward, but in all other respects the recording is greatly improved, and the coupling with Walton is most welcome.

Jacqueline du Pré's Swedish Radio recording brings excellent sound, even better than on her EMI studio recording made in Chicago two years later. Her reading here is even more warmly spontaneous than the later one. Evidently, du Pré did not just tolerate the typical exaggerations of a Celibidache reading, but responded positively to them.

Casals plays with astonishing fire and the performance seems to spring to life in a way that eludes many modern artists. This perfomance is one of the classics of the gramophone. There is not a great deal to choose between Mark Obert-Thorn's transfer of the Dvořák and the EMI version – both have been done with great care – though if pressed to a choice, we would prefer the slightly more detailed Naxos. (8.110930)

Jacqueline du Pré's celebrated early recording with Barenboim conveys the spontaneous passion that marked her playing in public, and it is a performance that captures very vividly the urgent interpretative flair of both husband and wife, conductor and soloist. Though the exaggeratedly forward balance of the cello remains very noticeable, in the new transfer the sound has filled out nicely and is clearly detailed. The recoupling with Elgar is also sensible. (EMI 5 55527-2)

(i) Cello Concerto; (ii) Piano Concerto, Op. 33

🔑 Ⓜ () Sup. mono SU 3825-2. (i) Rostropovich; (ii) Maxián; Czech PO, Talich

Rostropovich has recorded the Dvořák concerto seven times in all, but he professed his 1952 collaboration with Václav Talich to be the finest – and despite the mono sound he is probably right. No one plays the concerto better than he and no one conducted Dvořák better than the great Czech conductor. František Maxián was a pupil of Vilém Kurz, whose version of the piano part he plays. Despite its age, the 1951 recording has always sounded fresh, even in its LP form, and the digital remastering enhances it further. Self-recommending.

(i) Cello Concerto, Op. 104; Symphonic Variations, Op. 78

 Channel Classics CCSSA 25807. Budapest Festival O, I. Fischer, (i) with Pieter Wispelwey.

Channel Classics here offers an outstanding version of the much-recorded Dvořák Cello Concerto, one to rival any version already in the catalogue, very well and imaginatively coupled with the much earlier Symphonic Variations. The outstanding Dutch cellist Pieter Wispelwey crowns the previous discs he has made for the label in this electrifying live recording, brilliantly accompanied by the Budapest Festival Orchestra under Ivan Fischer. In the Symphonic Variations Fischer holds the structure cleanly together, crisply defining each of the 27 brief variations and the fugal finale. One marvels afresh at the composer's inventiveness in elaborating on the simple theme, on a par with that of the Slavonic Dances, and the performance is crowned with a thrilling climax in the finale. Altogether an outstanding new version of an imaginative Dvořák coupling.

(i) Cello Concerto; (ii) Symphony 8 in G, Op. 88

Ⓜ (*) RCA (ADD) 82876 55302-2. Boston SO, Munch, (i) with Piatigorsky

Piatigorsky's classic 1960 account of the Cello Concerto emerges again on RCA's Red Seal label – remastered and sounding better than ever – though that cannot alter a balance which places the cello too close, not always flattering to the soloist. There is no lack of orchestral colour and the acoustic of Symphony Hall is well conveyed behind the music-making. The performance is the very opposite of routine, with Piatigorsky and Munch in complete rapport, producing a totally spontaneous melodic flow. Although there are moments when intonation is less than immaculate, the inspiration of the performance carries the day. The Symphony was recorded a year later but sounds better than in earlier transfers. Munch's reading is strongly characterized and, though he occasionally presses hard, the thrust comes from a natural ardour. In short, a fresh, individual account and a desirable coupling.

(i) Cello Concerto; (ii) Symphony 9 (New World)

🔑 (BB)  Warner Apex (ADD) 0927 49919-2. (i) Hoelscher, Hamburg PO, Keilberth; (ii) NW German Philharmonie, Lindenberg

Ludwig Hoelscher has a really big, resonant tone and a big, heroic sense of style to go with it. With Hoelscher one has a sense of real striving, and that is just how it should be. The 1958 recording, full and warm and vivid, is astonishingly good. If the balance favours the soloist unduly, the tone he gives us is so glorious that one finds it hard to carp over such a matter. Lindenberg's account of the New World Symphony is not quite on this level, but it is a direct, persuasively simple reading, again with a beautifully played slow movement. Again, good sound (from 1969). This is a bargain disc to seek out, even if duplication is involved.

(i) Cello Concerto; (ii) Piano Trio 4 (Dumky)

 HMC 90 1867. Queyras; (i) Prague Philh., Bělohlávek; (ii) Faust, Melnikov

The linking of the Cello Concerto and the Dumky Trio is particularly apt when the cello plays such a salient role in the Trio. The young cellist Jean-Guihen Queyras takes up that positive role with power and deep expressiveness from his very first solo, just as he does in the Concerto. These may not be Czech artists, but their feeling for the idiom is unerringly magnetic. So far from the Piano Trio falling short in any way after the mastery of the Concerto, it emerges as a work of comparable stature, benefiting greatly from refined digital sound. In the Cello Concerto Jiří Bělohlávek and the Prague Philharmonia prove incisive and warmly sympathetic accompanists, matching the youthful urgency of Queyras's solo performance.

Piano Concerto in G min., Op. 33

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 5 66895-2. Richter, Bav. State O, C. Kleiber – SCHUBERT: Wanderer Fantasia ***

(i) Piano Concerto; (ii) Violin Concerto

 Chan. 10309. (i) Hayroudinoff; (ii) Ehnes; BBC PO, Noseda

Richter plays the solo part in its original form (and not the more pianistically 'effective' revision by Wilém Kurz which is published in the Complete Edition), and his judgement is triumphantly vindicated. This is the most persuasive and masterly account of the work ever committed to disc; its ideas emerge with an engaging freshness and warmth, while the greater simplicity of Dvořák's own keyboard writing proves in Richter's hands to be more telling and profound. Carlos Kleiber secures excellent results from the Bavarian Orchestra, and the 1977 recording has clarity and good definition to recommend it.

The Canadian violinist, James Ehnes, gives a strong, incisive performance of the Violin Concerto, with speeds on the fast side in the first two movements and with the furiant finale bitingly fresh. His rapid vibrato gives a distinctive timbre to his playing, making the slow movement less warmly romantic than it often is, and the recording, generally well balanced, is yet less full and warm than in the Piano Concerto. That receives a superb performance from the Russian, Rustem Hayroudinoff, one which stands the closest comparison with the classic version by Sviatoslav Richter. Even more than Richter, Hayroudinoff brings out the joyful, carefree quality of Dvořák's inspiration, bringing home what a wonderful fund of good melodies it contains. The clarity of his articulation in the often tricky passagework is phenomenal. Helped by full, rich sound which yet allows fine detail, Noseda and the BBC Philharmonic match the subtlety and point of the soloist's playing, establishing this as an outstanding modern version.

(i) Piano Concerto; (ii) Violin Concerto; (iii) Silent Woods (for cello & orchestra)

Ⓑ  Virgin 3 91346-2. (i) Désert, Strasbourg SO, Guschlbauer; (ii) Tetzlaff, Czech PO, Pešek; (iii) Walden, RLPO, Pešek

Tetzlaff's performance of the Violin Concerto, distinguished by quicksilver lightness in the passagework, is both full of fantasy and marked by keen concentration and a sense of spontaneity. With the violin balanced naturally, not spotlit, the slow movement has a hushed intensity at the opening, which gives extra poignancy to Tetzlaff's tender, totally unsentimental phrasing. In romantic freedom of expression Pešek makes orchestral textures clear, bringing out extra detail even in the heaviest tuttis, despite reverberant recording.

Claire Désert's account of the Piano Concerto is hardly less telling, bold and vibrant in the first movement, but with the secondary theme pointed with much charm. Guschlbauer provides a strong backing and is an equally sympathetic partner in the lovely Andante, where Désert plays with much poetic feeling to provide a perfect foil for sparkling articulation in the zestful furiant finale with its exciting barnstorming close. First-class recording gives the piano a realistically scaled profile in relation to the orchestra. Then, for a bonus, Timothy Walden and Pešek provide the warmly atmospheric Silent Woods as a touching encore.

(i) Piano Concerto in G min. Symphony 8 in G (DVD versions)

Ⓝ  Arthaus Musik DVD 102 139. Prague SO, Altrichter with (i) Ardašev

Violin Concerto in A min., Op. 53; (ii) Biblical Songs, Op. 99; (iii) Te Deum, Op. 103 (DVD versions)

Ⓝ  Arthaus Musik DVD 102 137. Prague SO, Jírí Belohlávek with (i) Zenaty; (ii) Eva Randová; (iii) Livia Aghova, Ivan Kusnjer; Prague Ph. Ch.

These performances took place at a Dvořák Festival at the Alte Oper in Frankfurt in 1993 and were recorded for BBC TV and Unitel. The camerawork is directed by Rodney Goldberg, a guarantee of good musical judgment and visual discretion. Indeed it is hard to imagine them being bettered visually and the performances, too, are refreshingly idiomatic with good orchestral playing from the Prague Symphony Orchestra. Ivan Zenaty is a superb soloist in the Violin Concerto as indeed is Igor Ardašev in the more problematic Piano Concerto, and we have no quarrel with Petr Altrichter's reading of the G major Symphony.

(i) Piano Concerto in G min., Op. 33; The Golden Spinning Wheel

🔑 Ⓜ  Warner 8573 87630-2. (i) Aimard; Concg. O, Harnoncourt

Harnoncourt has consistently proved himself an understanding conductor of Dvořák, and here he directs an outstandingly imaginative account of the Piano Concerto (using the original score) in partnership with the scintillating pianism of Pierre-Laurent Aimard. The Golden Spinning Wheel with its opening horn fanfares, the most enticing of the composer's symphonic poems, makes an attractive coupling.

(i) Piano Concerto, Op. 33; The Water Goblin (symphonic poem), Op. 107

(BB)  Naxos 8.550896. (i) Jandó; Polish Nat. RSO, Wit

An infectiously fresh and warmly lyrical account from Jandó and the highly supportive Polish National Radio Orchestra under Antoni Wit. Jandó conveys his own pleasure, and Wit's accompaniment glows with colour; he then offers a splendidly vibrant and colourful portrayal of The Water Goblin, one of the composer's most vividly melodramatic symphonic poems. The violins are a shade overbright but otherwise the sound is excellent. Very enjoyable and well worth its modest cost.

Violin Concerto in A min., Op. 53

🔑 Ⓜ  Warner Elatus 2564 60806-2. Vengerov, NYPO, Masur – BRAHMS: Violin Concerto **(*)

🔑 Ⓑ  CfP 575 8062. Little, RLPO, Handley – SIBELIUS: Concerto 1 ***

🔑 Ⓜ  DG (IMS) 449 091-2. Mintz, BPO, Levine – BRUCH: Concerto 1 ***

(i) Violin Concerto; Romance in F min., Op. 11; (ii) Sonatina in G, Op. 100; 4 Romantic Pieces, Op. 75

Ⓜ (*) EMI 5 62595-2. Perlman; (i) LPO, Barenboim; (ii) Sanders

Maxim Vengerov performs not only with the effortless brilliance and dazzling technical command that one expects but with poetic feeling, freshness and spontaneity. He receives splendid support from Kurt Masur and the New York Philharmonic (they are recorded at a concert performance) and the balance between the soloist and orchestra is judged expertly. However, there are some reservations about the Brahms coupling.

Tasmin Little brings to this concerto an open freshness and sweetness, very apt for this composer, that are extremely winning. She establishes her place firmly with full-ranging, well-balanced sound that coordinates the soloist along with the orchestra.

There is dazzling playing from Shlomo Mintz, whose virtuosity is effortless and his intonation astonishingly true. There is good rapport between soloist and conductor, and the performance has the sense of joy and relaxation that this radiant score needs. The digital sound is warm and natural in its upper range.

The Perlman and Barenboim partnership is at its peak in the both the Concerto and the delectable Romance, and this coupling remains very competitive, the more so in that this reissue in the 'Perlman Edition' is at mid-price, and now offers the double bonus of the enchanting Sonatina plus the hardly less attractive set of Four Romantic Pieces. Both are beautifully played and well recorded, save for the imbalance between the celebrated violinist and the more recessed pianist.

(i) Violin Concerto; (ii) Piano Quintet, Op. 81

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI 503415-2. Chang, with (i) LSO, C. Davis; (ii) Kerr, Christ, Faust, Andsnes

It makes a very attractive and unusual disc to have the brilliant young violinist, Sarah Chang, coupling her warm and powerful account of the Dvořák Violin Concerto not with another concerto but with one of the composer's most popular chamber works, with the pianist Leif-Ove Andsnes sharing the leadership of the group in equally inspired playing in the Piano Quintet. As though making music for fun, they are freely spontaneous-sounding in their expressiveness, with the Dumka slow movement seemingly improvisatory, and the Scherzo very light, taken at a challengingly fast tempo. The performance of the Concerto, with Sir Colin Davis a powerful and understanding Dvořákian, similarly draws freely expressive playing from Chang. The recording, made at the Watford Colosseum, enhances the feeling of a big-scale performance, with full-bodied sound set in a lively acoustic.

(i) Violin Concerto; (ii) Violin Sonata; Sonatina for Violin & Piano

🔑 Ⓝ * Sony 88697 499632. Liebeck with (i) RSNO, Walker (ii) Apekisheva

This neatly gathers together Dvořák's three principle works for violin solo. Liebeck, a Londoner trained at the RAM, has an easy, warm and fluent style, well-displayed in this debut concerto record for Sony. His expressiveness never runs into self-indulgence, remaining spontaneous-sounding. Garry Walker and the RSNO make the idiosyncratic structure of the Concerto very clear, leading on to the delightful Slavonic dance of the finale. The Sonata has many of the same qualities, but it is the Sonatina, product of the composer's later period when he was influenced by American music which brings the most attractive music of all, a masterpiece that has rarely been appreciated as it deserves.

Czech Suite; A Hero's Song, Op. 111; Festival March, Op. 54; Hussite Overture, Op. 67

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.553005. Polish Nat. RSO (Katowice), Wit

Antoni Wit is most impressive in A Hero's Song. There is an outburst of patriotic hyperbole towards the close (with thundering trombones), but Wit generates excitement without letting things get out of hand. The performance of the Czech Suite is warm and relaxed, nicely rustic in feeling, but again is affected by the resonance.

Czech Suite; Polonaise in E flat; 8 Prague Waltzes

 Sup. SU 3867-2. Prague Philh., Hrusa

Exploiting the Czech idiom, on the whole these are gentle, easy-going pieces, notably the Czech Suite. The Polonaise opens brassily, with splendid panache, introducing a strongly rhythmic piece, full of vigour. The Eight Waltzes then prove amazingly varied, with no sense that waltz-time is outstaying its welcome. All the performances are excellent, with Jakub Hrusa, still in his mid-twenties, drawing colourful and alert playing from the Prague Philharmonia. First-rate sound.

Overtures: Carnival; Hussite; In Nature's Realm; My Home; Othello. Symphonic Poems: The Golden Spinning Wheel; The Noonday Witch; The Wood Dove; Symphonic Variations, Op. 78; Slavonic Dances 1–16, Op. 46/1–8; Op. 72/1–8

🔑 Ⓑ  DG Trio (ADD) 469 366-2 (3). Bav. RSO, Kubelik

Kubelik has a special feeling for Dvořák, and these performances are among his finest on record and they are superbly played, with the Slavonic Dances displaying both virtuosity and panache. He is also splendidly dashing in Carnival; and the other two overtures, Opp. 91 and 93 – all three linked by a recurring main theme – are comparably successful and full of colouristic subtlety.

Overture: The Cunning Peasant

Ⓜ () Sup. mono SU 1914 011. Czech PO, Sejna – SKROUP: The Tinker Overture; SMETANA: Festive Symphony, etc. ()

Overture: My Home. Symphonic Poems: The Golden Spinning Wheel; A Hero's Song, Op. 111; The Noonday Witch; The Water Goblin; The Wood Dove, Op. 110

Ⓑ (*) Chan. 2-for-1 241-3 (2). RSNO, Järvi

Many will be attracted to Neeme Järvi's collection by the modern, digital sound, warmly atmospheric in typical Chandos style, not always clean on detail but firmly focused. These recordings were all fill-ups for Järvi's integral set of the symphonies. The real rarity here is A Hero's Song, Dvořák's very last orchestral work. Järvi's strongly committed, red-blooded performance minimizes any weaknesses. My Home is given an exuberant performance, bringing out the lilt of the dance rhythms, and Järvi is a dramatic advocate of The Water Goblin. He also brings out the storytelling vividly in The Noonday Witch, while the most memorable of all the symphonic poems, The Golden Spinning Wheel, has plenty of drama and atmosphere, helped by the fine bloom of the recording. The only snag here is the relative short measure.

The Cunning Peasant is not one of Dvořák's greatest overtures, though Karel Sejna makes the most positive case for it in his mono recording. Acceptable sound and a useful fill-up to Smetana's exhilarating Festive Symphony.

The Golden Spinning Wheel; The Noonday Witch; The Water Goblin; The Wild Dove

🔑 ❀ Ⓜ * Teldec 2-CD 2564 60221-2 (2). Concg. O, Harnoncourt

Ⓜ () Sup. mono SU 3827-2. Czech PO, Talich

Harnoncourt's collection of Dvořák's four most vivid symphonic poems is one of his finest pairs of records and one of Teldec's most realistic recordings. The performances offer superlative playing from the Concertgebouw Orchestra, and Harnoncourt's direction is inspired, lyrical and dramatic by turns, ever relishing Dvořák's glowing scoring for woodwinds and, in the famous Spinning Wheel, the horns and, towards the close, a gloriously sonorous passage for the trombones. The end of The Water Goblin is superbly melodramatic and The Golden Spinning Wheel is unsurpassed on record, even by Beecham. The recording and ambience are so believable that one feels one has the famous Dutch concert hall just beyond the speakers.

Talich's famous mono set comes from 1950. The performances have great electricity and excitement and a uniquely idiomatic Czech feeling. The sound is fully acceptable, although the dynamic range is limited, and because Talich uses the traditional cuts in The Golden Spinning Wheel Supraphon have managed to fit them all on to a single disc.

The Golden Spinning Wheel, Op. 109; The Noonday Witch, Op. 108; The Wood Dove, Op. 110

(BB)  Naxos 8.550598. Polish Nat. RSO (Katowice), Gunzenhauser

The Polish Orchestra seem thoroughly at home in Dvořák's sound-world and Gunzenhauser gives warm, vivid performances and is especially evocative in the masterly Golden Spinning Wheel. There is shapely string phrasing and a fine, sonorous contribution from the brass. The concert hall of Polish Radio in Katowice has expansive acoustics – just right for the composer's colourful effects.

Serenade for Strings; Serenade for Wind in D min.

Ⓝ  Sup. SU3932-2. Prague Philharmonia, Hrusa – SUK: Meditation on an Old Czech Hymn

 Ph. (ADD) 400 020-2. ASMF, Marriner

Marriner's Philips performances are direct without loss of warmth, with speeds ideally chosen, refined yet spontaneous-sounding; in the Wind Serenade the Academy produce beautifully sprung rhythms, and the recording has a fine sense of immediacy.

Fine playing from the Capella Istropolitana on Naxos, and flexible direction from Jaroslav Krček. His pacing is not quite as sure as in the delightful Suk coupling, and the Adagio could flow with a stronger current, but this is still an enjoyable and well-recorded performance. (8.550419)

Jakub Hrusa conducts outstanding performances of the two Dvořák Serenades, for strings and wind respectively, coupled with a rarity by Josef Suk. The String Serenade is easily lyrical, the Larghetto slow movement brings the most refined string playing at the most hushed pianissimos with idiomatic dynamic shading. The finale is then a Slavonic dance with exciting cross-rhythms until the first movement is momentarily recalled, tender and nostalgic. The Wind Serenade brings clean separation of voices and crisp rhythms, while the Menuetto second movement is quite different from the equivalent movement in the String Serenade, with a dashing furiant as its middle section. The third movement marked Andante is warmly moulded with dynamic shading exceptionally subtle, while the finale is a rousing piece with a look back at the first movement and glorious whoops on the horns in the coda. Hrusa in all this demonstrates his ability to draw the most idiomatic playing from his brilliant band.

Serenade for Wind in D min., Op. 44 (DVD version)

🔑  Arthaus DVD 100 725. Members of BPO Wind (V/D: Klaus Lindemann) – BEETHOVEN: Octet in E flat, Op. 103 ***

The blending of the Berlin Philharmonic Wind is richly urbane, but this does not mean their performance of Dvořák's delightful Serenade is in any way lacking in vitality and spirit; indeed, the Allegro molto finale is irresistibly zestful, bubbling over with bravura. The Beethoven Wind Octet is rightly treated in a more robust fashion, presented with the freshness of a masterpiece. The ensemble is recorded within the Jaspissaal of the Neue Kammern (new chambers) of the summer palace of Frederick the Great in Potsdam-Sanssouci, which is a visual delight and has a superb acoustic for a wind ensemble: the sound is in every way first class. The camera follows individual players and the whole ensemble in alternation and is usually just where you would want it to be.

Serenade for Wind in D min., Op. 44 (CD versions)

Ⓜ  CRD (ADD) CRD 3410. Nash Ens. – KROMMER: Octet-Partitas ***

(BB)  Naxos 8.554173. Oslo PO Wind Soloists – ENESCU: Dixtuor; JANÁČEK: Mládi ***

((*)) Testament mono SBT 1180. L. Bar. Ens., Haas – MOZART: Serenades 11 & 12 ((*))

The Nash Ensemble can hold their own with the competition in the D minor Serenade, and their special claim tends to be the coupling, a Krommer rarity that is well worth hearing. The CRD version of the Dvořák is very well recorded and the playing is very fine indeed, robust yet sensitive to colour, and admirably spirited.

The Oslo Wind Soloists on Naxos give us a genuine bargain. Here is a performance of real quality that can stand alongside the finest on offer. Crisp rhythms predominate, and a good sense of line and tonal finesse. These artists recorded this repertoire on the Victoria label in the early 1990s under a conductor. These are different and better accounts in every way. No need to hesitate.

Karl Haas's preference for fast speeds and metrical rhythms is well illustrated in this reading of Dvořák's Wind Serenade, in which the opening march has more of a military flavour than usual. As a generous supplement to Mozart's two great serenades for wind octet, this makes an ideal coupling of three of the greatest of all wind works, performed by an ensemble that included some of the finest British players of the post-war period, including Dennis Brain, Frederick Thurston and Terence Macdonagh. Vivid, immediate sound, well transferred.

Slavonic Dances 1–16, Op. 46/1–8; Op. 72/1–8

🔑 * Teldec 8573 81038-2. COE, Harnoncourt

🔑 ✿ (BB)  Sony 69699894523. Cleveland O, Szell

Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 457 712-2. Bav. RSO, Kubelík

Slavonic Dances, Op. 46 & 72; Carnival Overture

Ⓝ (BB) () Naxos mono 8.111331. Czech PO, Talich

Harnoncourt's excitingly uninhibited new set of the Slavonic Dances, with the Chamber Orchestra of Europe, combines great exuberance and virtuosity with vivid colouring. Harnoncourt's direction has tremendous zest and vitality.

In Szell's exuberant, elegant and marvellously played set of the Slavonic Dances the balance is close (which means pianissimos fail to register) but the charisma of the playing is unforgettable and, for all the racy exuberance, one senses a predominant feeling of affection and elegance. The warm acoustics of Severance Hall ensure the consistency of the orchestral sound.

Kubelík's set, now issued as one of DG's 'Originals', offers polished, sparkling orchestral playing. The sound has greater refinement and a rather wider range of dynamic than the competing Sony disc and for that reason many will choose it in preference to Szell, for Kubelík has a very special feeling for Dvořák, and the playing of the Bavarian Orchestra brings a thrilling virtuosity and a special panache of its own.

Legendary performance from EMI Abbey Road sessions dating from 1935 from the master of Czech music, Václav Talich. These performances have marvellous authority and freshness which cuts through the limited sound. The portamento in the Carnival overture is not only charming, it sounds absolutely right, whilst the vigour of the playing is exhilarating. Excellent notes by Tully Potter.

Slavonic Dances 1–8 & 15, Op. 46/1–8; Op. 72/7

Ⓑ  Decca Eloquence (ADD) 476 2742. LSO, Martinon – MASSENET: Le Cid; MEYERBEER: Les Patineurs *** ✿

An exuberantly vivacious collection of the Slavonic Dances, with Martinon adding a touch of Gallic wit to make these performances unique in every way. Full, warm sound from 1959, making this a fine bonus to the outstanding Massenet/Meyerbeer coupling.

(i) Slavonic Dances 1, 3 & 8, Op. 46/1, 3 & 8; 9–10, Op. 72/1–2; (ii) Symphonic Variations, Op. 78

Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 475 7730. (i) Israel PO; (ii) LSO; Kertész – SMETANA: Bartered Bride Overture & Suite; Vltava ***

Kertész's Slavonic Dances from the 1960s are here reissued for Decca's series of Originals, with the Symphonic Variations added for good measure. The Israel Orchestra is not one of the world's finest, but here the playing is irresistible in its gaiety and vivacious colouring. The furiants go with the wind, but Kertész maintains the underlying lyricism of the music. The recording is marginally over-reverberant and may need a slight treble control, but it is otherwise excellent. The comparatively unfamiliar Symphonic Variations makes a highly desirable bonus, with playing and recording well up to the standard the LSO consistently achieved in their Dvořák series.

(i) 3 Slavonic Rhapsodies, Op. 45; (ii) Rhapsody in A min., Op. 14

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.550610. Slovak PO, (i) Košler; (ii) Pešek

Dvořák's three Slavonic Rhapsodies of 1878 are much more like symphonic poems without a programme and, while overflowing with characteristic ideas and colourful scoring, they are also loosely constructed and melodramatic. But it is the earlier Rhapsody in A minor that is the most ambitious work here. Libor Pešek's performance is splendid, with a vigorous response from the orchestra, who even bring off the bombastic, patriotic coda. This is every bit as enjoyable as the Op. 45 Rhapsodies, although it is not as sophisticated as No. 3. This Naxos collection would be recommendable even if it cost far more.

Suite in A, Op. 98b

Ⓜ () Sup. mono SU 1924-2 001. Czech PO, Sejna – MARTINŮ: Concerto for Double String Orchestra, etc. ()

A lovely performance of the beautiful A major Suite, recorded in mono in 1956; but the real attraction on this disc is the Martinů pieces – especially the Third Symphony – which are very special.

Symphonic Variations

 Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD) 467 608-2. LSO, Kertész – BRAHMS: Haydn Variations ***

Kertész's account of the underrated Symphonic Variations is outstanding, with the conductor bringing out all the Brahmsian overtones as well as the Czech composer's freshness of spirit. The 1970s recording remains vivid and full, and with two excellent couplings this is certainly a desirable CD.

SYMPHONIES

Symphonies 1–9

🔑 Ⓜ  Chan. 9991 (6). SNO, Järvi

Ⓑ  Sup. SU 3802-2 (6). Prague RSO, Vladimir Valek

Symphonies 1–9; Overtures: Carnival; In Nature's Realm; My Home. Scherzo capriccioso

🔑 ✿ Ⓑ  Decca (ADD) 430 046-2 (6). LSO, Kertész

Symphonies 1–9; Overture: Carnival. Scherzo capriccioso; The Wood Dove

Ⓑ (*) DG 463 158-2 (6). BPO, Kubelik

Now reissued at mid-price, Järvi's Chandos set makes a good choice for those wanting first-class digital recordings of these symphonies, the sound full and naturally balanced. There are no fillers, as with Kertész on Decca (and there would have been room for some on the first, second and sixth CDs), but each symphony can now be heard without a break, and Järvi is a consistently persuasive Dvořákian.

In the bargain range, the Supraphon box is very welcome when, with refined, finely detailed recording, it makes a formidable rival to the long-established Kertész, LSO set on Decca. Valek's preference is for brisk speeds which yet allow ample lift to Czech dance-rhythms. Helped by clean, well-balanced recording, this goes with admirably clear textures, even in the heaviest tuttis. Throughout all these performances, there is a natural, idiomatic feeling of players tackling works they already know well, even in the rarer early symphonies. The only seriously questionable tempo is in the first movement of No. 6, which is on the slow side, but there an initial heaviness quickly evaporates when the playing is so crisp and well sprung. Nos. 5 and 7 gain in many ways from having been recorded live in the Rudolfinum in Prague, but there is no lack of tension in any of these performances, whether recorded live or in the studio.

For those not wanting to go to the expense of the digital Chandos/Järvi set, István Kertész's bargain box is a strong recommendation among the remaining collections of Dvořák symphonies. The CD transfers are of Decca's best quality, full-bodied and vivid, with a fine ambient effect. It was Kertész who first revealed the full potential of the early symphonies, and his readings gave us fresh insights into these often inspired works. To fit the symphonies and orchestral works on to six CDs, some mid-work breaks have proved unavoidable; but the set remains a magnificent memorial to a conductor who died sadly young.

Kubelik's set from the late 1960s and early 1970s has much to recommend it, first and foremost being the glorious playing of the Berlin Philharmonic and the natural idiomatic warmth Kubelik brings to his music-making. He seems less convinced by the earlier symphonies, and in No. 3 there is an element of routine, something which does not happen with Kertész on Decca. In spite of some idiosyncratic touches, however, Kubelik achieves glowing performances of Nos. 6–9, and especially No. 7; in No. 8 he is also more compelling than his Decca competitor. The remastered DG sound is impressively wide-ranging and is especially fine in the last (and greatest) three symphonies. Many will also be glad to have his memorable account of The Wood Dove.

Symphony 1; A Hero's Song, Op. 111

 Chan. 8597. SNO, Järvi

Symphony 1; Legends, Op. 59/1–5

(BB)  Naxos 8.550266. Slovak PO or Slovak RSO, Gunzenhauser

The first of Dvořák's nine symphonies is on the long-winded side. Yet whatever its structural weaknesses, it is full of colourful and memorable ideas, often characteristic of the mature composer. Järvi directs a warm, often impetuous performance, with rhythms invigoratingly sprung in the fast movements and with the slow movement more persuasive than in previous recordings. The recording is warmly atmospheric in typical Chandos style.

Though on a super-bargain label, the competing Bratislava version rivals Järvi's Chandos disc both as a performance and in sound. The ensemble of the Slovak Philharmonic is rather crisper, and the recording, full and atmospheric, has detail less obscured by reverberation. The first five of Dvořák's ten Legends make a generous coupling: colourful miniatures, colourfully played.

Symphony 2 in B flat, Op. 4; Legends, Op. 59/6–10

(BB)  Naxos 8.550267. Slovak PO or Slovak RSO, Gunzenhauser

Symphony 2; Slavonic Rhapsody 3 in A flat, Op. 45

(*) Chan. 8589. SNO, Järvi

With speeds more expansive than those of Neeme Järvi, his Chandos rival, Gunzenhauser gives a taut, beautifully textured account, very well played and recorded, clearly preferable in every way, even making no allowance for price. The completion of the set of Legends makes a generous coupling (73 minutes).

Järvi's performance, characteristically warm and urgent, is let down by the reverberant Chandos sound, here missing the necessary sharpness of focus, so that the tangy Czech flavour of the music loses some of its bite. The Slavonic Rhapsody is done with delicious point and humour, with the sound back to Chandos's normal high standard.

Symphony 3 in E flat, Op. 10; Carnival Overture, Op. 92; Symphonic Variations, Op. 78

 Chan. 8575. SNO, Järvi

Järvi's is a highly persuasive reading, not ideally sharp of rhythm in the first movement but totally sympathetic. The recording is well up to the standards of the house, and the fill-ups are particularly generous.

Symphonies 3; 6 in D, Op. 60

(BB)  Naxos 8.550268. Slovak PO, Gunzenhauser

These exhilarating performances of the Third and Sixth Symphonies are well up to the standard of earlier records in this splendid Naxos series. Gunzenhauser's pacing is admirably judged through both works, and rhythms are always lifted. Excellent, vivid recording in the warm acoustics of the Bratislava Concert Hall.

Symphony 4 in D min., Op. 13; (i) Biblical Songs, Op. 99

 Chan. 8608. SNO, Järvi, (i) with Rayner Cook

Järvi's affectionate reading of this early work brings out the Czech flavours in Dvořák's inspiration and makes light of the continuing Wagner influences, notably the echoes of Tannhäuser in the slow movement. This is a performance to win converts to an often underrated work. The recording is well up to the Chandos standard.

Symphonies 4–6; Overtures: Carnival; In Nature's Realm; Scherzo capriccioso

(B)  Double Decca (ADD) 473 798-2 (2). LSO, Kertész

Kertész gives a good dramatic account of the Fourth Symphony, accepting the Wagner crib in the slow movement and making the most of the Scherzo. No. 5, with its pastoral atmosphere and further echoes of Wagner, is particularly successful and full of vitality. No. 6 clearly reflects the influence of Brahms, particularly of the Second Symphony, but Kertész's performance effectively underlines the individuality of the writing as well. Outstanding versions of the dashing Carnival Overture, an equally sparkling Scherzo capriccioso and the colourful In Nature's Realm make admirable bonuses.

Symphonies 4; 8 in G, Op. 33

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550269. Slovak PO, Gunzenhauser

Gunzenhauser's Fourth is very convincing. In his hands the fine lyrical theme of the first movement certainly blossoms, and the relative lack of weight in the orchestral textures brings distinct benefit in the Scherzo. The slow movement, too, is lyrical without too much Wagnerian emphasis. The naturally sympathetic orchestral playing helps to make the Eighth a refreshing experience, even though the first two movements are rather relaxed and without the impetus of the finest versions. The digital sound is excellent, vivid and full, with a natural concert-hall ambience.

Symphony 5 in F, Op. 76; The Water Goblin, Op. 107

 Chan. 8552. SNO, Järvi

Järvi is most effective in moulding the structure, subtly varying tempo between sections to smooth over the often abrupt links. His persuasiveness in the slow movement, relaxed but never sentimental, brings radiant playing from the SNO, and Czech dance-rhythms are sprung most infectiously, leading to an exhilarating close to the whole work, simulating the excitement of a live performance.

Symphonies 5; 7 in D min., Op. 70

(BB)  Naxos 8.550270. Slovak PO, Gunzenhauser

Gunzenhauser's coupling is recommendable even without the price advantage. The beguiling opening of the Fifth, with its engaging Slovak wind solos, has plenty of atmosphere, and the reading generates a natural lyrical impulse. The Seventh, spontaneous throughout, brings an eloquent Poco adagio, a lilting Scherzo and a finale that combines an expansive secondary theme with plenty of excitement and impetus.

Symphonies 5; 7–8; 9 (New World); Othello Overture; Scherzo capriccioso

🔑 (B) (*) EMI 5 00878-2 (3). Oslo PO, Jansons – SMETANA: Vltava ***

Mariss Jansons's readings of Nos. 5, 7 and 8 are still among the finest in the catalogue. Indeed, No. 5 is the most delectable account of this radiant symphony and was given a ✿ on first appearance. Nos. 7 and 8 are also key versions, both outstandingly fine, with the dramatic tensions of the D minor work bitingly conveyed, yet with detail treated affectionately and with rhythms exhilaratingly sprung. No. 8 is given a performance of high contrasts too, with the slow movement warmly expansive and the whole crowned by a winningly spontaneous-sounding account of the finale, rarely matched in its exuberance. Unfortunately, Jansons's direct view of the New World Symphony (the first of the series to be recorded) hardly matches the earlier works (or, indeed, its excellent Smetana Vltava coupling) in vigour, warmth and fantasy. It is rather undermined by the earlier recorded sound, which does not match its companions. However, this inexpensive reissue is well worth having for the other three symphonies alone, and also for the Scherzo capriccioso, which brings another exuberant performance while the superb Othello Overture makes an additional generous bonus.

Symphony No.6; Water Goblin, Op.107

Ⓝ  Pentatone SACD PTC 5186 302. Netherlands PO, Kreizberg

Symphony 6 in D, Op. 60; The Wood Dove, Op. 110

🔑  Chan. 9170. Czech PO, Bělohlávek

Bělohlávek conducts a glowing performance of No. 6, rich in Brahmsian and Czech pastoral overtones, helped by satisfyingly full and immediate Chandos sound. This easily takes precedence over the Järvi version (CHAN 8350). His reading of the late symphonic poem is comparably warm and idiomatic in a relaxed way.

Kreizberg's reading consistently brings out the fact that not a bar could have been written by any other composer but Dvořák. The Water Goblin makes an ideal coupling, the first of the five graphic symphonic poems on folk stories that Dvořák wrote when he returned from his three years in America, and Kreizberg, helped by the engineers, brings out the extra elaboration of the orchestration. As usual with Pentatone issues the quality of sound is outstanding, depending on the engineering of technicians formerly with Philips: there is fine separation and clarity which yet allows for a warm overall ensemble.

The LSO Live disc of No. 6 is an admirable and infectiously spirited performance. Sir Colin Davis and his fine players are wonderfully idiomatic and offer a performance of exceptional clarity of detail. For the Scherzo, Davis adopts a fastish tempo, and the snapping rhythms come out with extra sharpness, leading to a light, delicate account of the Trio section. In the finale he brings out the warmly Brahmsian qualities. Not a first choice perhaps, but a stimulating one. (LSO Live 0059)

Symphonies 6; 8 in G, Op. 88

🔑 * DG 469 046-2. VPO, Chung

The first movement of No. 6 surpasses in breadth and power (and in the natural way in which it unfolds) almost anything between the C major (Great) of Schubert and the Second of Brahms, the shadows of both of which are clearly visible. It is luminous and innocent, as is the Eighth, another glowing and life-enhancing score, generously coupled here. Both symphonies are served supremely well by Chung and the Vienna Orchestra and the DG engineers.

Symphony 7 in D min., Op. 70; (i) Romance for Violin & Orchestra, Op. 11; Slavonic Dances, 9–16, Op. 72/1–8 (DVD versions)

🔑 * Arthaus DVD 102135. (i) Zenaty; Prague SO, Bělohlávek (Dir: Rodney Greenberg)

This is undoubtedly one of the key Dvořák recordings on DVD. As we have commented below, Bělohlávek's natural affinity with the composer means that his reading of the Seventh Symphony is outstanding in every way and the Prague Orchestra play with natural idiomatic warmth and plenty of vitality. The complete set of the eight Op. 72 Slavonic Dances is similarly idiomatic and vivacious, and the Romance, with Ivan Zenaty a persuasive soloist, is a splendid bonus. The recording too is first class, as is the camerawork.

Symphony 7 in D min., Op. 70

🔑 (BB)  LSO 0014. LSO, C. Davis

Sir Colin Davis's live recording of the Seventh with the LSO was made at the Barbican in March 2001, a powerful reading, a shade freer and more warmly expressive than his earlier (1975) version for Philips with the Concertgebouw Orchestra (see below), with more immediate sound, the power and expressive range are intensified, culminating in a towering account of the finale which, unlike many, here emerges as a fully satisfying conclusion, after the masterly originality of the earlier movements.

Symphony 7 in D min., Op. 70; Nocturne for Strings, Op. 40; The Water Goblin, Op. 107

 Chan. 9391. Czech PO, Bělohlávek

Bělohlávek knows better than his direct rivals how to draw out idiomatic warmth from the Czech Philharmonic, and he is helped by satisfyingly full and glowing Chandos sound. Fresh, well paced and intelligently shaped, this is a thoroughly recommendable reading, paired with an excellent account of The Water Goblin and the eloquent, poignant Nocturne for Strings. In this spacious reading of the Nocturne the Czech strings produce ravishing sounds, and The Water Goblin is similarly relaxed and warm rather than sharply dramatic.

Symphonies 7 in D min., Op. 70; 8 in G, Op. 88

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.111045. Czech PO, Talich

Older collectors who grew up in wartime England will remember Talich's accounts of the D minor and G major Symphonies, then known as Nos. 2 and 4. They were recorded when the great Czech orchestra visited London in 1935 and 1938, and they still remain the classic accounts to have. Some later accounts have come close, but none has surpassed them. Good sound for the period.

Symphonies 7–9; American Suite

Ⓝ (BB) (*) Virgin 5 22039-2. (2) RLPO, Pešek

Symphonies 7–9; Overture Carnival

Ⓑ (*) Sony (ADD) 074646315125 (2). Cleveland O, Szell – SMETANA: Bartered Bride Overture; String Quartet 1 (From My Life): orchestral version, arr. Szell

(i) Symphonies 7–9; (ii) Romance in F min., Op. 11. (i) Symphonic Variations

🔑 Ⓑ  CfP 2-CD 575 7612 (2). (i) LPO, Mackerras; (ii) Gonley, ECO

At bargain price Mackerras's triptych offers performances of all three symphonies which are among the finest ever, with first-rate digital recording throughout. With Mackerras, tragedy is not uppermost in the D minor Seventh Symphony, but rather Dvořákian openness. No. 8 easily matches its companion in effervescence. The colour and atmosphere of the piece are brought out vividly and with a lightness of touch that makes most rivals seem heavy-handed. Mackerras takes a warmly expansive view of the New World, remarkable for a hushed and intense account of the slow movement and superb playing from the LPO. In the Symphonic Variations, too, his relaxed treatment is consistently winning. Stephanie Gonley, the leader of the ECO (who take over for this one item), is a sensitive and characterful soloist in the haunting Romance in F minor, originally coupled with the Legends and added for this generous and highly recommendable reissue.

Szell's performances of the last three symphonies come from the late 1950s. The recordings have a characteristically forward balance; although brightly lit, the sound is full-bodied in its current transfer, with the Severance Hall ambience well caught. Throughout, the playing combines polish with vitality. No. 7 has a strong forward impulse. It may be lacking in geniality but it has plenty of character: the slow movement has a strong foward impulse and there is no lack of sparkle elsewhere. No. 8 is superbly played, the pick of the bunch, and no one should be disappointed with the New World with taut outer movements, a responsive yet refined Largo and an attractive rhythmic lilt in the Scherzo. The Carnival Overture (from 1963) is predictably super-brilliant, as is Smetana's Bartered Bride Overture. The surprise bonus is Szell's fully scored orchestral transcription of Smetana's First String Quartet, which is made to sound more like a symphony. It is played spontaneously and with much zest and brings a passionately felt slow movement. The 1949 mono recording is a bit fierce in fortissimo but has supporting weight and warmth. The result is memorable.

Pešek's recordings of nos. 7 and 8, made at the end of the 1980s, are among the most refreshing of his recordings, persuasive in a light, relaxed way, slow movements warm, with the folk element brought out. However the New World is a little lacking in spontaneity and grip, a reading which could use a bit more adrenalin. The coupled American Suite, however, is presented with a beguilingly affectionate touch. The sound is full and clear.

Symphony 8 in G, Op. 88; The Noonday Witch, Op. 108

🔑 Ⓜ * Warner 3984 4487-2. Concg. O, Harnoncourt

Symphony 8; The Wood Dove, Op. 110

 Chan. 8666. SNO, Järvi

Harnoncourt's G major is the finest of the three Concertgebouw recordings of the late Dvořák symphonies he made between 1997 and 1999. It opens richly and expansively, yet has all the extra tension and spontaneity one expects from a live performance, and an ongoing drama, to match the underlying warmth, especially in the slow movement, which is wonderfully detailed. The orchestral playing is superb, as is the recording: rich, brilliant and ideally balanced in the glowing Concertgebouw acoustic. The tone-poem is equally fine, and this is now a top recommendation for this symphony.

Järvi's highly sympathetic account of the Eighth underlines the expressive lyricism of the piece, the rhapsodic freedom of invention rather than any symphonic tautness, with the SNO players reacting to his free rubato and affectionate moulding of phrase with collective spontaneity. The warm Chandos sound has plenty of bloom, with detail kept clear, and is very well balanced.

Symphonies 8 in G, 9 in E min. (From the New World) (DVD version)

🔑 Ⓝ * Sony DVD 8697202409. VPO, Karajan

Karajan recorded the New World way back in 1940 with the Berlin Philharmonic and another version in 1958 in stereo, the latter sounding exhilaratingly fresh. He returned to it in 1977 but did not record the G major commercially until the present issue. The present performances come from 1985 and were recorded at concerts in the Grossesaal of the Musikverein. They capture the verdant freshness of this music but also show their sense of structure in a strong light. An imposing set and for many will be a first choice.

Symphonies 8 in G; 9 (New World) (CD version)

🔑 * Ph. SACD 470 617-2; 464 640-2. Budapest Festival O, I. Fischer

🔑 Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 475 7517. LSO, Kertész

Symphonies 8 in G, Op. 88; 9 in E min. (From the New World), Op. 95

Ⓜ () Sup. mono SU 3833-2 001. Czech PO, Talich

(*) Signum SIGCD 110. Sapporo SO, Otaka

Among their reissues in the Originals series, Philips and Decca vie with each other by both coupling together outstanding performances of the two favourite Dvořák symphonies. Philips have chosen a fairly recent pairing by the Budapest Festival Orchestra under Iván Fischer which combines freshness with refinement and thoughtfulness with passion, and is currently at the top of our list of recommendations, with the additional advantage of outstanding, modern, digital recording. Iván Fischer includes the exposition repeat of the New World, and both performances are uncommonly imaginative and marvellously played. The recording is of Philips's very finest and also available in surround sound on compatible CD.

Decca have paired together (for the first time) Kertész's much-admired accounts of the same two symphonies with the LSO, recorded three decades earlier. Kertész's reading of the G major Symphony has long been famous for its freshly spontaneous excitement, with well-judged tempi throughout, and an affectionately expressive account of the slow movement. Kertész's New World, too, offers one of the finest performances ever committed to disc, with a most exciting first movement (exposition repeat included) and a Largo bringing playing of hushed intensity to make one hear the music with new ears. Tempi in the last two movements are perfectly judged, and the (1967) recording quality was of Decca's finest of the period.

These Supraphon versions are post-war accounts recorded in the Rudolfinium in 1951 (No. 8) and 1954 (No. 9) during a turbulent period when Talich was being harassed by the Czech communist regime. They are both concentrated and vivid accounts, which bring these scores wonderfully to life.

Enjoyably warm and lyrical readings from Otaka, who in the Eighth brings pleasingly idiomatic woodwind playing. Similarly, in the first movement of the New Word the second subject is introduced very tenderly. By contrast, the cor anglais theme of the Largo could ideally be a fraction more relaxed. The orchestral playing is very sympathetic throughout, but these performances are not quite distinctive enough to be front runners, although they are most naturally recorded.

Symphony 9 in E min. (From the New World), Op. 95

🔑 Ⓜ  Warner 3984 25254-2. Concg. O, Harnoncourt (with The Water Goblin ***)

✿  BBC (ADD) BBCL 4056-2. BBC SO, Kempe – BEETHOVEN: Overture: Leonore 3; PROKOFIEV: The Love for Three Oranges: Suite ***

 Telarc CD 80616. Cincinnati SO, Paavo Järvi – MARTINŮ: Symphony 2 ****

Ⓝ (*) Naïve V 5132. La Chambre Philharmonique, Krivine – SCHUMANN: Konzertstuck in F for Four Horns ***

Ⓝ (*) Ondine ODE 1141-2. Curtis SO, Eschenbach – HINDEMITH: Piano Music with Orchestra ***

Symphony 9; Overture: Carnival

Ⓜ  RCA SACD 82876 66376-2. Chicago SO, Reiner – SMETANA: Bartered Bride Overture; WEINBERGER: Schwanda Polka & Fugue

Symphony 9. Overtures: Carnival; In Nature's Realm; Othello

🔑 Ⓜ * Ondine Double ODE 962-2 (2). Czech PO, Ashkenazy

(i) Symphony 9; (ii) Czech Suite; Prague Waltzes

🔑 Ⓑ  Decca 448 245-2. (i) VPO, Kondrashin; (ii) Detroit SO, Dorati

Symphony 9; Slavonic Dances 1, 3 & 7, Op. 46/1, 3 & 7; 10 & 15, Op. 72/2 & 7

Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 435 590-2. BPO, Karajan

Symphony 9 (New World); Symphonic Variations

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8. 570714. Baltimore SO, Alsop

Ashkenazy's Ondine recording is not only an outstanding recommendation, but it also makes an excellent coupling, offering Dvořák's trilogy of overtures, originally conceived as a group under the title of 'Nature, Life and Love', together with his most popular symphony in a two-for-the-price-of-one package. Ashkenazy follows the instruction from Dvořák to ignore the first-movement exposition repeat. Textures are not ideally transparent, largely a question of the immediate recorded sound, warm rather than clear.

Recorded live, Harnoncourt's first movement, with its bold, clipped rhythms and a nice relaxation for the lyrical second group, generates plenty of excitement, with exposition repeat made part of the structure. The Largo by contrast is gentle, with the cor anglais solo very delicate, almost like an oboe, and with some superb pianissimo string-playing to follow. The Scherzo lilts as it should, and the finale is well thought out so that it moves forward strongly, yet it can look back to the composer's reprise of earlier themes with touching nostalgia. This CD is made the more attractive by the superbly atmospheric and magnetic account of The Water Goblin, one of Dvořák's most colourful symphonic poems. It is even more recommendable at mid-price.

Marin Alsop makes the New World very much her own, with the fine Baltimore Orchestra responding in an account full of warmth, moments of high drama, and above all finely paced with a spontaneous forward flow. Yet the luminous grace of the strings is immediately apparent at the affectionate opening of both first and second movements. The delicate close of the Largo, after the songful repeat of the lovely cor anglais melody is memorable. Yet the movement's central episodes are equally poetic. The Scherzo then bursts in on the listener, and the finale has all the impetus one could want. But what makes this disc doubly recommendable is the superb account of the coupled Symphonic Variations, inspired but surprisingly neglected. The extraordinary variety of invention and scoring captivates the ear, until it reaches its genial fugal apotheosis and the performance sweeps to its folksy, grandiloquent ending. Throughout, the recording is outstanding in every way, well balanced and vivid in detail, heard within the naturally captured acoustic of Baltimore's excellent Symphony Hall.

Kempe's New World Symphony brings another memorable performance, dedicated, with pianissimos of breathtaking delicacy. This is a quite exceptional account, and while they make a curious mixture for a single disc, each of the three contrasted works on this CD has a rare intensity, coming from the two Prom concerts that Kempe conducted in August 1975 on the eve of his taking over as Chief Conductor of the BBC Symphony Orchestra in succession to Pierre Boulez.

Kondrashin's Vienna performance of the New World Symphony was one of Decca's first demonstration CDs. Recorded in the Sofiensaal, every detail of Dvořák's orchestration is revealed within a highly convincing perspective. Other performances may exhibit a higher level of tension but there is a natural spontaneity here. The budget-priced Eclipse CD is enhanced by Dorati's bright, fresh versions of the Czech Suite and the even rarer Prague Waltzes (Viennese music with a Czech accent).

Reiner's 1957 New World is an essentially lyrical performance without idiosyncratic disturbances. There is no first-movement exposition repeat, but how naturally the second subject is ushered in, and how well the music flows, both here and in the Largo, with consistently lovely playing, especially in the rapt closing section. The Scherzo sparkles and its lilting rustic interlude is especially beguiling, while there is plenty of excitement in the finale. As with all these RCA SACD reissues, one notices the added warmth of the sound and firm but resonant bass. What makes this disc the more attractive are the fill-ups, and not just the brilliant Carnival Overture, which bursts with energetic orchestral bravura and yet has a ravishing Slavonic feeling in the middle section.

Having the most popular of Dvořák's symphonies in coupling with one of the most approachable of symphonies by a twentieth-century Czech composer is a neat and original idea, particularly apt when both works were written in the United States. Paavo Järvi not only reveals his own keen imagination and sharp concentration in both performances, he demonstrates consistently the excellence of the Cincinnati Orchestra under his guidance: ensemble in both works is first rate, readily matching the finest rival versions. The quality of the playing, warmly idiomatic both in Martinů and Dvořák, is enhanced by the refinement and clarity of the brilliant Telarc recording.

Karajan's 1964 DG analogue recording has a powerful lyrical feeling and an exciting build-up of power in the outer movements. The Largo is played most beautifully, and Karajan lets the orchestra speak for itself, which it does, gloriously. The rustic qualities of the Scherzo are brought out affectionately, and altogether this is very rewarding. The recording is full, bright and open. This is now reissued, sounding as good as ever, coupled with five favourite Slavonic Dances, given virtuoso performances.

La Chambre Philharmonique, founded by Emmanuel Krivine, prides itself on being less like a regular orchestra than a chamber group, and the results on this first-rate coupling of popular Dvořák and rare Schumann certainly bear that out. Krivine secures biting attack in both works using a reduced body of strings, 8. 8. 7. 6. 5, which undoubtedly helps in securing great clarity, with timpani standing out cleanly – particularly important in the Dvořák, and encouraging Krivine to opt for fast allegros, although perhaps the lyrical side of the work is less emphasized. First-rate sound, recorded in Grenoble, to bring out the quality of the playing.

Eschenbach's reading of the New World is comparably small-scale, with some lovely wind solos, as in the great cor anglais melody of the slow movement, and with plenty of bite in the last two movements. Eschenbach favours a very plain approach, with even the clarinet counter-subject in the finale played with little magic. The coupling, however, is fascinating.

CHAMBER AND INSTRUMENTAL MUSIC

Piano Quartets 1 in D, Op. 23; 2 in E flat, Op. 87

🔑 ❀ * Hyp. CDA 66287. Domus

 Australian Ph. Eloquence (ADD) 470 6622. Beaux Arts Trio, Trampler

The Dvořák Piano Quartets are glorious pieces, and the playing of Domus is little short of inspired. This is real chamber-music playing: intimate, unforced and distinguished by both vitality and sensitivity. They are recorded in an ideal acoustic and in perfect perspective; they sound wonderfully alive and warm.

The playing of the Beaux Arts Trio is as fresh and spontaneous as the music itself, and the early 1970s recording still sounds remarkably well – warm and beautifully balanced.

Piano Quartet 2 in E flat, Op. 87; Piano Quintet, Op. 81

Ⓜ (*) Warner Elatus 2564 60336-2. Schiff, Panocha Qt

András Schiff and the Panocha Quartet offer a welcome pairing, particularly at so competitive a price. The performances are musical and very well recorded and, though neither is a first choice if price is no object, they are both very enjoyable.

(i) Piano Quintet in A, Op. 81. String Quartets 5, Op. 9: Romance; 10 in E flat, Op. 51; 12 in F (American), Op. 96; 13 in G, Op. 106; 14 in A flat, Op. 105; String Quintet in E flat, Op. 97; 5 Bagatelles for 2 Violins, Cello & Harmonium, Op. 47; Cypresses; 2 Waltzes (for string quartet); Terzetto (for 2 violins & viola in C), Op. 74

🔑 Ⓜ  ASV CDDCS 446 (4). The Lindsays, with (i) P. Frankl

A splendid compilation, gathering together many of Dvořák's key chamber works and including not only the American Quartet but also the lovely Quintet, which has similar transatlantic connections. Incidentally and importantly, they include the repeat in the first movement of this work, with its lead-back. None of this music is uninspired and most of it shows the composer at his finest. The performances are characteristically warm and vital, and the recording is first class, clearly focused but with a pervading bloom.

Piano Quintet in A, Op. 81

🔑 * ASV CDDCA 889. Frankl, Lindsay Qt – MARTINŮ: Piano Quintet 2 ****

 Mer. CDE 84459. Denk, Concertante (members) – BRAHMS: Piano Quintet **(*)

Piano Quintet in A; 5 Bagatelles, Op. 47.

 HM HMC 901880. Braley, Ens. Expectations

(i) Piano Quintet in A; String Quartet 12 in F (American), Op. 96

 Testament (ADD) SBT 1074. (i) Stepán; Smetana Qt – JANÁČEK: String Quartet 1 ***

(i) Piano Quintet in A; (ii) String Quintet in A min., Op. 1.

 Sup. SU 3909-2. Skampa Quartet, with (i) Stott; (ii) Durantel

(i) Piano Quintet in A; String Quintet 2 in G, Op. 77

🔑  Hyp. CDA 66796. Gaudier Ens., (i) with Tomes

This ASV account of Dvořák's glorious Piano Quintet by the Lindsays with Peter Frankl can readily stand comparison with the famous early Decca account with Clifford Curzon. Apart from Peter Frankl's fine contribution, one especially responds to Bernard Gregor-Smith's rich cello-line. Because of the resonance, the recording is full and warm, and if there is just a hint of thinness on the violin timbre the balance with the piano is particularly well managed.

With Susan Tomes the inspired pianist, the Gaudier Ensemble give a sparkling performance of the Piano Quintet, full of mercurial contrasts that seem entirely apt and with rhythms superbly sprung. The G major String Quintet is lighter than most rival versions, with speeds on the brisk side and with Marieke Blankestijn's violin pure rather than rich in tone. Very well recorded, this makes an excellent recommendation if you fancy the coupling. In neither work are the exposition repeats observed.

Concertante is a group of musicians from the Juilliard School; they offer the rare coupling of the Piano Quintets of Brahms and Dvořák. This latter is a particularly fine performance, full of passionate spontaneity in the opening movement and with a balancing warmth throughout. Here the lead violin is Colin Jacobson, while Xiao-Dong Wang (who leads in the Brahms) is on the second desk; and this may account for the even greater impetus, although the well-balanced pianist, Jeremy Denk, also makes a first-class contribution. The closing pages are most beautifully managed.

In terms of tonal finesse and bloom, the Smetana Quartet had few peers, and their ensemble is perfect. Moreover the quality of the mid-1960s recorded sound is as good as many being produced today. The Piano Quintet, in which they are joined by Pavel Stepán, is glorious, even if the acoustic is slightly drier than is ideal. No quarrels with the F major Quartet either. The sound is analogue and has great warmth.

Recorded in warm, full sound, the pianist Frank Braley leads an often fiery and impulsive account of Dvořák's masterly Piano Quintet of 1887, using a vintage Steinway of 1874. The clarity of his articulation adds sparkle to his freely romantic reading, matched by the talented string-players of the Ensemble Expectations. The coupling brings a welcome rarity, written in 1878, the year of the first set of Slavonic Dances, for the rare combination of two violins, cello and harmonium, an instrument popular at the time, particularly in America. The sequence is delightful in its exploitation of fresh ideas, and Braley readily adapts to the demands of the harmonium.

Recorded in the Rudolfinum in Prague, the Skampa Quartet, with respectively Laurene Durantel on the double-bass and Kathryn Stott on the piano, give bright, idiomatic performances of both these attractive Quintets, making an excellent coupling. The String Quintet with double-bass as the extra instrument is the first of the two string quintets that the composer wrote, the second having an extra viola instead. The relatively fast speeds chosen by the Skampas seem to enhance the rhythmic resilience of these performances, with the light, bright recording enhancing the impact of both works. The freshness and clarity of the Supraphon performance is also helped by the bright recording, with a sense of fun conveyed in the finale, with deliciously lifted rhythms.

(i) Piano Quintet in A. String Quintets 1–3, Opp. 1, 77 & 97; String Sextet in A, Op. 46

Ⓑ  Ph. (ADD) Duo 462 284-2 (2). (i) Kovacevich; BPO Octet (members)

This is the first time all these works have been gathered together on CD, and they make up a very enticing Duo. The Berlin Philharmonic soloists play most eloquently; these performances are both musical and polished. They are splendidly matched in the Piano Quintet by Stephen Kovacevich whose clarity of articulation is a marvel. The recordings, from 1968 and 1972, occasionally show their age just a little in the upper range of the string-timbre in fortissimos. But there is a pleasing ambient fullness and the sound is generally well balanced.

Piano Trio 1 in B flat, Op. 21.

 Sup. SU 3927-2. Smetana Trio – FIBICH: Piano Trio in F ; MARTINŮ: Piano Trio 2 in D min. ***

The Smetana Trio, led by the cellist Jan Paleníček, son of Josef Paleníček, one of the founders of the original Smetana Trio in 1931, give inspired, totally idiomatic performances of these nicely contrasted Czech works. Much the most ambitious work on the disc is this first of Dvořák's four Trios, written when he was 34 and with his Czech idiom firmly established. One could never mistake this music for Brahms or for any composer but Dvořák. The other two Trios, each barely 15 minutes long, are fascinating rarities, well worth hearing. The Smetanas give a wonderfully refined performance of the present work, which is strong and energetic.

Piano Trios 1 in B flat, Op. 21; 2 in G min., Op. 26; 3 in F min., Op. 65; 4 in E min. (Dumky), Op. 90

(BB) * Warner Apex 2564 69984-8 (2). Trio Fontenay
Ⓑ  Chan. 2x1 241-24 (2). Borodin Trio
 Ara. Z 6726-2 (2). Golub, Kaplan, Carr

Piano Trios 1 in B flat, Op. 21; 3 in F min., Op. 65

🔑  MDG 342 1261-2. V. Piano Trio

Piano Trios 2 in G min. Op. 26; 4 (Dumky), Op. 90

🔑  MDG 342 1262-2. V. Piano Trio

In reissuing the Trio Fontenay's set of Dvořák Piano Trios at budget price, Warner tend to sweep the board. First-class playing and expertly balanced modern recording combine to make this very attractive indeed. Wolf Harden, the pianist, dominates – but only marginally so: his colleagues match him in lyrical ardour, and they are as sympathetic to Dvořák's warm lyricism as to the Czech dance characteristics of the livelier allegros.

The Borodin performances, recorded live at various venues between 1983 and 1985, have all been issued previously, and the Dumky remains as a separate issue, coupled with Smetana (see below). There is characteristic ardour and fire; such imperfections as there are arise from the natural spontaneity of live music-making. The recording varies a little from venue to venue but gives a very real illusion of presence. Although we have a special regard for the newest MDG set from the Vienna Piano Trio, this Chandos bargain reissue remains strongly recommendable in Chandos's two-for-the-price-of-one series.

The talented young players of the Vienna Piano Trio bring out to the full the dramatic contrasts of Dvořák's writing. They are not just sharp in attack but rapt and intense in bringing out the mystery of the slow movement. The performance of the F minor Trio has similar contrasts of light and shade, with the Brahmsian weight of the piano-writing powerfully brought out and with the expressive range of the violin and cello similarly wide in performances that consistently give the illusion of a live experience. On the second disc, the ear immediately registers the wide range of dynamic of the playing. The constant changes of mood and tempo in the Dumky are handled with chimerically spontaneous Slavonic feeling, and the playing is superb.

David Golub, Mark Kaplan and Colin Carr make an ideally balanced group; Golub produces a wide range of keyboard colour and combines subtlety with a vital yet flexible rhythmic grip. Splendidly characterized playing and totally idiomatic in style. Throughout there is feeling and freshness, yet nothing is overstated. An altogether delightful set which gives great pleasure.

The Beaux Arts' earlier versions of the Piano Trios come from the end of the 1960s. The F minor is played with great eloquence and vitality. And what sparkling virtuosity there is in the Scherzo of the G minor, Op. 26. The splendours of the Dumky are well realized in an account of great spontaneity and freshness. The recording is naturally balanced and splendidly vivid; only a degree of thinness on the violin-timbre gives any grounds for reservation. At Duo price this is excellent value. (Ph. 454 259-2)

Piano Trios 1–2

ⒷⒷ  Naxos 8.55439. Joachim Trio

Piano Trios 1; 4 (Dumky)

 Nim. NI 5472. V. Piano Trio

The Vienna Piano Trio show admirable musicianship and sensitivity in the B flat Trio and in the famous Dumky Trio, and they are very well recorded too.

Fresh, vital playing from this excellent Naxos group. Very good recording too, and though not to be preferred to the Beaux Arts, this is eminently recommendable and worth the money.

Piano Trio 2 in G min., Op. 26

Ⓝ (*) Sup. SU 3949-2. Smetana Trio – TCHAIKOVSKY: Piano Trio **(*)

The Smetana Trio offers Dvořák's Second G minor Piano Trio with its warmly appealing Largo, delicious Scherzo and Finale, played here with an idiomatic lightness of touch. The performance of the coupled Tchaikovsky Trio is also a fine one, rather more intimately balanced than its competitors, and with its pianist, although well placed in the integrated overall sound picture, less dominant.

Piano Trios 2 in F min, Op 65; 3 in E min. Op 90 (Dumky)

Ⓝ  Cobra 0025. Osiris Piano Trio

The first point to note in this coupling of the second and third of Dvořák's three mature piano trios is the phenomenal precision of the playing of the Dutch Osiris Trio. Not only that, they have a lightness of touch, notably in the dance rhythms of the so-called Dumky Trio. They winningly bring out the folk-dance element in this highly original work in six sections, with laments set in sharp contrast with vigorous dances, reflecting the traditional Dumka form. The dance rhythms all go with a swing. The F minor Trio, written after the death of Dvořák's mother, is altogether different, weighty in its traditional structure in four movements. The first movement is given a surging strength, with the lyrical second subject offering a clear contrast. Most impressive of the movements in this performance is the Poco Adagio third movement which has an inner intensity: the high violin is ravishingly beautiful, no doubt reflecting the composer's mourning for his mother.

Piano Trios 3–4 (Dumky)

 Hyp. CDA 66895. Florestan Trio

Piano Trio 4 in E min. (Dumky), Op. 90

 Arco Diva UP 0098 131. Max Brod Trio – BEETHOVEN: Piano Trio 1 ***

 Warner 2564 61492-2. Beaux Arts Trio – MENDELSSOHN: Piano Trio 1 ***

With two Czech string-players joined by a German pianist, the Max Brod Trio gives a winningly idiomatic account of Dvořák's Dumky Trio, with the typical alternations of slow and fast sounding totally natural and spontaneous, to reflect Czech folk music. The slow sections are warm and tender in their meditative intensity, perfectly contrasted with the jaunty rhythms of the fast sections. Excellent, well-balanced sound, if a little dry.

The Hyperion disc also offers musicianly and refined performances that will give much pleasure, and the recording, too, is excellent.

The Beaux Arts made their début on LP some 36 years ago with their performance of the Dumky Trio (alone, on one full-priced LP) and, although some of the personnel has changed, the youthfulness and grace of the playing has not. Menahem Pressler is every bit as sensitive and fleet of finger as he was in the mid-1950s. The new Warner recording is of course more realistic and wide-ranging. It is splendidly balanced and makes a very happy tribute to this wonderful ensemble. The recording is naturally balanced and the illusion of a live occasion is striking.

4 Romantic Pieces, Op. 75; Slavonic Dance, Op. 46/2 (original version); Violin Sonatina in G, Op. 100

🔑 Ⓜ  Sup. SU 3772. Suk, Holec – SMETANA: From the Homeland; SUK: Ballade; 4 Pieces ***

4 Romantic Pieces, Op. 75; Violin Sonatina in G, Op. 100; Humoresque (for solo piano)

 Analekta FL2 3191. Ehnes, Laurel – JANAČEK: Violin Sonata 1; SMETANA: From the Homeland ***

Idiomatic and beautifully turned performances, as one would expect from the composer's grandson and his accomplished partner. The Sonatina is an utterly delightful work, particularly the slow movement, which is played exquisitely. It is good, too, to hear the E minor Slavonic Dance in its original form, before Dvořák scored it for orchestra. The 1971 recording is excellent and the faithful CD transfer quite transforms the original LP sound.

On Analekta, the collection of violin and piano music by the three greatest Czech composers inspires not just the brilliant Canadian violinist, Ehnes, but his piano-partner, Eduard Laurel, to performances which with rare understanding bring out the special, most winning qualities of each work. As a charming coda, Ehnes, switching to the piano, offers a reading, albeit a little wayward, of Dvořák's ever-popular Humoresque.

Serenade/Octet, Op. 22 (original version); Serenade for Wind, Op. 44 (trans. for Octet); Slavonic Dances, Op. 72/2, 3 & 8 (trans. for double wind quintet)

 Praga PRD 350021. Czech Nonet

The original (1873) version of Dvořák's Serenade, Op. 22, was scored for clarinet, horn, bassoon, two violins, viola and double bass, plus piano. It sounds most engaging, altogether more folksy and rural. The Wind Serenade has also been transcribed by František Hertl for a similar group, and the three Slavonic Dances for double wind quartet by a member of the Czech Nonet. The result in all this music is delightful, beautifully played and recorded – a refreshing change from the normal versions.

String Quartets 1–14; Cypresses, B.152; Fragments in A min.; F, B.120; 2 Waltzes, Op. 54, B.105

Ⓑ  DG (ADD) 463 165-2 (9). Prague Qt

Dvořák's Quartets span the whole of his creative life. The glories of the mature Quartets are well known, though it is only the so-called American which has achieved real popularity. The beauty of the present set, made in 1973–7, is that it offers more Quartets (not otherwise available) plus two Quartet Movements, in A minor (1873) and F major (1881), plus two Waltzes and Cypresses for good measure, all in eminently respectable performances and decent recordings. The present transfers are managed most satisfactorily, with a nice balance between warmth and presence. At bargain price, neatly packaged and with good documentation, this is self-recommending.

String Quartets 5 in F min., Op. 9; 7 in A min., Op. 16

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553377. Vlach Qt

String Quartets 8 in E., Op. 80; 11 in C, Op. 61

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553372. Vlach Qt

String Quartet 9 in D min., Op. 34; Terzetto in C (for 2 violins and viola), Op. 74

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553373. Vlach Qt

String Quartets 10 in E flat, Op. 51; 14 in A flat, Op. 105

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553374. Vlach Qt

String quartets 12 in F (American), Op. 96; 13, in G, Op. 106

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553371. Vlach Qt

Although there is stiffer competition now that DG have reissued the Prague Quartet set of the Dvořák canon at budget price, the Vlach is as good a way of exploring this repertoire as any. Their tonal matching seals their claims to be an outstanding international group, and there is nothing 'bargain basement' about the performances except their price. The playing is cultured and has warmth and vitality, and there can be no grumbles so far as the quality of the recorded sound is concerned; it is natural, well focused and warm. The dark intensity on a whispered pianissimo which marks the hushed opening of Op. 105, one of Dvořák's masterpieces, leads on to performances of exceptional strength and refinement, and throughout the series the vigorous movements bring exhilaratingly sprung rhythms and slow movements that are deeply expressive. The Vlach are as fresh and persuasive as any of their rivals on premium-priced labels.

String Quartets 8 in E, Op. 80; 9 in D min., Op. 34

 Praga HMCD 90. Kocian Qt

Outstanding performances from the Kocian Quartet, naturally idiomatic and full of vitality. Both slow movements are played most beautifully, the Adagio of the D minor is very tender, and both Scherzos have a real Slavonic rhythmic feel. The outer movements of the E major are particularly appealing. The recording is real and present, perhaps a shade close (there is a hint of shrillness on the violins) but well balanced. This is much more characterful and authentic than the coupling of the same two works by the Chilingirians on Chandos.

String Quartets 9, Op. 34; 14 in A flat, Op. 105

Ⓜ  Somm SOMMCD 231. Delmé Qt

With this issue the Delmé Quartet celebrate their fortieth birthday (they were founded in 1962). They are a refreshingly musical ensemble, unglamorous and free from gloss, and though there are some infelicities, both quartets are very well served. The sublime slow movement of Op. 34 is eloquently played, and the recording, made in Leiston Abbey, is eminently truthful and well balanced.

String Quartet 12 in F (American), Op. 96

Ⓑ  Calliope CAL 6262. Annesci Qt – GLAZUNOV: Quartet 3 ***

 EMI 7 54215-2. Alban Berg Qt – SMETANA: Quartet ***

Ⓜ  Classic fM 75605 57027-2. Chilingirian Qt – BORODIN: Quartet 2; SHOSTAKOVICH: Quartet 8 ***

(BB) () Dutton mono CDBP 9713. Griller Qt – BLOCH: Quartet 2; Night; MOZART: Adagio & Fugue ()

() Testament mono SBT 1072. Hollywood Qt – KODÁLY; SMETANA: Quartets ()

Ⓜ (*) Virgin 2x1 5 62437-2 (2). Endellion Qt – SMETANA: String Quartet 1; MARTINŮ: Double Concerto, etc. ***

A warmly refined account from the rich-timbred Annesci Quartet. This is essentially a mellow performance (helped by richly atmospheric recording), but there is no lack of underlying impulse, and there is plenty of dash in the sparkling finale. The Glazunov coupling is equally recommendable.

The Alban Berg have their finger on the vital current that carries its musical argument forward. Phrasing is shaped dextrously and the polish and elegance of their playing are never in danger of diminishing the spontaneous-seeming character of this music.

On Classic fM, the Chilingirian Quartet give powerful, incisive performances, though they are recorded a bit too forward. Levon Chilingirian's violin-tone is given a slight edge by the full, immediate recording. In the Dvořák the big contrasts of mood and atmosphere are brought out, with the slow movement yearningly beautiful and the fast movements given an infectious spring.

When this brilliant version of Dvořák's American Quartet was recorded in 1948, the Grillers were at their peak, unassailably the leading such group in Britain. Perfectly matched, they bring out the exhilaration of the fast music, notably in a dazzling account of the finale and the yearning beauty of the slow movement. This was a fine early example of Decca's prowess in using its ffrr process, and Dutton in the CD transfer secures astonishingly vivid results. Well coupled with the masterly but neglected Bloch Quartet and the Mozart masterpiece.

The Hollywood Quartet is pretty well self-recommending, and their account of the F major Quartet is everything one would expect: impeccable in terms of execution, ensemble and taste. This was a quartet which brought real artistry to everything they played.

The Endellion Quartet give a generally excellent account. Mind you, one is pulled up with a start at the second theme of the first movement which the leader, Andrew Watkinson, pulls out of shape. However, these players are robust in style, their music-making has conviction, they are eminently well recorded, and the couplings are as generous as they are unexpected.

String Quartets 12 (American); 13 in G, Op. 106

🔑  ASV CDDCA 797. Lindsay Qt

In the American Quartet the Lindsays' account is certainly among the very best in terms of both performance and recording. The G major is also played very well, with much the same dedication and sensitivity. An outstanding coupling.

String Quartet 12 (American); (i) String Quintet in E flat, Op. 97

🔑 (BB) * Warner Apex 0927 44355-2. Keller Qt, with (i) Deeva

Dvořák wrote the second of his string quintets (the one with the extra viola) in the same period as the popular Op. 96 Quartet, similarly using thematic material with American inflexions, so that the two works make an apt and attractive coupling. The Keller Quartet give outstanding readings of both works, crisp and fanciful, with light, clear textures and speeds generally on the fast side. A real bargain.

String Quartet 14; Terzetto in C, Op. 74

(*) BBC Legends BBCL 4180-2. Smetana Qt – JANÁČEK: Quartet 1 (Kreutzer Sonata) **(*)

 Testament SBT 1075. Smetana Qt – JANÁČEK: String Quartet 2 ***

(*) Avie AV 2092. Szymanowski Qt – BACEWICZ: Quartet 4; HAYDN: Quartet *

The Smetanas are unrivalled in Czech repertoire and their account of the A flat Quartet was given at London's Queen Elizabeth Hall in 1975. It is as persuasive an account as any in the catalogue. The Terzetto for two violins and viola is a studio recording from 1969 and makes an excellent makeweight to a rewarding and compelling recital.

The Smetanas (on Testament) observe the traditional cut in the finale of Op. 105, from 11 bars before fig. 11 until 4 bars after fig. 12. This is a wonderful performance. Moreover it also comes with the Terzetto in C for two violins and viola, a rarity in the concert hall, played freshly and elegantly, and with their outstanding account of Janáček's Intimate Letters, which is new to the British catalogues.

The performance by the Szymanowski Quartet is excellent, sensitive and polished, with the furiant Scherzo full of life and the slow movement warmly played. Yet some ears may find the blend of tone these players achieve at times a little too sensuously smooth and suave, for they are very flattered by the recording.

String Quintets in A min., Op. 1; E flat, Op. 97

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553376. Vlach Qt, with L. Kyselac

An intelligent coupling by the Vlach of the earliest Quintet, coupled with one of the most masterly of all his chamber works, the E flat, Op. 97. No need to worry about this performance or recording, for both are excellent and, although there are alternatives of quality, none is priced so competitively.

String Quintets: (i) in G, Op. 77; (ii) in E flat, Op. 97

 Bayer BR 100 184CD. Stamitz Qt, with (i) Hudec; (ii) Talich

String Quintets: in G, Op. 77; in E flat, Op. 97; Intermezzo in B, Op. 40

 Chan. 9046. Chilingirian Qt, with D. McTier

The Stamitz Quartet is perhaps balanced more forwardly but is recorded pleasantly, and the Chilingirian set on Chandos has more air round the sound but without any loss of focus. Both performances have the warmth and humanity that Dvořák exudes, but the Chilingirians undoubtedly score in including the beautiful B major Intermezzo that the composer had originally intended for the G major Quintet and which he subsequently expanded into an independent work for full strings, the Nocturne, Op. 40. This tips the balance in their favour.

String Quintet in E flat, Op. 97; String Sextet in A, Op. 48

🔑  Hyp. CDA 66308. Raphael Ens.

The E flat major Quintet, Op. 97, is one of the masterpieces of Dvořák's American years, and it is most persuasively given by the Raphael Ensemble, as is the coupled Sextet. It is also very well recorded, though we are placed fairly forward in the aural picture.

String Quintet, Op. 77; String Sextet, Op. 48; Intermezzo, Op. 40

🔑  ASV GLD 4011. Nash Ens.

The Nash Ensemble prove to be most persuasive advocates of both these fine ensemble works for strings, beautifully matched and with a fine feeling for the Czech idiom. The Sextet too brought Dvořák to international notice. The Intermezzo which comes as supplement, here given with single strings, is especially apt, when this was originally intended as an extra slow movement for the String Quintet, a gentle, intimate piece. First-rate sound.

String Sextet in A, Op. 48 (DVD Version)

(*) Sup. DVD SU 7004-2. Augmented Smetana Qt – SMETANA: String Quartets 1–2 (plus documentary on the Smetana Quartet) **(*)

The Sextet makes an admirable fill-up for the two Smetana Quartets and is given without intrusive camerawork. Musically very satisfying, though the documentary in which the members of the quartet look back over their career is curiously stiff.

Violin Sonatina in G, Op. 100 – see also under Violin Concerto

🔑  Praga PRD 250 153. Remés, Kayahara – JANÁČEK; MARTINŮ; SMETANA: Violin Sonatas ***

 Avie Crear Classics AV 0037. Gleusteen, Ordronneau – FRANCK: Violin Sonata; GRIEG: Violin Sonata 3 ***

Dvořák's Violin Sonatina is full of charm, its four movements are by no means diminutive in character, and the composer probably chose the title to emphasize its unpretentiousness. This splendidly sensitive account from Václav Remés, admirably partnered by Sachiko Kayahara, is sheer delight from beginning to end and has an authentic Czech lilt, yet is full of character. The recording is very good indeed, and so are the couplings.

Kai Gleusteen and Catherine Ordronneau also share the pleasures of playing this delightful Sonatina, written in New York in 1893, and in particular bring out the charm of its recognizable melodic connection with the composer's 'New World' era. An altogether winning performance of a captivating work, naturally recorded in a concert hall acoustic at Crear in the Scottish Highlands, with a visual backcloth as memorable as the music.

Slavonic Dances 1–16, Op. 46/1–8; Op. 72/1–8

🔑  Mirare MIR042. Désert, Strosser

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553138. Matthies, Köhn

Recorded at a music festival in Nantes early in 2007, Claire Désert and Emmanuel Strosser give fluent, nicely sprung readings. The fact that these are live recordings intensifies the dynamic shading, which is subtler than in the Naxos version, and Désert and Strosser relish the stylistic contrast in the second set of eight dances, when Dvořák went outside the world of Czech music for his inspiration and drew on dances from other Slavonic countries.

The brilliant piano duo of Silke-Thora Matthies and Christian Köhn are most persuasive performers, radiating their own enjoyment, bringing out inner parts, giving transparency to even the thickest textures, subtly shading their tone and, above all, consistently springing rhythms infectiously, with an idiomatic feeling for Czech dance music. The forwardly balanced recording brings out the brightness of the piano while letting warmth of tone come forward in such gentler dances as No. 3 in D. An excellent bargain.

Poetic Tone Pictures, Op. 85; Theme & Variations, Op. 36

(BB) (*) Regis RRC 1171. Kvapil

Dvořák is not best known as a composer for the piano, yet his set of Poetic Tone Pictures has great charm, and the influences of folksong are striking: these pieces have much in common with the Lyric Pieces of Grieg. The Theme and Variations, Dvořák's one major solo work, followed after the Piano Concerto of 1876 and is stronger and more classical in feeling. Radoslav Kvapil has the full measure of this music and plays the gentler evocations very persuasively. He is truthfully recorded, but the sound is a bit dry and forte passages tend to harden. Nevertheless, this disc is well worth having at its modest price. It is available either separately or within a four-CD Czech Piano Anthology, which also includes music by Janáček, Smetana and Suk (Regis 4005).

7 Organ Preludes & Fugues

(*) BIS CD 1101. Ericsson – GLAZUNOV: Preludes & Fugues, etc.; SIBELIUS: Intrada, etc. *

These pieces – five preludes, a fughetta and two fugues – are graduation exercises that Dvořák wrote on leaving the Prague Organ School. They are played very well here and show the fluency and technical proficiency you would expect from any gifted student, but no sign of individuality.

VOCAL AND CHORAL MUSIC

Cypresses ((i) Instrumental and (ii) Vocal Versions), B11 & B152

 Somm SOMMCD 236. (i) Delmé Qt; (ii) Robinson, Johnson

The charming sequence of 12 pieces for string quartet that Dvořák entitled Cypresses has been recorded fairly often, but the set of 18 songs on which they are based has been seriously neglected. Here, as an ideal and generous coupling, comes a disc setting the two cycles side by side, with illuminating results. Both sets in their reflection on youthful love provide a touching portrait of the composer. Though the present recording of the song versions sets the singer at a slight distance, with occasional roughness at the top disturbing the general sweetness of tenor-tone, Timothy Robinson's performances are warmly sympathetic, helped by ever-responsive accompaniment from Graham Johnson. The Delmé Quartet plays the instrumental versions with exceptionally sweet matching, generally opting for relatively broad speeds and warmly expressive phrasing. The disc also offers excellent detailed notes and full texts and translations.

Biblical Songs, Op. 99; Gipsy Melodies, Op. 55; In Folk Tone, Op. 73; Love Songs, Op. 83

 Sup. SU 3437-2. Peckova, Gage

Dagmar Pecková's is an ideal voice for this repertory, unmistakably Slavonic in timbre, yet firm and pure as well as rich. She retains a freshness that is specially apt for the songs inviting a girlish manner, including the most famous of this composer's songs, the fourth of the seven Gipsy Songs, Songs my Mother taught me, sounding fresh and new. Full texts are given, but translations in German and French as well as English come on separate pages, making it far more difficult to follow songs line by line. Clear, well-balanced sound.

Requiem (DVD version)

🔑  Arthaus DVD 102 063. Be ačková, Kirilová, Protschka, Vele, Prague Philharmonic Ch., Czech PO, Neumann

Recorded (in association with Bavarian Radio) against the glorious backcloth of St Vitus Cathedral, Prague, Neumann's inspired performance is more spacious and has a less fiery drive than Ančerl's celebrated DG audio version, but the conductor creates a sustained intensity from the very opening, and the Czech Philharmonic Chorus reaches heights of fervour in both the Offertorium and the resplendent Sanctus, while the second Pie Jesu (which moved the composer himself so much when he conducted the work's première at the Birmingham Festival in 1891) and the Agnus Dei make an equally poignant climax at the work's close. The soloists make a good team; the women are not without the occasional wobble, but they sing committedly and ensure that the work's Czech character is fully maintained. The recording is first class and the video direction admirably straightforward, using the cathedral interior very effectively for visual variety.

(i) Requiem, Op. 89; (CD versions) (ii) 6 Biblical Songs from Op. 99

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ  DG 453 073-2 (2). (i) Stader, Wagner, Haefliger, Borg, Czech PO & Ch., Ančerl; (ii) Fischer-Dieskau, Demus

This superb DG set from 1959 brings an inspired performance of Dvořák's Requiem which here emerges with fiery intensity, helped by a recording made in an appropriately spacious acoustic that gives an illusion of an electrifying live performance, without flaw. The passionate singing of the chorus is unforgettable and the German soloists not only make fine individual contributions but blend together superbly in ensembles. DG have added Fischer-Dieskau's 1960 recordings of six excerpts from Op. 99. He is at his superb best in these lovely songs. Jörg Demus accompanies sensitively, and the recording-balance is most convincing.

(i) Requiem, Op. 89; (ii) Mass in D, Op. 86

Ⓑ  Double Decca (ADD) 448 089-2 (2). (i) Lorengar, Komlóssy, Isofalvy, Krause, Amb. S., LSO, Kertész; (ii) Ritchie, Giles, Byers, Morton, Christ Church Cathedral Ch., Oxford, Cleobury (organ), Preston

Kertész conducts with a total commitment to the score and he secures from singers and orchestra an alert and sensitive response. The recording, which has the advantage of the Kingsway Hall ambience, has a lifelike balance, and for this Double Decca reissue the work has been sensibly recoupled with Simon Preston's beautifully shaped Christ Church account of the Mass in D, recorded six years later. In both works the CD remastering shows how good were the original recordings.

Saint Ludmila (oratorio), Op. 74

 Orfeo C 513992H (2). Aghová, Breedt, Beczala, Vele, Prague Chamber Ch., WDR Cologne Ch. & SO, Albrecht

Saint Ludmila is a winningly vigorous, dramatic work, reflecting the composer we know from the symphonies in its rhythmic strength and lyrical warmth. It is a piece full of white-hot inspiration, punctuated with lively choruses and arias, often feeling operatic. This Orfeo issue offers a strong, colourful performance which points the drama well, using four first-rate Czech-speaking soloists and with the Cologne Choir augmented by the Prague Chamber Choir. The result is both polished and idiomatic, helped by warm, full sound, even though the chorus is set behind the orchestra.

Stabat Mater, Op. 58 (DVD version)

Ⓝ  Arthaus DVD 102 143. Urbanová, Kachlíková, Margita, Mikuláš, Prague Ph. Ch; Prague SO, Pešek

This performance took place at a Dvořák Festival at the Alte Oper in Frankfurt in 1993 and was recorded for BBC TV and Unitel. The performance is attractively idiomatic with good choral singing from the Prague Chorus and fine orchestral playing from the Prague Symphony Orchestra. Libor Pešek conducts with dedication in this choral piece and with excellent camerawork it is most rewarding.

Stabat Mater; Psalm 149, Op. 79 (CD version)

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.555301/2 (2). Brewer, Simpson, Aler, Gao, Washington Ch. & O, Shafer

(i) Stabat Mater; (ii) Legends 1–10, Op. 59

Ⓑ  DG Double (ADD) 453 025-2 (2). (i) Mathis, Reynolds, Ochman, Shirley-Quirk, Bav. R. Ch. & SO; (ii) ECO; Kubelik

The Stabat Mater blazed the trail for Dvořák's cause during his lifetime. Kubelik is consistently responsive and this is a work which benefits from his imaginative approach. The recording, made in the Munich Herkulessaal, is of very good quality. The ten Legends are beautifully played by the ECO. This music ought to be better known, with its colourful scoring and folksy inspiration of a high order. Again very good recording.

Robert Shafer conducts his chorus and the Washington Orchestra in a fresh, well-disciplined reading. The chorus is rather backwardly placed, but Shafer's clean-cut directness helps to avoid any feeling of sentimentality. Outstanding among the soloists is Christine Brewer, and John Aler, though not as sweet-toned as usual, sings very sensitively too. The mezzo, Marietta Simpson, is tremulous as recorded, and Ding Gao is clear and reliable in the bass solos.

OPERA

Dimitrij

 Sup. SU 3793-2 (3). Vodička, Drobková, Hajóssyová, Aghová, Mikulaš, Kusnjer, Prague Philharmonic Ch., Prague R. Ch., Czech PO, Albrecht

This first complete recording of Dvořák's ambitious historical opera was made in 1989, an opera memorable for carrying on the story of Boris Godunov after the Tsar died. This is a fine recording, idiomatically conducted by Gerd Albrecht, with the choirs from Prague making the most of the many ensembles, not least the double-choruses representing the conflicting Polish and Russian forces. As has regularly been pointed out, Dvořák was less influenced in these by the rugged example of Mussorgsky than by the grand operas written for Paris by Meyerbeer. In the title-role Leo Vodička is a strong, very Slavonic-sounding tenor, singing sensitively if at times with strain. Sweetest on the ear among the women is Livia Aghová as Xenia, pure, fresh and precise in attack. As Marina, Magdalena Hajóssyová is bright and fresh, if with an occasional edge on the voice; and the contralto, Drahomira Drobková, is a warm, rich-toned Marfa. Good sound, with the singers' diction admirably clear.

The Jacobin

Ⓜ  Orfeo C641 043F (3). Bronikowski, Lehotsky, Aghová, Stephinger, Holland, Danková, Mikulaš, Lorenz, Georg, Cologne Children's Ch., Prague Chamber Ch., Cologne R. Symphony Ch. & O, Albrecht

 Sup. (ADD) 11 2190-2 (2). Zítek, Sounová, Přibyl, Machotková, Blachut, Průša, Tuček, Berman, Katilena Children's Ch., Kuhn Ch., Brno State PO, Pinkas

This opera is a strange but attractive mixture. The main plot involves the hero, Bohuš, son of Count Vilém, being falsely accused of being a revolutionary Jacobin. But Dvořák – having made him a baritone, not a tenor – centres his emotions on the subplot involving village life and the love between the gamekeeper, Jiří, and Terinka. Terinka's father, the village musician-schoolmaster, Benda, is the focus of delectable rehearsal scenes with the schoolchildren and villagers. Gerd Albrecht, the conductor who has recorded so many of Dvořák's major works, is warmly understanding of the Czech folk idiom, and he points rhythms delectably; set in an open acoustic, using large forces both in the orchestra and in the multiple choruses, the Orfeo version achieves a fine balance between high drama and rustic colour. One is forced to take the mortal threat to Bohuš from the evil Adolf very seriously.

Michal Lehotsky, a tenor, sweetly Slavic in timbre, takes the role of Jiří, as he does on the Wexford set from Fone, and again he gives an animated performance. Opposite him is the soprano, Lívia Aghová, as Terinka, again both Slavic in timbre and sweet-toned, charmingly provocative. Though Andrea Danková, as Bohuš's wife Julie, is more variable and with a more pronounced vibrato and a tendency to shrillness under pressure on top, the apt weight of the voice establishes the character well, making the necessary contrast with Terinka. As Bohuš, the baritone Marcin Bronikowski, lyrical in his early scenes, rises splendidly to the challenge of the final scene when he appeals to his father, convincing him of his innocence, so bringing the happy ending. In the key role of Benda the character tenor, Eberhard Francesco Lorenz, paints a colourful portrait of the schoolmaster without caricaturing him, and the fine bass, Christoph Stephinger, sings nobly as the Count, with Peter Mikulaš strongly cast as the Count's Burgrave. As Adolf, Mark Holland sounds gritty at times, but that is only apt for so villainous a character, and he sings with fine projection in his big moments. The important choruses – with big ensembles ending each Act – are superbly sung too. This is a piece that by rights should have become a far closer rival to The Bartered Bride than it has. Though the set takes three discs instead of two for rival versions, that brings the advantage of having each Act complete on a single disc.

On Supraphon Jiří Pinkas draws lively and idiomatic performances from a first-rate cast, including such stalwarts as Vilem Přibyl as the hero (a little old-sounding but stylish) and the veteran tenor Beno Blachut giving a charming portrait of the heroine's father. Václav Zítek sings the heroic part of the Jacobin himself with incisive strength and Daniela Sounová is bright and clear as the heroine. The analogue sound is clear and firmly focused. A full libretto/translation is included.

Kate and the Devil (complete)

(*) Sup. (ADD) 11 1800-2 (2). Barová, Ježil, Novák, Sulcová, Suryová, Horáček, Brno Janáček Op. Ch. & O, Pinkas

This is a charming comic fantasy about the girl who literally makes life hell for the devil who abducts her. It inspired a score that might almost be counted an operatic equivalent of his Slavonic Dances, full of sharply rhythmic ideas, colourfully orchestrated. The role of Kate is very well taken by Anna Barová, firm and full-toned, with Jirka sung attractively by Miloš Ježil, though his Slavonic tones are strained on top. The snag is the ill-focused singing of Richard Novák as the Devil, characterful enough but wobbly. Jiří Pinkas persuasively brings out the fun and colour of the score, drawing excellent singing from the chorus; and the 1979 recording has plenty of space, agreeably warm and atmospheric. The libretto is well produced and clear, but it assumes that the set is on three CDs instead of two, with Acts II and III together on the second.

The King and the Charcoal Burner

 Orfeo C678 06214 (2). Jenis, Mikulaš, Aghová, Breedt, Lehotsky, Jindrich, Cologne West German R. Ch. & O, Albrecht

The King and the Charcoal Burner was the second opera that Dvořák wrote and the first to be staged. In its first form it was abandoned during rehearsal as being too complex and Wagnerian, which led the composer to rewrite the piece completely, simplifying its textures and material. There followed two more versions, which together form the basis of the present recording, recorded at concert performances with West German Radio forces in Cologne and an excellent cast of young Czech singers under the ever-sympathetic advocate, Gerd Albrecht. As it is, the piece vies with Smetana's The Bartered Bride in the freshness of the Czech flavours, from the opening Overture. Very attractive it is, if without the sharp memorability of Smetana's most striking numbers. Well-balanced sound, with voices exceptionally clear and well defined, with clear diction.

Rusalka (DVD version)

(*) Sup. DVD SU 7008-9. Subrtová, Zidek, Miková, Mixová, Haken, Ovčačiková, Prague Nat. Ch. & O, Chalabala (V/D: Bohumil Zoul)

What the film director Bohumil Zoul has done in the Supraphon DVD is to use the 1961 Supraphon audio recording as the soundtrack for an imaginative re-creation of the story, using actors chosen for their looks. So Rusalka, sung freshly and brightly by Milada Subrtová, is played by a very pretty young girl, Katerina Machackova, and the Prince, sung by the legendary Ivo Zidek, has film-star good looks in the person of Miroslav Nohinek. The Foreign Princess, formidably sung by Alena Miková, is portrayed by the handsomely implacable Marie Malkova, while the Turnspit, sung by a girl, Ivana Mixová, is played by a young boy (Michal Mikes). Among the principals, only the old Watersprite is sung and played by the same artist, Eduard Haken.

The opening scene between Rusalka and the Watersprite makes clear their supernatural character by using superimposed images, making their green complexions and bodies transparent. The superimposed images continue until the Prince arrives on his horse, and we see the transformation of Rusalka into a human being, so losing her fussy green complexion and acquiring a blouse and skirt. Though the camerawork tends to be fussy, the result is certainly evocative. One trouble, which increases towards the end of the film, is the coordination of words and lips, and the 1961 audio recording, clear and full on voices, tends to have rather thin orchestral sound. That said, this is a most traditional presentation following the composer's vision, with a first-rate performance allied to an idealized setting of the story.

Rusalka (complete; CD versions)

* Chan. SACD 10449 (3). Barker, La Spina, Martin, Whitehouse, Owens, Crane, Fiebig, Matthews, Pendry. Opera Australia Ch., Australian Opera & Ballet O, Hickox

🔑 * Decca 460 568-2 (3). Fleming, Heppner, Hawlata, Zajick, Urbanová, Kusnjer, Kloubová, Kühn Mixed Ch., Czech PO, Mackerras

There is a strong case for this new version from Chandos, recorded in SACD. Cheryl Barker may not have so creamily beautiful a voice as Renée Fleming on Decca, but she sounds more aptly girlish and fresh. Her big solo in Act I, the Invocation to the Moon, flows far more easily than in Fleming's very beautiful but very expansive version on Decca, an obvious advantage. The tenor Rosario La Spina, as the Prince is younger sounding, more obviously virile and more expressive than the Heldentenor Ben Heppner on Decca. As for Hickox himself, he conducts this magical score with a bite that brings out the elements so closely related to the Slavonic Dances, and the recording, made live in the Sydney Opera House (a difficult venue), is aptly clean and fresh. Bruce Martin as the Water Goblin may not have as rich or well focused a voice as Franz Hawlata on Decca, but it is a strong and characterful performance, and as the witch, Jezibaba, Anne-Marie Owens is satisfyingly rich and fruity, where her Decca counterpart is relatively thin-toned.

The Decca CD set is in every way a satisfying musical experience. This offers not only ripely atmospheric sound but what in almost every way is the ideal cast, with the Czech Philharmonic incandescent under Sir Charles Mackerras. Renée Fleming gives a heartfelt, sharply detailed performance, with the voice consistently beautiful over the widest range. Ben Heppner too, with his powerful tenor at once lyrical and heroic, is ideally cast as the Prince. Franz Hawlata as the Watergnome, Rusalka's father, and Dolora Zajick as the witch, Ježibaba, are both outstanding too, with even the smaller roles cast from strength, using leading singers from the Prague Opera. In his inspired conducting Mackerras does not resist the obvious Wagnerian overtones, yet Czech flavours are never underplayed in the many colourful dance rhythms. Highlights are available on 466356-2.

Rusalka (sung in English) (DVD version)

 Arthaus DVD 102 019. Hannan, Macann, Howard, Treleaven, Cannan, ENO Ch. & O, Elder (Stage Dir: David Pountney; V/D: David Bailey)

The ENO concept was to set this fairy-tale piece in an Edwardian nursery full of toys, with the Watergnome as Rusalka's grandfather in a wheelchair, and Rusalka herself first seen on a swing with her feet bound together, very much an Alice in Wonderland figure. The Witch is a wicked aunt, dressed in sinister black as she pronounces her curses on Rusalka, as when, with Rusalka opting for human form, she snarls, 'You'll be dumb for ever more!' In the title-role Eilene Hannan sings powerfully with her clear, bright soprano, John Treleaven as the Prince sings with unstrained clarity, even if he does not cut a very romantic figure, and Rodney Macann as the Grandfather/Watergnome tends to steal the show, very characterful with his dark, incisive bass. Ann Howard is wonderfully menacing as the Aunt/Witch with her firm mezzo, while the fluttering vibrato of Phyllis Cannan as the Foreign Princess even adds to her exotic image. Unlike most of the others in Act II, who are dressed white, she stands out in her fashionable crimson gown. The three Watersprites, Rusalka's sisters, are all wonderfully lively, and incidental characters are all very well taken. Mark Elder, an inspired conductor, draws warm, incisive playing from the orchestra, adding to the dramatic impact. A unique entertainment, well worth trying.

The Stubborn Lovers (complete)

 Sup. SU 3765-2. Janál, Březina, Sýkorová, Kloubová, Beláček, Prague Philharmonic Ch. & Philh., Bělohlávek

This sparkling one-Act comic opera with an amiably nonsensical plot is guaranteed to delight all lovers of Dvořák's music. In a sequence of 16 brief scenes it gives an amusing picture of village life, mainly in brisk ensembles. This splendid account of an opera otherwise unrecorded, very well sung and played, with Jiří Bělohlávek a most persuasive conductor, makes its mark tellingly, with one winning tune after another from the Overture onwards.

Rather like Alfonso in Così fan tutte, Rečicha is the manipulator, contributing to almost every number, a role strongly taken here by the bass, Gustáv Beláček, coping splendidly with solos rather like patter-songs. The mellifluous light tenor Jaroslav Březina is splendid as Toník, characterizing well and making his change of heart convincing, as Zdena Kloubová does as Lenka when, seeing Toník as the choice of her mother, she wonders why tears have come into her eyes. The respective parents, Vávra and Říhová, are well taken too, though they have less opportunity to establish positive characters. A welcome rarity.

Wanda (complete)

(*) Orfeo C149003F (3). Romanko, Tchistjakova, Straka, Daniluk, Kusnjer, Breedt, Prague Chamber Ch., WDR Ch. & SO Cologne, Albrecht

In five Acts, Wanda dates from 1876, the year after Dvořák composed his eternally fresh Fifth Symphony, and much of that freshness is carried over to the opera, with orchestration light and transparent. On disc it is well worth investigating, and Gerd Albrecht, using a revised and expanded edition of a score thought to be lost in the Second World War, conducts a strong, purposeful performance, with fine teamwork in the ensembles. The principal male soloists, Peter Straka as Slavoj and Ivan Kusnjer as Roderick, are both first rate, but the warm, idiomatic singing of the principal women, Olga Romanko in the title-role and Irina Tchistjakova as her sister, Božena, is marred by the unevenness of their very Slavonic voices. Excellent singing from the joint Czech and German choirs, and full, well-balanced radio recording.

DYSON, George (1883–1964)

(i) Concerto leggiero (for piano & strings); Concerto da camera; Concerto da chiesa (both for string orchestra); (ii) Violin Concerto; Children's Suite (after Walter de la Mare)

🔑 Ⓜ  Chan. 10337X (2). (i) Parkin; (ii) Mordkovich; City of L. Sinfonia, Hickox

It was an excellent idea to couple this pair of concertante discs at mid-price, the Violin Concerto richly inspired, the Piano Concerto lighter textured, the two string works in the great tradition of English string music. All are splendidly played and recorded – the second disc is discussed separately in more detail below.

Symphony in G; At the Tabard Inn: Overture; Concerto da chiesa for Strings

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.557720. Bournemouth SO, Lloyd-Jones

(i) Symphony in G; (ii) At the Tabard Inn: Overture; (ii; iii) In Honour of the City

Ⓜ (*) Chan. 10308X. (i) City of L. Sinfonia; (ii) LSO; (iii) L. Symphony Ch.; Hickox

First heard in 1937, Dyson's Symphony in G is the most ambitious of his orchestral works, using ideas from The Canterbury Pilgrims, with majestic scoring for the brass. Helped by clear, well-balanced recording, David Lloyd-Jones conducts a brilliant performance which clarifies often heavy textures. In the Concerto da chiesa for strings of 1949, each of the three movements develops a medieval hymn melody, with Veni Emmanuel inspiring a darkly dedicated slow first movement, among Dyson's finest inspirations. That melody returns, transformed, at the end of the finale which is based on the vigorous psalm-tune, Laetatus sum. With solo strings atmospherically set against the full string band, this is a neglected masterpiece. At the Tabard Inn was originally designed as an overture for his choral work, The Canterbury Pilgrims, and completes a first-rate disc, superbly played.

By its side, the more expensive Hickox version, although very well played, seems less convincing, especially the first movement, which tends to flag a little. The Chandos disc also includes two fill-ups, originally issued with The Canterbury Pilgrims, At the Tabard Inn and the choral In Honour of the City, both excellently performed; they are discussed below. But the Naxos CD is first choice for the symphony.

CHAMBER MUSIC

(i) Cello Sonata; (ii) 3 Lyrics for Violin & Piano; 3 Violin Pieces; Bach's Birthday; Epigrams for Piano; My Birthday; Prelude & Ballet for Piano; Primrose Mount; Twilight; 3 War Pieces

Ⓜ  Dutton CDLX 7137. Owen Norris, with (i) Spooner; (ii) Juritz

With Owen Norris an ideal interpreter, pointing rhythm and phrase seductively, the wit of the ten tiny Epigrams at the start has one appreciating Dyson's lightness of touch. Just as witty are the four pieces entitled Bach's Birthday, with counterpoint that strays into atonality, intended as a joke for his friend, the pianist and scholar Harold Samuel. Three War Pieces, unpublished until now, were written when Dyson was in service in the trenches in the First World War, while other groups of pieces like Twilight and My Birthday from the 1920s were designed for amateurs to play, as are the two sets of violin pieces.

3 Rhapsodies (for string quartet)

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55045. Divertimenti – HOWELLS: In Gloucestershire (String Quartet 3) ***

Although its spirit is lighter, more capricious, the first of Dyson's Rhapsodies follows on quite naturally after the gentle close of Howells's haunting portrayal of the Gloucestershire countryside. The second, a dark elegy, makes a haunting contrast, but the third is again essentially light-hearted in its lyrical grace. Surprisingly, the work was inspired by Dante and written after a Mediterranean holiday. Its changing moods are caught most sensitively by this excellent group, and the Hyperion recording is of high quality.

VOCAL MUSIC

Benedicite; Evening Service in D; Hail Universal Lord; Live forever, glorious Lord; Te Deum; Valour; (i) (Organ) Prelude; Postlude; Psalm-tune Prelude (I was Glad); Voluntary of Praise

🔑 (BB)  Regis RRC 1161. St Catherine's College, Cambridge, Ch., Owen Rees; (i) Rees (organ) – HOWELLS: Dyson's Delight

There are some well-made organ pieces here (plus an admiring contribution from Herbert Howells, based on two themes from Dyson's Canterbury Pilgims), but it is the vocal music that is the more memorable. It is all sung with striking freshness by choristers who seem to have its inflexions in their very being. Excellent recording in a spacious acoustic, though the words come over well. Even so, there is an excellent leaflet with this reissue (of an originally Unicorn disc), setting them out and giving much useful information about the composer and his music, a model of its kind.

3 Choral Hymns; (Organ) Fantasia & Ground Bass; Hierusalem; Psalm 150; 3 Songs of Praise

 Hyp. CDA 66150. Hill, St Michael's Singers, Trotter, RPO, Rennert

Where the organ piece unashamedly builds on an academic model, Hierusalem reveals the inner man more surprisingly, a richly sensuous setting of a medieval poem inspired by the thought of the Holy City, building to a jubilant climax. It is a splendid work and is backed here by the six hymns and the Psalm setting, all of them heart-warming products of the Anglican tradition. Performances are outstanding, with Jonathan Rennert drawing radiant singing and playing from his team, richly and atmospherically recorded.

(i–ii) The Canterbury Pilgrims. Overture At the Tabard Inn; (i) In Honour of the City

🔑  Chan. 9531 (2). (i) Kenny, Tear, Roberts; (ii) London Symphony Ch.; LSO, Hickox

Dyson's best-known work is preceded by the Overture based on its themes. Here the soloists all have major contributions to make, for Dyson's characterization of the individual pilgrims is strong; but the glory of the piece is the choruses, which are splendidly sung here. In Honour of the City, Dyson's setting of William Dunbar, appeared in 1928, nine years before Walton's version of the same text; Dyson, however, unlike Walton, uses a modern version of the text, as he does in The Canterbury Pilgrims, and to fine, direct effect. The splendid Chandos recording is fully worthy of the vibrant music-making here.

(i) Nebuchadnezzar; (ii) Confortare; O Praise God in His Holiness. 3 Songs of Praise; Woodland Suite

* Chan. 10439. BBC SO, Hickox, with (i) Padmore, N. Davies; (i; ii) BBC Symphony Ch.

It was bold of Sir George Dyson in 1934, when commissioned to write a choral work for the Three Choirs Festival, to choose a subject which immediately invited comparison with Walton's Belshazzar's Feast, first performed with great success three years earlier. Needless to say, it cannot compare with the Walton masterpiece in memorability, but it is a fine work nonetheless, very well written for the forces used and similarly relying on clean-cut chordal choral writing, as in the unaccompanied passage at the start, very similar to the first chorus of Belshazzar. The fine tenor Mark Padmore sings beautifully in the role of the Herald, comparable with the baritone soloist in Belshazzar, while the baritone Neal Davies sings strongly too as Nebuchadnezzar himself. Richard Hickox draws warmly committed playing and singing from the BBC Symphony Orchestra and Chorus. The shorter works which make up the rest of the disc are well worth hearing too, most of them designed for use in schools, reflecting Dyson's role as a schoolmaster and, later, an inspector of schools. A very agreeable collection, an excellent addition to the series of Dyson recordings that Chandos has sponsored, very well recorded.

Quo Vadis

 Chan. 10061 (2). Barker, Rigby, Langridge, Williams, Royal Welsh College of Music & Drama Chamber Ch., BBC Nat. Ch. & O of Wales, Hickox

In Quo Vadis, Dyson draws on the widest array of sources, rearranging texts from such poets as Campion, Vaughan, Herrick, Shelley, Newman and Bridges in an elaborate kaleidoscope of words, mixing different sources together in all but one of the nine substantial movements, even rearranging individual lines from Wordsworth's Intimations of Immortality. The warm but well-defined Chandos recording helps to heighten the impact of the incandescent singing of the Welsh Choristers, semi-chorus as well as full choir, inspired by the dedicated direction of Richard Hickox. Each of the four soloists – here a strong, firm and characterful quartet – in turn takes a leading role in the nicely balanced sequence of movements. They also sing as a quartet in the movements ending each half. Dyson's idiom may not be strikingly original but, with its lyrical warmth and fine control of texture, and with emotions often heightened by striking key-changes, the result will delight all devotees of the British choral tradition.

ELGAR, Edward (1857–1934)

(i–ii) Adieu; Beau Brummel: Minuet; (i; iii) 3 Bavarian Dances, Op. 27; Caractacus, Op. 35: Woodland Interlude. Chanson de matin; Chanson de nuit, Op. 15/1–2; Contrasts, Op. 10/3; Dream Children, Op. 43; (iv) Enigma Variations, Op. 36; (i; iii) Falstaff, Op. 68: 2 Interludes. (iv) Pomp and Circumstance Marches 1–5, Op. 39; (i; iii) Salut d'amour; Sérénade lyrique; (i; iii; v) Soliloquy for Oboe (orch. Gordon Jacob); (i–ii) Sospiri, Op. 70; The Spanish Lady: Burlesco. The Starlight Express: Waltz. Sursum corda, Op. 11

Ⓑ  Chan. 2-for-1 241-4 (2). (i) Bournemouth Sinf.; (ii) Hurst; (iii) Del Mar; (iv) RSNO, Gibson; (v) with Goossens

Sir Alexander Gibson's reading of Enigma has stood the test of time and remains very satisfying, warm and spontaneous in feeling, with a memorable climax in Nimrod. The 1978 recording, made in Glasgow's City Hall, remains outstanding. The Pomp and Circumstance Marches, too, have fine nobilmente and swagger. The rest of the programme is a collection of miniatures directed by either George Hurst or Norman Del Mar, both understanding Elgarians. Elgar wrote the Soliloquy for Leon Goossens, who plays it with his long-recognizable tone-colour and feeling for phrase. Most of the other pieces in Norman Del Mar's programme are well known, but they come up with new warmth and commitment here, and the 1976 recording, made in the Guildhall, Southampton, has an appealing ambient warmth and naturalness. George Hurst recorded his Elgar rarities a year earlier in Christchurch Priory, and again the recording has plenty of body, but there is more thinness in the sound of the violins in these items than with Del Mar.

Orchestral Miniatures: 3 Bavarian Dances; Carissima; Chanson de Matin; Chanson de Nuit; 3 Characteristic Pieces, Op. 10; Froissart Overture; May Song; Mazurka; Minuet, Op. 21; (i) Romance for Bassoon & Strings

ⒷⒷ  Naxos 8.557577. (i) Tilson; New Zealand SO, Judd

James Judd has always been a most understanding Elgarian, and here he conducts an attractive selection of shorter pieces as well as the early overture Froissart, all in understanding performances. The miniatures, at which Elgar was such a dab hand, are presented delightfully and with much affection, while Froissart is ripely passionate. First-rate sound.

'A Portrait of Elgar': 3 Bavarian Dances, Op. 27; Carissima; Chanson de matin; Chanson de nuit, Op. 15/1–2; Cockaigne Overture, Op. 40; Dream Children, Op. 43; Enigma Variations, Op. 36; Froissart Overture, Op. 19; Gavotte (Contrasts), Op. 10/3; Introduction & Allegro for Strings, Op. 47; May Song; Mazurka, Op. 10/1; Nursery Suite; Pomp and Circumstance Marches 1–5, Op. 39; Rosemary (That's for remembrance); Sérénade lyrique; Serenade for Strings, Op. 20; Salut d'amour, Op. 12; Spanish Lady (suite); The Wand of Youth Suite 2, Op. 1b

Ⓑ (*) Nim. NI 1769 (4). E. SO or E. String O, Boughton

This very inexpensive four-disc set is made up of four separate Elgar collections, and Disc 3 duplicates the Chanson de matin and Chanson de nuit, already included on Disc 2. However, the latter collection (including the Nursery Suite plus Dream Children and most of the miniatures) is particularly attractive, for William Boughton's performances are graceful and sympathetic and have plenty of character. The Enigma Variations have many pleasingly delicate touches of colour, with the brass and organ making a fine effect in the finale. There is an easy swagger about the Pomp and Circumstance Marches. The warmly reverberant acoustic of the Great Hall of Birmingham University gives the performances of these larger-scale works a spaciousness that is entirely apt. What is more questionable is the scale conveyed by the recording (in the same acoustic) for the other, lighter and more intimate pieces, the large scale implied tends to inflate the music, particularly in the Wand of Youth excerpts.

'The Lighter Elgar': (i) Beau Brummel: Minuet; (ii) Carissima; (i) Chanson de matin, Op. 15/2; (ii) 3 Characteristic Pieces, Op. 10: Mazurka; Sérénade mauresque; Contrasts: The Gavotte AD 1700 & 1900. (i) Dream Children, Op. 43; (ii) May Song; Mina; Minuet, Op. 21; Rosemary (That's for remembrance); (ii–iii) Romance for Bassoon & Orchestra, Op. 62; (i) Salut d'amour, Op. 12; (ii) Sevillana, Op. 7; Sérénade lyrique; (i; iv) The Starlight Express, Op. 78: Organ grinder's songs: My old tunes; To the children. (i) The Wand of Youth Suite 1: excerpt: Sun Dance

🔑 ❁ Ⓜ * EMI (ADD) 5 65593-2. (i) RPO, Collingwood; (ii) N. Sinfonia, Marriner; with (iii) Chapman; (iv) Harvey

This beautifully recorded CD combines almost all the contents of two LPs. In the first, Frederick Harvey joins the orchestra for two organ grinder's songs from the incidental music for The Starlight Express, and they have seldom been sung more winningly on record. It is these items one remembers most, but the second collection under Sir Neville Marriner is hardly less successful. All the music is pleasingly delightful in its tender moods and restrained scoring, favouring flute, bassoon and the clarinet in middle or lower register. Very much worth having is the rhapsodic Romance for Bassoon and Orchestra with Michael Chapman the elegant soloist. The Northern Sinfonia play with style and affection. Throughout, EMI have provided that warm, glowing sound that is their special province in recording Elgar's music.

Caractacus: March. Coronation March; Empire March; Grania and Diarmid: Funeral March. March of the Moghul Emperors. Polonia; Pomp and Circumstance Marches 1–5, Op. 39

ⒷⒷ  Naxos 8.557273. New Zealand SO, Judd

The five Pomp and Circumstance Marches in brisk, well-sprung readings are flanked by four rather longer pieces – three more extended marches plus, as a final item, Polonia, Elgar's

First World War tribute to Poland, with its sequence of Polish martial themes made to sound very British. The clarity and crisp ensemble of the Pomp and Circumstance pieces (as well as speeds on the brisk side) give them a winning freshness, with the brass particularly impressive. Grania and Diarmid, is here enhanced when it includes not just the march itself but the substantial introduction, usually labelled 'Incidental Music'. March of the Moghul Emperors, with its exotic percussion, is a welcome rarity too. The Triumphal March from Caractacus has the brassiest opening of any of the marches, and Judd makes it swagger infectiously. Warm, clear, well-balanced recording.

(i) Chanson de matin; Chanson de nuit; (ii) Characteristic Piece: Contrasts (Gavotte), Op. 10/3; (iii) Cockaigne Overture; (i; vii) Cello Concerto; (i; viii) Violin Concerto; (iv) Coronation March; (ii) Elegy for Strings; (v) Enigma Variations; (i) Falstaff; (ii) Froissart Overture; (v) Imperial March; (iii) In the South; (i) Introduction and Allegro for strings; (ii) Serenade for Strings; (i) The Sanguine Fan (Suite). Symphonies: (iii) 1 in A flat; (vi) 2 in E flat; (vi; ix) Sea Pictures

(B)  LPO (mono/stereo) (ADD/DDD) LPO 0016/20 (5). LPO, cond. (i) Boult; (ii) composer; (iii) Solti; (iv) Ronald; (v) Mackerras; (vi) Handley; (vii) with Tortelier; (viii) with Campoli; (ix) with J. Baker

This is a fascinating anthology, representing the LPO's coverage on record of Elgar's music over half a century, from recordings with the composer (1933) and Sir Landon Ronald (1935), through to Sir Charles Mackerras'sEnigma Variations* in 1985. The composer's own recordings have come up surprisingly well, particularly the Elegy for Strings, which is very moving. Most of these are key recordings and it is good to be reminded of Alfredo Campoli's memorable if not entirely idiomatic recording of the Violin Concerto. But the most valuable inclusion has not been published before: Dame Janet Baker's live concert performance of the Sea Songs in the Royal Festival Hall in 1984, two decades after her more famous recording with Barbirolli. The singing is as moving as ever, and it has the added intensity of live music-making with the ever-sympathetic Handley finding remarkable orchestral detail, so that at times one is reminded of Gerontius. The box comes with an excellent note by Andrew Neil, Chairman of the Elgar Society, and includes the text of the Sea Songs.

(i) Cockaigne; (i; ii) Cello Concerto; (i) Elegy; Enigma Variations; Falstaff; Froissart; Introduction & Allegro for Strings; Pomp & Circumstance Marches 1–5; Serenade for Strings; Sospiri; Symphonies 1–2; (iii) 3 Bavarian Dances; Caractacus: Triumphal March; Carillon; Chanson de matin; Chanson de nuit; Empire March; Grania and Diarmid (incidental music); Imperial March; In the South; Polonia; The Sanguine Fan; arr. Fantasia & Fugue in C min. (Bach); Overture in D min. (Handel). (iv; v) Violin Concerto; (iv) Nursery Suite; Severn Suite; Coronation March; Crown of India Suite; (vi) Organ Sonata (orch. Jacob); Wand of Youth (Suites 1–2); (vii) Beau Brummel; Carissima; 3 Characteristic Pieces; Minuet; Dream Children; May Song; Mina; Minuet; Romance for Bassoon & Orchestra (with Chapman); Rosemary; Salut d'amour; Sérénade lyrique; Sevillana. (viii) The Composer conducts: Chanson de matin; Chanson de nuit; Cockaigne Overture; Land of Hope & Glory (introduced by Elgar); Pomp & Circumstance Marches 1–5; Salut d'amour; Serenade for Strings; Dream of Gerontius: Prelude. Piano Improvisation 4 (composer, piano Chamber Music); (ix; x) Piano Quintet; (xi) String Quartet in E min.; (v; xii) Violin Sonata in E min. Piano Music: (ix) Concert Allegro; Serenade; (xiii) Organ Sonata in G Vocal Music (with soloists & ch.): (iii) The Apostles; The Kingdom (with illustrated introduction by Boult); (xiv) The Banner of St George; Great is the Lord; National Anthem. (iv) The Black Night; (iv) Caractacus; (xv) Coronation Ode; (i) Dream of Gerontius (with J. Baker); (xvi) From the Bavarian Highlands; (iv) The Light of Life; (iii) The Music Makers (with J. Baker); (vi) Scenes from the Saga of King Olaf; (i) Sea Pictures (with J. Baker). (xiv) The Spirit of England; Te Deum & Benedictus; (vi) The Starlight Express Choruses: (xvii) Angelus; Ave Maria; Ave maris stella; Ave verum corpus; Give unto the Lord; O Hearken Thou; Te Deum & Benedictus; (xviii) Deep in my soul; (xix) 5 Part Songs from the Greek Anthology; Reveille; The Wanderer; (xx) Fly Singing Bird; The Snow; Spanish Serenade; (xxi) My love dwelt in a northern land; The Shower; (xxii) arr. Jerusalem (Parry); (xxiii) Songs, Op. 48/1; Op. 59/1, 3; Op. 60/1–2

(BB)  EMI 5 03603-2 (30). Various Os & Chs., cond. (i) Barbirolli; (ii) with Du Pré; (iii) Boult; (iv) Groves; (v) with Hugh Bean; (vi) Handley; (vii) Mariner or Collingwood; (viii) composer. (ix) Ogdon; (x) Allegri Qt; (xi) Music Group of London; (xii) Parkhouse; (xiii) Sumsion; (xiv) cond. Hickox. (xv) Ledger; (xvi) Del Mar; (xvii) Worcester Cathedral Ch., Robinson; (xviii) King's Singers; (xix) Bacholian Singers; (xx; iv) Liverpool Philh. Ch.; Tear; (xxi) CBSO Ch., Halsey; (xxii) Goldsmith's Choral Union, Orwell Hughes; (xxiii; vi) Tear, CBSO

This extraordinary collection covers the remarkable anthology of EMI recordings of Elgar's music made during the analogue era in the 1960s and 1970s, with a few digital CDs stretching into the 1980s. They are grouped (and we have listed them) under the key Elgar conductors of the time, notably Barbirolli, Boult, Handley and Groves, but room has been found for a final disc of the composer's own electrical mono recordings, dating from between 1926 and 1933. Chamber and instrumental music has also been included, and some fascinating miscellaneous vocal items. The transfers are of the highest quality and show that EMI, above all other recording companies, captures the true Elgar sound with its special combination of opulent nobilmente and brilliance. Many of these recordings are four-star and all are indispensable. The documentation is limited to titles and performers, but altogether this set is a bargain of bargains.

(i) Cockaigne Overture; (ii; iii) Cello Concerto; (iv) Elegy; (i) Enigma Variations; (v) Falstaff; (iv) Froissart; (vi; vii) Introduction and Allegro for Strings; (i) Pomp & Circumstance Marches 1–5; (vi) Serenade for Strings; (iv) Sospiri. Symphonies: (i) 1 in A flat; (v) 2 in E flat; (ii; viii) Sea Pictures

🔑 (B)  EMI 3 67918-2 (5). Barbirolli, with (i) Philh. O; (ii) LSO; (iii) Du Pré; (iv) New Philh. O; (v) Hallé O; (vi) Sinfonia of L.; (vii) Allegri Qt; (viii) with J. Baker

As an Elgarian Sir John Barbirolli was unsurpassed (not even by Boult), and EMI's budget box gathers together his key recordings of the orchestral works: the justly famous pairing of the Cello Concerto and Sea Pictures (with Jacqueline du Pré and Dame Janet Baker respectively) and the two miniatures, the Elegy and Sospiri, so touching in Sir John's hands. The analogue Kingsway Hall recordings, made between 1962 and 1966, are of EMI's ripest and are splendidly transferred to CD. The versions of the symphonies are the 1962 Philharmonia account of No. 1 and the 1964 Hallé performance of No. 2, both very personal and wayward readings. At the moment, many of these recordings are not available separately, so this box is doubly valuable.

Cockaigne Overture, Op. 40; Enigma Variations, Op. 36; Introduction & Allegro for Strings; Serenade for Strings, Op. 20

🔑 ✿ (BB)  Warner Apex 0927 413712-2. BBC SO, A. Davis

Andrew Davis's collection of favourite Elgar works is electrifying. The very opening of Cockaigne has rarely been so light and sprightly, and it leads on to the most powerful characterization of each contrasted section. The two string works are richly and sensitively done. Similarly, the big tonal contrasts in Enigma are brought out dramatically, notably in Davis's rapt and spacious reading of Nimrod, helped by the spectacular Teldec recording. This is surely a worthy successor to Barbirolli in this repertoire and is an outstanding disc in every way. At its new Apex price it is one of the great Elgarian bargains.

(i) Cockaigne Overture (including an 'accidental stereo' excerpt); (ii) Enigma Variations; Pomp and Circumstance Marches 1–2; (iii) 3–5

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.111022. Composer, with (i) BBC SO; (ii) Royal Albert Hall O; (iii) LSO

The novelty on this CD is a highly controversial 'accidental stereo' excerpt of the Cockaigne Overture, much talked about in 78-r.p.m. circles. The apparent stereo seems to have been made possible because, as was normal in recordings of this time, two turntables would be running during the cutting of the wax recording master discs, usually fed from the same microphone. Sometimes, as appears to be the case here, two separate microphones were used and (to cut a long story short) were in effect left and right channels. When synchronized together, they give a crude but discernible stereo effect. The producer of this CD, Mark Obert-Thorn, who has written a fascinating note included in the booklet, has made a superb job of this process. It undoubtedly adds another dimension to Elgar's recorded legacy.

Cockaigne Overture; Enigma Variations; Serenade for Strings, Op. 20.

(M) (*) Telarc CD 80192. Baltimore SO, Zinman

David Zinman is a persuasive Elgarian, though his readings are affectionate rather than dramatically robust, and the cockney spirit of Cockaigne seems a little undercharacterized. However, the fine Baltimore string playing is idiomatically warm and expansive: the opening of Enigma has a gentle, touching lyricism, Nimrod is almost elegiac, while the great cello variation (B.G.N.) is gloriously rich. The Telarc recording is magnificent, with superbly resonant brass: the Guards ride by in Cockaigne grandiloquently, and the close of both the Overture and the Variations are sonically thrilling (bass drum and organ come through splendidly). The Serenade is beautifully played, the Larghetto touchingly nostalgic, and again the sound is first class.

Cockaigne Overture; Falstaff; Introduction and Allegro for Strings; Serenade for Strings

(B)  CfP (ADD/DDD) 575 3072. LPO, Handley

Vernon Handley directs a superb performance of Falstaff, and the achievement is all the more remarkable because his tempi are unusually spacious (generally following the composer's markings). The playing of the LPO is warmly expressive and strongly rhythmic. Cockaigne is also given a performance that is expansive yet never hangs fire. The Introduction and Allegro and Serenade are digital and date from 1983. They were made in Watford Town Hall, but the balance is closer, the string outline more brightly lit. The Introduction and Allegro is passionate, yet with lyrical contrasts tenderly made; the Serenade brings a somewhat indulgent treatment of the Larghetto, and here comparison with Boult is not in Handley's favour. Nevertheless this reissue is a real bargain.

(i) Cockaigne Overture; (ii) Froissart Overture, Op. 19; Pomp and Circumstance Marches, Op. 39: (i) 1 in D; (ii) 2 in A min.; 3 in C min.; (i) 4 in G; (ii) 5 in C

🔑 (M)  EMI (ADD) 5 66323-2. (i) Philh. O; (ii) New Philh. O; Barbirolli

It is good to have Cockaigne, Barbirolli's ripe yet wonderfully vital portrait of Edwardian London, back in the catalogue – one of the finest of all his Elgar records. Froissart is very compelling too (though the CD transfer is slightly less flattering here), and Barbirolli makes a fine suite of the five Pomp and Circumstance Marches. The lesser-known Nos. 2 and 5 are particularly gripping, with plenty of contrast in No. 4 to offset the swagger elsewhere. Here the sound is as expansive as you could wish.

Cello Concerto in E min., Op. 85 (original version)

 Nim. NI 5763. Wallfisch, RLPO, Dickins – BRIDGE: Oration; HOLST: Invocation ***

The edition used here is marked as carrying Elgar's final instructions in every detail. Only a single note has had to be corrected (and that all but inaudible), but there are many differences in detail (dynamics, articulation, note lengths). There is also evidence available as to the composer's wishes concerning phrasing in the two recordings he conducted himself with Beatrice Harrison as soloist; and in two cases there are striking tempi changes (based on Elgar's own practice): in the appassionato section of the slow movement and at the end of the main quick section of the finale. But none of this would be effective were the soloist and conductor here not passionately involved in the music as they feel it. After the commanding opening flourish, Wallfisch and Dickins set off very gently indeed, and the cello and the orchestral strings sing their song with touching restraint. The finale unleashes the music's energy joyously, with more brilliant solo playing; but the return to the intensity of the slow movement has a heartfelt, elegiac feeling, before the abrupt surge to the coda. The recording is spacious, richly realistic and ideally balanced and, with its enterprising couplings, this CD is very desirable indeed.

Cello Concerto in E min., Op. 85

🔑 ❀ Ⓜ * EMI (ADD) 5 62886-2. Du Pré, LSO, Barbirolli (with Cockaigne Overture) – Sea Pictures *** ❀

 EMI (ADD) 5 55527-2. Du Pré, LSO, Barbirolli – DVOŘÁK: Cello Concerto **(*)

Ⓜ  Sony 0746443954129. Ma, LSO, Previn – WALTON: Cello Concerto ***

* Testament SBT 1388. Du Pré BBC SO, Barbirolli – BACH: Cello Suites 1–2 ****

 Virgin 5 45356-2. Mørk, CBSO, Rattle – BRITTEN: Cello Symphony ***

(i) Cello Concerto; (ii) Enigma Variations

 Australian Decca 450 021-2. (i) Harrell, Cleveland O, Maazel; (ii) LAPO, Mehta

(i) Cello Concerto. Falstaff; (ii) Romance for Bassoon; (iii) Smoking Cantata

Ⓜ  Hallé CD HLL 7505. (i) Schiff; (ii) Salvage; (iii) Shore; Hallé O, Elder

Jacqueline du Pré was essentially a spontaneous artist. Her style is freely rhapsodic, but the result produced a very special kind of meditative feeling; in the very beautiful slow movement, brief and concentrated, her inner intensity conveys a depth of espressivo rarely achieved by any cellist on record. Brilliant virtuoso playing too in the Scherzo and finale. CD brings a subtle extra definition to heighten the excellent qualities of the 1965 recording, with the solo instrument firmly placed. Alongside the original pairing with Janet Baker's Sea Pictures comes Barbirolli's superb account of Cockaigne, and the disc is now offered at mid-price.

EMI have now given an alternative coupling with the Dvořák Concerto, and this much-loved recording is given extra warmth and clarity in the new transfer. However, we retain our allegiance to the original pairing, which has been revamped as one of EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century'.

Recorded in Prague in good stereo, this live recording of the Elgar Cello Concerto on Testament is just as fine as Du Pré's classic studio version, perhaps even finer, although the EMI recording and coupling with the Sea Pictures still makes for a first choice. In the earlier account the speeds are very similar with characteristically expansive treatment of the slow movement and Epilogue finale, with the cello-tone down to the subtlest pianissimo. The current pairing with her début recording of two Bach Cello Suites makes this Testament issue even more valuable.

In its rapt concentration Yo-Yo Ma's recording with Previn is second only to du Pré. The first movement is lighter, a shade more urgent than the du Pré/Barbirolli version, and in the Scherzo he finds more fun, just as he finds extra sparkle in the main theme of the finale. The key movement with Ma, as with du Pré, is the Adagio, echoed later in the raptness of the slow epilogue, poised in its intensity. Warm, fully detailed recording, finely balanced, with understanding conducting from Previn. At mid-price a splendid bargain.

It is quite a coup for Mark Elder to have so masterly a cellist as Heinrich Schiff in the Cello Concerto, with the first movement played with patrician nobility, very Elgarian, yet without inflation. Falstaff brings a thrustful account that carries one magnetically over the many contrasted sections, giving the illusion of a live performance; and the Romance for Bassoon makes an attractive supplement, with Graham Salvage, the orchestra's principal bassoon, as soloist, bringing out the glowing lyricism. As a tiny extra squib comes the first ever performance and recording of one of Elgar's 'japes', a protest for baritone and orchestra against a ban on smoking in the hall, imposed in his home by the composer's host and close friend, Edward Speyer.

Truls Mørk has the requisite blend of fervour and dignity, yet there is a freshness and directness here which is affecting. Rattle and the Birmingham Orchestra give excellent support, and the recording has excellent internal balance and naturalness of perspective.

Lynn Harrell's deeply felt reading balances a gentle nostalgia with extrovert brilliance. The slow movement is tenderly spacious, the Scherzo bursts with exuberance and, after a passionate opening, the finale is memorable for the poignantly expressive reprise of the melody from the slow movement. In the Enigma Variations, Mehta proves a strong and sensitive Elgarian, and this is a highly enjoyable performance which has long been admired. The vintage Decca recording, with the organ entering spectacularly in the finale, is outstanding in its CD transfer.

Other versions by Rostropovich (BBC Legends Mono 6198-2), Anne Gastinel (Naïve V 4961), the Finnish cellist, Arto Noras (Warner Apex 0927 40600-2) and his Sweish colleague, Torleif Thedéen (BIS 480) all have their merits but, are not among the primary recommendations.

(i) Cello Concerto; (ii) Violin Concerto

Ⓑ () Avid mono AMSC 587. (i) Casals, BBC SO, Boult; (ii) Sammons, New Queen's Hall O, Wood

In some ways Albert Sammons's 1929 recording of the Violin Concerto has never been surpassed. The first Avid CD transfer of these recordings was singularly unsuccessful. But the second, current version is infinitely superior. The sound in both works is now excellent, the Cello Concerto full and with the soloist firmly focused, the Violin Concerto even more remarkable in its warmth and natural clarity, with the solo violin caught vividly and cleanly. Sammons's high level of concentration and the atmospheric magnetism generated in the unsurpassed account of the finale come over very directly to complete a remarkably compelling listening experience.

(i; ii) Cello Concerto; (iii) Dream Children: 2 Pieces for small orchestra, Op. 43; (i) Enigma Variations; Froissart Overture; (iii) Wand of Youth Suites 1 & 2; (iii; iv) Starlight Express: highlights

Ⓜ (*) Australian Decca Eloquence 442 8280 (2). Mackerras, with (i) RPO; (ii) Cohen; (iii) Welsh Nat. Op. O; (iv) Hagley, Terfel

This two-CD set includes Robert Cohen's later (1992) recording of the Cello Concerto, in which he imbued it with extra weight and gravity, masterfully sustaining slower speeds in the first and third movements, though the latter is marginally marred by some excessive coloration on the flat side. The finale, faster than before and more volatile, crowns the whole performance. The bright, up-front recording brings out the brash rather than the mellow qualities in the Froissart Overture. Enigma is rather sluggish at the start and in Nimrod, but erupts in a superb, impulsive finale, bold and brassy. The Wand of Youth Suites are superbly done, with Mackerras bringing out all the nostalgic charm of the gentler numbers and ending in a riotous version of The Wild Bears, brilliantly recorded. Brilliant can also describe the vivacious items from The Starlight Express which also offer exceptionally rich and vivid Decca sound (with a wonderfully resonant bass drum), and a pair of excellently characterful soloists. The haunting Dream Children pieces make a fine bonus.

(i; ii) Cello Concerto; (iii) Enigma Variations; (ii) Pomp and Circumstance Marches 1 & 4

🔑 Ⓜ (*) Sony 82876 78737-2, (i) Du Pré; (ii) Phd. O; (iii) LPO; cond. Barenboim

Jacqueline du Pré's second recording of the Elgar Cello Concerto was taken from live performances in Philadelphia in November 1970, and this is a superb picture of an artist in full flight, setting her sights on the moment in the Epilogue when the slow-movement theme returns, the work's innermost sanctuary of repose. Barenboim's most distinctive point in Enigma is in giving the delicate variations sparkle and emotional point, while the big variations have full weight, and the finale brings extra fierceness at a fast tempo. The Pomp and Circumstance Marches are comparably lively and colourful, but the new Sony transfer still lacks something in body and amplitude.

(i) Cello Concerto; (ii) Falstaff; Nursery Suite

Ⓑ () Dutton mono CDBP 9776. Composer with (i) Harrison, New SO; (ii) LSO

Dutton's revised transfers of these three works are especially valuable, particularly the 1928 recording of the Cello Concerto with Beatrice Harrison as soloist, which now has a satisfying weight and body, though Harrison's wiry tone is not to everyone's taste, and the intonation is occasionally suspect. The recording of Falstaff, made at the opening of the EMI Abbey Road Studios in 1931, has always been impressive in transfers, and the equally historic 1931 recording of the Nursery Suite, made in the presence of the dedicatees, the Duke and Duchess of York, as well as Princesses Elizabeth and Margaret Rose, comes out very brightly and clearly.

(i) Cello Concerto; (ii) Symphony 2 in E flat, Op. 63

🔑 (BB) () Naxos mono 8.111260. (i) Harrison, LSO; (ii) New SO; cond. composer

Mark Obert-Thorn's new transfers of Elgar's own recordings, made in 1930 in London's Queen's Hall and in 1928 in Kingsway Hall, also bring the music-making to life with astonishing realism. Especially in the symphony, one soon sits back and listens to Elgar's own electrifying performance. The composer's sense of line, his ability to mould rhythms, with speeds often faster than usual today, regularly brings an extra emotional thrust and the most poignant intensity in pianissimos. This applies also to the Cello Concerto, with Beatrice Harrison's simple eloquence and delicacy of feeling matched by the composer, although here the recording balance is more confined. As an unusual bonus we are offered the first (unused) take of the Scherzo of the symphony.

(i) Piano Concerto (realized Walker). Adieu (orch. Geehl); Suite of Four Songs (transcribed for orchestra, Haydn Wood); (ii) Choral Music: The Immortal Legions; So Many True Princesses (orch. Payne); Spanish Serenade

Ⓜ  Dutton CDLX 7148. (i) Owen Norris; (ii) BBC Singers; BBC Concert O, Lloyd-Jones – COLLINS: Elegy in Memory of Elgar ***

Like the Symphony No. 3, the Elgar Piano Concerto, 40 minutes long, has been realized from the composer's sketches, written between 1913 and his death. Robert Walker has ingeniously put together a host of fragments, but the result fails to hang together in the way the Symphony No. 3 does in Anthony Payne's realization. Nevertheless, Walker has done an excellent job so that, with Owen Norris displaying formidable concentration and virtuosity and David Lloyd-Jones drawing warmly idiomatic playing from the BBC Concert Orchestra, the result is always enjoyable.

The other items make a charming supplement, not just the Suite compiled by Haydn Wood and Adieu, a late piano piece orchestrated by Henry Geehl, but the three choral items. The Anthony Collins piece, based on a motif in the sketches for the Third Symphony, is another enjoyable rarity for Elgarians. First-rate sound.

Violin Concerto (original version)

 Avie AV 2091. Graffin, RLPO, Handley – CHAUSSON: Poème (original version) ***

It is thanks to the enterprise of the violinist Philippe Graffin that we now also have this première recording of the Elgar Violin Concerto in its original form. There is some evidence that Elgar himself had reservations about some of Kreisler's suggested changes, even though he went along with them. That said, Graffin's performance with the ever-understanding backing of Vernon Handley and the Royal Liverpool Philharmonic is a most distinguished one, magically exploiting the range of pianissimo that the score asks for, not least in the accompanied cadenza, which is yearningly beautiful in this performance. The sound is first rate, and the disc comes with comprehensive notes, not just those of Graffin but also a reproduction of the script of a 1937 broadcast by W. H. Reed, Elgar's violinist friend, about the creation of the Concerto.

Violin Concerto in B min., Op. 61 (DVD version)

Ⓝ  Medici Arts DVD 3085228. Perlman, BBC SO, Rozhdestvensky – SAINT-SAËNS: Introduction & Rondo capriccioso ; PROKOFIEV: Violin Concerto 1 ***

Perlman's magisterial reading of the Elgar Concerto was recorded at the Royal Albert Hall during the 1981 Proms, the period when Gennady Rozhdestvensky was the BBC Symphony Orchestra's chief conductor. With a Russian conductor and an American soloist, the performance remains quintessentially English. A triumph all round. Discreet and intelligent camerawork from Peter Butler.

Violin Concerto in B min., Op. 61 (CD versions)

Ⓜ  EMI 5 03417-2. Kennedy, CBSO, Rattle – VAUGHAN WILLIAMS: The Lark Ascending ***

Ⓝ  Canary Classics CC06. Shaham, Chicago SO, Zinman

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.110902. Menuhin, LSO, composer – BRUCH: Concerto 1 ()

(BB) ((*)) Naxos mono 8.110951. Sammons, Liverpool PO, Sargent – DELIUS: Violin Concerto ((*))

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.110939. Heifetz, LSO, Sargent – WALTON: Violin Concerto ()

() Beulah mono 1PD 10. Campoli, LPO, Boult – MENDELSSOHN: Violin Concerto ()

(i) Violin Concerto; (ii) Cockaigne Overture; Froissart Overture; Imperial March

🔑 Ⓑ  EMI (ADD) 3 82156-2 (i) Y. Menuhin, New Philh. O; (ii) LPO, Boult

(i) Violin Concerto; Introduction and Allegro for Strings

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI 3 45792-2. (i) Kennedy; LPO, Handley

With this impressive remake of the Elgar Violin Concerto, Kennedy launched masterfully into his new career, refreshed after years of self-imposed exile from the regular concert platform. He made this new recording in Birmingham immediately after giving his first live concerto performance in years, and the reading has extra thrust and passion compared with his earlier recording of this epic work. The outer movements are faster and more freely expressive than before, the slow movement more expansive, with pianissimos of magical intensity, qualities equally impressive in the evocative Vaughan Williams piece.

But for many ears, Nigel Kennedy's earlier (1984) recording of the Violin Concerto has an even greater freshness than his later recording in Birmingham with Rattle. It is certainly commanding, and with Vernon Handley as guide it is centrally Elgarian in its warm expressiveness. This is particularly striking in the first movement and, both here and in his urgent account of the allegros in the finale, Kennedy shows that he has learnt more than any recorded rival from the example of the concerto's first great interpreter, Albert Sammons. Yet the influence of Yehudi Menuhin is also apparent, not least in the sweetness and repose of the slow movement and in the deep meditation of the accompanied cadenza which comes as epilogue. The recording is outstandingly faithful and atmospheric, coupled with Handley's passionate yet tender 1983 account of the Introduction and Allegro.

It is good to welcome an all-American performance of this most British of concertos that is so thrillingly passionate. David Zinman draws from the Chicago Symphony playing notable for its richness as well as its characteristic polish and detail. The playing of the orchestra finds a perfect counterpart in Gil Shaham's performance. His range of tone and of dynamic is extreme – some might feel too much so, when some of his pianissimos, as in the second subject of the first movement, are so gentle that they can barely be heard against the orchestra. But there is nothing self-indulgent or sentimental in his playing. Equally, Shaham's pronounced vibrato is always perfectly controlled. The slow movement brings refinement and purity, while the main allegro in the finale is fast and light, leading to a deeply dedicated account of the long accompanied cadenza. The recording on the Canary Classics label (personal to the soloist, Gil Shaham) is taken from live performances, and that adds to the impact, with the opulent sound matching the playing.

Mark Obert-Thorn's transfer of the classic first Menuhin recording with the composer is taken from what he describes as pre-war RCA Victor 'Z' shellac pressings, and the result is surprisingly successful, the soloist truthfully caught with a minimum of background noise, and the orchestral strings given plenty of body. The coupled Max Bruch, recorded the previous year, is less successful.

Menuhin's second recording (in stereo) in partnership with Sir Adrian Boult is hardly less moving and inspirational than his first. Boult directs the performance with a passionate thrust in the outer movements and with the warmest Elgarian understanding in the beautiful slow movement. The 1966 Kingsway Hall recording is characteristically warm and atmospheric, yet vividly focused by the CD transfer. Boult's personal insight into the problems of Elgar interpretation is well illustrated in the pair of overtures offered as coupling, and the early-1970s sound is well up to EMI's high analogue standard.

It is difficult to imagine the concerto being better played than it is in this inspired 1928 recording by Albert Sammons, who had recorded it in abridged form in the days of acoustic recording. Even the classic Menuhin–Elgar version, made four years later, wonderful though it is, is in some ways outclassed and collectors may now turn with confidence to the Naxos transfers.

Jascha Heifetz's unique reading of the Elgar is well transferred on Naxos in mellower sound than on previous RCA transfers. The ease of his virtuosity leads to dazzling bravura at speeds faster than usual, bringing a rare volatile quality in music that can easily seem a struggle. Yet that ease goes with a passionate warmth in Elgar's great lyrical moments. Heifetz treats the slow movement as a lyrical interlude, before the brilliant display of the finale leads to a deeply reflective account of the unaccompanied cadenza. Good (1949) mono sound.

Campoli gives a deeply felt but highly individual account of Elgar's great concerto. One can judge one's reaction to this performance by the control of vibrato on the opening phrase of his first entry. This is an essentially romantic approach, full of warmth; but Campoli applies himself here with dedication to a work he obviously loves, and the result – with Boult securely and compellingly at the helm – is most rewarding.

Other versions by Dong-Suk Kang on Naxos and Perlman on DG are less distinctive.

(i) Violin Concerto in B min., Op. 61; (ii) Enigma Variations, Op. 36

Ⓜ () EMI mono 5 66979-2. (i) Menuhin, LSO; (ii) Royal Albert Hall O; composer

The 1932 Menuhin/Elgar recording of the Violin Concerto emerges on this newly remastered EMI CD with a fine sense of presence and plenty of body to the sound. As for the performance, its classic status is amply confirmed. Elgar's own 1926 recording of Enigma is too well known for much further comment. The engineers have done wonders with the current remastering, and this coupling is surely worthy to take its place among EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century'.

(i) Violin Concerto; Serenade for Strings

* Onyx 4025. Ehnes, Philh. O, A. Davis

James Ehnes is the soloist in this exceptionally subtle and understanding account of the Elgar Violin Concerto. His half-tones are ravishing, and though he uses a wide vibrato the result is anything but sentimental. The second subject in the first movement is deeply expressive but not rhythmically distorted, and the whole performance benefits from Ehnes's flawless intonation. The final epilogue of the unaccompanied cadenza is deeply meditative, crowning a performance that stands out among recent recordings. Andrew Davis's lilting account of the Serenade for Strings makes an excellent fill-up.

(i; ii) Violin Concerto in B min.; (iii; iv) Piano Quintet in A min.; (v) String Quartet in E min.; (i; vi) Violin Sonata in E min; (iii) (Piano): Concert Allegro; Serenade

Ⓑ (*) CfP 585 9082 (2). (i) Bean; (ii) RLPO, Groves; (iii) Ogdon; (iv) Allegri Qt; (v) Music Group of L.; (vi) Parkhouse

Hugh Bean recorded the Violin Concerto in 1972 in the wake of Menuhin's re-recording and, if his performance does not quite match that, it is still a very fine one and – as the splendid opening tutti immedediately shows – it is strongly and authoritatively conducted by Sir Charles Groves; it has a warmth and simplicity that are disarming, with the first movement's second subject beautifully played, and the serene beauty of the slow movement well caught, followed by a successful finale with some very fine moments, especially in the closing pages. Not quite a first choice then, but well worth having when the rest of this collection is so desirable, including the Piano Quintet, the most ambitious of Elgar's three major chamber works. John Ogdon and the Allegri Quartet gives considerable satisfaction. The String Quartet is well done too. The Violin Sonata has both an autumnal quality and a Brahmsian flavour, and it responds to ripe treatment such as Hugh Bean and David Parkhouse provide. The Concert Allegro for piano is a valuable oddity, rescued by John Ogdon (the music was long thought to be lost) and splendidly played, while the Serenade brings some charming ideas, even if it reveals Elgar's obvious limitations when writing for the keyboard.

Dream Children, Op. 43; Nursery Suite; Wand of Youth Suites 1 & 2, Op. 1a and 1b

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.557166. New Zealand SO, Judd

Ⓜ  Chan. (ADD) 10422 X. (i) Bournemouth Sinf., Del Mar; (ii) Ulster O, Thomson

It makes an ideal coupling on Naxos to have the two Wand of Youth Suites, using themes Elgar had written in boyhood for a family play, alongside his other two works inspired by childhood, Dream Children of 1902 and the Nursery Suite of 1930. The freshness of inspiration is a delight, superbly brought out in these fine performances from New Zealand, recorded in Wellington in full, well-balanced sound, with James Judd always an idiomatic Elgarian. The Wand of Youth Suites in particular range wonderfully wide in mood and invention, culminating in the most brilliant movement of all, The Wild Bears, an orchestral showpiece here given a spectacular performance.

The Ulster Orchestra plays most beautifully and the ambience of the recording is well suited to the music's moments of gentle nostalgia. In the Wand of Youth the playing in Ulster is attractively spirited, and in the gentle pieces, the music-making engagingly combines refinement and warmth. The Nursery Suite is strikingly well characterized. Del Mar's account of the Dream Children dates from 1976 and the recording is analogue but still sounds well. But the more modern Naxos disc is even more tempting.

Enigma Variations: 'A Hidden Portrait' (with complete performance; DVD version)

 BBC Opus Arte DVD OA 0917D. nar. A. Davis; BBC SO, A. Davis (V/D: Diana Hill)

Sir Andrew Davis's fine performance of the Enigma Variations, with Nimrod hushed, slow and steady, was recorded in the atmospheric surroundings of Worcester Cathedral, where Elgar said everyone should hear his music. Davis introduces a highly enjoyable documentary about the work and 'the friends pictured within'. He sets the work clearly against the composer's career, 'the masterpiece that catapulted him to fame in 1899', and each section is illustrated with archive material and in-period reconstructions, happily with no dialogue, only Davis's narration. Though the visual illustrations are fussy and irrelevant at times, the actual performance has no unwanted intrusions, just a sepia photo of the subject as each variation begins.

Enigma Variations (Variations on an Original Theme), Op. 36

Ⓑ  EMI (ADD) 3 82157-2. LSO, Previn – BUTTERWORTH: Banks of Green Willow; VAUGHAN WILLIAMS: Fantasias: on a Theme of Tallis; Greensleeves; The Wasps Overture ***

() BBC Legends mono BBCL 4172-2. LSO, Monteux – RAVEL: Le tombeau de Couperin; CHABRIER: Fête Polonaise; WEBER: Jubel Overture; PIJPER: Symphony 3 ***

(*) Cala (ADD) CACD 0524. Czech PO, Stokowski – BRAHMS: Symphony 1 in C min., Op. 68 **(*)

Ⓜ  EMI 5 67748-2. LSO, Boult – HOLST: Planets ***

André Previn uniquely but imaginatively couples Elgar's most popular orchestral work with the three most popular pieces of Vaughan Williams, and for this reissue EMI have appealingly thrown in the Butterworth idyll for good measure. The Enigma is not entirely idiomatic, but it is refreshingly spontaneous. In some ways it is a similar reading to Monteux's with the same orchestra, strong and consistent, noble rather than passionate. The recording is impressively ample.

Pierre Monteux in his late eighties as principal conductor of the LSO made a classic recording of the Enigma Variations for RCA, but this recording, made in mono in 1962, is if anything even more intense, offering a noble, steadily paced account of Nimrod and erupting brilliantly in the final variation, representing Elgar himself. The coupling with the Third Symphony of Willem Pijper a welcome rarity.

Stokowski adroitly guides the players of the Czech Philharmonic through Elgar's masterpiece, illuminating every bar with his special affection, and the result is gloriously rich in spontaneous feeling, casting an entirely new slant on a work that one felt one knew very well indeed. Stokowski's insights are special to himself. The coupling is a splendid version of Brahms's First Symphony, recorded live with the LSO at the Royal Festival Hall in 1972.

Boult's Enigma comes from the beginning of the 1970s, but the recording has lost some of its amplitude in its transfer to CD: the effect is fresh, but the violins sound thinner. The reading shows this conductor's long experience of the work, with each variation growing naturally and seamlessly out of the music that has gone before. Yet the livelier variations bring exciting orchestral bravura and there is an underlying intensity of feeling that carries the performance forward.

With the BBC engineers capturing the atmospheric thrill of a Prom performance in the Royal Albert Hall, Sir Malcolm Sargent's 1966 account may be a degree less polished, but its thrust and urgency are irresistible, building up superbly to the final variations, in which the BBC brass and the obbligato organ convey an extra frisson, even if the sound is pretty opaque and there are too many extraneous noises.

Enigma Variations; Coronation March, Op. 65; In the South (Alassio), Op. 50

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553564. Bournemouth SO, Hurst

George Hurst with the Bournemouth Orchestra inspires richly expressive playing, full of subtle rubato which consistently sounds natural and idiomatic, never self-conscious. Like Elgar himself, he tends to press ahead rather than linger, as in the great climactic variation in Enigma, Nimrod, as well as in the finale and in the overture, In the South. The Coronation March also inspires an opulent, red-blooded performance, and the recording throughout is rich and sumptuous.

Enigma Variations; Elegy for Strings (2 versions); Introduction & Allegro for Strings (2 versions); Symphony 1 in A flat, Op. 55

Ⓑ () Dutton Double mono/stereo CDSJB 1017 (2). Hallé O, Barbirolli

Barbirolli recorded both the Enigma Variations and the beautiful Elegy (for which he had a special affection) three times, and the Introduction and Allegro six times! Here we are offered the third (1947 – mono) and fifth (1956 – stereo) versions of the latter. In the earlier, mono account the recapitulation of the big striding theme in the middle strings already has superb thrust and warmth. The Enigma recording is the first (in mono), also from 1947, and it sounds very well in the present transfer, though the later and very exciting Pye stereo version, and the 1962 HMV version (see below) are finer on both performance and sonic grounds. Which is not to say that this strikingly fresh, earlier version is not worth having. But what makes the present collection special is the inclusion of the first (1956), originally Pye, stereo account of the First Symphony. The Hallé plays at a good sparkling allegro, and the remaining movements have comparable intensity, and in this new Dutton transfer the sound, though not as ripe as the later, EMI version, is much more than acceptable.

Enigma Variations; Falstaff, Op. 68

Ⓝ  Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 301. New Philh. O, A. Davis

Andrew Davis's performances are freshly thought, intelligent readings which lack the last ounce of magic to make them truly memorable. However, with excellent sound and top-notch playing, they are far from unenjoyable; and the mid-1970s sound is excellent.

Enigma Variations; Falstaff; Grania and Diarmid: Incidental Music & Funeral March

 EMI 5 55001-2. CBSO, Rattle

In Enigma, Rattle and the CBSO are both powerful and refined, overwhelming at the close, and they offer a generous and ideal coupling. Falstaff is given new transparency in a spacious reading, deeply moving in the hush of the final death scene, with the Grania and Diarmid excerpts as a valuable makeweight. However this CD is still at full price.

Enigma Variations; In the South; Introduction and Allegro for Strings

Ⓑ (*) CfP (mono/stereo) 3 52394-2. LPO, Boult

Anyone who thinks Boult could not let himself go in surging, passionate music should hear this thrilling mono version (from 1956) of In the South. As sound it is pretty good too, as the recording was made in the Kingsway Hall. The stereo recording of Enigma (where, from the opening bars, Boult shows how naturally he can inflect and shape an Elgarian melodic line) and the athletic and thrillingly strong version of the Introduction and Allegro could not be more enjoyable.

Enigma Variations; Introduction and Allegro for Strings

Ⓜ  LPO LPO 0002. LPO, Haitink – BRITTEN: Our Hunting Fathers ***

Bernard Haitink's live recordings of the Enigma Variations and the Introduction and Allegro, dating respectively from 1986 at the Royal Albert Hall and 1984 at the Royal Festival Hall, make an excellent coupling for his outstanding Prom performance of the rare Britten cantata. Characteristically, his speeds are on the broad side but never involve a loss of tension, with nobility the keynote, not least in the radiant account of Nimrod. Well recorded, the LPO strings, with David Nolan as leader, are in first-rate form.

(i) Enigma Variations; Pomp and Circumstance Marches 1 & 4; Salut d'amour, Op. 12; (ii) Serenade for Strings in E min., Op. 20

(BB)  Naxos 8.554161. (i) Czecho-Slovak RSO; (ii) Capella Istropolitana; Leaper

Though Leaper's slow account of the 'Enigma' theme makes an unpromising start, his reading of the Variations is most beautiful, with ripely resonant string-playing and with warmly expressive rubato in Nimrod suggesting that the Slovak players had been won over to Elgar by Leaper's advocacy. Most refined of all is the Capella Istropolitana's account of the Serenade, with the slow movement specially beautiful, finely shaded. An excellent compilation of Elgar's most popular orchestral pieces, brilliantly recorded.

Falstaff, Op. 68; Elegy, Op. 58; The Sanguine Fan (ballet), Op. 81

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553879. N. Philh., Lloyd-Jones

Rich, full Naxos sound with high dynamic contrasts adds satisfying weight to David Lloyd-Jones's taut and dramatic account of Elgar's elaborate Shakespearean portrait. Speeds are often on the fast side, but idiomatically so, with a natural feeling for Elgarian rubato and sprung rhythms. Both in Falstaff and in The Sanguine Fan, Lloyd-Jones draws fragmented structures warmly and persuasively together so that the late ballet-score emerges strongly, not just a trivial, occasional piece. The beautiful Elegy is most tenderly done, modest in length but no miniature. An outstanding bargain, competing with all premium-price rivals.

Falstaff; Froissart; (i) Romance for Bassoon & Strings; Grania and Diarmid: Incidental Music

🔑 (BB)  Warner Apex 2564 62200-2. (i) Sheen; BBC SO, A. Davis

After the superb collection comprising Cockaigne, the Enigma Variations and the two key string works, this is Sir Andrew Davis's finest Elgar disc. Falstaff is a richly detailed, deeply affectionate performance, poignant too, and has much of the warmth of the Barbirolli version, yet it has a superbly expansive, modern, digital recording. Froissart too, without being pressed too hard, has a real Elgarian sweep and nobilmente. The bassoonist Graham Sheen is a most sensitive soloist in the Romance, and the Grania and Diarmid incidental music is delightfully presented, with much fine wind and string playing.

Falstaff, Op. 68; Symphony 1

Ⓝ (BB) () Naxos 8.111256. LSO, composer

Elgar recorded the First Symphony in 1930 (in Kingsway Hall) and Falstaff between November 1931 and February 1932. Those who invested in the Dutton transfers on EMI (now withdrawn) will not need this newcomer, good though it is, but anyone seeking this particular coupling will not be disappointed by Mark Obert-Thorn's excellent Naxos disc.

(i–ii) Introduction & Allegro for Strings; (i) Serenade for Strings; (iii) Elegy, Op. 58; Sospiri, Op. 70

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * EMI 5 67240-2. (i) Sinfonia of L.; (ii) Allegri Qt; (iii) New Philh. O; Barbirolli – VAUGHAN WILLIAMS: Greensleeves & Tallis Fantasias **** ✿

Barbirolli's famous record of English string music (the Elegy and Sospiri were added later) might be considered the finest of all his records, and it remained in the catalogue at full price for over three and a half decades. Now not only does it cost less, it rightly takes its place as one of EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century', with the current remastering of an originally magnificent recording losing nothing, combining bite and excellent inner definition with the fullest sonority.

King Arthur: Suite; (i) The Starlight Express (suite), Op. 78

Ⓜ (*) Chan. 6582. (i) Glover, Lawrenson; Bournemouth Sinf., Hurst

The King Arthur Suite is full of surging, enjoyable ideas and makes an interesting novelty on record. The Starlight Express Suite is taken from music Elgar wrote for a children's play, with a song or two included. Though the singers here are not ideal interpreters, the enthusiasm of Hurst and the Sinfonietta is conveyed well, particularly in the King Arthur Suite. The recording is atmospheric if rather over-reverberant, but the added firmness of the CD and its refinement of detail almost make this an extra asset in providing a most agreeable ambience for Elgar's music.

Serenade for Strings in E min., Op. 20

🔑 (BB)  Warner Apex 2564 61437-2. RPO, Warren-Green – BRITTEN: Simple Symphony; BUTTERWORTH: Banks of

Green Willow; HOLST: St Paul's Suite; VAUGHAN WILLIAMS: Fantasia on a Theme of Tallis ***

With the RPO players ever responsive, Warren-Green's performance – part of an outstanding anthology of English music – is even finer than his earlier, deleted Virgin account in bringing out the grace of Elgar's string writing and the tender feeling of the Larghetto.

Symphonies 1, Op. 55; 2, Op. 63

🔑 Ⓑ * Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 221 (2). LPO, Boult

In 1968, at the time when Sir Adrian Boult recorded the two Elgar Symphonies for Lyrita, he wrote an open letter to Gramophone, couched diplomatically, but in fact reflecting his fury that at the sessions his recording manager had forced him on technical grounds to abandon his habit of a lifetime and have all the violins of the LPO on the left instead of divided right and left between the two sections. Now the comparisons with Boult's other recordings of the Elgar Symphonies demonstrate very clearly how fine they are – arguably the finest versions he ever recorded. Compared with the EMI versions of both works, which he recorded less than five years later, they are altogether tauter, with the ensemble of the orchestra noticeably crisper. The recording too is brighter and clearer as transferred on this CD. The idea of having the symphonies on two discs in a two-for-the-price-of-one package adds to the attractions of the new issue.

Symphonies 1–2; Cockaigne; In the South

Ⓑ * Double Decca (ADD) 443 856-2 (2). LPO, Solti

Symphonies 1–2; Grania and Diarmid (incidental music), Op. 42; In the South (Alassio) Concert Overture; Introduction and Allegro for Strings; Serenade for Strings in E min.

🔑 Ⓑ  EMI (ADD) 3 82151-2 (2). LPO, Boult

Before Solti recorded the First he made a searching study of Elgar's own 78-r.p.m. recording, and Solti seems freed from emotional inhibitions, with every climax superbly thrust home and the hushed intensity of the glorious slow movement captured magnificently on CD. The Second receives an equally incandescent reading, once again closely modelled on Elgar's own surprisingly clipped and urgent performance, but benefiting from virtuoso playing and, as with the First, vintage Decca sound. Fast tempi bring searing concentration and an account of the finale that for once presents a true climax. The original LPO couplings of the Cockaigne and In the South overtures were logical, even if In the South, recorded in 1979, is over-tense.

Sir Adrian Boult's final version of the First Symphony, made when he was 87, emerges here with splendid freshness. But Boult is less thrustful than Solti, with speeds less extreme in both directions. Most clearly distinctive is the lovely slow movement, presented as a seamless flow of melody, less 'inner' than with Solti, and, above all, glowing with untroubled sweetness. This HMV set is however completely superseded by the earlier Lyrita versions, made with the same orchestra. For his fifth recording of the Second Symphony Sir Adrian has mellowed a degree. The tempo is a shade slower than before (and much slower than Solti's or the composer's own on the great leaping 12/8 theme). The peak comes in the Funeral March, where the concentration of the performance is still irresistible. In the finale, firm and strong, Boult cleverly conceals the repetitiveness of the main theme and gives a radiant account of the lovely epilogue. The companion performances of the two major string works and In the South are all strongly committed, and the early-1970s recording has plenty of breadth and range.

Symphonies 1–2; Cockaigne Overture; (i) Sea Pictures

 Australian Decca Eloquence 442 8277 (2). RPO, Mackerras, (i) with D. Jones

Mackerras's performance of the First Symphony is one of the most bitingly passionate readings since Elgar's own, brilliantly recorded, and Mackerras's account of the brassy final coda is the most stirring yet, a thrilling culmination. In the outer movements of the Second Symphony, Mackerras's speeds are markedly faster than on most modern versions, yet there is no feeling of rush. It may not be the most brilliantly played version of the Second Symphony, but the energetic thrust goes with an idiomatic feeling for Elgarian rubato. And though the recording is finely detailed, it still has plenty of body. Della Jones gives a commanding performance of the Sea Pictures. The Cockaigne Overture is brilliantly done, with high contrasts and an incisive attack. Superb Decca sound.

Symphony 1 in A flat, Op. 55

(BB)  LSO Live LSO 0017. LSO, C. Davis

Symphony 1; Imperial March, Op. 32

(BB)  Naxos 8.550634. BBC PO, Hurst

Symphony 1; In the South, Op. 50

Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 475 8226. LPO, Solti

() Testament mono SBT 1229. LPO, Boult

(i) Symphony 1; In the South Overture; (ii) Canto popolare: In Moonlight

🔑 Ⓜ  Hallé CD HLL 7500. (i) Hallé O, Elder; (ii) Rice, Elder

Symphony 1 in A flat; Introduction and Allegro for Strings, Op. 47

🔑 ✿ * BBC (ADD) BBCL 4106-2. Hallé O, Barbirolli

Symphony 1, Op. 55; Organ Sonata Op. 28 (orch. Jacob)

* Chan. SACD CHSA 5049. BBC Nat. O of Wales, Hickox

Symphony 1; Pomp and Circumstance Marches 1–5

🔑 Ⓑ  CfP (ADD/DDD) 575 3052. LPO, Handley

On 24 July 1970 Sir John Barbirolli conducted (and recorded) an inspired Hallé performance of Elgar's First Symphony in St Nicholas's Chapel as his major contribution to the King's

Lynn Festival. Four days later he suffered a fatal heart attack. There could be no finer memorial. But this final version has not only great depth of feeling but also the frisson of live music-making: it matches and even surpasses that first venture in its surging forward momentum, and the acoustic of the chapel provides a wonderfully warm glow and the richest amplitude for the Hallé brass and strings, without blunting the fortissimos. Most memorable of all is the sheer richness of the opening of the Adagio, sustained throughout with Barbirolli's characteristic warmth of feeling, while the impassioned Hallé string playing is as rich in tone as it is heartfelt. Everyone has their favourite version of the Introduction and Allegro, but no Elgarian will be disappointed with the present account, which still has the Hallé strings sitting on the edge of their seats, responding to the ardour of 'Glorious John'.

Richard Hickox and the BBC National Orchestra of Wales follow up their earlier recording of Elgar's Second Symphony with this impressive version of No.1, in many ways even finer than that earlier offering. It helps that the Symphony is most generously coupled with, the Organ Sonata No.1 orchestrated by Gordon Jacob. As with No. 2, the SACD recording is spectacular in its range and clarity. Cunningly, Hickox has a wonderful way of presenting the great Elgarian melodies simply, starting with the spacious march of the introduction, setting out the motto theme. His control of the big 'gulp' moments, so important in this work, is masterly.

Solti's unsurpassed account of the First Symphony (see above) now arrives separately as one of Decca's 'Originals'. However, In the South is less successful, over-taut, if still exciting. Here Solti is not helped by a Decca recording on which brilliance is not quite matched by weight or body (an essential in Elgar).

Vernon Handley directs a beautifully paced reading which can be counted in every way outstanding. It is in the slow movement above all that Handley scores; his account is spacious and movingly expressive. The coupled Marches are exhilaratingly brilliant and if Nos. 2 and (especially) 3 strike some ears as too vigorously paced, comparison with the composer's own tempi reveals an authentic precedent. Certainly the popular First and Fourth have an attractive, gutsy grandiloquence. With very good sound, well transferred to CD, this is highly recommendable indeed.

Mark Elder's pacing is ideal, building the symphonic structure unerringly, with the slow movement bringing playing of exceptional refinement and beauty, with breathtaking pianissimos, and with the finale, taken fast, leading to a movingly triumphant return of the motto theme. In the South brings an equally compelling performance, again with textures remarkably clear. As a bonus, a first recording is included of the haunting Canto popolare from the overture in a vocal version, In Moonlight, with the mezzo, Christine Rice, as soloist and Mark Elder at the piano.

Reflecting the emotions of a live event, Colin Davis's use of rubato and expressive hesitations on LSO Live is greater than it might have been in a studio performance, notably in the tender account of the slow movement, but the concentration of the playing is so intense that the results are magnetic, not self-conscious. The performance builds up to a thrilling account of the finale, which prompts wild applause. Excellent sound.

On the bargain Naxos label comes a warmly sympathetic version of the Symphony No. 1 from the BBC Philharmonic under George Hurst. Masterly with Elgarian rubato, he refreshingly chooses speeds faster than have become the norm, closer to those of Elgar himself. No one will be disappointed with Hurst's powerful reading, well coupled with the Imperial March.

The first wonder of the superb transfer of Boult's 1949 version of Elgar's First Symphony from Testament is the astonishing quality of the sound: mono only but full-bodied and finely detailed to give a keen sense of presence, with a surprisingly wide dynamic range. As to interpretation, the heavenly Adagio has an extra meditative intensity in the way that Boult presents each of the great lyrical themes, pure and poignant in their beauty. Nobility is the keynote of the whole interpretation. Boult's recording of the overture, In the South, made in 1955, brings out his thrustful side even more strikingly, with urgent speeds giving way in the lovely Canto popolare section to a honeyed beauty, with George Alexander the superb viola soloist. Sadly, the 1955 sound is shallower than that of six years earlier for the Symphony.

Symphony 2 in E flat, Op. 63

(BB)  LSO Live LSO 0018. LSO, C. Davis

Symphony 2; In the South (Alassio)

 Chan. SACD CHSA 5038. BBC Nat. O of Wales, Hickox

Symphony 2; Introduction and Allegro for Strings

🔑 Ⓜ  Hallé CDHLL 7507. Hallé O, Elder

Symphony 2; (i) Sea Pictures

🔑 Ⓑ * CfP (DDD/ADD) 575 3062. LPO, Handley; (i) with Greevy

Handley's remains the most satisfying modern version of a work which has latterly been much recorded. What Handley conveys superbly is the sense of Elgarian ebb and flow, building climaxes like a master and drawing excellent, spontaneous-sounding playing from an orchestra which, more than any other, has specialized in performing this symphony. The sound is warmly atmospheric and, at the peak of the finale, vividly conveys the added organ part in the bass (which Elgar himself suggested 'if available'): a tummy-wobbling effect. As a generous coupling Bernadette Greevy – in glorious voice – gives the performance of her recording career in Sea Pictures. Handley's sympathetic accompaniments are no less memorable, with the LPO players finding a wonderful rapport with the voice. In the last song Handley uses a telling ad lib. organ part to underline the climaxes of each stanza.

Mark Elder follows up his brilliantly successful earlier Elgar recordings on the Hallé Orchestra's own label with this glowing account of the Second Symphony. With speeds on the broad side in the first two movements, he draws muscular playing from the orchestra, taut and compelling, with the brass particularly impressive. Elder's control in the gradual building of climaxes is splendidly demonstrated in the Funeral March slow movement, helped by full, clear sound, recorded in the BBC's Manchester studios. The finale, rather brisker than usual, rounds off a deeply satisfying performance. As a pendant, Elder reads the Shelley poem, Song, from which Elgar's superscription is taken, 'Rarely, rarely comest thou, Spirit of Delight'. The Introduction and Allegro, recorded in the helpful acoustic of Bridgewater Hall, brings a performance of big, dramatic contrasts, with the Hallé strings ideally refined.

Hickox's version for Chandos was the first recording of an Elgar symphony in Surround Sound SACD, a very impressive pioneering effort, bringing out the glory of Elgar's orchestration. Interpretatively, Richard Hickox with the excellent BBC National Orchestra of Wales steers a distinctive course on the key question of the tempo for the surging 12/8 rhythms of the first movement, not as alarmingly fast as Elgar himself in both his recordings but faster than those, like Vernon Handley, in the noble Boult tradition. In the slow movement, by contrast, Hickox adopts a broad tempo and sustains it well. The transparency of sound also brings extra benefits in the Scherzo, as daringly fast as Elgar's own; in the finale too, the lightness and transparency of many passages, not least the epilogue, bring out the tenderness behind this ultimately elegiac movement. The Overture, In the South makes a valuable supplement, and the ripeness of the thrilling coda brings a final demonstration of this orchestra's impressive quality.

Recorded live in the autumn of 2001 as part of his Elgar series, Sir Colin Davis's LSO account of No. 2 follows a similar pattern to No. 1 in a spacious, refined reading that readily sustains speeds broader than usual. Particularly for a live recording, the dynamic range is remarkable, with whispered pianissimos of breath-taking gentleness, set against ripe fortissimos with glorious brass sounds. Though in the finale Davis adopts a fast speed, his account of the lovely epilogue with its hushed reference back to the opening theme of the whole work is exceptionally spacious and tender, making a haunting close.

(i) Symphony 1; Imperial March; (ii) Symphony 2; (iii) Symphony 3 (completed Anthony Payne)

(BB)  Naxos 8.503187 (3). (i–ii) BBC PO; (i) Hurst; (ii) Downes; (iii) Bournemouth SO, Daniel

The three individual recordings of the Elgar Symphonies make a suitable budget commemorative boxed set, all individually recommendable. The three CDs in individual jewel cases are packaged in a slip-case. This set is available only in the UK.

Symphony 3 (from the composer's sketches, realized by Anthony Payne)

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.554719. Bournemouth SO, Daniel
(BB)  LSO Live LSO 0019. LSO, C. Davis

Symphony 3 (completed from sketches, elaborated by Payne)

 NMC NMCD 053. BBC SO, A. Davis

Symphony 3: (sketches and commentary by Payne)

(B)  NMC NMCD 052. Gibbs, Norris, BBC SO, A. Davis

Symphony 3; Pomp and Circumstance March 6; (i) Queen Alexandra's Memorial Ode (all realized Anthony Payne)

* Chan. SACD CHSA 5057. BBC Nat. O of Wales, Hickox; (i) with Adrian Partington Singers

Anthony Payne's realization of Elgar's sketches for the Third Symphony is so assured that it has already attracted a series of fine recordings. On the original disc Andrew Davis undoubtedly gives an inspired performance, the playing of the BBC Symphony Orchestra is thoroughly committed and the symphony is very well recorded. His illustrated talk, which comes as a supplement, gives precise details of his thinking and procedures, and this bargain-price CD makes a splendid addition to whichever recording of the complete work is chosen.

The following performance from the Bournemouth Symphony Orchestra under Paul Daniel matches Davis's earlier performance, and the leaner sound of the Bournemouth orchestra brings out the originality more, while the Naxos price gave this disc, with its first-rate sound, a competitive edge.

Colin Davis's LSO version then offered direct rivalry to its predecessors, bringing a performance just as powerful and concentrated, marked by refined string playing with pianissimos magically caught, even if the weight of tuttis is not quite as great as in the more forwardly balanced Naxos recording.

Richard Hickox's version tends to cap what has gone before. This is special, and not only in the quality of the performance, which is very compelling indeed. His reading is not only marginally stronger and more dramatic than the others, but it has the advantage of superb SACD surround sound and exceptionally attractive couplings. The Memorial Ode for Queen Alexandra as orchestrated by Payne, with the Adrian Partington Singers, is a tenderly moving piece, with Elgar in his rolé as Master of the King's Music setting a text by John Masefield. The Pomp and Circumstance March No. 6, like the symphony, was reconstructed and orchestrated by Payne, and in some ways is the most complex of all the Pomp and Circumstance Marches, a fine and valuable addition to an outstanding disc.

MUSIC FOR BRASS

Severn Suite, Op. 87

(BB) (*) Hyp. CDH 55070. L. Brass Virtuosi, Honeyball – IRELAND: Downland Suite, etc.; VAUGHAN WILLIAMS: Prelude on 3 Welsh Hymns **(*)

Elgar was commissioned to write his Severn Suite for the 1930 Crystal Palace Brass Band Festival. It was scored by Henry Geehl, who apparently also had quite a hand in its construction (he complained that the composer's sketches were inadequate). Elgar later orchestrated it, but the original is very effective indeed, with the characteristic flourish of the opening Prelude (the theme of which returns at the work's close) contrasting with the sombre Elegy – all highly telling on brass alone. This is an excellent performance, though it could perhaps have had more swagger at the end, and ideally one would have liked a full-sized brass band, instead of this more modest-sized group of players, fine as they are. Excellent recording.

CHAMBER AND INSTRUMENTAL MUSIC

(i) Piano Quintet in A min., Op. 84; String Quartet in E min., Op. 83

🔑  Chan. 9894. Sorrel Qt, (i) with Brown

Ⓑ  Naxos 8.553737. Maggini Qt, (i) with Donohoe

Ⓑ  Discover DICD 920485. Aura Ens., (i) with Fink

Piano Quintet; Violin Sonata in E min., Op. 82

 Hyp. CDA 66645. Nash Ens. (members)

The Sorrel Quartet, perfectly matched by Ian Brown in the Piano Quintet, give exceptionally searching readings of these two late chamber works of Elgar. These are dedicated performances which understandingly bring out the contrast between the expansive Quintet, bold in its rhetoric, and the more intimate Quartet, with its terse, economical structure. The breadth of expression, using the widest dynamic range down to the most delicate pianissimos, intensifies the impact of each performance, magnetic and concentrated as if recorded live.

The Naxos and Discover versions appeared simultaneously, both at super-bargain price, both very recommendable. The Naxos issue with the young British Maggini Quartet, joined by Peter Donohoe, offers stylish, nicely pointed, slightly understated readings. Yet it is the Aura Ensemble of Switzerland which, perhaps surprisingly, offers even more red-blooded, urgently expressive readings, helped by rich, forward sound.

With the violinist, Marcia Crayford, and the pianist, Ian Brown, both as the duo in the Sonata and as the key players in the Quintet, the performances on Hyperion are more volatile than usual; but it is the slow movements above all that mark these performances as exceptional. The central Adagio of the Quintet, far slower than usual, then brings the most dedicated playing of all, making this not just a lyrical outpouring but an inner meditation. Warm, immediate recording.

String Quartet in E min., Op. 83

 Regis RRC 1015. Britten Qt – WALTON: Quartet ***

 Discrete disc 0701. Pavão Qt – BAX: Quartet 1 ***

 ASV CDDCA 526. Brodsky Qt – DELIUS: Quartet ***

(*) Hyp. CDA 66718. Coull Qt – BRIDGE: 3 Idylls; WALTON: Quartet *

There is a poignancy in this late work which the beautifully matched members of the Britten Quartet capture to perfection. Not only do they bring out the emotional intensity; they play with a refinement and sharpness of focus that give superb point to the outer movements. With more portamento than one would normally expect today, the result is totally in style.

The ladies of the Pavão Quartet are completely inside the idiom of this work and give as thoughtful and concentrated a performance as one could wish for, even if the Britten Quartet on Regis, coupled with Walton, probably remains a first choice.

The young players of the Brodsky Quartet take a weightier view than usual of the central, interlude-like slow movement, but they amply justify it. The power of the outer movements, too, gives the lie to the idea of this as a lesser piece than Elgar's other chamber works. First-rate recording.

Though in the Elgar the Coulls sound almost too comfortable, less successful at conveying the volatile mood-changes, their relaxed warmth is still very persuasive; and the Walton performance, with the melancholy of the slow movement intensified, is very fine. Excellent sound.

Violin Sonata in E min., Op. 82

🔑 * Challenge CC 72171. Van Keulen, Brautigam – GRIEG: Sonata 1; SIBELIUS: Humoresques ****

🔑  Globe Musical Network GMN CO113. Little, Roscoe – BAX: Violin Sonata 2 ***

 Nim. NI 5666. Hope, Mulligan – FINZI: Elegy; WALTON: Violin Sonata ***

Ⓑ () Naxos mono 8.110957. Sammons, Murdoch – SCHUBERT: Rosamunde: Entr'acte; DVOŘÁK: Humoresque, Op. 101/7; MASSENET: Thaïs: Méditation; NACHEZ: Passacaglia on a Theme of Sammartini; SAMMONS: Bourrée; TRAD.: Londonderry Air; MOZART: Sinfonia Concertante in E flat

((*)) Testament mono SBT 1319. Rostal, Horsley – DELIUS; WALTON: Violin Sonatas ((*))

Violin Sonata; Canto popolare; La Capricieuse, Op. 17; Chanson de matin, Op. 15/2; Chanson de nuit, Op. 15/1; Mot d'amour, Op. 13/1; Offertoire, Op. 11 (arr. Schneider); Salut d'amour, Op. 12; Sospiri, Op. 70; Sursum corda, Op. 11

🔑 ✿  Chan. 9624. Mordkovitch, Milford

Violin Sonata; Canto popolare; Chanson de matin; Chanson de nuit; Mot d'amour; Salut d'amour; Sospiri; 6 Easy Pieces in the First Position

 Chan. 8380. Kennedy, Pettinger

Along with the Cello Concerto, the Piano Quintet and the String Quartet, the Sonata belongs to Elgar's last creative period; all were composed at Brinkwells during 1918–19. Considering its quality, it is surprising how rarely it is given in the concert hall, though it has fared better on record. It is a work of striking power and eloquence and not the least of these four great pieces. Isabelle van Keulen and Ronald Brautigam are artists of keen insight, immaculate musicianship and culture, and they penetrate to its very core. Moreover, they are accorded first-rate sound, well balanced and very lifelike. A strong first recommendation.

Lydia Mordkovitch here transforms the elusive Elgar Violin Sonata. In rapt and concentrated playing she gives it new mystery, with the subtlest pointing and shading down to whispered pianissimos. The shorter works include not only popular pieces like Salut d'amour, Chanson de matin and Sospiri, but rarities like a version of Sursum corda never previously recorded and a little salon piece of 1893 which Elgar inexplicably published under the pseudonym, Gustav Francke.

Tasmin Little gives a warmly romantic, freely expressive reading of the Sonata, presenting it as a big-scale virtuoso work, where so often it has been underplayed. She allows herself fair freedom over tempo, so that the second subject conveys spontaneity in every phrase. Her volatility in the finale leads up to a magnificent conclusion. Very well recorded, with the Bax Sonata No. 2 an excellent coupling, dating as it does from exactly the same period as the Elgar.

On Nimbus the Elgar Sonata brings a performance of high contrasts both in dynamic range – with Daniel Hope using daringly extreme pianissimos – and in flexibility of tempo. Hope then treats the enigmatic slow movement as more than an interlude, bringing out gravity through his dark violin-tone. In the finale, too, Hope conveys an improvisational quality, again using the widest dynamic range, finely matched by Simon Mulligan. Warm, atmospheric recording, less reverberant than many from this source.

At the start of the Sonata, Kennedy, also on Chandos, establishes a concerto-like scale, which he then reinforces in a fiery, volatile reading of the first movement, rich and biting in its bravura. The elusive slow movement, Romance, is sharply rhythmic in its weird Spanishry, while in the finale Kennedy colours the tone seductively. As a coupling, Kennedy too has a delightful collection of shorter pieces, not just Salut d'amour and Chanson de matin but other rare chips from the master's bench, although here he is less subtle than Mordkovitch. Kennedy is matched beautifully throughout the recital by his understanding piano partner, Peter Pettinger, and the recording is excellent.

Originally linked with the Dvořák Violin Concerto and now recoupled with Brahms, Vengerov's performance is at once passionate and large scale. He also brings out the thoughtful poetry of the piece, with a vein of fantasy in the elusive slow movement. (Warner Elatus 2564 60661-2)

Music for wind

Adagio cantabile (Mrs Winslow's Soothing Syrup); Andante con variazione (Evesham Andante); 4 Dances; Harmony Music I–IV; 5 Intermezzos; 6 Promenades

Ⓑ  Chan. (ADD) 241-33 (2). Athena Ens.

This is a reissue of a pair of discs which originally appeared separately at mid-price. Elgar's 'Shed Music', as he called it, was written, when he was a budding young musician, for himself and four other wind-players to perform, and here it is presented very appealingly and excellently recorded.

PIANO MUSIC

Solo piano music

Adieu; Carissima; Chantant; Concert Allegro; Dream Children; Griffinesque; In Smyrna; May Song; Minuet; Pastorale; Presto; Rosemary; Serenade; Skizze; Sonatina

(*) Chan. 8438. Pettinger

The Chandos record includes nearly all of Elgar's piano music. This has not established itself in the piano repertoire but, as Peter Pettinger shows, there are interesting things in this byway of English music (such as the Skizze and In Smyrna). We get both the 1889 version of the Sonatina and its much later revision. Committed playing from this accomplished artist, and a pleasing recording too, with fine presence on CD.

Carissima; Dream Children, Op. 43; Douce Pensée; Echo's Dance; Enigma Variations (trans. Elgar); Sérénade Mauresque; Sonatina in G; Une Idylle, Op. 4/1

(BB)  Naxos 8.570166. Wass

This collection of some of the lighter piano pieces (as well as the piano transcription of the Enigma Variations) are treasurable, particularly in such sensitive hands as those of Ashley Wass. First-rate sound.

ORGAN MUSIC

Organ Sonata 1 in G, Op. 28

 Priory PRDC 401. Scott (organ of St Paul's Cathedral) – HARRIS: Sonata ; BAIRSTOW: Organ Sonata ***

Elgar's Organ Sonata is a ripely expansive piece, a richly inspired work, more of a symphony than a sonata. John Scott gives an excitingly spontaneous performance and the St Paul's Cathedral organ seems an ideal choice, although some of the pianissimo passages become rather recessed. The recording has plenty of spectacle and the widest dynamic range.

VOCAL AND CHORAL MUSIC

Angelus; Ave Maria; Ave maris stella; Ave verum corpus; Ecce sacerdos magnus; Fear not, O land; Give unto the Lord; Great is the Lord; I sing the birth; Lo! Christ the Lord is born; O hearken thou; O salutaris hostia 1–3

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55147. Worcester Cathedral Ch., Hunt; A. Partington (organ)

Though in the grand setting of Psalm 48, Great is the Lord, one misses the impact of a big choir, the refinement of Dr Hunt's singers, their freshness and bloom as recorded against a helpful acoustic are ample compensation, particularly when the feeling for Elgarian phrasing and rubato is unerring. The coronation anthem O hearken thou would also benefit from larger-scale treatment, convincing as this refined performance is; but most of these 14 items are more intimate, and the Worcester performances are near ideal, with clean ensemble, fine blending and taut rhythmic control. Vividly atmospheric recording, which still allows for full detail to emerge.

Ave Maria; Ave maris stella; Ave verum corpus; Benedictus, Op. 34/2; Give unto the Lord (Psalm 29), Op. 74; Go song of mine, Op. 57; Great is the Lord (Psalm 48), Op. 67; The Light of Life, Op. 29; Seek Him that maketh the seven stars; Light of the world. O hearken Thou, Op. 64; O salutaris hostia; Te Deum laudamus, Op. 34/1; The Apostles: The Spirit of the Lord is upon me

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.557288. St John's, Cambridge, College Ch., Robinson; J. Vaughan (organ)

Elgar's shorter Latin settings, Ave verum corpus, Ave Maria, Ave maris stella, O hearken Thou and O salutaris hostia, are all quite lovely. The more ambitious Te Deum and Benedictus was written for the Hereford Three Choirs Festival of 1897 and, like the Psalm setting Great is the Lord (first heard at Westminster Abbey in 1912), shows Elgar at full stretch. It is also good to have the serene Prologue to The Apostles (1903), The Spirit of the Lord, and, finally, the two memorable excerpts from Elgar's first oratorio, The Light of Life, notably the stirring Light of the world, which is the exultant closing chorus. Splendid singing throughout and excellent recording make this a collection to treasure.

The Apostles, Op. 49

 Chan. 8875/6. Hargan, Hodgson, Rendall, Roberts, Terfel, Lloyd, L. Symphony Ch., LSO, Hickox

Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 7 64206-2 (2). Armstrong, Watts, Tear, Luxon, Grant, Carol Case, Downe House School Ch., LPO Ch., LPO, Boult (with Light of Life: Meditation)

Where Boult's reading has four-square nobility, Hickox is far more flexible in his expressiveness, drawing singing from his chorus that far outshines that on the earlier reading. Most of his soloists are preferable too, for example Stephen Roberts as a light-toned Jesus and Robert Lloyd characterful as Judas. Only the tenor, David Rendall, falls short, with vibrato exaggerated by the microphone. The recording, made in St Jude's, Hampstead, is among Chandos's finest, both warm and incandescent, with plenty of detail.

Boult's performance gives the closing scene great power and a wonderful sense of apotheosis, with the spacious sound-balance rising to the occasion. Generally fine singing – notably from Sheila Armstrong and Helen Watts – and a 1973/4 Kingsway Hall recording as rich and faithful as anyone could wish for. The powerfully lyrical Meditation from The Light of Life makes a suitable postlude without producing an anticlimax, again showing Boult at his most inspirational.

The Black Knight, Op. 3; Scenes from the Bavarian Highlands, Op. 27

🔑 ✿  Chan. 9436. L. Symphony Ch., LSO, Hickox

The cantata The Black Knight is based on a similar story to that of Mahler's early cantata, Das klagende Lied. Hickox, helped by exceptionally rich and full recording, with vivid presence, consistently brings out the dramatic tensions of the piece as well as the refinement and beauty of the poetic sequences, to make the previous recording under Sir Charles Groves sound too easy-going, enjoyable though it is. The part-songs inspired by the composer's visit to Bavaria then add even more exhilaration, with the vigour and joy of the outer movements – better known in Elgar's orchestral version – brought out winningly, and with the London Symphony Chorus at its freshest and most incisive. A disc to win new admirers for two seriously neglected works.

(i) Caractacus (complete); Coronation March; Imperial March; Enigma Variations

Ⓜ  EMI 7 63807-2 (2). (i) Armstrong, Tear, Glossop, Rayner Cook, King, Stuart, RLPO Ch.; RLPO, Groves

(i) Caractacus, Op. 35. Severn Suite (full orchestral version)

 Chan. 9156/7. (i) Howarth, Wilson-Johnson, Davies, Roberts, Miles, L. Symphony Ch.; LSO, Hickox

Caractacus, based on the story of the ancient British hero pardoned by the Emperor Claudius, dropped out of the regular repertory long ago, forgotten except for the rousing Triumphal March and some notorious lines about the nations 'standing to hymn the praise of Britain like brothers hand in hand'. Groves offers a very fine performance with consistently excellent soloists and fine choral singing which with ripe recording brings out all the Elgarian atmosphere (even if it does not manage the clearest projection of the words).

Elgar's Caractacus draws from Hickox and his splendid LSO forces a fresh, sympathetic reading, generally very well sung, with David Wilson-Johnson in the title-role, recorded in opulent Chandos sound. The only reservation is that the earlier, EMI recording conducted by Sir Charles Groves was crisper in ensemble and even better sung, with even more seductive pointing of rhythm. For coupling, Hickox has the full orchestral arrangement of Elgar's very last work, originally for brass band, the Severn Suite.

(i) Coronation Ode, Op. 44; The Spirit of England, Op. 80

🔑 Ⓜ  Chan. 6574. Cahill, SNO Ch. and O, Gibson; (i) with Collins, Rolfe Johnson, Howell

Gibson's performances combine fire and panache, and the recorded sound has an ideal Elgarian expansiveness, the choral tone rich and well focused, the orchestral brass given plenty of weight, and the overall perspective highly convincing. He is helped by excellent soloists, with Anne Collins movingly eloquent in her dignified restraint when she introduces the famous words of Land of Hope and Glory in the finale; and the choral entry which follows is truly glorious in its power and amplitude. The Spirit of England, a wartime cantata to words of Laurence Binyon, is in some ways even finer, with the final setting of For the fallen rising well above the level of his occasional music.

(ii; iii; iv) Coronation Ode, Op. 44; (i; ii) The Spirit of England, Op. 80; (i) O hearken thou, Op. 64 (with (iv) Land of Hope and Glory (arr. Elgar))

